| John Buchanan, 3, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Campbell, 9, Adelphi-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| M'Killop and Nicol, 54, Argyle-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Morrison, jun, 78, Miller-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Laird and Thomson, 69, Ingram-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Burns, 29, St. Vincent-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Pollock, 12, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Hastie, Ingram-street | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| James Young, 20, St. Vincent-street | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| William Cameron, 27, St. Enoch-square | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Andrew Buchanan, Hairbeth (2nd subscription) | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Archibald Ayrill, Stockwell | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alex. Corbett, 7, Montrose-street | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend, per do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| David Robertson, 72, Buchanan-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Gallacher, St. Rollox, per Geo. Brown | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| R. Foulds, jun., Parson-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John M'Clymond, St. Rollox, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |

| per Geo. Brown | | £ | s | d |
|--|-------|----|----|----|
| A Friend | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A. and G. Paterson, St. Rollox, | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A Friend | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Nell M'Kinlay, St. Rollox, | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Lauder, do. | do. | 0 | 6 | 0 |
| John Lamont, do. | do. | 0 | 6 | 0 |
| Alex. Frame, do. | do. | 0 | 6 | 0 |
| William Kerr, do. | do. | 0 | 6 | 0 |
| D. M'Alister, do. | do. | 0 | 6 | 0 |
| James Young, do. | do. | 0 | 6 | 0 |
| Peter M'Donald, do. | do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Robert Muirhead, do. | do. | 0 | 6 | 0 |
| John Scott and Sons, Duke-street | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| J. and T. Duff, Pettigrew-lane, | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James B. Gemmell, Barony-place, | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Adams, Duke-street, | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William Hoggan, St. Rollox, | do. | 0 | 6 | 0 |
| P. Latham, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| G. Hamilton, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. Anderson, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William Martin, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. Anderson, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. Hair, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Small sums, | do. | 0 | 6 | 6 |
| A Friend, per James Couper | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Andrew Harvie, 153, Queen-street | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Hugh Crawford, Dunthorpe, by | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. W. Mitchell, Catherine-street, Calton | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Workers of John Salmon, Canning-street | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Gould, 91, High-street | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Service and Workman, 129, Ingram-street | do. | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| Workers of J. Dennistoun and Co., Bridgeton | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Taylor, 4, Fraterick-lane | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| David Melvin, 57, Buchanan-street | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John McNaught, 100, Centre-street, Tradeston | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thos. Wingate and Co., engineers, Springfield | do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Anonymous | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Alex. Chalmers, Paisley-road | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Andrew Dewar, Rosebank Cottage, Paisley-road | do. | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| Andrew Paterson, 10, St. Vincent-street | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thomas Inglis, 649, Gallowgate | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William Steel, Camlachie | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Thomson, Annfield Pottery, Gallowgate | do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Robt. Atken, Camlachie | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Wm. Addie, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Robt. Wilson, 75, Whitevale | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Neilson, 95, do. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Neilson | do. | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| Matthew White | do. | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| Robt. Menzies | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Robt. Russell | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Professor Thos. Thomson, 100, St. Vincent-st. | do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Robt. Knox, 10, St. Vincent-place | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| George Comrie, Royal Hotel | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Charles Gray, Carlton-place | do. | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Boyd, 67, Buchanan-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend, not rich | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Turnbull, Maxwell, and Co., Exchange-square | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| James Dunn and Co., 12, South Hanover-st. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Kerr, 7, do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Stewart and Co., 11, South Frederick-st. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Scott, 28, Cochrane-street | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Renfrew and Sinclair, 5, Montrose-street | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Andrew Renfrew, 5, do. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A Friend, R. B. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Ure, Crawford, and Easton, Montrose-street | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| James Anderson, 16, do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Hamilton, 14, do. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| M. Cassells | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Bennetyn and Ferguson, 46, Renfield-street | do. | 4 | 4 | 0 |
| Hugh Ferguson, of Leghorn | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Auchinclo, 4, Montrose-street | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| J. D. Marshall and Co., do. | do. | 4 | 4 | 0 |
| John Taylor and Son, Cochrane-street | do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| James Walker and Co., 51, do. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William Patrick, do. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John and Charles Risk, do. | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Walter McNea and Son, 51, do. | do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Peter Hamilton, 101, Stirling-road | do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| James Anderson and Co., 32, S. Hanover-st. | do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| John Millen, teacher, George square | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| W. Forsyth | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| J. Finlayson, 9, Cochrane-street | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A Friend | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Henry Leck, 26, George-street | do. | 1 | 3 | 6 |
| Archibald Grieve, 10, Ure-place | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Graham, Hornbank, Govan-road | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Cameron, West Nile-street | do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| William Couper, St. Vincent-place | do. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| William G. Mitchell, Virginia-street | do. | 21 | 0 | 0 |
| James Oswald, Rm., M.P. | do. | 25 | 0 | 0 |
| William Swanson, 57, North Hanover-street | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Robert Fisher, 6, Frederick-lane | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Boyd, 8, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Houston, 13, Little Hamilton-street | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Peter M'Farlane, 10, Margaret-street | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Abston, 103, John-street | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Alex. Donaldson, 84, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Peter Smith, 55, North Hanover-street | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Robert Paterson, 58, Ingram-street | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thomas Paterson, 121, Brunswick-street | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Alex. M'Nab, 75, High John-street | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Alexander Henry | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Gibson, 37, Dundas-street | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Robert Cochran, 34, do. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Stewart, 35, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Archibald Johnston, 17, Cathcart-street | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Andrew Dodd, 36, Glassford-street | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Robert Lang, Hanover-street | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Allan Glen, 63, North Frederick-street | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Robert Donaldson, 81, John-street | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George Lawson, Dundas-street | do. | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| Adam Bridges, 58, North Hanover-street | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. L. Mackenzie, 79, North Frederick-street | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Alex. Dalrymple, 68, North Hanover-street | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Randolph Elliott & Co., engineers, Centre-st. | do. | 6 | 0 | 0 |
| Newton, Rennie, & Co., Caledonian Foundry, | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| West street | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Robb, Scotland-street Saw-mill | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wylie and Lockhead, Trongate | do. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Alex. Tennant, Wilson street | do. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Thos. Blyth, 60, Argyle-street | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Joseph Kay, Campsie, collected by | do. | 3 | 7 | 9 |
| Harvey Hilliard, Buchanan-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| R. McG. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Banker and Mackenzie, 101, Argyle-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Field, 63, Argyle-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| McLean and Roy, 83, Virginia street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Alexander, Hutcheson street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Knox, 77, Brunswick-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. and J. Knox, Kilburnie, Ayrshire | do. | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| Peter Brown, 34, Candleriggs | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Andrew Ferguson, 135, Broomielaw | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William Mein, Trongate | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| David Macdonald, 134, do. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| J. R. Finlay, 71, Queen-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Small sums | do. | 2 | 16 | 6 |
| J. Graham and Co., Brunswick-street | do. | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| William Drysdale, 33, Monteth-row | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| H. Gourlay, 11, Union-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James McKean, Annfield-place, Gallowgate | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| A. S. Young, George's place | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Muirhead, 80, Argyle-street | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Logan, Bell-street | do. | 20 | 5 | 0 |
| Matthew Wilson and Co., do. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Robert Miller, spirit merchant, Nelson-street | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Carlaw and Henderson, Bell-street | do. | 0 | 7 | 6 |
| Michael Fletcher, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| D. McKenzie, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| David Wilson, Cathcart | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Free-Trade | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Stevens, 35, Union-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Allan and Sons, 79, Candleriggs | do. | 6 | 6 | 0 |
| Richard Griffin and Co., publishers | do. | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| William Brodie, Cochran-street | do. | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| David Croll, 172, Buchanan-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Archibald M'Connell, Jamaica-street | do. | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| David Chapman, do. | do. | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| Alex. Kay, jun. (Wilson, James, and Kay, | do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Exchange-square) | do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| John Duncan, 36, Miller-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend | do. | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Muirhead, 38, Candleriggs | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Wardrop, 256, George-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Gavin Wilson, 59, King-street, Tradeston | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Gray, 34, Clyde-street, Anderson | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Robert Paterson, 113, Ingram-street | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Dr. J. H. Robertson, 69, West Nile-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alex. Kerr, Robertson (J. and J. Wright, | do. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Virginia-street) | do. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Robt. Gow, 15, Abbotsford-place | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Workers in Tod and Higginbotham's spin- | do. | 6 | 4 | 8 |
| ning factory | do. | 6 | 4 | 8 |
| Glen and M'Indoc, 14, Gordon-street | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Pat. Jas. Mills, Sandyford-place | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thos. Aitken Porteous, 78, Queen-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| E. B. Primrose, 2, N. Exchange-court | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| E. Henry, do. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Matthew Henry, do. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Jas. Couper, Caledonian Pottery | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Murray, jun., do. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Hamilton, Dalnair Works | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A Friend | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A. Fullerton and Co., Brunswick-street | do. | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| John Drummond, Jamaica-street | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Ralph Drummond, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Macnair, 13, Brown-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Neill, Anderson Printfield | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Poor Friend of Sir Robert's | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Wm. Stuart and Son, 9, Exchange-place | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Steele, 45, Argyle-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thos. Brown, jun., Lanfine | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| James Alexander, 65, Bridgegate | do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| John M'Kinlay, at A. and J. Walker's, Mille- | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| end | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A Friend | do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Wm. Stephens, engraver, 88, Duke-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| David Stirling, Hogganfield, at 108, Trongate | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Laing, Gargathill | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| R. G. Finlay and Brothers, Montrose-street | do. | 10 | 10 | 0 |
| David Boyd and Co., Ingram-street | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Bain, 121, Argyle-street | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Ralph Wardlaw, jun., Five-place | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| David Cadenhead, 193, Argyle-street | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Bayne, 99, Hutcheson-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Lewis Ferguson, 122, Argyle-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Andrew Young and Son | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Alexander Robb, 24, Russell-street East | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Alexander, Duke-street | do. | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| J. B. Kildston, 17, South Portland-street | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Kildston, 47, Bellgrove-place | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Gray, 3, Argyle-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Walker, jun., 31, St. Vincent-place | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Malcolm, 22, Royal Exchange-square | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Gray, 155, Trongate | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| J. and W. Clark, 77, Glassford-street | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Douglas and Co., 113, Brunswick-street | do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Jeppha Dunn, Glenpark, Duke-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George C. Dick, 9, Cochran-street | do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Workers in Tod and Higginbotham's Print- | do. | 5 | 19 | 1 |
| field | do. | 5 | 19 | 1 |
| John Fyfe, 63, Miller-street | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| James Jameson, 63, do. | do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| A. and J. M'Kean, 12, Trongate | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Ditto, (Young Men with) | do. | 2 | 7 | 0 |
| Wm. Davidson, 69, Hutcheson-street | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Wm. Macleod, 59, do. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| George Thorburn, 120, Crown-street | do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Charles Boyd and Son, 20, Hutcheson-street | do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Dr. Lindsay, 23, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William Milroy, 48, do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend—B. L. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| J. Thomson | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John M'Gibbon | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. Bryson, 16, St. Enoch-square | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Daniel M'Ewan, 6, Union-street | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| William Hay and Co., 88, Queen-street | do. | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| Wm. Mossman, 172, W. Nile-street | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Scott, 10, Jamaica-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Jas. White, 31, Union-street | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Parkhill, 18, North Albion-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Howie, 54, Gallowgate | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Darling, 111, Trongate | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| M'Leod and Davidson, Candleriggs | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| M'Nab and Co., 106, Hutcheson-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| M'Gavin and Thomson, Glassford-street | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Lethem, Blyth, and Lethem, Virginia-street | do. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| James M'Lure, Royal Bank-place | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Gowland, Springfield-court | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Small sums | do. | 0 | 6 | 10 |
| Samuel Haworth, Pike's lane | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Berry, Fold's-road, Little Bolton | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Samuel Hough, Folds, do. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thomas Crook, Hulme-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Ellis Bury, Lever-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Ralph Fryer, Barn-street | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Horrocks, do. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thomas Hudson, Mill-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Kittle, Green-street (2nd subscription) | do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Benjamin Scholes, Little Lever | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Lomax, Powell and Lomax, Old Acres | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robt. Winder, Moor-lane | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robt. Haslam, Falcon-street, Little Bolton | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Nelson, Hulme-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Abraham Lomax, Fold's road | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Farmer's Daughter, per A. Lomax | do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Entwistle, Barn-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Hamer, Back Turton-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| David Morris, Mill-street | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Vickers, Lower Bridgeman-street | do.</ | | | |

| | | | | | | | | |
|--|--|--|---|---|-------------------------------|-------------------------------|--------------------------------------|---------|
| Bradford, Yorkshire. North Remittance. | Samuel Smith, Brothers, and Co., Horton, near | £100 0 0 | Bradford, Yorkshire. South Remittance. | Joseph Sykes and Sons | £100 0 0 | Aberdeen. | Sir Thos. Burnett, of Ormesby, near | £25 0 0 |
| | A Friend | 2 0 0 | | Joseph Jones | 25 0 0 | | Captain Fordyce, of Bradford | 25 0 0 |
| | Subscriptions raised by the Members of the News Room, held at Mr. John Fielding's, Stag's Head, Back-lane, Bowling, near | 1 3 2 | | Samuel Lightfoot | 10 0 0 | | Geo. Thomson, jun., shipowner | 20 0 0 |
| | Thomas Haigh, Savings Bank | 1 1 0 | | "The Whig Fixed Duty," Free Trade-street | 5 0 0 | | John Stewart, combmaker | 20 0 0 |
| | Christopher Wilson, Low Moor, near | 1 0 0 | | John Lovitt | 5 0 0 | | Joseph Rowell, do. | 10 10 0 |
| | James Wilson, Victoria Inn, Low Moor, do. | 1 0 0 | | John Foster | 5 0 0 | | Baillie Forbes | 10 0 0 |
| | J. Priestley, ironmonger, Market-street | 1 0 0 | | Wm. Battison | 5 0 0 | | Wm. White, grain merchant | 10 0 0 |
| | | | | Herbert Heaton | 5 0 0 | | Henry Adamson, shipowner | 10 0 0 |
| | | | | John A. Wimson | 5 0 0 | | A Friend | 5 5 0 |
| | | | | T. A. Wilkinson | 5 0 0 | | Principal Jack, King's College | 5 0 0 |
| Halifax, Seventh Remittance. | Jas. Akroyd and Son | 300 0 0 | Halifax, Seventh Remittance. | John and R. Liddell | 5 0 0 | Aberdeen. | Alex. Nicoll, shipowner | 5 0 0 |
| | John Crossley and Sons | 100 0 0 | | E. and G. Vickers | 2 0 0 | | John Proctor, Bradford-works | 5 0 0 |
| | W. and J. Dewhurst, Ovenden, near | 60 0 0 | | Editor, Advertiser | 2 0 0 | | Andw. Sutherland, manufacturer | 5 0 0 |
| | Henry Ambler, do. | 55 0 0 | | A Friend | 2 0 0 | | Robt. Anderson, shipmaster | 5 0 0 |
| | Lister and Morris | 40 0 0 | | George Cade, 5, Paradise-row | 2 0 0 | | Anthony Wigham | 3 3 0 |
| | S. Townsend, Thornton Mills, near | 20 0 0 | | Dr. Gordon | 2 0 0 | | John McPherson, combmaker | 3 0 0 |
| | John Ambler, Peel House Mill, Warley, near | 10 0 0 | | Dr. Firth, English-street | 2 0 0 | | Professor Clark, Marischal College | 2 2 0 |
| | M. Isles, Nether-ton Mill, Northowram | 10 0 0 | | Wm. Sislesson, Linneus-street | 2 2 0 | | Robt. Campbell, timber merchant | 2 2 0 |
| | John Ingham, North-parade | 5 0 0 | | Thomas Meggitt | 1 0 0 | | Alex. Black, wine merchant | 2 0 0 |
| | Jonas Robertshaw | 5 0 0 | | Wm. Hird, Silver-street | 1 0 0 | | John Glennie, Leithenty | 2 0 0 |
| Sand-rhead. | A Free Trader | 3 3 0 | Halifax, Seventh Remittance. | A Lincolnshire Tradesman | 1 0 0 | Aberdeen. | Jas. Paterson, leather merchant | 1 1 0 |
| | Robert Midgley, Bottom's Mill, Ovenden, nr. | 3 3 0 | | A Friend to Freedom | 1 1 0 | | Wm. French, baker | 1 1 0 |
| | William Aked Metcalfe | 2 0 0 | | J. Kilvington, Walton, near | 1 0 0 | | Hugh Macgawin, pawnbroker | 1 1 0 |
| | Wm. Smith, New Bank | 1 1 0 | | Joseph Constable, English-street | 1 0 0 | | Rev. Robt. Forbes, Woodside | 1 1 0 |
| | For self and wife, from a Corn Miller | 1 0 0 | | John Davy, Overby, near Market Raisen | 1 0 0 | | Alex. Taylor, merchant | 1 1 0 |
| | Clarke Turner, Union Cross Inn | 1 1 0 | | Captain John Meggitt, Pepple-street | 1 0 0 | | Rev. Gavin Parker | 1 1 0 |
| | John Mills, New Bank | 1 0 0 | | A Friend, by do. | 1 0 0 | | Patrick Whyte, tobacconist | 1 1 0 |
| | Wm. Birtwhistle | 0 10 6 | | John Petchell | 1 0 0 | | Wm. Birnie, painter | 1 0 0 |
| | | | | Wm. M. Stears, Myton-gate | 1 0 0 | | Al. Watson, with Stewart and Rowell | 1 0 0 |
| | | | | Francis Stamp | 1 0 0 | | Robt. Forsyth, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Hull. | J. Weighill, house decorator, High-street | 1 0 0 | Hull. | Thomas Watson, brewer | 1 1 0 | Aberdeen. | Jas. Stormont, baker | 1 0 0 |
| | J. Culliford, blockmaker, Low-street | 0 5 0 | | Wm. Hodgson, tanner, Beverley | 5 0 0 | | Geo. Brown, auctioneer | 1 0 0 |
| | H. Cranston, High-street | 0 2 6 | | P. Tigar, do. | 5 0 0 | | Nicolas Cuddle, brewer | 1 0 0 |
| | Geo. Brantingham, do. | 0 10 0 | | Joseph Major | 1 0 0 | | John Duncan, 4, St. Nicholas-street | 1 0 0 |
| | M. McDonald, do. | 0 5 0 | | Edward Brady, Caroline-street | 1 0 0 | | Wm. Russell, bookeller | 1 0 0 |
| | Henry Taylor and Friend, High-street | 1 0 0 | | E. Thorp, White Hart Inn | 1 0 0 | | Robt. Collie, 37, Green | 1 0 0 |
| | Ralph Danson, do. | 1 0 0 | | J. H. Vallance | 1 0 0 | | Rev. David Simpson | 1 0 0 |
| | John Cropton, jun., do. | 1 0 0 | | Thomas Petchell, against Bribery at Elections | 1 1 0 | | Rev. John H. Hope | 0 10 6 |
| | Wm. Crozier, do. | 1 1 0 | | Mrs. Jones, Willerby | 1 0 0 | | Two Friends | 2 0 6 |
| | James Sharer, do. | 1 0 0 | | Wm. Collinson, share broker | 1 0 0 | | | |
| Hawick, N.B. | George Nesbitt, Lawrence-street | 1 1 0 | Hawick, N.B. | C. S. Todd, attorney | 1 0 0 | Hawick, N.B. | Joseph Fowle, Garmond | 0 10 6 |
| | Henry Dodsworth, West-street | 0 2 6 | | R. D. Morehead, paper hanger | 1 0 0 | | George Byres, do. | 0 2 6 |
| | John Dennison, Woodbine-street | 0 2 6 | | J. Jones, jun. | 1 0 0 | | Alex. Thomson, farmer, Cairncalze | 0 2 6 |
| | J. Young, High-street | 0 5 0 | | John Richardson, Saville-street | 1 0 0 | | Alex. Mitchell, do., Greens | 0 5 0 |
| | Richard Booth, do. | 0 5 0 | | William Armstrong, Lowgate | 1 0 0 | | A Friend | 0 2 6 |
| | John Clay, do. | 2 2 0 | | C. H. Andrews, Hull Banking Company | 1 0 0 | | Small sums | 0 8 10 |
| | J. Cropton, Fawcett-st., Bishop Warrmouth | 2 0 0 | | William Thompson, Cogan-street | 1 1 0 | | | |
| | J. M'Farlane Chalmers, Vine-lodge, do. | 1 1 0 | | Phineas Lowther | 1 0 0 | | Hon. J. E. Elliot, Leathill | 10 0 0 |
| | A Friend to the Cause | 0 10 0 | | Rev. George Lee | 1 0 0 | | Walter Wilson, Orchard | 10 0 0 |
| | | | | Robert Martin, 23, Sykes-street | 1 0 0 | | A. B. | 10 0 0 |
| Kilnburgh, Fourth Remittance. | A "Bright" Youth | 0 6 0 | Kilnburgh, Fourth Remittance. | John Petchell, 50, Lowgate | 1 0 0 | Kilnburgh, Fourth Remittance. | R. Fraser | 10 0 0 |
| | A Friend, per T. Calder | 1 1 0 | | Samuel Birch, Cogan-street | 1 0 0 | | John Wilson, manufacturer | 10 0 0 |
| | A Friend | 0 2 6 | | George Worsdell, 13, English-street | 1 0 0 | | Alex. Laing, do. | 5 0 0 |
| | A Kick at "Drummore's" Twaddle | 1 1 0 | | Do., do. | 0 5 0 | | Geo. Wilson, do. | 5 0 0 |
| | Rev. W. L. Alexander, Rankellor-street | 0 10 0 | | A Friend, by do. | 0 5 0 | | Henry Ewen, tanner | 5 0 0 |
| | A Voice from the North to the Nobles (See Job, chap. xviii., ver. 2 and 6) | 0 5 0 | | X. Y. Z. | 0 10 0 | | John Turnbull, dyer | 5 0 0 |
| | Job, chap. xviii., ver. 2 and 6) | 0 5 0 | | Robert Thorp | 0 10 0 | | M. Wilson and Sons, skinnors | 3 0 0 |
| | An East Lothian Farmer | 2 0 0 | | G. C. Cade | 0 5 0 | | Geo. Watson and Sons, do. | 3 0 0 |
| | A Friend in Inverness | 1 0 0 | | A Captain Wanting Freights | 0 10 0 | | Wm. Turnbull, draper | 3 0 0 |
| | A Lady, left with J. R. | 0 5 0 | | Henry Kennor | 0 10 0 | | Walter Armstrong, do. | 3 0 0 |
| Oldham, Third Remittance. | James Brown, 8, Smith's-place | 1 0 0 | Oldham, Third Remittance. | Sundry Workmen, collected at tea meeting | 0 10 0 | Oldham, Third Remittance. | John Laing, manufacturer | 2 10 0 |
| | Andrew Drybrough, 14, Regent-terrace | 1 0 0 | | Thomas Johnson | 0 5 0 | | Walter Laing, do. | 2 10 0 |
| | Robert Grieve, 77, South-bridge | 10 0 0 | | Frederick Lowther | 0 5 0 | | Wm. Watson, do. | 2 0 0 |
| | John Gregory, Canaan-lodge | 5 5 0 | | Anonymous | 0 5 0 | | James Melrose and Son, millwrights | 2 0 0 |
| | R. P. Greig, London-street | 2 0 0 | | John Wilkinson | 0 10 0 | | Wm. Kedie, draper | 1 0 0 |
| | John Greig, 38, Leith-street | 1 0 0 | | Charles Morehead | 0 5 0 | | Wm. Inglis, grocer | 1 5 0 |
| | Thomas Henderson, Lasswade | 1 0 0 | | John Buchanan | 0 10 0 | | Rev. Adam Thomson | 1 1 0 |
| | George Harvey, Brunswick-street | 1 0 0 | | Rev. Edward Higginson | 5 0 0 | | Wm. Irvine | 1 1 0 |
| | George Hay, 166, Fountain-bridge | 0 2 6 | | Geo. Cobb, jun. | 2 2 0 | | John Sloan, Millbank | 1 1 0 |
| | A. Hay, 28, Greenside-street | 1 1 0 | | F. Langsdorf, Spring-street | 1 0 0 | | James Wilson, banker | 1 1 0 |
| Wakefield, Second Remittance. | David Johnston, 8, St. John's-street | 1 1 0 | Wakefield, Second Remittance. | Mr. Frankish | 0 10 0 | Wakefield, Second Remittance. | Geo. Scott, gunsmith | 1 0 0 |
| | R. W. Jamieson, North-bridge | 2 2 0 | | Wm. Stephenson, Herald Office | 1 0 0 | | Wm. Cathrae | 1 0 0 |
| | J. Johnston, 12, Comely-bank | 1 1 0 | | Wm. Ayre, Lansdown-terrace | 3 0 0 | | Thos. Hay, Crown Inn | 1 0 0 |
| | J. J. for a Lady | 1 1 0 | | A Friend | 2 2 0 | | Andrew Graham, draper | 1 0 0 |
| | William Knight, 88, Canongate | 0 2 6 | | B. Boulter | 1 0 0 | | John Briggs, clothier | 1 0 0 |
| | John Lees, 3, Brown-square | 2 0 0 | | Geo. Cookman | 5 0 0 | | Held and Michie, masons | 1 0 0 |
| | George Laing, 70, Potter-row | 0 10 6 | | Wm. Hulme | 0 5 0 | | Robert Pringle, manufacturer | 1 0 0 |
| | James Moncrieff, Great Stewart-street | 2 2 0 | | A Friend | 0 1 0 | | James Kyle, do. | 1 0 0 |
| | Megget and Symington, Blair-street | 1 1 0 | | J. H. Midgley, Rochdale | 5 0 0 | | Charles Heasell, whiplmaker | 1 0 0 |
| | William M'Murray, Stead's-place | 50 0 0 | | Edward Thompson, 58, Whitfriar-gate | 1 0 0 | | Rebecezer Robison, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Wakefield, Second Remittance. | John Melville, Loanhead, for self and other eleven subscribers | 1 0 0 | Wakefield, Second Remittance. | Richard Sykes, West Ella | 50 0 0 | Wakefield, Second Remittance. | John Stenhouse, grocer | 1 0 0 |
| | John Macquenn, 54, North-bridge | 1 1 0 | | Mr. Pembroke, Fore-street | 0 2 6 | | Scott and Wight, joiners | 1 0 0 |
| | D. M'Farlane, 8, Ainslie-place | 2 0 0 | | George Ferris, do. | 0 10 0 | | James Scott, foreman | 1 0 0 |
| | Andrew Nicol, 11, Hill-place | 0 3 0 | | Mr. Davey, Fore-street-hill | 0 2 6 | | C. D. | 1 0 0 |
| | One who fears the Jews | 1 1 0 | | George Maunder, Island | 1 0 0 | | William Scott, Esq., magistrato. | 1 0 0 |
| | Charles Peter, Grassmarket | 0 10 0 | | Mr. Bulpin, Heavitree | 0 2 6 | | Andrew Haddon, Esq., do. | 1 0 0 |
| | John Purvis, New Mills, Dalkeith | 0 5 0 | | T. Burrington, High-street | 0 10 0 | | Walter Wilson, cabinetmaker | 1 0 0 |
| | William Trotter, Lasswade | 0 2 6 | | A Friend | 0 2 6 | | Thomas Brown, shoemaker | 1 0 0 |
| | | | | W. H. | 0 5 0 | | William Rutherford, watchmaker | 1 0 0 |
| | | | | Mr. Toswill, High-street | 0 2 6 | | Thomas Tudhope, tobacconist | 1 0 0 |
| Wakefield, Second Remittance. | Thomas Tait, Gilmerton | 0 5 0 | Wakefield, Second Remittance. | Walter Tucker, do. | 0 2 6 | Wakefield, Second Remittance. | James Hallyburton, farmer, Hopehouse | 1 0 0 |
| | N. Taylor, 4, Reid's-court, Canongate | 0 2 6 | | Mr. Labdon, do. | 0 2 6 | | John White, jun., farmer, Midshields | 1 0 0 |
| | T. T. | 0 5 0 | | Mr. Murch, South-street | 0 5 0 | | R. F. | 1 0 0 |
| | John Wood, Castle-street | 1 0 0 | | Mr. Trehane, Fore-street | 0 10 0 | | Douglas Laidlaw, grocer | 1 0 0 |
| | John Wright, 44, Nicolson-street | 0 10 6 | | G. Burrington, do. | 0 2 6 | | John Scott, fisher | 1 0 0 |
| | James Walker, Morton-street, Leith | 2 0 0 | | Mr. Evans, do. | 0 5 0 | | George Heaslie, saddler | 1 0 0 |
| | Robert Wilkie, 67, Great King-street | 1 1 0 | | Mr. Marks, do. | 0 2 6 | | A. Knaton, farmer, Alemuir | 1 0 0 |
| | W. W., Leith-walk | 0 5 0 | | Mr. Moggridge, Bridge | 0 2 6 | | Thomas Young, draper | 1 0 0 |
| | W. B. | 1 1 0 | | Mr. Nichols, do. | 0 5 0 | | Robert Burnett, shoemaker | 1 0 0 |
| | John Wilkie, Seaford | 0 7 6 | | S. Davies, High-street | 0 10 0 | | G. H. | 1 0 0 |
| Wakefield, Second Remittance. | Archibald Young, 10, Windmill-street | 1 1 0 | Wakefield, Second Remittance. | Mr. Westlake, Bridge-street | 1 0 0 | Wakefield, Second Remittance. | Thomas Wilson, manufacturer | 1 0 0 |
| | Francis Umpherson, Loanhead, for self and other ten subscribers | 1 0 0 | | Mr. Treffry, Fore-street | 0 4 0 | | Peter Grant Wilson, do. | 1 0 0 |
| | John Ritchie, 48, George-square | 5 5 0 | | Per post | 0 10 0 | | Peter Wilson, do. | 1 0 0 |
| | Small sums | 0 17 8 | | Thomas Sparkes, Magdalen-road | 0 2 6 | | E. Selby, Minto | 1 0 0 |
| | Geo. Allan, Prestonpans, for self and other ten subscribers | 1 0 0 | | T. Sercombe, Bridge | 0 5 0 | | G. T., Lynwood-mill | 1 0 0 |
| | Mrs. A. Alexander, Prestonpans, for self and other ten subscribers | 1 0 0 | | J. Hew, Castle-street | 0 5 0 | | William Miller, Damside | 1 0 0 |
| | Boness Alexia | 0 2 6 | | Henry Dorville, Alpbington, Devon | 1 0 0 | | Andrew Scott, signor | 1 0 0 |
| | Mrs. Chas. Belfield, sen., Prestonpans, for self and other three subscribers | 1 0 0 | | Mr. Curtis, Teignmouth, do. | 0 10 0 | | J. Richardson, warehouseman | 1 0 0 |
| | Richard Clark, Prestonpans, for self and other ten subscribers | 1 0 0 | | Mr. Cross, Mount Radford | 0 10 0 | | J. G. Cockell, Millbank | 1 0 0 |
| | Wakefield, Second Remittance. | A. Cochran, 329, High-street | | 0 5 0 | Wakefield, Second Remittance. | | Mr. Haydon, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Robt. Clark, 1, London-street | | 0 10 6 | R. Bastard, Colleton-crescent | 0 5 0 | | John Michie, High-street | 1 0 0 | |
| Jos. Drysdale, Prestonpans, for the self and other ten subscribers | | 1 0 0 | Mr. Korstmann, do. | 0 5 0 | | Small sums | 0 12 6 | |
| John Ferguson, Prestonpans, for self and other ten subscribers | | 1 0 0 | A Friend, South-street | 0 5 0 | | John Patterson, foreman | 1 0 0 | |
| From 64, Frederick-street | | 0 2 6 | H. Crofts, The Close | 0 2 6 | | George Hogg, Dovemount | 1 0 0 | |
| R. F. | | 0 5 0 | Small sums | 1 4 6 | | William Notman, clerk | 1 0 0 | |
| John Pyfe, St. Patrick-square | | 0 7 6 | James Newton, Scant-head, Austerlands Lees | 1 0 0 | | Walter Kerr, Wilton Dean | 1 0 0 | |
| Father of Ten Children, 78, Prince's-street | | 0 2 6 | Adam Whitworth, Hope & Anchor, Royton, nr. | 1 0 0 | | Joseph Scott, smith | 1 0 0 | |
| Mr. Hill, grocer, Leith, Kirkgate | | 0 2 6 | Emanl. Whittaker, joiner, North-moor | 1 0 0 | | J. D. Kennedy, bookseller | 1 0 0 | |
| Geo. Horne, 329, High-street | | 0 5 0 | Geo. Greenwood cotton and waste dealer, Greenacres, near Manchester | 4 0 0 | | Thomas Scott, clerk | 1 0 0 | |
| Wakefield, Second Remittance. | Thomas Heatley, Thistle-street | 0 5 0 | Wakefield, Second Remittance. | James Wild, spinner, Greenacres, near do. | 10 0 0 | Wakefield, Second Remittance. | F. W. Diener | 1 0 0 |
| | G. S. T. | 1 0 0 | | Geo. Emmott | 5 0 0 | | Adam Scott, grocer | 1 0 0 |
| | Mr. Jamieson, 99, Prince's-street | 0 6 0 | | Robt. Thatcher | 1 0 0 | | Wm. Turnbull, tobacconist | 1 0 0 |
| | George Lorrimer, 2, Keil-street | 2 0 0 | | J. Platt, machine maker, Greenacres, nr. Manch. | 10 0 0 | | James Miller, painter | 1 0 0 |
| | James Milne, Chalmers-close | 3 8 0 | | Seville and Wolstenholme, do., do. | 20 0 0 | | Robert Grieve, clerk | 1 0 0 |
| | R. C. | 0 2 6 | | James Brooks, Broadway-lane | 1 0 0 | | Thos. Hill, saddler | 0 2 6 |
| | J. Ritchie, 329, High-street | 0 2 6 | | Thos. Armstrong, joiner, Post Office, Greenacres, near Manchester | 1 1 0 | | George Oliver | 0 2 6 |
| | Small sums subscribed at Prestonpans | 0 16 8 | | Jas. Wild, grocer, Lees-rd., Greenacres, nr. do. | 1 1 0 | | Thomas Brunton, joiner | 0 2 6 |
| | D. and J. Syme, 27, South Bridge | 2 2 0 | | Miss Chadwick, Rhodes, do., do. | 1 0 0 | | Walter Patton, baker | 0 2 6 |
| | R. Shand, 41, Dundas | 1 1 0 | | Andw. Schofield, timber merchant, do., do. | 10 0 0 | | Wm. Laidlaw, Loan | 0 2 6 |
| Wakefield, Second Remittance. | James Slater, 7, Union-street | 0 2 6 | Wakefield, Second Remittance. | John Taylor, mechanic, Gladwick-lane, do., do. | 0 5 0 | Wakefield, Second Remittance. | John Douglas, shoemaker | 0 2 6 |
| | Two hearty Friends to the cause | 5 5 0 | | Wm. Grainger, bootmaker, do., do. | 0 7 6 | | Alexander Mackintosh, druggist | 0 2 6 |
| | P. Thomson, 151, Rose | 0 5 0 | | Henry Brown, Lower-moor, do., do. | 0 5 0 | | George Easton, Towerknow | 0 2 6 |
| | William Wright, farmer, Prestonpans | 1 0 0 | | John Mills, Lord-street | 0 2 6 | | James Little, baker | 0 3 0 |
| | M. Wilsbore, Waterloo-place | 2 2 0 | | Thos. Hanson, bookkeeper, Chat-moss, Greenacres, near Manchester | 0 2 6 | | Robert Michie, carrier | 0 2 6 |
| | David Archibald, 2, North-street, Andrew-st. | 0 7 6 | | Jas. Potter, draper, Cheapside | 0 5 0 | | George Barclay, baker | 0 2 6 |
| | A. Black, 10, George-street | 0 5 0 | | Jas. Buckley, innkeeper, Lamb Inn | 2 2 0 | | Peter Farquhar | 0 2 6 |
| | James Bayne, 7, South Hanover-street | 0 7 6 | | John Barlow, hatter, Coldhurst | 1 0 0 | | Alexander Smart, baker | 0 2 6 |
| | James Boay, 93, George-street | 3 8 0 | | Edwin Jackson, hatter | 10 0 0 | | Walter Purdon, tobacconist | 0 2 6 |
| | Small sums | 0 6 1 | | Saml. Lees, waste dealer, Ratcliffe-street | 1 0 0 | | James Scott, skinner | 0 2 6 |
| | | Jas. Barker, spinner, Horsedge Mill | 1 0 0 | John Goodfellow, grocer | 0 10 0 | | | |
| | | Jas. Millor, do., do. | 1 0 0 | James Guthrie, slater | 0 2 6 | | | |
| | | Saml. Hargre, do., do. | 1 0 0 | James Forgrieve, tinemith | 0 2 6 | | | |
| | | Henry Ratcliffe, B.A., Bank | 5 0 0 | Francis Deane | 0 2 6 | | | |
| | | Wakefield, Second Remittance. (A Conservative, Westgate) | 1 0 0 | James and A. Watson, Galaahills, N.B. | 1 0 0 | | | |
| | | John Flatman, do. | 2 0 0 | W. Ainslie, warehouseman, Damside | 1 0 0 | | | |
| | | | | Walter Scott, Damside | 1 0 0 | | | |
| </ | | | | | | | | |

| Street. | | Burton-on-Trent. | | Leeds, Sixth Remittance. | | Hebden Bridge, near Halifax, Second Remittance. | | Liverpool, Tenth Remittance. | | Huddersfield, Eighth Remittance. | | Stockton-on-Tees, Second Remittance. | | Kirkcaldy, Fifeshire. | |
|--|--|--|--|--|--|---|--|---|--|---|--|---|--|--|--|
| George Fowler, Barrow, Esq., M.P. for Stroud | | John Mussen, brewer | | James Shaw, Water-lane | | Water and Gunkroger, Hebble-end | | Christopher Benthams, 3, Derby-square | | Stephen Arlson, Jackroyd, near | | John Hutchinson, High-street | | John Fergus | |
| Joseph Watts, Stratford-house | | John Peace, Holly Bank, near Lichfield | | W. W. Hewitson, Hunslet | | Mrs. Slater | | Sampson Gell, do. | | George Arlson, do. | | J. B. Clephan, Silver-street | | P. D. Swan, Esq., Provost of Kirkcaldy | |
| Joseph Partridge, Bowbridge | | Henry Willers, brewer | | Kitson, Thompson, and Hewitson, do. | | Mrs. James Gunkroger | | Wm. Clare and Son, 11, Exchange-buildings | | Wm. Woffenden, do. | | Thomas Atkinson, Park-terrace | | Geo. Anderson | |
| William Fluck, Vatch Mills | | James Riley, Griffin Tap, West-bar | | Joseph Riley, Griffin Tap, West-bar | | Wm. Sutcliffe, Heptonstall Black | | Howard Horley, 21, Chapel-walk | | Joseph Bannister and Co., Rashcliffe | | George Rand, 24, Smithfield | | James Aytoun | |
| Richard Lacey, Middle-street | | William Frankland, Long Preston | | John Hargreaves, do. | | Wm. Robertshaw, do. | | A. Conservative Sugar dealer, disgusted with | | Henry Brown, Lockwood | | A. Harris, Middlesbro' | | David Landale | |
| Smith and Oyde, Arundels Mill | | John Hargreaves, do. | | A Friend, do. | | Horsfall, Slater, and Co., Bank-street | | Monopoly | | Thomas Nicholson, do. | | Three individuals, who don't like their names | | N. Lockhart and Sons, manufacturers | |
| One who insists that the industrious have | | Matthew Gaunt, Bond-street | | John Harrison, 6, Meadow-lane | | Miss Horsfall, do. | | Miss Rawlins, 4, Blackburn-terrace | | Foster Shaw | | John Backley, at Foster Shaw's | | A. Russell and Son, ironfounders | |
| their rights as well as their duties | | John Harrison, 6, Meadow-lane | | Anonymous | | Miss Eliza Jemima Horsfall, do. | | Wm. Bower, 21, Exchange-buildings | | John Backley, at Foster Shaw's | | Joseph Burton, at do. | | James Wotherpoon, merchant | |
| One who thoroughly detests the Corn Laws | | Thomas George and Sons, Spring-gardens | | A Friend to Reform | | Henry Wm. Horsfall, do. | | Launcelot Graham, 13, Rumford-place | | David Burton, at do. | | Robert Skilbeck, at do. | | George Elder, do. | |
| James Peglar, Middle-street | | George Brammer, at Maclea and March's | | John Hargreaves, do. | | Miss Jane Gunkroger, do. | | John Yates, do. | | Robert Skilbeck, at do. | | Godfrey Berry, jun., Lockwood | | Abraham Graham, stone mason | |
| Edward Cockrell, Brimscombe | | John Hargreaves, do. | | A Friend to Reform | | John Gunkroger, do. | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | Godfrey Berry, jun., Lockwood | | Abraham Graham, stone mason | | Thomas Haigh, Royd's Hall, near | |
| J. Merret and Friends, Bowbridge | | John Hargreaves, do. | | Thomas George and Sons, Spring-gardens | | Miss Mary Gunkroger, do. | | subscribed | | D. Midgley, Queen-street | | William Cookson | | Henry Charlesworth, Buxton-road | |
| J. B. Adam, Tower-house, Woodchester, near | | George Brammer, at Maclea and March's | | John Harrison, 6, Meadow-lane | | John Gunkroger, do. | | J. Clann | | John Trumble, Ramsden-street | | Small sums | | Titus Thewlis, warp manufacturer | |
| Oliver Bird, Southfields, near | | John Hargreaves, do. | | A Friend to Reform | | William Shackleton | | Arrears of last subscription | | Francis Yates, Ironbridge | | John Yates, do. | | John Fergus | |
| A. M. Flint, Frogmarsh, near | | John Hargreaves, do. | | Thomas George and Sons, Spring-gardens | | Miss Mary Slater, Hebble-end | | John Hutchinson, High-street | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | P. D. Swan, Esq., Provost of Kirkcaldy | |
| Solomon Leonard, Atcombe house, near | | John Hargreaves, do. | | John Harrison, 6, Meadow-lane | | John Slater, do. | | Wm. Clare and Son, 11, Exchange-buildings | | subscribed | | subscribed | | Geo. Anderson | |
| Frederick Nurse, Duddridge, near | | John Hargreaves, do. | | A Friend to Reform | | Miss Jane Gunkroger, do. | | Howard Horley, 21, Chapel-walk | | J. Clann | | William Cookson | | James Aytoun | |
| Samuel Luker, Duddridge Wharf | | John Hargreaves, do. | | Thomas George and Sons, Spring-gardens | | John Gunkroger, do. | | A. Conservative Sugar dealer, disgusted with | | John Backley, at Foster Shaw's | | Robert Skilbeck, at do. | | David Landale | |
| Nathaniel H. Marling, Stanley Mills | | John Hargreaves, do. | | John Harrison, 6, Meadow-lane | | Miss Mary Gunkroger, do. | | Monopoly | | David Burton, at do. | | Godfrey Berry, jun., Lockwood | | N. Lockhart and Sons, manufacturers | |
| Samuel H. Marling, Ebley Mills | | John Hargreaves, do. | | A Friend to Reform | | John Gunkroger, do. | | Miss Rawlins, 4, Blackburn-terrace | | Robert Skilbeck, at do. | | Abraham Graham, stone mason | | A. Russell and Son, ironfounders | |
| Henry Lewis, Ebley, near | | John Hargreaves, do. | | Thomas George and Sons, Spring-gardens | | William Shackleton | | Wm. Bower, 21, Exchange-buildings | | Godfrey Berry, jun., Lockwood | | William Cookson | | James Wotherpoon, merchant | |
| Samuel Phillimore, do. | | John Hargreaves, do. | | John Harrison, 6, Meadow-lane | | John Slater, do. | | Launcelot Graham, 13, Rumford-place | | D. Midgley, Queen-street | | Small sums | | George Elder, do. | |
| Rev. Ben. Parsons, do. | | John Hargreaves, do. | | A Friend to Reform | | Miss Mary Slater, Hebble-end | | John Yates, do. | | John Trumble, Ramsden-street | | John Yates, do. | | Thomas Haigh, Royd's Hall, near | |
| Id. Miles and Friends, do. | | John Hargreaves, do. | | Thomas George and Sons, Spring-gardens | | John Gunkroger, do. | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | Francis Yates, Ironbridge | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | John Fergus | |
| The Working Men and Women at Nailsworth | | John Hargreaves, do. | | John Harrison, 6, Meadow-lane | | William Shackleton | | subscribed | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | subscribed | | P. D. Swan, Esq., Provost of Kirkcaldy | |
| and Holcombe Mills, by John Roberts | | John Hargreaves, do. | | A Friend to Reform | | Miss Jane Gunkroger, do. | | Arrears of last subscription | | subscribed | | Arrears of last subscription | | Geo. Anderson | |
| Edward Barnard, High-beeches, Nailsworth | | John Hargreaves, do. | | Thomas George and Sons, Spring-gardens | | John Gunkroger, do. | | John Yates, do. | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | John Yates, do. | | James Aytoun | |
| No Compromise | | John Hargreaves, do. | | John Harrison, 6, Meadow-lane | | William Shackleton | | Wm. Clare and Son, 11, Exchange-buildings | | subscribed | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | David Landale | |
| Bundry small sums from the Box | | John Hargreaves, do. | | A Friend to Reform | | Miss Mary Gunkroger, do. | | Howard Horley, 21, Chapel-walk | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | subscribed | | N. Lockhart and Sons, manufacturers | |
| J. Norton, Nailsworth | | John Hargreaves, do. | | Thomas George and Sons, Spring-gardens | | John Gunkroger, do. | | A. Conservative Sugar dealer, disgusted with | | subscribed | | Arrears of last subscription | | A. Russell and Son, ironfounders | |
| T. and J. Hunt, do. | | John Hargreaves, do. | | John Harrison, 6, Meadow-lane | | William Shackleton | | Monopoly | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | John Yates, do. | | James Wotherpoon, merchant | |
| Friends, by Norton and Hunt, Nailsworth | | John Hargreaves, do. | | A Friend to Reform | | Miss Mary Slater, Hebble-end | | Miss Rawlins, 4, Blackburn-terrace | | subscribed | | John Yates, do. | | George Elder, do. | |
| Friends, by H. Roberts, Nailsworth | | John Hargreaves, do. | | Thomas George and Sons, Spring-gardens | | John Gunkroger, do. | | Wm. Bower, 21, Exchange-buildings | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | Thomas Haigh, Royd's Hall, near | |
| Friends, by Anthony Sims, do. | | John Hargreaves, do. | | John Harrison, 6, Meadow-lane | | William Shackleton | | Launcelot Graham, 13, Rumford-place | | subscribed | | Arrears of last subscription | | John Fergus | |
| Jos. Blackwell, do. | | John Hargreaves, do. | | A Friend to Reform | | Miss Jane Gunkroger, do. | | John Yates, do. | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | John Yates, do. | | P. D. Swan, Esq., Provost of Kirkcaldy | |
| J. Hillier, do. | | John Hargreaves, do. | | Thomas George and Sons, Spring-gardens | | John Gunkroger, do. | | Howard Horley, 21, Chapel-walk | | subscribed | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | Geo. Anderson | |
| Wm. Smith and Friends, do. | | John Hargreaves, do. | | John Harrison, 6, Meadow-lane | | William Shackleton | | A. Conservative Sugar dealer, disgusted with | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | subscribed | | James Aytoun | |
| Rev. T. F. Newman, do. | | John Hargreaves, do. | | A Friend to Reform | | Miss Mary Gunkroger, do. | | Monopoly | | subscribed | | Arrears of last subscription | | David Landale | |
| Anthony Fawcett, do. | | John Hargreaves, do. | | Thomas George and Sons, Spring-gardens | | John Gunkroger, do. | | Miss Rawlins, 4, Blackburn-terrace | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | John Yates, do. | | N. Lockhart and Sons, manufacturers | |
| Mr. Underhill, do. | | John Hargreaves, do. | | John Harrison, 6, Meadow-lane | | William Shackleton | | Wm. Bower, 21, Exchange-buildings | | subscribed | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | A. Russell and Son, ironfounders | |
| Joseph Chasold, do. | | John Hargreaves, do. | | A Friend to Reform | | Miss Mary Slater, Hebble-end | | Launcelot Graham, 13, Rumford-place | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | John Yates, do. | | James Wotherpoon, merchant | |
| Wm. Thomas, do. | | John Hargreaves, do. | | Thomas George and Sons, Spring-gardens | | John Gunkroger, do. | | John Yates, do. | | subscribed | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | George Elder, do. | |
| Jos. Baldwin and Fellow-workmen, Nailsworth | | John Hargreaves, do. | | John Harrison, 6, Meadow-lane | | William Shackleton | | Howard Horley, 21, Chapel-walk | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | Thomas Haigh, Royd's Hall, near | |
| John Stanton, Stonehouse, near | | John Hargreaves, do. | | A Friend to Reform | | Miss Jane Gunkroger, do. | | A. Conservative Sugar dealer, disgusted with | | subscribed | | Arrears of last subscription | | John Fergus | |
| Christopher Dibb | | John Hargreaves, do. | | Thomas George and Sons, Spring-gardens | | John Gunkroger, do. | | Monopoly | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | John Yates, do. | | P. D. Swan, Esq., Provost of Kirkcaldy | |
| William Craven, Buck Mill | | John Hargreaves, do. | | John Harrison, 6, Meadow-lane | | William Shackleton | | Miss Rawlins, 4, Blackburn-terrace | | subscribed | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | Geo. Anderson | |
| Benj. Rycroft, Shaw House | | John Hargreaves, do. | | A Friend to Reform | | Miss Mary Gunkroger, do. | | Wm. Bower, 21, Exchange-buildings | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | John Yates, do. | | James Aytoun | |
| Jonathan Hodgson, manufacturer | | John Hargreaves, do. | | Thomas George and Sons, Spring-gardens | | John Gunkroger, do. | | Launcelot Graham, 13, Rumford-place | | subscribed | | J. G. Glazebrook, do., in addition to lbs. before | | David Landale | |

Kirkcaldy, Fifeshire—continued.

| | | | |
|------------------------------------|----|----|---|
| John Tod | 20 | 5 | 0 |
| John Williamson | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Alexander Gorrie | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Robert Wylie | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Robert Bryson | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Martin Rigney | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| J. F. | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| John Skinner | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Black | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Robert Fair | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| John Muir | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| William Williamson | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| James Birrell | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Andrew Miller | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Richd. Henderson | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| John Thomson | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| John Wells | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Alex. Malcolm, jun. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Balderston | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| David Forrester | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Anderson | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Wm. Robertson | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Robt. Dalrymple | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| W. A. Pettigrew | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| Wm. Walker | 0 | 7 | 0 |
| Jas. Robertson, jun. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thomas Dow | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Tod | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Jas. Barclay | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| John Anderson | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| J. Jeffers Wilson | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| George Henderson | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| John Williams | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Ednie | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| David Lockhart | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Henry Glass | 0 | 7 | 0 |
| William Young | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| S. W. Macknight | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Dr. Reid | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Alexander Rowan | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| James Morton | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| John Goodair | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Spence Greig | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| John Grubb | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| George Methven | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| William Oliphant | 0 | 6 | 0 |
| John Bendelow | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Archibald Beveridge | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Archibald Dowie | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Boak and Greig | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| James Barrowman | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| George Herrell | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| James Herrell | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Andrew Leath | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| William Scott | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| William Rodger | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| John Seton | 0 | 7 | 0 |
| James Whyte | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| William Short | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Margaret Wotherpoon | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Anna Wotherpoon | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| James Galloway | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Samuel Barnett | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| David Page | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| John Muckersey | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| David Nelson | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Workmen at Gas Works | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| John Mechie | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| John Taylor | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Jas. Hamilton | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Baxter | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| David Ireland, sen. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Ralph Carae | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| James Galloway | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| David Bogle | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| James Ireland | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| David Ryles | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Andrew Melville | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Wm. Beveridge | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Wm. Fair | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thos. Adamson | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Dott | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Andrew Oliphant | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| David Goodair | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| David Inglis | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| William Crichton | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| John Turner | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Charles Stewart | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| William Souler | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| William Honthron | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Andrew Bird | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| Henry Horn | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Martin | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| John Crawford | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| James Stenhouse | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| John Forrester | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| William Harkness | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| A Few Workmen at Mr. Aytoun's Mill | 0 | 4 | 4 |
| Alexander Nicholson | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| David Greig | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| R. B. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Small sums | 5 | 5 | 7 |

FREE TRADE LESSON FROM CHINA.

To our shame be it said, the Chinese are getting the start of us both in sound principle and liberal practice. The new Chinese tariff is more liberal and more consistent than that of England; and the Imperial Commissioner, Keying, at Taoukwang, has addressed a lecture to the British Consul at Canton, which is the most absolute sense on commercial policy we ever read. That our fellow-countrymen may learn wisdom from this member of the Imperial family of China, we copy the passage, and entreat our readers to let the simple and important lesson it teaches be engraven on their memories:—

"FORASMUCH I, the Imperial Commissioner, now reply to the honourable Consul, that he may act in conformity, and at the same time impress upon the English merchants, that the principle of trading depends entirely upon a mutual willingness. If a field of profit is to be reaped, there is no occasion to beg people to reap it; they will certainly reap it of their own accord. The English merchants and others must carry on their business with our native merchants in a spirit and according to a sense of justice, laying their plans for a long continuance of beneficial intercourse; and thus, it is to be hoped, that day by day the aspect of affairs may brighten, and all kinds of goods expand in their consumption. Although I have no means of looking after such matters in behalf of the foreign merchants, yet I, the Imperial Commissioner, do really night and day indulge in the fervent hope of an improved commercial intercourse, beneficial to all parties. An important official reply."

Yea, truly, and it is "an important official reply." Such "official replies" are rare. Would that the plain dictate of common sense and of justice, taught by this profound Mandarin, were always before our eye, and always acted upon in England! Legislatures need learn no other lesson in political economy than this—"that if a field of profit is to be reaped, there is no occasion to beg people to reap it; they will certainly reap it of their own accord." Acting on that maxim, what a world of impertinent legislation should we be saved! What numberless absurd restrictions and regulations, dictating what field people should reap, who should reap it, and what field they had better not reap, should we avoid, if legislators would just remember that their subjects have heads on their shoulders, and a pair of eyes in each! The laissez faire doctrine is not new, but it has been so abominably neglected in Europe, that it is delightful to find it coming to us from the extremity of Asia. Nor must we, in our admiration of Keying's political economy, overlook the equally admirable wisdom and morality of his exhortation:—

"The English merchants and others must carry on their business with our native merchants in a spirit and according to a sense of justice, laying their plans for a long continuance of beneficial intercourse; and thus it is to be hoped that, day by day, the aspect of affairs may brighten, and all kinds of goods expand in their consumption."

Beautiful precept! When merchants and when governors learn it, we shall be near the millennium.—Leeds Mercury.

REVIEW.

The Natural History of Society. By W. Cooke Taylor, LL.D. London: Longman and Co.

What is there of the things that have been, are, or will be, that has not at some time exercised the busy curiosity of man? Even existences, past, present, and future, have not sufficed; he has sought for food to satiate this craving appetite from what has no existence save in his own creative mind. Every day exhibits to us more and more strikingly the endless variety of our desires for intellectual and material acquisitions, as well as the exhaustless fertility of the sources from which both are supplied; and we feel proportionably impressed with the importance of studying that condition of our existence, which at the same time gives birth to those manifold desires and furnishes the means of their gratification. That condition is "the social state;" for in the savage or isolated state our desires are few, and the power of gratifying them is limited. Yet, in all man's disquisitions, "de omni scibili," it is remarkable that the investigation of the social system has occupied a far smaller space than its importance entitles it to. Perhaps this may be partly from our propensity to trouble ourselves more about what is distant than what lies at our own door; but we are persuaded it has a deeper origin, and is to be attributed in a great degree to fear. Many good men shrink back from meddling with the subject, because they have no faith in the soundness of the principles on which society is based; they have been accustomed to look upon it as the result of some mere human compact; and it presents to the superficial observer so many characteristics of unfairness and positive injustice, that they have feared to direct attention to it at all, lest the result might be the overthrow of the entire fabric. One of the main objects of the book whose name heads this article is, to establish that society is the natural state of man, the state in which his Creator designed him to live, and the state alone in which his faculties can be developed. Let our author give a short outline of the argument:—

"Civilization is progressive and barbarism stationary. Hence many have been led to infer that the latter is the state of nature, or natural condition of man—an inference which, perhaps, may be traced to the vulgar notions of motion and rest; for even philosophers find it difficult to divest themselves of the habit of regarding the vis inertia of matter as more naturally displayed in rest than in motion. Before investigating the question whether civilization or barbarism be the more natural, we should inquire what is the true state of nature of any person or thing? A simple instance will suffice to show that this is not so easy a matter as is generally imagined. Pine-trees are found in the high Alps near the confines of perpetual snow; but they are stunted in their growth, they scarce put forth any branches, and their leaves are not fully developed. Pine-trees are also found in too luxuriant soils, which gives them a precocious exuberance, leading to a deranged organism and early decay. In either case, can the trees be said to be in their natural state? Assuredly not: we know that there are fundamental laws of the life and being of the tree, and that the state most natural to it is that in which it fulfils most completely the end and object for which it is made, according to its organization and the principles of its vitality. Man in a state of nature must, therefore, be man in the state for which nature has fitted him. Is there a definite mould and form to which his faculties are irrevocably predestined and pre-determined? There nature has designed him to remain stationary, and the natural man is the savage. On the other hand, are his faculties expansive, his capacities progressive, and his moral endowments susceptible of cultivation? If so, nature has organized him for progress; civilization is the natural state and barbarism the artificial."—Vol. I., p. 5.

The argument, whose germ is contained in the passage we have quoted, is pursued throughout the book, and enforced by a vast variety of proofs and illustrations drawn from almost every source, and by analogies the most striking and beautiful with which every page teems. This branch of the argument he thus sums up:—

"Having shown that a capacity for improvement was the essential characteristic of man, we then, from all the analogies which the universe affords, inferred that the natural state or condition of man must be that in which there are means and opportunities for the development of his improvable capacity. An extended examination of humanity in the savage and barbarous form of life convinced us that such a state, so far from developing and improving his intellectual and moral powers, blighted and destroyed both; consequently we concluded that society was the natural condition for which man, both by his physical conformation and his moral endowments, was predestined and predetermined. A being so moulded, formed, and gifted would be as unnaturally posited in a desert or a forest, as an oyster on a mountain or a gazelle in the sea. When so placed he degenerates, dwindles, and declines, like exotic plants in our gardens or foreign beasts in our menageries."—Vol. II., p. 341.

Society, then, being established to be an ordinance of God, not of man, we should not be deterred from inquiring into its constitution by the fears we have alluded to. We may rest satisfied that the deeper our researches go, the more will we discover of admirable contrivance and wise management; and when we reach the foundations we shall find them laid in truth, reason, and justice: those defects which superficial observers would consider inherent in its nature, and sufficient to justify its entire condemnation, will by the calm inquirer be often traced to the pernicious influence of man himself marring those designs of his Creator which would be pregnant with blessing to him, as, to give one instance out of many, on that class of cases where perverse ingenuity has fettered industry by its restrictions, and choked up those channels through which wealth would naturally flow through the land; and he, therefore, will no more feel tempted to destroy society because of those defects, than he would to destroy himself because he had some illness which proper medical treatment would cure. Nay, more, he only, we unhesitatingly aver, is the true champion of social order, who has made this examination and arrived at this conviction; and very different indeed will his defence of it be when the hour of trial comes, from the blind and irrational reverence of him who would have things so merely because he finds them so, just as he is the true believer in religion who has fathomed its depths and brought to light for himself arguments to silence all his "saucy doubts and fears." But to pursue this train of thought would lead us too far from the review of the work which has suggested it, and which is so well calculated to impress it deeply upon us. Indeed, one of the great practical merits of this work is, that it develops what the author calls "The Conservative Principles of Society," illustrated in the efforts made for the relief and improvement of humanity, by public and private benevolence; and his observations on this subject, while they must instruct and interest all, claim peculiarly the attention of the philanthropist, whose efforts are directed to promote education and the general amelioration of the condition of the humbler classes. Of education he says:—

"Education is a truly Conservative principle: it is not good that nations should linger behind their destiny, for when they do, they must inevitably lose all the advantages derived from nature and events. The moral and intellectual improvement of the country must keep pace with its physical advancement, or the latter may, we should rather say, inevitably will, sow the seeds of deterioration. New events create new wants; and when they are not watched, from servants they become masters. The very circumstances that give strength and dignity to the national character, unless subjected to the wholesome restraints of principle and knowledge, may become the source of ruin, if left to run their course of unregulated wildness."—Vol. II., p. 301.

We would fain extract some other passages from this chapter which relate to the working classes, but want of space forbids it. We can promise our readers that, if they examine the chapter for themselves, they will be amply rewarded.

We pronounce this work to be indeed CONSERVATIVE—Conservative not in the cant meaning attached to the word, but in its true sense—not Conservative of party, but Conservative of principles: its tendency is to draw closer all those bands which unite men in brotherly kindness, and in defence of that social system which has afforded scope for the development of public and private virtue. Nor can religion despise the support which the truths established here lend her. Our author has established, by a wide induction, that man in a barbarous state cannot rise out of it; we find him civilized, and he cannot civilize himself; therefore civilization must have come from some other source; and the conclusion that it came from the Author of every good and perfect gift is inevitable:—

"Then, but not till then, we examined how far the conclusions to which we had been led by reasoning and analysis were in accordance with the narrative of the early history of our race contained in the Holy Scriptures. We found reason and revelation in complete accordance; they perfectly harmonized together, and thus enforced conviction that both were derived from the same God."

Besides, this is "a natural" history of society; most others that we have met with are unnatural, for they speak of compacts as the foundation of society, which were never entered into save by the authors with their own imaginations. This author refers back the rights of property and persons to their true source, instead of to ideal agreements. We could not give any short extract that would adequately convey his views on this point; our readers will find them in the 5th and 6th chapters.

In fine, we heartily commend this book to all our readers; for, though it contains instruction for the learned, it is suited to the comprehension of all. The style is very nervous, and free from affectation, while a strain of humour runs through it, reminding one of Horace's

"Quid vult ridentem dicere verum."

[This article has been sent us by an esteemed correspondent. We should not ourselves have noticed the book at quiddam notum propriumque, but the importance of the subject induces us to lay aside all scruples of delicacy.]

Studies of Sensation and Event. By Ebenezer Jones. London: Fox.

These poems belong to a peculiar school of literature, which professes to discard all rhetorical artifices of expression, and rest its claims solely on thought and sentiment. It is the opposite extreme to the artificial poetry of Pope and his followers, and we incline to believe that many of the new school have mistaken the reverse of wrong for right. Ebenezer Jones has not always borne his present name: there are indications in his poems which give strong evidence of his identity with a writer who has given decisive proof of intellectual vigour in other walks of literature; and we admire the variety of his powers without becoming quite reconciled to their present manifestation. Were we, however, to bring him to trial before Aristotle on the ancient statutes of the Poetics, he would demur to the jurisdiction of the court, and the pleadings thence arising would rival the length and interest of a Chancery suit. We, therefore, think it better "to take the good the gods provide us," and extract some of these poems, which are at once full of fervid thought and suggestive of much valuable reflection. The following powerful lines are an answer to those who vituperate the violence of insurrection, forgetful of the wrongs by which the terrible retribution was provoked.

"A SLAVE'S TRIUMPH.

"Death to the aristocrats!" the people roared,— Death to my master, each man fiercely thought,
As through the capital of France they poured,
A revolution's mob, with madness fraught:—
Before a stately building paused one band;
Awhile its leader bade them there abide;
And, where his Lord and his Lord's kindred stand,
He sprang and cried—

"Where is your scorn! where is the insolent eye,
Narrowing its lids to look at me; where, where,
The averted face that seemed wrenched away,
Sick at my presence, that ye yet did bear,
Even to enslave me! seem thus sick once more!
With narrowing eyes now speak me your decree!
For beneath your palace human tigers roar!
I hold the key!"

"You merciless wretches! what! you kneel, you whine,
To smile to me, you dare! one smile again,
And the mob is rending ye:—rise, masters mine!
I'll give you a boon to see your old disdain;
To hear your words, slow, insolent, as of yore
Chuckled at the shame they knew they burned through me!
For beneath your palace human tigers roar!
I hold the key!"

The comment on the declaration of a minister in favour of Free Trade, while his measures were all directed to the support of monopoly, provokes the following comment, which appears to us a specimen of poetic and indignant scorn worthy of Juvenal himself:—

"SONG OF THE GOLD-GETTERS.

"The essence of trade is to buy cheap, and sell dear."—House of Commons
England, 1843.

"Oh! truth may have suited the knights of old,
And have royally crowned the barbarian's brow;
And the Hottentot's mother his grave may have scolded
With 'He never once lied'; but Utopia now,
In our civilized world, is the only land
Where truth could be worshipped, where truth could live;

For, from statesman to tradesman, all utterance is planned,
Any meanings but true ones to hint at or give.

Lie! let us lie! make the lies fit;
It's the only way mortals their fortunes can knit.

"If the minister orders war-ships at a foe,
He pretends they are bound quite a different way;
And where is the man that shall dare to throw
Disdain on the lie, or the truth to say?

The traveller, hearing the lion's roar,
Lies to the lion by feigning death,
And lives by the lie; and what can there be more
In the minister's lie to the enemy's teeth!

Lie! let us lie! make the lies fit;
It's the only way mortals their fortunes can knit.

"The best policy's honesty," horn-books tell,
Though we know who lies best gets the best of the pelf;—

"The sire for his children the axiom likes well,
For the lie 'a an advantage he wants all himself;
For the same cunning reason, your pulpits, your thrones,
Your senates, your judges, the axiom repeat;
Each wants to monopolise lying, and moans
That he can't, with this lie, truth from other mean cheat.
Lie! let us lie! make the lies fit;
It's the only way mortals their fortunes can knit.

"Truth now starves in garrets, or rots in a gaol, Whate'er may have been in the times gone by;
And supremacy national, 'cakes and ale,'
Honour, and station, reward the lie;
Let us lie then like statesmen, like fathers, and gold
We shall heap and keep;—the world is war
And out of war's articles, none will uphold
The virtue of truth when a falsehood gains more.

(Chorus.)

Lie! let us lie! Oh! we'll make the lies fit;
It's the only way mortals their fortunes can knit."

There is a startling energy in the following stanzas which form part of a poem entitled "The Coming Cry":—

"We'll all go building workhouses,—million, million hands,
So jointed wondrously by God, to work love's wise commands;
We'll all go building workhouses,—million, million minds,

By great God chartered to condemn whatever harms or binds;
The God-given mind shall image, the God-given hand shall build

The prisons for God's children by the earth-lords willed;
Perhaps it's better than starvation, once we'll pray, and then

We'll all go building workhouses,—million, million men.
"What'll we do with the workhouses? million, million men!

Shall we all lie down, and madden, each in his lonely den?
What! we whose sires made Cressy! we, men of Nelson's mould!

We, of the Russells' country,—God's Englishmen the bold!
Will we, at earth's lords' bidding, build ourselves dishonoured graves?

Will we, who've made this England, endure to be its slaves?
Thrones totter before the answer!—once we'll pray, and then

We'll all go building workhouses,—million, million men."

While no one can deny the vivid force of these poems, there are few who will not feel that the ruggedness of form with which they are designedly invested has a smack of affectation, by no means calculated to improve their effect. Whether we are right or not in our conjecture respecting the author, the person who produced the lines we have quoted is capable of much better things than "Studies of Sensation and Event."

Wanderings of a Journeyman Tailor through Europe and the East, from 1824 to 1840. By P. D. Holthaus. Translated by W. Howitt, Esq. London, Longman and Co.

If this work had no other merit it would deserve notice as a literary curiosity. Its author, a journeyman tailor, has recorded his travels through Germany, Poland, Turkey, Greece, Syria, Egypt, Italy, and France. He set out equipped only with staff and knapsack, as every German mechanic is bound to do at the expiration of his apprenticeship; and his curiosity, increasing with what it fed upon, has led him through the most interesting parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa. He literally stitched his way through these vast and various lands. When his purse runs low he seeks some master tailor, and merrily works away until his travelling funds are replenished, and then resumes his wanderings again. At Bucharest, the capital of Wallachia, he found a curious substitute for bells in the churches:—

"It was to me very striking that you heard so little ringing of bells. The Turks have very much restricted the use of them. Instead of the tolling of a bell, they have a singular bell-ringing, or rather puppet-play. Aloft on the tower are set up a couple of boards, and are struck with a hammer, as a drum is beaten: that is the daily call to church. Is it Sunday or a festival, they hammer on an iron or other metallic plate; after this knocking, the bells are sometimes also rung."

The barbarism of the Wallachians is shown in the way by which their metropolis is supplied with water; but, before too severe a sentence is passed upon them by Londoners, they should think of the countless and nameless abominations by which the Thames is polluted:—

"Bucharest is a great city, with many suburbs, and nearly nine miles long. The Kelle flows nearly through the middle of it, and supplies the city with its water. A cask is drawn about in a little cart, and you hear on all sides the cries—'Appa hop!' that is, 'Buy water!' Every family has a similar cask, into which the water is poured. They then put a little alum into it, and after it has been well stirred about, and has stood an hour, it is clear and drinkable; but as it comes direct from the river it is in the highest degree impure. A cask of water costs commonly twenty, in winter even as much as forty parah, or from one to two silver groschen.

All dead cattle, cats and dogs, are flung into the Kelle, of the latter an incalculable number. On the banks of the Kelle, wild dogs take up their abode, which are called Kelle-dogs, and which find the inhabitants enough to do; but they have now found a good means of reducing those troublesome animals, in the Gipsies, who, here constituting the especial outcasts of society, are employed for their annihilation. They drive round the city in waggons, and strike the dogs dead. You often see from forty to fifty dead dogs on their waggons."

During his visit to Warsaw our worthy tailor had an opportunity of discovering much of the true condition of Poland under Russian despotism, and the following extract contains much that will furnish food for reflection:—

"More than the city itself, the life and proceedings in it showed you that the Russians were masters there. Everywhere watchhouses were erected in the streets, in which Russians and Polish invalids were posted, to prevent any unquiet movements in the streets. The Polish population was somewhat shrunk up, but fifty thousand Russians lay in garrison, and gave a peculiarly martial life to the place. There were infantry, cavalry, Cossacks, Ciro-sians, and Tartars. Many of these troops, thus brought hither out of distant regions, had a foreign aspect; and the Cossacks were especially remarkable for their rich costume and fine figures. Their costume consists of round blue and yellow caps, encircled with a strip of fur, a brown smooth coat descending to the knee, and cut wide open around the neck. Round the waist they have a narrow leathern belt, to which the sabre hangs. Their carbines are generally in their case, and hung slanting across the back. In front, on the breast, they have on each side seven cartridge pockets. They wear nearly all beards. They are mounted, and are very skilful and bold riders. This was the body-guard of Pas-kewitch; I saw a similar one afterwards at Constantinople.

"The Tartars wear high caps, pointed at top, of untanned black lamb-skin. The head is completely shaved, and from each ear hang twisted patent curls. Under the nose they have monstrous moustaches. Their uniforms consist of long straight dresses, after the eastern fashion; and their firearms and sabres are eastern. The cartridge pouches hang on the breast. I saw, too, some officers armed with bows and arrows. They, too, are mounted. Their horses have very short shovel-like stirrups. They came in one march from the Caspian Sea to Warsaw. Their horses travel day after day, from six-and-thirty to forty-two miles, without pause or baiting.

"Amongst the Poles I heard occasional expressions of hate and hostility to the Russians. They dared not, it is true, speak this out aloud, because everywhere in public were Russian spies, who constitute a secret and lurking police; but, in his soul, the Pole hates the Russian like death. At the same time the common Pole is generally content when he has sufficient wutka or brandy. With this he goes very radically to work; for he does not begin without making an end of it; be the glasses great or small, he drains them at a draught. Give him a glass of brandy or a bit of tobacco, and he is the best fellow in the world.

"The Polish nobles were for the time much abridged of their liberties. They were not allowed to carry arms, nor even to hunt without permission from the Government. They live in great luxury; their costume is chiefly German, and splendid. On the contrary, the peasantry wear linen trousers, and over them a white shirt and a broad belt, and a large hat, with huge, unbound brim. In summer and winter they wear sheepskin, which commonly is thickly populated with all sorts of vermin. The common Poles are, moreover, very filthy; and you find amongst them very frequently a disease called the weichselzopf, or Vistula pigtail (trica polonica), in which the hair all mats together, and is filled with a pestiferous ooze. But all have a certain pride.

"I saw many Polish recruits marching off for the interior of Russia. Every Pole had two Russians to accompany him; afterwards two Poles had but one Russian."

Much as the Poles suffer from the Russians, they endure infinitely more from the monopolies rigidly enforced by their own aristocracy. Let one example serve as a specimen:—

"In one small town I lost my faithful travelling flask in a singular manner. I carried it on a string hung from the neck; the officers of the customs inquired after its contents, and as they found some little brandy yet in it, they tore it, by authority of their office, from my neck, and spite of all persuasions and representations I could not get it again. The Polish nobleman to whom the city belonged had the sole right to manufacture and sell brandy in the place; no one was allowed to bring any of this liquor in. I was even menaced with legal punishment."

We have read innumerable descriptions of the dogs of Constantinople, and yet the account given of them by our friend the tailor is not destitute of novelty and interest:—

"But the Turks maintain a sort of police who take care that the streets are cleared. Throughout Constantinople nothing is more striking than the amazing number of dogs which everywhere abound. They belong to nobody, and live on the garbage, and whatever lies in the streets. In the middle of the way, in the midst of the thickest stir of men, they lie sleeping about, and stop your way. They will turn out for no one, but you must go out of their way. At times they are dreadfully trodden on and mangled by the horses. They are all of one race, a sort of great wolf-hound, but for the rest not very savage nor apt to bite. The Turks do not injure them, and towards the Franks they are more hostile. In the night they set up a horrible howling. They make a regular republic, and divide themselves into certain quarters and districts of the city. If one comes to seek food in the range of another, all that are near fall upon him, drive him out, and frequently tear his jacket well for him. Such a culprit remains often lying on the spot, and you may sometimes see his intestines hang out. In their houses and mosques the Turks endure no dogs; they despise them, and consider them unclean; but in the streets they leave them undisturbed. They believe that it brings the especial blessings of God upon them, if they are kind and merciful to the animals which they do not eat for food. Wealthy and pious Turks frequently purchase bread and meat and throw them to the dogs. Bakers and fishermen let them have their crumbs and offal, as heads, liver, lungs, and intestines of sheep, which here are purchased and cooked by the Greeks and Armenians.

"It is equally horrible with the quantities of cats which are lodged everywhere in Constantinople; there are regular cats' hospitals; to the birds they are equally attentive—so far from hurting them, they rather feed them, leave them in all their freedom, and even build nests for them. You see about the mosques whole flocks of lovely dark-blue pigeons.

"At times there is issued an order that the streets shall be cleansed, and it is done, but it does not continue long so; the old nuisances soon are scattered over them."

At the Feast of Beiram our traveller had an opportunity of seeing the reigning Sultan going in state to the mosque:—

"Immediately on this follows the feast of Beiram; it is joyously celebrated. From the ships resounds the thunder of cannon, and the Sultan makes a grand gala procession of the whole Serail to the Twelve-Apostle Mosque. The street for the three-mile length of way is crowded with spectators of all nations. A line of Turkish soldiers is posted on each side. Many splendid horses richly caparisoned, with numerous blue and red feathers on their heads, and covered with gold-embroidered saddle-cloths, are led by negroes; next rides a very short mannikin, with an old face and a tremendous beard, who is a counsellor (the court-fool) of the Sultan; then comes the officers and great Pachas, all mounted on horses, with clothes blazing with gold and diamonds; now approaches the Sultan himself, riding in the midst of his foot-guard. On this occasion he was dressed in the European style: wore dark-blue trousers with a red stripe, a dark-blue coat, such as is worn by the Prussian officers, with a red, gold-embroidered collar, and facings of the same, and a cloak of moorish-grey, with a rich upright embroidered collar; the red fess stood on high with a blue tassel, and upon it a costly feather with a large diamond. The Pachas are clad in the same manner, but without the cloak and feather. The Sultan wore a black, elegant beard; he rode a white Arabian horse; the guard was followed by foot and horse, with European music. The train returned in the same routine. The second Beiram, a New-year's feast, falls generally in spring, and is quite as joyfully celebrated."

Holthaus records the ill success of several attempts which he made to penetrate into the Russian territory; but we learn from the publisher's advertisement that he has now gone to that country, and we trust that on his return he will publish a full account of what he has seen, for few travellers in Russia have had an opportunity of examining the real character of the social life of the operative classes in that empire.

Impressions, Thoughts, and Sketches during Two Years in France and Switzerland. By Martha Macdonald Lamont. London, Moxon.

Many as are the demands made on our time and space, we cannot pass over this delightful and unpretending volume without recommending it to our readers, not merely as a faithful delineation of the best Parisian society, but as a most interesting example of the unfolding of female mind when allowed to have full scope and free exercise. To all the grace and softness becoming a lady Miss Lamont unites the vigour of an independent judgment and the aspirations of a noble heart; she has thought, and, what is still more rare, she has felt, for herself. She has not allowed any conventional distinctions of race, creed, or colour to limit the range of her sympathies; her moral standard is exclusively based on revelation and reason, on what God has said and man should do. That some of her opinions are immature and will be corrected by a ripper judgment may be safely conceded; but, such as they are, they all bear the healthy marks of natural growth; they have not been grafted on by prejudice, nor stunted in their growth by fashion. We should gladly have made some extracts, but other demands on our columns are too numerous and too pressing: we, however, earnestly commend the work to our readers as an admirable and practical illustration of the value of Lessing's precepts, "Think in what way you please, but think for yourself."

Jack of the Mill, commonly called Lord Othmill. By William Howitt, Esq. London, Longman and Co.

Though obviously an attempt to rationalize "Jack, the Giant Killer," there runs through this tale a vein of such genuine feeling, and hearty sympathy with the imaginings of youthful ambition, that it is sure to hold a permanent and conspicuous place in every youthful library. Extravagant as some of the adventures are—the exploits of the hero rivaling those of the most doughty Paladins in the romances of chivalry—they are related with so much spirit and humour that the reader is compelled to forget their improbability, particularly as they are accompanied with such vivid delineations of English scenery, and our attention is led away from any defect in the drawing of the figures by the exquisite beauty of the surrounding landscape.

The defect of the book is the prominence given to the military qualities of the hero. Howitt treats him as an Indian chief, and seems to believe that he should be honoured in proportion to the number of scalps which he can display as trophies. We did not expect to find William Howitt thus revelling in slaughter; and we think that his work would have been all the better had it exhibited a little less of mock chivalry and a little more of pure Christianity.

David Barclay, Esq., M.P. for Sunderland, has addressed a letter to the editor of the Newcastle Advertiser, stating his intention to vote for Mr. Villiers's motion, provided it is so shaped as to admit the consideration of a moderate fixed duty as an alternative.

KIRKALDY—FREE-TRADE AGITATION.—The committee of the Anti-Corn-Law Association of this place have received some 600 packages of tracts, pamphlets, prize essays, &c., illustrative of the principles of Free Trade, which are being distributed to every elector within the Kirkaldy Parliamentary district of burghs. We hope they will not be without effect in producing a sound conversion in many upon the important subject to which they relate. The committee have also set a-going a subscription in aid of the League Fund, and they hope that Kirkaldy will show itself not to be behind other places either in zeal or liberality.—Fife Herald.

THE LAY OF THE LAND.

A CONTRAST TO THE "SONG OF THE SHIRT." (See No. 13, p. 207.)

"For what were all our country patriots born?
To hunt and vote, and raise the price of corn;
Their good, ill, health, wealth, joy, or discontent,
Being, end, aim, religion—Rent, rent, rent!"—BYRON.

With foreign wines on his board,
A Swiss valet behind his back,
The "Protector of British Industry" sat,
And laughed as his sides would crack.
He laughed at his tenants who placed
Their voices and votes in his hand,
And in fancied triumph over the League
He sung "the Lay of the Land!"

"Rent—rent—rent!
Whether corn be high or low;
And rent—rent—rent!
Whether markets be quick or slow;
Let the farmers be kept like slaves,
Or rayals of Turkish bashaw,
Let labourers sink to their graves,
But uphold the landlord's law.

"Rent—rent—rent!
Though famishing infants cry;
And rent—rent—rent!
Though thousands of hunger die;
Ay, perish ship, commerce, and trade,
Perish trade, commerce, and ship:
Let all other interests fade,
Ere what we hold we let slip.

"For sisters we've portions to find,
And pinmoney for our wives;
It will not cause a pang to the mind,
To draw them from human lives.
Rent—rent—rent!
Is our first and our latest breath;
And we care not a jot that it must be drawn
From misery, famine, and death.

"Rent—rent—rent!
From labour that never flags,
And to which we grudge its bed of straw—
Its scanty meal and its rags;
Its hovel unfit for my dogs—
Its workhouse—a new Bastille;
They grumble; but who for their grumbling cares?
What right have the poor to feel?

"Rent—rent—rent!
If prospects be dark or bright;
And rent—rent—rent!
Comes plenteous season or blight;
While the farmers cling to the law
Which affords me pretence to exact,
And none of them muster up courage to speak
And twit me with the fact.

"Oh! still let the farmers toil—
Let labourers shiver and pine—
Let them starve from the want of imported corn,
While I drink imported wine.
While from every foreign clime
Our tables with luxuries groan,
The food supplied by a foreign land
We deny to the poor alone.

"For we are the makers of law,
And its ministration is ours,
And very well all our families know
The use that we make of our powers;
For Corn Laws we still maintain,
And rents we still keep high,
And if ever a tenant should dare to complain,
He's ejected to wither and die."

Even thus at his lordly board,
With foreign dainties spread,
A protector of native industry sat,
With no thought in his head,
But rent—rent—rent!
In spite of the Free-Trade band;
And treating the farmers with insolent jeers
(Oh, would that the words would ring in their ears),
He sung "the Lay of the Land."

REPRESENTATION OF MORPETH.—We stated upon the best authority, that Captain Howard will accept the Chiltern Hundreds, and that Lord Morpeth will, in a day or two, issue an address to the electors of Morpeth, as a candidate for their suffrages.—Gatehead Observer.

TRUTH PREDOMINATES.—He knows nothing of men who expects to convince a determined party man; and he nothing of the world who despairs of the final impartiality of the public.—Lavater.

FRUITS OF FREE TRADE.—A letter has been received in Newcastle, within these few days, from the captain of a vessel at Hong-Kong, in which the writer states that the charges on his vessel will be £200 less than they would have been previous to the commercial treaty. The vessel is about 20 keels. So much for Free Trade.—Gatehead Observer.

THE SHIPPING "INTEREST," AND PEELE'S SLIDING SCALE.—At a late meeting of the Sunderland Free-Trade Association, it was mentioned by one of the members, that, since the 21st of September last, ten cargoes of foreign grain had entered the port of Sunderland, of which seven had been imported in foreign bottoms, and three only in British ships. Such is the operation of Pele's sliding scale (combined with his new coal-trade laws), that more than two-thirds of our foreign grain traffic falls to the share of foreigners! No wonder the British shipowners are beginning to heap inverted blessings on the day they helped to place so injurious a "friend" as Pele in the premiership. They now see, that the more there is to be carried, and the more regular the carrying trade can be made, the better for themselves, the carriers; and that their own permanent prosperity can be secured only by a full adoption of the great principle of Free Trade, and not by the paltry, peddling impolicy of "unsettling everything, and settling nothing."—Durham Chronicle.

THE FUNDS.

| | Jan. 10 | Feb. 10 | Jan. 11 | Feb. 11 | Jan. 12 | Feb. 12 |
|---------------------|---------|---------|---------|---------|---------|---------|
| Bank Stock | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 |
| 3 per Ct. Red. Ann | 99 | 99 | 99 | 99 | 99 | 99 |
| 3 per Ct. Con. Ann | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 |
| 3 per Ct. Red. Ann | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 |
| 3 per Ct. Con. Ann | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 |
| Long An. R. 1850 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 |
| Cons. for Acc. | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 |
| Ex. Bills | 99 | 99 | 99 | 99 | 99 | 99 |
| Ind. Ed. und. 1000 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 |
| India Stock | 277 | 277 | 277 | 277 | 277 | 277 |
| Belgian | 106 | 106 | 106 | 106 | 106 | 106 |
| Brassilian | 79 | 79 | 79 | 79 | 79 | 79 |
| Chilian | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 |
| Columb. ex. Venes. | 123 | 123 | 123 | 123 | 123 | 123 |
| Danish | 89 | 89 | 89 | 89 | 89 | 89 |
| Dutch 3 per Ct. | 101 1/2 | 101 1/2 | 101 1/2 | 101 1/2 | 101 1/2 | 101 1/2 |
| Dutch 2 1/2 per Ct. | 84 | 84 | 84 | 84 | 84 | 84 |
| Mexican, 1857 | 34 | 34 | 34 | 34 | 34 | 34 |
| Portuguese, conv. | 47 1/2 | 47 1/2 | 47 1/2 | 47 1/2 | 47 1/2 | 47 1/2 |
| Buenos Ayres | 34 | 34 | 34 | 34 | 34 | 34 |
| Spanish 3 per Ct. | 33 1/2 | 33 1/2 | 33 1/2 | 33 1/2 | 33 1/2 | 33 1/2 |
| Do. 2 per Ct. | 32 1/2 | 32 1/2 | 32 1/2 | 32 1/2 | 32 1/2 | 32 1/2 |
| Peruvian | 27 | 27 | 27 | 27 | 27 | 27 |

GALASHIELS.—Why are the manufacturing classes of this thriving place resting on their oars in the great national movement for subscriptions to the League? This is surely not the time for sleeping at our post. If you wish to wage the battle of Free Trade with the land-ocracy, who are undermining your trade and industry by a Bread Tax, contribute of your substance to the great League fund—follow the bright example of your neighbour manufacturers at Hawick, who have contributed upwards of £150 for the glorious cause. Scotland expects that every man will do his duty; nay, more, England and the world expect the same thing. Let operatives unite with their masters. The poorer the workmen the greater the need of cheap food and liberal wages; therefore let the weaver at the loom, the cobbler at the stall, and the tailor at the board, &c., give a something, otherwise they have no reason to complain of want of work and low wages. We have no fears of our fellow-townsmen, who only require a hint to do their duty.—Kelso Chronicle.

MARKETS.

CORN MARKET.

MARK-LANE, Monday, Feb. 12.—There was a moderate supply of Kentish Wheat this morning, but very short of Essex and Suffolk. There was an improved demand for all kinds, and 1s. to 2s. advance was readily obtained on both English and free foreign. There was more inquiry for Wheat in bond; but the transactions were not extensive, owing to the high rates at which it was held. Fine Malting barley was scarce, and sold at fully last week's rates; but Distilling and Grinding qualities were taken off slowly at scarcely so good prices. No alteration in the value of Beans and Peas. There was a fair supply of Oats fresh up this morning from Ireland and coastways. The trade was very inactive, but last week's prices were fully supported. B. H. LUCAS and SON.

Currency per imperial measure.

| | | | |
|---------------------|------------|------------------------|------------|
| Wheat, English, Red | 45s to 55s | Peas, Maple | 28s to 30s |
| New, do. | 45s to 55s | Malt, Pale Suffolk and | |
| Do., do., Old | 52s to 61s | Norfolk | 54s to 58s |
| New, do., White | 48s to 60s | Chevalier | 60s to 63s |
| Old, do., do. | 60s to 64s | Brown | 53s to 56s |
| Dantzic | 57s to 63s | Oats, English Feed | 20s to 22s |
| Stettin | 50s to 57s | Do. Short | 21s to 23s |
| Malting | 84s to 88s | Scotch Feed | 21s to 23s |
| Distilling | 32s to 34s | Do. Potato | 23s to 25s |
| Grinding | 28s to 32s | Irish Feed | 19s to 20s |
| Beans, Tick | 26s to 27s | Do. Short | 20s to 22s |
| Harrow | 28s to 30s | Do. Black | 19s to 20s |
| Pigeon | 32s to 34s | Do. Galway | 17s to 19s |
| Old Harrow | 33s to 34s | Flour, town made and | |
| Peas, White | 28s to 30s | best country marks | 45s to 50s |
| Do., Bollers | 31s to 33s | Norfolk and Suff. | |
| Grey | 26s to 28s | folk | 40s to 44s |

Account of CORN, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 5th to the 10th of Feb. 1844, both days inclusive:

| | Wheat. | Barley. | Oats. | Beans. | Peas. |
|---------|--------|---------|-------|--------|-------|
| English | 3023 | 6801 | 1102 | 1130 | 950 |
| Scotch | — | 900 | 1869 | 27 | — |
| Irish | — | 803 | 4050 | — | — |
| Foreign | — | — | — | — | — |

Flour, 4817 sacks, 1307 bls. Malt, 5854 qrs.
MARK-LANE, Friday, Feb. 16.—The arrivals of Wheat and Barley since Monday are moderate; there are good supplies of English, Scotch, and Irish Oats. There is scarcely so much activity in the Wheat trade as on Monday. The trade in Barley and Oats is not brisk; but the prices of all grain are firmly maintained. In one or two instances a trifling advance has been obtained on Monday's prices for Wheat in bond.

B. H. LUCAS and SON.
Account of Corn, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 9th of Feb. to the 16th of Feb., both days inclusive.

| | English. | Irish. | Foreign. |
|--------|----------|--------|----------|
| Wheat | 4640 | — | 4220 |
| Barley | 8110 | 890 | 1280 |
| Oats | 4650 | 19,080 | — |

Flour 5580 sacks.
A WEEKLY REPORT OF THE NUMBER OF QUARTERS, and the AVERAGE PRICE OF CORN and GRAIN, sold in the several Counties of England and Wales (comprising the Two Hundred and Ninety Towns named in the Act of the 5th Vic., cap. 14), which governs Duty.

| | WHEAT. | BARLEY. | OATS. | BEANS. |
|----------------------|------------|------------|------------|------------|
| | Qrs. sold. | Qrs. sold. | Qrs. sold. | Qrs. sold. |
| Weekly Averages.. | 108,876 52 | 111,002 33 | 53,349 19 | 11,000 20 |
| Aggregate Averages.. | 51 7 | 33 2 | 18 10 | 20 7 |
| Duty..... | 19 0 | 5 0 | 8 0 | 11 6 |

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 13.

CROWN OFFICE, FEBRUARY 13.
MEMBERS RETURNED TO SERVE IN THIS PRESENT PARLIAMENT.

Borough of Devises.—William Heald Ludlow Bruges, of Beend, in the county of Wilts, Esq., in the room of Thomas Henry Sutton Botheron, Esq., who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.

County of Wilts.—Northern Division.—Thomas Henry Sutton Botheron, of Bowden Park, in the said county of Wilts, Esq., in the room of Sir Francis Burdett, Bart., deceased.

BANKRUPTCY SUPPLEMENTED.

J. RHODES, Leeds, woolstapler.

BANKRUPT.

J. FAULKNER, Danvers-street, Chelsea, builder. [Ward, Lincoln's-inn-fields.
J. MILNER, Brook-street, New-road, engine manufacturer. [Mivington, Fenchurch-buildings.

T. AMOS, Kingland-road, builder. [Sheffield, Lendenhall-street.]
 E. M. MARKS, Mortimer-street, Cavendish-square, upholsterer. [Livings, Chancery-lane.]
 G. FIELD, Bond court, Walbrook, packer and merchant. [Cottrell, Throgmorton-street.]
 H. TURNER, Whodsome Lane, Yorkshire, fancy cloth manufacturer. [Clark and Co., Lincoln's-inn-fields; Robinson, Huddersfield; Bond, Leeds.]
 T. HIGGINS, Liverpool, pawnbroker. [Thompson, Liverpool; Norris and Co., Bartlett's-buildings, Holborn.]
 J. H. BARRY, Liverpool, merchant. [Sharp and Jackson, Bedford-row; Miller and Peel, Liverpool.]
 T. LAY, Dudley, grocer. [Collis, Stourbridge; Smith, Birmingham.]
 R. LANG, Mill-bridge, Bristol, Yorkshire, tallow chandler. [Jaques and Edwards, Ely-place; Watte, Dewsbury.]

DIVIDENDS.

March 7. G. Nettleton, Brompton, Kent, tailor—March 7. J. Harrison, Brighton, coach builder—March 7. C. Marshall, Old Castle-street, Whitechapel—March 7. G. Bishop, St. Mary's, City, merchant—March 6. F. W. K. Haradon, Philpott-lane, City, merchant—March 6. A. Mason, Bury St. Edmund's, coach proprietor—March 6. A. Duncan and C. Duncan, Token-house-yard, City, merchants—March 6. J. Brown, Sheffield, merchant—March 6. G. Boyd and W. Boyd, Kingston-upon-Hull, engineers—March 6. St. J. Cartwright, Workop, Nottinghamshire, grocer—March 9. R. Ferris and Co., Liverpool, merchants—March 6. W. Jacks, Bristol, merchant—March 6. G. Holdsworth, Halifax, Yorkshire, worsted spinner—March 7. R. Hansford, Weymouth, Dorsetshire, grocer—March 7. W. P. Georges, Devonport, wine merchant—March 7. J. R. Munden, Warwick, Somersetshire, flax and tow spinner—March 6. A. Webb, Liverpool, carpet seller—March 6. G. Hood, Brownhills, Staffordshire, earthenware manufacturer—March 9. J. Hete, Dudley, Worcestershire, ironmonger—March 7. T. W. Jones, Wellington, Shropshire, mercer—March 9. G. Wheldon, Dudley, Worcestershire, clothier.

CERTIFICATES.

March 7. A. Wells, Wickford, Essex, surgeon—March 7. J. M'Lean, Sun-street, Bishopgate-street Without, statutory and mason—March 7. J. Dobson, Old Gravel-lane, Ratcliffe-high-way, ship carpenter—March 7. P. and B. Bayfus, Houndsditch, importers of French goods—March 6. J. Guntton, Cambridge, butcher—March 6. F. Thompson, Southampton, tailor—March 6. J. Andrews, Lad-lane, City, licensed victualler—March 7. C. Willmer, Tillingham, Essex, draper—March 6. A. G. Roussac, Austin-frars, City, merchant—March 6. W. Read, King street, Covent-garden, printer—March 6. H. Cotman, Norwich, draper—March 6. A. W. and T. B. Lowman, Eastcheap, cheesemongers.

SCOTCH SEQUESTERATIONS.

D. STOCKS, Cameron Bridge, Fifeshire, farmer.

A CUP OF COFFEE IN ONE MINUTE!

DUNN'S ESSENCE OF COFFEE, warranted to keep good in any climate. This Essence of the finest Mocha Coffee, improved by a process of thirty years' experience, contains all the fragrant and exhilarating properties of the Coffee in the highest perfection. It is admirably adapted to persons travelling, Officers in the Army and Navy, and Families visiting watering-places. Manufactured by D. DUNN, Pentonville, London, Manufacturer of Chocolate Powder, Essence of Ginger, and other Spices, Herbs, &c. Sold in Bottles from 1s. to 4s. each; and may be ordered of any respectable Grocer in the United Kingdom. Directions.—Put about a teaspoonful of the Essence into a coffee-cup, add sugar and cream or milk, then fill it up with boiling water, and a cup of Coffee, of superior flavour, is instantly made.

LOWDEN'S CELEBRATED COUGH PILLS, a safe and effectual cure for Coughs, Colds, Shortness of Breath, Asthma, &c. They promote free expiration, and hence prevent that accumulation of phlegm which causes a sense of choking; allay irritability, tickle in the throat, and relieve that sense of oppression, fullness, and difficulty of breathing, which nightly deprives the patient of rest. In Asthma and Coughs of long standing they are invaluable, and universally admitted to be the best known Medicine, in any case where they do not effect a perfect cure they afford such relief to the sufferer during the paroxysms of fits as to induce him heretofore never to be without them. Sold by Mr. Lowden, Chemist, 204, Fleet-street, London, in boxes at 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. also by one or more respectable Medicine Vendors in each town in the United Kingdom.

PATENTED AND MANUFACTURED BY HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN, H. R. H. PRINCE ALBERT, THE ROYAL FAMILY, AND THE SEVERAL COURTS OF EUROPE.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the Growth and for Preserving and Beautifying the Human Hair. Price 3s. 6d. Family Bottle (equal to small) 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. CAUTION.—SPURIOUS IMITATIONS are frequently offered for sale under the FICTITIOUS name of the word "GENUINE." It is therefore imperative on purchasers to see that the words "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" are on the Wrapper of each bottle, and on the back of the wrapper nearly 1000 times, containing 20,000 letters. All others are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS. The principle on which "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" is prepared, is confined solely to the knowledge and practice of A. ROWLAND and SON, who are still at an immense expense in completing its preparation, and the amalgamation of its PURELY VEGETABLE MATERIALS renders abortive any attempt to discover its secret parts.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for Improving and Beautifying the Skin and Complexion. Price 3s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. per bottle, duty included. ROWLAND'S OIL, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, renders the Teeth beautifully White and preserves the Gums. Price 2s. 6d. per box, duty included.

CAUTION.—It is imperative on purchasers to see that the word "ROWLAND'S" is on the Wrapper of each article. For the protection of the Public from fraud and imposition, the Honourable Commissioners of Her Majesty's Stamps have authorized the Proprietors' Signature to be engraved on the Government Stamp, thus, A. ROWLAND and SON, 70, Hatton-garden, which is affixed to the Kalydor and Oil. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers. * * All others are SPURIOUS IMITATIONS!!!

BLAIR'S GOUT AND RHEUMATIC PILLS.—Further testimonials of the efficacy of this medicine.

TO MR. PRUIT, 229, Strand, London.

Pringle, near Bagshot, Surrey, April 23, 1813.

Sir,—I enclose three cases, in which the parties thereto named have received great benefit from using BLAIR'S PILLS, and the truth of which I am at any time ready to make affidavit of if required. You are at perfect liberty to publish them if you think proper. Hoping this may induce the credulous to make a trial of the Pills, which will speedily convince them of their value.

I am, Sir, yours truly, JOHN J. GILES.

Pringle, April 23, 1813.

Dear Sir, Upon your recommendation I sent for a box of BLAIR'S RHEUMATIC PILLS, and to my astonishment a few days entirely relieved the numerous pains my wife had suffered as long, but having caught a severe cold the inflammation again returned, when, having recourse to a few more Pills, it again fled, and has not since returned. The public are not generally aware of the efficacy of this truly valuable medicine, or few would suffer from rheumatism.

In consequence of witnessing the effects of the above medicine in my own family, I recommended Edward Bridger, now sixty-seven years of age, a labouring and shilling gardener, to apply to you, he being much afflicted with rheumatism for twenty years, he could scarcely get any sleep, being always worse when in bed, and was to walk without the assistance of a stick. You gave him some Pills. I saw him yesterday. He told me he could now get rest which he had been unable to do for a very long time, he is still lame from the length of time he has been afflicted, but can now walk, without much inconvenience, ten or twelve miles in the day, and can, so he says, do any light work; he has applied to me for a job at hoeing. It is distressing to see a fellow creature suffering such excruciating pain, when relief may be obtained by taking BLAIR'S GOUT AND RHEUMATIC PILLS. I shall, for the benefit of those who may suffer, continue to recommend them.

I am, dear Sir, yours truly, THOMAS INWOOD.

To John J. Giles, Esq., Pringle, Surrey.

Dear Sir, The effect of BLAIR'S PILLS has been everything I could wish for. I had symptoms of the gout during Wednesday night I took two Pills during the night, and two in the morning, which quite removed the pain, and I was enabled to give a lecture at Hatfield-row on Thursday evening, although I was in fear that morning I should not have been enabled to leave home.

I am, dear Sir, yours truly, EDW. J. LANE.

To the above gratifying communication the proprietor of BLAIR'S GOUT AND RHEUMATIC PILLS considers any comment from him would be superfluous. Sold by Messrs. Pruit, 229, Strand, London; and by the vendors of medicine throughout the United Kingdom.

THE CORN LAWS.—The sentiments of every member of Parliament respecting the CORN LAWS will be found in Mr. DODD'S "PARLIAMENTARY COMPANION" for 1844, which contains a full Biographical Dictionary of both Houses, a Statement of the Polls, Population, &c., with Explanations of Parliamentary Terms and Proceedings. Royal 32mo, price 4s. 6d., morocco gilt. Whittaker and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

THE REWARD UNCLAIMED; or the State Church Mortally Wounded: showing the immediate separation of Church and State to be inevitable; and that all compulsory contributions for the purposes of the Church must forthwith be abolished. Second Edition, with enlargements. The above will be published by Dennis, Paternoster-row, on Thursday next, the 22nd instant, price Sixpence.

Just published, in demy 12mo, pp. 258, price 3s. 6d. sewed, or 5s. 6d. THE ARISTOCRACY OF BRITAIN and the LAW OF BIRTH AND PRIMOGENITURE, judged by recent French writers: being Selections from the Works of Fanny, Beaumont, O'Connor, Mounod, Barot, Gaisot, Constant, Dupin, Bay, Blanqui, and Mignet: showing the advantage of the Law of Equal Succession. With Explanatory and Statistical Notes. Glasgow: G. and J. Dyer, 24, Paternoster-row. Edinburgh: W. Tait. Glasgow: Andrew Guthrie. Cupar-Pfife: G. S. Tullis.

THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW.—The political interest excited by the last number of the "Westminster" is an encouraging evidence that the time has arrived when, by judicious exertions, the influence of this old-established periodical, which has now been twenty years before the public, may be rendered equal or superior to that of any similar quarterly publication of the United Kingdom. No pains or expense will be spared to effect this object, and its contents will be numerous and diversified. Among them will be found a paper on "Shakespearean Criticism," by the author of the articles "Abelard and Heloise," "Robin Hood," and "Hampton Court," with several papers on Art and Architectural Works, illustrated by lithographic prints and numerous woodcuts. The political papers will be entitled "The British Embassy to Shoo," and "Earl Spencer."—Advertisements and Bills should be sent to the publisher's on or before the 20th instant.

London: Samuel Clarke, 13, Pall-mall East.

Now ready, Second Edition, price 4s. 6d. THE PAPAL AND HIERARCHICAL SYSTEM compared with the Religion of the New Testament. "A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land; the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means, and my people love to have it so, and what will ye do in the end thereof?"—Jer. v. 30, 31. "So clear and scriptural are the views put forth, and so truly Protestant, that the Author in writing and publishing the work has conferred an inestimable benefit, and at a most seasonable time, upon the Christian church."—Evangelical Register, Aug. 1843. "A sensible and able discussion of a subject which will, ere long, command the rapid attention of the civilized world."—Nonconformist, Sept. 1843. Just published, price One Shilling.

HYDROPATHY DEFENDED BY FACTS; or, the GOLD WATER CURE shown to be as safe in Practice as it is rational in Theory. By A. COWAN, surgeon, R.N., Ramsgate. CHEAP EDITIONS OF DYMOND'S ESSAYS. Complete in 1 vol. at 3s. 6d., originally published in 2 vols. at 21s. The Seventh Thousand of this Edition.

ESSAYS ON THE PRINCIPLES OF MORALITY, and on the Private and Political Rights and Obligations of Mankind. By JONATHAN DYMOND, Author of "An Enquiry into the Accordancy of War with the Principles of Christianity," &c. In this work will be found some clear views on the popular questions of the day—the Education of the People, and the Connection between Church and State. Price 1s.

ESSAY ON THE ACCORDANCY OF WAR with the PRINCIPLES OF CHRISTIANITY. By JONATHAN DYMOND. "No one can hope to overthrow the reasoning of Dymond without denying the truth of the book (the Bible) from which he deduces his arguments."—Second Edition, with Additions and Corrections, price 4s. 6d.

THE WATER CURE. By E. S. ABDEY, A.M., Fellow of Jesus College, Cambr. Edge, and Author of "A Journal, &c., in the United States."

"Mr. Abdey is already favourably known to the public as an author, and his present able work may be safely recommended as containing the best exposition of the principles of Hydropathy, as well as an interesting and convincing statement of facts."—London: Charles Gilpin, 5, Bishopsgate Without.

CAUSES OF, AND REMEDIES FOR, THE EXISTING DISTRESS OF THE COUNTRY. BY JOHN WADE, AUTHOR OF "BRITISH HISTORY CHRONOLOGICALLY ARRANGED;" THE "HISTORY OF THE MODERN CLASSES," &c.

THE WEEKLY CHRONICLE OF FEBRUARY the 24th instant will contain the First Sections of the above interesting and important Work, now first published, and which will be continued Weekly until completed.

The following is a Synopsis of the Contents:—PART I.—On the Causes of the Existing Distress.—Plan of Investigation.—Section I. Industrial Development of the Kingdom; 2. Estimate of the Productive Power of the Country; 3. Principles of Commercial Fluctuations; 4. Mercantile Reactions, and the degrees in which they have been induced by Banking, Paper Currency, and Private Credit; 5. Immediate Causes of Existing Difficulties; 6. General Conclusions on the Causes of National Distress. PART II. Remedies for the National Distress. Division One:—Remedies by Legislation. Section I. Suggestions for Enlarging the Home Markets. 2. Abrogation of Agricultural Protection; 3. Extension of the Foreign Markets by Free Trade; 4. Suggestions on the New Corn Law and Tariff; 5. Utility of a Commercial Congress of States for the reciprocal Revision of Tariffs; 6. Relief from more liberal Policy towards our Colonial and Foreign Possessions; 7. Benefits from the Settlement of the Currency of the Kingdom; 8. Ought Contracts to be Adjusted, and Funded Property specially Taxed; 9. Emigration; 10. Conclusion of Legislative Remedies. Division Two: Remedies by Capitalists. Division Three: Remedies by the Working Classes. Conclusion of Essay.

The WEEKLY CHRONICLE of this day contains:—A Letter from COTTON TWIST to Sir JAMES GRAHAM, Bart., her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department, on his PARLIAMENTARY DENUNCIATION OF THE LEAGUE as a SEDITIOUS CONSPIRACY.

The following are also among the peculiar features of the WEEKLY CHRONICLE:—I. The celebrated Articles on IRISH HISTORY, and the REBELLION of 1798: the only safe Guide to a Knowledge of the Irish Policy, essential to the integrity of the Empire at this important crisis. II. COTTON TWIST RE-DIVULGED! A New Series, Weekly, of the LETTERS OF COTTON TWIST, "FREE TRADE! PLenty TO DO! HIGH PROFITS! GOOD WAGES! and CHEAP BREAD!" III. SCALPEL'S ANATOMY OF THE "PEERAGE," forming a complete History of the Peerage of the United Kingdom, for the information of its People.

Arrangements have been made for bringing down the news contained in the WEEKLY CHRONICLE to a much later date than usual, in some instances anticipating the average of last year by a week; and, to effect this, every department of the paper has been scrupulously revised and efficiently reconstructed. For the convenience of our friends, the three following editions are published; and, by attending to these directions, the substitution of any other edition for the one preferred, and for which the order should be distinctly given, may be prevented:—

1. An edition for exclusive circulation in the provinces on the Saturday, marked "Country Edition."
 2. An edition for circulation in London on the Saturday, and in the country on the Sunday, marked "Town and Country Edition."
 3. An edition for exclusive circulation in the metropolis and its environs on the Sunday, marked "Town Edition."

The price is 6d. for which the WEEKLY CHRONICLE may be obtained of all respectable newsmen; and by post, paid in advance, at a subscription of 2s. per annum, 12s. the half year, and 6s. the quarter.—Sold by all newsmen in town and country.—Office, 337, Strand.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH. Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANUM, price 4s. 6d.—Patronized by her Majesty, the Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. This valuable SUCCEDANUM for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity, is far superior to anything ever before used, as it is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and in a short time becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary. It arrests all further progress of decay, and renders them again useful in mastication. All persons can use Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANUM themselves with ease, without the aid of a dentist, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 65, Berners-street, Oxford-street, price 4s. 6d., and will be sent by post to any part of the Kingdom.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. Thomas continues to supply the loss of teeth, and has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, which will be found very superior to all others, as they will never decay nor become discoloured, and their perfect resemblance to nature defies detection even by the closest observer. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. The charges will be found less than most dentists.—Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 65, Berners-street, Oxford-street. At home from Eleven till Four.

MR. BEARD'S DAGUERRETYPE, or PHOTOGRAPHIC PORTRAITS.—These infallible and most improved Portraits, in which further improvements have lately been effected, are taken by the Patented, at 35, King William-street, City; 24, Finsbury-street; and at the Royal Polytechnic Institution, 209, Regent-street. By whom, also, Licences are granted for exercising the invention in provincial towns and districts.

THE NEW PATENT INKSTAND by R. T. CLIFFE, is Superior in all respects to those recently patented. The ink is drawn from the surface of the reservoir, the eddies remain below. No variation of temperature affects the ink, and from its simplicity cannot be got out of order. Hyde and Co., agents, 61, Fleet-street; where may be had their Bank Sealing Wax, an article exceeding all others in purity of quality and brilliancy of colour.

CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE.—If the direct written testimony in favour of the purity and perfection of Beard's FAVORS BEARD, given, after analysis, by three of the most eminent Chemists of the day, needed any confirmation, it will be found in the fact, that it is employed, in preference to Foreign Brandy, under high medical directions, in many of the principal hospitals, infirmaries, and other public institutions in the Kingdom; among which it may suffice to name Guy's, St. George's, and the Westminster Hospitals in the metropolis; and the Manchester, Bristol, and Brighton Infirmaries. Distillery, No. 7, Smithfield Lane, leading to St. John-street. Price, pale or coloured, in quantities not less than Two Gallons, Eighteen Shillings per Gallon.

THE TOILET OF BEAUTY furnishes innumerable proofs of the high estimation in which GOWLAND'S LOTION is held by the most distinguished possessors of brilliant Complexions. The elegant preparation comprehends the preservation of the Complexion, both from the effects of Cutaneous Maladies and the operation of variable temperature, by refreshing its delicacy, and maintaining the brightest tints which beauty is adorned. "Mosses Beau, London," is in white letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is genuine. Price 2s. 6d., 6s. 6d., quarts 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Medicine Vendors.

THE AMERICAN ROCKING-CHAIR.—None are genuine unless they have "Luck, Kent, and Cumming" painted on the bottom. This chair, so much admired by all who have visited America, for the remarkable ease, pleasure, and comfort which it affords, is just imported, and for sale at the extensive Carpet and Upholstery Establishments of LUCK, KENT, and CUMMING, No. 4, Regent-street; Carpenter's Hall, 68, London-wall; and WM. CUMMING and Co., 98, Hatton-garden. It is asserted with confidence that there is no piece of furniture in use in civilized society more sought after and approved of when known. The price, 25s., with a liberal discount to the trade. Stout persons and Invalids will find these chairs invaluable.

TRUSSES.—S. SMITH, Trussmaker, 40, Gray's Inn-lane, Holborn, returns his most sincere thanks to those persons who have favoured him with their patronage, and hopes by punctuality and despatch to merit their future orders. He also begs leave to inform in general that trusses may be had at his establishment at the following prices:—Single Trusses, 8s. each; double, 16s. and upwards. Laces, Stockings, Knee Caps, Suspensory Bandages, Riding Belts, Ladies' Supporters, &c. A female to attend the Ladies. Established 30 years.

WEAK LEGS, KNEES, AND ANKLES.—SURGEONS in England, Ireland, and Scotland, continue to recommend BAILEY'S ELASTIC LACED STOCKINGS, KNEE CAPS, and ANKLE SOCKS; they are light, cool, and warranted to wash. Also the reduction of postage, afflicted persons in the country can have any bandage by post, for a few pence, by forwarding their measure. The particular property of the Stocking is to give constant support in various ways, swell, or dropical affections of the legs, or in any case requiring equal pressure: the Knee Cap will be of great service where the knee-joint requires support, from accident to the pan of the knee, after inflammation, rheumatic or gouty affections, or in any case where, from weakness of the part, support may be required.—W. H. Bailey, 419, Oxford-street, London.

DAYLIGHT AT NIGHT! CAMPHINE!—The patent Camphine Lamp gives a light of surpassing purity, softness, and brilliancy; is simple in construction, and emits neither smoke or smell. May be seen burning at F. Barrett's Furnishing Ironmongery and Lamp Warehouse, 25, Oxford-street, where a large assortment may be selected from, all at the lowest possible prices. Any Lamp Pillar may be fitted with a Camphine burner. Patent Camphine 4s. per gallon. Observed, 25, Oxford-street, one door west of Rathbone-place. Hall Lamps, 11s. 6d.; Ground Glass Patent Lamp Lamps, from 2s. 6d.; Palmer's Patent Candle Lamps, from 6s. A most elegant assortment of Table, Bracket, Sideboard, and suspending Lamps, in ornolu and brass, at extraordinary low prices. Lamps cleaned or altered to the Solar principle. Lamp shades, 6s.; cottons, 4d. per doz. Palmer's Patent Candles, 8d. per lb.

THE NEW LIGHT.—A GREAT NOVELTY.—The patent CAMPHINE LAMP gives a light of surpassing purity, softness, and purity, without any kind of grease or dirt, smoke or smell. The lamp is simply and beautifully constructed, and can be fitted to any description of lamp, pedestal, or gas fitting. It is not easily put out of condition. The Camphine (also a patent) is 4s. per gallon, and is so pure that if it is put on any article of dress or furniture will not leave either mark or stain, while it consumes so slowly that, at the cost of three farthings per hour, it gives a light equal to twelve muffled candles, without any attempt. It will be found far less expensive than any, and incomparably superior to all existing lights. To be seen burning at Rippon and Burton's (sole agents) at a Patent Camphine, 4s. per gallon. N.B. The ONLY Patent Camphine Lamp has "Rippon and Burton, Wells-street, Oxford-street," conspicuously placed on its head. The public are cautioned against all not so marked.

CABINET FURNITURE, CARPETS, and UPHOLSTERY.—THOMAS PAUL and CO. inform the nobility and gentlemen furnishing, that their CABINET STOCK comprises every kind of furniture, calculated for any description of residence, from the cottage to the mansion, and will be found 50 per cent. cheaper than at any other house in London. Independently of the great saving, every article is manufactured of the most seasoned and sound materials, so that perfect furnishing (even for a foreign climate) are secure either from complaint or defective wear. References of many years' standing, together with the most ample warranty given where required. Their stock of Brussels carpets consists of a splendid variety, commencing at the extraordinarily low price of 3s. 3d. per yard, and those of new and elegant designs from 2s. per yard.—THOMAS PAUL and CO., cabinetmakers, upholsterers, and carpet manufacturers, opposite the Mansion House, City.

BIOUKRENE, or FOUNTAIN of LIFE.—This invaluable Medicine proves efficacious in removing all Scrophulous and Rheumatic Diseases. It attacks the cause of all eruptions on the skin; it purifies and nourishes the blood, invigorates the digestive organs, and effects an entire cure of Scrophula and Scruvy in all the forms which these diseases assume. This medicine is free from those mineral preparations which cannot be taken without injury to the constitution. Its action on the system is remarkably mild and gentle, and will not interfere with the patient's ordinary pursuits. * * See a pamphlet entitled "Health and Comfort to the afflicted," which may be had, gratis, of Mr. William Bailey, North-street, Weymouth, and also by all other vendors of Bioukrene; which is sold by Sutton and Co., Bow Church-yard; Edwards, St. Paul's Church-yard; Hanney and Co., Oxford-street; and by all Druggists and Medicine Vendors. Bottles, 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 11s.

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED WITHOUT SPRINGS, CLASPS, or WIRES. LOOSE TEETH PARTNERED, and FILLING DECAYED TEETH with MINERAL MARMOLEUM. Messrs. LE DRAV and SON, Surgeon Dentists, 42, BERNERS-STREET, OXFORD-STREET, continue to restore DECAYED TEETH with their celebrated MINERAL MARMOLEUM, applied without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing and curing the toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary. They also fasten loose Teeth, whether moved from age, neglect, the use of Calomel, or disease of the Gums. Incredibly artificial, or natural teeth of surpassing beauty, fixed, from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, at the following Paris charges:—

A Single Tooth 2s 10 0
 A Set 8 0 0
 Arranged on a principle yet untried, rendering it impossible to distinguish the artificial teeth from the natural ones; answering most completely all the purposes of the original teeth in mastication and conversation, imparting to the countenance a younger and improved appearance, preventing the adjoining teeth, and remaining perfectly secure in their place. Artificial Teeth repaired, remodelled, and brought to their former shape and appearance. Artificial Palates of the most improved construction.—At home every day, from Ten till Six. N.B. Removed from 80, Newman-street, to 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

London: Printed (at the office of Palmer and Clayton, Great Court-street) by A. W. PAULSEN, of Barton-on-Irwell, Lancashire, and by him at Tan Lincoth, Lancashire, on Saturday February 17, 1844.

THE LEAGUE.

No. 22.]

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1844.

[3d.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND, £100,000.

All subscribers of £1 and upwards to the ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUND FUND, will be entitled to, and receive a copy, weekly, of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have forwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the Offices of THE LEAGUE, Newall's-buildings, Manchester, or 67, Fleet-street, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND, are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council respectfully request that their friends, in all places where committees for raising subscriptions to the £100,000 Fund have not been already formed, will proceed to their formation as soon as possible, and transmit their names to the LEAGUE Offices, Manchester.

DEFEAT OF MONOPOLY: SOMERSET COUNTY MEETING.

The monopolist landlords have received an impressive lesson. They have tried a county meeting, and been signally beaten. Every circumstance of the transaction renders their defeat the more complete and decisive. The great agricultural county of Somerset was selected for the experiment. Taunton, which might have been regarded as the most appropriate locality for a county meeting, was avoided, and the little town of Bridgwater selected, so that the battle had to be fought upon monopolist ground. No party hostilities were allowed to impede the unity of action against Free Trade; and Whig and Tory magnates of the county cordially greeted each other upon the hustings. Even the antagonism of fixed duty and sliding scale was carefully merged. The requisition was simply negative; and, in its comprehensive ambiguity, merely called on the meeting to consider "the propriety of opposing, by the most efficient measures, an association called the Anti-Corn-Law League." The gathering of farmers from various and distant parts of the county was immense. Several thousands were present, and an attentive perusal of the proceedings demonstrates, beyond all contradiction, that the spirit and tone of the meeting were the same from its commencement to its conclusion. What would the landlords have more? They have left no peg on which to hang a protest against the result; and that result, at the first really public meeting they have ventured to face—under circumstances of their own selection, and with every advantage they could desire—has been the adoption of a county petition to Parliament for Free Trade, and a resolution of thanks to the Anti-Corn-Law League.

Let the monopolists turn and twist it which way they will, this is an ugly conclusion for their cause. They have asked a formally-convened county meeting for support, and have been refused. They have "taken the sense" of the county; and got it, against their own non-sense. No accumulation of hole-and-corner meetings will turn the balance against the weight of this decision. It illustrates the worthlessness of all their little, secret, packed parties, for the formation of Anti-League Associations. We will not say that, were an election to take place, they would not carry the county; but the meeting shows by what means and power they would do so. It may admonish them also of some insecurity in their tenure. There is something very timely in this occurrence. It checks the insolence that boasted of arraying the entire strength of the country against the towns. The Richmond Corresponding Society has made a bad beginning. It upsets the numerical statistics by which occupations were ingeniously sorted, in order to put Free Trade in a minority. After this rural rebellion, the Central Metropolitan Protection (or in whatever title, Anglo-Bengalee or otherwise, its disinterestedness may rejoice) had better decline, with Sir Robert Peel, to say what constitutes an impossibility. County thanks to the League, and County Free-Trade petitions, are a startling phenomenon. It is very unfortunate that the Anti-Leaguers cannot exclude reporters from other meetings besides their own. The effect of the Somerset meeting will be felt from one end of the kingdom to the other, as fast as it is known; and they cannot hinder the knowledge. One monopoly at least is left them untouched and unenvied—that of the darkness which they love.

No Delegation from the League attended at Bridgwater. The discussion was confined to persons connected with the county; and, on the part of the Free Traders, it was conducted most ably. The county needs no sounder expositors of the facts and principles by which the great question submitted to the meeting must eventually be decided. Mr. Beadon, of Taunton, led the opposition to the requisitionists in a speech which well deserves the attention of our readers for its lucid statements, its home-thrusts, its unanswerable questions, and its frank and manly spirit. "Tenant-farmers," said he, in that direct appeal by which the speech is characterized, "what has the Corn Law done for you? What is your condition? If you look at last week's bankruptcy list you will find, from the 13th to the 20th Jan., no less than the names of twelve farmers; the week previous, nine; and the week previous to that, seven; making, together, twenty-five; and that with your glorious protection to make you all rich." Mr. Beadon is, we understand, a considerable proprietor, and much of his property is of that description of land, the poorer soils, which is so often said to require protection most imperatively. His testimony as a witness, therefore, partakes of the value of his conclusiveness as a reasoner. The blow so well struck at monopoly was promptly followed up:—

"Mr. Thomas Perrott, of Boroughbridge, said, I appear here as a farmer and a landowner, to second the motion made by Mr. Beadon (loud cheers); and I take this opportunity of observing, that I believe the Corn Laws are highly injurious, not only to the manufacturer, not only to the working classes in trade, not only to the working classes in agriculture, but to the tenant-farmers. It does seem strange to me, when, after I have attended public meetings in this county, as an agriculturist, for the last twenty-five years, and have always seen the two parties, Whig and Tory, arrayed one against the other—one thirsting for power, and the other seeking to displace him—to see Sir Alexander Hood coming forward as a high Tory, and shaking hands with Sir Thomas Lethbridge and Mr. Sandford. There is no harm in it, perhaps, but I wish to expose the trick of the two factions." (Loud cheers.)

Mr. Perrott is a good hand at this sort of exposure. He hits hard. It is not safe to cross-question him. An instance of this occurred during his speech:—

"As a practical farmer and a landowner, I know you will give me credit for speaking the truth. It is a mistaken notion altogether their wanting to carry on the Corn Laws. How can we flourish at the expense of trade. I am a farmer, but not at the lash of the landlord, and, what is more than all, I am able to keep my sheepskins at home. (Cheers and laughter.) [A gentleman on the hustings having asked Mr. P. what he meant by that, he said] I will answer the question—it is that my property is free from mortgages,—property which I have gained by the honest hand of industry, and of part of which I am not afraid to make a sacrifice to my fellow-men, if it should be necessary." (Loud cheers.)

The vote of thanks to the League was moved and seconded by Mr. Turner and Mr. Charles Summers, both large farmers: the former, who rents land to the extent of nearly £1000 per annum, declared that he was a great sufferer by the Corn Laws, and believed the farmers generally to derive not the least advantage from them. We mention the names of the speakers, to whom we must add Mr. Browne and Mr. Crosse, because the energetic, able, and successful manner in which they managed the discussion entitles them to the gratitude and thanks of the friends of Free Trade throughout the country;—nor must we omit that of Mr. Langton, whose excellent speech was worthy of the son of the venerable Colonel Gore Langton, whose sentiments also it was the medium of conveying to the meeting.

The champions of monopoly were so efficiently handled at the meeting that we do not feel it necessary to bestow a single word upon them. We must, however, notice an unfair use which has been made of this meeting in some of the London journals. The Times professes that it would be sorry for the blindness of the landed aristocracy "which would barter moral power for the support of a ministry or preservation of a sliding scale." And the Globe, with similar purpose, affirms itself to be waiting to see how the Tory journals will attempt "to turn aside the blow which the sliding scale has received in Somersetshire." Gently, good Times and Globe; it is not the sliding scale exclusively to which Somersetshire has dealt "a heavy blow and great discouragement." The stroke falls quite as forcibly upon the fixed duty, which you would most unwarrantably insinuate has gained some strength by the decision of the meeting. It is the fixed-duty and sliding-scale coalition that has been so completely beaten. It is with both, that Free Trade was there, and is everywhere, in uncompromising collision. The Central Agricultural Protection Disinterested, at its great meeting, from which the press were excluded, on Tuesday last, adopted the following as one of the resolutions by which the association is constituted:—

"That the objects of the society are to maintain protection for British agriculture, at least, equivalent to that at present existing."

What means this, unless it be that both sections of Protectionists should swim in the same boat? The moral power of Free-Trade principle is not to be played off by one section of bread-taxers against the other: it disclaims them equally. In the same boat they are, and let them swim or sink together.

Our friends have generally, and we think wisely, abstained from interfering with meetings called specifically for the support of the Anti-League movement. With open meetings, and especially with county or other public meetings, convened by the local authorities, the case is different. Their attendance on such occasions, and taking such part in the proceedings as they are qualified to take, becomes not only desirable, but a public duty. At a meeting of the inhabitants of a town or county, the poorest has a right to be present, and his uplifted hand, for or against a resolution, is good for as much as that of a lord. His interest in the question is indeed the strongest; and his power to judge, perchance, not inferior. At any rate, he has an absolute equality of right. Many localities will, it is to be hoped, take pattern from the friends of Free Trade in Somersetshire. Will those who have hitherto claimed to be masters of counties afford them similar opportunities? It was objected to the numerous county meetings addressed by Messrs. Cobden and Bright that they were not convened by the requisition of the great landowners, nor by the authority of the High Sheriffs. Will the accusing parties now amend this flaw in the indictment against the League? Will they call a succession of county meetings? Will they come out of their dark corners and face the people at large? We dare them to the experiment. If they decline the challenge, who will doubt the reason?

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

THE FREE-TRADE MIRROR OF PARLIAMENT FOR THE SESSION 1844.

Third Week, ending Saturday, Feb. 24.

The debate on Ireland, terminated this morning, has, of course, prevented any other formal discussion in the House of Commons this week—with the exception, indeed, of the Qui Tam Bill, which its supporters, on Wednesday night, were strong enough to carry through another stage, both of discussion and progress. Meantime the Free-Trade notices of motion, fixed for Tuesday and for Thursday of the past week, have been necessarily postponed. We shall remind our readers of what they are, in order to show them what the Free-Traders in the House of Commons have in preparation.

For Tuesday night, there was Mr. Cobden's motion for a Select Committee to inquire into the effects of Protective Duties on Imports upon the interests of the Tenant-Farmers and Farm-Labourers of this country. Mr. Ricardo had also fixed for that evening his Resolutions with respect to Commercial Treaties; and Mr. Hume had a motion for a Select Committee to inquire into the extent, nature, moral effect, &c., of Smuggling in Tobacco, Silks, Spirits, Tea, and other articles, upon which high Import and Excise Duties are levied.

Again, for Thursday, there was the very important notice of motion by Mr. Labouchere, for inquiry into our Commercial Relations with the Brazils. This he postponed till Thursday the 7th of March; and we sincerely trust that nothing will then prevent a debate on a matter of such magnitude and pressing importance. Dr. Bowring had also a notice on the paper, fixed for last Thursday, for calling the attention of the House to the operation of the Treaty of Commerce with Turkey upon the commercial interests of this country. We mentioned, last week, that Mr. Wallace had a notice of a motion, pledging the House to a reduction of the duty on Tea.

We do trust that, as all these important motions have now been postponed, they will be so brought on as not to interfere with one another. For instance, the three motions fixed for Tuesday night—Mr. Cobden's, Mr. Ricardo's, and Mr. Hume's—are each separate and distinct, and deal with distinct departments of the great question of FREE TRADE. Mr. Cobden's had precedence, and would, of course, have been the subject of the evening, if not of many evenings, had it been brought on. Again, what can exceed in relative importance the motion which Mr. Labouchere has now fixed for Thursday, the 7th of March? The great object of the Free Traders in the House of Commons should be directed to securing combined action and continued discussion; and, as this is the hearty wish and feeling of them all, it only requires a little explanation and arrangement to ensure to every Free-Trade motion its own discussion, and to every debate its relative importance and attention.

The presentation of petitions in both Houses, on both sides of the question, has been carried on to some extent during the past week. For instance, on Monday night, the Earl of Yarborough, in the House of Lords, presented twenty-one petitions from Lincolnshire, praying for protection; and on the same evening, in the House of Commons, Sir John Lubbock presented a similar petition from Holbeach, in which the petitioners prayed that they might not be "sacrificed to the delusive schemes of self-interested men." But on Tuesday night, a petition was presented "on the other side," which calls for more detailed description.

Our readers have either already perused, or in the columns of the LEAGUE this week they will peruse, an account of the Somerset county meeting, held at Bridgewater, on yesterday—that is, Friday week. Here, fair discussion triumphed most signally over exaggerated fear and foolish misrepresentation; and a great meeting called for the express purpose of condemning the Anti-Corn-Law League, and of praying Parliament for continued protection, was induced, by the simple eloquence of truth, to adopt a Free-Trade petition. W. Gore Langton, Esq. (the son of Colonel Gore Langton, who, with Mr. Miles, represents the eastern division of Somersetshire) was present at the meeting, and proved himself a worthy son of a long-trying, consistent sire, by supporting the Free-Trade petition. What, indeed, could be more convincing to those assembled at the county meeting at Bridgewater, than to see and hear the son of their venerable representative—the inheritor not merely of his property, but of his virtues and his enlightened and generous political principles—coming forward, and declaring that protection was not a real benefit, but, in the long-run, a positive injury to LAND? Boldly he asked the assembled farmers if any one, like his father, whose income was derived from the products of the land, could be hostile or indifferent to the interests of agriculture? whether his interests were not identified with theirs? (Cheers.) His father had a long experience in political matters, and it had shown him the danger and the injustice of class legislation, and the importance of that vital and inseparable bond which united agriculture and commerce together. (Cheers.) Gentlemen had called that meeting under the pretence of opposing the measures of the Anti-Corn-Law League; but he would ask them, was it not rather with the view of upholding a system under which agriculture and commerce had alike languished, which set class against class, and threatened to sow dissension in their once happy and united land? (Great cheering.)

Very fittingly, therefore, was the presentation of the petition intrusted to Colonel Gore Langton; and on Tuesday night the venerable old man rose to perform that duty. But though his intellect is still vigorous, clear, and unclouded, age and infirmities have rendered him feeble; and Mr. Cobden had to support him as he read the prayer of the petition. He stated, that, though a county member, he was one of the few who opposed the Corn Law of 1815; and during the rapid passage of the bill through the House, he had the honour of being the proposer of an amendment on the question that the Speaker do leave the chair for the purpose of going into committee, and was only left in a minority of thirteen. Nearly thirty years ago, therefore, he almost successfully resisted the imposition of the pernicious Corn Law of 1815; and now, in his old age, he comes forward, and through the press, and within the House, bears his testimony, confirmed by the long course and dear-bought experience of years, that "Monopoly is the parent of scarcity, of dearth, and of uncertainty." The spectacle of such a man adhering steadily to his maturely-formed opinions, amidst all the sinister inducements by which he is surrounded, redeems one's faith in men, and attests the fact that there is such a thing as Truth in Principle, and Honour in Consistency. His son is treading in his footsteps—may he, too, like his venerable father, live to see an honoured old age, enjoying the ripe fruits of that harvest for which his parent tilled the soil!

One incident more, which we cannot bring ourselves to omit:—Last Friday night, Mr. Serjeant Murphy made a very striking speech, in the course of which he asked, if the law was such as had been laid down in Ireland, was there not a vast conspiracy now going on in England? Why did not the Attorney-General prosecute the Anti-Corn-Law League, which, according to Sir James Graham, had invaded our theatres, and which went farther than the Repeal Association, for it had a newspaper of its own? Why not prosecute the editor of Punch, in whose columns appeared the song quoted by Mr. Cobden, that other great conspirator:—

"Oh, God! that bread should be so dear,
And flesh and blood so cheap!"

Nay, why not impanel a jury of agriculturists, with Mr. Ferrand at their head, to try Mr. Cobden? and, to carry on the similitude, bring over the Attorney-General to challenge the counsel and the jury, and the Chief Justice to preside? There were actions imputed to the Anti-Corn-Law League of which the Repeal Association was not accused. Reverend orators charged the League with assassination and incendiarism.

As Mr. Serjeant Murphy was thus speaking Mr. Ferrand bawled out, "They said it themselves!" and Mr. Serjeant Murphy quietly replied, that in that House he should, of course, bow to any assertion which the member for Knarborough might make. The keenness of the gentlemanly rebuke was felt by everybody but Mr. Ferrand himself.

MONOPOLIST ARGUMENTS AGAINST A FREE TRADE IN CORN.—"The wicked League"—"the incendiary League"—"but for the League, its enormous lying and unparalleled effrontery," &c.—"the redoubtable League has broken its neck"—"glorious refutation of the great Leaguer lie"—"the Leaguer lie is every where practically refuted."—Lancaster Gazette, Feb. 3.

MEETINGS.

AGGREGATE WEEKLY MEETING OF THE LEAGUE AT COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE.

The fifth metropolitan meeting of the League for the present year, held at Covent-garden Theatre on Wednesday last, will undoubtedly form a remarkable feature in the history of the Free-Trade agitation. The intensity of the interest excited upon this occasion far surpassed that of any previous gathering, or probably of any meeting held in modern times in the Metropolis. "Leaguers meet in theatres," said Sir James Graham; but where is the building large enough to contain the scores of thousands even of the inhabitants of this Metropolis who have associated themselves, determined to wrest from a selfish and short-sighted oligarchy the bread of the poor, of which they have been so unjustly deprived, and restore the rights of industry, which have been so foully invaded. The extraordinary scene at the meeting on Wednesday night formed a striking contrast to the ridiculous monopolist meeting in a little room in Freemasons' Tavern, no later than the previous day, to which none but sworn bread-taxers were admitted, and from which even the press were excluded.

The number of applicants for tickets of admission to the Covent garden Meeting during the past week has been most extraordinary, amounting, probably, to 30,000. It is no exaggeration to state that, had a place been available to the League large enough to have accommodated 30,000 persons, it would not by any means have been sufficiently capacious for the numbers who were desirous of being present. Many ladies and gentlemen came from distant parts of the country to attend the meeting. Long before five o'clock the crowd began to assemble at all the avenues, and by a few minutes after six had increased to such an extent, that it was deemed advisable to throw open the doors, and, in a very few minutes, the theatre was filled almost to suffocation in every part. Throughout the evening a large crowd remained outside the theatre, cheering at intervals with such warmth that they were distinctly heard by the audience within. Precisely at seven o'clock the chairman, accompanied by several members of the Council, and other distinguished personages, made his appearance on the platform; but Mr. O'Connell did not arrive till nearly eight o'clock. When, however, the honourable member made his appearance, the enthusiasm of the auditory knew no bounds. The cheering and waving of hats and handkerchiefs continued for nearly a quarter of an hour, the shouts from the interior of the building being echoed by the multitude without. Silence appeared ultimately obtained only from the physical exhaustion of the assemblage. Another interesting feature of the meeting—in addition to the presence of Mr. O'Connell—was the first appearance of Mr. G. Thompson, after his return from India, who, as will be perceived, from the subjoined report, delivered a most impressive and eloquent speech. Shortly before seven o'clock, James Harmer, Esq. (the late alderman), entered the theatre, and took his seat at the table; he was loudly cheered by the audience. James Pattison, Esq., M.P. for the city of London, next made his appearance, and was greeted with repeated rounds of applause. Dr. Bowring, M.P., General Sir De Lacy Evans, Col. T. P. Thompson, R. Cobden, Esq., M.P., J. Bright, Esq., M.P., and W. J. Fox, Esq., followed Mr. Pattison, and were also loudly applauded. The following, in addition to the foregoing, is a list of names of the most distinguished individuals present, including between twenty and thirty members of Parliament:—

George Wilson, Esq., chairman; Daniel O'Connell, Esq., M.P.; Hon. Charles Pelham Villiers, M.P.; R. H. R. Moore, Esq.; G. Thompson, Esq.; John O'Connell, Esq., M.P.; William Ord, Esq., M.P.; Sir David Roche, Bart., M.P.; Lord Charles Fitzroy, M.P.; W. Williams, Esq., M.P.; Edmund Burke Roche, Esq., M.P.; Lord Duncannon; Ed. Ellice, Jun., Esq., M.P.; Hon. E. P. Bouverie; Joseph Hume, Esq., M.P.; W. D. Christie, Esq., M.P.; T. Milner Gibson, Esq., M.P.; Sharman Crawford, Esq., M.P.; Edward Horsman, Esq., M.P.; Sir Valentine Blake, Bart., M.P.; Thos. Wakley, Esq., M.P.; John Evans, Esq.; John Travers, Esq.; C. T. Crowley, Esq.;—Sanpayo, Esq.; Rev. Dr. Jenkins; Christopher Temple, Esq., Q.C.; D. C. Moylan, Esq.; Summers Harford, Esq.; J. Wynn, Esq.; the Very Rev. Dr. Magee; Dr. Sheridan; Dr. Edwin Lancaster; Charles Cross, Esq.; G. Borrett, Esq.; Southampton; Wynn Ellis, Esq., M.P.; C. F. Tagart, Esq.; W. A. Maybury, Esq.; R. J. Hampton, Esq.; Henry Fenn, Esq.; W. Edgar, Esq.; W. H. Hobhouse, Esq.; George Crawford Heath, Esq.; Captain Kidout; C. G. Spurrer, Esq.; Dr. Nugent; John McLeod, Esq.; J. Cox, Esq.; William Joseph Amherst, Esq.; William Thomson, Esq.; P. H. Le Breton, Esq.; Robert Hope, Esq.; Geo. Vaughan, Esq.; Alexander Bell, Esq.; M. Chauvet, Paris; Samuel Coleby, Esq.; George Rodout, Esq.; Samuel Clarke, Esq.; John Hunter, Esq.; John Bickers, Esq.; Martin Thackeray, Esq.; Dr. Blandford;—Puncher, Esq.; W. Drew, Esq.; Henry Ashworth, Esq.; Bolton; Wm. Evans, Esq.; Manchester; Thos. Harbottle, Esq.; Manchester; W. J. Scott, Esq.; Manchester; C. O. Boyce, Esq.; Henry Jarvis, Esq.; Exeter; Thomas Latimore, Esq.; W. Wheatthamstead; R. Rothwell, Esq.; W. Thornborrow, Esq.; E. T. Granger, Esq.; General Bayard, United States; James Harmer, Esq.; Colonel T. P. Thomson; Wm. Leaf, Esq.; Robert Currick, Esq.; Carlisle; Hon. and Rev. Mr. Stanhope; Rev. Dr. Hutton, &c. &c.

Mr. SAUL, at the request of the chairman, read the minutes of the last meeting, which having been done, Mr. COBDEN moved, and Dr. BOWRING seconded, their confirmation, which was unanimously agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN then came forward amidst loud cheering, and said:—Ladies and Gentlemen, I have seen many meetings of the National Anti-Corn-Law League both here and in the Free-Trade Hall, Manchester—the only two places in the kingdom sufficiently large to accommodate, to a certain extent, our numerous friends—but I never yet saw, either here or elsewhere, an assemblage equal in numbers, respectability, station, or intelligence, with that which is gathered here this evening. Gentlemen, this is as it should be. (Hear.) We have met here to promote no mere political object, neither do we seek any party triumph, or to accomplish any victory of this or that faction. (Hear, hear.) Our object is to secure the union and co-operation of men of every shade and hue of political opinion, in favour of a movement which we believe to be one of the greatest which could possibly enlist the sympathies of the people of this country. (Hear, hear, hear.) It is right, also, that we should meet in such numbers, if it be only to contrast our gathering with the small assemblages which the monopolists are holding in the various agricultural districts, and especially, as we learn from the newspapers of yesterday, in some tavern in a certain part of this city of London. (Hear, hear.) We could tell you much as to the real character of those agricultural meetings of which so much has been said; and give you a far more faithful account of their actual nature than from any particulars you will collect from the monopolist journals. (Hear.) We could refer to meetings at which the public have been told there were 200 persons present, actually held in small smoky rooms which, when completely filled, would not contain more than 50 individuals; and we could tell you of eloquent speeches which were never made, but which were nevertheless fully reported ("Hear," and laughter); of resolutions said to have been passed, but which were never proposed for the adoption of any meeting; of subscriptions said to have been put down by various individuals, but which were never promised, and which most assuredly will never be paid. ("Hear," and laughter.) Gentlemen, at one of these meetings a noble earl, whose station in society would have led you to expect from him at least an equal amount of good breeding with that which would be exhibited by the members of the Anti-Corn-Law League or of agricultural societies generally, is reported to have described the Anti-Corn-Law League as one of the most bloody, revolutionary, and unconstitutional societies which ever disgraced this country. (Loud cries of "Shame, shame!" "Name, name.") The name of the nobleman who made this modest statement is the Earl of Winchelsea. [This announcement produced a storm of groans and hisses.] For the information of that illustrious personage I may state that the League is not unconstitutional, nor in any respect opposed to the law of this country. (Hear, hear.) We admire the provision which has been made by our constitution, that such pre-eminent wisdom as his should be secured to the country (loud laughter,) by a seat in the higher House of Legislature; but we repudiate the term "bloody;" it belongs not to us. (Loud cries of "Hear.") We seek the abolition of the Corn Laws by peaceable and constitutional means alone. That iniquitous measure was imposed amidst the sacrifice of human life, and it will be repealed amidst the rejoicings of millions of our fellow-countrymen, who watch this struggle with an interest superior even to that which we feel in it. (Cheers.) It would be unbecoming in me to waste the time of the meeting by any lengthened address. I shall, therefore, at once proceed to the immediate business of the evening by calling upon Mr. James Wilson to address you. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. JAMES WILSON (who was received with considerable cheering,) then came forward, and addressed the meeting as follows:—Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, I think you will readily allow that, if ever an individual had to beg for the indulgence of a meeting on any occasion, such is now my situation, and that I am entitled to do so to-night. I believe I am here before an assembly under peculiar excitement—excitement derived from the expected visit of a distinguished man (hear), whom we hope to see here this evening only in the character of a witness to the universal truth of the doctrines which we hold, and which we have endeavoured, by every legal means, to inculcate. We hope to see that illustrious man here to-night as a witness that the doctrines we preach are not injurious to him and his fellow-countrymen, who are peculiarly agricultural, and that we are not considered by them as striking at the root of their interests, although the agricultural body, or a part of them, at least in this country, would wish to infer that such was our object. But, whatever the excitement of the present evening may be, I must beg of you to consider that we have assembled here for a great and important discussion, and I must entreat you to remember that we have the primary and ultimate interests of a great nation to consider—a nation that is increasing at the rate of 1000 persons a day, or 365,000 a year. If, therefore, I crave your special attention, and ask your particular indulgence to subdue somewhat the natural enthusiasm which may attend the expectancy of the evening, I trust that you will bear with me if I think it my duty to endeavour to turn this, as far as possible, into an occasion of instruction as well as of interest. Our chairman has told you truly that we meet here for no party purposes; we meet here essentially for no party object, neither of a political nor industrious kind. We are gathered together, not as the advocates alone of commerce or manufactures, but, to those who take an enlightened view of the matter, equally as the advocates of agriculture, when its interests are well understood, as of manufactures. We are here simply as the advocates of the great principle of freedom of industry, freedom of intellect as applied to the industrial pursuits of the country, whatever they may be, whether manufacturing, commercial, or agricultural. (Cheers.)

[At this period Mr. Wakley, M.P., appeared on the platform, and was received with loud applause.]

Mr. WILSON resumed: We meet here, I say, ladies and gentlemen, for the simple purpose of discussing whether the interests of the country and the faculties of the human mind are best developed by the principles of freedom of competition or by those of protection: I may say of delusive protection, for never was protection contemplated to be given by law to any party that it did not prove delusive; for this simple and obvious reason, that it is impossible by an act of Parliament to raise any particular interests—to add wealth to that or to any class—without abstracting an equal amount from some other part of the community. Therefore, the utmost that an act of Parliament can do in protecting any one body, is merely to take from the community generally what it gives to some special interest. (Hear.) At some of the late agricultural meetings which have been held throughout the country, we have seen a great number of singular arguments put forward in order to prove that the Corn Laws were not injurious to the country; and, as elucidating the subject upon which I am speaking, I will refer to the argument used last week by a noble lord in Scotland, when he endeavoured to prove, by a long string of statistics and arguments, that in proportion as the Corn Laws had been made more stringent, in the same ratio commerce and manufactures had flourished. And this he attempted to prove by showing, that since 1815, when the Corn Laws were first enacted, the exports of this country had gradually and regularly increased. He went on to show that our exports in that year amounted to 42 millions, and that they had gradually, up to the last year, increased to 100 millions. The noble lord, however, understood his subject so little as not to know that the figures with which he was dealing were of a delusive and fictitious description; for I dare say it is known to the large bulk of the commercial portion of this audience, that in our custom-house returns we have two descriptions of duties—the real called "the official value," and the other "the real value." The former is the price of goods calculated at a given rate, fixed some 50 or 60 years ago; and the latter the value at the time they are shipped. Now it so happens that, at the time to which this noble lord refers, in 1815, the official value of these exports was 42 millions, but the real value at that period of those 42 millions was 51 millions; but, on the other hand, it is equally true that in 1842 the 100 millions of exports to which he referred, instead of representing a corresponding value with those of 1815, are in real value only 47 millions. For this double quantity of manufactured goods in that process of time, the manufacturers in this day, and, through them, the labourers of the country, received less than one-half the sum they would have obtained in 1815. Do we complain of this? I answer, no; instead of complaining of it, I should say it is one of the proudest boasts that this country has to make, that you can, by the increase of ingenuity, capital, and industry—by free competition—so far reduce the cost of goods in so short a period as to command the markets of the world in every place, and through them be enabled to give employment to the increasing population of the country. It is just on this account that I wish to prove that this principle of competition has performed what restriction and protection have failed to do. During this period there has not been one single additional hand occupied in agriculture. The whole population of the country has increased several millions, and yet there has not been one more hand employed in agriculture. It has been in manufactures alone that the increasing employment has been found. At another of these meetings last week, an agriculturist was boasting, or rather saying, that he saw no reason why the people ought to complain of the effect of the Corn Law, because the price of corn was not higher now than it was at the commencement of the present century. Here, then, you have the contrast:—the price of corn and agricultural produce is retained the same, while that of manufactured goods is lowered one-half. (Hear, hear.) But if the price of agricultural produce be what it was at the former period, let us inquire what becomes of the extra fund for which that agricultural produce sells. Is the labourer paid the same rate of wages that he was then? He then received 12s., 15s., or 18s. a week, according to the district in which he lived; he now receives only 8s., 9s., or 10s. a week. The farmer was then said to be a prosperous man; he is now stated on all hands to be the reverse. I have put the question frequently to the owners of land, and have said to them, "Why, your labourers are paid less than one-half what they were at the commencement of the century. Your farmers, instead of being prosperous, are now, you admit, in a bad state. Then, what has become of the whole residue of the price of the produce that you receive now, seeing that you employ no more labourers, and that you give the labourers you have much less wages; and seeing that the portion of the profit which falls to the farmer is considerably smaller now than then?" The whole additional quantity must resolve itself into rent. From this state of things it is quite obvious that the landowner has two pre-eminent advantages:—first of all, that of a regularly and gradually increasing rent; and, secondly, a uniformly and gradually diminishing price for everything that he has to buy. On the other hand, the labourer has had two disadvantages: he has had a constantly decreasing rate of wages, while he has had the same fixed price to pay for the first necessities of life during the whole period. (Cheers.) Now, what we contend is, that if agriculturists were exposed to the same principle as manufacturers are,—to free competition,—the same improvements might have taken place in agriculture which have been witnessed under the system of competition in manufactures. (Hear.) We contend, that without a Free Trade you never will have the energies of the tillers of the soil, any more than those of the workers of the loom, brought out in the way they ought to be. We only hope for that from free exchange, which can alone be effected by bringing into competition the cultivators of agricultural produce at home with the corn-growers in every part of the world, as we have brought into competition with our manufacturers the manufacturers of every part of the world. It is only thus that we can hope for that development of the resources of the mind which is likely to bring about the state of things which we desire. But then we are met by a great number of fallacies. People will immediately tell us, "If you will import food for the people, what better are you if you cannot sell your goods? for, in every country they are raising up hostile tariffs, and passing laws against the admission of your goods: and, therefore, you would only be making yourselves worse if you were to remove any portion of the growth of the food of your people from this to any other country." Now, what we hold is this, that it will be quite impossible for us to buy from any foreign land, without their purchasing from us in return. (At this period a loud shout was heard from the multitude assembled outside the theatre, and which it was supposed indicated the approach of Mr. O'Connell. This created great excitement inside the building, and the whole assembly rose in expectation of seeing the honourable gentleman enter.)

The CHAIRMAN then came forward and said:—Ladies and gentlemen, I beg to state that Mr. O'Connell will be here a little before eight o'clock, and not till then. This announcement having had the effect of quieting the audience,

Mr. WILSON resumed. I was saying that we have been told, over and over again, that if we do import food into this country, that the foreigners abroad will not take our manufactures. Now, we have the fact of the last few years to disprove this statement. From the condition of the law during the last five years, it so happens that we have regularly imported from the Continent large quantities of grain; and during that period, as regularly as we have imported that grain, notwithstanding the hostile tariffs raised against us, and rival manufactures in every country, our export of manufactures to those very places from which we have imported corn have increased to the amount of five millions sterling (hear, hear); and, while they have increased to those countries from which we have received corn, they have actually diminished to all other parts of the world upwards of eleven millions. The trade throughout the world has been so bad, that your exports have decreased eleven millions in the other countries, while they have increased to the corn-growing parts of the world to the amount of five millions sterling, giving a practical denial to the statement that they will not take your manufactures if you take their produce. But we have another illustration of this fact in France, which is said to be one of the most restrictive countries in the world. For the introduction of French goods we have materially modified our tariff during the last few years. We allow their silk goods to come in which were previously prohibited; their raw silk comes in free of duty; we equalized the duty on their wines with those of Portugal; and the consequence has been, that in twelve years your exports to France have increased from half a million to upwards of three millions.

Here Mr. Wilson was again interrupted by another most enthusiastic cheer from the populace waiting the arrival of Mr. O'Connell, which again produced considerable excitement within the theatre, so much so as to prevent the speaker from proceeding for some time. Tranquillity having been restored,

Mr. WILSON again resumed his forcible address. I was saying, that, in spite of the hostile tariffs of France, your exports to that country have increased from half a million to three millions sterling in that short period of time; and there is every reason to believe, that if the same principles are carried out with regard to every country in the world, the same results will follow. And we have another example which, on the other side, equally proves the accuracy of the principles for which we contend; that it is by a willingness to buy, by a willingness to take the produce of other countries, and not by any powers of treaties, that we can command a foreign trade. This country has a treaty with Brazil of the most favourable description to us, and one which, if ever an agreement was made of a one-sided description, is of that character in its favourableness towards England. And yet during that same period that your exports have increased to France—in spite of hostile tariffs and rival manufactures, and from the mere fact of your taking a larger portion of their produce—during that period, with the most favourable treaty that ever was made, your export to the Brazils have fallen off more than one-half. And why have they thus decreased? For the contrary of the reason that they have increased to France. You have taken French goods, but you have refused to take Brazilian produce. (Cheers.) They have received your goods to the extent of three millions and a half in a year, and, by the laws of this country, your consumption of their produce, limited to a few trivial articles, has not exceeded one-tenth of that sum. And yet you persist, or the Government of this country does so, in the face of this flagrant abuse of their own principle of reciprocity, in maintaining this system. And what is the produce of Brazil? Why, the very thing next to corn which most you want—it being chiefly sugar—the very thing which you want to make up the consumption of necessities for the poor. Singular as it may appear, the supply of sugar, notwithstanding the Government persist in excluding it from foreign countries, has not increased in this country one ounce since 1811; it was as large at that time as it was last year. This year eight millions of people more are to be fed. When the consumption of tea was twenty-two million lbs. less than it is now, and when that of coffee was twenty-four million lbs. less than it is now, the consumption of sugar was as large as at the present day. (Hear, hear.) It is strange to see the mercantile interests of the cities of London and Liverpool,—which have done their best to exclude sugar, destroy their own trade, and to continue this state of things by returning men to represent them in Parliament who have supported these monopolies,—now that we have a Free-Trade treaty with China, as far as they are concerned, these very men in London and Liverpool go to the Government and ask them to reduce the duty on tea, in order to increase the consumption! (Hear.) But, then, how do they expect to increase the sale of tea without enlarging the supply of sugar? Do they suppose that the ingenuity of the ladies of this country has no end? (Cheers and laughter.) They have already tried it sufficiently; when, since 1811, they have seen the consumption of tea already increased twenty-two million lbs., and the consumption of coffee twenty-four million lbs., and the population increased eight million in number, and yet not one ounce of sugar more to supply them! I think they ought to have given them sufficient credit for having exercised ingenuity already. (Cheers.) Therefore I would recommend our friends in Mincing-lane and Liverpool, before they approach Government with a petition to reduce the duty on tea, in order that we may increase our trade with China, also to accompany that petition with a resolution that we ought also to have an increased quantity of sugar. But this additional supply of that article is necessary for two purposes—for the comfort and for relieving the necessities of the poor; but it is also necessary in order that we may have a matter of exchange with some of the largest and best markets in the world. It is not only necessary that we should have sugar in order to eke out the consumption of the country, but it is also requisite to enable us to give employment to the manufacturing population of the country, and obtain an article of exchange from those countries which can consume our manufactures. (Hear, hear.) Singular and strange, however, is the excuse which the Government have made for their exclusion of this sugar. We have found a party who, for fifty years—while all the philanthropy and liberality of the country were engaged in endeavouring to knock off the shackles of slavery—constantly day after day, motion after motion, as they were brought forward, opposed every effort to strike off the fetters of the slave. We find that party now at last, when freedom to the slave can be turned into an excuse for monopoly, using it for that purpose. (Loud and prolonged cheering.) Far be it from me, and I am sure it is not the wish of any one present, to preclude any man from changing his opinions as often as he pleases, however unfortunate it may be for public men to have occasion to do so—(hear, hear)—however inconvenient it may be for a Premier of the country to be obliged on every question that he undertakes to recant some former firmly-entertained principle. I have carefully looked over the votes of the House of Commons from 1811 until 1834, and I find the name of the right hon. baronet now at the head of her Majesty's Government, until that time invariably recorded in favour of slavery. However, if hon. gentlemen and right hon. baronets will change their sentiments, we have no objection to that; but they must excuse us if their judgment ceases to have any weight with us. (Hear.) Those who understand this subject, or have looked into it, must indeed be thoroughly disgusted with the hypocrisy which lies at the bottom of the whole subject. It is a delusive hypocrisy—for nothing else can I call it; for to say that we do not buy sugar of the Brazil is quite a mistake. The truth is, that we do purchase that article of Brazil, and we are almost the only people on the earth who do buy it, for the simple reason, that we are almost the only people from whom they receive goods. We buy their sugar; but what do we do with it? We sent out to Brazil in 1842, 114 ships laden with the manufactures of this country; of that number of vessels only 21 returned with cargoes. But the remainder of them put the cheap sugar and coffee of Brazil on board, and carried it to every other country in the world, to supply others with that which you were denied. ("Hear," and cries of "Shame!") I find in the list of English ships, some going to Trieste, Antwerp, Hamburg, and St. Petersburg, with cheap produce, to the very men who have to compete with the artisans and labourers of this country, in the disposal of the produce of their labour in the neutral markets of the world. But, moreover, if it were a sin to buy sugar of the Brazils, it is surely equally a sin to supply them with the implements with which they grow it. If it is a sin to purchase the sugar of that country, it is undoubtedly as much a crime to bring it home, and to deal with it in our own docks, to refine it in bond, and to sell and buy that same sugar in our haunts of industry—in London and Liverpool; to sell it for re-exportation in foreign countries; to refine it in bond to send it back to be consumed, not only by the free people in other parts of the world, but by those very slaves, the professed sympathy for whom precluded our allowing it to come into consumption here. But the inconsistency of the present Government, and of the right hon. baronet at its head, is still more palpably shown by the very first act which he did after he turned out the late Ministry upon this question. He brought in the new tariff in the following year; and the very first change in that tariff is actually a reduction of duty on foreign coffee. Now it so happens that coffee is a more important article of produce in Brazil than sugar. Further, he reduced the duty on foreign copper ore, in the produce of which slavery is used, in Cuba, in its very worst form. He felt no compunction there, because he was not urged on that point.

[Some confusion at the stage door here interrupted the speaker, and once more drew the attention of the house from the Corn Laws to Mr. O'Connell. A moment or two afterwards the hon. and learned gentleman made his appearance. Before he could reach the platform the vast assembly had risen to their feet, and such a shout reverberated throughout the house as Covent Garden had never witnessed before. For ten consecutive minutes the cheering continued without abatement or interruption. Every voice was strained to the utmost, every arm was raised, and hats, handkerchiefs, and shawls, and even open umbrellas, were waved in the air, to greet the entrance of the honourable and learned gentleman. Mr. O'Connell advanced to the table and bowed repeatedly to those before and around him. Every acknowledgment thus made only drew down a fresh burst of acclamation from the house; and, after standing some minutes unconvered, Mr. O'Connell took his seat, but not so the vast throng before him—all, ladies included, continued standing for full five minutes after he had seated himself; and the applause grew, if possible, louder and more cordial as it was continued; but it was when Mr. O'Connell again presented himself at the table that it reached its climax. The cheering for a minute or so was almost terrific; Covent-garden shook to its foundation. The roar of six thousand voices mingled with a sublime effect with the tramping of feet and the clapping of hands—the deep shout of the multitudes without the walls responding regularly to every fresh outbreak from within. Mr. O'Connell was much moved, and exhibited throughout the liveliest emotion at so magnificent a reception.]

The CHAIRMAN here came forward, and said:—Ladies and Gentlemen, if you will have the goodness to keep your seats for a few minutes, Mr. Wilson will conclude his speech, and Mr. O'Connell will then address you. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. WILSON then proceeded:—Ladies and Gentlemen, I will undertake to detain you but a very few minutes. I will only endeavour to impress on you the high importance of the subject we are met this night to discuss. (Hear.) I would only wish once more to crave your attention and support to the efforts which we are making to introduce these important principles into the Legislature of the country. Unfortunately for the great interests of England, we have hitherto found that trade and commerce has not been altogether an agreeable thing with the bulk of those to whom the Legislature has been intrusted; while we have found in every other country, that commerce has been considered an honourable calling, and that not only nobles but princes have undertaken to foster manufactures; we find, and perhaps it has been beneficial that it is so, that manufactures have been left here to be fostered only by themselves. I say, that trade appears not to have been a very agreeable consideration with the great bulk of those into whose hands the Legislature of the country has been intrusted; for I think, if it had been so, that it would have been difficult to find 658 men who would have supported this monopoly, or have countenanced a thing so absurd as the one we have just been considering, with reference to the Brazil trade. I say it would have been difficult to have conceived of men in this country, who have been elected members of Parliament, as being supposed to be fitted for that office and for the duties of legislation,—had they paid anything like usual attention to the commercial interests of this country,—it would have been difficult to have found 658 men, a majority of whom would have voted for such a state of things as that which we have just considered. Nay, indeed, so absurd is the position in which they have placed us, that I should have considered it would have been difficult to have found, not 658 men of the elect of this country, but any 658 men in England, a majority of whom would have voted for such principles of absurdity and practical hypocrisy; I am afraid, however, that it will be distasteful if I should detain you any longer. (Loud cries of "No, no," "Go on, go on.") Unfortunately, I say, in this country, which has been designated a country of shopkeepers,—which owes every thing to its commerce—whether of political, social, or physical greatness—whether of intellectual superiority, or of supremacy of wealth and power in the world,—strange to say, that trade is not looked upon with much favour by the ruling classes;—by the classes whose position in society gives them influence and means to occupy places in the Legislature:—to these classes commerce is distasteful, and at for he charges you that price for the entire loaf for which the man would have got the loaf and the hunch if it had not been for that. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) I should have expected better of the ancient nobility of England; I should have anticipated something higher of them than not "conspiring,"—for they are not conspirators—not "combining," for that is a crime that is punished only in the poor (cheers), but "meeting together," resolving and determining that every body shall pay them more money for their bread than they would pay otherwise. I repeat the phrase in identical terms over and over again, because I want to infix in the mind of every one who hears me the real nature of this plunder, this robbery. Let us not mind the pretence that it is increase of wages. Increase of wages! Why, if I chose to open the books of political economy, and give you dates which you have had before, and particulars with which you may be conversant, I could show you that whenever bread was cheap, wages were high; that they were doubly high comparatively, because the man was able to buy more articles for his money, and thus his wages were doubly useful to himself. Yes, and all these truths are as clear as the sun at noonday! And here are we talking about—animals on two legs (a laugh)—apparently having no head at all, and, still more strange, as if we had no hearts! Oh, put an end to the system! (Cheers.) Why, is not the present Parliament principally packed by these bread-taxers? (Hear, hear.) Did they not send two-thirds of the members to the House, not only from the counties by means of the Chandos clause, but also by purchasing boroughs? Indeed, two sessions ago I heard it admitted, from one side of the House and the other, that there never had been so much bribery and corruption in electing any Parliament as in the present. Mr. Roebuck proclaimed it on one side of the House, and Sir Robert Peel admitted it on the other. Though they disagreed on every thing else they agreed unanimously in that. (Laughter.) And yet here are your models of virtue and piety,—the men who are to sustain the church,—who are ready to punish the poor wretch who happens to stray from the road on Sunday, if he be not walking towards some church while they enjoy their own carriage-drive quite unscathed and free,—yes, these great examples of morality to the country turn up the whites of their eyes to heaven at the enormity of other men's iniquity, while they are putting their hands at the same time into the pockets of the wretched man who wishes to feed his family. (Immense cheers.) It is too bad! It ought to be "proclaimed." (A laugh.) It is just the kind of thing which ought to be proclaimed throughout the country. The good and the wise ought to congregate; these persons ought to be looked at with suspicion and distrust, ay, and with disgust too. (Cheers.) If they stand by the poor and humble, oh! may every blessing that Heaven has in store be poured on them; but if they insist that the poor man shall be poorer, and the wretched man suffer more—that destitution shall be augmented, and poverty increased,—that they may grow wealthy and pay off their mortgages by means of this tax on human food, then, I say, shame on them for practising such misconduct, and shame on those who do not lift up their voices until the human sound, like the roll of the thunder, affrights the culprit and sets the land and the people free! (Loud cheers.) Yes, landlords, you are mustering well; and I am convinced that your attempt to counteract the exertions of the League will have directly the contrary effect. (Hear.) We are ready to argue with them. Bring them once to reasoning, and you have them. Let them come to the Primer—and some of them have hardly got beyond that yet. (Laughter.) We will meet them foot to foot; we will debate with them point to point. What, if a fellow came on you and snapped his pistol and did not let it off, would you not take care to run in upon him before he charged it again? Yes, we are ready to meet them foot to foot and debate with them; and the more they bring to their meetings the greater chance is there of the truth spreading, and of the minds of the farming class not being any longer deluded. Why do they not give the farmers leases? Would not that enable them to feed their labourers, and assist in every charitable act in their neighbourhoods? Oh, no; the great landowner is to have all. His name is Behemoth, and he must swallow the entire. (Cheers and laughter.) You are engaged, then, in a glorious struggle, and I am proud to be allowed to take part in it with you. It is delightful to me to lend to it the aid of my talents, small as they are, and the sound of my voice, which ought to be pretty well worn out with practice by this time (a laugh); such as they are, I lend them heartily to your sacred cause. (Loud cheers.) I may venture to say of myself that I have been found at the side of liberty on every question which has been agitated since I came to Parliament. (Cheers.) I care not of what creed, or cast, or colour, any human being may be. I claim for him the privileges, the rights, the protection of a man, not the protection of robbery and spoil, but protection against every iniquity, whatever it may be. (Loud cheers.) I cannot, therefore, but cheer you on; and whatever be my own fate,—be it the dungeon or even the scaffold—(loud cries of "No, no," "Never! never!" and most enthusiastic cheering)—I am convinced, if it were left to your votes you would decide differently. (Cheers; a voice:—"We are not packed against you.") I hope you are honest. (Laughter.) It gratifies me that I am engaged in this struggle with you. I see all its bearings,—I know all its value. I know how it would increase your commerce by giving you consumers who are now unable to buy from you. I know how it would increase your comfort, by giving you employment on the one hand and food on the other. I know how it would take down the iniquity of class legislation—(hear)—for the great and mighty reason why classification exists to the prejudice of the poor and the humble in this country is this very Corn Law, which seems to me to be the very root and ground of all the evils under which the nation suffers. (Cheers.) To me it is a cause that stimulates to every iniquity. They know the injustice of their position, and they want to fence it round with all the formalities of the law and all the force of legislation; but it will not do. The public eyes are open—the public mind is roused. Yes, England never willed, and willed in vain. (Cheers.) She had the folly to go to extravagant lengths formerly in working out her will; and she brought to the scaffold the head of a foolish monarch. It was a foolish thing, because it produced a military despotism, which is always the result of violence. That man's son outraged the laws of England, and the people, grown wise, did not cut off the foolish fellow's head, but sent him abroad for his folly in endeavouring to trample on their rights. Those violent measures are no longer necessary; they are not suited to the age or the time; but public and open combination is necessary; we want the combination which springs from sympathy, from the electricity of human opinion. Oh, yes, that electricity of opinion shall spread through the whole kingdom. Scotland will join in the exultation; the manufacturing classes are already arrayed; the labourers and agriculturists find their interests are identified with ours; the farmers understand the chicanery of the great proprietors who are making that kind of bustle and noise which the rats make when the stack is about to be thrown down. (Cheers and laughter.) Yes, the time is approaching—it is irresistible. They may delude miserable constituents here and there; they may overrule them in other places (hear); but the public intellect is on its march, like the mighty waves of the ocean with the incoming tide. The tyrant of old bade the sea stop at his mandate; and yet the waves came on, and overwhelmed him who thought to resist its progress. We don't want to overwhelm them; we would only wish to wet their feet a little. (Laughter.) No, the progress of this great cause is magnificent. What country on the face of the earth could do what you have done? Last year you subscribed £50,000, the income of two or three sovereign princes in Germany; this year you subscribe your £100,000; and if it be necessary next year, you will double it (cheers)—it is not double or win, but double and win. Yes; the movement is in its majestic progress. From day to day new recruits fall into your ranks. We, who are veterans in the contest, are able to look on with delight at the rapidity with which our armies are augmented and our peaceful troops assembled. (Cheers.) The force of public opinion is manifesting itself everywhere. Violent despots, with the single exception of the monster Nicholas (loud groans and hisses), do not now commit those terrible acts which formerly were common with them. The sentiment of England is awakened and abroad; it never will sleep until the poor are righted and the rich compelled to be honest. (The hon. and learned gentleman resumed his seat amidst prolonged and most vehement cheering.)

Mr. GEORGE THOMPSON came forward amidst loud cheers, and addressed the meeting as follows:—Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, when I entered this house to-night to be a witness of the reception of Mr. O'Connell, I did not cherish the remotest idea of being called on to address you; nor do I now feel, standing in the position which unhappily I occupy, that I can be anything more than like that shadow of which Mr. O'Connell spoke, that was almost afraid to follow its mighty master. Ladies and gentlemen, this is to me an exhilarating spectacle from the circumstance, peculiarly, that for the last sixteen months I have been absent from my country, and during the whole of that period travelling exclusively in other lands, where no such scenes or sounds like those to which I have been a witness to-night are ever witnessed or heard. But though I have travelled a distance of 15,000 miles from the spot on which we stand, I have not gone to any distance so great as to preclude from the people amongst whom I have been, a knowledge of the proceedings of that gigantic body that is now purifying, directing, and consolidating to an ultimate triumph the public sentiments and opinions of Great Britain. (Cheers.) It has been my privilege, if not to be intimately associated in labour with the Anti-Corn-Law League, at least to possess a knowledge of its progress ever since its commencement, and to number amongst my earliest and best friends those who have laboured and borne the burthen and heat of the day. I cannot, returning to my native land, but contrast the state of this cause to-night, and its condition when I bade farewell to an audience in Manchester, convened for precisely the same purpose as that which brings you within these walls to-night. I took leave of the Anti-Corn-Law League in the midst of an assembly of at most some 1200 persons, and I now meet them in the largest obtainable building in the metropolis of Great Britain and the world, to the number at least, I should think, of 6000. (Cheers.) I left you in the struggle with silent opponents,—depending almost entirely and hopefully on their rank, station, and wealth,—who were mute spectators of your progress among the manufacturing and artisan classes of England; I meet you now fairly in open combat with this party—their silence broken, their plans disconcerted, their hopes thwarted, their strength diminished, and compelled at last, in self-defence, to have recourse to precisely similar measures on their own part to those which they have condemned in you and in others. (Loud cheers.) Do I anticipate any injury to your cause from the circumstance that your opponents are now banding themselves together and copying from you in regard to the plans they shall pursue for the purpose of thwarting your intentions? Nothing of the kind: I think it the most hopeful sign of the times, that you are now able every morning to learn what is said in all parts of the country; that you have the opportunity now to grapple fairly with—if it may be called by such a name—the arguments of those who will, as long as they are able, out of doors and in doors, endeavour to sustain and maintain the monopoly of which they are the patrons and by which they live. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, I congratulate you on this mighty progress; I rejoice to see the firm hold that you have obtained upon the best principles and most enlightend intellects of the nation at large. I congratulate you on having now arrayed around your standard all that is estimable and excellent, or nearly so, in the land in which we live; and I congratulate you on the near prospect of a most glorious and peaceful triumph over the party with which you have been so long contending. (Cheers.) Wherever I have travelled—whether in Egypt or in India—I have found the deepest interest taken in the proceedings of this association. (Hear.) I have heard the greatest wonder everywhere expressed at the folly and infatuation of those who are endeavouring, upon the disasters and poverty and want and hunger and nakedness and crime of the people, to maintain that prosperity, which must be a guilty prosperity gained only by such means. (Cheers.) Men far removed from party influence, and not having a domestic and personal interest in this question, hold but one opinion on the subject. They cannot traverse regions thousands of miles in extent, estimate their resources, survey the means, as they pass along, of transporting from the most remote districts to the seaboard, and thence across the ocean to this country, that which, if it came across, would be capable of sustaining those who are now perishing at our very doors—I say they cannot now behold these things, and know that whatever they send here would come back to them in the shape of that which would be equally desirable—they cannot see this, and know this, without standing astonished in the presence of so monstrous and stupendous a robbery as that which is perpetrated in this country. (Loud cheers.) Gentlemen, I have never had but one view of the Corn Laws, and that was an all-comprising view: it was a view of the subject which satisfied my own mind, and which shut me up to be what I am—a present, entire, universal, everlasting hater of those laws which circumscribe the bounties of Divine Providence, and say to the gifts which God has scattered so liberally over the surface of the earth for the benefit of all, "Hitherto shall you come, but no further." (Tremendous applause.) With me the narrow—I will even say the national—view of this question sinks into insignificance when I contemplate the fact that God could never have designed that a people every day increasing, and living upon a soil that never could be extended, should depend for their resources for feeding that daily augmenting population upon their own soil; while, at the same time, the pathways of the ocean, the ingenuity of men of science, the bravery of our merchant seamen, the fertility of distant nations, the prosperity of the world, and the dispensations of God—the fatherly care of Him who made us all—evidently designed that men should exchange benefits, and that the abundance of one region should contribute to the happiness and comfort of another. (Loud Cheers.) To me the offence that is committed by the supporters of the Corn Laws is one that reaches the throne of the eternal God himself. (Hear.) Monopoly is a practical denial of the gifts of the Almighty to his creatures: it stops them half-way between the hand of God, open for the benefit of all His created beings, and the waiting, hungry recipients—or those who were intended to be—of that bounty. On one shore we have bread enough and to spare; on the other there is a famished population who would commit a crime if they took one grain of the yellow harvest which God in his bounty has provided for the benefit of us all. (Cheers.) Talk to me of ancient rights and vested interests—of the title of the aristocrat to his green crops. I give him his rights; I respect his rank most of all when to it he adds that which is more than rank—that sympathy with his fellow mortals which should increase in proportion as God has been good to him, and has seen fit to withhold his temporal bounties from them. (Loud cheers.) Let him take that to which he is fairly entitled; let him possess his parks, his paddocks, his hunting-grounds, and his preserves; let him, if he pleases, wall them all round, and inscribe upon a board that "man-traps and spring-guns are set within these grounds;" I will not encroach on his manor, neither will I even look over his wall; but be content to pursue my way along the dusty road, if, when I get to the end of my journey, I may purchase for my family that which the goodness of God and the bounty of his Providence has destined for me. (Cheers.) The wealthy landlord seeks protection! Why, he has it. He possesses it in the superior fertility of his estate, in the nearness of the field where the corn is grown to the market where it is sold. He has it in the distance of the competing countries from his own—in the hurricanes and shipwrecks to which the vessels upon the ocean conveying the produce of foreign countries are exposed—in the expense of insurance, the land and water charges, wharf duties, and warehouse dues—all these constitute a protection lasting as the ocean itself, and of which no man can deprive him. But with all this, he asks more: he demands that there should be placed upon his corn an arbitrary artificial price; that you should not allow the poor man to buy in the world's market, but to purchase of him until he has no corn to sell, allowing him to get his provision elsewhere only when the landowners in this country cannot by possibility benefit by withholding it. (Loud cheers.) (A person here interrupted the meeting, upon which a general cry was raised to turn him out.)

The CHAIRMAN then came forward, and said:—I put it to the persons who are disturbing the meeting at the end of the pit, whether they are willing to undergo the process of being removed and placed in the custody of the police or not? Because most assuredly I shall exercise the right I possess, and use lawful means to maintain perfect order in this meeting, and place any one in the station-house who shall interfere with the regular order and decorum of an assembly like this. At the same time, if any gentleman wishes to leave the meeting, the doors are open, and he can retire; but surely it is a disgrace to any one to attempt for one moment to occupy the time of a large audience like this by such interruptions as, I am sorry to say, have been frequent this evening. (Cheers.)

Mr. THOMPSON then resumed:—Sir, I have taken the liberty to express those views of this question, which in my early attention to the subject settled my own mind, and placed it upon an argument so lofty and commanding, that I think it would not be within the possibility of human ingenuity ever to alter the opinion I have formed of the unmixed and monstrous iniquity of the Corn Laws. But not only are we strong in resorting to these obvious dispensations of Providence in nature, and the authoritative will of our Maker as made known to us in a volume which we reverence,—which, whether we open the first page, and read that on "everything that grows" man may subsist, or the last, which tells us that, "without money, and without price," we may obtain the high and enduring blessings of another life,—I say, not only are we strong on this ground, but upon every other position that can be assumed by our opponents we are equally invulnerable. The argument has been exhausted: we have gone round the compass, availed ourselves of the experience, the intellect, and the ratiocination of the nation; and whether our argument is drawn from the circumstances of our own country, or from the peculiarities of other lands—whether it be taken from times of peace, or seasons of war—whether the illustration be from the agricultural population, or one composed of those who are artisans, the argument is complete; all parties in this country, who aim at nothing beyond their just, natural, social, and civil rights, would be benefited. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, our Legislature has much to answer for. (Hear.) Talk of disaffection, insubordination, and conspiracy! (Laughter and cheers.) I ask, what are the causes of these evils? I go to the men who would punish these in their development, and I say, when searching for the culprit, "Thou art the man." (Hear, hear.) An unjust law is incipient revolution. Trace it out in operation until it begins to wither, impoverish, crush, and coerce mankind: then come the efforts of patriotism; then the responses of the people; then the stand of determination, if not of defiance; then come prosecutions; then prisons, then scaffolds, then martyrs. (Cheers.) But I go back to the original offenders—the men who framed the corrupt law—and I say:—You fomented the disaffection; you raised into noprefacing the object of their meeting; his sentiments were well known, as they had been delivered by him in public many times, and through the newspaper press; but he continued his observations to a lengthened extent, which were quite inaudible to a vast part of the meeting. Resolutions similar to those passed at former "protection" meetings having been moved, seconded, and agreed to, Mr. Jonathan Howlett, a thoroughly respected farmer and auctioneer, who was standing in front not far from the speakers, held up a paper which was circulated by the society, which he supposed came under the denomination of one of their tracts. In that paper was contained the relative proportion of imports of corn in some former years, to the depression in the manufacturing interest at the time imported. He denounced it as a one-sided statement, inasmuch as several years intervening between the periods were not stated at all. It was full of error, and intended to impose on the credulity of the innocent farmer. He said he stood before them as a brother farmer, determined not to see them gulled by the pretensions and falsehood of those who ought to stand on better ground. What was their position, and what had it been? The Corn Laws have given the landlords an opportunity for asking and obtaining a much higher rent for their farms than had been originally obtained, and stated an instance in his locality where a farm had been doubled in its rent within his remembrance. He asked whether the prices promised to the occupier by this law had ever been realized? Most deplorably not; and he was sure they were most of them before him aware of the distress now prevailing among farmers. It was notorious, that if the rent was paid the tradesman went unpaid; and he was sorry to see them meet here to-day to bolster up that law which was the concern of the landlord and tithe-owner only to uphold. He called on them to be deluded no longer—not to be made mere tools of by the operation of this law as they had been—but to emerge from their serf-like position, and declare they were blind no longer.—S. Cross, Esq., then mounted the table, making vituperative personal allusions to Mr. Howlett, who was fighting single-handed; and not being much skilled in the art of gentle persuasion, allowed his choleric to overcome his better sense, and ultimately brought him to a fall. Some kind friends wishing him to retire from his lofty and perilous position, he acceded to their request with all due humility, and thus ended the meeting. Many farmers evidently participated in the manly and straightforward sentiments of Mr. Howlett on their serf-like position.

DALRY FARMERS' PROTECTION SOCIETY.—A public meeting of all those friendly to a national protection to the British agriculturist, called by handbills circulated in the town and neighbourhood of Dalry, Ayrshire, was held in the parish school-house of Dalry on Tuesday, Feb. 6. By the Ayr Observer, a favourite organ of the "farmers' friends," it appears that this meeting was one of considerable importance, fully more than a column of that paper being occupied with an account of the proceedings. It is represented as "a large party"—"a respectable assemblage of farmers and others belonging to the district." Now, a friend of ours happened to be present. The "large party" was, in fact, so small that a child could count them. Not more than from 10 to 12 farmers were present, who, it is presumed, were specially invited by their landlords, and not more than 21 in all. Mr. Blair of Blair acted as chairman. He had a series of resolutions ready for the adoption of the meeting. So heartily did the farmers approve of the proceedings, that they required to be told by their masters to second, and in some cases even to move the resolutions. The proceedings were altogether so contemptible, that the very warmest monopolists in the place are quite ashamed of them. To make sure work that the greatest unanimity should prevail at the meeting, though styled "public," two constables were placed at the door, who, with an exception or two, admitted only those known to be friendly to monopoly. Now may the Council of the League tremble! Surely the days of the "unconstitutional confederacy" are numbered! Seriously, it is thought that the cause of Free Trade could not be better promoted than by the course adopted by its enemies. Dalry is to be inundated with Anti-Monopoly tracts. It is certain that the people only require to read and to think, and Free Trade will speedily supersede Monopoly.

NORTH RIDING OF YORKSHIRE.—A strong spirit of inquiry is beginning to manifest itself amongst the farmers of the North Riding, and it is instigated rather than satisfied by the Anti-League meetings. The farmers in the neighbourhood of Thirsk were invited to meet on Monday last, and to pass resolutions that they would strenuously oppose themselves to the operations of the League. There was a full meeting, as the farmers were anxious to hear what could be said in favour of that "protection," of whose benefit to themselves they were beginning to entertain strong doubts. The usual fallacies were uttered, but were very coldly received; and, although the resolutions were passed, many of the farmers afterwards declared to the townsmen that they were left in as much doubt as they were before, and they would remain to attend the evening meeting which had been called, to hear Mr. Flint, from Leeds, and Mr. Prentice, from Manchester, on the manner in which the interests of farmers are affected by the Corn Laws. There was, therefore, a considerable number of them at the evening meeting, which was so completely crammed that one abled-bodied person fainted from the excessive heat.—Mr. John Baker took the chair, and said, that he and his brothers had become tradesmen, because there was no room for them on their father's land, and no profit to be had from renting land elsewhere.—Mr. Prentice, in commencing his address, tendered his thanks to the promoters of the day's meeting for having excited a strong curiosity to hear both sides, which had brought so many agriculturists together to listen to arguments in favour of Free Trade. He proceeded at considerable length to show that protection had not only not benefited farmers or farm-labourers, but had greatly injured them, and that their property was dependent upon the prosperity of their customers in the commercial and manufacturing towns.—Mr. Flint followed in an argumentative and effective speech, in which he demolished many of the fallacies of the landholders.—Notwithstanding the crowded state of the room, and that there were not seats for one tenth of the persons present, every one remained to the last; and the announcement that the deputation would address the farmers in the open market place on the following Monday was received with enthusiastic cheers. After having given three cheers for the League, and thanks to the deputation and chairman, the meeting terminated.—On Thursday morning Messrs. Prentice and Flint proceeded to Richmond, where a very full meeting is expected, the late Anti-League meeting, where Lord Zetland, by his arguments against the existing Corn Law, put a stop to the intended Pro-Corn Law agitation, having given additional stimulus to the previously existing spirit of inquiry, and created a great desire to hear full expositions of Free-Trade doctrine.

RICHMOND (NORTH RIDING), YORKSHIRE.—On Tuesday evening the Town Hall was completely filled by an audience consisting of many of the principal inhabitants of the town, some farmers from the neighbourhood, and a considerable number of intelligent working-men. Seats had been reserved for ladies, of whom there was a fair attendance. The previous attempt of the landowners to get up a farmers' demonstration had excited considerable curiosity to hear the deputation, and to that may be attributed, in a considerable degree, the crowded state of the hall, and the deep interest which was taken in the proceedings. Mr. Cooke, proprietor of the large paper-mills in the neighbourhood, after having stated that the object of the meeting was to hear Mr. Flint and Mr. Prentice on the manner in which the Corn Laws operated upon the agricultural districts, introduced to the meeting Mr. Prentice, who proceeded for about half an hour with very marked effect, and obviously to the conviction of the majority of his hearers, when a farmer, who had the appearance of having sat rather too long after dinner, and who was instigated by a little knot of persons who had taken part in the Pro-Corn-Law meeting, attempted to get up a disturbance by interrupting the speaker; he was aided by a young fellow who had the appearance of one of those "working men" who never work, who also had his little knot of advisers, and who kept shouting "machinery." Mr. Prentice having denounced this attempt of some half-dozen persons to prevent three or four hundred attending to what they had come to hear, and being supported by the Chairman, and by the expressed indignation of the meeting at such interruption, proceeded with his address, which was only further interrupted by applause. Mr. Flint was then introduced to the meeting, and was listened to with profound attention throughout a long and closely-argumentative speech, in which he supported, by reference to original documents, all the principles laid down by the previous speaker, and proved the extent to which the destitution of the agricultural labourers had increased the population of the manufacturing towns, drawing thence the conclusion, that, but for the unprotected branches of trade, and the use of machinery which had been so much deplored, the protected would have been one immense mass of pauperism. He concluded by an eloquent exposition of the peace-producing effects of Free Trade, which excited loud and long-continued cheering.—The Chairman then invited any one who wished to address the meeting to come forward, especially those who had before attempted to be heard out of place; but no one appearing, Mr. Pearson moved, and Mr. Harrop seconded, a vote of thanks to the deputation, which was carried unanimously, and with much cheering.—Mr. Prentice, in reply, adverted to a point on which before he had but slightly touched, and excited great laughter and applause.—Thanks to the Chairman were then voted with three enthusiastic cheers, and then three still more enthusiastic cheers, and one cheer more, were given for the League. So much for the effort of the Pro-Corn-Law meeting in Richmond, the capital of agricultural Richmondshire.—On Wednesday morning Mr. Flint and Mr. Prentice proceeded to Mr. Ferrand's, borough of Knaresborough.

KNARESBOROUGH.—The Anti-Corn-Law meeting on Wednesday night was extremely crowded. Messrs. Flint and Prentice went thoroughly into the relative position of the people in the agricultural and manufacturing districts, and convinced not a few of Mr. Ferrand's constituents that it was solely from the demand for labour where machines were that men left the districts where machines were not. One of Mr. Ferrand's "devil's-dust" men attempted to have an interruption, but he was too well known, and when at the close of the address of the deputation the meeting was asked if they had any wish to hear Mr. Harper, loud cries of "No, no," rung through the room, and thanks to the deputation were given with immense applause: many loud cheers were given for the League.

OPERATIVE FREE-TRADE SOCIETY.—We are happy to find that the operatives of Liverpool are again beginning to beat themselves in the great and important question of Free Trade, and that they held a public meeting on Wednesday evening, at the large room, Roe-street, which was numerously and respectably attended. Mr. John Critchley presided on the occasion. Mr. Robert Jones moved the first resolution in his usual homely but effective style, condemnatory of all restrictions on trade, and calling upon the meeting to unite their most strenuous efforts to thwart the operations of those newly-formed societies called into life by the landowners, who are beginning to manifest symptoms of delirious apprehension at the rapid strides of the Anti-Corn-Law League. The meeting was also very effectively addressed by Messrs. Onions, Leach, Fitzsimons, &c. Henry Edwards, Esq., then, in a forcible and convincing speech, addressed the shipwrights and other operatives connected with the shipping interest, a great many of whom attended. The whole of the resolutions were carried by acclamation, and a great number of members enrolled their names, the majority of whom were freemen.—Liverpool Mercury.

THE GATESHEAD FREE-TRADE SOCIETY.—The usual fortnightly meeting was held on Monday, at the Half-moon Inn, Councillor Revely in the chair. The opinion was unanimous, that the present position of affairs rendered it more than ever incumbent on Free-Traders to support the League; and Mr. Crawshaw expressed his readiness to deliver a lecture on Free Trade in connexion with wages, at the Grey Horse Inn, on Tuesday, the 20th inst., at eight o'clock.—Gateshead Observer.

THE TORIES AND FREE TRADE.—Mr. Cardwell, M.P. for Clitheroe, who seconded the address at the opening of the session, said:—"The best source of wealth and competence was unlimited competition in commerce. Where there was the most rivalry—the most competition in commerce for all nations—he believed there would be the greatest prosperity." The light is breaking in apace.

ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE.—The inhabitants of Cross Hills have been visited by a deputation from the Anti-Corn-Law League in Manchester, and the Anti-Corn-Law Association in Bradford, when, after spirited addresses delivered by Mr. Murray and several others, on the evil effects of those laws both to manufacturers and agriculturists, the sum of £20 was immediately subscribed in aid of the League fund of £100,000, with a prospect of increasing that sum previous to the subscription list being closed.—Leeds Mercury.

MEETING OF AGRICULTURISTS IN EASTER ROSS; WITH REMARKS BY A CORRESPONDENT.

On Thursday, the 13th of January, a meeting of a large number of the respectable farmers and tenants of Easter Ross took place within the hall of Mrs. Dickson's Hotel, Tain, with a view to petition both Houses of Parliament against any interference whatever with the Corn Laws of the country as they exist at present.

JOHN HAY MACKENZIE, Esq., of Cromertie, proposed that Crawford Ross, Esq., Caddell, as President of the Easter Ross Farmers' Society, should take the chair.

Mr. Ross, having taken the chair, addressed the meeting on the subject for which it had been convened. He was followed by Mr. Williamson, Ballinroich; Mr. Syme, Tarrel; H. Ross, Esq., of Cromarty; Captain D. Mackay, Hilton; and Mr. Middleton, Davioton. The sentiments expressed by Mr. Syme, Tarrel, and Captain Mackay, Hilton, on the subject of a total repeal, were somewhat different from those of the other gentlemen present.

Mr. Syme expressed his firm belief that an alteration would take place, and he proposed that, instead of petitioning Parliament against this measure, their object ought to be to obtain a total repeal, instead of a further reduction of duty, as in the latter case the farmer would have no protection at all.

The following resolutions were passed by the meeting:—"Resolved, That the views of the body denominated the 'Anti-Corn-Law League' are directed against the most important and valuable interests of this great nation, which are based upon its agricultural capital and resources.

"That, from recent reduction in the import duties, the British corn-grower has not an adequate protection, and, should there be a further reduction, he will be obliged to abandon cultivation.

"That it is indispensable, if fettered with a tack, and in the hands of a needy or avaricious proprietor, he will, of course, have to abide by his engagement while his capital affords means: when that is expended he falls—all those employed by him are thrown idle. Thus the tenant and his dependents are ruined.

"That this meeting contemplates the measures now in progress through the country for the abolition of the Corn Laws with the greatest alarm, and deem it their duty to their country, themselves, and those agitators also, to do all in their power to resist them.

"That they immediately petition both Houses of Parliament, strongly deprecating and praying against any interference whatever with the Corn Laws as they now stand."

PETITION.

"Unto the Honourable the Commons of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament,

"The Petition of the Farmers, Tenants, and others subscribing,

"Humbly sheweth,

"That your petitioners contemplate with great alarm the agitation through many of the manufacturing districts in the south to obtain a repeal of the Corn Laws; that the British farmer does not at present enjoy a sufficient protection, for in many districts they are struggling very severely and losing capital; that a further reduction will inevitably prove ruinous to him; and the cultivation of the soil must, to a very great extent, be abandoned. Should this occur, the best and greatest proportions of our British subjects will be prostrated; and, moreover, the nation, in the event of a struggle, will find herself at the mercy of a foreign land for bread.

"That such calamitous results are to be apprehended, and to be averted.

"May it therefore please your Honourable House not to alter or interfere with the Corn Laws as they now stand."

REMARKS.

The preceding account of a "meeting of agriculturists in Easter Ross" is taken from the Inverness Courier of the 24th of January last. "Agriculturist" is a word of comprehensive meaning, embracing both landlords and farmers, although as Mr. Cobden has well shown that a landowner is no more a farmer than a shipowner is a sailor. In the body of the account, however, the meeting is described as that "of a large number of respectable farmers and tenants of Easter Ross," and their petition is styled that "of the farmers, tenants, and others." Let me now show how far this title is applicable to the party, or rather how far the tenant-farmers are mixed up in the affair. Seven individuals are mentioned by name as having taken prominent parts in the proceedings. Two of them (J. H. Mackenzie and H. Ross) are not tenants, but they are large landowners. One (Mr. C. Ross) is no doubt a tenant, but he is also (and it is his principal business) the factor (Anglice, steward) of an absent landowner of great possessions. Another (Mr. Williamson) is a tenant, but he is also a lawyer and a land agent and steward. Two (Mr. Syme and Captain Mackay), who are bond fide tenant-farmers, dissent from the resolutions; and the former is for a total repeal of the Corn Laws. There remains, therefore, only one—positively but one—(Mr. Middleton)—tenant-farmer of all the individuals specified as taking a part in the proceedings.

Of the resolutions, and the petition founded on them, the grammar, although bad enough, is not so bad as the logic, and neither of them so absurd and ill founded as the gratuitous assumptions which are hazarded. While the petition alleges that the "British farmer does not at present enjoy sufficient protection, for, in many districts, he is struggling very severely, and losing capital," yet, strange to say, the House of Commons is prayed "not to alter or interfere with the Corn Laws as they now stand." Why, this is odd to petition for a continuance of the system which has brought about the present calamitous state of the farming interest.

With regard to the dissenting members at the meeting, Captain Mackay and Mr. Syme, I remember reading in an Inverness newspaper, some short time ago, that the former stated at a public meeting that he had left a farm he had because it was unprofitable, and he was losing capital by it. The latter, Mr. Syme, who is for a total repeal (at least I so read the report), occupies one of the finest farms in Ross-shire. He is a man of education and intelligence, has ample capital, and prosecutes his farming operations with a degree of activity, skill, and success not surpassed and rarely equalled in the district where he resides. This I know personally.

It is as edifying as it is amusing to turn from the report of this meeting to an article in another part of the same newspaper, where Sir George S. Mackenzie, of Coul, Bart., himself a great land proprietor in Ross-shire, a practical farmer, and a man of eminence in literature and science, demonstrates the necessity of a mixture of foreign wheat with the home-growths for the use of the baker, advocates the propriety of a grain rent as evinced in the success and well-doing of his own tenants under that system, and repudiates the Corn Laws with indignation and contempt.

THE DUKE OF SUTHERLAND AND THE CORN LAWS.

The following letter has been addressed by his Grace the Duke of Sutherland to his agent at Dunrobin, in the county of Sutherland:—

"London, Feb. 12, 1844.
"DEAR SIR,—As I learn that in Sutherland some of my friends and tenants are desirous of having a meeting to consider the subject of the Corn Laws, under apprehension of the effects which the present agitation of that subject may have on our agricultural interests, it may be well for me to say shortly to you what I am disposed to believe right and true in regard to it. It is very fair that the sentiments of any who feel desirous of communicating them should be expressed; but it is also desirable that none should commit themselves incautiously, and, under unnecessary apprehensions, they may probably find that in this as on many other subjects great exaggerations prevail. I take for granted that none would think of considering societies for agricultural purposes as proper instruments for use as machinery for extending any determined opinions that any number of the members may entertain on this general question. This, I think, should be carefully avoided. Of course I do not urge objections to any persons meeting as a society for the special purpose of taking a part for or against a general measure; but the societies which have been formed to promote improvements in all branches of farming should be kept clear of contention, and free from disputes of this nature.

"My own feeling is in favour of the free current of national industry—of unfettered commerce—of purchase and sale generally—without excepting any trade on which the sustenance of the people depends. I am unwilling to close the best markets for our supplies, and cut off from the people the sources which Providence offers, under the varying circumstances of seasons and climates, for the produce of commodities necessary for the enjoyment of life. I do not think it is a solid good principle to maintain that a bounty should be given to the grower by a tax on the consumer; and I believe that the protest drawn up by the late Lord Grenville on the subject is substantially sound and just. I also, as I said, think that in conforming to these principles we shall not endanger ourselves; though no doubt, in many parts of England particularly, great improvements will be required, and under any system they should be enforced.

"Important considerations arise from the artificial and complicated system which has made our condition so difficult to understand and manage. Our national debt, complicated taxation, necessities of revenue,—all these make great caution necessary; and it is no doubt right and proper that all who have insight into these subjects should communicate—that agriculturists should express their sentiments regarding their own prospects and fears and expectations, as well as other members of society. But I do not wish to enrol myself among those who require restrictions interfering with trade and commerce in regard to the most important articles for man.

"G. Gunn, Esq."

"I am, dear sir, truly yours,
"SUTHERLAND."

I love clamour, when there is an abuse. The alarm-bell disturbs the inhabitants, but 't saves them from being burnt in their beds.—Burke.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE £100,000 FUND.

Subscriptions received during the week ending Wednesday, February 21, 1844.

N.B. As the subscription list is made up from Wednesday to Wednesday, contributions received on Thursdays and Fridays are not published in the LEAGUE of the Saturday immediately succeeding, but are included in the list of the week following.

| | |
|--|---------|
| Small subscriptions from Birmingham, per B. Smith | £2 18 3 |
| George Musgrove, Middlewich, Cheshire | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Rushton, Tib-street, Manchester | 25 0 0 |
| Sam. Grindrod, Prince's-court, Market-st., do. | 0 5 0 |
| Dixon and Galloway, 8, Fountain street, do. | 10 0 0 |
| M. and S. Bridge, 40, Market-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| M. Killyerby, 52, Market-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| T. Mearns, 1, Piccadilly, do. | 1 0 0 |
| T. Bateman, 34, Spring-gardens, do. | 5 0 0 |
| Henry Holland, 41, Mosley-street, do. | 10 0 0 |
| Robert Sykes, 31, do., do. | 20 0 0 |
| J. and J. Gibb, 29, do., do. | 20 0 0 |
| C. Moorcock, 12, do., do. | 30 0 0 |
| Gilbert Saunders, stationer, Blairgowrie, N.B. | 1 0 0 |
| W. Farrow, Woburn, Beds. | 1 0 0 |
| David Littlejohn, Forfar, N.B. | 1 0 0 |
| J. Doling, jun., Wilton, Wilts., per W. Naisb, jun. | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Kidd, Tib-street, Manchester | 50 0 0 |
| Thomas Watson, Waid-street, Swansea | 1 0 0 |
| John Matthew Ross, Mount Pleasant, do. | 1 0 0 |
| J. B. Kasey, Gloucester-place, do. | 1 0 0 |
| A. Labourer and Landowner, Manchester | 0 5 0 |
| Josh. Reynolds, Cross Hayes, Malmesbury, Wilts. | 1 0 0 |
| Henry Gale, Milbourne, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Edwd. Alexander, Cross Hayes, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Kinloch, merchant, Ayr, N.B. | 1 0 0 |
| J. B. Telfer, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| John S. Lawes, Marygate, Berwick-on-Tweed | 0 2 6 |
| George Archer, Tweedmouth, do. | 0 2 6 |
| James Kershaw, Ashton-road, Ardwick, Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| Geo. Campbell, Swan-street, Manchester, for a Farmer in Wales | 1 0 0 |
| Ralph Darbyshire, Brown-street, Manchester | 0 5 0 |
| John Webb, 79, Market-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| J. Dean, Barlow-court, Market-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| James Muir, Peel-street, Hulme, do. | 0 2 6 |
| W. C., do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| F. Birckley, Ducie-bridge, do. | 0 2 0 |
| Yates and Williams, Brown street, do. | 30 0 0 |
| Robert Maxwell, 4, New Brown-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| T. Blatter, 5, Duke-street, do. | 5 0 0 |
| Potter and Ascoli, 8, Greenwood-street, do. | 10 0 0 |
| Wm. Gill, 11, New Cannon-street, do. | 10 0 0 |
| Mr. Baker, Chester-road, Hulme, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Mr. Fielden, painter, do., do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thos. Smith, per A. P. Halliday, Cornbrook, do. | 1 1 0 |
| John Johnson, Wood-street, Wigan | 0 10 0 |
| James Blacklock, Regent-street, Haslingdon, near Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| Small subscriptions from Radcliffe-bridge, near do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Leach, do., do. | 200 0 0 |
| Spedding, Kenwick, Cumberland | 5 0 0 |
| Jonah Warburton, Bristol-street, Radnor-street, Hulme, Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| Josh. Evison, Park Cottage, near the Penitentiary, Hulme, Manchester | 0 5 0 |
| Foster and Co., 43, Oxford street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Edward Whitehead, 53, London-road, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Ritchie, 2, Cleveland-buildg., Market-st., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Jas. McLean, Joiner and builder, Stretford New-road, Manchester | 0 2 6 |
| Mellor and Greenhalgh, 84, Fairfield-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. and Charles Miller, 93, Fountain-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Chadwick, 6, Cooper-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Edward Cole, 6, Chapel-square, Birchin-lane, do. | 10 0 0 |
| A. R. Chandler, Hereford | 1 0 0 |
| X. Y., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Z. N., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Mr. Rogers (2nd subscr.), 17, Oxford-st., Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Scott, 8, Morton-street, Chorlton, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Gaskell, 25, St. George's-road, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Sam. Oller, 16, Beech-street, Hulme, do. | 0 2 6 |
| A. Burns, 107, Medlock-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small subscriptions under 2s. 6d. | 0 7 9 |
| J. Lowe, Wribben Hall, near Bewdley, Worcestershire | 1 0 0 |
| J. Crook, 6, New Bridge-st., Strangeways, Manchester | 1 1 0 |
| McEwen and Christie, High-street, Cliffe, N.B. | 1 2 6 |
| A Friend, per Andrew Christie, do. | 1 0 0 |
| J. McEwen & Sons, manufacturers, near do. | 1 0 0 |
| James McEwen, High-street, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Thos. Wright and Son, tanners, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Robert Arnott, High-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Joseph McIntyre, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Jas. Taylor, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Robert Donaldson, St. James's-square, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. McLean, High-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Lieut. James McOrum, King street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend, per Andrew Christie, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Do., do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Do., do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Miller, grocer, High-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| James Cameron, carrier, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John McEwen, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| James Dewar, jun., do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Robt. McHinde, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Alex. McGregor, M.D., do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Donald Stewart, grocer, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Clark, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Daniel McEwen, Comrie-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 17 6 |
| Robert Shaw Wensley, Darley Dale, near Bakewell, Derbyshire | 0 2 6 |
| James Dakyne, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Akop, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Charles Dakyne, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Mrs. Dakyne, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Kil. Dakyne, Green House, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Small sums, do., do. | 0 13 0 |
| H. Arbuckle, Queensferry, Lullithgow, N.B. | 0 5 0 |
| Peter Christie, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| W. Carruthers, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. McArthur, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 17 6 |
| J. Wilkinson, Shakespeare-st., Newcastle-upon-Tyne | 1 0 0 |
| Josh. Pearson, Carhol-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sum, do. | 0 1 0 |
| C. T. H., Glasgow | 1 4 0 |
| John Kenworthy and Co., carriers, Manchester | 100 0 0 |
| A Lover of Justice, per Dan. O'Connell, Esq., M.P. | 100 0 0 |
| Workmen of Joseph Twigg and Brothers, Newhill Pottery, near Rotherham, per John Twigg (5th sub- scription since July) | 1 10 0 |
| Major Brandon, Rathbone House, Cheltenham | 1 0 0 |
| Miss Answorth, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Miss Catherine Answorth, 19, Bury New road, Manchester | 1 1 0 |
| Miss Esther Answorth, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Miss Jeanette Answorth, do. | 1 1 0 |
| George Common, Ninfeld, near Battle | 1 0 0 |
| Small subscriptions from Leslie, Fife, per Jos. Senior | 2 13 0 |
| George Christwood, seedsmen, 14, Tavistock-row, Covent Garden | 5 0 0 |
| Charles Tennant, Sons, and Co., Thames-street | 50 0 0 |
| John Smith, Elm-tree House, Haverstock Hill | 1 1 0 |
| George McKenzie, 136, Houndditch, per D. Parker | 1 0 0 |

| | |
|--|---------|
| D. Parker, 96, Minories | £1 0 0 |
| Richard Brook, Whitstable, Kent | 0 2 6 |
| John Jones, Love-lane, City | 2 2 0 |
| Major J. L. Verity, 21, South-street, Thurlow-square | 1 0 0 |
| William Ellis, Champion Hill | 5 0 0 |
| C. J. Parsons | 0 2 6 |
| John Proctor, 94, Tottenham-court-road | 1 1 0 |
| A Non-Elector, Southwark | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Stewart, Swindon | 0 2 6 |
| Joseph Clement, do. | 0 2 6 |
| William Murray, West Bromwich | 0 10 0 |
| John Clode, 93, Peaseod-street, Windsor | 1 0 0 |
| Alexander Telfar, Wigtown | 1 0 0 |
| G. and B. | 1 0 0 |
| Francis Holl, 7, St. James's-terrace, Camden-town | 0 5 0 |
| Coupland and Gilbert, 1, George-yard, Bow-lane | 2 2 0 |
| James Buckingham, Wandsworth | 5 5 0 |
| James Grieves, Haverstock-hill, Hampstead | 1 1 0 |
| R. Thropp, 7, Thornhill Bridge-place, Pentonville | 0 3 0 |
| John Roberts, 50, New Bond-street | 0 5 0 |
| George Gow, Truman's Brewery | 1 0 0 |
| Martin Thackeray, 88, Gloucester-place, Portman-sq. | 5 0 0 |
| Charles De la Prynce, Lincoln's-inn | 1 1 0 |
| C. H. Blagden, Hoxton-square | 1 1 0 |
| Edward Carter, Thame-bank, Westminster | 2 2 0 |
| C. O. S. L. | 0 5 0 |
| W. D. Seymour, 32, Fenchurch-street | 1 0 0 |
| Samuel Drewell, 85, West Smithfield | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Noble, jun., 152, Fleet-street | 0 2 6 |
| O. H. Smith, Thame-bank, Westminster | 5 0 0 |
| William Coles, draper, Bushy, Herts | 0 5 0 |
| Reuben Roby, 19, Queen-street, Chapside | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Brindley, 70, St. John-street-road | 0 2 6 |
| J. D. Gaskell, Warrington | 25 0 0 |
| W. C. Perry, Exeter | 0 5 0 |
| James Boyd, 36, Mark-lane | 1 0 0 |
| James Robinson, 21, Grosvenor-row, Pimlico | 0 2 6 |
| Mrs. J. L. James, 20, Alfred-street, Islington | 0 10 0 |
| A few subscriptions at Mr. John Fellows's, King's Head, Museum-street | 1 0 0 |
| Mrs. Webb, 10, Cannon-street-road | 0 10 0 |
| Miss Webb, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Miss E. Webb, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Webb, do. | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend | 0 10 0 |
| Wm. Smith, 39, Fish-street Hill | 1 1 0 |
| A. Galloway, 30, Canonbury-square | 1 0 0 |
| A. B. C. | 1 1 0 |
| John Payne, St. Andrew's Hill | 1 1 0 |
| Peter Stein, Grove, Highgate | 0 2 6 |
| W. H. Pridoux, 59, Red Lion-street, Holborn | 1 0 0 |
| G. Purnell, 78, Curtain-road | 1 0 0 |
| James Robinson, 9, Heathcote-st., Gray's Inn-lane | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Ruddle, 3, Hanworth-terrace | 0 1 0 |
| J. Salisbury, 7, Marchmont-street, Brunswick-square | 0 10 0 |
| Abraham Scott, 60, Red Lion-street, Holborn | 1 1 0 |
| William Wing, 61, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Charles Scott, 60, do. | 0 10 6 |
| William Scott, do. | 0 10 6 |
| Thomas Bosher, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Mr. Williams, 2, King's-square, Goswell-road | 0 5 0 |
| Mrs. Mills, 73, Lucas-street, Commercial-road East | 0 5 0 |
| G. M. W. Mills, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Miss Georgiana Deeks, 8, Porchester-pl., Oxford-sqr. | 0 5 0 |
| John Draper | 1 0 0 |
| J. Pittway | 0 5 0 |
| Mr. Armitage | 0 2 6 |
| Mr. Downing | 0 2 6 |
| Mr. Kirby | 0 2 6 |
| Mr. Agar | 0 2 0 |
| Mr. Orrell | 0 2 6 |
| Mr. Newlove | 0 2 6 |
| Mr. Parker | 0 2 0 |
| Mr. Kelly | 0 2 6 |
| D. Bailey | 0 2 6 |
| H. Bailey | 0 2 6 |
| John Edward Spicer and Sons, New Bridge-street, P. G. | 10 10 0 |
| Wm. Sutcliffe, Camberwell-green | 0 2 6 |
| W. Richards, 8, Blackmoor-street, Drury-lane | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Styles, 11, Charles-street, New Kent-road | 0 2 6 |
| A Thorough Leaguer | 10 0 0 |
| Dr. Epps, Great Russell-street (3rd subscription) | 1 0 0 |
| E. J. Scale, Plaistow, Stratford, Essex, in addition to 10s. subscribed before | 0 10 0 |
| Joseph Marchant, 31, Thayer-street | 0 2 6 |
| Francis Cooke, 27, Great Quebec-street | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Crossley, 38, Noble-street | 1 0 0 |
| George Gray, 40, Devonshire-street, Mile-end | 0 5 0 |
| Wilson, Gibb, & Irwin, 123, Long-lane, Bermondsey | 10 0 0 |
| John Ingram, 29, City-road | 2 2 0 |
| Joseph Matthews, 19, Somers-place, New-road | 0 10 0 |
| C. E. | 1 0 0 |
| D. Carter, jun., 15, Warrington-place, Camberwell New-road | 1 1 0 |
| Mr. Weyland, 6, Lodge-road, St. John's Wood | 0 7 6 |
| William Bell, 12, King's-terrace, Bagnigge Wells-rd. | 0 5 0 |
| E. Kynneraley, Jamaica Level, Bermondsey | 1 1 0 |
| John Bull, 51, St. Martin's-lane | 1 1 0 |
| J. G. | 1 0 0 |
| David Surry, 13, Oldham gardens, Bagnigge Wells-rd. | 0 3 6 |
| Samuel Hurt, 20, Clarence-gardens, Regent's-park | 0 5 6 |
| J. B. Radale, Burdett-street, Watworth Common | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Sattersfield, jun., Staincliffe, Batley | 1 10 0 |
| William Sattersfield, Height | 2 10 0 |
| Joseph Sattersfield, sen., Kilpinhill | 2 0 0 |
| Jeremiah Sattersfield, do. | 1 10 0 |
| John Sattersfield, jun., do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Sattersfield, sen., do. | 1 10 0 |
| Christopher Oddy, jun., do. | 1 10 0 |
| Henry Senior, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Matthew Senior, Batley | 1 0 0 |
| John Ealey, do. | 0 10 0 |
| James Walker, do. | 1 10 0 |
| John Oddy, Staincliffe | 1 0 0 |
| A poor Man's Mite | 0 5 0 |
| Joseph Birkhead, Staincliffe | 0 10 0 |
| D. D. James, 6, Prince's-street, Stamford-street | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Hutchinson, 5, Bread-street | 1 1 0 |
| A. K., Hackney-road (second subscription) | 1 1 0 |
| D. Watt, 75, Lower Marsh, Lambeth | 0 2 6 |
| Anonymous | 0 2 6 |
| Anonymous | 0 5 0 |
| Kemp Berry, Islington, per Roger Cunliffe, jun. | 5 0 0 |
| Alex. Gilchrist, 10, Heathcote-street, Gray's-inn-lane | 0 2 6 |
| A Free Trader, Oakham, Surrey | 0 2 6 |
| George Coverdale, 64, Newington-causeway | 0 2 6 |
| Charles Dover, do. | 0 2 6 |
| A. R. Arrott, 68, Torrington-square | 0 5 0 |
| J. Batley, Mill-bridge, near Leeds | 1 0 0 |
| Henry Edgar | 0 2 0 |
| Edward Ellice, Esq., jun., M.P., 130, Park-street | 10 0 0 |
| John Thom, 27, East-lane, Walworth | 0 2 6 |
| Brentford, Fourth (Thomas Layton | 1 0 0 |
| Remittance, Geo. Fagg, Bedford, Middlesex | 1 0 0 |
| per W. Hammond, B. Fagg, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Wilcox, Argyle-place, Regent-street | 1 1 0 |
| A. Aldridge, 119, Tottenham-court-road | 0 2 6 |
| J. W. H. Schaffer, 48, Fenchurch-street | 2 0 0 |
| Small subscriptions | 9 1 0 |
| Rev. D. Blow, St. Mary-street | 5 0 0 |
| Rev. Thos. Loader, do. | 1 0 0 |
| W. A. Cozens, Post-office | 0 2 6 |
| Edward Baker, Old Bank | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Thackwell, Church-street | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Swift | 0 2 6 |

Sheffield, Second Remittance.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, Second Remittance.

| | |
|--|---------|
| Robert Leader, Pittmoor, Sheffield | £1 0 0 |
| Friends of Free Trade, Independent Office | 0 17 6 |
| George Bell, King-street | 2 0 0 |
| Robert Leader, jun., Independent Office | 5 0 0 |
| Mrs. Leader | 2 0 0 |
| John Daniel Leader | 1 0 0 |
| Barth E. Leader | 1 0 0 |
| Robert E. Leader | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Colley, Blue Bell, Jebu-lane | 2 0 0 |
| Charles Burgin, Queen-street | 2 0 0 |
| George Stimson, 10, Watson-walk | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Deakin, Infirmary-lane | 0 2 6 |
| Robert Roper, Broad-street, Park | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Jubb, Rotherham | 1 0 0 |
| George Tricket, Loxley, near | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend, per Jonathan Roebuck | 0 10 0 |
| Robert Taylor, 103, Devonshire-street | 1 0 0 |
| George Holden, Fargate | 1 0 0 |
| John Hall, near Cornish-place | 1 2 0 |
| Elias Shurt, publican, Coalpit-lane, in addition to 10s. subscribed before | 0 10 0 |
| Workmen of J. Watson & Son (2nd subscr.) | 0 10 0 |
| George Shortland, 70, Carver-street | 1 0 0 |
| Benjamin Osborne, 19, Smithfield | 1 0 0 |
| R. Alexander, Sheffield Arms, New Meadow-street (2nd subscription, in addition to 2s. 6d.) | 0 17 6 |
| A Friend, per Thomas Oates | 10 0 0 |
| Isaac Deakin, Ran Moor | 1 0 0 |
| Workmen at the Wicker Iron Works | 1 0 0 |
| John Davenport, Rockingham-street | 2 0 0 |
| John Bradbury, Joiner, Carver-street | 0 10 0 |
| F. Hoole, solicitor | 10 0 0 |
| J. W. Smith, solicitor | 5 0 0 |
| E. Bramley, Town Clerk | 5 0 0 |
| Thomas Oates, Broom Villa | 3 0 0 |
| Another Anti-Ferrand | 0 10 0 |
| Wm. Calvert, 64, Rockingham-street | 1 4 0 |
| Peter Murray, 5, Charles-street | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend, per Miss Brady | 0 5 0 |
| Henry Hiller, South-street | 0 10 0 |
| George Foster, High-street | 1 0 0 |
| Adam Renwick, Fargate | 0 5 0 |
| Isaac Broadhurst, cooper, Paradise-square | 0 2 6 |
| Ashton, Jackson, and Co. | 10 0 0 |
| Mr. Bird, Fargate | 0 2 6 |
| Marshes and Shepherd | 10 0 0 |
| George Turton, surgeon | 3 0 0 |
| Stephenson, Blake, and Co. | 10 0 0 |
| M. Spencer and Son | 5 0 0 |
| Brookes and Son, Rockingham-street | 2 0 0 |
| John Fearn, Allen-street | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Rodgers, at Mr. Thos. Gately's, Ed-ward-street | 1 0 0 |
| Robt. Lingard, Wharnccliffe-side, near Oughti-bridge, Sheffield | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Nesbit, 27, King-street, Plymouth | 0 5 0 |
| John Wilson Hawksworth, Arundel-street | 5 0 0 |
| Erith Brothers, do. | 2 0 0 |
| Benjamin Fox, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Workmen at Wilson Hawksworth and Moss's | 1 0 0 |
| Parke, Hanger, and Co., Charles-street | 1 0 0 |
| J. P. Cutts and Sons, Division-street | 5 5 0 |
| George Crookes, Washington Works | 0 10 0 |
| Workmen at Walker, Wall, and Co.'s | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Falding, Wentworth, near Rotherham | 1 0 0 |
| Francis Moore, do. | 1 0 0 |
| William Poles, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Henry Cooper, do. | 1 0 0 |
| William Beardshall, do. | 1 0 0 |
| George Jackson, Basingthorpe, near | 1 0 0 |
| John Hawthorn, Hoyland, near Barnsley | 1 4 4 |
| Amicus, per R. Solly, Furnival-street | 10 10 0 |
| John Wilson, 50, Fargate | 0 2 6 |
| Philip Unwin, Burgess street | 5 0 0 |
| George Chester, Barker Pool | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Ashmore, Burgess-street | 1 0 0 |
| R. Mellor, Barker Pool | 0 5 0 |
| J. Acton, Union-street | 0 5 0 |
| J. Wilkinson, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Cooper, New-Church-street | 0 10 0 |
| John Grattan, Pinstone-street | 0 5 0 |
| G. Baines, Union street | 0 2 6 |
| Workmen at J. and J. Stevenson's | 1 5 0 |
| A. Tofield, Broom-close, London-road | 1 0 0 |
| J. H. Greaves, Post-office-buildings | 1 0 0 |
| Workmen at Joseph Mappin's | 1 10 0 |
| B. Skidmore, Corn Market | 0 10 0 |
| T. Wilde, Fargate | 1 0 0 |
| John Cam, Eyre-lane | 1 0 0 |
| W. Walton, Trafalgar-street | 0 5 0 |
| Broadhead and Atkin, North-street | 5 0 0 |
| "No. 2, Castle-street" | 0 5 0 |
| Workmen { Samuel Wells | 1 0 0 |
| at { Frederick Berry | 1 0 0 |
| Trafalgar Works. { Thomas Turner | 1 0 0 |
| { John Kay | 1 0 0 |
| { Robert Coates | 1 0 0 |
| Two Friends | 0 5 0 |
| J. Brookhouse, 52, Fargate | 1 0 0 |
| H. Johnson Court, No. 8, Fitzwilliam-street | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend to Liberty | 2 2 0 |
| John Cawthron, 11, Shepherd-street | 0 2 6 |
| Workmen at Hawkesworth, Eyre, and Co.'s | 1 7 0 |
| Workmen at H. Wilkinson & Co.'s, Norfolk-st. | 2 0 0 |
| Edward Liddell, Haymarket | 1 0 0 |
| J. Gladwin, Market-street | 1 10 0 |
| Thomas Turton | 0 5 0 |
| W. Hudson, Royd's Mill | 0 5 0 |
| Per T. Deakin, Infirmary-lane | 0 3 0 |
| Per E. and J. Greaves, Park | 0 8 0 |
| Small sums | 0 8 0 |
| Ashton- { W. Shaw, Furnace Hill, Dukinfield, nr. | 1 0 0 |
| under-Lyue. { Timothy Broadbent | 1 0 0 |
| Robert Ormiston, Saville-row | 10 0 0 |
| Stephen Lowry, Shield-field House | 5 0 0 |
| Edward Whitfield, Quayside | 2 2 0 |
| Joseph Cowen, Blaydon Burn, near | 2 2 0 |
| James Finlay, 46, Pilgrim-street | 2 2 0 |
| T. A. Barnes, Whitburn, near Sunderland | 1 10 0 |
| R. Barrow, High Friar-street | 1 0 |

| Stockport, Second Remittance. | | Glasgow. | | Leicester, Third Remittance. | |
|---|--------|---|---------|---|--------|
| George Hankinson, Gorse Brow | 1 1 0 | Hugh Fulton, 24, Blackfriars-street | 1 1 0 | James Wood, Dodsworth's-court, Briggate | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Bamber, Churchgate | 1 1 0 | Andrew Liddle, 101, Maxwell-street | 1 1 0 | C. Wolf | 10 0 0 |
| Thomas Cheatham, surgeon, Middle Hillgate | 1 1 0 | J. Hoey (Randolph, Elliott, & Co.'s), Centre-st. | 1 2 0 | A few enemies of those who withhold Corn from the Poor, Wortley | 0 12 6 |
| Wm. Horner, Counsellor, near Skipton | 1 1 0 | James Ross and Sons, 18, N. Albion-street | 1 1 0 | Richard Dobblings, Golden Cook Inn, Kirkgate | 0 2 6 |
| Charles Bailey, Gorse Brow | 2 3 0 | William Carswell, N. Frowan-ade | 1 0 0 | Longbottom and Fawcett, Park-lane | 2 3 0 |
| John Clave, 147, Castle-street | 1 1 0 | John Hamilton, Stockwell | 10 0 0 | Beverly and Simpson | 50 0 0 |
| Thomas Brickhill, 12, Travis-lane | 1 1 0 | D. and J. Macdonald and Co., 78, Queen-st. | 10 0 0 | Christopher Heape | 10 0 0 |
| Charles Stewart, 2, Brown-street | 1 1 0 | John Anderson, Renfield-street | 20 0 0 | | |
| John Etchells, Bee Hive | 1 1 0 | J. and T. Brown and Co., 124, Argyle-street | 5 0 0 | | |
| B. H. Cheatham, surgeon, Bridge-street | 1 1 0 | John Macleod, 193, do. | 1 0 0 | | |
| John Trickett, Middle Hillgate | 1 1 0 | Neil Matheson, Eastfield Dye Works, Rutherglen, by | 2 0 0 | | |
| James Shawcross, Princess-street | 1 1 0 | A Friend, per A. Couper | 1 0 0 | | |
| John Wood, Mottram-street | 1 1 0 | Alexander Park, 103, Stockwell | 0 5 0 | | |
| John Hampson, Wellington-road | 10 0 0 | John Anderson, Jun., 44, Adelphi-place | 1 0 0 | | |
| J. L. Cheatham, Middle Hillgate | 1 0 0 | George Watson, 54, West Nile-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| John Sheldarles, Edward-street | 1 2 6 | James Bell, 15, St. Enoch-square | 1 1 0 | | |
| Lawrence Arden, Lower Hillgate | 1 1 0 | Workers of R. G. Finlay and Brothers, Montrose-street | 0 14 0 | | |
| Owen Robinson, Millgate | 1 1 0 | Robert Wylie, jun., and Co., Ingram-street | 2 2 0 | | |
| Robert Taylor, Park Mills | 1 0 0 | George Mitchell, 47, do. | 5 0 0 | | |
| William Helm, Harrison-street | 1 0 0 | Robert Watson and Co., Cochran-street | 10 10 0 | | |
| R. T. Orme, surgeon, Heavily | 1 0 0 | Andrew Wilson, 22, S. Frederick-street | 5 0 0 | | |
| Jabez Bowles, Gorse Brow | 1 1 0 | R. Jameson, 19, S. Hanover-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| Mrs. Bowles, do. | 1 1 0 | J. Shaw, 20, Candleriggs | 0 2 6 | | |
| Wilson Speak, Brunswick-street | 1 1 0 | Neil Shaw, 177, Hope-street | 1 1 0 | | |
| Thomas Birch, Ridgeway-lane | 2 2 0 | Alexander Lamb, 24, Main-street, Anderston | 1 1 0 | | |
| John Cropper, Old-road | 1 1 0 | William Anderson, 35, Buchanan-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| James Storab, New Zealand-road | 1 0 0 | Robert Lamont, 16, St. Enoch-square | 1 0 0 | | |
| John Burgess, Club-house | 1 1 0 | J. W. MacGregor, Jamaica-street | 2 2 0 | | |
| William Nicholson, Woodman Inn | 1 10 0 | Patrick Robertson, 7, Union-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| Mrs. Nicholson, do. | 0 10 6 | William Miller, 170, Argyle-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| Charles Smith, Higher Hillgate | 1 0 0 | J. W. Muirhead, Gordon-street | 1 1 0 | | |
| An Enemy to all Monopolies | 5 0 0 | A. W. Nicholson, Antigua-place | 1 0 0 | | |
| A Friend, Underbank | 1 1 0 | Walter Wilson, 43, King-street | 1 1 0 | | |
| A Friend | 1 1 0 | Andrew Gray, 15, S. Portland-street | 1 1 0 | | |
| A Cheshire Farmer | 0 5 0 | Walter Paterson, 4, Ingram-street | 10 0 0 | | |
| To promote Peace and Goodwill | 0 5 0 | Thomas Mitchell, 76, Virginia-street | 10 10 0 | | |
| Wm. Wright, Lancashire Hill | 0 5 0 | David McKinlay, 113, Brunswick-street | 10 0 0 | | |
| James Robinson, Hall-street | 0 5 0 | Robert Shaw, 69, Ingram-street | 2 2 0 | | |
| James Oakes, Castle-street | 0 5 0 | John Kerr, 14, Garthland-street | 2 2 0 | | |
| James Siddall, Etchells's-street | 0 10 6 | Donald McIntyre, 20, Brunswick-place | 1 0 0 | | |
| Joseph Cheatham, Mile-end | 0 2 6 | Robertson and Co., 12, Hutcheson-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| Nathaniel Calvert, Crowther-street | 0 2 6 | Hutcheson and Witherspoon, 34, do. | 1 0 0 | | |
| Joseph Bickerton, Brunswick-street | 1 0 0 | James Harvey, 113, Brunswick-street | 0 5 0 | | |
| William Gill, 9, Hope-street | 1 0 0 | John Stewart, 62, do. | 0 5 0 | | |
| Bam. Gosling, 62, Hope-hill-brow | 1 0 0 | George McFarlan, 44, Hutcheson-street | 0 10 0 | | |
| Joseph Smith, Travis-brow | 1 0 0 | Turner and Park, 10, do. | 0 5 0 | | |
| John Fowden, Brinnington Lodge | 1 1 0 | Alexr. Smyth and Co., 29, W. George-street | 80 0 0 | | |
| Robert McClure, Bower House | 10 0 0 | John Walker, George-place | 1 0 0 | | |
| William Fleming, Underbank | 2 2 0 | Jas. McClelland, 128, Ingram-street | 10 0 0 | | |
| John Bramall, Millgate | 5 0 0 | The Rev. Dr. Heugh, 126, Montrose-street | 1 1 0 | | |
| George Bramall, do. | 5 0 0 | Walter Hamilton, Kilmay, Stirlingshire | 1 1 0 | | |
| George Wild, Market-place | 3 3 0 | Alexr. Grahame, 105, St. Vincent-street | 1 1 0 | | |
| George Chapman Underbank | 3 3 0 | Jeffray and Gunnison, 85, Candleriggs | 1 1 0 | | |
| George Smith, Hope-hill | 2 2 0 | Thomas Kyle, 40, St. Vincent-place | 2 2 0 | | |
| John Adamson, Market-place | 2 2 0 | Archd. Sands, 20, Buchanan-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| Mrs. Adamson, do. | 1 1 0 | A. M. | 0 2 6 | | |
| Samuel Walker, Chestergate | 2 2 0 | Shadrach Robison, 16, Argyle-street | 1 1 0 | | |
| W. R. Potts, Hillgate | 5 0 0 | Charles Robertson, 37, Montrose-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | James Scott, 3, Clyde-terrace | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | "One of the Whipped" | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | David Goodwill | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | John Dalton, merchant | 5 0 0 | | |
| | | Wm. Holmes, tanner | 5 0 0 | | |
| | | Geo. Malcolm and Son, merchants | 5 0 0 | | |
| | | John Spink, 24, Wincolmler | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | Henry Spink, do. | 0 2 6 | | |
| | | Alfred Spink, do. | 0 1 0 | | |
| | | "A drop of the £100,000" | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | B. Adamson, Durham Ox, Blanket-row | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | James Wilson, Osborne-street | 0 2 6 | | |
| | | Richard Johnson, Scale-lane | 0 2 6 | | |
| | | Christopher Simpson, Whitefriar-gate | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | Jos. Waltham, Cottingham, near | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | Chas. Miller, 20, Hook-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | T. Thompson and Son, merchants | 25 0 0 | | |
| | | H. F. S. | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | John Robinson, 13, Lister-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | Brownlow, Pearson, and Co., merchants | 25 0 0 | | |
| | | Henry Smith, merchant | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | W. H. Bell, do. | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | Joseph Storr, Oustwick, near | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | J. G. Hood, Heale | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | Wm. Collinson, sharebroker (2nd subscription) | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | Benj. Gunnell | 0 5 0 | | |
| | | James Mellor, 7, Water-street | 100 0 0 | | |
| | | Thomas Harvey, 1, Exchange-buildings | 50 0 0 | | |
| | | Sir Joshua Walsley 14, Brunswick-street | 50 0 0 | | |
| | | Charles Sharp, 9, Church-street | 5 0 0 | | |
| | | W. B. | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | S. M. Bulley, Virginia-hdgs., South Chapel-st. | 1 1 0 | | |
| | | Thomas Witter, 10, Islington | 0 10 0 | | |
| | | John Haselden, 32, Castle-street | 5 0 0 | | |
| | | Thomas Kidd, 59, Eldon-place | 0 5 0 | | |
| | | A Shipowner | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | Henry Armstrong, Villiers-street | 1 1 0 | | |
| | | Edward Backhouse, jun., Ashburne | 2 0 0 | | |
| | | John Robson, Church-street, High-street | 0 5 0 | | |
| | | W. Dixon, High-street | 0 5 0 | | |
| | | R. Todd, do. | 0 5 0 | | |
| | | George Mitchell, do. | 0 2 6 | | |
| | | W. Dewar, Green-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | P. Kearney, Bridge | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | Provost Nicol | 2 2 0 | | |
| | | Charles Lee, manufacturer | 2 2 0 | | |
| | | R. and J. Wisemann, druggists | 2 2 0 | | |
| | | David Adamson, Burntark | 2 0 0 | | |
| | | Thomas Arnot, Chapel | 2 2 0 | | |
| | | Dr. Guthrie, Newburgh | 2 0 0 | | |
| | | Baile Hain | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | M. C. W. Aytoun, Furlin | 10 0 0 | | |
| | | A Friend to Commerce | 2 2 0 | | |
| | | R. Tullis and Co., Auchmuty and Rothes | | | |
| | | Paper-mills | 15 0 0 | | |
| | | Mr. Lawson, manufacturer, Rettle | 5 5 0 | | |
| | | The Guildry of Cupar | 2 2 0 | | |
| | | George Moon, Russel-mill | 2 2 0 | | |
| | | Wm. Smith and Son, manufacturers | 2 2 0 | | |
| | | A Landowner, per Geo. S. Tullis | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | Mr. Cousin, china merchant | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | Francis Deare, farmer, Falkland | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | John Ritchie, builder, Strathmiglo | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | George Thomson, Wellbank, do. | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | William Bonimers, Austruther | 0 5 0 | | |
| | | Wm. Murray, draper, do. | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | J. G. Stewart, Balgonie-mills, Markinch | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | James Smart, Balgonie, Markinch, and others | 1 5 6 | | |
| | | Dr. Taylor, Auchtermuchty; self and others | 1 5 0 | | |
| | | Anti-Corn-Law Association, Pittenweem | 2 10 0 | | |
| | | A Springfield determined Free-Trader | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | George Robertson | 0 2 6 | | |
| | | Another Cupar Friend to Commerce | 0 10 0 | | |
| | | A St. Andrew's Free-Trader | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | A Landowner, yet a Leaguer | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | Cupar Reading-room | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | Wm. Innes, draper | 0 10 0 | | |
| | | Alex. Honeyman, do. | 0 10 0 | | |
| | | Robert Mitchell, do. | 1 0 0 | | |
| | | Thos. Greig, baker | 0 10 6 | | |
| | | John Wilkie, watchmaker | 0 5 0 | | |
| | | John Anderson, grocer | 0 5 0 | | |
| | | Matthew Murdoch, manufacturer | 0 5 0 | | |
| | | Thomas Henderson, draper | 0 5 0 | | |
| | | Wm. Beveridge, confectioner | 0 2 6 | | |
| | | Jos. Fleming, grocer | 0 2 6 | | |
| | | A Friend | 0 5 0 | | |
| | | Balance of Admission Tickets | 2 10 11 | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |
| | | | | | |

| | | |
|---|----|----|
| W. R. L. | 1 | 0 |
| Mr. Bigne, Union-street | 1 | 0 |
| Mr. A. Hook, do. | 1 | 0 |
| Mr. Marlow, do. | 0 | 5 |
| F. and W. Southall, Bull-street | 0 | 0 |
| A. B. Oppenheimer, Great Charles-street | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Clark, Edgbaston | 20 | 0 |
| W. L. Sergeant, Edmund-street | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Kaim, Mr. Wright's, Bradford-street | 1 | 0 |
| Thomas Groot, do. | 0 | 10 |
| Richard Peyton, Bristol-road | 0 | 0 |
| Edward Collins, Newland-street | 0 | 0 |
| Per G. Kirby, Stag's Head, Summer-lane. | 1 | 0 |
| W. Wrighton, New-street | 1 | 0 |
| Thomas Cox, at Mr. Wrighton's, New-street | 1 | 0 |
| Samuel Kendrick, Haddow | 20 | 0 |
| John Pritchard, Caroline-street | 0 | 0 |
| K. Shingler, Bull-street | 1 | 0 |
| A Friend | 2 | 0 |
| George Ashford, Mass House-lane | 1 | 0 |
| H. Dwyer | 0 | 2 |
| Mr. Froeth, Temple-street | 1 | 1 |
| Mr. Allport, Colmore-row | 1 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 10 |
| Joseph Hincks, George-street | 1 | 0 |
| J. B. Mott, St. Paul's-square | 0 | 10 |
| C. T. Lutwyche, Cox-street | 1 | 0 |
| Mr. Shensone, Caroline-street | 1 | 0 |
| Joseph Taylor, do. | 1 | 0 |
| Mr. Uood, do. | 1 | 0 |
| Mr. Brown, do. | 1 | 0 |
| Barwell and Co., James-street | 0 | 10 |
| Thomas Aston, Regent's-place | 2 | 2 |
| George Unite, do. | 0 | 10 |
| Collins and Son, do. | 1 | 0 |
| Collected by Messrs. Prime and Dealey from 46 persons in small sums | 4 | 14 |
| Thomas Perkins, Spical-street | 5 | 0 |
| John Walters, Exeter-row | 1 | 1 |
| James Meredith, Colmore-row | 5 | 0 |
| Thomas Whitehouse, Fisher-street | 1 | 0 |
| A. B. C. | 0 | 10 |
| Mr. Rooke, Great Charles-street | 1 | 0 |
| Joseph Rawlings, Deritend | 2 | 0 |
| Gaskins and Winder, Suffolk-street | 5 | 0 |
| Mrs. Pritchard, Caroline-street | 1 | 0 |
| Griffiths and Hopkins's Work-people | 1 | 2 |
| Newstead and Barnett, Bennett's-hill | 10 | 0 |
| W. Jenking, sen., Broad-street | 2 | 2 |
| John Cornforth, Dartmouth-street | 5 | 0 |
| William Harrison, Fisher-street | 5 | 0 |
| H. Fielding, Great Hampton street | 2 | 0 |
| Mrs. Maria Knight, Ann-street | 1 | 0 |
| T. B. Lee, Newhall-street | 10 | 0 |
| Timmins and Son, Hurst-street | 2 | 0 |
| Taylor and Co., Cherry-street | 2 | 2 |
| John Field, Moseley-street | 1 | 0 |
| William Hoyle, Soapworks, Smethwick | 2 | 0 |
| James Boyle, do. | 1 | 0 |
| T. F. Jones, Cecil-street | 1 | 0 |
| Evans and Fisher, Moor-street | 2 | 0 |
| D. Harcourt, Bristol-street | 1 | 0 |
| Chas. Gracie, Birmingham and Midland Bank | 30 | 0 |
| C. M. Evans, Edmund street | 1 | 1 |
| Joseph Edwards, Hall Farm, Solihull | 1 | 0 |
| L. Lloyd, Broad-street | 1 | 0 |
| T. Kempson, Fazley-street Mills | 0 | 10 |
| Mr. Smith's Men, Whittall-street, per George Hood | 1 | 0 |
| John Cowley, Kilsley Lodge, near Daventry, farmer | 1 | 0 |
| Small sums | 0 | 8 |

RHATA.

In the LEAGUE, No. 21, "Andrew Mellor, 60, North-bridge, Edinburgh 33 3s." was omitted; and for James Brown, Smithy-place, Edinburgh 41, read 41 1s.

SIGNAL DEFEAT OF THE MONOPOLISTS.

(From the Somerset County Gazette.)

The landowners, land occupiers, and other inhabitants of Somerset having requested the High Sheriff to convene a meeting "to take into consideration the propriety of opposing, by the most efficient measures, an association called the Anti-Corn-Law League," that worthy officer appointed the meeting to be held at Bridgwater (Friday, the 16th instant), and it took place accordingly.

Early in the morning large numbers of farmers and others proceeded from Wellington and Taunton, and other parts of the county, to Bridgwater, by railway, and the occasion was one of great interest and excitement.

A band of music, with flags and banners, having Free-trade mottoes inscribed on them, paraded the town during the morning, and tended in some degree to the enlivenment of the town.

There were many country gentlemen present at the meeting; we observed upon the platform Sir A. Hood, Bart., E. A. Sandford, Esq., Sir T. B. Lethbridge, Bart., T. D. Acland, Esq., Capt. Strachy, R. K. M. King, Esq., P. St. J. Milmay, Esq., Rev. Mr. Jolliffe, Rev. Mr. Thring, *W. Beadon, Esq., the Hon. P. P. Bouvart, Francis Popham, Esq., Charles P. Collins, Esq., Capt. Norris, *W. H. G. Langton, Esq., J. G. W. Carew, Esq., Rev. Mr. Barnard, J. W. Warren, Esq., Rev. W. Thomas, Dr. Macmillan, Jeffries Kadale, Esq., Henry Badcock, Esq., *Andrew Crosse, Esq., Henry Warre, Esq., *Capt. Browne, R.N., Col. Luttrell, Lee Lee, Esq., Henry Charles Trenchard, Esq., *John Browne, Esq., *Edridge, Esq., Mayor of Bath; Langley St. Alban, Esq., *Edward Sealy, Esq., Edward Coles, Esq., Edward Beadon, Esq., Sir Geo. Adams, K.C.H., Rev. R. Beadon, H. D. Harvey, Esq., Capt. Keats, &c. &c.

The High Sheriff, the Hon. P. P. Bouvart, accompanied by the Under Sheriff and other gentlemen, took the chair at 12 o'clock, at which time the Cornhill was thronged by tenant-farmers, tradesmen, and labourers.

The High Sheriff then requested the Under Sheriff to read the notice calling the meeting, which being done, the High Sheriff said, having the requisition, he felt it his duty to comply with the request therein contained, and convene the meeting then assembled. He trusted that in the discussion which was about to take place, on a subject deeply interesting to all classes and all individuals, they would attend without interrupting the speakers. (Cheers.) He would not take up their time more than to express a hope that they would listen quietly and calmly to the gentlemen who were prepared to address them. (Cheers.)

JOHN HANCOCK, Esq., moved the first resolution, and observed, that he came forward because he was a farmer of the county of Somerset—a small landowner and a considerable occupier. (Hear, hear.) He had made agriculture generally his study for the last fifty years, and he did think that some amount of protection was necessary to the agricultural prosperity. In the first place they had the Church to maintain (cheers and a laugh); they had poor-rates to pay, and they had way-rates to pay; he contended that they ought to have protection to enable them to meet those payments, which the foreign growers were not called upon to meet. (Hear.) Mr. Hancock having argued that the abolition of the present protection would reduce the wages of the labourer, and that it was the duty of all who were interested in agriculture to petition that it might not be given up, read the resolution, expressive of decided conviction that the repeal of the Corn Law would be highly prejudicial, if not ruinous, to British agriculture. (Cheers.)

* Free Traders.

Mr. ALEXANDER HOOD said, he was proud to have the honour of seconding the motion which had been moved by an honourable and well-known yeoman of the county of Somerset, one who had grown grey in the occupation of an agriculturist, and who was always anxious to do good to his fellow-men, whether tradesmen or labourers. (Cheers.) Why am I here (said the hon. baronet)? Because I read in a letter from one of the principal individuals connected with the Anti-Corn-Law League, the paragraph which I shall have the honour to read to you; you will see, then, whether I am justified or not in seconding the proposal so ably made to you. "The Corn Laws may be repealed by clamour and by force." (Uproar, and cries of "You took that from a Tory paper.") There it is, they may be repealed by clamour. "And so they must be repealed, unless they fall before the calmly-expressed will of the millions." (A voice, "The millions are starving.") Now, it strikes me, said the hon. baronet, that this partakes very much of threats and robbery (no, no), and that is one reason why I am here to-day. (The hon. baronet then indulged in a tirade against the League, copying much of the language of the temperate Lord Winchelsea, whose recent speech at the Lincolnshire meeting, full of sound and fury, had not appeared in the columns of the Morning Post.) He contended that England was emerging from her manufacturing difficulties; that the mill-autocrat was receiving for his manufacture an average profit of 18 per cent, while the farmers were receiving only their 8 or 10 per cent; that the average protection on corn for the past twenty years, putting rent aside, had ranged from 13s. to 45s. per quarter; and he asked where would the British farmer be now but for that protection? (A voice, "Where is he now?") He would have taken his place with the serfs in Germany long since. After some further observations, in the course of which the hon. baronet turning to Mr. Sandford, said, "I am proud to offer my right hand to you, Sir (laughter), and (turning to Sir T. Lethbridge) you, Sir." (Roars of laughter and loud cheering,) he concluded by calling on the country gentlemen to subscribe, in order to counteract the efforts of the League, and seconding the resolution.

WILLIAM BEADON, Esq., then stood forward, and was received with loud cheers. Silence having been obtained, he said:—Mr. High Sheriff and gentlemen, I have come forward for the purpose of moving an amendment to the resolution which has been put to you—an amendment which, I believe, will receive the approbation of the majority of this great and influential meeting. [Some noise having been created at this time, Mr. B. declared that he would be heard though they should stay there all night; and, though he was frequently interrupted in the course of his address, he was pretty successful in making himself heard throughout.] And, gentlemen, if there be one individual in this vast assembly whose warm, whose earnest, and energetic support I expect to receive more than any other, it is that of the hon. baronet, Sir Thomas Lethbridge, the promoter, if not the originator, of this meeting. (Cheers.) I shall call upon him to support me when I shall have read this resolution, and for this reason—now, I have a great respect for Sir Thomas, and I call upon him to support me because my amendment to the resolution embodies sentiments with which I know that hon. gentleman fully accords. Before I proceed to read the resolution to you I shall trouble you with a few brief remarks. I shall appeal to your common sense. I shall not trouble or fatigue you with dry and uninteresting statistics; and if I do not carry conviction to your minds, the fault will not be in the matter, but the man. ("Hear," and cheers.) I shall not insult your understanding, or trifle with your patience, by endeavouring to refute all the arguments (if they deserve the dignity of that term), all the fallacies, all the high-flown rhetoric you have heard, in supporting my resolution. I shall appeal to the common sense of the people, and then we shall see who is wrong and who is right. (Cheers.) What are those fallacies? Such as your undoubted champions in the House of Parliament—such as not even your representatives of West or East Somerset—not even they would venture to bring forward in the House of Commons, because it would be, perhaps, at the risk of their reputation, and at the risk of ridicule and contempt. (Tremendous cheering.) Gentlemen, they are afraid to do it. What are you invited here for this day? Why, you are invited, tenant-farmers and inhabitants of the county of Somerset, to oppose that ugly, that unconstitutional body, as it is called, the Anti-Corn-Law League! (Cheers.) You are asked to support (I have no wish to abuse your minds on this point)—to support things as they are—the sliding scale. ("No, no," from Sir Thomas Lethbridge.) Some of you have talked of a fixed duty. I have seen the sliding-scale men shake hands with fixed-duty men on this hustings; but don't be taken by this clap-net. (Hear, hear.) You who vote for a fixed duty will be voting for the sliding scale. You are called upon to support the "no surrender" party. Now, I ask if there is any one individual in this assembly so credulous as to believe that, with a population increasing at the rate of 1000 per day, it is possible the sliding scale will last? Does Sir Thomas believe it? ("No, no," from Sir Thomas.) Your leaders affect to be satisfied with the late declaration of the Government; and what is that declaration? What has Sir Robert Peel told you and the landowners?—that Government does not contemplate any alteration in the existing Corn Laws; but Sir Robert Peel says "I won't say but what it may be possible." (Hear, hear.) Why do the landowners affect to be satisfied with this declaration? Because, I suspect, they are anxious to create a feeling in the mind of Sir Robert Peel and her Majesty's Government, that they, the landowners, have at last extracted a pledge from them—their wish is father to the thought. But are you satisfied with such a declaration?—(loud cries of "no")—you, the tenant farmers? (Faint cries of "Yes.") Well, then, you are satisfied, perhaps, some of you, the landowners are. Then if no alteration is to be made in this law—if you are satisfied with the declaration of the Government—why are you called here this day?

Sir T. LETHBRIDGE: To oppose the League, to show where it is wrong.

Mr. BEADON: Now it is not to prevent the League from going any farther, but because your masters do not feel secure. (Cheers.) The real object of this meeting is, to coerce the unwilling Minister. ("No, no," from Sir T. Lethbridge.) It is for the sliding scale or nothing; and that Minister has declared that he will have the sliding scale or nothing. (Hear, hear.) And let me tell you, who depend on this rope of sand, that he will trip you up at the first opportunity. You are asked to subscribe your money. You have just been told that you have none, and still you are asked to subscribe.

Sir A. HOOD: Give me leave to answer that. I distinctly disclaim having said so; but, gentlemen, I would say, as I have said before, that if the landowners do not come forward and do so, they deserve not to have an acre of land to stand upon.

Mr. BEADON: I repeat, gentlemen, that you are asked to subscribe your money, and I ask you, for what object? We are simply told to-day that it is for the sake of petitioning the House of Commons and the legislative bodies of the kingdom. Now, petitions do not cost much. I have a petition here (which I hope to carry by-and-by) which will not cost a farthing. Why, then, is the money wanted? There is some ulterior object in it (hear, hear); something that does not appear. But let me advise you to keep your money in your pockets. Perhaps you will say, "We will send lecturers into the towns." (No, no.) I should think not. If you send lecturers into the towns, you shall have lecturers from the Anti-Corn-Law League accompanying them. If you send your tracts, the steam-engines of Manchester will overwhelm you with tons of answers. (Cheers.) Lord Worsley, who was a member of the London Agricultural Protection Society, withdrew his subscription from that, because the tracts which that society published were worse than useless, and because all the money had been spent in the support of clerks. (Hear, hear.) What will be the effect of your meeting this day, even if you succeed? Why, at best, tenant-farmers of Somerset, it will be but to postpone the settlement of this question which is of the most vital importance to you, and which ought to be settled at once. Your money will go in support of the Income Tax, which is the offspring of the Corn Laws. Now, let the landowners subscribe for themselves; but let me advise you to keep your money in your pockets, and do not stultify yourselves by coming to this meeting for the purpose of abolishing one unconstitutional body by establishing another. Let me advise you, tenant-farmers, if you really believe this body is unconstitutional, to petition the Queen to issue a proclamation to put down the ugly monster. (Cheers.) But they do not advise these things; they have other objects in view. If your plans are futile, if your plans are useless, if ineffectual, I ask what ground you have for placing confidence in your leaders? (Hear.) Now, mark the consistency of the bulk of that party which, in the days of Adam Smith, petitioned against turnpike-roads. They opposed turnpike-roads because they were injurious to the interests of agriculture; and the landlords who resided within a short distance of London actually petitioned the Legislature not to allow turnpike-roads, because the produce of the country would flow in upon London, and all the landowners would be ruined. ("Hear," and laughter.) What are the facts? London has been rising from that day to this. (Cheers.) They are the same party who, when the Catholic Emancipation Bill was brought forward, opposed that measure; they predicted that the nation would swim in blood, that the Church and State would be swallowed up, and nothing but popery would exist. Gentlemen, what are the facts? Why, the Church now boasts that it never was so strong as it is at this moment. (Hear.) It is the same party who opposed the anti-slavery movement, and argued that we should have no sugar—that the unfortunate negro would not work,—that he would rise up against his master,—that it was not intended by the Almighty for him to be on a level with his fellow-white, but that he was to work in chains to the last. (Hear.) Since the abolition of slavery took place, what has been the fact? We have sugar, and I hope we shall have it cheaper by and by than it is; and every assertion which they made has been contradicted. (Cheers.) It is the same party who, when Mr. Huskisson—(now, farmers, I ask you to listen to this)—it is the same party who, when that minister proposed to reduce the duty on wool from 6d. to 1d., told us there would be no flock-masters, that they would be ruined; and I now appeal to Sir Thomas Lethbridge himself, who said that the sheepwalks of Wiltshire and Dorsetshire would be valueless, who told us that we should have no mutton, and that a sheep would be a curiosity. ("Hear," and cheers.) Why, the hon. baronet went up as a deputation from you, the farmers, to endeavour to prevent the reduction of that duty. It is the same party who, when railways were proposed, told you that if the railways were established the agricultural interest would be ruined—that there would be no horses to eat the oats. But what is the fact? I rather suspect that oats are one of the best articles you have for sale. (A voice—"It is as good as any.") It is the same party who, when the Corn Law of 1815 was proposed, told you, the farmers, that wheat must be kept at 80s. per quarter, or that land would be thrown out of cultivation; whereas the fact is, that within five short years—in 1820—it sank to 40s. per quarter. (Hear, hear.) I could go through a whole field of such instances as these to show the incapacity of your leaders; but I will not occupy your time by doing so. To crown all, it was the same party who asked your votes—you, the tenant-farmers of England—in the election of 1841, and pledged themselves to keep things as they were; but the moment they got into the House of Commons they betrayed you to a man. (Hear, hear.) They passed the tariff and the one-sided Canada Corn Bill; and that too with the House of Lords at their back, and a majority of the House of Commons in their favour. But why was this? Because their principles were wrong, and their principles are wrong now. (Cheers.) Your masters still think that land will fall out of cultivation, if we allow the foreigner to come in. These are the men who now ask your confidence in their foresight, their talent, and their integrity. (Hear, hear.) Now, let us contrast what are the Free Traders telling you. We told you the Corn Law of 1815 would derange the currency, be injurious to the farmer, and all the interests of the country; and the numberless applications to Parliament to remove agricultural distress is proof of what I say. (Cheers.) Now, I will take a glance, for one instant, at the sliding scale. What is that doing for you? What does Sir Robert Peel tell you? That corn shall be sold for 55s. per quarter. Now, do the landowners believe it will keep at that? The farmers bargained for their rents at that price; and I ask the landlords, will they prove their sincerity by agreeing to corn-rent? (Hear, hear.) It seems the desire of gentlemen present that I should not proceed with my argument; but I tell you I believe I should convince any man who is uncertain at this moment, because I believe I stand on the rock of principle and truth. (Loud cheers.) It was my intention to have quoted great authorities in support of the views I have taken, but I will not do so. I would quote, however, your own paper, the Mark-lane Express, which says—"It were well for the farmers to consider whether or not they had better come to the point at once." Gentlemen, I desire to avoid anything like personality; but the hon. baronet, Sir T. Lethbridge, for whom I entertain a great respect—and that hon. gentleman will not be angry with me—is one of the authorities which I would quote in support of my views. (Hear, hear.) At the meeting held in Taunton he told us that he had thought protection was needed once, but he did not think so now (hear, hear); and, with regard to the Anti-Corn-Law League, it was composed of a great and intelligent body of men, and that the kingdom was deeply indebted to it; and now he comes here to put it down as an unconstitutional body. (Loud cheers.) But, tenant-farmers, what has the Corn Law done for you? What is your present condition? If you look at last week's bankruptcy list, you will find from the 13th to the 20th of January no less than the names of twelve farmers, the week previous nine, and the week previous to that seven, making together 25. And that with your glorious protection to make you all rich. (Hear, hear.) I tell you that your interest is in the interest of the consumer. If you diminish the power of the labourer to purchase, you diminish your own returns and profits. I will now lastly appeal to you, the unfortunate labourers, put forward to be deluded into support of that iniquitous bread tax. By whom is that tax paid? By the poor. The poor man with his family of eight children, and 6s. or 7s. per week, lives upon bread—(a voice, "Potatoes, not bread")—and potatoes; and what does the man with his £1000 a year? He does not live on bread, he has other food, and it is, therefore, the poor man who feels the iniquitous bread tax. (Cheers.) They come forward and tell you, that if wheat is lowered wages would be also lowered. Why, does not common sense say that full trade is full work, and full work gets full wages? Common sense throws such nonsensical speeches to the winds. (Loud cheers.) In 1786, wheat was sold at 4s. per bushel. (A voice, "And in 1835 and 1836 it was the same.") Now, I ask what were wages? Why, in 1826 wheat sold at 8s., and wages were 8s. a week; so that although wheat rose to 8s. per bushel, your wages remained the same. (Hear, hear.) What is it now, in 1844? Wheat is now 7s. 6d. per bushel, and what are your wages? Six shillings per week, poor, unfortunate labourers, rejoicing in potatoes. Why, gentlemen, here is wheat increased 4s., while the labourers' wages have not increased one farthing. What is the Corn Law doing now? It is a known fact that some of you farmers are beginning to look up a bit. You say times are getting better. Why? Because the dealers in corn are now working upon the averages; and the moment you, with your abundant crops, ask high prices, in comes the bonded corn and floods the market, and down you go again. (Hear, hear.) I appeal to you, landlords, on the grounds of humanity, and to you, tenant-farmers, as you love justice, and as you wish to serve the poor; I appeal to you to hold up your hands against this law, that is ruining you and your customers. I have been taunted with vanity and folly in coming forward on this question; but if it vanities be reckoned with your Radnor, your Westminster, your Cobdens and your Brights, I am proud of it—ay, I am proud to be reckoned with the Langtons; and I tell you that the wealth, the old nobility, is nearly to a man in favour of this movement. I care not for the taunts by which I am assailed. I feel assured that I stand on a pedestal of justice; I feel that I am entrenched and supported by the wrongs of my fellow-countrymen, and with such support I fear not all the world's feudal aristocracy of the land. Mr. Beadon then proposed following amendment to the foregoing resolution:—"That all monopolies, whether for the benefit of landowners or manufacturers, are ungenerous and unjust to the community at large, and especially to the working classes, who have been told by Parliament that there can be no protection for wages. Therefore it is the opinion of this meeting that principles of Free Trade ought to be established by abolishing every commercial and agricultural monopoly, and this meeting adopts the following petition to the two Houses of Parliament, to be signed by the Sheriff on behalf of the meeting."

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled;
The humble petition of the inhabitants of the county of Somerset, assembled in public meeting, convened by the High Sheriff, Sheweth—That your petitioners feel the unequal pressure, and deeply lament the pernicious effects, of the Corn and Provision Laws, believing that these and all other duties on articles of home production are injurious alike to the two great interests of agriculture and commerce, the welfare of the one depending on that of the other.

That your petitioners are convinced that these laws have a most baneful influence on the welfare of the whole community; that they injure the bankers by deranging the currency; oppress the merchants, by the excessive rate of interest; annihilate the profits of the capitalist; reduce to pauperism the industrious artisan and labourer; and that, if persisted in, these destructive laws, by banishing our manufactures to other countries, and throwing upon the soil the entire burden of supporting a destitute, unemployed, and increasing population, will involve the landowners themselves, with every other class, in one common ruin.

Your petitioners, therefore, humbly pray your Honourable House to abolish all duties on articles of home production, and to revise the whole system of taxation, with a view to a more equitable and equitable arrangement.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

Mr. THOMAS PERROTT, of Boroughbridge, said:—I appear here as a farmer and landowner, to second the motion made by Mr. Headon (loud cheers); and I take this opportunity of observing, that I believe the Corn Laws are highly injurious, not only to the manufacturer, not only to the working classes in trade, not only to the working classes in agriculture, but to the tenant-farmers. It does seem strange to me when, after I have attended public meetings in this county as an agriculturist for the last twenty-five years, and have always seen the two parties, Whig and Tory, arrayed one against the other—one thirsting for power, and the other seeking to displace him—to see Sir Alexander Hood coming forward as a high Tory, and shaking hands with Sir Thomas Lethbridge and Mr. Sandford. There is no harm in it, perhaps, but I wish to expose the trick of the two factions. (Loud cheers.) I have lived long enough to see what Tories are, but I never did support them in my life. I own, and with pleasure, that I have supported the Whigs; and I wish that measure of an 8s. fixed duty, which was proposed by the Whigs had been accepted. (Hear, hear.) But what did the Tories do in order to supplant the Whigs? They appealed to the farmers, and made them believe they were their friends. They were never the friends of farmers in their lives. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) I must say that the farmers did flourish under the Whig Administration, never under the Tories, because they were always laying their burdens upon us, and were taxing us from the crowns of our heads to the soles of our feet. (Cheers.) I remember having a conversation with Sir Thomas Lethbridge, in Taunton. Sir Thomas asked me my opinion respecting the Corn Laws. I told him I thought it a great question, and that I could not exactly make up my mind upon it, because the whole of my property consisted of land. I said, "Mr. Sandford wished the sliding scale to continue." "Ay," said Sir Thomas, "my friend Sandford and I do not agree on this question, and I wish to tell you, as an agriculturist, if you drive away the trade from this country, we are done as agriculturists." (Hear, hear, from Sir Thomas.) I have thought a vast deal more since then upon the subject, and from the reports of the House of Commons, and the arguments I have heard, I am convinced thoroughly that the Corn Laws are of no advantage to me. (Cheers.) As a landowner and a considerable occupier, I stand here to say that the sooner they are abolished the better. (Loud cheers.) Sir Robert Peel has given you a beautiful sliding scale. He has told you he is a great friend to the agriculturist; but what has he done? He has opened the backdoor of Canada, and you will find that the corn will "slide" into the British market, and we shall be done unless that backdoor be barred up again. Rent must be reduced. Lower the rents and the British farmer will flourish again. As a practical farmer and a landowner, I know you will give me credit for speaking the truth. It is a mistaken notion altogether, their wanting to carry on the Corn Laws. How can we flourish at the expense of trade. I am a farmer, but not at the lash of the landlord, and what is more than all, I am able to keep my sheepskins at home. (Cheers and laughter.) [A gentleman on the hustings having asked Mr. P. what he meant by that, he said,] I will answer the question:—It is that my property is free from mortgages, property which I have gained by the honest hand of industry, and part of which I am not afraid to make a sacrifice to my fellow-men, if it should be necessary. (Loud cheers.) I do not believe that if the Corn Laws were abolished we should have things down low. They are merely to keep up the taxes, the chief benefit of which goes not to the labourers, not the farmers, not the tradesmen, but I won't mention to what class it goes. (Hear.) Mr. Perrott concluded by expressing a hope that all subsequent speeches would be heard, and by seconding the resolution.

Sir T. B. LETHBRIDGE came forward, and commenced by remarking that he would say but a few words, as those gentlemen who had spoken before him had gone into the matter at great length. One gentleman had read almost a pamphlet to them. He had one in his pocket, with which he could do the same, if he liked; but he did not mean to do so, but would answer that gentleman, if he could, from his recollection. Before he did so, however, he would give him credit for his fair statements, fair play, and good conduct. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) The gentleman who had seconded him (Mr. Perrott) was well known to him (Sir Thomas); he was an honest man, and a landed proprietor, who was fortunate enough to have lived within his means—a very pleasant situation. (Laughter.) He (Sir Thomas) stood there as an Englishman, and as a Somersetshire man; he had stood on the same spot forty years ago advocating the rights and liberties of the people of England, and he had never promised them anything that he had not performed. He was still the friend of the people of England, and the friend of the labouring classes. The people who lived near him could tell them that. He could meet them all, because he had a clean conscience within his breast; and, notwithstanding any abuse, clamour, or indignity, he would endeavour to tell them what he thought was the truth upon this question. (Cheers.) The question was, whether a body, called the Anti-Corn-Law League, should dictate what should be done with laws which were now in existence. The laws were made for all, and they were not to be repealed for some. (Voice, "Who made them?") [Here the honourable baronet indulged in the usual slanders against the League.] Mr. Perrott, who had seconded the motion, had told them that he would not support the present Corn Law because it led to more taxes. Now the taxes were the whole of this question. He did not say the Corn Law was a good thing, or that taxes were good things, but they were necessary evils, which they must bear—they must bear with a little evil, that great good might come. If you had no Corn Laws at this moment with your taxes, the producers of the soil would be compelled to give up producing—it would set up the markets in Germany, France, Spain, and Austria, and indeed all over all the world, while it would destroy my friend's and yours. (Hear, hear.) They had a tariff which was not asked for, and to which, though it did the farmers injury, they submitted in silence. They had also a Canada Corn Bill, which let in corn not only of their own colonies, but from America also. (Hear, hear.) (From the interruption offered to the hon. baronet, and the distance at which he stood from us, we were unable to hear him distinctly; but we understood him to say:—There must be a new construction of the taxes altogether, for at present two-thirds of the taxes rested upon the land; therefore it was that the land was obliged to ask for a Corn Law. When the taxes were put on the right horse, they would find that the Corn Laws were of little use. Two-thirds of the poor-rate rested upon the land, as well as the tithe, the highway and land-tax exclusively. (Hear, hear.) Who should say, then, that the land was not to be protected? Whenever the Government was wise enough to take the bull by the horns, and divide taxation more fairly, they might with a good grace demand the repeal of the Corn Law.

—LAWSON, Esq., said:—It had been his intention to remain a quiet listener, but, after the able speeches which they had heard, he felt called upon to make one or two observations with respect to his father's line of conduct on this great question. He felt quite confident that, whatever might be their differences in political opinion, the generous feelings of the yeomanry and inhabitants would ensure him a patient hearing, while he spoke in the name of one who, by their kind suffrages, once held the high situation of representative for the whole county, and was now one of the representatives for East Somerset. (Cheers.) He would not enter into the merits or demerits of a fixed duty or the sliding scale, still less was it necessary that he should give any explanation of his father's opinion of the Corn Laws. (Loud cheers.) If any doubt existed as to what his opinions were, he had lately embodied them in an address to his constituents, and which he had no doubt many of those present had seen. The principles which his father declared he had always advocated were those of a firm and unflinching friend of Free Trade. Comment had been made upon that address by the monopolists, and the writer had been called the farmers' foe; he (Mr. L.) appealed to the meeting—did he deserve that appellation. (No, no.) The confidence which they had so long reposed in him, and the confidence which was still placed in him, was the best answer to the slander. No, call him not the farmers' foe, for he had always endeavoured to prove himself the farmers' and the labourers' friend. In 1815 he opposed the Corn Law, and in 1811 he was returned their representative in Parliament. (Cheers.) Nearly thirty years had since elapsed, and what had been the result of the so-called protection? He declared, and spoke his father's sentiments when he said, his father would have rejoiced to find that he had been wrong in his expectations of the working of those laws—that, contrary to his expectation, they had been beneficial to the agriculturists, the tenant-farmers, and labourers of this country. (Cheers.) But what had been the result? He appealed to them. Had prosperity attended agriculture? Had the farmers made their fortunes; or were they now making them? (Hear, hear.) No, their capital was yielding less and less every year, while the condition of the labourers was growing worse and worse daily. (A voice—"That's true, sir.") Could any one who, like his father, derived the greater part of his income from land, be indifferent to the prosperity of agriculture? Long experience had shown him the danger of class legislation to the bonds which united the agricultural and manufacturing interests. (Cheers.) This meeting was ostensibly called to oppose the League, but he thought it was rather intended to uphold the system under which trade and commerce had languished, which threatened to raise class against class, and perpetuate divisions throughout this once great, because united, people. (Cheers.) His father cordially differed from the sentiments uttered by Sir Alexander Hood and Mr. Hancock, and as cordially agreed in those which had been delivered by Mr. Headon and Mr. Perrott. (Loud cheers.)

The Rev. Mr. THURNO said he had never before, on any similar occasion, presumed to obtrude himself on their notice. He should not attempt to follow the honourable gentleman near him through the many fallacies and assumptions which had characterized his speech, inasmuch as they carried in themselves their own refutation; but to one observation of the gentleman at his left (Mr. Perrott), he begged to call the attention of the meeting. He had said that this was only a landlords' question. He would say, in answer, that it was more a tenants' question than a landlords'. He had called upon the farmers to look to their leaders; he thought the farmers were their leaders, and they were proud to follow them.

The resolutions in favour of the Corn Laws and Free Trade respectively, were here read, and a show of hands taken for each. The numbers were two to one in favour of the latter. The High Sheriff, however, who from his situation could not command the whole assembly, and judging only from that portion of it which was before him, decided that the majority were in favour of the Pro-Corn-Law resolution. The decision excited great surprise, and an altercation ensued, the High Sheriff refusing to take a second show of hands.

E. A. SANDFORD, Esq., made several ineffectual attempts to be heard respecting the High Sheriff's decision. We understood him to say, that the High Sheriff, before he came to the meeting, had seen the petition which he (Mr. Sandford) was about to present to their notice; and the High Sheriff declared that it was his intention to request some friend of his in the House of Commons to say, that he did not agree with the petition. Under these circumstances, and seeing the state of the meeting, he should move, in accordance with the resolution which the meeting had adopted, that the petition be signed by the Sheriff, and presented to the House of Parliament, for which purpose he now placed it in the hands of the High Sheriff.

Mr. HENRY BLANDFORD, of Weston Bampton, seconded the motion of Mr. Sandford, as a renting farmer.

Capt. STRACHY asked if, in case of a difference of opinion in a show of hands, it was not usual to call for a division. He thought a division would be the most satisfactory way of settling the present difference. (Hear.)

The HIGH SHERIFF said he had decided according to his own judgment; but, if there were precedents as to dividing after a show of hands had been taken, he had no objection to follow them. (Cheers.)

Some time elapsed without the High Sheriff deciding on the course which he would adopt, and

J. BROWNE, Esq., came forward and proposed the petition for Free Trade, without reference to the amendment with which it had before been connected. Mr. Browne said the subject for consideration was between the landowners and those who did not own land—it was a question between the landlords on the one side, and the tenant-farmer, the manufacturer, and the labourer on the other. There had not been on the side of the monopolists a single argument produced in support of the Corn Law, but the landlords had convened this meeting in the hope of being enabled to extort a vote for their exclusive benefit. (Hear, hear.) The grounds on which the landlords claimed protection was, that they had to educate their sons, and their estates were encumbered with mortgages, and they had the church to support. These were the grounds on which the rich, the high, and the influential gentlemen asked for the votes of the inhabitants in favour of the Corn Laws (hear, hear); laws more detrimental, more wicked, and more vicious, especially in their influence on the poor, than any that ever existed under any government. (Cheers.) He did protest most solemnly, that in his belief the Corn Laws were the main reason why the poor were so ground down. He hoped he should not be misunderstood. There were many among the landowners who had great sympathy and kindness for the poor, but he did believe that they mistook their duty towards others as well as towards themselves. (Cheers.) It was said the land must be protected. Why? Must the owner of hundreds of acres be protected against the poor wretch who had not a rood. (Hear, hear.) Mr. Browne then proceeded to show that the Corn Laws were of no service to the tenants, but quite the reverse, and concluded a lengthened and excellent speech, which we regret our space will not allow us to insert, amid enthusiastic cheering.

ANDREW CROSS, Esq., said, in coming forward to second the proposition of Mr. Browne, he was sorry he could not agree with his brother landowners on this momentous question. He was sure they were mistaken. The time would come, and was come, when they must take a very much wider view of the matter than they had been in the habit of taking. (Cheers.) Did not each country excel in its particular manufacture or produce, and would it not be to the advantage of the whole earth that there should be universal Free Trade in everything? (Loud cheers.) As the sun shone and the rain fell for the good of all, so ought trade to be entirely free. That there were some minor difficulties in the way of Free Trade he was ready to allow; the currency question, which should be taken into consideration, as well as others.

The HIGH SHERIFF then read the two petitions, and took a show of hands for each. That which we insert above, praying that the principles of Free Trade may be carried into full effect, was carried in the proportion of about four to one. The result was received with tremendous cheering.

Mr. TURNER, of Bath, a farmer renting land to the extent of nearly 4000 per annum, proposed the following resolution:—"That in the opinion of this meeting the gratitude and thanks of the people of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland are justly due to the Anti-Corn-Law League, for their unwearying exertions in diffusing a knowledge of political economy, and for their endeavours to abolish the Corn Law, and establish the principle of Free Trade." Mr. Turner said he stood there convinced that what he was doing was for the good of himself and agriculturists generally. The farmers knew that they received not the least advantage from the Corn Law, and he was himself a great sufferer from them, having taken his estate at a high rent, while almost ever since the price of agricultural produce had been very low.

Mr. CHARLES SUMMERS, also a large farmer, seconded the motion, which was carried by acclamation.

T. D. AGLAND, Esq., proposed a vote of thanks to the High Sheriff, which, being seconded, the High Sheriff acknowledged the compliment, and the meeting separated.

CENTRAL AGRICULTURAL PROTECTION SOCIETY.

(From the Times of Wednesday.)

It has long been a matter of regret to all who like to see things well matched and fitted that the "League" has not yet fallen in with a respectable and suitable antagonist. That most pugnacious of knight-errants has too long been permitted to fling about challenges before sympathetic audiences, and provoke the void air to disputation. The desideratum, we now rejoice to say, is in a fair way of being supplied. Yesterday witnessed the first actual steps towards an Anti-League—a grand combination of numbers, money, wisdom, and eloquence, competent to fight the League on its own ground of popular agitation. As the new body has not yet quite emerged from the alluvial mud and artificial compost in which it has been engendered, it may, perhaps, be premature to announce positively its final organization, name, and functions. At present it is known as an intended "Central Agricultural Protection Society."

The object of this new creation is noble and comprehensive. One can hardly venture to say what it does not embrace. It is nothing less than "to protect the most important interests of the country," as we are informed on high legal authority; and if the view seem a little narrowed when we find in the second resolution that its object is to maintain protection for British agriculture, at least equivalent to that at present existing, we may rest assured this latter object is only a means to an end.

That some larger and more popular design is intended than ever yet was conceived in the timid and bashful bosom of agriculture may be inferred from the plans and the agents now adopted. The "farmers' friend," the pride of yeomen, the noble Chandos, is now but "the shadow of poor Buckingham,"—in fact, he is reduced to play the second fiddle to the more political and economical Duke of Richmond. The subordinate agents also appear to be of a rather more active and versatile class than the dull indigenous English farmer. A slight doubt hangs over their real qualifications for the office; but this is covered by an important hint, that they will be abundantly supplied with the sinews of war—to what exact extent, and from whom, it would of course be impertinent to inquire. But something deeper and darker remains to be told. Whether because there happens to be a panic just now among political associations, or because there really is some wonderful scheme of agricultural "repeal" in contemplation, certain it is this new body suspects itself. It recoils from its own shadow. Frightened by its consciousness of concentrated ability and intense determination, or perhaps at its own numbers, it has recourse to a lawyer to assuage its terrors, and confesses to him its hidden fund of doubtful intentions. But innocents, and, we suppose, a fee, is rewarded with a kind paternal encouragement. The agriculturists are dismissed with a legal benediction, and the assurance, in which we heartily concur, that they are likely to prove perfectly harmless.

Such a Pantheon of British agriculturists must be one of the most interesting scenes that the poet or the painter could find in this barren world. Doubtless, there were present all those great lords of the soil whose names are counties, and hundreds, and hills, and dales: round these Corinthian props of the cause were mustered solid ranks of gentlemen and yeomen: these "opites" of the rural army, as Mitford would call them, were flanked by a vast multitude of sturdy labourers, with their wives and children; but in the foremost rank, the strong, the most affecting auxiliaries, thousands of happy, peaceful, old men and women, contented cripples, comforted widows, and smiling orphans, pointing to their sleek little bodies and decent raiment,—all the undeniable fruits of agricultural protection. With such a body of friends and clients, the agriculturists need "not be ashamed when they speak with their enemies in the gate." No fear, no misgiving, no doubt of success, could by possibility mar the joy of so bright and unanimous an assemblage. There is one only difficulty in its way. What plain could be found large enough for so immense a body? All England, from sea to sea, is cultivated up to the throat; not a heath, not a moor, not even a village common, is left; Salisbury Plain is now turned up right to the very stones of Stonehenge; and to such admirable perfection and exactness is the system of succession husbandry now carried, that there is not even an acre of fallow to be found. So where—in what new agricultural Runnymede—are the assembled millions to vindicate the "most important interests in the country?"

Alas for the poet and historian! Alas for the agriculturist! There is no difficulty whatever. A zealous friend comes up to town, and follows the stream—not to Hyde-park—not to Lincoln's-inn-square—not even to the large room of Kxeter-hall, but—to Freemasons'-hall. There, there, packed and ticketed in that snugest of rooms, he finds a handful of farmers and nondescripts—tenant farmers, honorary farmers, and farmers by courtesy. It is left to imagination to supply the rapturous applause of the full-fed labourers, and the ecstatic satisfactions of the old men, widows, and orphans.

Now, this won't do. If the times are not ripe for a better exhibition, let things alone for the present. The actual strength of the League consists, not in the length either of its purse or its talk, but in the fact that some millions of men, women, and children, rightly or wrongly, happen to identify themselves with it, and consider their prosperity involved in its success. The agriculturists boast that they have three times as many millions on their side of the question. Why not produce them? Nobody expects or wishes labourers to enter into theories of political economy; but why are they not grateful? Why are they not anxious for the continuance of the existing system? Why don't they identify their own comforts with the splendour of the aristocracy? They do not, and will not, so long as they have no other prospect than living—wife, children, and all—on 7s. or 8s. a-week, and dying in a union workhouse.

"WHEAT FOR SEED."

Sir George S. Mackenzie of Coull, Bart., has just issued a pamphlet on a subject interesting to farmers, corn-factors, and bakers, namely, the choice of wheat for seed. He dedicates it to "the farmers of his native county of Ross, who have long distinguished themselves by their talent and industry, and by sending superior samples of wheat to the southern markets." The compliment is not an undeserved one, as will be acknowledged even in Mark-lane; but the remarks of the inquiring baronet are interesting to more than farmers. All classes eat bread, though all do not grow wheat, and Sir George seems to be skilled in the mysteries of the baker's oven. It appears that bakers are in the habit of using a mixture of different kinds of wheat for making flour; and a proportion of foreign wheat is commonly used. All the wheat coming from abroad is a mixture of different varieties; and it has been kept a year before it arrives in this country, or else it is artificially dried, which renders it of much more value to the baker than newly-reaped home-grown wheat. "Here, then," says Sir George, "is a matter of very serious importance to our farmers. Let them consider how they can furnish bakers with an article which they will value as highly as they do foreign wheat. This is a question to which science should long ago have applied itself, and which agricultural societies should have preferred before almost all the objects of infinitely less importance to which their attention has been directed, and on which their funds have been lavished and much of them wasted." This partiality of the bakers to flour made of mixed wheats arises, as the author states, from the want of means to discover whether a single variety possesses the desired qualities. They try one, two, or several, and find none of them, singly, suitable for their purpose. On mixing them they procure, as they conceive, an average quality of flour, which they find more certainly to bake well. Hence they do not like to run risk with a single variety; and foreign wheat being in all cases a mixture, they give it a preference. Mr. Oliver, of Lochend, illustrated this by an amusing anecdote, which Sir George relates. He took the produce of two different fields, two different varieties, to the market. He offered to a baker, first one, and then the other, and for each an offer was made. He then presented a handful of the two mixed together, when he was immediately offered as much as two or three shillings a quarter more for the mixture than for either of the sorts singly! The baker requires a wheat which contains a large proportion of gluten, in order to sustain the bread in a raised state; but a proportion of starch in wheat is also necessary; and sugar is an ingredient of wheat which acts a prominent part in the formation of bread.

"Were I to be asked the question," says Sir George in conclusion, "in what class of society do you believe honourable feelings and honesty to be most prevalent, I should at once declare my firm belief, that they are to be found in largest proportion in the cultivators of the soil. Firm in this belief, I believe also that every farmer is willing to give to his landlord all that he can be reasonably expected to give in name of rent, under existing circumstances. He is willing to pay a fair proportion of the produce; and one great protection which a landlord can and ought to give to his tenants, is to take his rent in produce, and to submit to his rent rising and falling according to the rise and fall of prices. Then the farmer will rejoice when he has to pay a high rent, because his profits will have been high in proportion. I am aware there are local circumstances which may render it more advisable for the farmer to pay a fixed rent; but these are rare; I have reasons to believe that my own tenants are content under the plan I recommend, the foundation of which is laid in not exacting as rent more than a reasonable share of the produce. The state of the markets since 1830 has caused me to lose much that I might have put into my pocket with the former fixed rent. But my tenants would have suffered, and perhaps would have become insolvent. What I may have lost, or rather what is missed in my rental-book, has been repaid to me in another way, and, to my mind, a much more agreeable one. I see my tenants succeeding, and voluntarily making corn grow on land which stones, heath, furze, and brushwood had occupied since the soil was first formed. Some of them have actually doubled the amount of arable land on their farms, and all of them have added more or less to the productive soil of the country, and that without the help of premiums from societies. May I not be proud of such tenants; and may they not boast of their exploits!"

"Why should not the tenantry of the entire kingdom be placed in a condition to do the same? What prevents their being all equally contented and industrious? Let the Government and landlords ponder well on such questions; and let them also try the value of another question with which I will conclude, and the solution of which, whoever may give it, may bring to light the real cause of agricultural distress, when such distress is spoken of. It is a moral question, the profundity of which is not so great as to hinder ordinary observers from clearly seeing all its bearings, numerous though they be.

"How does it happen that the proprietors of the finest and largest estates are, for the most part, involved in debt, for which their property is mortgaged, so that they feel themselves compelled to screw their tenantry, and to indulge the foolish hope that the motion of the screw can be reversed by such preposterous means as a Corn Law?"—(From the Inverness Courier.

CORRESPONDENCE.

We have been favoured with a copy of a letter addressed by the Rev. Robt. Melson, Wesleyan minister, of Birmingham, to a Free-Trade friend, which we have the pleasure of laying before our readers, as another testimony of a Christian minister in favour of Free Trade. The station of Mr. Melson in the Wesleyan body will be recognised by our Free-Trade friends of that persuasion. Mr. Melson is a subscriber of £5 to the League:—

"Hunter's-lane, Birmingham.

"HONOURED AND DEAR SIR,—I believe you will readily excuse my delay in acknowledging the receipt of your kind favour, conferred through the medium of the post a few days ago, of the very excellent pamphlet, entitled 'Christian Thoughts on FREE TRADE,' when I inform you that, on its coming to hand, I had two long journeys before me. An expression of thanks, un-

"I do not mean to affirm that my tenants are a solitary example of contentment and industry. I am aware of many such instances. But it is too true, I fear, that an immense majority are in a very different condition, both in Scotland and England. The aspect of Ireland is too horrible to contemplate. My rent is always ready when I ask for it; and it has happened that the rent of some has been sent to me before it was due."

til made, is always due to kind donors for their free gifts, and all favours unmerited; and I believe that a truly grateful heart cannot be satisfied with itself without a due performance of its obligatory duties. But, Sir, I now wish to express, not only my thanks to you for the gift of the little book, of which I had no previous knowledge, but also the pleasure I have derived from the gift itself. Indeed, the title in the 'abstract' gave me pleasure. The very idea of Christian thoughts was pleasing; but Christian thoughts on FREE TRADE were still more so; and then, Christian thoughts on the very popular subject of Free Trade by a minister of Christ, and that minister a Wesleyan, was to me, indeed, most delightful.

"But when I began to read the excellent author's address to his THREE friends, with whom, it seems, he had had frequent conversations, he having been the one against three, acknowledging the overwhelming power of conviction, terminating in conversion, and inducing an ingenuous and public confession of his former errors, I must say that I was greatly delighted. But, indeed, I cannot see how any Christian minister can read the sacred scriptures attentively, and exercise his reason, and engage in deep thought upon the subject of Free Trade, without being constrained to acknowledge the propriety and excellency of the Christian doctrine, and that it is clearly revealed by the Lord, and powerfully supported in His two Testaments of Divine inspiration. But I believe that many of the Wesleyan ministers rather study to remain in ignorance of the subject of Free Trade, and the influence of the obnoxious Corn Laws, than to have a clear understanding of them. They are so alarmed at the very sound of politics, and so afraid of teaching legislators their duties, and of showing them what principles they should cultivate, and by what motives they should be stimulated to act in all things, that they can allow them, without interference, to make and enforce laws that are contrary to all righteousness, disgracing the nation, and famishing the thousands. Is not this preferring the darkness of ignorance to the light of truth, and by silence, and an awful omission of very important duties, sinning against God and his people?"

"When monopolizing legislators make laws to rob the poor of their rights, or to oppress any of their fellow subjects for the increase of their own wealth, all the ministers of Christ, of every Christian denomination, should combine to correct them, and, by an open and public avowal of their views and principles, they should openly and loudly reprove them.

"But, Sir, I consider that it is much to be lamented that very few ministers of the Gospel of God our Saviour seem to enter into the subject at all, as though, to them, it is a matter of indifference whether the lower classes of society live or die; or whether they are wretched and miserable, or comfortable and happy: which to me is a proof, and a powerful proof, that, although they may study and preach the truth, and nothing but the truth, they do not study and preach the whole truth. Whereas, all the ministers of every Christian denomination or section of the Church of Christ, who are divinely called to preach the Gospel of God, should consider themselves as bound to a discharge of all their momentous duties, in reference to Him who has called them his Church, and to the world; to speak the things, and all the things, which become sound doctrine; and to 'use sound speech that cannot be condemned' (Tit. ii. 8); that all men, let them be in whatsoever rank, circumstances, or station in life, whether legislators or no-legislators, should be called to a firm belief of the truth, the cultivation of all Christian principles, the diligent and faithful practice of all justice, and righteousness, and to exercise themselves in all mercy and charity; in a word, in all godliness!

"I cannot think, Sir, but that the ministers of Christ who are silent, or who reprove not the legislators of the present times, or expose not the injustice of the laws now in existence,—laws evidently leading to poverty, misery, and woe, and the disgrace of our once glorious nation, to almost the last extreme of wretchedness, must be highly culpable in the sight of Heaven; but more especially those who consider themselves as the chief dictators in a religious body, and enjoin silence upon their brethren at such awful times as the present.

"What the all-wise and all-mighty Governor of the universe calls His ministers to the performance of, and strictly enjoins upon them in his Word,—they, without consultation of bishops or fear of legislators, should perform, as they have to answer to God when they shall come before His bar.

"It is true, however, and highly praiseworthy, that some of the ministers of Christ among the Dissenters are acting a generous part, in exposing and rebuking the ungodliness of legislators, and the injustice and awful consequences of their cruel laws. But it may be considered as passing strange that the Wesleyans, as a body, who were evidently designed by the Almighty to correct errors, abuses, and all unjust men and laws in Church and State, should be silent in these times of oppression, cruelty, lamentation, extreme poverty, wretchedness, and death!!

"I believe, Sir, that had the Wesleyans come forward as they should have done, and united themselves with those excellent ministers who assembled in Manchester in August, 1841, for consultation with those other excellent men who composed the League's Council, in order to unite their energies, and call upon the people of their respective charge, and appeal to the public generally, to assist in obtaining a repeal of the infringing, unjust, inhuman, overwhelming, cruelly-oppressive, and deadly laws of monopolizing legislators, much contention, strife, poverty, sorrow, sickness, and disease, with fires, thousands of imprisonments, banishments, and deaths would have been obviated, and that that body of ministers and people would have been greatly honoured and blessed!!!"

"The subject, Sir, now presented to me, would lead me on to a volume of thoughts—to thoughts Christian, free, just, serious, deep, conclusive, &c.; but I believe they must remain at the present as thoughts only.

"I am, honoured and dear Sir,

"Yours truly and affectionately,

"ROBT. MELSON.

"—, Esq., Leamington."

AGRICULTURE.

MODERN FEUDALISM.

We last week rapidly traced the direct connexion which exists between the present English law of real property and the anti-social system of feudalism; and we shall now proceed to show how largely feudal principles enter into the modern relations of landlord and tenant in this country.

The cultivation of the soil was in feudal ages carried on by serfs, who rendered all the produce to their lords beyond what was necessary for their own bare subsistence, and the continuation of their race; or by small freeholders or yeomen, who rendered definite portions of the produce of their land to their immediate feudal superiors. The first class of cultivators were literally slaves, they were attached to the land—adscripti gleba—and they were passed with it as so many cattle might be. It was an offence against the law to "harbour" a runaway serf; and it was a constant source of strife and jealousy between the landed aristocracy and the towns, that the serfs escaped into the corporate towns, and there having become burgesses for a year and a day, they became emancipated by law and were for ever freemen. It is from the class of serfs, who were finally emancipated from personal slavery, that our present agricultural labourers are descended, and who are practically little better than serfs at this hour, for the description which Bracton applied to them in the time of Henry II., as being "in a very degraded condition," is painfully accurate now. So far as special legislation has been directed towards them, it has been solely for the purpose of depressing them and retaining them in subjection. When from peculiar causes there was a scarcity of labour, and wages in consequence tended to rise to an extent the owners of land thought inconvenient to themselves, they passed the "Statute of Labourers" for the purpose of compelling the labourers to accept wages lower than the natural rate; they were also subjected to harsh punishments for breaches of contract with their employers, and were and are made liable to serious afflictions under the vagrant laws when found wandering about the country. The life of the agricultural labourer is still one of ill-requited toil, which ends, if he outlive the power to labour, in the parish workhouse; and he has no hope but that of escaping into some employment in the towns, or in domestic service. His dwelling is relatively inferior to that which covered his ancestor the serf, and the quantity of his food is certainly less than that retained for his own use by the feudal vassal. And the Corn Law has much to do with producing this low state of the labourer; for, by enhancing the price of grain, it causes a slovenly cultivation, which limits the demand for agricultural labour. There is scarcely a parish in England in which, if half the land were cultivated according to the best system of modern husbandry, there would not be rather a deficiency than a redundancy of agricultural labourers. Even a monopolist squire could understand that such a state of things would be highly beneficial to the rural labourers; and it has been shown again and again that it is nothing but a delusive reliance upon protection, and the prevalent vicious practices of land-letting, which prevents a much more rapid improvement in husbandry throughout the kingdom than has hitherto occurred. We believe it is perfectly true that, with British skill, climate, and capital, corn sufficient for the national consumption might be produced at prices so low as to defy all competition in seasons of ordinary productiveness; but it is no less certain that skill and capital will never be applied to the soil in the best way until the British agriculturist is subject to the most unlimited competition with the whole world. That the labourer thrives best where the greatest skill and capital are applied to husbandry is proved by comparing the best with the worst farmed districts. Thus in Dorsetshire, where, as the Rev. Mr. Osborne stated in the presence of the assembled squires, every seventh person of the population is a pauper, and wages are 6s. and 7s. a week, agriculture is in the very lowest condition; while in Lincolnshire, where agricultural improvement has been carried on with great spirit, Mr. Pusey, in the last number of the Royal Agricultural Society's Journal, tells us, "the labourers' wages vary from 10s. to 12s. and 15s. a week; he obtains a good deal of task work, good hands earning at this moment at task work from 15s. to 18s. weekly. His cottage is neat and cheerful. Many labourers have allotments, and some even cows." And, until this enterprise in husbandry becomes general, the mass of labourers will remain as they now are, little better than mere serfs.

And this can only be effected by liberating the agricultural capitalists—the tenant-farmers—from the thralldom in which they are at present held. That this thralldom is the remnant of feudalism the following brief sketch of the history of the yeomanry will make evident. Besides the lands granted to gentlemen, to be held by knight-service, free or socage tenures—that is, of rendering some service, domestic or connected with agriculture—were granted; and it was one of the conditions of these tenures that the tenants should attend the manor courts or courts baron held in the lord's hall. Even the few allodial proprietors who had escaped confiscation, in those days when the laws were ineffectual to protect the weak against the strong, found it advantageous to become feudatories to some powerful lord. Thus we see the most independent class of cultivators—those who had freeholds of their own—became accustomed to the sentiments and habits of vassallage. And the sentiments and habits continued after the abolition of feudal tenures; for when in course of time the lands of larger proprietors became let to farmers, the occupiers were men drawn entirely from the class of yeomen. And down to this day, on many large estates—originally it was so on all—the tenants are bound to find teams and labour for certain work upon the lands in the actual possession of their landlord. In all cases timber and game, and the exclusive right of hunting, fishing, and fowling, were reserved to the landlord; repairs were usually executed by him, and in all cases timber and other materials for repairs were found by him; so that not only had the tenant a very qualified possession of his farm, but a constant recurrence to, and dependence upon, the landlord or his steward became necessary. Then a very rigid course of cropping was prescribed, which would alone have been sufficient to prevent scientific or enterprising husbandry. Farms, too, were generally small, and as Burke said of the farmer previously to 1794, "that he rarely died worth more than paid his debts, leaving his posterity to continue in nearly the same equal conflict between industry and want, in which his last predecessor, and a long line of predecessors before him, lived and died."

And in this state renting farmers lived and died, generation after generation, on the same farm: a circumstance which has tended to keep alive the feudal sentiment of submission, and perhaps in some cases respect for their landlord, which had been handed down from times when feudalism was something more than a sentiment. Subsequently to 1794, farming partook of the vivifying influence of commercial enterprise, and large tracts of land, which had been considered of little value by the owners, were taken upon long leases by active farmers with some capital, and brought into cultivation with great profit to themselves and the community. The old farmers, on the ancient farms, participated comparatively little in these advances; they made but little improvement in their method of cultivation, though from 1794 to 1814 they obtained large profits from the enormous prices which scanty crops, combined with the fortuitous circumstance of the war, occasioned. And even now the oldest enclosed and the best lands are, as a general rule, the worst cultivated. Yet it was during the war that the greatest steps were made towards shaking off feudalism, the rapid rise of the value of land—the wants and extravagancies of the landowners rising in even a greater ratio—having caused all minor considerations affecting land to be sunk in comparison with its money-producing power, and there was a fair chance of land becoming what it ought to be—a merchantable commodity. Then came the fall of prices at the peace, and the struggle of the landlords to create by law artificially that scarcity of corn which accidental causes had produced during the war. Tenants fell into the delusion that prices could be kept constantly high by act of Parliament; and the Corn Law of 1815 and its successors have since kept the tenant-farmers in worse than feudal vassallage by inducing them to calculate on prices they have not obtained, and to look for profits from high prices rather than large produce. We shall again recur to the anomalous state of vassallage into which the Corn Laws have, since 1815, reduced the tenant-farmers.

LANDLORDS AND LABOURERS—FACTS FOR THE MONOPOLISTS.

The following paragraph from an agricultural journal indicates some of the consequences of a law which limits the employment of agricultural labourers for the sake of keeping up rents:—

"AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS DESTROYED.—The village of Charlton-on-Otmoor, situate within a few miles of Oxford, has latterly been the scene of several very lawless proceedings. Some of the labourers, for the want of employment, have been driven to the Bicester Union-workhouse, which has caused a great deal of excitement and dissatisfaction in the minds of those remaining. Several of the respectable inhabitants have had their windows broken; and on the night of the 26th of January three ploughs were destroyed, by cutting them to pieces. Each plough belonged to a different farmer of the village. A paper was left on one of them, with the following written on it:—'A full belly does not know what an empty one feels.'"

Now, this is that district where the Rev. Dr. Marsham, the notorious monopolist, said, a few weeks since, that there "is now no cry from the labour market in the rural districts; that the people are employed, and that provisions are cheap." Nor is further evidence of the falsehood wanting, for the Rev. W. Fergusson, of Bicester, has addressed a letter to his monopolist brother, in which he calls his attention to a few facts which, as he truly says, "will tell their own tale." Fact the first:—

"B. B. has a wife and five children; his wages are 9s. per week. The money is laid out by his wife in the following order:—

| | |
|------------------------------|------------|
| 1 oz. of tea | s. d. |
| 7 Loaves, 4lbs. each | 3 6 |
| Flour | 0 8 |
| 1½ lb. bacon | 0 10½ |
| 1 lb. candles | 0 3½ |
| Soap | 0 3 |
| 1 bushel of potatoes | 1 0 |
| House-rent | 0 10 |
| Coals | 1 0 |
| Total | 9 0 |

Deduct house-rent and coals from the above sum, and there remains 1s. 0½d. per head per week for each of the above family."

How this man must rejoice in a law which limits employment and renders it precarious, and enhances the price of food! Then we have fact the second:—

"T. B. has a wife and six children; his wages are 8s. per week; they live in a hovel rent-free. The money is laid out in the following manner:—

| | |
|------------------------------|------------|
| 10 loaves, 4lb. each | s. d. |
| 1 bushel of potatoes | 1 0 |
| Candles | 0 5 |
| Tea | 0 1 |
| Bacon | 0 2 |
| Lard | 0 2 |
| Soap | 0 2 |
| Coals | 1 0 |
| Total | 8 0 |

This sum, deducting coals, allows 10½d. per week for each of the above family of eight persons."

Yet if one-tenth of the parish were drained every year, probably labour would rise 50 per cent., and these unhappy labourers would live in decent comfort; but their landlords must abandon game-preserving, and make their tenants independent by granting leases! Fact the third:—

"J. B. has a wife and six children; his wages are 9s. per week; boy at work, wages 1s. per week. Total income 10s., and laid out as follows:—

| | |
|------------------------------|-------------|
| 9 loaves, 4lb. each | s. d. |
| 1 bushel of potatoes | 1 0 |
| 1 lb. rushlights | 0 7 |
| 1½ lb. bacon | 0 11 |
| Coals | 1 7 |
| School for one boy | 0 1 |
| House-rent | 1 0 |
| 1 lb. soap | 0 3 |
| Tea | 0 1 |
| Total | 10 0 |

Deducting house-rent, coals, and schooling from this sum, there remains 7s. 4d. to be divided among a family of eight persons, or 11d. per head per week."

Mr. Fergusson says:—

"It will be seen that I have not found coffee, sugar, milk, butter, cheese, and mutton, &c., among the provisions on which the white slaves subsist. These necessary comforts are out of the question in many parts of the agricultural districts. What shoes and clothes are worn by the families, whose condition I have brought under your notice in this letter, are paid for by a little additional money earned by them in spring and harvest; and also by what the poor mothers, and in some cases their little girls, earn by lace-making. The following additional facts will finish my present picture of the 'Labour Market':—

J. W. has a wife and one child; works in a gravel quarry s. d.

—wages per week 6 0

J. J. has a wife and four children; works in a gravel quarry—wages per week 6 0

B. M. has a wife and two children; works in a gravel quarry—wages per week 6 0

Again, hear what those clergymen who do go amongst the poor witness. Mr. Fergusson tells the monopolist of another fact:—

"H. has a wife and a large family—is out of work. They were visited the other day by a member of my family, and the poor woman, who had no fire, was sitting in bed at noonday to keep herself warm, while she was making lace to procure a little bread. Three of these four able-bodied men, along with other eight, all of whom are heads of families, are employed at the quarry, because the farmers cannot employ them in the fields."

Again:—

"I have just called upon two families, who are in a state of great destitution and wretchedness. The men are able and willing to work, but they cannot get employment. They were boiling turnips for dinner, and had nothing else which they could eat. Think, Sir, of two families, or fourteen persons, dining on boiled turnips. Your 'oatmeal and potatoes' would be a welcome meal to them! I have just met another able-bodied man, who has a wife and five children; he has been out of work for sixteen weeks. His daily and only employment is to stand in the streets, watching to see if any person will employ him to carry coals into the coal-house. The men, women, and children, whose wretchedness and misery I have described in this letter, are all pining in the vicinity of your own estates."

We say advisedly that all this rural destitution is indirectly attributable to the Corn Laws, and the Corn Laws alone: we defy any monopolist to gainsay it; and we call upon every monopolist member of Parliament, who does not desire to be deemed a political cheat, to vote for Mr. Cobden's motion for a committee of inquiry as to the effect of protective duties on tenant-farmers and farm-labourers. How many monopolists will do so? We shall see.

In a second letter Mr. Fergusson says:—

"I have this day visited between 50 and 60 cottages in Bicester, and have found some without fire, some without bread, and others dining upon turnips. There are, in our parish, men who have families to support, but not a day's work to go to. Many of the houses which I have visited to-day have next to no furniture in them. How the poor creatures manage to live is to me a mystery."

And this misery is spreading in that district, for that gentleman says:—

"That the miseries of the field labourers are daily increasing is a fact that very few will venture to deny; but when I speak of the wretchedness and nakedness, I am told that 'they are bad ones,' and that 'if they had any money they would spend it at the alehouse.' These charges against the poor are, to a certain extent, true, and, therefore, I should like to know why they have been left, in the vicinity of Oxford, to grow up in such a state of ignorance and immorality."

When we remember that, in the local papers, under the head "Bicester," we every week see some five or six game convictions, we can easily understand that the most earnest and honest endeavours to instruct men so immersed in poverty, and surrounded by temptation to crime, may prove fruitless. And what is the remedy?—

"Surely," says Mr. Fergusson, "some steps ought to be taken to find them employment in winter as well as in summer. There are some kind and charitable men in Bicester, but the evil is too great to be cured by alms. Regular employment, and the constant inculcation of religious, frugal, and virtuous habits, are the only means that will effect a radical cure."

AGRICULTURAL MUTUAL INSTRUCTION.

That which we from the first anticipated as the result of the Pro-Corn-Law associations, is beginning to take place. In spite of their leaders and misleaders, the farmers who go to these meetings are obtaining, incidentally and occasionally, scraps of knowledge upon the Corn-Law question which will, ere long, make them comprehend the monopolists' delusion. The absurd statements of the speakers at these meetings are being gradually reduced to their true value, and that by their own friends. Thus Mr. Harcourt, one of the members for the county of Oxford, said, at the Oxford gathering:—

"He had seen accounts of statements made in other places, statements he should regret to see made in any society to which he belonged. He regretted to have seen something of the kind in Mr. Baker, of Essex; and, if Mr. B. were not more cautious, he would expose himself on some points to very easy refutation. He (Mr. Harcourt) disliked exaggerations." Mr. Harcourt then proceeded to give an instance of one point at least in which Mr. Baker is easy of refutation. By a little jugglery in his calculations, he pretends to make it appear that the protection on wheat, from 1828 to 1842, was 11 per cent., whereas, according to Mr. Harcourt, it was in reality four times as much, or 44 per cent. Mr. Baker has effected this deception by calculating the duty only on the foreign corn that has come in, not upon that which the sliding-scale has kept out. The sliding-scale of 1828 had the effect of excluding corn altogether, till it rose to a certain price in the home-market.

This did not suit the concoctors of the meeting, who, accordingly, cried down Mr. Harcourt, and all mention of any such correction was carefully omitted by the truthful Morning Post. Now, if any farmer will take the trouble to go through the calculations of Mr. Baker, or any other of the monopolist speakers, he will find that not "a little jugglery" has been practised in every case except where the simpler expedient of a downright lie has been adopted. So we find Mr. O. Copland's "calculations" in Essex corrected in the following quiet way by a gentleman of that county, named Marriage, who is engaged in the corn trade:—

"Upon reading a report of the speech of Oswald Copland, at Romford, I was surprised to find the price of Dantzic wheat quoted by him only 15s. 11d. per quarter in 1826. I found, on referring to the averages, he had not only selected one of the lowest years, but had quoted the price 7s. below the average price of that year in the Prussian Gazette, which is 22s. 1d. per quarter for the year 1826. I object to public men taking the price of one year only, to show at what price corn can be grown abroad. Had he searched a few years further back, he would have found the price at Dantzic to be as high as 75s. 8d. per quarter, which price would not have suited his line of argument. The average price at Dantzic from the year 1817 to 1838, was 34s. 4d. per quarter; more than double the price quoted by O. Copland."—See Prussian Gazette.

This will settle Mr. O. Copland's veracity in the minds of all sober men at its true value. Then the monopolist members who do not come up to the mark of the high-flying protectionists are called over the coals by some blunt-speaking farmer like Mr. Jos. Seamons, of Buckinghamshire, who said at Aylesbury:—

"Why did not their present members come forward as his grace had always done? If they did not come more among their constituents, and do their duty as local representatives, they would choose others in their places who would. They saw their representatives so seldom, that they hardly knew whether they were dead or alive. When these gentlemen were candidates, and came among the farmers for their votes, they promised great things, and professed to have a great regard for all that concerns their local interests, in every possible way, but they were so soon elected that they forgot all their fine promises, and left the local interest to care for itself."

Now, as the members for the county of Buckingham are the mere nominees of the Duke of Buckingham, and no doubt quite understand his wishes in the course they take, his grace, who was in the chair, must have felt this to have been something like a backhanded blow from his worthy vice. So, in Bedfordshire, according to the Post—

"Mr. Bennett proceeded to make some allusions to a petition that had been got up in Bedfordshire against the Canada Corn Bill, and passed some rather stringent remarks upon the conduct of Mr. Astell, one of their county members, who, he alleged, had been instrumental in originating the petition, and afterwards turned round and voted with Ministers in favour of the measure. He thought gentlemen should not raise the cry of 'No surrender,' and immediately afterwards give in their adhesion to the principle they had formerly condemned. He disclaimed any personal animosity towards Mr. Astell; but, as a British yeoman, he would uphold his right to form an opinion, and to express it." (Loud cheers.)

We suspect landlords will find, ere long, that "British yeomen" will express a good many opinions not altogether agreeable to their feudal superiors. This same Mr. Bennett put the question upon an issue the squires will not altogether relish, when he said, "He held that the amount of protection to agriculturists should be in an equal ratio with the burdens imposed on land." Let this be the issue, and protection must be abandoned, for the only burdens on the land are those of the landlords' own creation: as annuities, mortgages, and so forth. Again, Mr. Sutherland, the chairman of the Croydon "protection" meeting, made the following (for monopolists) awkward admissions:—

"He alluded to the letter of Mr. Loyd, and said that that gentleman appeared to feel great alarm at the increase of population, but he did not see any ground for that alarm. By the improvements that had been effected in agriculture, they had nearly kept pace in production with the increase of population; but, even supposing they had not done so, they had the elements to do it within their own grasp. There were in England ten or twelve millions of acres of waste land, which only required draining and tillage to bring into cultivation."

Well, but if a protection which, except in years of very considerable scarcity, has given an absolute monopoly to the British grower for nearly 30 years past has not enabled or induced him to use the "elements within his grasp," and to do the necessary "drainage and tillage" for bringing the waste lands into cultivation, why is protection now to have such a wonderfully productive operation? The truth is, until protection was death-doomed by the evidence before the committee of 1836, we never heard of any of these projected improvements. Let protection vanish altogether, and then improvement will commence in earnest.

HINTS FOR LANDLORDS.

SPECIAL BURDENS ON LAND.—Amongst the many ludicrous claims made by the landowning monopolists, as pleas for taxing the community to uphold rents, one is the highway-rate—the expense of keeping in repair their own roads—an outlay by which they are the principal gainers. The following paragraph, extracted from a monopolist paper, sets this in a very clear light:—

"GOOD AND BAD ROADS.—The following table will show the occupiers of land, who, by their teams and in their gigs, are the most frequent travellers along the cross roads, how very expensive bad roads are to them, and how much it is to their interest to endeavour to improve them, to which frequent rates are the greatest obstacles. Force required to draw a loaded cart, weighing 1000 lbs. —

| | |
|--------------------------------|----------|
| Turnpike-road, hard and dry.. | 204 lbs. |
| Do ditto dirty | 89 |
| Hard compact loam | 88 |
| Ordinary by-road | 106 |
| Turnpike-road, newly gravelled | 148 |
| Loose sandy road | 204 |

From this it appears that there is more than three times as much force required in draught on a middling by-road as on a hard turnpike road. No farmer makes money now-a-days by carting horses; he ought not, therefore, to wish to keep more than necessary; and good roads enable him to turn the keep of a cart horse into the more profitable animal—a cow or some sheep." —Berks Chronicle.

Yet in the face of this we shall again and again hear highway-rates and turnpike-tolls enumerated by the landowners who advocate monopoly as special burdens on land.

THE FARMERS REFUSING TO SUPPORT THE CORN LAWS.—Symptoms of backwardness appear in some quarters to subscribe to the Corn-Law League. The Worcester Journal, a monopolist organ, has the following paragraph:—

"We much regret to find that our efforts to excite a spirit of activity amongst the agriculturists of Worcestershire have not hitherto been attended with that success which we had hoped the deep and paramount importance of the subject would have ensured to them."

And the following statement respecting Pro-Corn-Law agitation in Worcester, from a trustworthy correspondent, shows the hollowness of the high-rent agitation:—"This society [Worcestershire Agricultural Protection Society] appears to contain the names of only few landowners (not more than one or two of any extent); several land-agents, and dependants upon them; some respectable farmers; a great many tenants of the Coventry family, to whom it was intimated when Messrs. Cobden and Bright visited this city, that they must not attend their meeting; and the remaining part of the members of this society consists of rabid political partisans of the city of Worcester, with a sprinkling of red-tape gentlemen. Such is the want of talent amongst this enlightened body of men, provided it was possible to make out a good case, I am sure there is not more than one man in the society that could expound it."

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"The Rackrenter's Song" is under consideration.

"A Halop Farmer" sends a Hrewsbury newspaper, describing a meeting held in that town for the protection of agriculture, and a most amusing letter of commentary on the proceedings. He says "The proper appellation of the proposed association would be a society for the destruction of the tenant-farmers, a class which suffers more severely from the pernicious effects of the Corn Laws than any other portion of her Majesty's subjects." "There was everything," he says, "at the Hrewsbury meeting but honesty, candour, truth, argument, and justice;" and he concludes by declaring that he considers the success of the League identical with the prosperity of agriculture.

"W. A." gives some amusing particulars respecting the Pro-Corn-Law petition from Newark, which he says was signed by ten police-men, the gaoler, and a bailiff-follower. This is natural enough, for all who live by public crime or vice have a direct interest in the maintenance of the Corn Laws.

"A Complete Suffragist."—His letter is too long, and the point in dispute is of no importance.

"A Member of the League," and a vast number of correspondents with different signatures, from various parts of the country, have sent us evidence to show that farmers have been forced to sign requisitions for Anti-League meetings, and some of them complain bitterly of the coercion to which they have been themselves subjected. If the emancipation of industry had no other recommendation, it would be desirable, as the certain means of raising up in every rural district—

"Some village Hampden, who, with dauntless breast,
The petty tyrant of his field withstands."

"Crito" and "A Native of Kent" will find that their hints will be turned to advantage at an early opportunity.

Will "M. B. C." permit her lines to be a little altered?

"M. B." relates, in affecting language, the history of a person tempted by war prices to invest his savings in land, and, after years of incessant labour, reduced to poverty, ejected from his farm, and forced to witness the landlord who had been the cause of all his ruin, reaping the benefit of his improvements.—"N. L." supplies a similar history; and, we doubt not, that "the other true tale" might be told of thousands.

"R. J."—They must claim to be registered as rate-payers.
"G. B." shall meet attention.
"J. C. J." must pardon some verbal alterations in the following lines:—

THE POOR MAN'S PRAYER.
"Father, by whom all hearts are seen,
All inmost secrets read,
Thou know'st our woe;—our wants how keen!
How rude the paths we tread!
Bow'd, blighted, sapp'd in soul and health,
To toil and misery wed;
Yet ask we not rank, power, or wealth,
But—give the Poor Man bread!
Here, on thy fair and fruitful earth,
Midst vineyards, cornfields, flocks;
So rich that at the thought of death
Their garner'd treasure mocks,— Faint—feeble—fainting away,
We, kinamen of the dead,
By hard misrule are forced to pray,—
God! give the Poor Man bread!"

"A. B." "Rent made worse," "Anti-Apostate," and several others, including nine with the signature, "A Farmer," will find that their suggestions, hints, and information, will be turned to good account in the League, though at present, for reasons which their own good sense will, doubtless, in most instances, suggest, there is no specific reference made to the topics of their several communications.

A Driffield Correspondent writes to us to say that a curious fact transpired at the late Anti-League meeting held on the 8th inst. in that town, namely, that just before the meeting of Parliament Lord Stanley had been at Sledmer House, urging Sir T. Sykes, and, no doubt, other great landlords, to get up farmers' petitions in favour of the sliding scale. The secret oozed out in one of the speeches at the meeting, but the landlords, becoming alarmed, contrived to induce the local press to omit it. The Hall Beckingham, however, honestly gave it publicity, which led to a clumsy attempt at denial in the Eastern Counties Herald.

"Hastings."—We shall be glad to hear further from our correspondent.

"Perthensis" is under consideration.

"L. G."—The League cannot imitate the Monopolists and substitute personalities for principles.

"J. H." Falkirk, is thanked.

"Capit in the Cornfield" compares the pretended love of the Monopolists for the labourers to Judas's betrayal of his Master by a kiss. The parallel fails, because the affection was not pretended by the Monopolists until after the injury was effected.

"B."s verses have much merit, but some of the stanzas are rather feeble.

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any person forwarding 3s. 8d. by Post-office order, to the Publisher, 67, Fleet-street, London, will have one quarter's copies of the League forwarded by post on the days of publication. Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with J. Gadsby, Newall's-buildings, Manchester; and the League may be had by order of any news-agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

GREAT LEAGUE MEETING.

The Weekly Meetings of the League will, in future, be held on the Wednesday in place of the Thursday Evenings as heretofore.

The next WEEKLY MEETING of the LEAGUE will take place in COVENT GARDEN THEATRE, on WEDNESDAY EVENING, Feb. 28th.

GEORGE WILSON, Esq., will take the Chair at Seven o'clock.

The meeting will be addressed by Thomas Gisborne, Esq., M.P.; Thomas Milner Gibson, Esq., M.P.; Henry Ashworth, Esq., of The Oaks, near Bolton, Lancashire, and other gentlemen.

Cards of admission to the Stage and Upper Circles or Boxes may be had on personal application at the Central Office of the League, 67, Fleet-street, during Monday and Tuesday; no application by letter can be attended to.

To prevent inconvenience from the great pressure at the front entrance of the Theatre, the Council has resolved to limit the issue of Tickets of admission to the dress circle to the precise number that can be conveniently accommodated.

Each ticket will be numbered, and each number represent and secure the seat in each box to be occupied by the bearer of the ticket.

The Entrance to the Dress Circle will, in future, be at the Private Box-door on the Queen's Side, in Hart-street.

The Cards of Registered Members only, will, as heretofore, admit to the Pit and Galleries of the Theatre.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, February 24, 1844.

The scene at Covent Garden Theatre on Wednesday evening was splendid beyond any parallel in the history of public meetings. Faint, indeed, is the impression which the best report of it can convey to those who were not present; and it is well worthy of note that, sublime and tremendous as was the enthusiasm which greeted Mr. O'Connell, it never led either him or the meeting away from the great purpose and sacred cause for which these grand assemblages are held. That cause was paramount over all. It was the bond that united the persecuted champion of peaceful public meetings, and those who by means of peaceful public meetings are advancing towards the attainment of justice for every portion of the empire. It was the one heart, beating in all bosoms. The friends of Free Trade felt this; the enemies of Free Trade see it, and gnash their teeth. In reference to Wednesday's meeting, the timid had their fears, and the malignant had their hopes, that the League might somehow compromise its high position of independence of all party, and an appearance of plausibility be afforded for accusation of inconsistency. Mr. O'Connell is too much of a true-hearted Leaguer—and the League is too entirely a creation of pure principle—to give any such advantage. And hereupon the hostility of the disappointed monopolists runs rabid: all decency is outraged. Amongst the flowers of fancy culled to regale those who are pre-eminent in canting about religion and morals, we find such epithets, in one short article, as "the Irish convict," "blackguards both," "select and carefully-separated scum," "applauding disciples of teachers of assassination," "perfectly nauseous scene," and other "nastier" phraseology, which seems to indicate that the literature of "Agricultural Protection" flavours itself from the filth of the farm-yard. We are sorry that Monopoly cannot find more decorous ways of telling the world that it is very angry. The fact of its being angry we neither doubt nor regret. The League was not constituted for the complacent contemplation of bread-taxers, or to win the praises of their scribes. That the mind and language of writers should be degraded by the service in which they are employed, is perfectly natural. Church warfare was once apologized for in the House of Commons; and Monopoly makes war, like the Chinese, by "poisoning the wells" and polluting the streams of intelligence.

In the number of the Morning Herald, to which we are indebted for the above elegant extracts, great solicitude is expressed to ascertain the exact proportion in which the profits of manufacturing cotton are divided between the mill-owners and the work-people. Perhaps Granny is so demented as to hope that something may be found analogous to what happens in the wheat manufacture, where sometimes the landowner receives his profit of 20s. an acre, while the actual cultivator endures a loss of 8s. or 10s. an acre. If so, Granny will be disappointed. Such anomalies only happen in the Arcadia of Agriculture, the Paradise of Protection.

REVIEW.

FOREIGN VIEWS OF THE CONDITION OF GREAT BRITAIN.

Revue des Deux Mondes. December—February. Eclectic Review, February Number.

"To see ourselves as others see us," is equally valuable to individuals, associations, and empires. A heavy press of matter prevented us from directing attention to an excellent history of the League, which appeared in the "Eclectic Review" for February, and we should turn to it with pleasure were it not of importance to show that the progress of "Free Trade" is not confined to this country, but that the whole civilized world takes an interest in the movement, and that philanthropists of every creed, clime, and colour pray for its success. Time was when indifference to the opinion of foreigners was paraded as a principle of policy, when members of the Legislature publicly thanked God that they were ignorant even of the French language, and when our Government was declared to be "the envy of surrounding nations." Well and wisely says the Hindoo proverb, "The snail sees nothing beyond its shell, and believes it the finest palace in the universe." England has paid too heavy a price for the self-complacency of its snails to adopt their system of indifference again, and contempt for the opinions of foreigners is now preached only by such statesmen as Sibthorp and such philosophers as Ferrand.

The reviews of English policy by M. Duvergier de Hauranne, and the statistical survey of the moral influence of commerce and manufactures by M. Leon Faucher, in the able periodical before us, are remarkable for their dispassionate examination of topics which can scarcely be named in England without awakening all the violence and even the fury of party; they seem like an anticipation of the calm judgment of posterity; and we shall, therefore, endeavour to present our readers with such a condensed view of the opinions which these able writers have formed of the general policy of the British empire, as may enable them to estimate the place which our country and its Government hold in the general estimation of Europe.

The Anti-Corn-Law League, like the Anti-Slavery Society, is one of the very few associations formed in England which neither directly nor remotely has any connexion with party politics; and, like the Anti-Slavery Society, it has to resist the machinations of all its enemies, and some of its friends, to connect its proceedings with party interests, and make its great object a party question. On one side, the monopolists, wilfully forgetting that the Corn Laws are a mushroom novelty; attempt to identify the sliding scale with the time-honoured institutions of the land, and to place the taxation of food on the same basis as Church and State; on the other hand, there are some who would make Free Trade a corollary to some organic change in the constitution—a point of faith in a long creed of which they have not themselves arranged all the articles. In order to preserve the independence of the League, we have hitherto carefully abstained from all interference with other agitations, however interesting or important, save where they come in direct contact with the question of Free Trade; and from this sound caution we shall not depart, in spite of the many tempting subjects of discussion which are suggested in the articles of the "Revue des Deux Mondes." Our object shall be to reproduce the opinions of foreigners, and to withhold our own; we disclaim all responsibility for their inferences or their deductions, like the Jesuit translators of Newton—"alienam coacti sumus gerere personam;" we profess merely to be the faithful interpreters of the sentiments of others; and we hold ourselves bound to give them with equal fairness, whether they accord with our own or differ from us to the widest possible extent.

Foreigners declare that what appears to them most inexplicable in our Parliamentary contests is, that party interests rather than national interests are prominent in every debate; and that the people, instead of being regarded as the body most deeply concerned in the issue, is placed in an attitude of indifference, and proposed as a prize to the conquerors. Foreign publicists have canvassed the advantages and disadvantages of this prevalence of party. On the one side they see the benefit that results from evoking popular passion on every question, great and small, which can be discussed by the Legislature; and they particularly dwell on the absurdities, at once ludicrous and mischievous, which followed from making the Parisian populace a court of appeal on questions of foreign policy. On the other hand, they perceive the danger of parties trusting too much to the general indifference of the people, and confiding in its continuance when questions are discussed in which every individual of the community has a direct and personal interest. Under such circumstances, an Opposition eager to damage its rivals on the Treasury bench may make such discordant alliances, hold out such inconsistent hopes, pledge itself to such contradictory promises, that from the moment of victory may be dated the sure commencement of its defeat, and the hour when its strength is apparently greatest may be that in which the seeds of ruin have struck the deepest root.

An eminent French statesman, warmly solicitous for the success of the present English Administration, writing to a friend about eighteen months before its accession to office, said, "I rejoice in the certain prospect of Sir Robert Peel's obtaining power, but I much fear that the present Opposition will beat the future Ministry: too many of his friends talk as if their words did not reach beyond the Chambers; they ought to remember that Ireland has echoes." The echoes everywhere were forgotten in these party struggles; but the standers-by, though rather indifferent to the immediate issue, were alive to the principles involved in the final result, and words were spoken which were regarded as a superadding of insult to injury, and, as such, were indelibly graven on the heart.

M. de Haauranne believes that the political struggle in England is fast passing from the hands of party to the hands of the people; he sees clearly that it is a matter of very little consequence to John a-Nokes and Peter Styles whether Lord John Russell or Sir Robert Peel guides the helm, but that it is of vital importance to said Nokes and Styles whether they shall have abundance or starvation. Taking this view of the question, he looks upon the great bulk of our Parliamentary debates as little better than impertinences,—as what the Greeks used to call "exercises of the fishmarket," in which "You're another," was the most common retort and the most cogent argument. "En somme," says he, "quand le Whigs reprochent aux Tories de ne rien faire, ils ont raison: Quand les Tories se moquent du programme des Whigs, ils n'ont pas tort." In plain English, the battle lies between two parties, one of which is decidedly in the wrong, and the other as decidedly not in the right. Hence, the foreigner infers the necessity for the intervention of the great body of the people, represented in their capacity of consumers by the League, to say:—"Gentlemen, if we believe you both, we can have confidence in neither; so settle your disputes as best you may, for we are not disposed to starve while you amuse yourselves with declamation. The interchange of invective for reproach may amuse you, but the interchange of labour for food is of vital interest to us; we do not want rhetoric, but we do want employment and sustenance."

The late debate on the state of Ireland has amazed and amused our foreign contemporaries: there were no facts in issue; no one denied the startling facts in the report of the census commissioners—that two millions out of the eight contained in Ireland are absolute paupers; that the wages of agricultural labourers in the south and west of Ireland, not included in the list of paupers, average only from 2s. to 2s. 6d. per week; that law under landlord administration is invariably an instrument of oppression instead of redress; that "the wild justice of revenge" is the only justice in which the peasantry have the slightest confidence, and that the hold of the English Government on the country extends not an inch beyond a musket's range from the barracks and sentry-boxes with which the land is studded. The answer that statesmen made to all this was, "the Whigs did not remedy these evils when they were in office;" from which it was inferred that their successors need not trouble themselves about the matter. The state physician, when he comes to the bed-side of the patient, says, "Your last doctor did you no good; I advised you to dismiss him and call in me, but I have made up my mind to leave you as helpless as I found you." Well might foreigners inquire if England be a land of sanity, and this the nineteenth century, when such reasoning passes for legislative wisdom.

M. de Haauranne quotes, as an example of the determination of the English people to interfere in the mere party arrangements made in their name, the fate of the education clauses in the Factory Bill of last session. Sir James Graham's bill was received with applause by Whigs and Tories; for "when they do agree on the stage their agreement is wonderful;"—the Morning Chronicle exchanged compliments with the Standard, and the Globe became an echo to the Post. There was every appearance of the bill passing on its road in the caravan of legislation with as little discussion, after the first night, as a turnpike act or a law for the better preservation of partridges. But this quiet did not extend beyond Palace-yard: the Dissenters, and more especially the Wesleyans, saw clearly that its result would invest the clergy of the Established Church with new and dangerous power; they protested loudly and firmly; concessions after concessions in the shape of amendments were made in vain; and the agreement of the heads of party to enact a law was, for the first time in English history, melted and solved by the heat of popular indignation.

M. de Haauranne regards the successful resistance of the Dissenters to the Education Bill as a pledge of the future success of the League, though he is well aware that the attachment of the squires to high-rent principles is far and away more powerful than their attachment to High Church principles. His grounds of confidence are, that the English farmers are not less dissatisfied with things as they are than the merchants and manufacturers; their rents are calculated at the highest price of corn which protective laws are designed to produce, but they remain invariable under all the fluctuations of price which are the necessary result of a sliding scale. He sees that fortunes have been made in England by men of every class and calling, save those engaged in agriculture; he hears the farmers themselves declare that theirs is and has been a bad business, and that it is going on from bad to worse; that tenant-farmers are sinking into day-labourers, and day-labourers into paupers; he, therefore, holds it as certain that the agriculturists will join in demanding some change, and as equally certain that any new arrangement other than Free Trade is perfectly impracticable.

Another French writer has put the question in a new and rather striking light. Having shown that the average produce of food in England is inadequate to the support of the population, and that this disproportion is continually increased by the increase of population, he demands that this fact should be taken as the base of all argument with those who protest against being dependent for food on foreigners, and that they should be asked, "what is to be done with the surplus population? What method do you intend to pursue with the numbers over and above the number you are able to feed?" He says there are but three methods—1st, starve them; 2nd, make poverty a capital crime, and hang them; or, 3rd, reduce the population to the limits of food, by periodically massacring all infants of two years old and under throughout the country. And he then shows that either of the two last methods would be infinitely more humane than the present system of gradual reduction of numbers by the lingering process of starvation.

M. de Haauranne's caustic review of the last session is of unmanageable length, else we should gladly have compared it with one of Lord Lyndhurst's annual summaries of Whig defeats and delinquencies. The only measure which he can find meriting unqualified praise is Mr. Gladstone's law permitting the exportation of machinery; and he expresses a hope that this will not be that gentleman's only claim to the title of "Free Trader," tauntingly bestowed upon him by Colonel Sibthorp. M. de Haauranne's review of Irish affairs is less complete than we could wish, and includes some notable errors. He blames the English people for having driven the Irish to raise the cry of repeal, by encouraging those who gave provocation by intemperate attacks on the Irish people and their predominant religion. He finds that the English people were taunted by certain journals with their submission to an Irish majority; that a day of fasting and humiliation was proclaimed in Yorkshire when three Irish Catholics were admitted into office; and he collects some choice specimens of Billingsgate, selected from newspapers and from the most applauded speeches of Exeter-hall, to justify the Irish in seeking for separation. But we must deny that these exhibitions were fair manifestations of the feelings of the people of England; they were "ingenious devices" of party, and employed exclusively for party objects. The very journals which poured such intemperate abuse on the heads of the Irish priests, now propose that they should be taken into the pay of the State; Lord Sandon has dismissed the wooden bible from the seat of his carriage; Lord Wharncliffe eschews reformation societies; the MacGhees and O'Sullivan are allowed "to waste their sweetness on the desert air," and no one is anxious to disturb the suspended animation of Stowell and McNeill. It is, unfortunately, too true, as M. de Haauranne asserts, that the evil these men have done lives after them; that their incendiary harangues, studiously circulated by the Orange party in every part of Ireland, and accompanied by comments harsher than even Exeter Hall would bear, have produced a bitter sense of unmerited wrong, and a consequent feeling of not unnatural alienation in the hearts of an excitable and perhaps an irritable people. It is perfectly true that Exeter Hall has done more to extend the cry of repeal than fifty corn-exchanges and conciliation halls could possibly accomplish; but we deny that Exeter Hall ever spoke the opinions of the people of England. We protest against such a libel on the justice, the fairness, and the intelligence of our countrymen; the disgraceful exhibitions of bigotry which exposed us to the ridicule of all Christendom were mere hypocritical farces got up to serve a party; and there is something like retribution in the penalty that party must pay for having availed itself of the "ingenious devices" of knaves and the senseless bigotry of fools. It is another warning to statesmen to beware of Nemesis.

We have been betrayed into comment against our will, but we could not allow such an error as that of M. de Haauranne to pass without notice. The anti-

Irish cry in England, which he not unreasonably regards as the cause of the anti-English cry in Ireland, was raised by a faction and not by a nation; we should heartily rejoice if the difference between the two had been sooner observed and more carefully explained.

The Art of Composition. By G. F. Graham, Esq. London: Longman and Co.

We have been much pleased with this little work; it is one of the best introductions to the art of English composition with which we are acquainted, leading the reader gradually onward from the formation of simple sentences to the construction of the regular essay. It will be found particularly valuable in home education, and it cannot fail to improve the parent or tutor by whom it is judiciously used, as well as the child or pupil for whose use it is primarily designed. The author has based his system of instruction on the natural laws of thought, and has rendered his work not less valuable as an aid to mental discipline than as a guide to the use of language.

It is not generally known that Lancashire has become the most populous county in the kingdom; such, however, is the fact; and Middlesex, which a short time since stood at the head in point of numbers, is now only rated third.

Liberty is not a paper that we see stuck up at the corner of a street. It is a living power which we feel within us and around us, the protecting genius of the domestic hearth, the guarantee of social rights, and the first rights.—De la Mennais.

THE FUNDS.

| | Nov. Feb. 17 | Mon. Feb. 19 | Tues. Feb. 20 | Wed. Feb. 21 | Thurs. Feb. 22 | Fri. Feb. 23 |
|---------------------|--------------|--------------|---------------|--------------|----------------|--------------|
| Bank Stock..... | 104 | 101 | 100 | 104 | 100 | 100 |
| 3 per Ct. Red. Ann. | 98 | 98 | 98 | 98 | 98 | 98 |
| 3 per Ct. Con. Ann. | 97 | 97 | 97 | 97 | 97 | 97 |
| 3 per Ct. Red. Ann. | 103 | 103 | 103 | 103 | 103 | 103 |
| 3 per Ct. Con. Ann. | 102 | 102 | 102 | 102 | 102 | 102 |
| Long An. Ex. 1860 | 12 | 12 | 12 | 12 | 12 | 12 |
| Cons. for Acc. | 97 | 97 | 97 | 97 | 97 | 97 |
| Ind. Dis. and 10000 | 71 pm. | 70 2 pm. | 70 2 pm. | 70 2 pm. | 65 pm. | 71 pm. |
| India Stock..... | 83 pm. | 83 pm. | — | — | — | 87 pm. |
| Belgian..... | 106 | 106 | 106 | 106 | 106 | 106 |
| Brazilian..... | 79 | 79 | 79 | 79 | 79 | 79 |
| Chilian..... | 105 | 105 | 105 | 105 | 105 | 105 |
| Columb. ex. Vene. | 14 | 14 | 14 | 14 | 14 | 14 |
| Danish..... | 40 | — | — | — | — | — |
| Dutch 3 per Ct. | 101 | 102 | 102 | 102 | 102 | 102 |
| Dutch 2 1/2 per Ct. | 85 | — | — | — | — | — |
| Mexican, 1857 .. | 84 | 84 | 84 | 84 | 84 | 84 |
| Portuguese, conv. | 46 | 46 | 46 | 46 | 46 | 46 |
| Buenos Ayres..... | 38 | 37 | — | — | — | — |
| Spanish 5 per Ct. | 28 | 28 | 28 | 28 | 28 | 28 |
| Do. 3 per Ct..... | 32 | 32 | 32 | 32 | 32 | 32 |
| Peruvian..... | 31 | 30 | 30 | 30 | 30 | 30 |

MARKETS.

CORN MARKET.

MARK-LANE, Monday, Feb. 19.—There was a larger supply of English Wheat at market this morning than we have had for some weeks. Much of it was in inferior condition, and for such 1s. to 2s. less was obtained. Even the best dry samples with difficulty supported last week's rates. The holders of free Foreign were unwilling to accept lower rates, and the sale was in consequence very limited. There was less inquiry for Wheat in bond. All but the finest samples of Malting Barley were 1s. cheaper. Beans and Peas of all kinds 1s. dearer. There was a good supply of English, Scotch, and Irish Oats, and the demand was not brisk, but prices were not lower than last week.

S. H. LUCAS and SON.

| Currency per imperial measure. | | | |
|--------------------------------|------------|------------------------|------------|
| Wheat, English, Red | 45s to 55s | Peas, Maple | 28s to 30s |
| New, do. Old | 52s — 61s | Malt, Pale Suffolk and | — |
| Do., do. Old | 52s — 61s | Norfolk..... | 54s — 58s |
| New, do. White | 48s — 60s | Chevalier | 60s — 63s |
| Old, do. do. | 60s — 64s | Brown..... | 58s — 60s |
| Danish..... | 57s — 63s | Oats, English Feed | 20s — 22s |
| Stettin..... | 50s — 57s | Do. Short | 21s — 23s |
| Barley, Malting..... | 34s — 36s | Scotch Feed | 21s — 23s |
| Distilling | 32s — 34s | Do. Potato | 23s — 25s |
| Grinding | 28s — 32s | Irish Feed | 19s — 20s |
| Beans, Tick | 26s — 27s | Do. Short | 20s — 22s |
| Harrow | 28s — 30s | Do. Black | 19s — 20s |
| Pigeon | 32s — 34s | Do. Galway | 17s — 19s |
| Old Harrow | 35s — 38s | Flour, town made and | — |
| Peas, White | 28s — 30s | best country marks | 45s — 50s |
| Do., Bollers | 31s — 33s | Norfolk and Suf- | — |
| Grey | 26s — 28s | folk | 40s — 44s |

Account of CORN, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 12th to the 17th of Feb. 1844, both days inclusive.

| | Wheat. | Barley. | Oats. | Beans. | Peas. |
|---------------|--------|---------|-------|--------|-------|
| English | 4607 | 6536 | 2456 | 1617 | 916 |
| Scotch | 695 | 3928 | 3394 | — | — |
| Irish | — | 944 | 21835 | — | — |
| Foreign | 6220 | 1287 | 130 | — | 220 |

Flour, 6937 sacks. Malt, 5492 qrs.

MARK-LANE, Friday, Feb. 23.—The arrivals of Wheat since Monday are moderate. The trade, though quiet, is firm at Monday's prices. There is a good supply of English Barley; the demand is not brisk, and Monday's rates are with difficulty supported. We continue well supplied with Irish Oats, and there is also a fair supply of English and Scotch. Prices are just the same as Monday. The duty on Wheat fell to 18s., and on Oats to 7s., yesterday.

S. H. LUCAS and SON.

Account of CORN, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 16th of Feb. to the 23rd of Feb., both inclusive.

| | English. | Irish. | Foreign. |
|-------------|----------|--------|----------|
| Wheat..... | 2890 | — | 600 |
| Barley..... | 5850 | 760 | — |
| Oats..... | 3070 | 14,370 | — |

Flour 4770 sacks.

A WEEKLY REPORT OF THE NUMBER OF QUARTERS, and the AVERAGE PRICE OF CORN and GRAIN, sold in the several Counties of England and Wales (comprising the Two Hundred and Ninety Towns named in the Act of the 5th Vic., cap. 14), which governs Duty.

WEEK ENDED FEBRUARY 20, 1844.

| | WHEAT. | BARLEY. | OATS. | BEANS. |
|-----------|------------|-------------|-------------|-------------|
| | Qrs. sold. | Qrs. sold. | Qrs. sold. | Qrs. sold. |
| Weekly | 114,926 53 | 6105,788 33 | 4 60,494 19 | 6 13,302 30 |
| Average.. | 53 2 | 33 4 | 19 0 | 30 10 |
| Duty..... | 18 0 | 5 0 | 7 0 | 11 6 |

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 20.
BANKRUPTCY.

- R. BECKLEY, North Audley-street, grocer. [Jones, Gray's Inn-square.]
 R. L. STURTEVANT, Bethnal-green, soap manufacturer. [Watson and Sons, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street.]
 W. G. ROWLEY, Dover-road, Southwark, wine merchant. [Buchanan, Basinghall-street.]
 I. LUMLEY, Cornwell-road, victualler. [Parnell and Tanqueray, New Broad-street.]
 T. BRYSON, Addie street, City, commission agent. [Turner and Hensman, Basing-lane, Chesham.]
 J. C. PETRIE, Bedlington, Durham, miller. [Leadbitter, Staple-inn, Chelton, Morpeth.]
 T. WESTERN, Broughford, Devonshire, maltster. [Stogdon, Kester, Keddell and Co., Lime-street.]
 J. GLAZEBROOK, Birmingham, carpenter. [Hebbert, Birmingham.]
 R. DAVENPORT, jun., Birmingham, plumber. [Reece, Birmingham.]

DIVIDENDS.

March 12. Collier, Hythe, Kent, draper—March 14. R. Noyce, New Church-street, Lisson-grove, plumber—March 14. A. Jopp, Cornhill, ship broker—March 12. A. Wales, Spring-street, Bradwell, wood splitter—March 13. T. Weldon, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, tailor—March 13. J. H. Butterworth, Leadenhall-market, victualler—March 19. J. Graham, jun., Newcastle-upon-Tyne, spirit merchant—March 14. J. Forster and Co., Carlisle, Cumberland, bankers—March 12. R. Rowley, Bishopwearmouth, Durham, scrivener—March 12. W. Dunnett, Manchester, commission agent—March 12. J. Buxton, Manchester, builder—March 19. T. Mason, Harford, Devonshire, miller—March 13. R. T. Abbott and A. T. Tebbitt, Birmingham, wholesale tea dealers—March 13. R. Mitchell, Leicester, banker—March 15. J. Singleton, Aston, Warwickshire, wire drawer.

CERTIFICATES.

March 14. A. Scott, Cambridge-street, Golden-square, appraiser—March 12. J. Whipple, Crown-street, Finsbury, stay manufacturer—March 14. J. Turner, Grange-place, Hoxton, cabinet maker—March 12. A. A. Newman, High-street, White-chapel, saddler—March 12. J. Abbott, Amwell-street, builder—March 14. A. Blazell, Upper Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square—March 13. W. Pearson, Chelmsford, draper—March 14. J. Wheatley, Kennington-cross, livery stablekeeper—March 21. H. H. Fisher, Bury-street, St. James's, tailor—March 12. T. Pottinger, Charles-street, Manchester-square, merchant.

SCOTCH REQUISITIONS.

J. ALEXANDER, Montrose, manufacturer—A. KER and CO., Greenock, merchants—R. MARSHALL, Glasgow, tea merchant—D. GRAHAM, Kilmarnock, skinner—W. CRAWFORD, Large, Ayrshire, cattle dealer.

RAMS FOR RAISING WATER without Labour.
 where a fall can be obtained—Deep Well Engines—Pumps of every description—Buildings heated by hot water, &c. Every description of Fountains erected by F. ROE, 70, STRAND, Ornamental and House Engineer.

PROTECTION TO AGRICULTURE.—At a numerous Meeting (convened by the Tenant Farmers) of the Landowners, Occupiers, and other Friends of British Agriculture, held in the Town-hall at Wetherby, on Thursday, the 1st day of February, 1874, for the purpose of adopting such measures as may best resist the present dangerous proceedings of the Anti-Corn Law League.

The Earl of HAREWOOD in the Chair.
 It was resolved unanimously:—
 Moved by Mr. W. Hannam, seconded by the Hon. Edwin Lascelles, Resolved—1st. That the national and local burdens imposed upon the land render the maintenance of a system of protection absolutely necessary to enable British agriculture to compete with the untaxed soils and cheap labour of foreign states, and that the legislative protection which is now afforded is not more than is equivalent to these burdens, and not more than is afforded to the other productive arts of the country.
 Moved by G. L. Fox, Esq., seconded by Mr. John Rhodes, 2nd. It is with regret and indignation that we witness the increasing attempts which are being made throughout the kingdom by means of false statements, and under pretence of advocating the principles of Free Trade, to delude the Working Classes, disunite Landlord and Tenant, and to prejudice both against the best interests of the Country.
 Moved by Mr. Tennant, seconded by Joseph Dent, Esq., 3rd. That the time has now arrived when it is the duty of every one interested in Agriculture, involving as it does the welfare of all classes, strenuously to oppose the pernicious designs of the Anti-Corn Law League.
 Moved by the Hon. Arthur Lascelles, seconded by the Rev. B. Remondou, 4th. That this Meeting pledges itself to use every exertion for the maintenance of the present protective system, and that a Committee, consisting of the following persons, be now formed for this purpose, and for co-operating with any County or Central Committee in upholding the same:—The Earl of Harewood, Geo. Lane Fox, Esq., the Hon. Edwin Lascelles, Joseph Dent, Esq., the Hon. Arthur Lascelles, Thomas L. Fairfax, Esq., Geo. Lane Fox, jun., Esq., Colonel Markham, Edward York, Esq., Rev. B. Remondou, Messrs. Kell, Maughan, Gaunt, Hildale, John Rhodes, Coates, W. Hannam, J. Parkin, J. Stephenson, C. Wardman, G. Rhodes, W. Crosby, William Acoub, J. H. Downes, Tennant, Harecastle, and Allen.
 Moved by Colonel Markham, seconded by Edward York, Esq., 5th. That petitions to both Houses of Parliament, founded on the foregoing resolutions, be prepared by the committee, and sent for signature to all the townships within the district of the Wetherby Market.
 Moved by Thomas L. Fairfax, Esq., seconded by Mr. Gaunt, 6th. That these resolutions be printed for circulation, and advertised in the newspapers.
 The Earl of Harewood having left the chair, It was moved by George Lane Fox, Esq., seconded by Charles A. Fischer, Esq., and carried by acclamation.
 That the best thanks of this meeting be given to the Earl of Harewood for his efficient services in the chair this day.

SHIRTS AND STOCKS.—W. E. WHITELOCK, 166, STRAND, established twenty years, solicits the attention of gentlemen to the Shirts he supplies for 6s. 6d. and 6s. 6d. each, including washing. They are made from Mansfield's Patent Shirting, with blue linen fronts, collars, and wrists, the very best work, the Corazza and other new styles, and are superior to what are usually sold for 7s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. Also, all linen, 10s. 6d. and 12s. 6d., usual price 1s. 6d. and 1s. 6d. The measure requisite is the neck, chest, and wrist, tight. One sent as sample to any part of the kingdom free, upon receipt of a Post-office order for the amount, with 1s. in addition as part payment of carriage. W. E. W.'s Stocks are unequalled, particularly his Kevlarsting Cloth, with bows, 7s. 6d.; long ends, 2s. 6d.; and rich satin, 6s. 6d.; long ends, 6s. 6d. One sent per post free on receiving the amount, and the length and breadth required in inches. Outfits supplied for all climates at the lowest wholesale prices.

PATRONIZED AND FAVORED BY HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN, HER H. PRINCE ALBERT, THE ROYAL FAMILY, AND THE SEVERAL COURTS OF EUROPE.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the Growth and Preservation and Beautifying the Human Hair. Price 3s. 6d.—7s. Family Bottles (equal to 4 small) 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s.
CAUTION.—SPURIOUS IMITATIONS are frequently offered for sale under a FICTITIOUS name or the word "GENUINE." It is therefore imperative on purchasers to see that the words "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" are on the Wrapper of each bottle, and on the back of the wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 29,028 letters. All others are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS. The principle on which "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" is prepared, is confined solely to the knowledge and practice of A. ROWLAND and SON, who are still at an immense expense in completing its preparation, and the amalgamation of its PURELY VEGETABLE MATERIALS renders abortive any attempt to discover its component parts.
 ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for Improving and Regulating the Skin and Complexion. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included.
 ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, renders the Teeth beautifully White and preserves the Gums. Price 2s. 6d. per box, duty included.
CAUTION.—It is imperative on purchasers to see that the word "ROWLAND'S" is on the Wrapper of each article. For the protection of the Public from fraud and imposition, the Honourable Commissioners of Her Majesty's Stamps have authorized the Proprietors' Signature to be engraved on the Government Stamp, thus, A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden, which is affixed to the Kalydor and Odonto. Sold by them and by Chemists and Perfumers.
 * All others are SPURIOUS IMITATIONS!!!

WORTHY OF REMARK.—The fact that many of the principal Hospitals in the kingdom—among which it is sufficient to name Guy's, St. George's, and the Westminster, in the metropolis, and the Manchester, Bristol, and Brighton Infirmary—have adopted BETT'S PATENT BRAND, in preference to Foreign, affords a sufficient guarantee to the consumers of Brandy of the extreme purity of the article; the connoisseur being, at the same time, baffled in his attempt to distinguish between its flavour and that of Fine Cognac. Price, pale or coloured, in quantities not less than Two Gallons, Eighteen Shillings per Gallon, at the Distillery, No. 7, Smithfield-barn, leading to St. John-street.

THE TOILET of BEAUTY furnishes innumerable proofs of the high estimation in which GOWLAND'S LOTION is held by the most distinguished possessors of brilliant Complexions. This elegant preparation comprehends the preservation of the Complexion, both from the effects of Cutaneous Malady and the operation of variable temperature, by refreshing its delicacy, and sustaining the brightest tints with which beauty is adorned. "Monsieur Beau, London," is in white letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is genuine. Price 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d., quarts 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Medicine Vendors.

WEAK LEGS, KNEES, AND ANKLES.—SURGEONS in England, Ireland, and Scotland, continue to recommend BAILLY'S ELASTIC LACED STOCKINGS, KNEE CAPS, and ANKLE BOOTS; they are light, cool, and warranted to wash. Since the reduction of postage, afflicted persons in the country can have any bandage by post, for a few pence, by forwarding their measure. The particular property of the Stocking is to give constant support in varicose veins, weak, swollen, or dropsical affections of the legs, or in any case requiring equal pressure: the Knee Cap will be of great service where the knee-joint requires support, from accident to the pain of the knee, after inflammation, rheumatic or gouty affections, or in any case where, from weakness of the part, support may be required.—W. H. Bailly, 418, Oxford-street, London.

LOWDEN'S CELEBRATED COUGH PILLS, a safe and effectual cure for Coughs, Colds, Shortness of Breath, Asthma, &c. &c. They promote free expectoration, and hence prevent that accumulation of phlegm which causes a sense of choking; allay irritability, tickling in the throat, and relieve that sense of oppression, fulness, and difficulty of breathing, which nightly deprives the patient of rest.
 In Asthma and Coughs of long standing they are invaluable, and universally admitted to be the best known Medicine; in any case where they do not effect a perfect cure they afford such relief to the sufferer during the paroxysms or fits as to induce him henceforth never to be without them.
 Sold by Mr. Lowden, Chemist, 208, Fleet-street, London, in boxes at 1s. 1d., 7s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; also by one or more respectable Medicine Vendors in each town in the United Kingdom.

STOOPING OF THE SHOULDERS AND CONTRACTION of the CHEST, so injurious in Young Persons and oppressive to Invalids and the Indrnt, entirely prevented, and gently and effectually removed, by the occasional use of the Patent ST. JAMES'S CHEST-EXPANDER, which is light, simple, easily employed outwardly or invisibly, without bands beneath the arms, uncomfortable constraint, or impediment to exercise. The great improvement it causes in the figure is immediately apparent; but the paramount benefit of this invention is its obvious tendency to prevent the incursion of consumption and other pulmonary diseases in youth, and to afford a comfortable support to the chest and back in the aged and weakly, or those who are accustomed to sedentary occupations. Full particulars may be obtained on application to Mr. A. Binyon, 40, Tavistock-street, Strand, London, by enclosing a postage stamp.

BELL'S BALM OF ROSEMARY FOR COUGHS is justly esteemed the safest and most certain medicine ever invented, and will be found to act like a charm in allaying coughs of every kind. Rosemary has long been used as a domestic remedy in cases of coughs and colds in the form of tea, or by infusing a few sprigs in Gruel and taken at bedtime. The Balm possesses the medicinal properties of the plant, which are tonic, expectorant, and diaphoretic. It acts gently on the skin and mucous membrane of the lungs and bronchial tubes, thus carrying off the disease by perspiration and expectoration. One trial will prove its extraordinary powers. As a defence to the chest, BELL'S MEDICATED TISSUE PAPER will be found invaluable. Being impervious to air, it effectually excludes cold and damp, and simply requires to be pinned and worn outside the flannel in the form of a large plaster, or tacked to a piece of silk or any other light material.
 May be had of J. Balzer, Chemist, 82, St. John-street-road, Islington; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Edwards, 67, St. Paul's Churchyard; and Hooper, 24, Great Russell-street, Covent-garden. In bottles at 1s. 1d. and 1/2s. 9d., and in sheets 2d. each.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH, Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEEDANEUM, price 4s. 6d.—Patronized by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and his Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. This valuable SUCCEEDANEUM for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity, is far superior to anything ever before used, as it is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and in a short time becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary. It arrests all further progress of decay, and renders them again useful in mastication. All persons can use Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEEDANEUM themselves with ease, without the aid of a dentist, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 63, Berners-street, Oxford-street, price 4s. 6d., and will be sent by post to any part of the kingdom.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. Thomas continues to supply the loss of teeth, and has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, which will be found very superior to all others, as they will never decay nor become discoloured, and their perfect resemblance to nature defies detection even by the closest observer. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. The charges will be found less than most dentists.—Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 63, Berners-street, Oxford-street. At home from Eleven till Four.

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED WITHOUT SPRINGS, CLASPS, OR WIRES, LOOSE TEETH FASTENED, and FILLING DECAYED TEETH WITH MINERAL MARMORATUM.
 MESSRS. LE DRAY and SON, Surgeon-Dentists, 42, BERNERS-STREET, OXFORD-STREET, continue to restore DECAYED TEETH with their celebrated MINERAL MARMORATUM, applied without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing and curing the toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary. They also fasten loose Teeth, whether arising from age, neglect, the use of Calomel, or disease of the Gums. Incurable, artificial, or natural teeth of surpassing beauty, fixed from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, at the following Paris charges:—
 A Single Tooth £0 10 0
 A Set 5 5 0

Arranged on a principle yet unrivalled, rendering it impossible to distinguish the artificial teeth from the natural ones; answering most satisfactorily all the purposes of the original teeth in mastication and articulation, imparting to the countenance a younger and improved appearance, protecting the adjoining teeth, and remaining perfectly secure in their places.
 Artificial Teeth repaired, remodelled, and brought to their former shape and appearance.
 Artificial Palates of the most improved construction.—At home every day from Ten till Six.
 N.B. Removed from 60, Newman-street, to 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

CORROBORATION OF THE INNOCENT YET RELIEVING PROPERTIES OF BLAIR'S GOUT AND RHEUMATIC PILLS.

TO MR. FROUT, 229, STRAND, LONDON.
 Sir,—In recompense for the great benefit I have received from the use of Blair's Gout and Rheumatic Pills, I feel it a duty I have long owed to the afflicted with the excruciating torture of the Gout, to make your valuable remedy more extensively known.
 I am upwards of seventy years of age, and have, when occasion required, used them for more than twelve years past. I have at all times found nothing to relieve me but them, and my firm belief is that they are not composed of anything injurious to the constitution, as I always find, after their use, my general bodily health renewed, and my appetite considerably sharpened.
 Should you, Sir, think this statement worthy of insertion in your list of testimonials, I can with truth solemnly declare the above.
 April 16th, 1872. I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
 P.S.—I will with pleasure answer any application in proof of this testimony.
 The never-failing effects of BLAIR'S GOUT and RHEUMATIC PILLS in curing every description of Gout and Rheumatism, have secured to them a celebrity unequalled by any medicine of past or present times. They not only give relief in a few hours, where the patient has been driven nearly to madness by the excruciating tortures of this disease, but restore to perfect health in an inconceivable short space of time. They are equally speedy and certain in rheumatism, either chronic or acute, lumbago, sciatica, pains in the head or face, and indeed for every rheumatic or gouty affection; in fact, such has been the rapidity, perfect ease, and complete safety of this medicine, that it has astonished all who have taken it; and there is not a city, town, or village in the kingdom, but contains many grateful evidences of its benign influence.
 Sold by Thomas FROUT, 229, Strand, London; and by his appointment by all respectable Medicine Vendors throughout the United Kingdom. Price 3s. 6d. per box.
 Ask for Blair's Gout and Rheumatic Pills, and observe the name and address of "Thomas FROUT, 229, Strand, London," impressed upon the Government Stamp affixed to each box of the genuine Medicine.

Prior to 6d., cloth gilt edges.
MRS. LOUDON'S LADIES' COMPANION
 THE FLOWER GARDEN.
 Being an Alphabetical Arrangement of all the Ornamental Plants and Flowers grown in Gardens and Shrubberies, with full directions for their culture.
 London: Published by William Smith, 113, Fleet-street.

Just published, price 1s.
PRACTICAL HINTS ON NEW AND OLD MANURES. By JOHN DODDRISEN HUMPHREYS, Esq., Author of the "Electro-Physiology of Man," &c. &c., with an explanation of the author's discovery of the governing Principles of Vegetable Growth, full information as to the use and superior advantages for Wheat, Turnips, &c., of the new manure, called "Humphreys's Farmer's Compound," as manufactured, at 12s. per cwt., by Messrs. DAVY, MACNIVEN, and Co., 100, Upper Thames-street, London.
 Longman, Brown, Green, and Longmans.

On Wednesday next,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, No. 80, for MARCH.

- CONTENTS:—
 1. Shakespearean Criticism and Acting—Macbeth.
 2. Progress of Art.
 3. Knight's Ecclesiastical Architecture of Italy.
 4. Stratford.
 5. The Land Tax.
 6. Niebuhr and the Classical Museum.
 7. Etruscan Monuments.
 8. British Mission to Shoa.
 9. Promotion of Architecture (with Illustrations).
 10. Earl Spencer and the State of Parties.
 Postscript and New Publications.
 Samuel Clarke, 15, Pall Mall East.

CAUSES OF, AND REMEDIES FOR, THE EXISTING DISTRESS OF THE COUNTRY. BY JOHN WADE, AUTHOR OF "BRITISH HISTORY CHRONOLOGICALLY ARRANGED," "THE HISTORY OF THE MIDDLE CLASSES," &c.

THE WEEKLY CHRONICLE OF FEBRUARY
 the 24th instant will contain the First Sections of the above interesting and important Work, how first published, and which will be continued Weekly until completed.
 A LETTER to SIR ROBERT PEEL from COTTON TWIST on O'CONNELL at the LEAGUE MEETING of Wednesday night appears in the WEEKLY CHRONICLE of this Day.
 The following are among the peculiar features of the WEEKLY CHRONICLE:—
 I. The celebrated Articles on IRISH HISTORY, and the REBELLION of 1798: the only safe Guide to a Knowledge of the Irish Policy, essential to the integrity of the Empire at this important crisis.
 II. COTTON TWIST REDIVIVUS! A New Series, Weekly, of the LETTERS of COTTON TWIST, "FREE TRADE! PLenty to DO! HIGH PROFITS! GOOD WAGES! and CHEAP BREAD!"
 III. SCALPEL'S ANATOMY of the PERRAGE: forming a complete History of the Peerage of the United Kingdom, for the Information of the People.
 Sold by all News-vendors in town and country.—Office, 337, Strand.

MR. BEARD'S DAGUERRETYPE, or PHOTOGRAPHIC PORTRAITS.—These inimitable and much admired Portraits, in which further improvements have lately been effected, are taken by the Patentee, at 85, King William-street, City; 34, Pall Mall; and at the Royal Polytechnic Institution, 309, Regent-street, to whom, also, Licences are granted for exercising the Invention in provincial towns and districts.

CHINESE COLLECTION and GRAND DISTRIBUTION (admission free), value £5000, on the principles of the Anti-Corn Law League, consisting of Chinese curiosities and Parisian novelties, on April 8, at the Chinese and Parisian Magazine, 7, Old Jewry. Every subscriber will obtain a handsome prize, consisting of Chinese jars, pictures, &c., or a splendid package of French ingenuity and taste. The drawing will take place under the highest patronage. The prizes are now on show at the above establishment. Tickets, 2s. each, may be obtained by applying at above, or at the retail branches of the Chinese and Parisian Magazine, 7, Old Jewry, and corner of the Old Jewry, Cheapside; also of Hewitt and Co., 18, Philip-lane. W. Ancier and P. Ledoux, rue de Lombardie, Paris, will supply the Parisian articles, and the indefatigable exertions of the proprietors for the last ten years will furnish a magnificent collection from the Celestial Empire.
 TAYLOR, Brothers, and HEWETT, Chinese and Parisian Magazine, wholesale department, 7, Old Jewry, Cheapside.

HENRY PENNY'S PATENT METALLIC MEMORANDUM BOOKS, ruled or plain, in great variety of sizes and bindings. The advantages of this invention are, that, with pencil and paper prepared in a peculiar manner, the writer obtains all the effect of ink. The paper presents a beautiful glossy surface, over which the pencil glides without any difficulty, and the marks made by it are indelible. To be had at the Manufacturers, 8, and 9, OLD BAILEY, LONDON, and of all the principal Stationers in town and country. The trade supplied direct, or through any wholesale stationer.

CAUTION.—In order to protect the public from imitations, the name "H. Penny's Improved Patent," with the number of the book, is marked on the back of each.

TO IRONMONGERS, BRAZIERS, AND TIN-PLATE WORKERS.—For immediate disposal, an old established and respectable business in the above branches, comprising a well-stocked modern Stock from £800 to £2000, good fixtures and tools. Situated in London between 20 and 30 miles, in a large thoroughfare town, with populous vicinity. No premium required, and part of the amount may be repaid upon good security being given.
 Apply (if by letter, prepaid) to Kitchen and Moore, St. Giles's, Barbican, London.

THE AMERICAN ROCKING-CHAIR.—None are genuine unless they have a "Luck, Kent, and Cumming" patent on the bottom. This chair, so much admired by all who have visited America, for the remarkable ease, pleasure, and comfort which it affords, is imported, and for sale at the extensive Carpet and Upholstery Establishments of LUCK, KENT, and CUMMING, No. 4, Regent-street; Messrs. Hall, 68, London-wall; and WM. CUMMING and Co., 96, Aldersgate-garden. It is asserted with confidence that there is no place of furniture in use in civilized society more sought after and approved of when known. The price, 25s., with a liberal discount to the trade. Stout persons and invalids will find these chairs invaluable.

HELIANTHUS ANNUUS, FLEETWOOD'S celebrated SUN FLOWER SEED, produces the most beautiful OIL from its seed for Cattle and Poultry. The leaves, for cows, contain the milk, and the stalk and branches, when soaked, will make the best hemp.
 All orders to be directed to G. F., care of Mr. JAY, tobacconist, 114, Blackfriars-road.
 Sufficient to plant one Acre £0 7 6
 Ditto half do 0 4 6
 Ditto one-fourth do 0 3 0
 Post-office orders duly attended to, and forwarded to every part of the kingdom.

THE NEW LIGHT.—A GREAT NOVELTY.
 The patent CAMPHINE LAMP gives a light of surpassing softness, and purity, without any kind of grease or dirt, smoke, or smell. The lamp is simply and beautifully constructed, and can be fitted to description of lamp, pedestal, or gas fitting. It is not easily put out of action. The Camphine (also a patent) is 4s. per gallon, and is so pure that if spilt on any article of dress or furniture will not leave either stain, while it consumes so slowly that, at the cost of three farthings an hour, it gives a light equal to twelve mould candles, without any noise. It will be found far less expensive than any, and incomparably more all existing lights. To be seen burning at Rippon and Burton's (the sole and retail agents for English's Patent Camphine),—N.B. The Patent Camphine Lamp has "Rippon and Burton, Wells-street, London," conspicuously placed on its head. The public are cautioned not to be misled.

DAYLIGHT AT NIGHT! CAMPHINE
 The patent Camphine Lamp gives a rich light, surpassing in purity and brilliancy, is simple in construction, and emits no smoke or smell. May be seen burning at F. Barrett's, Gasfitter, and Lamp Warehouse, 25, Oxford-street, where a large assortment of lamps is selected from, all at the lowest possible price. Any Lamp fitted with a Camphine head. Patent Camphine, 4s. per gallon. Gasfitter, 25, Oxford-street, one door west of Bathhouse-lane.
 Mail Lamps, 11s. 6d.; Ground Glass Patent Solar Lamps, 5s. 6d.; Palmer's Patent Candle Lamps, from 5s. A most elegant and useful Table, Bracket, Slideboard, and suspending Lamp, in ornate style, at extraordinary low prices. Lamp cleaned or altered to the best style. Lamp shades, 6s.; cottons, 4d. per doz. Palmer's Patent Candle, 8d. per lb.

London: Printed (at the office of Palmer and Gifford, Old Jewry, near the Custom-house) by A. W. FAUSTON, of Barton-on-Jure, and published by him at TEN LANCET SQUARE, Saturday, February 24, 1874.

THE LEAGUE.

No. 23.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 2, 1844.

[3d.]

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND, £100,000.

All subscribers of £1 and upwards to the ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUND FUND, will be entitled to, and receive a copy, weekly, of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have forwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the Offices of THE LEAGUE, Newall's-buildings, Manchester, or 37, Fleet-street, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND, are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council respectfully request that their friends, in all places where committees for raising subscriptions to the £100,000 Fund have not been already formed, will proceed to their formation as soon as possible, and transmit their names to the LEAGUE Offices, Manchester.

WHAT NEXT?

The struggle with Monopoly allows of no intermission. We have to succeed by a succession of efforts against the dead weight of a power which regains its position the moment we relax. The Bread-tax is law; and the landlords command not only their dependant tenantry, but the Ministry and the Legislature. All they have to do is to secure the post they occupy. They have nothing to carry, and nobody to convince. The only success they need is that of resistance. Their best energy is the Vis Inertia. But with us, to pause is to be defeated. We must advance, or it is useless to have moved at all. Every advantage from past exertions and sacrifice is forfeited, unless they be followed up with similar vigour. And this applies, not only to the Council of the League, and its most prominent advocates, agents, and missionaries, but to its members generally, to the friends of Free Trade throughout the country. Their motto must still be "Onwards!" They must reckon nothing done while anything remains to do: for in that remainder consists the worth and virtue of the whole. Every thing remains, for the repeal of the Food Monopoly remains to be accomplished. Hence the occasion for continually answering the question in our readers' minds, "What next?"

For those localities which have not yet embodied their zeal in the tangible form of contributions to the great fund, which, in its full extent, is essential to the operations that have been undertaken, the reply is obvious. They have to furnish their proportion of the means of combined, and often costly, action, to the central body and moving spring of the agitation. In the northern part of the kingdom this has, in a considerable degree, been accomplished. A spirit has been manifested which the wealthy lords of the soil have, as yet, found it as vain to emulate as to abuse. They have promised to "go ahead" of our fund, and we should like to see them; always provided that the money be spent not less honestly than ours: for the purposes of a legitimate advocacy, and not for those of corruption or oppression. To the southern part of the kingdom we now look for a response to the liberality evinced in Lancashire, Yorkshire, and Scotland. That is their next move; in such way and manner as the circumstances and habits of the people of each several locality may point out as most efficient. There is another work in hand, which may in some districts keep pace with, while in others it should promptly follow, the collection of subscriptions towards the fund. It is to that other work that we would now direct attention.

In the plan of the present campaign—if we may be allowed to use with impunity as military a phrase—the electoral body was indicated as the tribunal to which the League makes its appeal. We proposed to carry our cause into their court, and to ask of them the reversal of the unjust and ruinous decision of the Parliament. But the power of voters is far from being confined to elections. The time of reward or punishment only occurs at intervals; that of responsibility endures always. This is what we wish electors to make their representatives distinctly feel. Let them not quietly submit to be misrepresented. If they be in danger of it, and on such a question as the Corn Laws, let them give fair warning of the consequences. Mr. Villiers's motion for the total repeal of those laws will be again brought forward this session. Free-Trade voters should memorialize their members to support it. Such a communication belongs legitimately to the connexion between a member of Parliament and his constituents. Let there be no offensive dictation, but an earnest, temperate, and decisive expression of the wishes of electors. Make the case quite plain. Leave no ambiguity as to your object. Set open no door for compromise. And let that which gives weight to your remonstrance be equally distinct. Authenticate your memorial by your signatures and addresses. There is nothing like a distinct understanding, and no mistake. Let no man who has been borne into Parliament upon your shoulders, and who may again present himself as a candidate for your suffrages whenever the tactics of party require a dissolution, talk of your names being copied from the tombstones. Members will ponder over such documents. Their seven years' lease of legislative power will not be turned into a tenancy-at-will, but the next election will present itself more vividly to their imaginations. They will think twice before coming into collision with your declared determination upon a matter so deeply affecting your interests. Neglect not this step. It is the next thing to be done. Two facts will at any rate be ascertained by it: first, the strength of Free-Trade principles in the constituency to which you belong; and secondly, the degree of sympathy and co-operation upon which you may calculate in your present representatives. A third result is yet more important than either. To get up these memorials, you must canvass the opinions of the voters in your several districts, wards, or parishes, upon the great question at issue. That canvass will be the best possible preparation, and an essential preparation, for purifying and perfecting the registration. And this is a further step in advance towards which we are tending in the progress of the Anti-Corn-Law agitation.

Into the mode and details of these proceedings we do not now enter. Directions, full and plain, according to the views of the Council, will be speedily furnished to our friends throughout the kingdom, either by means of this journal or by circular, to those with whom we are, or will put ourselves in correspondence. Our present object is to announce that such instructions are preparing, and to aid their efficiency. The declared and authentically-recorded opinion of a commanding majority of the electoral body is the aim of the League. In addition to that, and in contemplation of a general election—which, come when it may, will be a poll of the constituents upon the question of Free Trade or Monopoly—we desire the full and just registration of all advocates of our principles who are entitled to vote; and the exclusion of those whom, as we know, the monopolists have, wrongfully and in large numbers, placed upon the lists of voters. In whatever is necessary for the accomplishment of these ends we call for individual and universal co-operation. In forming committees; in collecting and giving information which may tend to substantiate a good claim to a vote, or detect a bad one; in completing a reliable report of the principles and opinions of electors; in discussing the question, amongst voters especially, so as to enlighten the ignorant, confirm the timid or wavering, convert the prejudiced, elucidate facts, and refute calumnies: in these and other modes which will suggest themselves, all can co-operate; and now is the time. Our work is not of a nature to be done vicariously. Neither subscriptions alone, nor the services, essential to success though they be, for which subscriptions will pay, can suffice for its achievement. The indefatigable toils of leaders do not supersede the active energy of those with whom they are confederated. In our multitudes, we must everywhere be up and doing. Secure in the military discipline of its influence, Monopoly may rest on the trainbands it commands; but we must raise the posse comitatus. "Help! help! everywhere," is our cry; the cry, not of desperation, but of anticipated triumph. Come on, and share in this great national movement, by which the worst atrocity of class legislation will be for ever abrogated. Let exertions redouble the blow already given by subscriptions, and shatter to atoms the fallacy that this is a got-up agitation, a factions and interested, a limited and vain endeavour on the part of a few to appear to be the many. We invite the experiment; we brave the test. Were it so, long ago it must have died away, instead of ceaselessly gathering strength, as it has done. To work, then; in the moral power of your principles, and the activity of your zeal. To work, for the deliverance of the poor and needy, the recovery of industrial rights, the return of trade, commerce, and prosperity, and the defeat of class oppression and cupidity. Let every one earn his "charter and freehold of rejoicing" in the emancipation of industry by electoral integrity and patriotism. The victory will be for millions and for ages; but the needful work of the day, wherein each can help, is told in three words,—The Canvass, the Memorial, the Registration!

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

THE FREE-TRADE MIRROR OF PARLIAMENT FOR THE SESSION 1844.

Fourth Week, ending Saturday, March 2.

Parliament, this week, has afforded but little, or rather nothing, for our FREE TRADE MIRROR to reflect: but this is not owing to the Free Traders in the House of Commons. They were all in the field early with notices of motions, which would have raised abundant discussion, but have been prevented from bringing them on by causes, the nature of which we must explain.

On Mondays and Fridays, by a special rule of the House of Commons, Government business takes precedence of all other: the intermediate days, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays, are given up to general purposes. Any member can raise a discussion on the occasion of the House going into a Committee of Supply, the old constitutional principle being still recognised, that the Government must at least listen to statements of grievances, if it will not rectify them, before any money is voted. Mr. Sharman Crawford has twice this session asserted this principle; and it is a very proper and very wholesome thing to keep the country in remembrance of this, its precious, ancient, constitutional right. But on account of the great difference between ancient and modern times, and the essential necessity that there exists for making due provision for the payment of our army, our navy, and our great civil establishments over all the world, a habit has arisen of not interfering with the votes of supply by anything which would stop their consideration for an indefinite period. For instance, it would be felt to be a vexatious thing if Lord John Russell, or Mr. Villiers, or Mr. Cobden, instead of making independent or substantive propositions of motions, were to raise debates, lasting for a week or a fortnight, on Ireland or the Corn Laws, on the question of the SPEAKER leaving the chair, in order that the House may go into a Committee of Supply. It is, therefore, now the general rule that all great debates should be brought on by formal propositions (of which notice has been given beforehand,) on those days open generally to the members of the House.

This rule, however, is not considered at all applicable to those debates which are very properly brought on whenever grants of money are to be voted. If Sir Charles Napier thinks that the navy is badly managed, it is very right and fitting that he should call the attention of the House to it when the Navy Estimates are to be granted. If Mr. Henry Baillie is of opinion that the regulations are defective on which pensions to our soldiers are granted, it is just as right and proper that he should bring on that question when the Army Estimates are to be voted. And so of other subjects. Mr. Hume, Mr. Williams, and Dr. Bowring devote themselves to revising the estimates generally, and questioning every item which appears to them to be of a suspicious, an extravagant, or an unnecessary nature; and far too little credit is given to these assiduous and industrious men for their care over the NATIONAL ACCOUNTS—a dry and repulsive subject to the great body of our unbusinesslike legislators.

It being, then, the rule to raise general debates on what are called substantive or independent notices of motion, Mr. Cobden, with other Free-Traders, gave early intimation of his intention to raise a discussion on that most delicate and touching point of the Corn-Law question—the interest which farmers and farm-labourers have in the monopoly of corn. This he fixed for a Tuesday; and it happened to be first on the list, so that it would have the debate of the evening. But the discussion on Ireland was going on: the Government gave up their business to allow it to be carried on continuously; and it would not only have been an uncourteous but an impolitic procedure, if Mr. Cobden had insisted on his right, and brought on one important debate in the midst of another. Nothing, in fact, disturbed the continuity of the debate on Ireland but the Horse-racing Penalties Bill.

And thereby "hangs a tale." Mr. Cobden's motion, having been postponed to last Tuesday, lost its order of precedence, and took rank below several other notices of motion which stood on the list. One of these was to the following effect:—

"Mr. Hutt.—That this House resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House on the Corn Laws, for the purpose of considering the following resolution:—"That it is expedient that corn imported into the United Kingdom from the British possessions in South Africa, India, and Australasia be made subject to the same duty which is levied on corn imported into the United Kingdom from Canada."

There was some chance of this subject being brought on; and Mr. Hutt attended during the whole of the evening, in order to propose it. At the same time, the Horse-racing Penalties Bill stood for third reading, if it could be accomplished, after all the other business was disposed of; and in order to get a Corn-Law discussion put off, and at the same time to pass the Turf Bill, the following manoeuvre was resorted to.

Lord John Manners, as our readers are aware, is a son of the Duke of Rutland, and he represents Newark, in conjunction with Mr. Gladstone, the President of the Board of Trade. Moreover, Lord John is looked upon as the head or leader of a small knot of youthful pedants in the House, who received from Mr. Hume the appellation of "Young England." So far as the opinions of "Young England" can be gathered from, or judged by, the writings and the speeches of Lord John Manners (he writes pamphlets and articles), they may be thus generally stated:—

"Young England" is High Church and High Tory—but its High Churchism and High Toryism is of an antique school. Having a profound veneration for the Roman Catholic Church, it would treat the Roman Catholics of Ireland with great kindness and respect, and would willingly endow the Roman Catholic priesthood of Ireland with state funds. Moreover, "Young England" wants an ambassador to be sent from this country to the Pope, with a permanent residence at Rome; and it is desirous that the statutes of mortmain should be repealed, in order that MONASTIC ESTABLISHMENTS may be founded and endowed in this country. Again, it is imbued with the theocratic or "divine right" idea of government. Kings and princes are ordained by, and receive their power from, God; therefore, their hereditary rights and their persons are sacred. The Church, too, is a divine idea, not in the spiritual sense alone, but in its bodily form; its possessions are sacred and inalienable; and who puts a finger on them is a profane and sacrilegious intruder or robber. In accordance with this, "Young England" does not believe in the popular idea of government, that power proceeds from the people, or is derived from their sanction. No—all power proceeds from God, who alone ordains kings and magistrates; and, therefore, such events as the Revolution of 1688, or the American war of independence, were profanities, inasmuch as they broke in upon hereditary right, and established the popular, which they contend is not only the false but the wicked, principle of government. But though "Young England" is despotic in its notions, it would be very good to the poor people. Instead of repealing the Corn Laws, and building so many manufactories, with their tall, smoky chimneys, it would rather build monasteries, where pious, celibate persons might reside, feeding the poor, as in the olden time, with beef and bread, and administering spiritual consolation to the sick and the afflicted. Besides, "Young England" would knock down every pew in every church, in order that the rich and the poor might meet together in worship; it would fling open the doors of every cathedral, and at all hours of the day encourage the beggar as well as the rich man to enter in and perform his devotions, as they do on the Continent; and, moreover, it would establish Saints' Days, or Holy Days, on which shop, factory, steam-boat, or railroad might repose, and the people, as in the olden time, rush out into the green fields (after performing their devotions), and engage in all sorts of manly sports.

Such is a general idea of "Young England," which boasts of about six or eight members of the House of Commons, all of whom pass for clever youths, though some of them are rather ancient youngsters. They had a field night on Tuesday; and they prevented the discussion of Mr. Hutt's motion. It was about the detention in France of Don Carlos (whom they consider to be the lawful, hereditary, "divine-right" King of Spain); and had Lord John Manners put his motion in the shape of a question to Sir Robert Peel, the matter need not have taken twenty minutes or half an hour. But they daunted on till eleven o'clock; and then, though it was too late to bring on a motion on a subject like that of Mr. Hutt's, it was not too late to pass the Horse-racing Penalties Bill.

However, there will be Corn-Law discussions in the House of Commons ere long.

On Thursday night Mr. Milner Gibson, who had a notice for an address respecting the deficiency of agricultural statistics for the United Kingdom, attended during the entire evening in the hope of being able to bring it on; but so many previous matters interfered that he was compelled, at a late hour, to postpone his motion for a fortnight.

The Stockport Advertiser, with much naïveté, contends that "Conservative newspapers must be gratuitously supplied" to the farmers, if the landlords wish to succeed in putting down the League.

TENANCY OF LAND.—At a meeting of the District Farmers' Club, held recently at Bromsgrove, a resolution was passed, according to the Worcester Chronicle, "That it is the unanimous opinion of this meeting that the only sound principle for tenancy of land is that of long leases, from fourteen to twenty-one years, as indispensable to good and profitable farming; and we strongly adhere to the principle of corn rents, as being most equitable to both owner and occupier."

MEETINGS.

GREAT MEETING OF THE LEAGUE AT COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE.

The usual weekly aggregate meeting of the Anti-Corn-Law League was held at Covent-Garden Theatre on Wednesday evening. George Wilson, Esq., Chairman of the Council, presiding. Notwithstanding the unfavourable state of the weather, the house was crowded a few minutes after the doors opened; and throughout the proceedings the audience manifested as great enthusiasm in the cause of Free Trade as at any previous meeting within the walls of that building. On the Secretary reading the minutes of the last meeting, the name of Mr. O'Connell was greeted with a burst of applause from the whole assembly, testifying at once their sympathy with the hon. and learned gentleman and their appreciation of his services, in furtherance of the cause of Free Trade, at the last meeting. The following, among other gentlemen, were upon the stage:—

George Wilson, Esq., chairman; Hon. Chas. Pelham Villiers, M.P.; Thomas Milner Gibson, Esq., M.P.; Sir Valentine Blake, Bart, M.P.; Richard Cobden, Esq., M.P.; John Bright, Esq., M.P.; Henry Ashworth, Esq., the Oaks, near Bolton; Roger Cunliffe, Esq.; R. R. Moore, Esq.; A. W. Paulton, Esq.; W. A. Wilkinson, Esq.; Arthur Pattison, Esq.; — Pattison, Esq.; Samuel Lucas, Esq.; Nelson Handcock, Esq.; William Evans, Esq., Manchester; J. Gosnell, Esq.; George Borrett, Esq., Southampton; Christopher J. Thomas, Esq., Bristol; — Phillips, Esq.; Effingham Wilson, Esq.; John McLeod, Esq.; Captain Ridout; George Crawford Heath, Esq.; T. P. Burnard, Esq.; George Scrivens, Esq., Hastings; Charles Scott, Esq.; J. Cox, Esq.; G. C. Dyke, Esq.; W. A. Smith, Esq.; W. A. Thomson, Esq.; C. Layard, Esq.; H. S. Shaw, Esq.; George Smith, Esq.; R. L. Tweedale, Esq.; John Hunter, Esq.; George Ridout, Esq.; Sir William Baynes, Bart.; John Eccles, Esq., Southampton; J. B. Scott, Esq., Manchester; Francis Scheer, Esq.; Andrew Hale, Esq., Manchester; R. Andrews, Esq., Southampton; James Wilson, Esq.; W. Ibbotson, Esq., Sheffield; H. E. Adair, Esq.; W. Thornborough, Esq.; W. M. Burne, Esq.; Adam Smith, Esq.; — Wynn, Esq., Wolverhampton.

The proceedings were opened by the Chairman calling on the Secretary (Mr. Saul), to read the minutes of the previous meeting, which having been done,

The Hon. C. P. VILLIERS, M.P., moved, and Mr. COBDEN, M.P., seconded their confirmation, which was carried by acclamation.

The CHAIRMAN then came forward amid loud cheering, and said:—Ladies and Gentlemen, a highly-distinguished member of the Administration was kind enough to inform the public that "Leaguers met in theatres;" and certainly this meeting, although perhaps not so crowded as that held last week, is a confirmation of the information which the right hon. gentleman, the Secretary for the Home Department, was pleased to give to his brother members of the House of Commons. (Cheers.) We meet again, perhaps, in greater numbers than the entire of the monopolist meetings put together during the last week. (Cheers.) And, though it might not be a very great compliment to say that we are much behind them in intelligence, at the same time I am quite sure we are much before them, when the two objects are compared, in the estimation of the generous-hearted and intellectual portion of our fellow-countrymen. (Cheers.) They have their meetings—many meetings—which we are quite willing to admit, as an indication of renewed activity and vigour on the part of the more excitable of their old political party leaders, are important. (Hear.) In point of numbers, with one or two exceptions, they have been almost beneath notice; as an expression of the opinions of the tenant-farmers they are altogether, I should say, foolish. (Loud cheers.) And why? Because, in the first instance, though the tenant-farmers were brought forward to those meetings without any spontaneous action, or the evidence of any spontaneous action upon their parts, now, at any rate, the lords and squires have undertaken to perform the duties, and to conduct and manage the meetings, which they are unwilling to intrust the tenant-farmers themselves to conduct. (Cheers.) They have had many of those meetings, and we have made no complaint that they were close meetings; because we never object to a number of our fellow-countrymen meeting together for a specific object, and passing their resolutions uninterrupted by other parties, in their own way. They have a right so to meet and so to act. (Hear, hear.) But let us compare those meetings with others held by Mr. Cobden, last year, in the agricultural districts. Twenty-eight of those meetings were held in the agricultural districts, and twenty-seven of them were open meetings. In the very teeth of the agricultural monopolists, resolutions were carried in favour of the total abolition of the Corn Laws (cheers); whilst, on the other hand, at the only open meeting which they have held, convened by the high sheriff in Somersetshire, resolutions have been passed—moved, seconded, and adopted, and petitions to Parliament founded upon them—in favour of the total abolition of the Corn Laws. (Loud cheers.) Are we not right then in saying, that they have yet no evidence that the tenant-farmers are in their favour? (Cheers.) We last week had an opportunity of noticing the observations of a noble lord with respect to the proceedings of the National Anti-Corn-Law League. This week, a noble earl who resides in Yorkshire claims some little notice at our hands. (Hear, hear.) At a meeting held at York, Earl Harewood, who occupied the chair, is reported to have said:—"There are other views in the Anti-Corn-Law agitation than those which meet the eye of the public. What happened to a farmer the other day, in Lincolnshire or in Norfolk, I forget which? He attended a meeting, and openly stated to that meeting that he was opposed to the Anti-Corn-Law League, as every Englishman has a right to be; and the very night after making this declaration his stacks and crops were burnt. No man after that," said the noble earl, "can doubt the intentions of the National Anti-Corn-Law League!" (Groans, hisses, and derisive laughter.) The noble lord never sent to inquire who set fire to the stacks; he furnished us with no information where that act of the incendiary took place, nor even who was the party to whom the stacks belonged. No, no; there was no occasion for that. (Cheers.) His lordship was quite ready to cast the imputation upon the League. There was no occasion for his lordship to send into Lincolnshire to inquire into the subject; his lordship knew his audience, and he knew that they would believe to the very letter any insinuations or expressions made by himself against a body of men who have as great a regard for the sacred rights of property, and who are as much opposed to, and have as great a horror at, the demoniacal acts of incendiarism as his lordship or his earlship, or any other member of the aristocracy. (Loud cheers.) He lives in Yorkshire, and he cannot direct his eye in any direction without seeing around him towns, villages, and hamlets, all indebted to manufacturing industry and manufacturing capital for their present prosperity. He cannot look around him without knowing that upon all sides, high and low, are members of the National Anti-Corn-Law League. (Hear, hear.) Does he accuse them of having set fire to stacks in Lancashire or Yorkshire? (Hear.) He sits in the House of Lords opposite the Earl Ducie, the Earl of Radnor, the Marquis of Westminster, and Lord Kinnaird: will he accuse them of having encouraged acts of incendiarism, or of setting fire to stacks in the counties I have mentioned?—or will he dare to accuse this meeting? (Loud cheers.) No such thing—(cheers)—his lordship is especially careful to make insinuations and accusations, whilst at the same time he is equally careful to be regardless of the statement of facts. (Cheers.) Since we last met we have had meetings in various places in Yorkshire—at Richmond, Knaresborough, Northallerton, and Thirsk, attended by Mr. Plint, Colonel Thompson, and Mr. Prentice, as a deputation from the League. We have also had a meeting at Colne, in Lancashire, attended by the Rev. Mr. Massie of Manchester, and by Mr. Moore, at which £200 were collected; and again at Gloucester, last Saturday, an open county meeting, to which all were invited, took place. Earl Ducie was in the chair, and the meeting was attended by more tenant-farmers than the monopolists will be likely ever to get together in the same county. (Cheers.) It was addressed by Mr. Cobden, Colonel Thompson, and Mr. Moore; and resolutions were proposed by Mr. Holland,—a large agriculturist and farmer, a large occupier and owner,—and seconded by another tenant-farmer, approving of the proceedings of the National Anti-Corn-Law League. (Loud cheers.) We shall be addressed this evening by a manufacturer, Mr. Henry Ashworth, of Turton, near Bolton (cheers); by Mr. Milner Gibson, the member for Manchester. (Loud cheers.) Mr. Gisborne, unfortunately, is detained at home by indisposition; but our excellent friend Mr. Bright is here, and will address the meeting. (Loud and prolonged cheering.) The Chairman concluded by introducing Mr. Ashworth.

MR. ASHWORTH, on advancing to the table, was very warmly received by the meeting. He said:—Ladies and gentlemen, it is no common sight to witness a manufacturer from the north leave his dwelling and occupation to appear before an audience such as this. A manufacturer has usually other employment, and is disinclined to appeal to his fellow-countrymen even when he feels himself wronged. (Cheers.) Manufacturers are opposed to agitation; they are a class who study the practical sciences and the arts required for carrying out manufacturing operations; and would of necessity be busily engaged at home, if the effects of pernicious laws would allow them to be so. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, in appealing to you in the character of a manufacturer, I feel confidence in doing so—a confidence which arises from the fact that the manufacturers as a body seek to possess nothing but their own. (Cheers.) Manufacturers are charged with making hard bargains—so are all prudent people, yourselves among the rest. (Hear, hear, and laughter.) But it cannot be laid to the charge of the manufacturers that they have a great commercial house in Parliament-street, through which they can surround the interests of the rest of the community, and make both sides of the bargain. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, manufacturers are a body who enjoy no protection; they seek to enjoy no protection; they disclaim the protective system altogether, and they ask that all her Majesty's subjects should be placed on an equal footing with themselves. (Hear, hear.) Is that an unreasonable demand? (Cheers.) The landlords tell you they must have protection—that they are entitled, in fact, to certain protection for certain purposes. I will not now remind you what those purposes are, but refer you to Lord Mountcashel and Sir Edward Knatchbull—they can tell you all about it. (Cheers and laughter.) They say also that they must have protection to enable them to compete with the foreigners. For my own part, I confess I am not yet aware in what respect Englishmen are inferior to foreigners. (Cheers.) I am persuaded that the British farmer, and especially the farm-labourer, will do as much work, and are as capable to compete with the foreigner, as any class of the community; and I am convinced that none can better compete with him than the agricultural labourer, if the landlord will only allow him to buy his food a little cheaper. (Cheers.) We find that manufacturers are exposed to foreign competition. Why should landlords be exempt? (Cheers.) I repeat, the manufacturers enjoy no privileges—they want none; they possess no advantages of machinery which are not common to all the world. (Hear, hear.) We obtain inventions and improvements in machinery from other countries,—we embody those inventions and improvements in machines of our own manufacture, and thereby give them increased practical efficiency,—and although those machines, when made in the most perfect manner, were once prohibited as exports, they can now be taken out of the country, and sold in every country in the world at as cheap a rate as we get them ourselves. The law for prohibiting the exportation of machinery was repealed a year or two ago; and though at that time we were suffering severely in our business,—though many persons thought that the export of our machinery, so superior as it was, was a course hazardous to the maintenance of our manufacturing superiority,—yet nevertheless, in the true spirit of fair dealing, the manufacturers never demurred to it, but allowed the act to pass without hesitation or restraint. (Loud cheers.) Having, then, given to foreigners all the protection we enjoyed in the superiority of our machinery (as far as we ever did enjoy any), we now claim that we should be free from all restrictions of every kind; and we take it, that since as manufactures are exposed to foreign competition, we have a right to insist that it is an act of injustice that any other class—especially the wealthy landlord class—should enjoy advantages not common to all. (Cheers.) Now, with reference to the manufacturing and other classes of the community, manufacturers are told that the home market is the most important market for our productions. I am here prepared to speak to the value of the home market as regards our own—the cotton trade. The cotton trade of this country is chiefly an export trade. It is shown by "Barry's Glance," that only one bale out of every seven which we manufacture is wrought up for home consumption; therefore all the cotton ployment the cotton trade derives from every class of British subjects amounts only to one-seventh, or equal to but one day's work in a week. (Hear, hear.) This, let me remind you, is the consumption of all classes of British subjects. Now, with regard to the landlord or aristocratic class, which puts forth in such vaunting terms the value of our home trade, when we come to analyse what they give us, we find that it amounts to some fractional part of one day's work in the week, and for that we are very thankful, so far as it goes. (Cheers.) With respect to the consumption of cotton goods by other classes in this country,—for we have other consumers besides landlords,—I may tell you that the city of London, the metropolis alone, consumes more cotton goods than all Ireland; and the town of Manchester consumes more of its own manufactures than the whole county of Buckingham. (Hear, hear, hear.) We next come to the export trade. I have before told you that we export six-sevenths of all we manufacture; hence we are dependent upon foreigners for six-sevenths of all the work we do; and as that six-sevenths of all the manufactures are sold in the open markets of the world, we are unable in any way to enjoy any description of protection, even though it were offered to us. (Cheers.) Let us now look to the landlord. The manufacture, which pertains to his occupation, that of food, is a manufacture which has not an export trade. He enjoys at his own doors the very best market in the world, and more than that, has protection into the bargain. (Hear, hear.) There was a time when the food-production of this country was exported—when the landlords of this country exported their own wheat—that day is now gone by, and the population of this country now consume all they can raise, and require much more if they could get it. (Hear, hear.) Seeing, then, that our population engaged in manufactures require and consume all the food produced at home, the landlords of course have ceased to export, and have the advantage of always selling their insufficient produce in a market where the demand constantly exceeds the supply. (Cheers.) Now, as I said before, this is not the case with manufactures: six-sevenths of all our cotton manufactures are exported. Mark the consequences of this! Food is the raw material of labour, just as cotton is the raw material of the finished manufacture. It follows, therefore, that the sales of goods we send abroad are virtually as much the exports of the landlord's wheat or other produce as they are of the manufacturer's cotton. (Hear, hear.) Thus, you find that the landlords, having ceased to be merchants on their own account, have by this means thrown the conducting of their own foreign mercantile affairs upon the manufacturers, and have thus possessed themselves of a much more easy, and a great deal more profitable, medium of exchange with other countries. In this way have they saved themselves all the trouble and annoyance of converting their own farming produce into money in foreign markets. All this has been taken off their hands by the manufacturing process which I have described to you. (Hear, hear.) Thus the British manufacturer, carrying on his trade under the operation of the Corn Laws, is first compelled to pay an act-of-Parliament price for all the food which himself and his workpeople require; and afterwards, by reason of his trade being an export trade, and his goods being an embodiment of British agricultural food, mixed up in the shape of labour with cotton and other articles, he becomes the unfortunate medium of the re-sale of this same food, exposed to the competition of the whole world, in those distant markets where similar food is selling perhaps for only half the money this has cost him in Great Britain. (Cheers.) We thus find that the manufacturers have become the implements of the landlord to get rid of his goods; and, what is worse, as you will have perceived, he is made to lose one-half its cost in the process. (Hear, hear.) As a manufacturer engaged in the export trade, I may now go a little at length into that branch of the subject. You will have no difficulty in understanding one general axiom in relation to this, and that is, that imports are customers. The criterion, therefore, of the prosperity of a country is not of what it exports, but by the amount of its imports. (Hear, hear.) I repeat that imports are customers. Allow me to illustrate this more clearly. The vessel which approaches our shores laden with goods—no matter from what country she comes—is the impersonation of a foreign merchant with money in his pockets; for that cargo, upon reaching this country, is easily converted into money, and that money is then at the disposal of the agent to be reconverted into goods and sent away; consequently, the more of those vessels which come to our shores, the more customers we have for the disposal of what we make. In speaking of our imports, allow me a moment to tell you, that those goods which come from other countries to this country do not pass direct from the shore to the merchant's warehouse: they first pass the custom-house, and there they pay a revenue duty. To that revenue duty we, as Free-Traders, have no objection: it is right and proper the revenue should be raised upon goods brought from other countries; but we make this distinction—that whilst we are willing and deem it right that the revenue should be raised in such a manner, we deem it wrong that, by means of other duties imposed for the sake of protection upon food, we should be exposed at the custom-house to a duty in the shape of a sliding scale, which is not a duty for the purpose of the revenue, but a duty for the purpose of swelling rents. (Hear, hear.) Gentlemen, our imports ought to be free; in an enlightened country they should be free as the wind that brings them. (Cheers.) Now, suppose you were to go to some distant country—I would not needlessly offend you by saying to some part of this country—and were to observe upon the seacoast, men parading backwards and forwards, with a musket in one hand and a telescope in the other; flagstaffs here and flagstaffs there, for raising alarm; and if you were told that they were called a preventive service—a service employed by the Government for the purpose of preventing the approach of foreign vessels, and, consequently, the introduction of foreign goods—would you not declare that that was an indication of a most suicidal ignorance in that country; and that the spirit of its commercial laws was worthy only of a darker age. (Cheers.) Our own laws, I regret to say, are characterized by such a spirit: they are laws which admit luxuries—such as wines, silks, and laces, for the consumption of the great and wealthy—to come in freely from all countries on payment of the revenue duty;—laws which permit this, and yet prohibit the importation of foreign food, and those articles which more especially affect the comforts of the working classes,—all such laws are based upon and are carried out in the spirit of injustice, and against such protective and partial laws it is, that you and ourselves complain. (Cheers.) Landlords tell us or tell you that this is a manufacturers' question. The fact is, that they find the manufacturers are very actively at work to get rid of the Corn Laws, and they therefore choose to stigmatize it as a manufacturers' question. This imputation we disclaim—it is no manufacturers' question. It is your question—it is my question—it is everybody's question. (Cheers.) I know there was a time when it was thought that this was our question; it bore hardly upon us as manufacturers, and we murmured and made an outcry about it. The more we seek into it, however, the more we find that those who are engaged in other employments in every part of the country are sufferers alike with ourselves, and in many instances even to a greater extent than ourselves. (Hear, hear.) It is, therefore, not a manufacturing or an individual question, but a general question, affecting the whole community. (Cheers.) The manufacturer complains that his business is crippled—that his workpeople are starved—and it then becomes him, and it becomes any man, to complain when he sees himself subjected to hard dealing. (Cheers.) The landlords, too, not content with having raised one cry, start another. They make another outcry, and say it is over-production that has occasioned our distress. They then pretend to calculate, and exclaim, "Why, these manufacturers would clothe the whole world." Perhaps it would be as well if they would first give us the opportunity of clothing the whole world; and, if thereby we brought disaster upon the country, it would be time enough for the monopolists to complain. (Cheers and laughter.) However, it may be as well to look at this question a little further. Suppose we could clothe the whole world, we have not yet found out the way to make calicoes everlasting: (laughter) they will wear out some time, and therefore those whom we may have trained to the wearing of clothes must sometimes want new ones. (Cheers.) Hence we should have a constant source of employment and recurrence of new business. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) It would be anticipated as rather a jocose circumstance if, at some future day, a manufacturer from Lancashire should appear on these boards, weeping like Alexander, the conqueror of old, not because he wanted another world to conquer, but another world to clothe! (Cheers, and great laughter.) At all events, amidst all his griefs, he may have this consolation, and this hope of the future, that, if he can clothe the whole world, he will, at all events, deserve to be fed. (Loud cheers.) I do not hear any body calling out that they have got too many clothes. (A voice in the gallery, "I have not;" laughter.) Cheap as they are we never hear any one grumble that they are too cheap. The landlords, the class of which we are speaking, now and then gather together, and laud themselves upon being patriots, because they have made two blades of grass grow where only one grew before. Gentlemen, upon that ground I may claim, as a manufacturer, to be a patriot also, for I can make two shirts now for less than one used to cost me. (Hear, hear.) But I deny that either the landlord or myself is a patriot or a benefactor in the matter. We both act from one cause, we have both one motive—that of enlightened self-interest. (Hear, hear.) I have alluded to machinery. That is another cry of the aristocracy. They call out about machinery, and make shrewd hints that it is at the bottom of all the mischief. I say that machinery is about the greatest blessing we enjoy. (Loud cheers.) Machinery is the surest and best guarantee for the permanence of employment, at the same time that it affords the highest rate of wages. Moreover, by machinery the body is spared from physical exertion, and the mind, which ennobles man, is brought into action. (Cheers.) This subject might be dilated on for hours, but I shall not dwell longer upon it. I have made these assertions, and will leave it to others to amplify or refute them. In proof of what I have told you, however, I will state as the result of experience that, in Lancashire, manufactures have been brought to bear, and inventions in machinery carried out, to an extent which has not prevailed in any other county in England or in any country in the world; therefore, if machinery had displaced human labour or impoverished the people, Lancashire ought, at all events, to be the poorest county in the British dominions. No one will say it is so. (Cheers.) So far from machinery having displaced human labour in that county, it has called for it to more than double the extent to which all the inhabitants of that county with their progeny, during the last fifty years, have been able to supply. (Hear, hear.) When I speak of Lancashire, I may also state that, in every county in England or Scotland where machinery has been carried out to any considerable extent, the same result has uniformly followed—employments have been created, and numbers of people have been called for to an extent larger than at any previous period, and wages have kept pace with that increase of employment. On the contrary, in those counties where machinery is not employed, where the only machinery is the spade or the plough, in every one of those counties we find what is called superabundant labour. (Hear, hear.) In Lancashire, as I have already hinted, one half of the population have been attracted thither from other places. From what other places could they come? There is no other part of the country from which to supply the hands required, except where agriculture is carried on; hence those who have come to us have come from agricultural pursuits. (Hear, hear, hear.) Now, in going through this question, as I have done for some years past, I have taken the trouble to make some statistical observations with reference to it. I pitched upon two parishes in an agricultural district, not very distant from some of our manufacturing towns, and, referring to the registers of the parishes, I found that in the course of seventy years there had been, in round numbers, about three christenings for every two funerals, YET THE POPULATION REMAINED NEARLY THE SAME. The number of houses remained the same also. In some parts of those parishes there were only the same houses that there were at the time of the Doomsday survey in the reign of William the Conqueror. Next, you will inquire what became of all those who, during that long period, were born into the world in those parishes? So far as I was able to compute, there must have been about 1000 persons who had been attracted from those parishes to some other part of the country. The people of the neighbourhood inquired, "Do you know my cousin So-and-so, or brother So-and-so?" Why, he lives at Manchester or Preston," &c.; and then I found that the people had left those parishes, and had betaken themselves to manufacturing employment. (Hear, hear.) I need not more than simply advert to these circumstances; but were our manufacturing towns to become engulfed in one common ruin, as I have heard so unfeelingly and unblushingly hinted at by the monopolist press, I know not what might become of those people in the event; but should they happen to survive, and to return to their native parishes, upon which they have claims, they would find themselves sadly at a loss for habitations and employments. (Cheers.) You will perceive, then, that the absence of these people from the agricultural parishes has afforded a great means of swelling the rent-roll of the landlord, and easing the burden of the rates, at the same time that their residence in the bordering towns has been the means of increasing the value of his agricultural produce. (Hear, hear.) Nor have the agricultural labourers from our own part of the country been the only ones that have come to us for employment. They have come from Ireland, and from the most remote parts of England, and, amongst other places, not a few from that favoured spot called Buckinghamshire. (Laughter.) No inconsiderable number from that locality have found their way to my neighbourhood, and some of them are now working in my service. A little incident occurred which I will for a moment detain you with the narration of. A noble lord, a friend of the Duke of Buckingham, happening some years ago to be in my part of the country, inquired if there were not some agricultural labourers who had found their way thither from Buckinghamshire. He was answered in the affirmative, and was told where he might find them. He came to our works and entered the cottage of one of these labourers. Now, speaking of cottages, you must not imagine that they are such as you sometimes see in the agricultural counties—a hut placed on the side of a hill, and covered with mud and thatch. (Laughter.) We don't make houses in that way in Lancashire. (Hear, hear.) He found them living in good houses,—the man whom he called on first was living in a stone-built house, two stories high, and with three bedrooms. (Cheers.) Perhaps I may be allowed to explain here that the manufacturing population are somewhat fastidious and delicate in their habits, and in times when they are comfortable one of their principal desires is to cultivate a propriety and delicacy of feeling among their children. (Loud cheers.) I think, therefore, you will not easily understand but appreciate the motives of these people when I tell you that they deem it indispensable to have three bedrooms when they can get them. (Hear, hear.) His lordship inquired about their comforts and their earnings, and asked if they would not like to go back to Buckinghamshire? (Laughter.) One of them said, "Oh, no, sir, I got away at last, and all the horses of the Duke of Buckingham shan't draw me back again." (Loud laughter.) His lordship inquired further how it was that he was not attached to his native place. "Oh," said he "I couldn't get £300 a year there!" Now, this sum I take it was the wages which he and his family were then receiving. (Hear, hear.) I will conclude this observation regarding the Buckinghamshire peasantry by saying that his lordship went away much gratified by this interview, observing, "Now, I'll go and have a joke with the duke." (Laughter.) But it may be asked, since so many have left agriculture and taken refuge in the manufacturing towns, has agriculture or agricultural occupations been found suffering in consequence? Does any one know that agriculture ever suffered from want of hands? I have inquired often, but never yet found any one to say that they were short of agricultural labourers in any county in the kingdom. On the contrary, every farmer and landlord complains of the burdens of the poor-rates, and of the number of idle able-bodied labourers they are obliged to maintain in the workhouse. I may add, that it is not very likely they have suffered much, for the agricultural interest has required no more hands than it had in 1821. (Hear, hear.) Thus you will perceive that, in carrying out the manufacturing industry of Lancashire and Yorkshire, we have provided occupations which are comfortable and profitable for a large class of our fellow-countrymen; whilst the occupation they have left has not suffered by their absence. (Hear, hear, hear.) Possibly some of you who have been accustomed to read the monopolist hiring writers may wonder how it is that these agricultural peasantry should find their way to the north, and be willing to encounter those mill Molochs, of whom, I dare say, you have heard with so much horror, and of their system of manufacturing, how it cripples and destroys the people, and what objects of sympathy it makes them. Bearing in mind what they have told you, I think you may reasonably inquire how those people were dealt with where they came from. (Hear, hear.) If they run away to us, who are mill Molochs, and make cripples of them, and abuse them in all sorts of ways, they must surely not have been very well treated in their own country. (Cheers.) However, there is one test remains whereby the partialities of these people may be easily proved. If the sympathy of those who call out about the abuse of the mill population be as sincere as we are led to understand, let the landed aristocracy who deem manufacturers go home and outbid us in wages; let them try whether those who came from the agricultural districts to us can be induced to go back to their Arcadian abodes and 7s. a week. (Cheers, and laughter.) I will not now detain you much longer. ("Go on, go on.") I have just given you a glimpse—an outside view of the manufacturing system—and, if you want to know any more about it, follow us home. It is not a day's journey for you—many of you are accustomed to take your excursions up the Rhine and over the Continent, which you would enjoy quite as much if you are better acquainted with the affairs of your own country, those which lie almost at your own doors. (Cheers.) It is true you may now and then hear that there is tumult and strife in the manufacturing districts. Whenever you hear that those districts are in trouble, rely upon it it is not without occasion. When restrictive laws dry up the sources of our prosperity—when our industry falls—when our people become short of food—do you think it deserves to be called criminal that the people should murmur? Need I ask you, can you find a people in the world who could pass through the endurance that the manufacturing population of the north have done during the last few years with as little outcry? (Hear, hear.) The system of manufactures has furnished as good a specimen of moral and associated strength as is to be found in any part of the world, or in any system of society, however intelligent. That system is one which is composed of men of various classes, in my own rank of life; it is not beholden to aristocratic money for its existence; it is conducted by men of intelligence—men of proper feeling—men of skill—of enterprise—men of diligence in business—men who embark their capital, knowing that they can never look for a return of that capital except by preserving the utmost harmony and combined action between themselves and the workpeople whom they must daily employ, and who must be kept in employment with regularity and precision, or else that capital is lost for ever. (Cheers.) Now, where so much capital is embarked, where so much is left at the mercy of a good understanding, and so much depends upon cultivating mutual interests such as I have alluded to, I am persuaded you will see, and common sense and discretion will determine, that it is to the advantage of master and workmen not to engage in strife, but to co-operate and proceed side by side, in harmony and good feeling, to carry out that arrangement which is essential to the permanent prosperity of both. (Cheers.) Upon us, therefore, as manufacturers, and upon ourselves also, as the middle classes of society, devolve a most important and responsible task—a task, I trust, which will be cheerfully undertaken, to maintain the moral and social condition of our country, to preserve our social dignity, our political rights, and every institution which we deem valuable; and not the least of the duties which devolve upon us is, that of maintaining inviolate those rights of industry which so seriously affect the working classes of this large community. (Cheers.) We, therefore, as manufacturers, have taken our stand upon the broad principle of justice. (Hear, hear.) I have endeavoured to show you upon this, as many of my friends have upon former occasions, that we appeal to you in the spirit of justice and implore you to stand by your fellow-countrymen in this struggle. (Cheers.) We seek the total abolition of all those laws which restrict our industry. We seek the total abolition of all monopolies. (Cheers.) I have before told you that we disclaim any protection for ourselves; and seek to be released from protection imposed on behalf of others. (Cheers.) Our demand is, "Total repeal of all monopolies." We ask for nothing more, and will be satisfied with nothing less. (Cheers.) Citizens of London, we ask your co-operation. We ask it in this great cause which we have jointly undertaken. We have not sought it from you until we had made large sacrifices ourselves, and I now put it to you,—"Are you prepared to do the same?" (Mr. Ashworth's concluding appeal was responded to by loud and general cheering from all parts of the theatre.)

The CHAIRMAN then came forward, and announced that Mr. Milner Gibson would address the meeting.

Mr. MILNER GIBSON came forward amidst great applause, and said:—"Sir, in opening the proceedings of this evening, you drew a comparison between the numbers that are assembled within these walls to-night, and those who were gathered together on the last occasion that the League held its meeting at Covent-garden Theatre. Whatever, Sir, may be said upon that comparison, I hold at least that the meeting which is now gathered together is a great and imposing assembly—(cheers)—and I say that nothing but the circumstance of a deep interest being felt in the question of the Corn Laws by the inhabitants of this metropolis would draw such a number of intelligent persons together as are now met within this building. I am delighted also to think that at the last meeting this theatre was full to repletion—that every crevice was occupied; and I rejoice also to hear that Ireland has appreciated the manner in which a British audience received that great man for whom there now exists so deep a sympathy, and upon whom the affections of his countrymen are so intently fixed. (Loud and prolonged cheers.) We also were delighted, as members of the Anti-Corn-Law League, that the representative of the opinions of the great body of the Irish people was here to tell us in person that Ireland desired the repeal of the Corn Laws, and that her population were in favour of Free Trade. (Cheers.) What, let me ask once more, can be the reason that men are found to make the sacrifice—for it is a sacrifice—of attending public meetings for the continued discussion of the same arguments on a public question? Why is it that men are willing to leave their firesides—that families are willing to attend on winter evenings—to listen to speeches on a subject that we have been told is dull and insipid, and which embodies considerations that do not interest the popular mind? Why, I say, do we all find that we are countenanced, not merely by respectable and intelligent men, but by a large portion of our fairer fellow-subjects? (Loud cheers.) What is the cause of all this, but that they perceive in the Corn-Law question something more than a dull point of political economy (hear, hear); because Free Trade contains the principles of civil liberty, which are attacked by the policy that interferes with trade, and that levies duties on the importation of food. (Hear, hear.) I say the ladies of England attend these meetings because they feel that, in supporting the Anti-Corn-Law movement, they are advancing the cause of humanity, promoting the interests of the widow and orphan, and supporting those means by which a greater amount of the comforts of life may be placed within the reach of the industrious and the needy. (Loud cheers.) These are the reasons why men make sacrifices, and ladies subject themselves to inconvenience to attend these meetings. We believe that Free Trade is the right of freemen. (Cheers.) We maintain that a free citizen is entitled to freedom of exchange; and we recognise nothing but state advantage and necessity which can entitle the Legislature to impose duties on the importation of any species of foreign goods. The Anti-Corn-Law League has been called a society attacking property—it has been designated an aggressive body. I deny the charge. (Cheers.) I say it is not an aggressive body, but a defensive association. (Renewed cheers.) The first violence was committed by those who interfered with the freedom of exchange, who imposed the yoke without assigning a state necessity. We are assembled to throw off that bondage, and to vindicate the inherent rights to which we are entitled. (Cheers.) We have been told that the societies on the other side are for "the protection of agriculture." I ask, what have they to do with agriculture? They are associations for the suppression of trade. (Cheers.) What is agriculture? It is the art of cultivating the earth in order to make it produce the largest quantity of those vegetable productions which are consumed by human beings. What, then, has that to do with putting duties on foreign importations? What connexion has it with the ascending and descending scale of graduated duties? (Loud cheers.) We are not, as I before observed, an aggressive body. The Corn-Law League—or the protection party—are the aggressors. We do not propose to meddle with agriculture, but they are determined to interfere with trade. We contend that the Englishman has a right to be a merchant, and to have the full reward of his industry; we also admit that he has an equal right to cultivate the earth, and have the full reward of his industry; but we deny that one class has any business to interfere with another, or that any class has a right to demand the monopoly of the markets and the exclusive privilege of supplying their fellow-countrymen with food. (Loud cheers.) That, indeed, is the whole question. I say, therefore, that it is a false pretence put forward by this "Central Society," as it is called, that it is an association for the protection of agriculture. I contend emphatically that they are bound together for the destruction of trade—(hear, hear)—and the maintenance of political ascendancy. (Loud cheers.) Their association has nothing to do with the improvement of agriculture, nor the promotion of arts and sciences, nor any thing that is generous or deserving of consideration from a benevolent-minded man: it has simply to do with the maintenance of selfish interests and exclusive power. (Cries of "Hear, hear.") If, as we have been told, these Protection societies have really the good of agriculture at heart, it is remarkable that the men who take the most leading part in them are not those who have distinguished themselves for any improvements calculated to advance the prosperity of agriculture. Where are the inventions—the scientific works—with which they have favoured the world in reference to improvements in their own business? It is a striking fact that all these improvements have proceeded from agriculturists who advocate the cause of Free Trade, and repudiate the notion that they should rely upon any other resource but that of their own industry and enterprise. (Cheers.) I do not for one moment pretend to deny—and in that point I beg to express my concurrence with the remarks of our excellent chairman—that our opponents are entitled to meet together and advocate their principles freely and fairly. I agree fully in the right of free discussion in every meeting; and I maintain that those gentlemen who think that the Corn Laws are necessary for the welfare of the community are just as much entitled to their opinions as we are to ours; but what I think I have a right to complain of is this,—that they should call their societies by wrong names, and thereby mislead the public,—denominating a society which only concerns itself with trade, "an association for the protection of agriculture." (Cheers.) It seems they have expressed their determination to continue to as great an extent as ever their interference with trade. They tell us that they will not consent to a less degree of restriction upon commerce and manufactures than that which now exists. I should like them to see these great meetings, and have an opportunity of judging for themselves as to the real feeling which is growing up in the minds of their fellow-countrymen upon this question. I am desirous that they should consider whether it will be safe much longer to maintain an interference with the civil rights of man, without having any plea of national advantage to justify it, or excuse of state necessity, but simply that of saying, "We have done so before; it has given us pecuniary advantages and political power, and, therefore, we will continue to perpetuate the system." (Cheers.) I ask these gentlemen, who are such strenuous advocates for order, social harmony, and peace, to consider whether it is not dangerous to persist in a system of injustice, when that injustice is recognised by the public? I put it to them whether it is prudent to persevere in this violation of the rights of the industry of a country where men are becoming conscious of their rights, and are increasing in their determination never to cease until those rights are vindicated and fully obtained. (Loud cheers.) A distinguished nobleman has come forward within a few days, and written a letter in the public papers on this subject:—I mean the Duke of Northumberland; and, as was wittily and humorously remarked in the Times newspaper in commenting on this letter, "The Duke of Northumberland would have been a very dangerous man if he had not had the power of writing a letter, and putting it into the Post ('hear, and a laugh); but having written it, and stated the ground on which he supports the Corn Laws, he ceased to be that dangerous member of society which he might have been had he worked in secret with his Protection Societies." (Cheers.) This illustrious duke tells us, that we must not let foreign supplies into England if we mean to avoid the necessity of "compulsory emigration." (Cries of "Oh, oh," and laughter.) Now, I have heard that in ships at sea, when provisions fall short, it does occasionally happen that lots are drawn amongst the crew and passengers as to whom shall be thrown overboard; that is what I conceive to be "compulsory emigration." (Loud laughter.) But what I want to remind this illustrious duke of is this, that upon such occasions, before they proceed to throw any one overboard, they draw lots, and every one fairly takes his chance (renewed laughter); and if we are to have a system of compulsory emigration, I hope that dukes, earls, and all classes would be prepared to run the risk of taking their departure, as well as the labourer and artisan. (Loud cheers and laughter.) In fact, it appears perfectly reasonable that such a course should be adopted, because the case of the suggested compulsory emigration, and of persons being transported from England to distant climes,—not being allowed to have food brought to them in this country,—I say it will be necessary that society should exist in those distant climes in all its parts; and if illustrious dukes be necessary here, they will be equally indispensable there also. (Laughter and cheers.) Therefore, I should propose, that if ever this most horrible notion of compulsory emigration be resorted to, that at least we should impose the necessity that some illustrious dukes should accompany poor labourers and enterprising manufacturers into the distant regions of the earth, in order to maintain that social harmony which they say cannot be maintained without them. (Loud cheers.) But there is a great deal of argument in this letter of the Duke of Northumberland. He tells us that free trade in corn would have the effect of throwing the light lands out of cultivation. Now, I am not aware that it is any part of our national policy to keep burning sands and wet clay in wheat cultivation; but even if it were, and it could be shown to be the object of the Legislature by acts of Parliament to keep these lands in cultivation, I want to know how it is that in Belgium, France, and Holland,—where the burthens on land are much heavier than they are here, and where the average price of its produce is much less than in this country,—where the labourers are quite as happy, and, perhaps, more so, than ours,—

I want to know how it is that, under all these circumstances, the light lands in those three countries are kept in cultivation? Low prices, heavy taxes, and happy labourers do not put the light lands in Belgium, France, and Holland out of cultivation. Nothing of the kind. On the contrary, the cultivation is extending itself in those countries under the circumstances which I have described. As far as we can judge from analogy, there is not the slightest reason to suppose that the abolition of the Corn Laws would put our light lands and heavy clays out of cultivation. The right hon. Premier, at the head of her Majesty's Administration, has said we might import guano, and other foreign manures, to put on those light lands and heavy clays, to prevent them going out of cultivation. I quite agree with him that we ought to import guano if there be Free Trade (cheers); but I must beg to inform him, and also to call your attention to the fact, that I was solicited, and complied with the request, to present a petition to the House of Commons from certain dustmen in Liverpool. (Laughter.) It was a bond fide petition from certain collectors of dust and rubbish in that town, who complained very much of the Prime Minister's proposal to import guano into this country. (Laughter.) They said, "No; give us free trade in corn, and then you may import your foreign manure; but we are collectors of manure in this country, and if you give protection to the landed interest, what is the reason you do not extend the like advantage to us?" (Cheers and laughter.) You see, then, in what difficulties we are involved when once we recognise this doctrine—that the Legislature has a right to interfere with trade. If we give protection to one, we must extend it to all. (Hear, hear, hear.) If we impart the advantage of Free Trade to one class, we are bound to allow the same benefit to every other; and, as the first proposition is impossible, the only alternative we have to resort to is the second. But, Sir, I have no idea that a free trade in corn would have the effect of throwing any land out of cultivation in this country; and, even if it did, we contend that it is no part of the duty of the Legislature to sacrifice the interests of the mercantile classes for the enrichment of any part of the community, for the purpose of keeping up a favourite system of husbandry, or maintaining in cultivation any description of lands. (Hear, hear.) I was told the other day by a gentleman, and I find that the same sentiment has been uttered by a noble lord at a public meeting, that there are high and important interests connected with the Corn-Law question, which remove it altogether from that position in which we would be entitled to doubt its importance, namely, that it is mixed up with certain spiritual considerations (laughter), which render it necessary for us to forget all the principles of political economy, and to look at it in the light of a question intimately connected with the religion of the United Kingdom. (Renewed laughter.) You would have thought, perhaps, that no man could have been found who would have uttered such an absurd sentiment; but I think I can explain to you how he arrived at the conclusion that the Protestant religion of England depended upon the maintenance of the Corn Law. The noble lord's statement was after the model of "The House that Jack built." (Laughter.) He began in this way:—"The Protestant religion depends upon the Established Church, the Established Church depends upon agriculture, agriculture depends upon the price of corn, the price of corn depends upon the ascending and descending scale of graduated duties." (Cheers and laughter.) So that, in point of fact, we have here an attempt to show that the Protestant Church of England, which we were always taught to believe was built upon a rock, is, in reality, founded upon nothing but the sliding scale (laughter and cheers); and that vain would be the teaching of our ministers, and the exhortations of our preachers, unless they were backed by that ascending and descending scale which regulates the importation of foreign grain. (Renewed laughter.) Now, could anything on earth by possibility be conceived more ridiculous than such an idea? If this view of the Corn Laws be true, why do they not introduce an oath to be administered to all persons upon their entrance into the British Parliament? We all declare—or at least the Catholic members of the House of Commons do, upon their taking their seats—that they will make use of none of their privileges for the purpose of injuring the Protestant religion, or "Church Establishment," or "Church as by law established;" all our legislators are required to make some declaration connected with the safety of our religion, and the Church Establishment. Now, if it be really the fact that the Church is dependent for its existence on the maintenance of the Corn Laws, we ought to have a Corn-Law oath. I will, therefore, take the liberty of putting "Corn Law" for "Catholicism," and read to you how that oath would run then:—"I do hereby disclaim, disavow, and solemnly abjure any belief in that abominable doctrine called Free Trade or common sense. (Laughter.) I do solemnly swear that it is not an article of my faith, that men should buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest markets. (Renewed laughter.) I do renounce, reject, and abjure as a dangerous heresy the opinion, that an abundance of food can be a blessing to a people; and I solemnly swear that I will never exercise any privilege to which I am, or may become, entitled, to disturb the Corn Monopoly in the United Kingdom as by law established." (Loud cheers and laughter.) Now, Sir, if the argument be good for anything, I would ask these gentlemen, in consistency with the course they take on other political questions—namely, that of placing their reliance on oaths and declarations—that they should give the least a Corn-Law oath. I think they have very little faith in the declaration of the Prime Minister that he does not now contemplate change, but he cannot say what may be possible. (Cheers and laughter.) There is very little security in any such promise, especially when the Prime Minister's colleague in office declared that Free Trade was common sense. I fear that the day will come,—when public opinion shall have been sufficiently formed,—when these gentlemen, who fear that the Church Establishment and the Protestant religion will be jeopardized by the abolition of the Corn Laws, will have to face the difficulties of their situation; and, take the chance of all those dreaded dangers; for, depend upon it, no minister of the crown will be found who can long maintain the interests of the aristocratic few in this country, when the great body of the community come forward, united as one man in a spirit of stern remonstrance, to demand that there shall no longer be that interference with the freedom of trade which deprives them of the rewards of their industry, and of the fruits of the enterprise of their fellow-countrymen. (Cheers.) It would, perhaps, be unfair for me to discuss the importance of these Agricultural Protection Societies; for, as the Times humorously says, they have but just emerged from that alluvial mud and artificial compost in which they were generated (laughter); but this I will say, that we are far more entitled to assert that these societies have other and ulterior views, than they have a right to say that the Anti-Corn-Law League has other objects than those which it professes. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) I say, we have great reason to know, from speeches that have been made, and declarations uttered in both Houses of Parliament, that there are other considerations influencing the supporters of these societies than the mere keeping up the price of corn or the interruption of trade. I am certain that there is another and an ulterior view—political ascendancy. (Loud cheers.) The poet Moore, in reference to ascendancy of this nature, especially the landed ascendancy, has said, "when you speak of it you must lay the emphasis on the first syllable, and pronounce it ascendancy." (Laughter.) I do not know whether I am clearly understood, but he was speaking of that landed ascendancy which is now aimed at by these Corn-Law Protection Societies. I ask you, the representatives of a large portion of the intelligent population of the metropolis, whether you are prepared to submit to the humiliating proposition that you are only to exist by sufferance, and that you are of necessity in this state to be placed in a secondary position—that there is to be maintained over you a landed ascendancy? (Cries of "No, no.") I ask you, would you not be less than men, and undeserving the name of Englishmen, if you consented to the proposal that there is any class in this community, however wealthy and distinguished by titles—however remarkable for any qualities, whether ignorance (laughter) or knowledge—I ask you, would it not be degrading for you to admit that there should be any class entitled to such an ascendancy? What is involved in this proposition of ascendancy? Why, that you are the property of others. (Loud cheers.) If you are not entitled to equality by the exertion of your own enterprise and industry, you are slaves; and unless you exert yourselves to throw off your chains, you deserve to be told that you are vassals. (Loud and continued cheering.) I trust that we shall see a growing spirit of independence in the community, and that we shall no longer have to complain of that servile adulation of mere rank and wealth, which has enabled the Legislature to impose these yokes on your necks. (Cheers.) I trust we shall see a recognition of the rights of freemen, and a determination to vindicate those rights, accompanied at the same time by a sacred regard to property: not property merely under acts of Parliament, but that which men are entitled to by the exertion of their industry and enterprise; not the vested interests which are created by monopoly, but those which are derived from the enjoyment of the gifts of Heaven—by the exertion of their sinews and intellects. (Cheers.) Those are the vested interests to which men have a right, which never can be interfered with justly; those are the vested interests which we are called on to protect. There is no interference with these sacred vested interests so great as the Corn Laws, and the restrictive system, which says in so many words:—"We will only allow so much trade to the commercial community as suits our convenience or pecuniary interests, and is conformable with our notion of political ascendancy; we will not allow men to have that free scope for their industry, and that full reward for their exertions, which Providence entitles them to enjoy. (Cheers.) If we do so, they may rival us some day in political power, wealth, and intelligence, or in other matters in this country; and we desire to remain the only representatives of England, considering all other classes but serfs and slaves, to be used as instruments for our power, pleasure, or convenience." (Cheers.) Freedom of trade will never be the gift of your rulers. Liberty was never bestowed freely by the governing body upon any people since the beginning of the world; liberty can only be obtained by the exertions of the people themselves. (Cheers.) Commercial freedom is within your power if you choose to avail yourselves of it; but you will never possess it unless you put forth your own hand and take it. (Cheers.) You will never see these blessings realized—peace and tranquillity pervade the world; and civilization diffused in every part of it—unless there is unrestricted commercial freedom; and you must exert yourselves zealously for the accomplishment of this great and glorious end. (Loud cheers.) It will not come to you in the chapter of accidents; it can only be obtained by steady and unflinching perseverance, and at the expense of much exertion and many sacrifices. I believe, Sir, that there is no greater truth than that contained in the old English proverb—"God helps those who help themselves." (The hon. gentleman sat down amid great applause.)

The CHAIRMAN then came forward and said:—Ladies and gentlemen, the member for Durham will now address the meeting. (Loud cheers.) I rejoice to make the announcement, that, notwithstanding the flourish of trumpets about the petition which was presented against his return, that Mr. Bright is still member for Durham. (Renewed cheering.) The petitioners, not having the slightest shadow of a chance of impugning the election of that honourable gentleman, have given notice last night in the House that they should abandon their petition. (Cheers and laughter.) Mr. BRIGHT then came forward amidst loud and repeated cheers. Silence having been obtained, the hon. member proceeded to address the meeting as follows:—I have been called upon most unexpectedly to speak at this meeting. The difficulty which I feel from the suddenness of the call made upon me arises in no degree from lack of matter upon which to address you; for, after all the inquiries we have made into this question, the only difficulty, whenever we stand up to speak, is to select from the abundance of matter available to us that which may be most interesting and useful. This theatre was formerly, and is now occasionally, used for the purposes rather of entertainment than instruction; but we have done something towards transforming it into a school for public instruction. (Hear.) We are a political economy association, and our worthy president occupies the professor's chair. (Cheers.) From this platform we take upon ourselves to expound certain great principles, which we believe to be of the utmost importance to the people of this country, and to instruct those who may come to hear us—and, through the medium of the press, those also who are absent—upon that great question which we believe to be essential to the wellbeing, if not the very existence, of this empire. (Cheers.) We are not alarmed at the symptoms which have exhibited themselves lately amongst our opponents. (Hear, hear.) We never expected that that foul thing, which we are banded together to destroy, would give up its existence without a last, and somewhat violent, kick. We did not suppose that the landowners of this country, who enjoy, or some of whom seem to do so, a monopoly of ignorance upon these great questions, and of selfishness, too,—that they would give up their monopoly in the supply of bread to the people, after having enjoyed it for nearly thirty years, without a desperate effort to shake us off. But all along they have mistaken us entirely. They fancied that we were holiday-agitators, and might be content with speeches in the House of Commons, and, occasionally, large meetings, and the farce of petitioning the Houses of Parliament. (Hear.) They supposed that by standing strongly banded together, and showing what they call a bold front, that the Anti-Corn-Law League would be tired of its agitation, men would be weary of paying, and that we should give up working. I have often asserted that they have entirely mistaken us; and I promise them that, if they remain yet under that delusion, they are just as much in error now as they have ever been. They charge us with bringing the aristocracy of this country into contempt. (Laughter.) Now, of all the works of supererogation, that appears to me the most extraordinary. I have heard of aristocratic individuals who have attended some of the meetings of the League in this place, who have been moved,—not to tears, for they seldom shed tears,—but who have been affected "even to shuddering" that the anti-aristocratic feeling should be found so strong amongst the people of this metropolis. We have a reverence for that true aristocracy which consists in all that is good,—in a love of industry, in pre-eminence of intellect, and superiority of virtue (hear); this is the aristocracy to which we will bow, and which we all venerate. (Hear.) But there is another aristocracy, which may be called a bastard chivalry; an aristocracy which vaunts that it never did anything for anybody; an aristocracy whose greatest boast is, that their ancestors have been in all times, as they are now, the idlest, the largest-consuming, and least-producing portion of the people of this country. (Loud and continued cheering.) I have been often charged with being hostile to the aristocracy of this country. Well, they need not fear one so humble as I am if their cause be good, and their position sound. (Hear.) I am hostile to the aristocracy of this country in so far as they dare to trample on the order to which I belong. (Vehement cheering.) The class to which we are opposed is the idle and the noxious class of our aristocracy. They are men who are bound by none of those ties which influence other men. They are not peculiarly the examples of all that is admirable in private life (laughter), and in their public conduct and the performance of their senatorial functions I have never yet discovered anything which called on me to be particularly respectful to them. (Hear, hear.) But there are men in the aristocracy whom I have no hope of bringing into contempt. If I were to stand up here and mention such names as Spencer, Radnor, Ducie, Fitzwilliam, Westminster, Kinnaird, Howick, and Morpeth (loud cheers), how should I be greeted by this audience if I were to attempt to bring these noblemen into contempt? How should I succeed, and by what argument could I prevail on you to agree with me that these were individuals on whom you should look with scorn? What passage of their lives should I bring before you to show that they are men "ennobled but not noble?" If I were to speak of Lord Spencer, and tell you of his conduct as leader of the House of Commons, when it was allowed by almost all parties that he was too honest, high-minded, and truthful for the position which he occupied in that House; if I were to contrast his straight-forward conduct, his daring forth of the principles by which he was actuated; and if I were to contrast his conduct with that of the man who now occupies the place which he filled (hear, hear.) in that House, should I then be successful in heaping obloquy on Lord Spencer? (Cheers, and cries of "No, no.") If, again, I were to speak of Lord Radnor,—the friend of the people from his youth upwards, and to whom now, in his old age, it must be a pleasure of no common kind to see that the principles which he advocated in his early days are spreading through all the land, and taking root in the minds of millions of the intelligent of the population of this country,—how could I throw contempt on his name? And if I spoke of Lord Ducie,—who is not an agriculturist merely because he owns land, but is one in fact—a great, practical, scientific farmer—a man who has done more for the agriculture of his country than all the protection societies that ever existed or ever will exist (loud cheers),—could I heap obloquy on the name of Ducie if I were to bring forward his character and conduct before this meeting? And then, if I turn to Fitzwilliam, Westminster, Kinnaird, Morpeth, or Howick, and mention the great characteristics of these men, no man would charge me with wishing to bring them into contempt; he would rather say that I was pointing to these men,—noble amongst the people of this country, and noble from their characters and conduct,—that I was actually leading you, my countrymen, to bow down, worship, and exalt them into a higher aristocracy than any to which they have yet aspired. (Loud cheers.) Monopolist landlords, from the duke to the squire, are doing our work most effectually. If our work be to bring them into contempt. They profess to be the born legislators of this country. One man in the county of Surrey says, it is but reasonable that that class which owns the land should be the rulers of the country. (Cries of "Oh, oh!" and laughter.) That is but another way of saying that the class which owns the land should also be proprietors of the people. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) They are legislators, many of them by birth, and they think it a great condescension to allow any constituency to send them into Parliament. When there, they make a solemn declaration that they will legislate, without favour or affection, or a view to self-interest, but solely for the public good. If they really do so, all I can say is, that the majority of the people of this country are living in a most deplorable delusion upon that subject. The aristocracy make laws for themselves in Parliament, and admit that they do so. In private they confess freely that these laws are for themselves alone, and the indiscreet among them even acknowledge it in public. In their own counties they are stirring up every evil passion in the minds of the farmer, raising his hostility to the manufacturing classes, and doing to the utmost possible extent that with which they falsely charge us. They have, ever since 1815—to go no further back—practised a monstrous imposition on their tenants, and have endeavoured to spread the delusion amongst other classes of the people. They cheated their tenants in 1815, by promising them 80s. a quarter for their wheat. They deluded them in 1822, again in 1828, and lastly in 1842; and now, when the fraud of the last Corn Law is wellnigh exploded, they are trying another final chance upon the gullibility, the ignorance, and terror of the farmers, in the hope that this unjust and mischievous Corn Law may be perpetuated for some years longer. Their Anti-League meetings are sufficient of themselves, in my opinion, with an intelligent people, to procure the repeal of the Corn Law. (Cheers.) What do they consist of? Dukes and lords of all degrees, landowners and squires, county magistrates, game-preservers and game-slaughters, chairmen of quarter sessions, transporters of poachers, and the unhappy amongst the clergy of the Established Church. They put a farmer in the chair, who professes that he is "unaccustomed to public speaking"—(hear)—but, having heard so many of those fallacies for the last three or four years, he can speak a few of them, with considerable hesitation. Abuse of the Anti-Corn-Law League and of you is the staple of their speeches. The assertions which they make prove one of two things—either the utter dishonesty of the parties who make them, or the profound ignorance of the landowners of this country. (Cheers.) They held a meeting at York the other day, to counteract, I suppose, one that we held there a short time before. Lord Harewood, a large landed proprietor, was in the chair. He stated that he would not argue this question, for as to argument that was all gone by. (Hear.) "Putting aside, however," (he says) "all arguments which have been used for and against—for I will not take up your time with them—I will merely state to you that half the land of this country would be thrown out of cultivation." Now, if I were to say anything so monstrous as that at a League meeting I should never dare to come to another afterwards. Why, how happens it that, if the introduction of the produce of a thousand acres of land from abroad would throw out of cultivation an equal quantity in this country, the enclosure of millions of acres in England within the last fifty years has not thrown out of cultivation one single acre in other parts of the country? (Hear, hear.) I have here a single page of a "Farmers' Magazine," published in the year 1802, in which this argument is completely disposed of. Speaking of a treatise upon the Corn Laws, the writer says:—"The author further celebrates the effect of the Corn Laws in bringing thousands of acres in this country into high cultivation and increased productive value; but we would ask him, if he is so apprehensive of the discouragement of agriculture from the free importation of the produce of land from other countries, why is he not in absolute despair as to the fate of the old cultivated lands in this country, in consequence of the competition in the market from the produce of these new lands, which the favourable effect of the Corn Laws has brought into high cultivation, and the competition of whose produce, against that of the old lands, no Corn Laws, it is presumable, will ever be so absurd as to intermeddle with?" Lord Harewood also speaks of our ulterior designs. Now, if we had no ulterior designs, the course they are pursuing would prove the necessity for them. He says that we are merely "cotton manufacturers and millowners." That "it is cotton against corn—against the landed interest of this country!" That we are "speculators—men who grind their poor to nothing—against the farmers and landowners." He then relates a circumstance, which I believe our chairman has already mentioned, that after somebody had been at an Anti-Corn-Law League meeting in some county, but he does not know which, and opposed the League, that the very night after his stacks and crops were burnt; and he says, "No man in his senses can doubt the intentions of the Anti-Corn-Law League." Why, really, if any man in his senses can doubt their intentions, his faculties must have been asleep for the last five years; for we have been in nearly every county of Great Britain, having had probably much more than 100 meetings, circulated thousands of newspapers and millions of tracts, explaining fully what our objects are. If there be a man in his senses who is not aware what those intentions are, those senses have served him to very little purpose. But this Lord Harewood is not a fair judge. He is the proprietor of broad acres, and owns a large portion of the county of York. He knows, however, little of his land but what he sees when galloping over it. He is but slightly acquainted with the condition of the population of the county in which he lives. He is ignorant of its woollen trade, which his legislation has tended to destroy, and knows nothing of the perils by which it is now environed. He seems scarcely to be aware how much his dignity and great wealth are indebted to the very manufactures which he spurns and scorns, and which his acts of Parliament have almost involved in ruin. (Hear.) Is that man, too, a fair judge of whether a law which increases the price of corn and raises rents is just or not, when he himself is only known to the world as a very large landed proprietor? (Hear, hear, hear.) I say he is not. That any man who is a legislator of this country, having a seat in the House of Lords, being "high up" or "low down," as he may choose to say one or the other in the peerage—that he should come forward and charge us with designs so atrocious as those to which he hints, I say is monstrous and most disgraceful. (Hear, hear.) That is not conduct which will raise the character of the aristocracy in our estimation. If he dare to charge us with motives like this, why, then, I am bold enough to tell him that there are people in this country who will yet humiliate the order to which he belongs. (Immense cheers.) But there was another lord at this meeting, Lord Faversham, who asserted that the Corn Law was intended for the protection of the labouring classes—that it prevents them from having their labour brought into competition with that of foreign countries. What protection can there be to labour in a country where there is from three to four millions of paupers? If there were ten or fifteen millions of acres of good land here, which wanted nothing but ploughing and sowing to make it realize a good harvest, how could there be protection to the broad acres of Lord Faversham? There is no resemblance between the two cases. The sea encircles the land of this island. We cannot go abroad for food. The land of Lord Faversham and that of his fellow-peers does not grow enough for our supply. He has a bond fide "protection."

as he chooses to call it; but no law of his passing, or any enactment of Parliament, can give protection to the labourers of this country when there are three or four millions of them unemployed, and in the lamentable condition of paupers. (Hear.) In the next sentence he certainly tells a truth:—"It protects the labourers from having their labour transported from this to other nations." That is precisely what we have said. We have labourers enough, and can produce abundantly. We have millions of customers all over the world anxious for the produce of our industry; and this law protects us by shutting us out from those markets; reducing the price of every thing that we make; glutting both the home and foreign markets; giving to the landowner of this country a larger share of the produce of our industry in return for the produce of his land than he has any right to, or could have, were it not for the nefarious law which the landowners have made. In addition to those peers I have mentioned, there was another nobleman present—the Earl of Tyrconnel; but his lordship let out the cloven foot very distinctly. He said:—"Of all delusions he looked upon Free Trade as the greatest that was ever attempted to be palmed off upon a country." "It is," said he, "impossible to have Free Trade in a country so highly taxed as this is. But if we are to have Free Trade,"—there is something tells them that, after all, they must have it,—let us not have it in agricultural produce alone, but in everything that can be imported from foreign countries:—"we have said the same thing a thousand times!—but for this purpose you must come to what is called equitable adjustment. The fundholder must be content to receive 15 millions instead of 30 millions for the debt lent to the state." Evil communications corrupt good manners. (Laughter.) Bad practices soon become inveterate. The man who has once departed from the straight line of honesty is likely to wander very far, and with great difficulty does he ever get back. The Earl of Tyrconnel has been one of the class who have been spoiling and plundering the homes of millions of the industrious people of this country for at least 30 years past. (Cheers.) And now, when we have found out the wrong, and tell him he must surrender,—not disgorge, for that which is destroyed we cannot call back,—when we tell him he shall no longer persist in this injustice, the habit of spoiling or despoiling is so strong upon him, that it has become a sort of nature, and he looks round with a voracious appetite, and fixes on the unfortunate fundholder, and thinks to invite us to help him to rob that fundholder. It has been remarked of the monopolists that they must rob somebody. (Laughter.) Now, our efforts are directed to bring these almost incorrigible fellows into the line of honesty. We can tell them, and I do now in your name (hear, hear), that we will unite together with our countrymen to put down the wrong by which he supposes he profits; yet we will be no parties to help him, or any one else, to inflict any injustice or injury on any other class of our countrymen. (Loud cheers.) Then there was a squire at this meeting—Richard Bethell—and he, presuming on the simplicity of his audience, remarked:—"If there be any truth which we more firmly assert than another, it is, that all the great interests of the country are bound together, and none can suffer but the others must suffer with it. That is a truth which is established by daily and hourly experience." Well, we have said the same very often; and it is on that ground that we assert, that the wrong the landowners do to us is one which will, in the end, come upon themselves. But Richard Bethell is in the position of a man who has just taken something that he had no right to from somebody else, and when he is asked to restore it he says—"There can be no truth more plain than this, that our interests are bound up together, and that no individual in the community can suffer without every other member of it suffering also;" therefore he will not make restitution of the pocket-handkerchief. (Loud laughter.) And Richard Bethell is one of that order of whom I have spoken—a "chairman of quarter sessions." I speak of these men with a veneration I am scarcely able to convey to you (loud laughter); for I recollect, in my boyish days, having a very awful feeling come over me when I thought of men who sit on the bench to administer justice. Since I have grown up, I have found out that what they administer may be sometimes law, but there is frequently very little of justice in it. (Loud cheers.) As a chairman of the quarter sessions he says—"Has there been any diminution made in those taxes bearing especially on the agricultural interests? On the contrary, are they not daily increasing? Are not county-rates increasing, in spite of every effort to keep them down? I do not quarrel with this, for they are spent for the benefit of the country; but they form part of those expenses which fall on the agriculturists. From the situation which I occupy, as chairman of a quarter sessions, I am well acquainted with the subject, and I know that the county-rates are daily and hourly increasing. And is not that a reason why we should have a protection for agriculturists? The Anti-Corn-Law League—'unreasonable people as they are,'—do not propose that the burthens now paid by the agriculturists shall be paid by the consolidated fund; they do not wish that a single item of the taxes with which we are charged shall be placed to the public account." (Loud laughter.) He again asks, "Has there been any diminution in the taxes laid on agriculturists?" Why, that is precisely the fix in which the landowners in Parliament are now; they do not ask their tenants to petition Parliament for relief from their distresses; they are covering and concealing their sufferings as much as possible; they know that Parliament can give them no further protection and take off no more taxes from their shoulders, they all having been taken off some years ago. I believe that tax which used to be imposed on shepherds' dogs, was about the last that was abolished. Yesterday evening there stood up a member—I believe the representative of one of the Welsh counties—to propose that a bill should be introduced, exempting from toll all lime being carried to any farm to be used as manure. However, there was no one to support his motion, even on his own side of the House; they thought it was too bad, just now to talk of that; and, a good deal of opposition being manifested on the other side of the House, that honourable member went back into his obscurity, and nothing more was heard of his proposition. Richard Bethell, then, asks, "Are not county-rates daily increasing?" He does not think of that much, because they are spent for the benefit of the country. What an idea this magistrate has of the country. County-rates have increased greatly, it is said, from the expenses attending the prosecution of poachers, in the preservation of game, for the sake of putting in gaol any person who travels through the fields with a dog of a particular expressiveness of countenance. (Loud laughter.) The modesty of landowners is remarkable; he thinks that we are unreasonable, because we seek not to be overcharged for our bread without proposing that out of our taxes the taxes of the landowners and the farmers should be paid. I should like to see the landowners' Minister come down with a budget, which proposed that a large sum, from the consolidated fund, should be every year voted to pay certain expenses of landowners and farmers. That would be just the same proposition which this Richard Bethell recommends, for which he blames us, and thinks it so hard, that we do not propose. Lord Beaumont was also at that meeting. (Laughter.) We have heard before of silly lords; and these Anti-League meetings seem to be got up for the express purpose of making an exhibition of all of them to their countrymen. (Cheers and laughter.) Lord Beaumont says, that "the theory of Free Trade is a beautiful one; but it is only a theory, and therefore it cannot be perfect." I always understood that such a sentiment as that would be deemed sheer nonsense. If Free Trade be a theory, and the principles of it be true and beautiful, I hold that it may be said to be perfect. We have no proof that the opposite principle is either sound, beautiful, or perfect. (Hear, hear.) We have no evidence that in this country it has worked good. We have the authority of great names in favour of our principles, and we have the sanction of Lord Beaumont in favour of the opposite principle. He says, moreover, that the manufacturers of this country are admirably protected under this system. I know not whether my friend who spoke first alluded to the non-protection of the manufacturers of this country; but as to that trade with which he and I are connected, it is a well-known fact that three-fourths of all our manufactures are exported to foreign countries; and if Lord Beaumont can tell me, or any one else, how the Parliament of which he is a member has the power to give protection to any goods in the markets of China, America, or of the Brazils, he is a much cleverer man than I suppose him or any other lord to be. He says cheap food means nothing at all but cheap labour. I could show him some hundreds of weavers in my county who would argue with him—no, I doubt if they would, for I think they would laugh at him. The monopolists talk of Poland, Russia, and every country where they fancy people are worse off than here; but they never go over the Atlantic, or point to that country where farm-labourers get 4s. or 4s. 6d. a day, with food at a very moderate price. (Hear.) They are afraid to talk of Ireland. You had the representative of all Ireland—or at least three-fourths of it—here last week. (Loud and long-continued cheering.) You heard a statement from that distinguished man relative to the rate of wages in that country, where the Corn Law has existed for 30 years, and where all the blessings that might be expected to result from high prices should be exhibited in great luxuriance. (Hear.) Then a certain Godfrey Wentworth got up, and moved a resolution in favour of the formation of a committee "for the defence of British industry." (Cries of "Oh, oh!") I believe you have heard before that the real meaning of this favourite monopolist phrase, "British industry," is, "British idleness." (Hear, hear.) That it is "for the defence of that particular class who are notorious for doing nothingness" (laughter), who have never been known to set their hands in any large numbers to useful or honourable occupations. There is another lord, whose name was mentioned last week, who does not appear to be a favourite with the audiences who assemble in this theatre; I allude to Lord Winchelsea (groans and hisses), who stated at another meeting that we were "a most bloody and revolutionary body!" (Hisses, and loud cries of "Shame, shame!"); that we are precisely the same kind of characters as the men who were notorious as leaders during "the reign of terror," in a neighbouring country. (Cries of "Shame, shame!" "It is an infamous slander.") Well, I believe that after all we are bringing on "a reign of terror" amongst a certain class. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) The man who comes to this meeting, and positively "shudders," may be said to have something of terror upon him. The light-fingered gentry experience symptoms of this terror when those men in long blue coats, who wear girdles round their waists, make their appearance. (Laughter.) We intend to carry terror into the ranks of the monopolists. We began with that intention. We did not commence our agitation proposing always to use smooth phrases. Men do not use straws to cut down oaks. We are a great deal too much in earnest to go with "bated breath and whispering humbleness" to those who trample upon the people of this country, and gently ask them to surrender the rights which they have so long deprived us of. We know well enough what the character of our opponents is—that they have clutched the existence of the people, and hold in their grasp the prosperity of the industrious classes of this empire—that they are not only profoundly ignorant of what is best for their country, but are remorseless and relentless in the cruelties they inflict upon the poor. (Loud cheers.) We are determined that, wherever we go throughout the land, we will expose the iniquities of which they are guilty, and cause every intelligent and honest man to rally round the banner which we have raised—to march with us in our campaign to overthrow that grievous wrong, the fruits of which are to be seen in the starvation of thousands, and the pauperisation of millions of the people of this country. (Loud and continued cheers.) Oh, these landed monopolists are a sensitive class! You cannot come near them but they recoil from the apprehended touch. (Laughter.) Last night a motion was brought on in the House of Commons by certain gentlemen who have a great affection for Don Carlos. About five hours of the valuable time of "the collective wisdom" was expended in a debate respecting that very respectable and unfortunate prince. There was a great indisposition to hear the speeches on the part of many members, and a still greater dislike to the debate which was expected to come on after it, upon a proposition to allow wheat to be brought to this country from the Cape of Good Hope, the East Indies, and Australia, at the same rate as that which is brought from Canada now, namely—no duty at all. Don Carlos would have been thrown overboard in their anxiety to overturn this little nibbling at the Corn Law—"hear, hear," and laughter)—but there happened to be another matter left, namely, some actions which go by the name of "qui tam," in which certain lords and honourable gentlemen are deeply interested, connected with some matters not very reputable concerning the turf and horse-racing. It was amusing to see what sensitiveness there was with respect to this possible prospect of bringing some wheat from India and the Cape of Good Hope. Squires were seen in an attitude and posture, and with an expression of countenance, betokening little else than a conspiracy against the state. (Cheers and laughter.) They were expressing their fears to each other, they declared that if wheat and flour could be brought from India at a mere trifle of freight—all the way from Calcutta to London—when the expense was reckoned it was so trifling!—that if this project were carried out, agricultural protection would receive "a heavy blow and great discouragement." Well, now, I confess that I have a contempt—a thorough, unmitigated, unspeakable contempt—for that class of men who go into either House of Parliament and watch every motion and bill with the apprehension that, in some direct or indirect way, it would be likely to diminish their rents some small sum. (Cheers.) The ministerialist party appears more firmly compacted together; and, being thus cemented by views of self-interest, their country is of course forgotten. All that is required of them by the suffering and starving poor is left out of sight, and they are banded together only to maintain the predominance of their own interests, and the undue advantages of their own class. They appear now to be not disjoined, as they were last session, but are a happy and united family. Oh, it is delightful to see "brethren dwell together in unity." (Laughter.) You have, I dare say, frequently passed the National Gallery, and witnessed the happy family pent up in a cage in the street, in front of that building. (Hear, hear.) I saw them yesterday: there were three rats (laughter) nestling and warming themselves against the fur of a cat, which, under other circumstances, would have been their deadly enemy. A friend of mine asked the man who owns the cage and its contents how he managed to suppress their natural instincts and propensities, and make them thus tame and friendly towards each other. "Do you starve them," said he, "into compliance?" "No, your honour," the man replied, "I feeds 'em well." (Loud cheers and laughter.) There is the secret of the compactness of the ministerial Corn Law majority. One part of them is in the enjoyment of power, place, pay, and patronage, which is widely distributed amongst their followers, and spun out to the greatest possible length—new places being made wherever it can be done with any show of necessity. The rest are expecting something, and nearly all sit there quietly, anxious for the maintenance of the majority they now have, because Sir Robert Peel has promised them, or they say he has—for I confess I would not say that anything was a "promise" which the right hon. baronet said in his position of Premier—(cheers)—that Sir Robert Peel has promised them that he will maintain the Corn Laws, and the Corn Laws being the basis, as they think, of their rent-roll, they may therefore all be classed amongst that happy family which is kept together because they are well fed. (Cheers and laughter.) But there is a great insecurity amongst them: they do not believe in all the present show of power; neither do they boast in their Houses of Parliament, although they do so on the platform in some snug room in an inn at Aylesbury, Buckingham, or similar places. They boast not in Parliament: they know that there is a great rising up amongst the people of this country which will not be denied and which cannot be deluded. (Loud cheers.) They have had an exhibition of this feeling in the county of Somerset, at a meeting called by themselves (loud cheers)—at which we, who "turn the country upside down," as they say, were not present,—a meeting in a small town, attended by 4000 or 5000 of the inhabitants of that purely agricultural county; and yet it is declared on the most respectable authority, that a majority of 8 or 10 to 1 held up their hands in favour of a vote of thanks to the Anti-Corn-Law League. (Loud cheers.) In the publications which the Anti-League Societies are issuing forth to the world with so much show of importance, they assert that they are seven-ninths of the population of the country; that they have, of course, all the religion and patriotism; but the seven-ninths of the population cannot in any county probably, however purely agricultural, obtain a vote—not unanimously, but by a bare majority—in favour of the principles which these lords, squires, and landowners are fighting to maintain. Then look at this Metropolis, with 57,000 registered members of the League in London. (Vehement cheering.) "Strangers from Lancashire!" "A mere mob, who voted for Mr. Pattison;"—"none of the respectable voters gave him any support!" "The mercantile classes were not with the League!" "A voice—"Where was Mr. Lloyd?" "All these things are said, but, notwithstanding, this is on paper and in our books, that 57,000 of the inhabitants of this Metropolis have freely enrolled themselves, and paid something for the registering of their names as members of the National Anti-Corn-Law League. (Tremendous cheering.) Now, we have a great obstacle yet that we have to remove, to some extent; I would not have said much about it had we not been driven to the necessity. We find still in this country a considerable reverence for even the bad amongst the aristocracy, although your conduct may make some of them "shudder." We must get rid of that veneration. (Hear.) It is a false and worthless idolatry. (Loud and long-continued cheering.) It is bowing down to the image of Baal; it is not doing homage to worth, intellect, industry, and virtue; but worshipping idleness in pomp, and riches, whether they be gained honestly or out of the sufferings of the millions. (Vehement cheers.) I have no hostility to any good institutions of this country, nor has the League. We did not, of ourselves, voluntarily search into these matters; but we have been driven to do so by a stern necessity, and which may, at some time, drive the people of this country much further than they are now anxious or willing to go. (Enthusiastic cheering.) We obey the Government; we venerate the law when it is the embodiment of a just principle; we reverence legislators who make laws in accordance with Christian principles and the true interests of our countrymen; but this aristocracy, whom you see walking in your streets, riding in their carriages, entering their gorgeous mansions, and taking their seats in the Legislature—these men who were never known to do anything, and who scorn you because you do something honest and useful—these men, I tell you, are not worthy of your worship and your respect, and the sooner you get rid of that false and mischievous principle, which been instilled into your minds from your childhood, the sooner you may hope that the people of this country may shake off the burthen which now presses on them, and may stand forth, as they ought to do, the greatest, the freest, and the most virtuous people on the face of the globe.—(The hon. gentleman resumed his seat amidst enthusiastic cheering, which lasted for a considerable time.)

The CHAIRMAN then came forward and said:—Ladies and gentlemen, I beg to remind you that the meetings for the future will be held on the Wednesday evenings until further notice. I am sorry to have to say that, in consequence of the alteration of the arrangements, many parties who came a long distance from the country to attend here last week, not having paid sufficient attention to the announcement of the alteration, were disappointed. I propose that we close the proceedings of this very interesting occasion by giving three cheers for the gentlemen who have addressed us.

Three hearty cheers were then given for Messrs. Ashworth, Gibson, and Bright, and the meeting separated at ten minutes after ten o'clock.

GREAT ANTI-CORN LAW MEETING FOR THE COUNTY OF GLOUCESTER, AT THE COUNTY-HALL.

GLOUCESTER, Saturday Afternoon, Feb. 24.

One of the greatest and most important county meetings was held to day, at noon, at the Shire-hall, in the city of Gloucester, for the purpose of receiving Mr. Cobden and a deputation of the Anti-Corn Law League, in order to hear the sentiments of those gentlemen relative to the question of removing all restrictions as to a free trade in corn. The meeting was one of the most imposing and enthusiastic demonstrations in favour of Free Trade ever witnessed in this county. The Shire-hall was literally crammed to suffocation, upwards of 4000 persons being present; and hundreds went away who were unable to gain admission.

About a month ago a requisition, most numerous and influential signed, was presented to the High Sheriff, requesting him to convene a county meeting, on the subject of the Corn Laws, which that gentleman refused to comply with, alleging that the requisitionists "did not represent the feelings of the freeholders of the county." This requisition received the signatures of no less than upwards of one hundred and fifty great landholders of the county, embracing among that number two peers of Parliament, six of the members of Parliament connected with the county, and about twenty magistrates, as well as several of the most eminent practical agriculturists of the vale of Gloucester. On the refusal, the requisitionists, with the Earl Ducie and Radnor at their head, determined to call a county meeting on their own responsibility, in order to afford the tenant and practical farmers of the vale of Gloucester an opportunity of hearing the arguments of the League.

The leaders of the "Anti-League" exerted all their influence among the farmers of the Cotswold hills to induce them to refrain from attending the meeting, and not to listen to the "baldersdash" of the "Lancashire strangers." A recommendation was also given to the farmers that they should commence a system of "exclusive dealing." It was really a most gratifying sight to witness that the farmers, notwithstanding all the persuasions and entreaties of the monopolists, determined to be present at the meeting, and attended in considerable numbers. "At any rate," said one of those sturdy yeomen to a brother agriculturist, "at any rate, it would do no harm to hear what the great Parliament men had to say on free trade in corn."

Shortly after eleven o'clock the deputation from the League took their station on the platform. Mr. Cobden was received with a burst of tumultuous applause.

On the platform we noticed Earl Ducie, C. E. Handford, Esq. (the late high sheriff of the county), E. Holland, Esq. (late high sheriff of Worcestershire), C. Stanton, Esq. (brother to the member for Stroud), Mr. Cobden, M.P., Col. Thompson, and Mr. Moore, the deputation from the League, and the following magistrates of the county:—J. Whitwick, E. Kendal, L. Clutterbuck, J. Raymond Barker, L. S. Anstin, and Anthony Fowater, Esqrs., besides several other gentlemen whose names we could not ascertain.

On the motion of C. Bowley, Esq., seconded by C. E. Handford, Esq., the Right Honourable the Earl of Ducie was called to the chair amid bursts of acclamation and repeated demonstrations of respect.

His Lordship said he deeply regretted that accidental circumstances alone had deprived them of the pleasure of the presence of his noble friend, Earl Radnor, who was heart and soul in the cause. (Loud and continued cheering.) It was only at the eleventh hour that his noble friend was deprived from giving his support and countenance to this important meeting (cheers) on account of illness. He had received letters of apology from the two members for the city of Gloucester, who, however, fully concurred in the object of the meeting, as well as several other members of Parliament, who were detained in London, expecting the division on Lord John Russell's motion. (Great applause.) Several other friends of the cause and champions of Free Trade were also unavoidably absent; but, while regretting, he had only to look around him, and from the vast assemblage by which he was surrounded, which represented on this occasion the wealth and intelligence of the county, he was fully satisfied that himself and brother magistrates were perfectly justified in calling this meeting, notwithstanding the refusal of the High Sheriff to comply with the requisition. (Loud and protracted cheers.) Had he not occupied the chair, he would have embraced the opportunity of defending his conduct in giving his most cordial and hearty support to the Anti-Corn Law League. (Loud cheers.) Insinuations had been cast upon him, and some very unfair statements had gone abroad relative to his conduct ("Hear, hear," "Shame, shame.") He should, perhaps, better consult the unanimity of the meeting if he refrained from making any remarks on the subject till the close of his proceedings. (Loud cheers.) He was surrounded by a great number of influential landholders and tenant-farmers, who had been taught to consider the League as the enemies of themselves and of their interests; but he trusted that, before they left this meeting, the arguments, good temper, and gentlemanly feeling of his most excellent friend Mr. Cobden (loud cheers), would convince them that these opinions were founded in error, and based on ignorance; and that the object of the League was, not to injure the agricultural interests, but to benefit every class of the community, from the peer to the peasant. (Great cheering.) He, who was one of the largest landholders of this county, had been publicly accused of being inimical to the best interests of agriculture. He could only say for himself, that he believed few men took greater interest in promoting the prosperity of agriculture than himself. He was one of those who wished to see it flourish, and "God speed the plough" was his motto. (Tremendous cheering.) Upwards of three-and-twenty years had he been engaged in agricultural pursuits, and his entire energies had been devoted to its improvement. (Cheers.) His reason for becoming the advocate of Free Trade was, that he verily believed, from his heart and soul, while the manufacturing and every other interest would benefit by it, the interest and prosperity of the practical working agriculturist would experience the benefit of Free Trade in a tenfold degree. (Loud, long, and continued cheering.) His lordship said, having expressed these sentiments to the tenant-farmers, he would now call upon Mr. Cobden. (Cheers.)

Mr. COBDEN, M.P., was greeted with the most enthusiastic cheering from all parts of the vast auditory. The applause having subsided, the hon. gentleman said:—It always afforded him the sincerest gratification to deliver his opinions relative to Free Trade among practical farmers. (Hear, hear.) He rejoiced in doing so in the presence of such men as he saw around him; and he was happy that he had now an opportunity, for the first time, of addressing the highly-respectable and intelligent farmers of the vale of Gloucester. (Cheers.) He (the hon. member) would caution them, at the outset of his speech, not to take fright, or feel the least alarm at the name of the Anti-Corn Law League ("hear," and laughter)—the terrible League (continued laughter)—against whom they had been cautioned in such horrifying terms, by those who took upon themselves the high-sounding appellation and title of the farmers' friends. (Loud cheers.) He could assure the farmers of the Cotswold hills and vale of Gloucester, that the League had no cannibal propensities about them; they would neither devour the tenant-farmers nor their cattle; nor would they destroy the interests of their calling. (Cheers and laughter.) He trusted he should be able to prove to them that, by reason of the Corn Laws, the tenant-farmers were placed in an infinitely worse situation than they would be were the restrictions removed, and they had a free trade in corn. Now, he would ask them, what was the meaning of the Corn Law? It was this: it was a law to make corn sell at a higher price than it would without a Corn Law; this was admitted on all hands, and not denied by the monopolists. Well, then came the next question for the tenant-farmers. Does the price of land rise or fall with the price of corn? He would ask, would land let at the same price when corn was 20s. a quarter as when it was 80s.? (Cries of "No, no.") Well, then, if it would not, the object in keeping up the price of corn must be doubtless to keep up the price of land, or, in plainer terms, to keep up the rents of the landlords. (Cheers.) Admitting his proposition to be correct, supposing corn was raised to 100s. a quarter, the farmers could not possibly, by the remotest chance, be one bit better off. (Loud cheers.) Why, the farmers of Gloucester were not so dull of intellect but they must see this. It was no abstract doctrine; the whole question lay in a nutshell; the farmers not only got nothing by the Corn Laws, but, on the contrary, were, in point of fact, losers by this protection, unjustly so called. He was addressing practical men, and, therefore, he would illustrate his meaning. In 1815, the Legislature passed a law, after a determined opposition, for the purpose of maintaining wheat at 80s. per quarter, and from the year 1815, down to 1832, the rent of the tenant-farmers was increased, while corn in reality was only 42s. per quarter. (Cries of "Shame, shame," from different parts of the room.) Well, once more the law was altered, and the sliding scale introduced in order to keep the price of corn at 63s. or 64s., and yet, with land valued at the same price as 1835, the corn averages for the year gave a price of 39s. 4d., while in the month of December of that year the farmer was selling his wheat at 36s., or just 28s. under act-of-Parliament price. This was the injustice to the tenant-farmer: he rented his land at act-of-Parliament prices, and so when he went to pay his rent he found he had been compelled to sell his corn at 10s. or 12s. under the price which the landlord got for his land. This was injustice to the tenant; he (Mr. Cobden) would now come to the injustice to the labourer. (Cheers.) It was an awful fact that in the agricultural districts the labouring population were earning less, and were considerably worse off than in any other part of the country. He did not blame the farmers for giving so little—(hear, hear, hear)—it was no fault of theirs—(cries of "No, no")—they gave what they could afford, and what the state of competition in the labour market justified. ("Hear, hear," and cries of "That's it.") Still he understood the wages in the agricultural districts of Gloucestershire were miserably low. A statement had just been put into his hand by a gentleman, a member of the board of guardians of a neighbouring union, wherein was a statement of a man and his wife and four young children earning 8s. per week. This man applied for relief, but his application was refused, thus proving that his case was only the common state of his neighbours. Another man was mentioned, who had also a wife and four young children; his wages were 7s. per week, and he was receiving relief; and although he would not mention names, he might state that this man was working for a gentleman who made himself very conspicuous at the Anti-League meetings, and talked very loudly of protection to the agricultural labourer. (Cheers, and cries of "shame," and "name him.") Now, in the very union of which he had been speaking, the cost of maintenance in the union workhouse was 2s. 4d. per head per week; and yet here were labourers only receiving half that amount, or 1s. 2d. per head to maintain their families. Was that a case to go to Parliament for protection? Was that a state of things to be maintained by act of Parliament? (Great cheering.) Away with such cant; away with the idle and crocodile tears which pretended to flow for the interests of the labourer, while he was receiving just half the wages which it cost to maintain the pauper in the workhouse, and the criminal in the goal. (Bursts of cheering.) In conclusion, he would caution the farmers to examine the matter for themselves (hear), to endeavour to act for themselves, and to keep themselves clear of political landlords (hear, hear); and, above all things, to eschew the mis-called protection of acts of Parliament. It was said at the seaports, when a vessel was seized by the custom-house authorities, she was marked by a broad arrow; and this was called, in the cant of the ports, the devil's claw. The intermeddling of the state with agriculture was the devil's claw, and this had been on the shoulders of the farmers for the last twenty-eight years; and they might depend upon it they would never prosper until it was removed from them. (Loud cheers.)

The hon. gentleman's address, of which the above is scarcely an outline, occupied nearly two hours in delivering, and was cheered in the most enthusiastic manner throughout. On his resuming his seat, the entire meeting rose, and greeted him with three times three hearty cheers.

EDWARD HOLLAND, Esq., of Dumbleton, rose to propose the first resolution, which was to the effect that protective duties were not only injurious to commerce, but to the interests of agriculture also, and that Free Trade would promote the interest and prosperity of the whole community. Mr. Holland stated that he was a landowner and a land cultivator; the whole of his income and the support of his family were derived from the soil, and therefore if Free Trade would, as alleged, ruin the cultivator, destroy the rent of the landlord, and throw land out of cultivation, he, of all men, ought to oppose it (cheers); but, so far from that, he cordially agreed with the resolution, and cordially united heart and soul with the objects of the League. He had been a practical farmer for many years, and his opinions in favour of Free Trade were based on his own experience and observation: he had looked attentively to the proceedings of the Anti-League societies, but had found no single argument brought forward which at all shook his previously formed opinions. The Corn Laws, while they were framed ostensibly for the benefit of one class, did no real good to that class, at the same time that they were an injustice to the other classes of the community. (Loud cheers.) He cordially proposed the resolution.

Mr. JOSEPH HUNT, of Almondsbury, a practical tenant-farmer of great experience, seconded the resolution. (Loud cheers.) He had long been opposed to the Corn Laws. He was convinced they were no benefit to the tenants, and were only designed to raise rents and to place the tenantry subservient to the political domination of the landlord. (Cheers.) If he needed anything to fortify his opinion on the Corn Laws, it was the fact of the best practical agriculturists in the kingdom entertaining the same views. There was the noble Earl Ducie—(loud cheering)—one of the first practical men of the day—his name had always been held up as the best landlord in the county. (Cheers.) His lordship's tenantry were the most thriving tenantry in the county—(cheers)—and yet he was heart and soul a repealer. Then there was Earl Spencer—(protracted cheering)—a man whose opinion on agricultural matters was quoted far and wide—he was a repealer; and he had himself heard the Pro-Corn Law member for the western division of the county say that he could not get over the fact of Earl Spencer being in favour of repeal. (Cheers.) He (Mr. Hunt) believed that with Free Trade the cultivation of the land would be improved—the produce of the land would be increased—the independence of the tenant secured, and his prosperity greatly augmented. (Cheers.) He could fully bear out what Mr. Cobden had said about the agricultural labourers—their wages were miserably low, and yet the farmers could not pay more. In his own parish hundreds of families lived on 7s. per week—their fare was worse than that of the pauper—whole families of grown-up children slept in one room, to the total disregard of the decencies of life, and to the total destruction of feelings of propriety and morality. (Cheers.) It had been said the land had to bear peculiar burdens, but it should also be said the farmers had peculiar exemptions (cheers); and if the farmers' windows were untaxed, and his riding horse and his dogs free of duty, it was not to benefit him, but that he might be able to pay higher rent to his landlord. ("Hear," and cheers.) He cordially seconded the resolution, believing that a repeal of the Corn Laws would improve the prospects of the tenant-farmer, and promote the physical, moral, and social condition of the labourer. (Cheers.)

On the resolution being put, two persons made their way to the platform, and moved a counter-resolution; the design was evidently to obstruct the business of the day, but the resolution was put, and carried by an overwhelming majority, only about a dozen hands being held up against it. The result was received with loud cheering.

C. E. HANDFORD, Esq., moved a vote of thanks to the deputation who attended from the League. He fully concurred in the object of the meeting and the principles of Free Trade. (Cheers.) As an instance of the increased value of land under the Corn Laws, he could state what occurred within his own experience: an estate in the county of Gloucester was purchased about a hundred years ago, for a certain price; it was not situated near a town, and had no other adventitious advantage, and yet that estate had been sold lately for a sum ten times as large as the purchase money a hundred years ago. (Cheers.)

C. STANTON, Esq., of Stroud, seconded the motion. He contended that Free Trade benefited the manufacturing interest, and that it would also benefit the agricultural interest.

The motion was put, and carried with only two dissentients. The noble CHAIRMAN having presented the vote of thanks in due form to the deputation,

Col. THOMPSON and Mr. MOORE briefly returned thanks. Earl Ducie having left the chair, and the same having been taken by L. Clutterbuck, Esq., a vote of thanks was proposed to the noble lord, and carried by acclamation.

Earl Ducie, in returning thanks, said he must take that opportunity of refuting an insinuation which had been cast upon his motives by a gentleman signing himself "A Vale Farmer;" that insinuation was, that he (Earl Ducie) had property in the neighbourhood of Manchester, and that he supported repeal to enhance the value of his own property. He need scarcely give that charge his flat contradiction. (Tumultuous applause.) The bulk of his property was in an agricultural district, and he should scarcely go to injure that in order to improve any small interest he might have in Manchester or elsewhere. He advocated Free Trade because he believed it would benefit agriculture, and improve the condition of the people generally; and because he felt with Lord Grenville, that everything was injurious to the country which impeded the free current of natural industry. (Loud cheers.)

The proceedings closed about five o'clock, having occupied nearly six hours, and was one of the fullest meetings ever remembered in the county of Gloucester. The Earl Ducie, Mr. Cobden, and the Deputation were loudly cheered on their way from the hall, mingled with a few hisses.

The agriculturists who attempted to interrupt the harmony of the meeting, experienced the most signal and inglorious defeat.—Morning Chronicle.

GLOUCESTER.

On Friday se'night a public meeting of the inhabitants of Gloucester, called by the mayor, assembled in the Shire Hall to consider the question of the Corn Laws, and to hear Mr. Cobden and other gentlemen, as a deputation from the League. The deputation consisted of Mr. Cobden, Colonel Thompson, and Mr. Moore, and these gentlemen were accompanied into the hall by Lord Ducie. The meeting consisted of nearly 2000 persons, and the advocates of the League met with a very gratifying reception. Samuel Bowley, Esq., was called to the chair, and read letters from the two members for the city, expressive of their concurrence in the objects of the meeting, and regretting that they could not attend it. Colonel Thompson was the first speaker, and he was followed by Mr. Cobden and Mr. R. R. Moore. In the course of a most argumentative and convincing address Mr. Cobden alluded, in a strain of cutting sarcasm, to the discreditable proposition made by Mr. John Long and Mr. Samuel Baker at the meeting of the Agricultural Protection Society, for the adoption of the system of exclusive dealing; and he showed that, as two could play at that game, it would not be quite a safe experiment to make, more especially as the custom of the many for articles of consumption was of more benefit than the custom of the few, if there were to be a banding into opposite parties of monopolists and anti-monopolists, the latter would be found to be the strongest party. In Stockport and in Salisbury the monopolists had tried this game, and had had woful cause to repent of it. An individual, who was announced as Dr. Lamb, came forward for the purpose of confuting Mr. Cobden; but a more ludicrous failure was, perhaps, never before witnessed in a public meeting. The total amount raised in the meeting was £50 10s., being exactly double the amount raised at the public meeting last year, and a large addition to the list is expected. Thanks were moved to the deputation and to the chairman, and some highly-complimentary allusions were made to Earl Ducie, after which the meeting separated.

COLNE.

A public meeting, preceded by a tea-party, was held in the Baptist Chapel, Colne, on Monday, the 19th ult. (J. R. Walton, Esq., in the chair), to promote subscriptions to the Great League Fund. At previous meetings considerable interruption had been occasioned by the intrusion of persons following Feargus O'Connor's policy. Admission was, on this occasion, by tickets, which the applicants paid for. The weather was exceedingly unfavourable; its inclement severity prevented many from attending who had anticipated the meeting and made arrangements for it. About one hundred persons assembled, nearly the half of whom were ladies, many of whom had taken an active part in making provision for the entertainment of guests, and by whose cheerful and cordial sympathy in the objects of the meeting, the proceedings were enlivened and rendered unexpectedly, and beyond all precedent, successful. The Rev. J. W. Massie, and K. R. R. Moore, Esq., attended as a deputation from the Council of the League, by whom and by the Rev. Mr. Jones and Mr. Smith (a manufacturer), as well as by the chairman, the audience was suitably addressed. The contributions, from a 4d. to £20, were sent in during the latter part of the proceedings with great spirit in almost every variety of sums. Not only in most cases were the former contributions doubled, but additional subscriptions were made by the same parties so as to raise the amount to the sum which was to be announced—half-crowns, crowns, ten shillings, pounds, three pounds, five pounds, ten pounds, and twenty pounds,—were severally repeated till the whole amounted to £201 14s., besides £45 subscribed at the Burnley meeting by contributions from Colne. It is expected that this town and vicinity will produce more than double their contributions of last year, and that at least three hundred pounds will be sent from Colne to the Great League Fund. This will be another great fact.

A national testimonial to Rowland Hill, in the shape of remittances of postage stamps, is in progress.

Mr. Cobden is now a Burgess of Edinburgh, Glasgow, Perth, Dundee, Kirkcaldy, Montrose, and Cupar-Fife.

Within the last half century rents have trebled, the price of wheat has doubled, and agricultural wages remain about the same. The landlord is, therefore, the only party who has benefited by the Corn Laws.—Lancaster Guardian.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE £100,000 FUND.

Subscriptions received during the week ending Wednesday, February 28, 1844.

N.B. As the subscription list is made up from Wednesday to Wednesday, contributions received on Thursdays and Fridays are not published in the LEAGUE of the Saturday immediately succeeding, but are included in the list of the week following.

| | |
|--|----------|
| Nathaniel Buckley and Sons, Carr Hill, Mosley, near Manchester | £200 0 0 |
| A Friend, per J. Gadsby | 50 0 0 |
| A Friend, per do. | 10 0 0 |
| Mr. Higginbotham, 167, Chapel-street, Salford, Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| Edward Stephens, 11, Bridge-street, Manchester | 1 1 0 |
| A determined Enemy to the accursed Corn Laws, Nether-ton, by Glasgow | 1 0 0 |
| Two Friends | 10 0 0 |
| A Friend to universal Free Trade, Leominster | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Scard, East-end, Warminster, Wiltshire | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend to Purity of Election | 0 10 0 |
| A Farmer attending the market | 0 10 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade | 0 5 0 |
| Ditto | 0 5 0 |
| Ditto | 0 5 0 |
| Ditto | 0 5 0 |
| Ditto | 0 10 0 |
| Ditto | 0 12 6 |
| X. Y. Z., Market-street, Abergole, North Wales | 1 0 0 |
| John Jones, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Allen, Chudleigh, Devonshire | 0 5 0 |
| Mrs. Davison, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Miss Breays, do. | 0 2 6 |
| E. Petherick, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Allen, for his seven children, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 3 6 |
| Edwd. Penton, Spring-vale, Over Darwen, Lancashire | 0 11 0 |
| Jeremiah Parkinson, do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Entwistle, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 3 0 |
| Thos. Bancroft, bookkeeper, Denholme, near Bradford | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Marriott, Westgate-end, Wakefield | 10 0 0 |
| Henry Clarkson, Westgate, do. | 2 0 0 |
| A Friend at Barnsley, Yorkshire | 0 10 6 |
| Joseph Sherlock, jun., 82, Skude-hill, Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| A. Thompson, Temperance Hotel, Louth | 0 2 6 |
| Jacob Gainsley, Kenwick Toll-bar, near do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 3 8 |
| Rev. George Robson, Lauder, N.B. | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend | 3 0 0 |
| Wm. Edwards, builder, Brook-street, C.-on-M., Manchester | 25 0 0 |
| Small sums from Edale, Derbyshire | 0 7 9 |
| William Petty, Bank-street, Oldfield-road, Salford, Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| P. F. Willert, Booth-street, Manchester | 10 0 0 |
| George Foster, Sables, Lancashire | 200 0 0 |
| Goodier, Krauss, and Co., Pool-fold, Manchester | 30 0 0 |
| G. E., per Mr. Royle | 5 0 0 |
| Joseph Carruthers, 36, King-street, Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| J. T. | 2 0 0 |
| C. Viltman, 10, Booth-street, do. | 5 0 0 |
| H. P. Ree, 11, Nicholas-street, do. | 10 0 0 |
| G. Horsfield, 3, George-street, do. | 20 0 0 |
| Edw. Amies, 57, New Church-st., Paddington, London | 1 0 0 |
| The Workmen of Vernon, Marchant, and Edge, 2, David-street, Manchester | 2 8 9 |
| John Moore, 23, Rutland-street, C.-on-M., do. | 1 1 0 |
| Thomas Gatenby, 23, Portland-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Mrs. Thos. Gatenby, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Vernon Kitchen, 18, Oxford-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| George Bailey, Brunswick-terrace, Plymouth | 5 0 0 |
| John Williams, King-street, Caermarthen | 0 2 6 |
| Jones and Phillips, do. | 1 0 0 |
| G. and R. Shankland, do. | 0 5 0 |
| William Norton, do. | 1 10 0 |
| Henry Norton, do. | 1 0 0 |
| C. B. B. Norton, Greenhill, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Miss Tucker, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Mrs. K. Norton, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Geo. Bagnall and David Charles, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Marshall, Horsforth Hall, near Leeds | 40 0 0 |
| Thos. Perkins, Union Mill-road, Wolverhampton | 1 0 0 |
| Z. Taft, Wesleyan minister, Sandiacre, Derbyshire | 2 10 0 |
| Mrs. Taft, do. | 2 10 0 |
| Dennis Currie, Wallace-lawn, Ayr, N.B. | 1 0 0 |
| T. P. Buckingham and Friends, Frinabury, Strood, Rochester, Kent | 2 0 0 |
| T. Mander and Friends, George Inn, High-st., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Mr. Godfrey, 22, Gibraltar-place, Chatham | 1 0 0 |
| Hamel Medley, New-road, Chatham | 1 0 0 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 3 6 |
| A. Jones, Brougham-place, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Samuel Turner, High-street, Strood | 0 3 0 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 2 0 |
| Henry Wallworth, 24, Higher Temple-st., C.-on-M., Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| John Seddon, Brightmet, near Bolton | 5 0 0 |
| Lawrence Alty, Colden Works, near Chorley | 1 0 0 |
| Richard Holt, Turton, near Bolton | 2 0 0 |
| William Taylor, Dale-street, Little Bolton | 0 6 0 |
| Andrew Knowles and Sons, do. | 10 0 0 |
| John Bamer, Bagley Mills, near Bolton | 1 0 0 |
| Samuel Neave, Forton-road, Gosport | 1 0 0 |
| Samuel Boville, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Jas. Blake, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Rev. T. Tilly, Forton, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Rev. G. Silby, High-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Jas. Perkins, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Wilson, do. | 0 2 6 |
| T. E. Ward, draper, Tipton | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Heavilside, 4, Finkle-street, Stockton-on-Tees | 1 0 0 |
| Rev. Richard Tyner, Armitage, Standish, near Wigan | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Stewart, Cupar, Fife, per George S. Tullis | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. P. Price, Gloucester | 5 0 0 |
| Joseph Hunt, Almondsbury, near do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Holbrow, Norfolk-terrace, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Wyles, Westgate-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| W. H. Barrett, Oxford-street, Cheltenham | 1 0 0 |
| John Forster, Beaufort-buildings, Gloucester | 1 0 0 |
| James Palmer, Westgate-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Joseph Broad, Southgate-street, do. | 0 10 0 |
| R. Callis, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Samuel Bowly, do. | 10 0 0 |
| W. Price, Southgate-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend | 0 5 0 |
| Thos. Dobbin, Southgate-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Barrell, Westgate-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Dr. Davis, Barton-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| E. Waring, 6, Spa Villas, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Messrs. Mann, Eastgate-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| C. Washbourne, Westgate-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| H. State, corner of St. John's lane, do. | 0 2 6 |
| H. A. Whitehead, Lower Northgate-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Jas. Taylor, Worcester-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| E. Pollard, St. Aldate-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| J. W. Hughes, Norfolk-terrace, do. | 1 0 0 |
| W. Washbourne, Southgate-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Snow, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Powell, Westgate-street, do. | 2 0 0 |
| Jesse Sissons, do. | 1 0 0 |
| C. C. Pilfold, merchant, do. | 0 10 6 |

| | |
|---|---------|
| A Friend, Gloucester | £1 0 0 |
| Thos. M. Sturges, do. | 1 0 0 |
| W. Higgs, 2, York-buildings, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Jas. G. Francillon, do. | 1 0 0 |
| J. P. Kimberley, do. | 2 10 0 |
| George Beard, pin manufacturer, do. | 1 0 0 |
| E. L. Kendall, merchant, do. | 1 0 0 |
| G. H. Edwards, Littleworth, do. | 1 0 0 |
| James King, Eastgate-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| W. Bird, shipchandler, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Charles Higgs, Upton St. Leonard's, near do. | 1 0 0 |
| J. R. Heane, wharfinger, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Savory, 1, Rye-croft-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. V. Ellis, King-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Paul, Worcester-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Edwin Sturges, do. | 2 0 0 |
| John Hatcher, Marlwood Grange, near Thornbury, Gloucestershire | 1 0 0 |
| J. Grimes, Southgate-street, Gloucester | 0 10 0 |
| W. Jones, builder, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Geo. Gough, Bridge-end, Westgate-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| C. F. Cheven, 30, Oxford-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| W. H. Green, Wooton, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Barham, do. | 0 2 6 |
| J. T., do. | 0 4 0 |
| W. Burford, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums, do. | 1 2 6 |
| Greig, Watson, and Greig, 2, Falkner-st., Manchester | 20 0 0 |
| Robt. H. Warden, 22, Rook-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Evett, Market-street, do. | 0 2 0 |
| Lanworthy and Wainshaw, Fountain-st., do. | 1 1 0 |
| James Alsop, 18, York-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| F. Thorpe, 16, Rutland-street, C.-on-M., do. | 0 5 0 |
| James Wilkinson, 80, Deansgate, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Robert Thomas, Ripon, Yorkshire | 2 2 0 |
| Thos. Southam, Park-lane, Higher Broughton, Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| J. Brackenbury, at Mr. Watson's, Swan and Salmon, Grantham | 1 0 0 |
| W. Lang, Topsham, near Exeter | 1 0 0 |
| John M'Ewen Gray | 1 1 0 |
| Angus M'Pherson, 142, South-street | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Greig, St. John-street | 1 1 0 |
| Robert Cairnie | 1 0 0 |
| James Morton, George-street | 0 5 0 |
| John Burges, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thos. Richardson, do. | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend | 0 5 0 |
| George Turnbull | 0 5 0 |
| David Murie | 0 5 0 |
| Robert Morton | 0 10 6 |
| Andrew Richardson | 0 2 6 |
| Mr. Bryson | 0 2 6 |
| Alexander Allan | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Jamieson | 0 2 6 |
| Huntingtower Workpeople | 1 15 9 |
| Small sums | 0 2 0 |
| Mrs. John Jackson, 10, Woodbridge-st., Clerkenwell | 1 0 0 |
| Miss Eleanor Jackson, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Miss Frances Jackson, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Workmen at W. H. Draper | 0 10 0 |
| Mr. Jackson's H. M. Levesque | 0 10 0 |
| Mr. Johnston, 63, Bridge-lane, Spitalfields | 1 1 0 |
| George Edmett, Maidstone | 1 0 0 |
| J. Z. Williams, 9, Lambeth-road | 0 5 0 |
| Major-General Sir Burges Camac | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Barkley, 13, Little Tower-street | 1 1 0 |
| Thomas F. Gibson, 22, Spital-square | 10 0 0 |
| William Drake, Walthamstow | 10 0 0 |
| W. H. Meudham, Bishopsgate, Englefield-green | 5 0 0 |
| James Hunter, 110, Fenchurch-street | 5 0 0 |
| Mrs. Coxan, Upper Mall, Hammersmith | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Nichols, 79, Lombard-street | 1 1 0 |
| X. Y. Z. | 0 2 6 |
| Joseph Trayler, 5, Bloomsbury-market | 0 5 0 |
| G. Somers, 49, Adam-street, Portman-square | 0 2 6 |
| David Cawthra, Brighouse, near Huddersfield | 1 0 0 |
| James Mitchell, Raistrick, near do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Butcher, 55, Turmill-street, Clerkenwell | 1 0 0 |
| Mrs. Henry Thompson, 16, Northwick-terrace, in addition to 10s. 6d. previously subscribed | 0 10 6 |
| Master Henry Hugh Thompson, do., in addition to 10s. 6d. previously subscribed | 0 10 6 |
| Miss Charlotte Elizabeth Thompson, do., in addition to 10s. 6d., previously subscribed | 0 10 6 |
| Master James Stratten Thompson, do., in addition to 10s. 6d. previously subscribed | 0 10 6 |
| Charles Wood, Stock Exchange | 5 0 0 |
| John Mark, wool merchant, Selkirk | 1 0 0 |
| John Redrop, Bishopstrow, near Warminster | 1 0 0 |
| A Free Trader | 1 0 0 |
| Robert Henderson, Kirkcaldy, (second contribution) | 0 9 0 |
| James Squires, New Invention, near Willenhall, Staffordshire | 0 10 0 |
| John Burdett Parry, High-street, Hereford | 1 0 0 |
| S. P., jun. | 1 1 0 |
| Mr. Bartlett, Great Russell-street | 0 4 0 |
| Henry Carlos, 26, Great Sutton-street, Clerkenwell | 0 5 0 |
| John Cutting, 269, Oxford-street | 1 0 0 |
| Mrs. Cutting, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Mr. Clutterbuck, Newark-park, near Wootton-under-Kedge | 1 0 0 |
| William Bolding, 60, George-street, Euston-square | 0 2 6 |
| J. Stevens, 20, Cross-street, Blackfriars-road | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Elgee, 4, Cross-lane, Lincoln's-inn-fields | 1 0 0 |
| Samuel P. Manser, Hoddlesdon | 1 0 0 |
| John Warner, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Collins, 32, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-road | 1 1 0 |
| Mr. Frearson, Hawkey-street, Oxford-street | 0 10 6 |
| Mrs. Hannah Larkins, 13, Whitechapel | 1 1 0 |
| Miss Hannah Larkins, do. | 1 1 0 |
| J. S. Bennett, 4, Mount-street, Whitechapel | 0 2 6 |
| George Webb, 111, High-street, Whitechapel | 1 1 0 |
| James Raymont, 125, Cheapside | 0 2 6 |
| G. Shaw, 19, Windmill-street, Finsbury | 0 5 0 |
| H. and E. Sheffield, Church-lane, Whitechapel | 2 2 0 |
| Wm. Peacock Johnson, 48, St. Martin's-lane | 1 0 0 |
| Mary Johnson, 48, St. Martin's-lane | 1 0 0 |
| George Bailey, Hen and Chickens Inn, Great Suffolk-street, Borough | 1 1 0 |
| Wm. Huggins, Glenarb, Ireland | 1 1 0 |
| J. J. Thornley, London | 1 0 0 |
| Alfred Burton, 9, Castle-street East, Oxford-street | 1 0 0 |
| A Newlander | 0 2 0 |
| George Chowne, Great Western Railway-station, Paddington | 0 2 6 |
| Richard Wilson, 120, Fore-street | 0 5 0 |
| David James, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Alexander Boswell, Leven, Fifeshire | 1 1 0 |
| J. Scott, Kelso | 1 0 0 |
| A real Free Trader in Devizes | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Bardsley, 20, New Bridge-lane, Stockport | 1 0 0 |
| Moulin à Vapeur, A few flaxdressers | 1 0 0 |
| Capécure, Wm. Ramage | 0 2 6 |
| Boulogne-sur-Mer, (Robert Ramage) | 0 2 0 |
| Small subscriptions | 19 11 0 |
| A. Clarke, Filature du Lin, Capécure, Boulogne-sur-Mer | 1 0 0 |
| Westleys, Doctors' Commons | 3 3 0 |
| The Tamworth Bull | 5 0 0 |
| C. P. V. | 6 0 0 |
| Rhodes, near John Jones | 1 0 0 |
| Middleton, Thomas Blane | 1 0 0 |
| Launceston, William Jones | 1 0 0 |
| do. Evan Jones | 1 5 0 |
| do. R. Haworth | 0 10 0 |
| do. John Collinge | 0 10 0 |

| | |
|---|--------|
| T. Lloyd, College, Brecon | £1 0 0 |
| Small sums, Brecon Independent College | 0 10 0 |
| William Brown and Son, Kirkgate | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade, per G. R. | 0 5 0 |
| Peter M'Craw, 35, Constitution-street | 0 7 6 |
| John Saunders, Mitchell-street (ad. subscrip.) | 0 4 6 |
| Thomas Watson, 33, Bridge-street | 0 3 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade | 0 2 6 |
| From the Workmen of John M'Nair, brewer | 0 10 0 |
| A Friend, per Andrew Wight | 0 5 0 |
| From the Workmen of J. Mithven, per G. D. | 0 2 7 |
| Rev. James Harper, D.D. | 0 10 6 |
| Robert Drover | 0 4 0 |
| Walter Simpson, 41, Shore | 0 5 9 |
| Seven Workmen, per Jas. Alexander, grocer, Kirkgate | 0 3 0 |
| From one who can't spare more | 0 2 0 |
| Thomas Congleton | 0 2 6 |
| Free Trader | 0 5 0 |
| C. Chadwick, 14, Citadel | 0 4 0 |
| R. H. Jun., 9, London-row | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend | 0 5 0 |
| D. P. | 0 5 0 |
| Good Speed (second subscription) Edinburgh | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend, 60, Charlotte-street | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend to the Cause, poor but willing | 0 2 6 |
| Six Recruits, per H. Dalgleish | 0 3 0 |
| Thomas Wailes, 2, Shore | 0 5 0 |
| William Grant, Elbe-street | 0 7 6 |
| Alexander Grant, Eastfield | 0 4 0 |
| William Gavin, Dock-gates | 0 10 6 |
| Robert Goldie, 6, Citadel-street | 0 10 0 |
| James Marshall, 6, Couper-street | 0 2 6 |
| John Gibson, plumber | 0 10 0 |
| Mathew Watt, baker | 0 5 0 |
| John Dalrymple, 28, Bath-street | 0 5 0 |
| Allan M'Naughton | 0 10 0 |
| Thomas Weir White, at T. White's, dyer, Tolbooth-wynd | 1 0 0 |
| James Smith, Weir's-cloze | 1 0 0 |
| J. Mason, foreman with Mr. Innes, and fellow-workmen | 0 3 6 |
| John Naismith, grocer, Hillhouse-field | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Warden, 31, Bath-street | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Cameron, 1, Bath-street | 1 1 0 |
| Wm. Wallace, grocer, 8, St. Andrew's-street | 1 0 0 |
| James Paton, foreman with Mr. M'Pherson, plumber | 0 6 0 |
| John Fleming, baker, 33, Duke-street | 1 0 0 |
| John Miller, of Miller and Arthur's | 1 1 0 |
| John Lyall, 1, Bridge-street, North Leith | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas M'Kenzie, 46, Bernard-street | 0 2 6 |
| Charles Smith, 3, Duke-street | 1 0 0 |
| J. B. Kerr, 4, Tolbooth-wynd | 1 0 0 |
| From Merrylees, cork manufactory | 1 0 0 |
| David Smith, builder, 7, Glover-street | 1 0 0 |
| George Stenhouse, 11, Albany-street | 1 0 0 |
| David White, Dock place | 0 5 0 |
| A Highlandman and two Recruits | 0 3 6 |
| A Friend to the Cause | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Dawson, colour merchant | 2 2 0 |
| Maitland Jenkinson, Hillhouse-field | 1 0 0 |
| James Anderson, rectifier | 1 0 0 |
| John Fulton and Son, Shore | 1 1 0 |
| Small sums, under 2s. 6d. | 1 5 4 |
| Wm. Thompson, Market-street, Fisharrow | 0 2 6 |
| Peter Wilkie, fisher, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Wm. Brooks, sen., Musselburgh | 0 2 6 |
| James Milne, weaver, Fisharrow | 0 2 6 |
| Robert Wilson, surgeon, Musselburgh | 0 10 0 |
| The men in Mr. Aitken, jun.'s, workshop | 0 4 0 |
| Andrew Miller, currier, Musselburgh | 0 3 0 |
| Charles Forbes, Mill-hill, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Hume, grocer, Fisharrow | 0 2 6 |
| Peter Hume, grocer, Tranent | 0 2 6 |
| Alexander S. Munro, Cumpie-lane, Fisharrow | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Cleghorn, weaver, Musselburgh | 0 2 6 |
| John Thompson, Market-street, Fisharrow | 0 2 6 |
| The Son of a Tory, but afraid to speak out | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend to Free Trade | 0 10 6 |
| Peter Taylor, baker, Musselburgh | 0 2 6 |
| Robert Spears, baker, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Sinclair, Esk Side, Fisharrow | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend to Free Trade | 0 5 0 |
| John M'Gillway, teacher, Fisharrow | 0 5 0 |
| George Dudgeon, fisher, Musselburgh | 0 2 6 |
| James Burns, Wellington-place, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Croll, draper, Fisharrow | 0 2 6 |
| John Hay, baker, do. | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 |
| David Malcolm, Musselburgh | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 |
| Alexander Allan, wright, Musselburgh | 0 2 6 |
| James Forrester, grocer, do. | 0 10 0 |
| A Friend | 0 5 0 |
| James Bridges, W.S., Bell-field, Musselburgh | 0 5 0 |
| Peter Anderson, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Andrew Stewart, baker, do. | 0 5 0 |
| A Grubber, per Wm. Scott, Fisharrow | 0 2 6 |
| The Rev. M. W. Livingston, Musselburgh | 0 5 0 |
| The Rev. J. Watson, Pinkie Burn, do. | 0 5 0 |
| A Farmer's Son, rackrented | 0 2 6 |
| A Free Churchman | 0 5 0 |
| A. Elly, gardener, Beggar's-bush, Musselburgh | 0 5 0 |
| Small sums from Musselburgh, under 2s. 6d. | 4 1 7 |
| William Vallage, Portobello | 0 10 0 |
| Henry Calder, do. | 1 1 0 |
| H. M'Callum, do. | 0 10 0 |
| John Borthwick, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Alex. Brown, do. | 0 10 6 |
| George Wilson, do. | 0 10 6 |
| William Hill, do. | 0 10 6 |
| Joseph Pearson, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Andrew Fairbairn, do. | 0 5 0 |
| From a Friend, do. | 0 3 0 |
| From a Friend, do. | 0 3 0 |
| William Baillie, do. | 1 1 0 |
| John Christie, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Miss Syme, do. | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade, do. | 0 5 0 |
| James Goodall, grocer, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Trough, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Hepburn, smith, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Alexander, not the First, do. | 0 5 0 |
| William Drew, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Reid, do. | 0 5 0 |
| William Ramage, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Robert Kerr, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Watt, do. | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend, do. | 0 5 0 |
| William Guthrie, do. | 0 5 0 |
| William Ross, do. | 0 5 0 |
| A Final Blow at Monopoly | 0 5 0 |
| A. Wilson, Portobello | 0 5 0 |
| Mrs. J. Rathbon, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Andrew Banks, do. | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend | 0 5 0 |
| J. F. | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend | 0 |

| | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | | |
|--|--|-----|----|--|---|---|---|--|---|---------------------------------------|--|-------------------------------|----------------------------------|------------------------------|----------------------------|---|---|
| Rochdale, Seventh remittance. | Robert Kelsall, Town Meadows | 450 | 0 | 0 | Bridport. | Joseph Gundry | 450 | 0 | 0 | Miss Gibson, Hyde-park House | 450 | 0 | 0 | | | | |
| | James Leach, St. Mary's-gate | 10 | 0 | 0 | | T. C. Hounsell | 10 | 0 | 0 | | William G. Gibson, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| | Robert Taylor Heap, Castlemere | 10 | 0 | 0 | | William Hounsell | 5 | 0 | 0 | | James Goodall, banker | 5 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| | John Pollitt, Old Market-place | 0 | 10 | 0 | | Joseph Hounsell | 5 | 0 | 0 | | William Straton, millapinner | 2 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| Nottingham, Third Remittance. | Charles Paget, Ruddington, near | 50 | 0 | 0 | Bridport. | William Colfox | 5 | 0 | 0 | Alexander Mann and Son, manufacturers | 2 | 0 | 0 | | | | |
| | George Bradley and Son, Park-street | 50 | 0 | 0 | | Edwin Nicholletts | 5 | 0 | 0 | | David Lumgair and Son, do. | 1 | 11 | 6 | | | |
| | D. Parley, Fletcher-gate | 2 | 0 | 0 | | Alfred Nicholletts | 1 | 0 | 0 | | William Johnston, banker | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | A Friend | 1 | 1 | 0 | | William Battiscombe | 3 | 0 | 0 | | Alexander Smith, millapinner | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | Wm. Clarke, Castle-terrace | 1 | 0 | 0 | | J. P. Stephens | 5 | 0 | 0 | | Andrew Binney, banker | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | Several Coal Agents | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Silvanus Stephens | 2 | 0 | 0 | | Robert Miln, merchant | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | G. Parkin, Hockley | 2 | 2 | 0 | | Henry Stephens | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Charles Spink, millapinner | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | F. T. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | J. B. Good, Bridport Harbour | 1 | 0 | 0 | | A Lady, per William Gibson | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | Livingstone and Cheetham, High-pavement | 5 | 0 | 0 | | James Brown, Burton, near | 2 | 0 | 0 | | Patrick Ritchie, manufacturer | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | A Friend | 5 | 0 | 0 | | Rev. R. E. B. Maclellan | 2 | 0 | 0 | | Wm. Salmund, jun., do. | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | A Friend | 15 | 0 | 0 | | Thomas Ewens | 2 | 0 | 0 | | Charles Anderson, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | Joseph Cleaver, Plicher-gate | 1 | 0 | 0 | | John Jeffery | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Samuel Renny, millapinner | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | Copeland and Son, Hounds-gate | 5 | 0 | 0 | | W. C. Tucker | 1 | 0 | 0 | | James and John Anderson, writers | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | Henry Massey, Clumber-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Hayward and Sons, West Chinnock, Somerset | 10 | 0 | 0 | | A Friend to Free Trade | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | William Morley, Exchange | 1 | 0 | 0 | | James Williams | 2 | 0 | 0 | | Fair Play | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | Mr. Williamson, Leen-side | 1 | 0 | 0 | | J. C. Lea, Charnmouth | 5 | 0 | 0 | | William Cargill, shipowner | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | Mr. Robbins, South parade | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Miss Colfox | 1 | 0 | 0 | | David L. Cargill, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | S. Hollins, Hound's-gate | 10 | 10 | 0 | | John Rendall | 1 | 0 | 0 | | William Salmund, coal merchant | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | A Friend | 10 | 0 | 0 | | John Suttill, Pymore near | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Alexander Sluggie, millapinner | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | T. Herbert, Park | 30 | 0 | 0 | | Joseph Bridgeman | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Thomas M. Hossason, shipowner | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | David N-w, Clumber-street | 5 | 0 | 0 | | Robert Turner | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Bailie Wightman | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | Thomas Hopkins, Friar-lane | 15 | 0 | 0 | | George Ewens | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Andrew Lawson, millapinner | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | John S. Burnsall, Bridle-smith-gate | 1 | 1 | 0 | | Mrs. Amy Stephens | 1 | 0 | 0 | | David Corrar and Son, manufacturers | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| | J. J. and J. Wilson, Angel-row | 30 | 0 | 0 | | Mr. Gunn | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Garland and Simpson, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| George Gill, Park | 20 | 0 | 0 | John Bennett | 1 | 0 | 0 | James Webster, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | | | | |
| Beattie and Berkin, Marygate | 10 | 0 | 0 | William Tucker | 1 | 0 | 0 | Douglas Fraser, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | | | | |
| Thomas Keely, Friar-lane | 10 | 0 | 0 | Joseph Bartlett | 0 | 10 | 0 | Flaxdressers at Renny, Sons, and Co.'s manu- factory | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | | | | |
| Dickinson and Rames, Poultry | 2 | 2 | 0 | Mr. Prince | 0 | 10 | 0 | Workmen at Renny, Sons, and Co.'s work, at Panbridge Bleachfield | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | | | | |
| James Kirkwood, Langwith, near Mansfield | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Stenbridge | 1 | 0 | 0 | George Canning, millapinner, £5, less £1 al- ready remitted to League | 4 | 0 | 0 | | | | | | |
| John Anderson, South Bridge | John Anderson, South Bridge | 0 | 5 | 0 | Leigh, near Man- chester, 2nd Remit- tance. | Mrs. Isherwood, West Leigh New Mill | 1 | 0 | 0 | James S. Paterson, grocer | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | | |
| | John Anderson, St. Patrick-square | 0 | 7 | 6 | | John Isherwood, Tildesley | 0 | 10 | 0 | | William S. Durie, grocer | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| | Mrs. Alexander, Home-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | | Mrs. Borthwick | 0 | 5 | 0 | | Patrick Wilson, bookseller | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| | A Friend to the Cause | 0 | 2 | 6 | | Mrs. Bomford | 0 | 5 | 0 | | William Andson, merchant | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| | Alexander Aitken, 22, Gardner's-crescent | 1 | 1 | 0 | | Mrs. Cocker | 0 | 5 | 0 | | Curriers in George Gibson and Co.'s employ | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| | William Alexander, 76, Clerk-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | G. Robinson | 0 | 5 | 0 | | Tanners in do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| | A total Repeater | 2 | 0 | 0 | | James Cocker | 0 | 2 | 6 | | David Peacock, jun., coal merchant | 0 | 10 | 6 | | | |
| | K. E. Banks, 4, East Adam-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | | Second subscription from the workpeople em- ployed by Jones, Brothers, and Co. | 2 | 11 | 0 | | John Peat, shipowner | 0 | 10 | 0 | | | |
| | William Bailley, 5, Warton-crescent | 0 | 7 | 6 | | Ashton-under- Lyne, Eighth Remittance. | James Glossop | 1 | 1 | | 0 | William Lindsay, manufacturer | 0 | 10 | 0 | | |
| | William Buchanan, 12, Heriot-row | 0 | 5 | 0 | | | Henry Gartsale | 4 | 4 | | 0 | James Borthwick, grocer | 0 | 10 | 0 | | |
| | Better late than never | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | Thomson Howorth | 1 | 1 | | 0 | James Anderson, merchant | 0 | 10 | 0 | | |
| | James Carrick, 21, Castle-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | | | Ossett, near Wakefield, Second Remittance. | Wm. Gunson, shoemaker | 1 | | 0 | 0 | D. F. Ormond, ironmonger | 0 | 7 | 6 | |
| | J. Clark, 41, Cross-causeway | 0 | 5 | 0 | | | | David Clayton, clothier | 1 | | 0 | 0 | William Gibson, tailor, Townhead | 0 | 5 | 0 | |
| | William Crow, 1, West Richmond-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | Joas Wilby, manufacturer, Green | 1 | | 0 | 0 | J. Smith, grocer | 0 | 5 | 0 | |
| | Mrs. Craig, 392, Lawn-market | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | John Humble, chemist | 1 | | 0 | 0 | John Jolly, hosiery | 0 | 5 | 0 | |
| | J. H. Chisholm, 23, London-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | | | | Joseph Brooke, joiner | 1 | | 0 | 0 | William Walker, grocer | 0 | 5 | 0 | |
| | John Dalrymple, 1, Gardner's-crescent | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | Workmen at T. Turton and Sons, Spring-works | 20 | | 17 | 6 | An Ardent Repeater | 0 | 5 | 0 | |
| | S. Dunbar, 41, Dundas-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | | | H. E. Hoole, Green-lane-works | | 10 | 0 | 0 | George Ritchie, watchmaker | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | George Dickenson, 15, Drummond-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | | E. Butterell, Shales-moor | | 0 | 10 | 0 | Phillip and Smith, merchants | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | James Dymock, Nicolson-square | 0 | 5 | 0 | | | | | S. Chapman, 97, West-bar | | 1 | 0 | 0 | Alexander Nicol, merchant | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | James Gray, 103, High-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | | | Workmen at T. Sheldon and Sons, Trafalgar-pl. | | 1 | 0 | 0 | William Petrie, manufacturer | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| | Thomas Gourlay, 129, Canongate | 0 | 5 | 0 | | | | | Workmen at Kenyon and Co.'s, Willey-street | | 3 | 4 | 6 | John Galloway, plumber | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| | John Hutton, Elder-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | | Eccles, Shorrocks and Co., Darwen, near | | 200 | 0 | 0 | John Barry, druggist | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| | George Knight, 15, St. Andrew-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | | | | | William Eccles, Lower Darwen, near | 100 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Ducat, baker, Townhead | 0 | 2 |
| James Lowe, 150, High-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | T. and R. Eccles, do. | 50 | | | | | 0 | 0 | Alexander Reid, tobaccoist | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| John Law, 1, Earl Grey-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | John Sharples, jun., Brown-street | 5 | | | | | 5 | 0 | David Milne, dyer | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| John McQueen, 29, West Nicolson-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | Mrs. Thomas Eccles, Lower Darwen, near | 5 | | | | | 5 | 0 | Thomas Lyon, shoemaker | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| H. Macfarlane, 19, Dundas-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | Robert Baron, Clayton-street | 5 | | | | | 0 | 0 | David More, shipmaster | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| L. Macintosh, 31, Northumberland-street | 1 | 1 | 0 | James Grime, Church-street | 1 | | | | | 10 | 0 | Stewart Gellatly, bookseller | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| Dr. Wm. Peattie, 57, George-square | 1 | 0 | 0 | Alexander McKie, John-street | 1 | | | | | 0 | 0 | James Adam, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| Thomas S. Phillips, 329, High-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | John Shorrocks, Paradise-street | 1 | | | | | 0 | 0 | Mrs. Mann, confectioner | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| T. Pringle, 3, West Cross-causeway | 0 | 2 | 6 | John Alnsworth, Strawberry Bank | 2 | | | | | 0 | 0 | Thomas Forbes, merchant | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| R. W. Warriston-crescent | 1 | 1 | 0 | James Atkin, Water-street | 2 | 2 | | | | 0 | James Cargill, merchant | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | |
| J. Reid, 53, Frederick-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | James Rae, John-street | 1 | 0 | | | | 0 | Robert Ireland, shoemaker | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | |
| Mr. Robertson, 279, High-street | 0 | 7 | 6 | John Forster, Water-street | 1 | 0 | | | | 0 | Adam Roy, painter | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | |
| Hugh Ross, 2, High-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | James Lawson, James-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | Alexander Anderson, ironmonger | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | |
| John Richardson, Royal Exchange | 0 | 5 | 0 | John Bushby, Penny-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | William Leithhead, spirit dealer | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | |
| R. Rankin, Rankellor-street | 1 | 1 | 0 | Robert Raiton, Nab-lane | 2 | 0 | 0 | | | James Kilgour, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | |
| Mrs. Robertson, Reid's-court, Canongate | 0 | 2 | 6 | Peter Pickering, Church-street | 5 | 0 | 0 | | | A Lady, per William Gibson | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | | |
| Wm. Syme, 4, Rutland-place | 0 | 5 | 0 | Mrs. Wm. Eccles, Spring Mount | 10 | 0 | 0 | | | George Gleig, shipowner | 0 | 5 | 0 | | | | |
| John Smart, 1, Queen-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | Hanson Dewhurst, Winter street | 1 | 0 | 0 | Charles Middleton, shoemaker | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | | |
| J. H. Stott, 12, Niddry-street | 0 | 10 | 6 | E. S. Ashton, Over Darwen | 5 | 0 | 0 | George Kidd, ropemaker | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | | |
| J. A. Smith, East Adam-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | R. S. Ashton, do. | 5 | 0 | 0 | James Jenkins, machine maker | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | | |
| Peter Stevenson, Lothian-street | 0 | 10 | 6 | James Shorrocks, Prince's, do. | 2 | 0 | 0 | David Key, Shore Dues' Office | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | | |
| P. Sinclair, 12, St. David-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | Edward Bates, plumber, &c., do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | Dick Johnston, spirit dealer | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | | |
| John Strachan, 2, Amphian-place | 0 | 2 | 6 | George Hartley, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | John Gibson, tailor | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | | | | |
| John Taylor, 11, St. James's-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | Mrs. A. Pimbley, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | William Smart, flaxdresser | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | | | |
| T. G. 46, South Bridge | 0 | 5 | 0 | John Foulding, coal merchant | 5 | 0 | 0 | "Sine qua non" | 0 | 5 | 0 | | | | | | |
| R. Winter, 1, Jamaica-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | Liverpool, 12th Re- mittance. | James Harvey, 5, Catherine-street | 100 | 0 | 0 | John Gouck, founder | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | | |
| J. O. C. Whitton, Lothian-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | | Geo. Clydale, 63, Great Richmond-st. | 0 | 3 | 0 | Thomas Small, brewer | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | | |
| James Wilson, North Bridge | 0 | 10 | 0 | | John Kind, 1, Church-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | D. and W. Scott, drapers | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | | | |
| Miss Willshire, 11, Portland-place | 1 | 1 | 0 | | J. Kennedy, Clarence Foundry, Love-la. | 10 | 0 | 0 | David Chapel | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | | |
| S. Young, 17, George-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | | Thomas W. Robinson, 80, Grove-street | 5 | 5 | 0 | Mr. Dickie, ship builder | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | | |
| Thomas Angus, 125, Rose-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | | Thomas Atkinson, Grasshopper | 1 | 0 | 0 | William Stephen, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | | | | | |
| Rev. James Kirkwood, 16, Gayfield-square | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | William Proctor, Moor-lane | 1 | 0 | 0 | John Webster, blacksmith | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | |
| Small sums | 0 | 7 | 0 | | | M. Parkinson | 0 | 1 | 0 | Alexander Raffen, plumber | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | |
| Archibald Foote | Archibald Foote | 10 | 0 | | | 0 | Benjamin Dockray | 3 | 0 | 0 | Captain Duncan | 0 | 5 | 0 | | | |
| | Alexander Watson | 5 | 0 | | | 0 | Miss Dockray | 1 | 0 | 0 | Thomas Leslie, shipowner | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | |
| | C. H. Miller | 3 | 0 | | | 0 | T. F. Bateman, Halton Park | 3 | 0 | 0 | James Stormont, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | |
| | James Birnie | 2 | 12 | | | 6 | Wm. Satterthwaite, jun., New-street | 1 | 1 | 0 | James Peter, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | | | |
| | David Birnie | 2 | 12 | | | 6 | G. Fox | 0 | 5 | 0 | James Hay, grocer | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | |
| | George Paton | 2 | 0 | | | 0 | Mrs. Heathcote | 1 | 0 | 0 | David Jardyne, baker | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | |
| | James Paton | 2 | 0 | | | 0 | A Friend, per J. Moss | 0 | 7 | 6 | James Winton, tailor | 0 | 5 | 0 | | | |
| | Charles Birnie | 1 | 11 | | | 6 | Anonymous | 0 | 10 | 0 | Flaxdressers at Inch Mill | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| | William Dorward | 1 | 5 | | | 0 | D. for Registration | 0 | 10 | 0 | Millwrights and Spinners at do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| | John Paton | 1 | 0 | | | 0 | Satterthwaite and Barrow | 10 | 0 | 0 | William Dove, blacksmith | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | |
| | George Gordon, jun. | 1 | 0 | | | 0 | John Chambers, Blanket-row | 1 | 1 | 0 | George Barry, brewer | 0 | 5 | 0 | | | |
| | James Spence | 1 | 0 | | | 0 | | Sir William Lowthrop | 10 | 0 | 0 | A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | John Muckart | 1 | 0 | | | 0 | | A. C. L. | 0 | 2 | 6 | Thomas Nicoll, vintner | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | John Ingram | 1 | 0 | | | 0 | | Workmen at the Cotton-mills | 5 | 12 | 0 | George Walker | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | David Greig, writer | 1 | 0 | | | 0 | | A. B. C. | 2 | 2 | 0 | James Cooper, wood merchant | 0 | | | | |

| Sundry Workpeople | £ | s | d |
|--|----|----|---|
| J. Bowker | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Hunt, Hockley Abbey | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Burgham | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| C. Humphrey | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| C. Lawson | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| T. H. Ryland, Oozels-street | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Frederick Ryland, Waterloo-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| George Phillips | 1 | 5 | 0 |
| William Reeves | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Smith and Kemp, Brearly-street | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| James Hawley, Bromsgrove-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Charles Lloyd, sen., do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A Friend | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Harrison, Brown-street | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| John Grew, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Brown, licensed victualler, Sherlock-st. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Thomas Butler, High-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Melby, 29, Digbeth | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Jameson, 36, do | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Paul, 35, do | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Mr. Asindler, 24, do | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Well-wisher | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Mr. Taylor, 8, Digbeth | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Mr. Jenkins, 6, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| W. F. Beale, Bradford-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Matthews, 36, Ren-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Edward Jones, Read-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Nicholls, Digbeth | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A Well-wisher | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| X. Y. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Mr. Milner, Union-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Heath, Mass-house-lane | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Gammon, Dale End | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Phillips, 17, Dale End | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George Wood, 142, Moor-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Heaven | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Thomas Abbott, 24, Moor-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Owen, 23, do | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Lilley, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Samson, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Hampson Aston, Mass-house-lane | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Myers, Bullring | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Richard Barlow, Newhall-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Thomas Short, Friday Bridge | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| T. Hedfern, Whittall-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| M. Bellinge, Newhall-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| A Repeater | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend to Repeal | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Edward Lucas, Mount-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| T. and W. F. Hall, Newhall-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Griffin, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Lea and Son, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William Tinsley, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Pearson, Lionel-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mr. Langton, do | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. Hewson, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mr. Bromsgrove, Gunden-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Joseph Fouke, Edmund-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mr. Lee, Edmund-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Barlow, Great Hampton-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Button, do | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| William Mills, Kenyon-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Meeling, Kenyon-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Saml. Aston, Wharstone-lane | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Tyrer, Braunstone-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Workmen of Thos. Aston, 74, Northwood-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thos. Herbert, 98, Lichfield-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Joshua Rooke, Hatchett-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Joseph Gibson, Weaman-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Poolton, Horse-fair | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John White, druggist, Horse-fair | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Charles Hallam, grocer | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| W. Wheeler, Hockley-hill | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| T. R. T. Hodgson, Hockley-hill | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Temple, Great King-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Antrobus, Hockley-hill | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| George Bentley, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| R. Rahone, do | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Griffin, Great Hampton-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| D. Campbell, dyer, Great Hampton-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| William Taylor, do | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Hargrove, do | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Bowles, jeweller, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A. Flint, clock case maker, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Wm. Smith, 28, do | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Barnes, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| W. Darby, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Lawden, jun., do | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Hall, Northwood-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Fallford, Great Hampton-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Smallwood, brassfounder, Gt. Hampton-rv. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Baker, do, do | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Thomas Perkins, pawnbroker, Great Hampton-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Yates, butcher, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| T. Westwood, steel pen maker, do | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| M. Westwood, do, do | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Shelton, bone turner, Poultry, Bell-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Hinton, Great Hampton-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Stokes, John-street West | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Kendrick, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Whitehouse, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Webb, Great King-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Ingle, Hockley-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Fullford, Harford-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Beckett, do | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Sydney Smith, do | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Workmen of J. Hardy, Great Hampton-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Workmen of Mr. Hargrove, Great Hampton-street | 0 | 11 | 0 |
| Workmen of Mr. Jos. Collins, Hockley-place | 2 | 4 | 9 |
| Workmen of Henry Fielding, Great Hampton-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Workmen of T. Lawden and Son, do | 0 | 6 | 0 |
| Workmen of Moore and Sabin, Mary Ann-street | 1 | 4 | 2 |
| Workmen of Wm. Mitchell, St. Paul's-square | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Smith and Horstall, Oxford-street | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| Workmen of S. Whitfield, Oxford-street | 1 | 5 | 0 |
| Thos. Partridge, Oxford-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Davis and Lee, do | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Edward Collins, Bordesley-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| H. Allcock, do | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| E. Hancock, Trent-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Weale, Oxford-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| W. Vaughan, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| H. Spilbury, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| E. Wells, do | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. E. Richards, Maiden-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Joseph Walker, do | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend, do | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| R. Wallace, Oxford-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thomas Harrison, do | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| David Holmes, Broad-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Roberts, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mr. Cox, salt warehouse, do | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Miss Bellis, 96, Suffolk-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Edwards, 113, do | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Whitehouse, 120, do | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Mr. Ault, Hen and Chickens, Broad-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Goose, 31, King Edward-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |

Birmingham, Second Remittance—continued.

| | | | |
|--|----|----|----|
| W. and C. Wynn, Suffolk-street | 25 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Johnson, Weighing Machine, Old Wharf | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Richard Barrett, 24, Bristol-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Mr. Kingston, Old Wharf | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Mr. Hillier, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| The Work-people of J. B. Hollingshead, Ford-rough-street | 2 | 7 | 8 |
| J. Tongue, Parade | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| E. Butcher, Summer-row | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. Ann Lees, do | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Master of Class Legislation | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. B. Nettlefold, Broad-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Edward Vernon, butcher, do | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Richard Slater, Broad-street | 0 | 6 | 0 |
| T. Adams, Cambridge-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Smith, Cambridge-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mr. Halliday, King Alfred's place | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Samuel Messenger, Broad-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| T. Whitfield, Summer-row | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| James Verum, 1, Livery-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Briggs, Smallbrook-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Baldwin, Bradford-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Van Wart, Son, and Co., Summer-row | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| H. H. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| John Hinks, steel pen manufactory, Bucking-ham-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Small subscriptions, collected by a Lady | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Johnson, Lee Bank, Edgbaston | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. B. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Small subscriptions, at James Edmunds's, Hen and Chickens, Constitution-hill | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Job Wilkins, 45, Moor-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| David Bentley, Ashbourne, Derbyshire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Workmen of Timmins and Son, Hurst-street | 1 | 2 | 10 |
| Sundry small subscriptions | 3 | 1 | 10 |

ANTI-CORN-LAW-MEETING, THIRSK.
ADDRESS TO FARMERS.

On Monday, the 26th ult., agreeably to public announcement, Colonel Thompson, A. Prentice, Esq., and T. Flint, Esq., attended at this place to address the farmers and farm-labourers on the influence of the Corn Laws on their interests. A few days before a placard was issued, signed by J. Crompton, Esq., formerly M.P. for Ripon, brother to Crompton Stansfield, Esq., M.P. for Huddersfield, and also to Sir T. Crompton, formerly M.P. for Thirsk, announcing his intention to be present at the meeting, to hear what arguments could be adduced in favour of a repeal of the Corn Laws, and inviting farmers, and especially farm-labourers, to attend, "as the measure was fraught with most mischievous consequences to a district so purely agricultural as that around Thirsk." Two other gentlemen also announced their intention to be present; and in consequence it was proposed to Mr. Crompton that he should preside at the meeting. This he declined, but it was announced to him and his friends, immediately on the arrival of the deputation, at half-past one o'clock, that they would be glad to arrange the order of the proceedings with him. Whilst waiting for this interview, Mr. Crompton and his friends filled the room taken by the League, and, after a short address from Mr. C., adjourned to the market-place, into which Mr. C.'s break, or dog-cart, was wheeled. The deputation, considering this proceeding quite unwarrantable and uncourteous, placed a waggon in the spacious yard of the inn, and an audience being collected, Colonel Thompson commenced speaking. In a minute or two Mr. Crompton's vehicle was wheeled back into the yard, opposite the waggon of the League, and Mr. C. commenced addressing the meeting, and interrupting Colonel Thompson, amidst the groans of the majority, and the cheers of a small knot around him, consisting of his farm-labourers, who, it was currently reported, were set at liberty for the day, and had their wages paid. After some altercation, and a spirited remonstrance on the part of the deputation at the indecency of adjourning their meeting before they were present, and whilst, in fact, they were in momentary expectation of an interview with Mr. Crompton and his friends, the deputation agreed that the speakers should address the meeting from the window of the inn. Before, however, the arrangement was made, Colonel Thompson had expressed, in indignant terms, to Mr. Crompton and his friends his opinion of the uncourteousness and unfairness of their conduct, and his determination not to speak, but to appeal to the public through the press, and to state that he was prevented speaking by "brute force." This probably induced the Pro-Corn-Law gentlemen to come to the arrangement just named.

Col. Thompson presented himself at the window, and was received with a burst of cheers: he proceeded to address the meeting in his clear, bold, and manly style, which instantly silenced the band that had been supporting Mr. Crompton in his interruption by clamour. He told them that he was the grandson of a farmer, but he doubted if any one of them, burdened as they were with protection, could ever make his grandson a lieutenant-colonel, for, if they were instrumental in robbing the community to put money into the pockets of the landowners, they would find no outlet for their families, which would thus be reduced to poverty. He warned them not to delay, because justice, which might be satisfied now with the repeal of the Corn Laws, would not, if there was much longer obstruction, be satisfied with less than compensation for twenty-eight years' robbery, by a bounty upon importation for the same period. (The gallant colonel was heard throughout with marked attention, and was loudly cheered at the conclusion of his speech.)

Mr. Crompton then presented himself at the window, and was received with hootings from one part of the meeting and cheers from his own tenants and labourers. He began by saying that he expected more from the great gun—the great itinerant orator of the League—who had given them nothing but stale jokes. He went on to abuse Mr. Cobden and the League for spreading disaffection and sedition throughout the country, and said they called the farm-labourers clothhoppers and thickheads, when speaking of them at Leeds, but praised them as intelligent men when they spoke to them in the country. These League men had been joined by the Marquis of Westminster, of whom, as he did not wish to be scurrilous, he would not say more than that there was a shrewd suspicion as to the motive that induced him to join the League; and as for Lord Ducie, he had advised with George Robins, and sold a great estate as soon as he knew that Sir Robert Peel was to stand firm on the Corn Law, for his lordship knew that he could then get a good price. As for Earl Spencer, he was a very good man, but he knew little and cared little about anything beyond fattening cattle, and lived comfortably amongst his bulls and oxen. What would the repeal of the Corn Law do for Thirsk, where there was not one single article of manufacture carried on? He now paid 12s. a week to his labourers, but if corn was reduced in price, so would wages; for farm-labourers never were paid worse than when corn was at 4s. 6d. a bushel (Cries of "No, no!") He hoped nobody from that neighbourhood would go to Bradford or other towns where the population was so reckless, that if a man got 18s. a week he would spend most of it in drink. (Groans.) (Mr. Crompton's speech was very badly received, and his abuse of the League excited strong marks of disapprobation from all the meeting, except the tenants and labourers whom he had brought with him. He retired amidst jeers and hootings.)

Mr. Prentice, on presenting himself at the window, was received with hearty cheers by two-thirds of the meeting. He said that Mr. Crompton had complained that Col. Thompson's speech contained nothing more than stale jokes; but he was sure the meeting were convinced that it contained a great deal of argument which Mr. Crompton had not answered, and could not answer. (Laughter.) The League was accused of calling farm-labourers clothhoppers; but the accusation came with a bad grace from a man who called the working population of Bradford reckless drunkards. (Cheers.) He had said that there was not a single man in Thirsk who would benefit by a repeal of the Corn Laws, forgetting that there were 5000 inhabitants who had mouths and bellies—5000 consumers of food who were not producers of food. He had also said, that wages never were lower than when wheat was 4s. 6d. a bushel. "Now," said Mr. Prentice, "I ask him, before you all, what wages were then?" (Mr. Crompton, in great excitement, hesitated some time, and then said, "ten shillings.") "Ten shillings," said Mr. Prentice, "ten shillings, when wheat was at 4s. 6d., and twelve shillings when it was at 9s. Why, the labourers' wages would go nearly twice as far in the purchase of food in the former case; and yet, here was Mr. Crompton telling them they would be ruined by low prices." (Loud cheers.) Mr. P. then went on to refer to a speech by Mr. Morley, at the Pro-Corn-Law meeting on the previous Monday, where he had stated that a fall of 1s. 6d. a bushel, where land growing thirty bushels an acre was rented at 30s., would cause a loss of 15s. an acre, even if the land was rent-free. Let them try the Corn Law by this rule. The law of 1815 promised 10s. a bushel, and farmers entered into engagements in that belief; but for thirteen years the average was only about 8s. 6d. Here, then, farmers would be paying rent out of capital, not out of profits. In 1828 the new law promised 8s., but the average realized was only 7s. Here, again, the farmers would, for thirteen years more, be losers, even if they had their land rent-free. Was not this enough to account for the downward progress of farmers for twenty-six years, and all the ruin and destitution that had befallen them? They had been sold up by thousands, and all this distress had been occasioned by the Corn Law, which had promised what it did not fulfil; and yet these landowners behind him were urging farmers to adhere to this system, which had been all ready so ruinous. Mr. P. then went on to show that the so-called protection they received was protection only when they had nothing to sell, and no protection at all when they had anything to sell, the duty being 20s.; and they had no corn in their stackyard and nothing, or very little, when they began to put their sickle into the wheat, and to thresh out to prepare for the payment of their Michaelmas rents. He would appeal to the entire meeting, farmers as well as farm-labourers, was there a single man amongst them to say that they owed any increase of either capital or comfort to such laws as these? (Cheers.) The previous speaker had not succeeded in showing that they had; and he did not believe that Mr. Rutson, who was to follow, could show that the condition of the working agriculturists was benefited to the amount of one farthing by all the protection which had been thrown around them. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. W. Rutson followed Mr. Prentice, and dwelt at considerable length on what he seemed to regard as a most unjustifiable attempt on the part of the League to disturb the harmony of landlords, tenants, and labourers. Deprecation of such interference, imputations on the motives of the itinerant agitators, solemn warnings addressed to farmers and labourers against listening to the doctrines and fallacies of the League, constituted the staple of Mr. Rutson's address. He drew a contrast betwixt the condition of the inhabitants of the manufacturing and agricultural towns, much to the disadvantage of the former, though he failed to bring forward any proofs as to wages which would bear out his assertion.

Mr. Flint followed, and vindicated the right of himself and co-Leaguers to visit Thirsk or any other town of the empire, and to promulgate their views on any subject bearing on national interests. After commenting on some statements of Mr. Rutson as to the state of labour in America, and justifying the conduct of the Manchester spinners in curtailing the weekly duration of labour to prevent or check a speculative rise of cotton, which proceeding Mr. Rutson had condemned as harsh and tyrannical, Mr. Flint proceeded to show from official British and Prussian documents, that the opinion expressed by Mr. Rutson as to the price of wheat under Free Trade was most erroneous. That gentleman had said that wheat would then be 35s. per quarter. Mr. Flint proved that from 1816 to 1837, wheat had averaged 29s. at Berlin; 28s. 3d. in the whole Prussian dominions; and 34s. 3d. free on board at Dantzic; and that 8s. for freight, insurance, &c., was the lowest charge at which the traffic could be carried on. But he contended that under Free Trade wheat would rise in Prussia, perhaps, 10s. per quarter, certainly not less than 5s.; and he showed that our large imports in 1816 and 1817, 1829, 1830, and 1831, and again in 1839, 1840, and 1841, had caused an advance of from 10s. to 15s. per quarter on the average of those years in Prussia, as compared with years in which we had no need of their corn. He also showed that Canada wheat, at 3s. 6d. per bushel on the banks of Lake Erie, would stand at 56s. per quarter, duty paid, at Liverpool. Mr. Flint, therefore, ridiculed the statement of Mr. Morley at the meeting of the preceding week, viz., that wheat would fall 12s. per quarter, and that no rent could be paid. Mr. Flint then proceeded to show that the alleged special burdens on land were not special or peculiar, and that the plea for protection put forward by Mr. Baker of Chelmsford, on the ground of indirect taxation paid by the labourers, farmers, and landowners, meant that the consumer of corn, in addition to his own taxes, should pay those of the agricultural classes. He further maintained the right of all producers to dispose of the fruits of their industry wherever they thought fit so to do; and denounced the Corn Law as an infringement on that right. The dependence of agriculture on the prosperity of manufactures he proved, by showing that, since 1811, the manufacturing districts had absorbed upwards of two millions of the population of the agricultural; and he maintained that large importations of foreign corn would not displace British grain, but would enable the millions who "rejoiced in potatoes" or fattened on oatmeal, to get substantial beef, pudding, and wheaten bread. Mr. Flint concluded by saying that imputations on the motives of the League advocates had been lavishly thrown out by Mr. Rutson, but he challenged him to show that any leading man in the League had not, even from the first, maintained that a repeal of the Corn Laws would benefit all classes, and not only our own country, but the world at large; and he claimed for them credit for their avowed motives, just as he admitted the sincerity of Mr. Rutson. (Mr. Flint concluded amidst general cheering.)

Immediately after Mr. Flint had concluded, Mr. Crompton inquired if the deputation intended to propose any resolution, and was answered "No." They came to state their views, and would leave the public to decide on their truth or falsehood; they were quite satisfied with having thrown them out. Mr. Crompton then said, "Well, but we'll propose something;" and accordingly he proposed, "That a repeal of the Corn Laws would be injurious to the farmers and farm-labourers;" and instantly put it to the meeting, without a second. A considerable number of hands were held up, but there was so much confusion that it is doubtful whether the meeting knew what was proposed. Apparently, more hands were held up for the resolution than against it; but on Mr. Prentice proposing three cheers for the League, they were heartily given by at least two-thirds of the meeting. This fact, coupled with the earnest attention to and friendly reception of the deputation by the meeting, and the unwilling hearing given to Mr. Crompton, leave no room to doubt that, had the meeting correctly understood Mr. Crompton's proposition, it would have been negatived by a great majority.

EVENING MEETING.—A Mr. Harper—the same individual who attempted to interrupt the meeting of the preceding week, and who tried the same game at Knareborough—gave a lecture in the large room of the Piece Inn, in which he endeavoured to show that the Corn Laws benefited farmers, and especially farm-labourers. Some idea of his fitness for the task may be formed, from the fact that he asserted manufactures produced 350 millions per annum, of which five millions only were exported, and 845 millions consumed by the agricultural classes. The lecture was a tissue of similar absurdities, and excited the derision of that portion of his audience which consisted of the burgesses of Thirsk, though he was cheered by the farmers who had invited him to give the lecture to counteract the League deputation. At length he found it impossible to proceed; and Mr. Rutson, a farmer—who had expressed his determination to oppose the deputation at the afternoon meeting, but whose courage failed—then proposed a vote of thanks to the chairman, Mr. Tweedy, a shoemaker, and an intelligent and respectable bourgeois of Thirsk. He said, in reply, "That he did not think he was under any obligation to the gentleman for proposing a vote of thanks, for they had put him in the chair when no one else could be got; and he must further say, he did not think the lecturer had proved anything whatever,"—he might have added, except his own ignorance of the whole subject. Three groans were then proposed for the lecturer, and given with hearty good will; and he made a hasty retreat with his farmer patrons, to console himself and them for his ridiculous failure. Three cheers were then given for the Anti-Corn-Law League.

THIRSK.—A large and respectable meeting of the inhabitants of Thirsk was held on Monday evening week, in a large room at the Three Tuns Hotel. Mr. Prentice, of Manchester, and Mr. Plint, of Leeds, attended as a deputation from the National Anti-Corn Law League, for the purpose of examining into the dependence of the prosperity of the tenant-farmers and farm-labourers on the existing Corn Laws, and to show the manner in which a repeal of those laws would affect the agricultural and the manufacturing classes. Mr. John Baker, draper, on the proposition of Mr. Smith, of Thirsk, was called to the chair. The chairman, in opening the meeting, made a judicious speech, showing that the best remedy for the evils affecting the farmers was to derive from giving a free outlet to our manufactures, and by adopting an improved system of agriculture. Mr. Prentice followed the chairman in a powerful speech, developing the evil effects of the Corn Laws to the farmer and the farm-labourer; he was succeeded by Mr. Plint, in a long, argumentative, and effective address, bearing upon the history of the Corn Laws and the manner in which they operated on the rent of land, and on the general interests of society. Before the meeting separated, a vote of thanks was given to the deputation, and three cheers were given for the chairman, and three for the League.—Leeds Mercury.

PONTERFRACT. February 23.—A meeting was held in the Town-hall in this borough, yesterday evening, on the Corn-Law question, when Mr. Plint, of Leeds, in an eloquent and effective speech, successfully advocated the principles of Free Trade. Some of his statements were unceremoniously denied by Mr. Clough, the agent of Lord Mexborough, but he was triumphantly refuted; and the meeting attended to the remainder of the lecturer's speech with evidently increased interest. At the conclusion, Mr. Clough, who had before wished to enter more fully into the question, was permitted to address the assembly. His arguments and assertions were replied to by Mr. Marton:—this gentleman, in a quiet and effective manner, exposed his fallacies, to the satisfaction and amusement of the people assembled, who, very good humouredly, yet in a way not at all to be mistaken, manifested their feelings in favour of Free Trade; showing that the views which many of them had previously held on the subject of wages were no longer entertained. After votes of thanks, &c., were passed, three hearty cheers were given for the Anti-Corn-Law League, after which the meeting separated. Should the League persevere in bringing the subject before the electors of the borough, their efforts will be crowned with success, Pontefract will be rescued from the grasp of monopoly, and two members will be returned to Parliament at the next election, the undoubted advocates of a system of liberal and enlightened commercial policy.

NORTHALLERTON.—On Tuesday evening there was a meeting at Northallerton; the audience was numerous, being partly agricultural and partly manufacturing, and was addressed by the deputation, Colonel Thompson, Mr. Prentice, and Mr. Plint, as well upon the effect of Free Trade upon wages and the employment of labour, as upon the interest of farmers and landlords. Questions were invited, but none were asked; and the meeting separated.

KIRKHAMPTON ANTI-CORN-LAW ASSOCIATION.—At a meeting of this association, on Friday evening last, Mr. William Kaye moved the following resolution:—"That, as our forefathers, in the times of the Tudors and Stuarts, put down and abolished for ever all monopolies granted by those monarchs, so we pledge ourselves anew never to relax in our endeavours to put down and repeal for ever all monopoly laws, especially those of corn and sugar, enacted, the one at the point of the sword, and both for the express purpose of benefiting individuals at the public expense. We, moreover, identify ourselves with the National Anti-Corn-Law League, and vow allegiance to that body so long as Free Trade is their end and aim." The resolution was carried amidst tokens of enthusiastic approbation.—Leeds Mercury.

YORK. February 22.—The monopolists have had their meeting. Fifteen hundred circulars had been sent to the most influential parties in the county, and about 300 assembled, and subscribed upwards of £2500. The meeting was composed almost entirely of landowners, parsons, and Tory citizens: there could not be more than 60 or 70 tenant-farmers present, and these, from their appearance, were large capitalists. Earl Harewood, £200; Lord Feversham, £200; Lord Beaumont, £100; Major Yarborough, £100; Lord Hotham, £100; Duke of Leeds, £100; several others £100's, and £50's, and £20's, &c. The tenant-farmers subscribed from £1 to £5, and few even reached this amount. Committees are to be formed in the three ridings, and a central one for the county. Subscribers of £20 are eligible as members of central committees, and subscribers of £1 and upwards, of the riding committees. I ought to state, this is the market-day for sale of cattle, &c. I and Mr. Taylor went into the fair this morning, and distributed 400 or 500 of "Lloyd's Letter," "Rand's Speech," &c., to as many farmers, yet out of all these only 60 attended the meeting, showing that they set a slight value on the landlords' protection. A Mr. Rand, manufacturer, (stated to be brother of Mr. Rand, of Bradford), supported one of their resolutions; and other two persons, calling themselves manufacturers, likewise took part in the proceedings.—From a Correspondent.

"PROTECTION" MEETING.—A meeting, professing of tenant-farmers, was held at Great Marlow, in Buckinghamshire, on Wednesday, the 21st ult. Raymond Barker, Esq., in the chair. In addition to about twenty farmers, there were a dozen esquires, as many tailors and drapers, three brewers, four lawyers, and several small tradesmen connected with the town, in all about one hundred persons. The chairman, who has always been a strong political partisan of the Duke of Buckingham, began the meeting by expressing his great alarm at the Anti-Corn-Law League. He was sorry to observe the increased efforts of the "monstrous horridum," as he described it. That they were supported by men of high rank, and with large resources, it could not be denied; the greatest energy, therefore, was called for to counteract the efforts of their opponents; and there was no doubt that this might be easily effected, if the tenants would unite as one man to oppose them. The present low prices of wheat arose, said Mr. Barker, from the duty having gone down to one shilling last year. [This is not true, but anything will do in poor Bucks.] He, Mr. Barker, had lately met with a member of the League, who told him that he had no idea they would have been able to rouse the farmers as they had done, and that, if the farmers were true to themselves, there would soon be an end of the League. The eyes of all are upon you (said Mr. Barker); and I will here observe, this is expressly a meeting of tenant-farmers, but they will be obliged to any landlord or tradesman who will assist them to maintain protection.—Mr. Gibbons, of Bledlow, the son of a woollen-draper, but now a farmer, proposed the first resolution, and indulged in the old stale calumnies against members of the League, which form much of the staple stock of the speeches delivered at these meetings. I rejoice (said Mr. Gibbons) that the doctrine that farmers should not talk politics is passing away, and that we are to be allowed to speak out. I say, the minds of farmers must not continue to be what Mr. Bright has said they are, "like a sealed book—that you cannot get anything out of, nor yet drive anything into." I have read the League tracts and their newspapers; I have been to Drury-lane Theatre; and I hope you will, one and all, take a lesson from Mr. Cobden, and support your principles, and with them the present Ministry.—Several speakers followed, in whose speeches abuse of the League was indulged in, and the cruelty of the manufacturers was the prominent feature; but there was no allusion to the barbarous treatment of the poor children shut up in the Bledlow Ridge Union Workhouse, with the particulars of which Mr. Gibbons is well acquainted—nothing said of the five poor little miserable who were seen huddled together on one pallet, without any other covering than a sheet around their shoulders—nothing of the dreadful condition of the child who lay with its bed rotting under it, owing to continued saturation and the accumulated filth in which it lay—nor of the neglected condition of the greater part of the inmates of this last resort of the destitute. The meeting concluded with the appointment of a committee consisting of six esquires, two lawyers, four farmers, one parson, three brewers, and a tailor. The meeting lasted one hour and a half, and your reporter only heard one cheer during the whole course of its proceedings—a cheer which reminded him of a donkey on a rainy day with his ears hanging down.—From a Correspondent.

TO THE TENANT FARMERS OF HERTFORDSHIRE.

BROTHER FARMERS,—I cannot refrain from offering a few observations upon your recently-established Agricultural Protection Society in this county.

Having attended the meeting at St. Alban's, on the 2nd of February (which may be appropriately termed a meeting held for the purpose of abusing the Anti-Corn-Law League), and listened in vain for any argument in favour of the Corn Laws, or any hope of amelioration in the present Rackrent and Tenant-at-Will system, from the various noble and influential speakers on that occasion, I wish to ask you, seriously, do you consider that any real advantage will be gained to the interests of your order, or the welfare of your families be promoted, by vituperating that, or any other great body of your fellow-citizens, who are equally interested with you in obtaining good and equitable laws for all classes of their countrymen?

The pursuit of farming, like all other occupations, is a matter of income and expenditure, and, to be successfully carried on, must yield a profit upon an average of years; to promote which, either the returns must be increased, or the outlay diminished, and the balance may be as effectually inclined by lessening the weight in one scale as by increasing it in the other.

Believing that, under a healthy system, the land would ably support landlord, tenant, and labourer, I am persuaded that it is incapable of bearing the additional weight of land and law agents, auctioneers and middle-men, with the feudal privileges of vert and venison, with an increased rent-charge for tithes, income-tax, &c. &c., and with the greatly depreciated value of stock, at commercial rents, and insecure tenures. But, from the tone of the speakers at St. Alban's, one might imagine that farming was a most lucrative pursuit, that you were a prosperous and happy race of men, and were likely to continue so, were it not for the agitation of the Corn-Law question.

But what are the facts? During the last 25 years, how many bond fide tenant-farmers are there in this county who have doubled their capital? How many could realize as much capital now as they could then have commanded, were they about to relinquish the pursuit of farming at the present time? How many have been able to educate their children and to promote their prospects in life with equal advantages to those classes engaged in other pursuits, who were possessed of a proportionate amount of capital, skill, and energy? It is notorious that the farmers have prospered the least of any class of capitalists under the present false and vicious system of protection—for the perpetuation of which you are now so loudly clamouring. Surely it would be prudent to consider well the actual worth and real cost of the Corn-Law sliding scale to your own class, as well as the injuries it inflicts upon the other productive and industrious classes in this country, with whom many members of your own families are intimately connected, before you venture to take upon yourselves the odium and responsibility, the impression of wrong and injustice, which pervades the minds of the reflecting portion of this great community, and the storm of moral indignation which may naturally be expected to break forth against all prohibitory laws, whenever the next periodical season of scarcity occurs? Nothing great or good appears to be produced or to flourish under the false principle of protection. Nature understands her own operations best. Think you, would the noble and majestic oak at Panshanger, in this county (so greatly admired), have attained its giant trunk and its magnificent proportions, had it been placed under the protection of some paltry greenhouse? What kind of benefit do your growing crops derive from the protection of the ash-trees which prevail on most farms in this county? Do you not find that a pernicious and baneful influence has sapped and undermined the fertility of the soil, leaving you a stunted and worthless crop beneath their shade? In the same manner does the false principle of Corn-Law Protection operate on your interests, and destroy the independence and welfare of your order. How many families once engaged in the cultivation of the soil have now sunk to a state of dependence? And, in the face of all these facts, an unnatural competition still exists to obtain the occupation of land, without a chance of procuring fair terms, by leases at corn-rents, upon an equitable basis, or any security from the ravages occasionally inflicted upon the farmers' crops by game preserves. Not a word was uttered by your various speakers on this point, and yet I know that many of you could unfold a tale thereon. I have personally suffered to some extent by game. For three successive years the damage sustained on a farm less than 400 acres was assessed by competent persons at £100 per annum. And what recompense did I obtain? Not one farthing. It was a customary thing. I know a labourer whose widowed mother some years back successfully occupied a small farm with the assistance of her son, but, in a fatal hour to her, a game-preserver happened to procure the occupation of some woods on which part of her land abutted. The result was the destruction of one-fourth of her crops, and, despite all remonstrance, in four years the loss of a whole year's produce was thereby sustained, which ruined her; and the ruthless hammer of the auctioneer disposed of her stock for rent, and completed her unhappy doom. There have been many similar cases, but you have now all your present attention directed against the Anti-Corn-Law League, and could even join Mr. C. Phillips and Co. in arraigning the estimable Earl Spencer, the Washington of British agriculture, the pilot whom I would choose to steer me o'er the rough ocean of agricultural distress, who has done more than any man (excepting the late venerable Earl of Leicester) to promote the real welfare and independence of the British farmer. This is worthy of your consideration, speaking in terms which you cannot misunderstand, more than you do the sneers cast upon you for educating your children too expensively, and the intimation to send your sons to the plough, and your daughters to milk your cows, instead of learning music and dancing, so kindly given to you by one of your protectionist landowners present.

I hope that those generous and high-minded landlords in this county, who have never taken any unfair advantage in the sunshine of prosperity, will be met by a corresponding degree of gratitude and affection on your part in the hour of trial. It is our duty, and our highest interest, thus to meet them. But I cannot believe that you will be ever asked (by such men) to surrender your conscientious integrity, your principles, and opinions (all that distinguishes the freeman from the slave), and to fetter the future exercise of your judgment upon all public questions, by inducing you to sign documents for any such purposes, as rumour reports, but, for the honour of human nature, I hope without foundation.

The case of the labourer was also strongly recommended to your notice, with a suggestion to pay him liberally, but not a word was said whence the extra funds for that purpose were to be derived. I maintain, that unless more is produced from the soil, or the claims upon the produce (in behalf of the land and tithe owners, rate and tax collectors, &c.) is lessened, that the industry of the labourer can never obtain a larger proportion of the fruits of the earth, to reward his toil. I never heard a single speaker propose to yield anything for that purpose, therefore, I conclude that you are expected to furnish the means of increasing his wages. Can you do so, under existing circumstances? In cases of illness, accidents, or contingencies, the position of the labourers is distressing to contemplate. You must be aware of this, coming frequently into contact with many scenes of privation and destitution. Inquire of the collector of poor's rates, whether the children of the distressed ratepayers have sufficient bread? The following is a correct weekly outlay of a labourer's wages, in this parish, with a wife and three children, which may help to demonstrate the fact of a sufficiency of food being within their reach; clothing is a very hopeless matter indeed:—

The weekly Outlay and Expenditure of a Labourer who obtains 9s. per week, when employed:—

| | s. | d. |
|-----------------------------------|----|----|
| ½ oz. of tea | 0 | 1½ |
| ½ lb. of sugar | 0 | 2 |
| ½ lb. of butter | 0 | 2½ |
| ½ lb. of candles | 0 | 3½ |
| ½ lb. of meat | 0 | 7 |
| ½ bushel of flour | 4 | 8 |
| 1 fargot for baking ditto | 0 | 5 |
| Rent | 1 | 6 |
| Firing | 1 | 6 |
| | 9 | 8½ |

He is obliged to stint the above quantity of food occasionally.

In cases of deficiency of work, or illness, I shudder to contemplate the wretched scene—the union-house, breaking up their home, or starvation. Talk of over-production, indeed! why, there is scarcely a cottage whose inhabitants are not miserably deficient of food, clothing, and furniture. Take the case of a young family, dependent solely upon the earnings of the father, an agricultural labourer; enter the dwelling and examine the interior; inquire diligently as to the weekly expenditure, and you will find that a sufficiency of bread is not within their power of compass. As to other necessary articles of consumption, such as tea, coffee, sugar, &c., they are generally purchased in such miserably small quantities, and often of wretched quality, as to afford very limited means of support. Now, how can the means of procuring the social comforts of such families be enlarged by restricting the supply of food or clothing?

If we cannot extend the range of our sympathies to the industrious classes of our countrymen from the impulse of humanity, let us do so from motives of policy and justice, being well assured that what is morally wrong will never prove practically beneficial; and whatever we may sacrifice to justice and humanity, will be amply repaid by security to our property, and respect and attachment to our persons and families.

Farmers of Hertfordshire! You have stood between a fierce and uneducated peasantry and the landowners; you have borne the brunt of their bad passions; your property has been exposed to theft and to destruction; and you are now called upon to support the present system, with all its evils and injustices. Recollect that every grievance you labour under is a part and parcel of this system. The law of distress for rent, the unfair laws relating to landlord and tenant, the absolute and uncontrolled expenditure of the county-rate, the evils of the game-laws, and the insidious working of the agency system, are all identified with the Corn Laws. I rest assured that reflection upon these matters will not fail to lead you to a sound and healthy conclusion.

I have the honour to be, gentlemen,
Your faithful friend,

C. H. LATTIMORE.

Wheatthamsted-place, Feb. 13, 1844.

A WEEK IN WINDSOR FOREST.

By a STRANGER.

No. I.—A Journey to Prince Albert's Farm.

When in Windsor lately on business, I happened to see a notice of a new work called the "Prairie Bird," by the Honourable Charles Augustus Murray, author of "Travels in North America."

I had read Mr. Murray's travels among the red men of the American forests with much pleasure and profit soon after it appeared; and was now pleased to find that he had not then exhausted all his matter; and that the refinement of the court of her Majesty the Queen of England, in which he is Master of the Household, was not incompatible with the authorship of a work descriptive of personal adventures amongst the uncivilized tribes of the new world.

There is no reason why Mr. Murray, bred though he was amid the luxuries of the British aristocracy, should not have gone into the regions of the prairie and the wild man. Energy of mind and body and self-denial formed in him a sufficient reason for his doing so. But it is not common to find a traveller emerging from polished society to make his residence in the far wilderness, and after that returning to fill the distinguished place which Mr. Murray does in Windsor Castle, depicting to the world his knowledge of savage life from the very centre of civilization; therefore, we are ready, in hearing of a new work from his pen descriptive of the wilderness, to reflect, remark, and make contrasts.

I was within a few hundred yards of that most regal of the palaces of the Queen of England, Windsor Castle, and within the length of a forest tree of the Master of the Household himself—for he was passing along the street from hunting with the royal hounds—at the moment of my first reading the announcement of his new work; and at once there was a stream of ideas running through the mind, one suggesting another, and each leading the way to a successor.

There was the surmise of what led Mr. Murray to travel so far, and linger so long among the Indians? If to gain an acquaintance with the lowest subjects of human civilization, as he was already acquainted with the highest, did he content himself with what he saw at the distance of seven thousand miles; or did he, since his return from among the red men of the American forest, associate with, and form opinions of, the happiness and habits of the white-faced men of Windsor Forest, who live within the distance of a run with the hounds of Windsor itself? There was next a question to this effect: are we not always seeking to know, and are we not better acquainted with, the personal and family condition of Hindoos, Hot-tentots, Caribs, Patagonians, Red Indians, and the many other tribes and races of wild men, than we are with the civilized? And again: are those of us who read and write books, and who make and administer laws for the good of the public generally, but for the good of the poor particularly (as we are so ready to say and swear to), not as ignorant of the home, and habits, and measure of happiness of the English labourer as of any other creature, biped or quadruped, known within the geographical limits of the globe? Of the New Zealander, the American Indian, and the wild tribes of every region, do we not know of their hunting-grounds, their lairs, their trails, their war-cries, their scalping-knives, and their pipes of peace? Do we not know of what they eat and drink? with what they are sheltered? with what leaves, mats, skins, entrails, horns, bones, heads, and shells they are covered and ornamented? Thanks to the natural energy of Englishmen, to commercial enterprise and religious zeal, we know all those things and many more. But do we know as much of the common inhabitant of Windsor Forest? Of what is his hut and its furniture made? What is his rent? Is it annually as much as the fifteenth part of the original cost of the cottage, or is it a one-hundredth part? Of what material are his clothes made? How many beds in a family? how many blankets on the beds? and how many shirts, and shoes, and changes of other garments for each wearer? What do such articles cost? from whom are they purchased? by whom are they made, and at what price? What does the inhabitant of the forest live on? How much bread, meat, butter, vegetables, coffee, sugar, and other articles of native and foreign produce does he use in a day, a week, a month, or a year? What is his income? Are his wages fixed, or do they rise and fall with the prices of food? Has he always enough to eat, or near enough? or has he more than enough? Is he warmly clothed? or can he be so if he chooses? Whether does he eat most bread when he pays a high price for it, or when he pays a low price? When bread is dearest does he buy most cloth? Does he buy least, or does he buy any at all? When he gives his daughter to a husband, what does he give with her? Does he give anything? We know what the American Indian gives; and we know that he has most skins wherewith to clothe himself and family when he has most of the flesh of the animal he hunts to feed on. But we are either wholly ignorant of the manner in which the native labourer of Windsor Forest, and of England generally, lives, or we are so perverse when we come to reason upon subjects within the reach of our own personal knowledge, that we cannot and will not agree as we do when the clothing and food of the far-distant savage form the topic of our consideration.

Such were a few of the subjects which were suggested by place and circumstance, as already related. For myself I do not believe now, and did not then, that the adverse opinions of public writers and statesmen on the condition of the English labourer, and the causes that promote or retard his happiness, arise so much from their inability to reason justly, nor from their determination to be perverse with each other, as from their being almost all unacquainted with those details of his family affairs which make him comfortable or otherwise. With this opinion strongly fixed in my mind, I resolved that, as soon as I could afford time from business, I would put my hat on my head, button my coat, take hold of my stick, and set out on a journey of several days through and around Windsor Forest.

I did so. I walked through the market-place of Windsor towards the east, and left the town behind me on the morning of the 14th of February, 1844. It was not a perilous adventure on which I was bound, but it was not without its excitement even at the very outset; as I soon found myself at a loss which of several roads to take to get into that southern part of the forest where I intended to go, and still more so to determine which direction was south and which north, which east and which west. It was a dull, foggy morning; and the fog was so frozen on everything above and below that the feeble day was, at ten o'clock, creeping slowly from the darkness, with the night still clinging to it, so frost-struck and paralytic it could scarcely move, so dim it could scarcely see. Every tree and twig and blade of grass, and solitary straw upon the road, had its covering of white hoar. The fine spring weather of a few days before seemed to have been suddenly deprived of life, and all nature was now in white mourning because it had died young.

I had just left the last house of Windsor on my left hand, and had a gateway on each side, one of which, to my right, admitted the traveller or pleasure-seeker into the Great Park. It formed the termination of that most magnificent approach to Windsor called the Long Walk. The gate on the left hand admitted to the castle, which crowned the elevation gradually rising from this spot. The castle was distant from this gateway between three and four hundred yards.

Turning from the road on which I stood, and which would have led me to Frogmore, Runnymede, Egham, Staines, and ultimately to London, I turned to the right, intending to penetrate into the Great Park and the forest by the Long Walk. I intended to visit the farm cultivated by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, but first found it necessary to inquire my way. I saw two gentlemen approaching from the Frogmore-road, and I asked them where the Prince's farm was; they said they never heard of the Prince having a farm, so could not tell. A man driving a cart came up, and I asked him. He said he had certainly heard that the Prince had a farm, and he believed it was somewhere in the forest or in the park, but he "could not tell where it was, nor what road to go, not him; not if he were put to it ever so, he could not tell; cut his head off he could not." So he drove on. Another traveller approached from the Frogmore direction; and, as he wore a smock-frock and seemed more local-like than any of the others, I asked him; but he did not live in "them parts," so could not tell where the Prince's farm was; but he hoped I would not be offended at him if he asked me for a little assistance to get a little bit of something to eat; he was very hungry, was looking for work, could not get none, and was regular hard up; he would not tell me a word of a lie, not him; he had walked all yesterday and tasted nothing; so help him God, he was dying.

Having parted from him, a stout lad or under-sized man, I could not discover which, approached me from the same direction, with his head in the interior of a large copper kettle. It was bulky and heavy, and I concluded that he could not have travelled far with it, and that he must belong to the neighbourhood. I asked him which was the way to the Prince's farm; and a voice from the interior of the kettle responded, "Which farm?" "Prince Albert's farm," I replied. "Ay," continued the voice in the kettle, "but which of the Prince's farms? there be's Flemish Farm over by Spittal, and Norfolk Farm before you come to Virginia Water; and there is the Dairy, and the Wheeler's Yard, and Cumberland Lodge. All them are farms, as you may say—at least they keeps cattle, and cows, and horses, and haystacks at them."

"Which of them is nearest to us now? Which of them is the Prince's farm?" "Which of them be nearest to us now? The Dairy be's nearest to us now, and it belongs to the Queen. The farthest off is Norfolk Farm, and that belongs to the Prince; it belongs to him, as we may say; it is farmed by him, and he shoots the rabbits on it; but it belongs to the Crown. And there is Flemish Farm, not so far away; it is also the Prince's farm, and belongs to the Crown."

Thus spoke the voice in the kettle; and it was moving away, but I detained it a minute longer to ask which way I should go to Flemish Farm. It said, "try Spittal," and moved on, and refused to say more.

A little girl was at the gate at the head of the Long Walk, and I inquired of her the way to Spittal, and found that to go there I must return and go through Windsor; but, on farther inquiry, she said I might get to Flemish Farm by another way. And, finding there was no hindrance to my going in any part of the park or forest that was not enclosed, I entered and proceeded on my journey of discovery.

To those who have never visited this part of England it may be agreeable if I give a rough outline of the general appearance of the country, of the produce and population of which I shall hereafter have occasion to speak in detail.

At the present day the circumference of Windsor Forest is said to be about five-and-twenty miles. In other days it was much more; and in the early days of George IV. it was less. That sovereign caused large spaces of open heathy land to be planted and enclosed; and now there is a fine thriving cover of young oaks rising up. In some parts there are firs, but oak predominates.

There are many gentlemen's seats, with gardens and enclosed meadows and farm fields in the forest. Windsor Great Park constitutes probably a third, or between that and a half of the whole. In travelling by the roads or on the pathways, or on the grassy surface where the woods are pathless, a stranger will not know when he is in the park or out of it, save by the lettered boards which he occasionally sees nailed upon a tree, intimating that this is the boundary of the park. Neither do the farms, and barns, and farm-houses distinguish which is park and which is forest. They are met with in both. There are, however, several villages in the forest, and the open land is more generally under cultivation there than in the park. Sunning Hill and Winkfield are the principal villages; but there are cottages, found singly and in clusters, in every direction. The population, for a rural one, may be called dense.

The roads that intersect the forest are numerous, and the green drives and rides among the shady oaks more numerous still. It is said that, within the confines of the forest, there are five hundred miles of drives and walks. Probably this is true; but, whether so or not, they are certainly ample enough to all visitors, and intricate and tedious enough to those who are strangers and on foot.

The surface of the country is undulating. There are no high hills and deep valleys; but there is the chalky rock on which Windsor Castle stands, a hundred feet above the level of the Thames, the wandering water of which, seen from the terrace, comes like a vagrant through the broad woody country, and bends its way to touch at Windsor, and loiter for a brief period in the meadow below the castle. There are other elevations of similar height throughout the forest, bearing upon their heads the giant oaks of every generation from Queen Elizabeth to Queen Victoria. In the levels and hollows the same aged veterans are seen, sometimes with their bald and branchless heads among the timber of younger days. Such is the oak of Herne the Hunter, seven or eight hundred yards south-east from the castle. There is also the Long Walk, skirted on each side with a double row of lofty elms of the reign of Queen Anne. This noble avenue is two miles and three quarters in length.

I proceeded along it and came near to what is called the middle gate; there I inquired the way to Flemish Farm, and was told that to go direct to it I must turn out of the avenue and go across the open park, farther than I could see, by where I saw the herds of deer with their antlers between me and the sky. I was about to do so, but an open carriage with postillions, which had come from the castle, was driving rapidly up, and I was told that it was just possible that the Prince might be in it, going towards Virginia Water on a shooting excursion. I lingered with the intention of lifting my hat to his Royal Highness, should he be there, but on its approach there was no one in it that at all resembled the portraits; by which alone I could have known him; so I concluded that he was not in it, and pursued my journey in search of Flemish Farm.

By journeying westward among the deer, with now a rabbit and now a hare starting up and running a few hundred yards before me—where they, in some cases, sat down, and in all cases took it so easy as to show that they were not used to enemies in that part of the park—I came to a road on which several people, on foot and in light carts, were travelling to and from Windsor. I asked some of them where Flemish Farm was, but none could tell me. There were farm fields in view, however. Westward from me, on an upland rise of half a mile, there were undoubted features of agriculture. In a field, partly ploughed and only partly visible, two persons were spreading manure; and nearer me were two fields ridged, and apparently bearing young wheat. Nearer still was a field in which six men were cutting drains, with heaps of tiles within the enclosure, and some hundred bundles of furze and heath, which had been brought there to cover the tiles previous to filling in the earth upon them.

There was now a sudden thaw upon the ground: the sun was out; the hoary whiteness of the frost was gone, and everything was dripping wet. I got across a low grassy hollow and a ditch in the bottom of it, where the water was running and brawling. It was probably dry in summer, for, though noisy now, it bore the proportion to other streamlets which the child does to the man when it gets upon a chair and cries, "Look at me! See how big I am!" It skirts the field under process of being drained, and the colour and quantity of its water, drawn from the drains, showed that they were not made unnecessarily.

A close fence of upright palings, to keep out the hares and rabbits, enclosed this part of the farm. I went round to a gate which was open, and went across the field to the drainers, as well as the wet and exceedingly tenacious clayey soil would let me. Upon inquiry I found that I was now upon Prince Albert's farm, and that I was speaking to his Royal Highness's workmen. In about ten minutes one of them asked another what o'clock it was. He replied it was within a minute of twelve; whereupon the other said he thought so, for his belly had been telling him it was twelve for a long while. He called to a man in another drain that it was twelve; and that one immediately quitted his spade, as did all the others, and went to a bundle of the heath which lay about, and took from it a bag or handkerchief, which contained his dinner.

As each worked in his own drain, and the drains were seven or eight yards distant, he had put his dinner down where he began in the morning to work; and thus the six men were at some distance from one another. I kept moving about, and saw that they had each a piece of bread, some of them baker's bread and some of them home-baked, of about the size of a twopenny loaf. Some of them had a piece of cooked bacon, and one or two had cheese. The quantity of bacon or cheese I did not at that time clearly perceive, as they did not seem willing that a stranger should see what they were eating. I have often noticed before this that workmen do not hesitate to show what they are eating if they have a good round lump of anything; but they will conceal it, or go out of the way to eat it, if it is very small. Subsequently I learned that those on the Prince's farm were not exceptions in this respect. After a few minutes I sat down on one of the bundles of heath near one of the men, who told me that they worked by the piece; that their wages ran to about twelve shillings a week; they and other workmen in the park were allowed to earn as much as fifteen shillings a week if they could, but not more; that was a rule laid down by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests. Formerly workmen had made higher wages at piece-work, but they were not now permitted to do so; they had all their working tools to find and keep in repair; and working so much among water as they were, they, to keep dry feet, needed to be shod in a superior manner. They said, that reckoning all that was needed by them over what a ploughman needed, and their lost time in very wet or frosty weather, they did not earn more than the common wages of the neighbourhood, twelve shillings a week. Out of this they paid two shillings and sixpence a week for house rent, and some of them three shillings a week, besides taxes, which, on an average of several years, amounted to fifteen shillings a year.

Observing that I was writing some notes while talking to this man, the others came near to ascertain what I was talking about. I told them that I was making some inquiries about their wages and manner of living. "Living!" said one of them, "it can't be called living; it is nothing better than a linger. Here we are eating our dry crust without anything to moisten it but a drink out of the ditch as runs there; and we working from morning to night. No, sir, we don't live, we only linger."

"But," said I, "you have better wages than most other labourers in England. In Dorset and Wiltshire, and all down that way, wages are less by four or five shillings a week than the wages of this neighbourhood."

"But," replied one of the men, "they don't pay 2s. 6d. and 3s. for their houses as we do." "Perhaps," said I, "you have good gardens along with yours?" "Good gardens!" they all exclaimed at once, "you should see them; three rod of ground! that's all the garden as belongs to we." I inquired where they lived, and they replied, Egham Wyke, two miles and a half from where we then were.

Intending to go and see their houses in the course of a day or two, I then left them, and proceeded up the fields, beyond which, in a hollow, I was told I would find the homestead at Flemish Farm. I proceeded in the direction intimated, and, meeting some men and horses going out to plough, I halted to look at them, and saw that they yoked the horses three to each plough, ahead of each other, each man who held the plough having a boy to drive.

AGRICULTURE.

VASSALAGE OF THE TENANT-FARMERS.

"A central society, for the protection of British agriculture, has been formed, to be managed by a committee, to consist of twenty landowners and twenty tenant-farmers. Here, then, for the first time that we are aware of, are the tenant-farmers placed in a situation to protect their own interest. We note this as an event which will be regarded at some future day as forming a new epoch in the history of the tenantry of this kingdom. It is constantly stated by landowners that they consider themselves and their tenantry 'to be in one boat'; but it almost always, if not always, occurs that the landowners take the officer's place whilst the tenantry only man the boat."—Mark-lane Express, Monday, Feb. 26, 1844.

The above extract from the columns of the most astute organ of the monopolists, and the only one which has the slightest sympathy with the tenant-farmer, is sufficiently significant. The tenants have been indeed the galley-slaves by whose toil and sacrifices the gilded bark of landlord domination has been rowed for the last thirty years. Let us glance at some of the causes of this degrading vassalage. During the war land was constantly rising in value, mainly from the rapid growth of our manufacturing industry throughout that period, rents were universally doubled and trebled, and in many districts they exceeded those of 1792 by four and five fold. Tenants took leases and conducted their business in a more enterprising way than had hitherto been known in husbandry, and their profits partook of the improvement. But over and above the rise in the value of land, and the increase of farming profits, which occurred from the advancing wealth, population, and commercial industry of the nation, the landowners and the occupiers derived an additional advantage from the fortuitous circumstances of the times. During the twenty years preceding 1814 there were an unusual number of deficient harvests, and the extraordinary state of Europe and the events of the war rendered importations of corn from abroad difficult, precarious, and expensive. Not only, therefore, were there at times actual and serious deficiencies of corn, but the fears of the public naturally outran the occasion, and enhanced prices beyond the ratio of the deficiency. This occasioned a further and factitious value to be given to agricultural produce, and poured vast accessions of wealth into the pockets of both landlord and tenant, at the expense of the rest of the community, and that cause was in constant operation down to 1813. About 1810-1812, when prices were at the highest, a very general arrangement of rents took place. Many old leases had then fallen in, and the vast competition for farms which existed compelled the old tenants to give extravagant rents or to surrender their farms to others. But the peace which immediately succeeded removed all that portion of the price of corn which was caused by our exclusion from the Continent, and, being accompanied by a productive season, agricultural prices fell considerably. Landlords and tenants became alike alarmed; for the one class had adapted their style of living, and charged their estates with burdens, on the expectation that the very highest range of prices had become permanent; and the latter had entered into engagements to pay rents calculated by the same scale. With only a partial comprehension of the combination of causes which had produced their recent and extraordinary prosperity, and in that spirit of selfishness which half information is too apt to beget, both classes agreed to the experiment of attempting to maintain in future the high prices of past years by means of an artificial scarcity, created by law. The landlords, however, had by far the clearest view of the subject, for they avowed, in 1815, that their chief purpose in passing the law of that year was to keep up rents. Possibly their law may have had that effect, though it has been doubted by many persons well acquainted with the management of landed property; but for the tenants it was a most fatal measure. Instead of an adjustment of rents and outgoings to natural prices, they struggled to obtain artificial prices by means of "protection," and they have constantly failed in doing so. The tenants strove manfully to meet the exorbitant war rents; and, though many sunk in the unequal conflict, some of them in part have succeeded, by raising increased produce from their land. Yet all were at the mercy of their landlords, who have doled out to them eleemosynary aids in the form of ten, fifteen, or twenty per cent. of abatement on their rental. There was no reduction of rent to the extent we have mentioned; but landowners and stewards, treating the depression as temporary, and relying, or pretending to rely, upon their Corn Law to ultimately force up prices to the act-of-Parliament rate, made these provisional abatements as matter of grace and favour. On many, perhaps on most estates tenants did not know until the rent day what per centage would be "thrown back," and were obliged to make all the exertions and sacrifices requisite to secure the whole rent. The moment prices got up, as in 1816-1817, and in 1839 and 1840, the per centages were withheld, and the full rents exacted.

Thus, in addition to the lingering habits of feudalism, which remain in all the relations of landlord and tenant, the farmer was in the position of a debtor, occasionally unable to satisfy an imperious and capricious creditor. This extinguished everything like independence in the great mass of the tenantry, who hung upon the lips of the steward and trembled at the nod of the landlord. Leases and secure tenures—the foundation of all agricultural improvements—became out of the question, for tenants would not venture on leases unless they could have had their rents largely and permanently reduced, while landlords always watched the grain markets with a view to clutch every shilling of rent for which an approach towards act-of-Parliament prices gave an excuse.

That such has been the condition of the great body of the English tenantry under the Corn Law will be admitted by all who have known anything of the rural districts; and the accuracy of our picture is fully borne out by the statements and admissions made by landlords and tenants at the recent Pro-Corn-Law meetings.

And this is the state of things in which tenant-farmers are asked to form "Central Protection Societies" to uphold the Corn Law! True, it is something new to see lords and landed grandees and squires ostentatiously professing to follow the lead of the tenant-farmers; and we by no means say that hereafter the tenant-farmers may assert some real share, some really potential voice, in the discussion of questions in which the interests of agriculturists are involved; but to treat the solemn farce which was performed at the Freemasons' Tavern, and in the Duke of Richmond's back parlour, as indicating any independent action on the part of the farmers is absolutely ludicrous. The farmers are merely made the stalking-horses behind which the landlords seek to maintain the monopoly they believe so essential to their own interests and their own power; and the only advantage likely to accrue to the farmers by the recent movement is the opportunity it affords them of learning the absolute silliness of the arguments by which their aristocratic "friends" strive to support their Corn Law.

THE RIPENING OF OPINION.

MR. BOSANQUET AND THE PROTECTIONISTS.

We said, from the first outbreak of landlord ignorance and Anti-League virulence in Essex, that nothing could more surely promote the objects of the Free Traders than the formation of Pro-Corn-Law Associations. The greatest practical difficulties with which the advocates of Free Trade had at one time to contend were the apathy and want of information amongst the tenant-farmers, and the absence of all tangible arguments in favour of the Corn Law on the part of the landed classes, by whose silent votes monopoly was maintained. Both these difficulties have been removed by the protection societies, for the farmers have been compelled to take an active share in the movement, while the quantity and quality of the assertions and would-be arguments which the squires have adduced in aid of their monopoly have disclosed before the whole world the utter weakness of their case. With this part of the subject we shall have plenty of opportunities to deal. But there has been another most beneficial effect of the Pro-Corn-Law movement. Amongst the owners of land there are many sensible and reflecting men who have doubted the policy of restrictive laws, but whose tone of mind or political associations and connections had made them unwilling to take any part in the great economical struggle of the day. Practically their influence was given to the monopolists, and by their silence and inaction they allowed their monopolist fellow-landowners to speak in all public affairs on their behalf. But the Pro-Corn-Law agitation has rendered such apparent neutrality—though real support of monopoly—no longer possible, as all the landowners are now urgently called upon to step forth and, by purse and in person, to take part in the effort to uphold a doomed monopoly.

The result has been that many sensible though quiet owners of land have been forced to declare their unwillingness to "march through Coventry" with such a band, and we shall day by day find the number of such reasonable men increasing. Thus, in Hertfordshire, where, under the guidance of Lords Salisbury and Essex, common sense has been perhaps more outraged than in most other districts, we find an application to Mr. G. J. Bosanquet, a landowner and magistrate of the county,—a gentleman with a large estate in land, and a Conservative in politics,—to become a member of the "Herts Agricultural Protection Society," has drawn from him an admirable letter in favour of free trade in corn, addressed to the secretary of the Protection Society, in which he says:—

"The step which has recently been taken by a number of gentlemen belonging to the agricultural interest in this county, in forming an association, and raising funds, for the purpose of protecting the cultivators of the soil against certain dangers with which they are supposed to be threatened, renders it necessary for every one who is in any way connected with land, but who may not be disposed to join this society, to state plainly and explicitly why he declines to do so."

And he adds:—

"I have long had my doubts as to the policy of a system of legislation, the effect of which is to give an artificial price to the first necessary of life, and thereby to interfere with the free course of industry; and although the complicated nature of the question, and the feeling that a great many very clever practical men entertained different views respecting it, may at times have induced me to mistrust my own opinions, the more I have reflected upon the subject, of late, the more confirmed those opinions have become, and the more convinced I am of their correctness."

Now, this is the language of a man who thinks before he acts, but who possibly, but for the stimulus offered by the protection movement, might not have acted at all. It is by influencing such men that we mainly rely for carrying this great question of Free Trade; it is the mind, the unprejudiced thinking portion of the educated classes of the community which must decide when the question shall be carried, for of its final and not very distant success the maddest monopolist can now scarcely doubt; and in acting upon that part of the public, and advancing its opinion in favour of Free Trade, we have valuable allies in protection societies. Hear what Mr. Bosanquet says as to the effect of Corn Laws on the farmers. After alluding to the embarrassments those laws occasion to trade and their tendency to destroy markets, he says:—

"I believe, also, that the benefits they confer upon the cultivators of the soil are very much overrated, and that they would, in many respects, be better without them; and I cannot but think it is a very short-sighted policy on the part of the members of the agricultural body to express their exclusive claims to protection so urgently, and to treat with contumacious arrogance portions of their fellow-countrymen, who are engaged in occupations which create an extensive demand for the productions of the soil. The loss of so numerous a body of consumers would be sincerely felt by them, and no amount of protection would keep up prices under such circumstances. Convinced as I am that the prosperity of the agricultural interest depends very materially on that of trade and manufactures, it appears to me to be the obvious policy of that body to give every encouragement to manufacturing skill and industry, instead of throwing obstacles in the way of it, in order that the great natural advantages which this country possesses over others may be turned to the best account; and our manufacturers enabled to compete successfully with the foreigner in the numerous markets which our extended commercial relations are every day opening to us."

Of the foreign competition fallacies, or fallacies, so industriously urged, he says:—

"With regard to the dangers to be apprehended from foreign competition in the article of native produce, I cannot but think they are much exaggerated, and not to be put in competition with the immense advantages which would be reaped from a more perfect freedom of trade. A more abundant and regular supply of corn would create an increased demand for that commodity, and thus prevent any great fall of prices. The best security the British farmer can have is his own industry, and the natural fertility of the soil he cultivates. If he would only trust to that—if he would turn his whole attention to the improvement of that inexhaustible fund of wealth, instead of leaning constantly on the staff of protection, which always appears to me to be slipping away from him just when he wants it most—he would soon learn that he was able to walk alone, and need not live, as he does now, in a state of perpetual apprehension, either of being knocked down by the foreigner, or of having this frail support weakened by some meddling on the part of Government."

Will not the farmers of Hertfordshire contrast these reasonable and moderate sentiments with the vague assertions and fierce vituperations of which the speeches of their lordly leaders at St. Alban's consisted?

That Mr. Bosanquet is one of those who, but for the Pro-Corn-Law movement, would have been quiescent, the following, his concluding, passage renders obvious:—

"It is with much regret that I am compelled to separate myself on this occasion from so many friends, for whom, personally, and for whose opinions I cannot but entertain feelings of the greatest possible respect. I only hope that the system of protection they are desirous of upholding may be less detrimental to the farmer than I fear it will ultimately prove to be, and that it may not have the effect of leaving him with plenty of corn in his barns, and plenty of fat cattle in his yards, but with few customers to buy either the one or the other."

If it were possible that the Pro-Corn-Law agitators could attain their object—which it is not—of inducing the British nation to submit much longer to a monopoly of food to keep up rents, the farmer's condition would be far less happy than is implied in the last passage of Mr. Bosanquet's letter; for, instead of "leaving him with plenty of corn in his barns, and plenty of fat cattle in his yards," but no customers; rents calculated at monopolist prices, and customers becoming yearly more impoverished, would, by means of the law of distress, and the aid of lawyers, land agents, and auctioneers, quickly transfer the corn and the fat cattle from the barns and yards of the farmer into the pocket of his landlord.

We may mention, also, that in Wiltshire that true-hearted nobleman, Lord Radnor, is weekly addressing the farmers of that county in the columns of the local papers in favour of Free Trade. Now, as his lordship is admitted on all hands to be one of the very best landlords in the county, and is entirely bound up in interest with the landed classes, the farmers will soon begin to compare his well-reasoned letters with the delusive rhodomontade of the monopolists.

Another fact occurring in the same county also speaks volumes. Mr. Arkell, a tenant-farmer, whose essay on draining obtained the £50 prize of the Royal Agricultural Society, is also weekly addressing his brother farmers on the question of Free Trade, and exposing the fallacies of the high-rent gentry.

THE PROSPECTS OF MONOPOLY.

If packed meetings of not very sagacious country gentlemen and their dependents, and lengthy reports in the Morning Post, could rally the failing monopoly of food, it might undoubtedly linger on for some little time longer, but the symptoms of approaching dissolution are becoming imminent. Our readers will have seen the signal defeat the Corn-Law men met with at the county meeting in Somersetshire; and at a Gloucestershire county meeting they did not venture to show fight. In fact, they dare not venture on a public meeting anywhere, and even in their own packed meetings they are careful to prevent anything like discussion. Now, for a party, which claims to advocate the interests and to express the wishes of the tenant-farmers and agricultural labourers of England, to be unable to show themselves at any open county meeting does bespeak egregious weakness or a bad object. That they feel themselves utterly unable to face an open meeting the following passages from the letter of a monopolist "freeholder," published in the Dorset County Chronicle, will show. He writes with some candour and much simplicity to explain the causes of the Free-Trade triumph at Bridgewater, and in so doing he says:—

"In the first place a great mistake was made in calling a public meeting at all, and I am given to understand such would not have been the case but for the part which Sir T. B. Lethbridge had already taken, rendering it imperative upon those who felt keenly on the subject to give their support at all hazards."

But, it seems, not only is it necessary to exclude the public to secure a successful Pro-Corn-Law meeting, but the farmers, for whose especial benefit this outcry is alleged to be made, must be marched to the meeting as if it were a county election, for the "freeholder" tells the monopolist public of Dorset—we suppose he does not imagine the Free-Traders read these revelations—that—

"The second mistake, yet more grievous than the first, consisted in the total absence of all system, method, or organization. The simple announcement, by advertisement in the different papers, was not sufficient notice to those more immediately interested. Farmers are too much given to pay attention to their own concerns to find time for the perusal of newspapers, and the consequence was, in many instances, an entire ignorance that a meeting was to take place at all, and in others what the precise object of the meeting really was."

In other words, unless whipped up to the mark by the landlords, the farmers treat the Pro-Corn-Law meetings with mighty indifference. Yet a good many farmers were confessedly present.

"Notwithstanding the disadvantages alluded to, though I have attended many public meetings of this county in Bridgewater and elsewhere, I have never before seen a more highly respectable and influential body of farmers than stood upon the Cornhill on Friday last."

Now, as the Free-Trade petition and resolutions were carried by ten to one, did it not occur to this "freeholder" that the "respectable and influential body of farmers" must have been either active or passive parties to the decision? Let us see how this worthy proposes to "rectify the mistake."

"The question now is, the best mode of rectifying the mistake which has been committed. Let any twelve influential gentlemen in this county, with such a man as Sir A. Hood at the head of them, call a meeting at any given place of the gentry, clergy, tenants, and freeholders who are favourable to Protection and desirous of upholding the existing Corn Laws, and I think such a call will be responded to in a manner worthy of the county and the cause."

Here is a full admission that the monopolists have no chance except in a packed meeting of those "favourable to the existing Corn Laws." We heartily wish the monopolists joy of their position; it is undoubtedly worthy of their "cause," and the arguments by which they seek to support it.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Our notices to correspondents must be deferred until next week.

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any person forwarding 3s. 3d. by Post-office order, to the Publisher, 67, Fleet-street, London, will have one quarter's copies of the LEAGUE forwarded by post on the days of publication. Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with J. Gadsby, Newall's-buildings, Manchester; and the LEAGUE may be had by order of any news-agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

We receive letters from different correspondents, containing complaints of irregularity in the delivery of the LEAGUE Newspaper. We can assure our friends in all parts of the country, that the utmost possible attention is paid to the transmission of the LEAGUE from this office; and whenever any of our Subscribers suffer disappointment from not receiving their copy in due course, the delay or non-delivery will almost invariably be found to arise from some irregularity in the Post-office; and we recommend in all such cases of disappointment, application to the Post-office at once.

GREAT LEAGUE MEETING.

The Weekly Meetings of the League will, in future, be held on the Wednesday in place of the Thursday Evenings as heretofore.

The next WEEKLY MEETING of the LEAGUE will take place in COVENT GARDEN THEATRE, on WEDNESDAY EVENING, March 6th.

The Hon CHARLES PELHAM VILLIERS, M.P., will take the Chair at Seven o'clock.

The meeting will be addressed by several Members of Parliament, and W. J. Fox, Esq.

Cards of admission may be had on personal application at the Central Office of the League, 67, Fleet-street, during Monday and Tuesday; no application by letter can be attended to.

The Entrance to the Dress Circle will, in future, be at the Private Box-door on the Queen's Side, in Hart Street.

The Cards of Registered Members only, will, as heretofore, admit to the Pit and Galleries of the Theatre.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, March 2, 1844.

Two circumstances occurred on Thursday, which are both very illustrative of the honesty of the pretence that any alteration of the Corn Laws must throw a large quantity of land out of cultivation. One is, the renewal of Lord Worsley's proposition for a General Enclosure Bill. The commons are yet, it seems, worth having. His lordship reckons the profitably-reclaimable land in England at nearly a million and a half of acres, and in Wales half a million more. In the county of Surrey alone there are said to be 60,000 acres, "that would amply repay the expense of cultivation." How this consists with "protection" being at the lowest possible point is a topic his lordship did not argue, nor did he advert to the ruinous effect of this competition with the land already in cultivation. The corn grown on these new soils will be duty-free, we presume; it will not be taxed as foreign corn; and the injury, if any, must, therefore, be pretty much the same to the cultivator of the old land as if these same acres were in France, and the produce imported for the cost of cultivation.

The other occurrence to which we alluded is the meeting of the Irish Waste Land Improvement Society, of which the Earl of Devon is chairman. We take the following summary of the report from the Times:—

"The report, which it is but justice to say was extremely clear and simple, was then read. Some of the advantages accruing to the society's tenants may be deduced from the following statement:—During the prevalence of the extreme distress mentioned in the Report of the Irish Poor-Law Commissioners, the 1800 persons located on the society's estates not only supported themselves, but effected considerable improvements on their holdings. None of them were necessitated to come harvesting to this country to make up their rents, and they made great progress in rotation crops, in the cultivation of green crops, in the collecting and saving of manure, in draining, liming, and gravelling, and in building cattle sheds, with a view to the introduction of house-feeding."

And, again:—

"In speaking of the future prospects as well of the society as of its tenantry, Colonel Robinson reports as follows:—

"I feel well assured that, if the landlords will let fair reclaimable waste lands on moderate terms, and be content to receive an increase of rent at fixed periods, in proportion to the society's progress, the capital required to be invested by the society would be small with respect to the number of acres to be reclaimed; and tenants, being admitted at very low rents for the first few years, to rise progressively afterwards, would find it their advantage to hold farms under the society, and by the rapid increase in the extent and value of their improvements and property, in combination with the more general improvements of the society, become gradually and certainly in a condition to pay, with ease to themselves, such rents for their lands as would ensure a good return to the society's investment, and a desirable augmentation of income to the head landlord."

These improvements are on a small scale, but the fact is plain that, not the law's protection, but the landlord's moderation, is the condition of success. These 1800 persons at once supported themselves. For that purpose "protection" is no help. It is a drawback. And yet they at once surmount the difficulty, and realize a surplus. There is nothing in the way of the prosperity of farmers and labourers but the exaction of landlords and the impoverishment of customers. We go no further, at present, into the merits of either the Irish Society, or Lord Worsley's Bill, than to point out this plain bearing upon the question before the public. It disposes of the rhodomontade about making the kingdom a wilderness; and it shows that, to a large extent, the landlords are conscious of the fallacy by which they would cajole the public.

REVIEW.

A Memoir of the Life and Writings of the late William Taylor, of Norwich. By J. W. Robberds, Esq., F.G.S. London, Murray.

William Taylor, of Norwich, possessed great influence in the literary world during the course of his long life, but his writings having principally appeared in periodicals, posterity will probably remain ignorant of the amount of his services, and perhaps wonder at the frequent mention of his name in connexion with the master-spirits of his age. He was the first to introduce the modern literature and philosophy of Germany to the English public. It is to his example that reviewing has taken so high a stand in authorship, and that such essays as those of Macaulay, Southey, Jeffrey, and Milman have taken the place of the dry abstracts and hesitating criticism which characterized the magazines and reviews of the last century. Living on a moderate income in a provincial town, surrounded by a select circle of friends, ardently devoted to study, and constitutionally indisposed to the excitement and turmoil of political controversy, William Taylor's even tenor of life affords few incidents on which a biographer can dwell. He was one of whom it could emphatically be said, "the man must be sought in his works;" and though these works are like the Sibylline leaves, dispersed abroad in long and cumbrous series of periodicals, like these same leaves, they are worthy of being gathered, not only as illustrations of the past, but as guides to the future.

Passing over the continental education of William Taylor, which brought him acquainted with those great productions of Germany which he subsequently expounded to his countrymen, we find him in 1788 recognised as an eminent linguist and profound scholar by so eminent a judge of mental power and cultivated faculties as the late Sir James Mackintosh. Writing at this period to a friend, he says:—

"I can still trace William Taylor by his Armenian dress, gliding through the crowd, in Annual Reviews, Monthly Magazines, Athenaeums, &c., rousing the stupid public by paradox, or correcting it by useful or reasonable truth. It is true that he does not speak the Armenian, or any other language but the Taylorian; but I am so fond of his vigour and originality, that for his sake I have studied and learned his language. The Hebrew is studied for one book, so is the Taylorian by me for one author. He never deigns to write to me but in print. I doubt whether he has many readers who so much understand, relish, and tolerate him, for which he ought to reward me by some of his manuscript esoterics."

The circumstances of England at this period were such as to produce a marked effect on an ingenuous and powerful mind, which was equally raised by natural endowments and varied acquirements above all the motives which induce men to sacrifice principle to party.

"In this year the centenary of the Revolution was celebrated throughout England with an unusually fervid enthusiasm. It occurred at a period when the public mind was sensitively excited by the great changes which had recently been effected in France, and which were regarded as the commencement of a new and happier era, not only for the people of that country, but for the whole human race. The horrible events, which afterwards converted these anticipations into alarm and despair, existed then only in the prophetic sagacity of scheming statesmen, who knew how to accomplish their own predictions and make the consequent dependency of generous minds a temporary bar to the progress of popular rights. It has since been fashionable to sneer at the philanthropy which conceived and exulted over the glowing visions of those days; but the lapse of half a century has somewhat calmed the passions, which in their brief hour of overbearing triumph could turn into ridicule some of the best feelings of human nature. The hopes thus contemptuously derided have been more coolly judged; the efforts thus contumeliously denounced have been more justly appreciated. Most of the immediate objects for which those benevolent spirits then struggled in vain, have been sanctioned by the growing intelligence of the age, and achieved by the irresistible potency of the national will. It cannot then be unreasonable to assume, that their higher views of social improvement, which have been scouted as chimerical, may be also attained by pursuing that system of general education and that course of impartial government for which they contended."

This promising aspect of affairs soon changed; a cry of alarm was raised through the land; war was declared against France, and a still fiercer war against what were called French principles—the excesses of the Jacobins, whom the terror created by the declarations of the allies had invested with political power; so that in fact the apology made for the war was taken from the atrocities which the war itself had occasioned. Taylor was not duped by this pretext; in the very midst of the fever which Burke's "Strictures on the French Revolution" produced, he addressed the following sonnet to Mackintosh, in acknowledgment of a presentation copy of the "Vindiciæ Gallicæ":—

"Brave youth, thou, foremost of the patriot throng,
Kneel yet awhile, and scoop with deeper shell,
And boldly quaff, and bathe thy glowing tongue,
In the pure spring-head of my hallow'd well.
While yet conceal'd the mouldering trunks among,
Where Error steeps in mist her twilight cell,
And Superstition's reptiles crawl along—
But for the chosen few its waters swell.
My name is Truth—soon the blast roars amain,
Fires, lightning-kindled, the tall oaks emblaze,
Avenging thunders crash, while Freedom's fane
Arises radiant from the smoking plain.
Huge columns thou must rear—thy future days
A nation's thanks await—the Sage's praise."

The Abbé Barruel was one of the most unscrupulous alarmists of that age of senseless terror in some, but of dishonestly-affected alarm in a great many more. This voluminous pamphleteer, in his "Memoirs on Jacobinism," announced that he had discovered an atrocious and extensive conspiracy against the thrones and altars of Europe, and he included among the plotters the harmless sects of the Illuminati and the Swedenborgians. To this charge William Taylor made the following conclusive answer:—

"There are in most countries, which allow any toleration, two diametrically opposite classes of sects. The one of these tends to more religiousness than is established by law; affects greater industry of observance, and greater scrupulosity of conscience, than fall to the average share of other men; and willingly lengthens its creed by hyperbolical articles of belief, and willingly amuses its leisure by supererogatory rites of devotion,—a class, which with respect to morals is puritanic, with respect to rites is superstitious, and in regard to doctrines is credulous. The other and freer class tends to less religion than is claimed by the magistrate; it affects a negligence of observance which avoids the temple, and a robustness of conscience which despises peccadillos; it is continually narrowing its creed towards an almost hair's-breadth tenacity, and curtailing its worship of some (as they deem it) superannuated holiday; comparatively speaking, in morals it is libertine; in ritual, lax; in doctrine, sceptical. To the former of these descriptions of sects some have referred the Swedenborgians, and to the latter the Illuminés. Sects so different are naturally hostile, and ill adapted to coalesce and co-operate. When the Puritans had rebelled against Charles the First of England, his cause was soon espoused by all the libertine sects; and of late, when the libertine sects had in general declared for the French Revolution, they soon repelled and drove into the arms of Government the faithful zeal of the Methodists and of the vital Christians. The religious instincts operate in Germany as here. Go among the Puritan sects,—they are alarmed at the dissoluteness of the age, and the growth of infidelity; they seem to expect that the world itself will shortly be consumed with its present inheritors. Go among the libertine sects,—they are alarmed at the prolific breed of fanatical extravagance; they quake at the threatened intolerance of sour asceticism; and they seem to expect the barbarous docility of new Attilas to the designing Leos of triumphant superstition. To confound these antagonistic forces is not the part of judgment, and to describe them as conspiring is to err against probability."

"After quoting some other instances of mistranslation, the charge of conspiracy elicited the following ingenious argument:—'An analogous though hostile body-spirit (esprit de corps) has, in all Catholic countries at least, distinguished the philosophers and the jesuits—there the rival leaders of heretical and orthodox literature. To the natural operation of this spirit the Abbé Barruel gives the name of conspiracy. In his sense of the word, Popery was established in England by a conspiracy of Christians, in France by a conspiracy of Non-Christians, and Christianity itself was founded by a conspiracy of apostles and presbyters. The institution of Christianity and the abolition of Popery have, nevertheless, been eventually useful to mankind. Body-spirit is no doubt an equivocal virtue, yet no sect has ever thriven without it. It is an extension of the principle of fidelity in friendship to a more numerous description of friends. As we applaud the man, who with some sacrifice of impartiality defends the character of his friend when attacked, or rescues him from the weight of impending poverty at an expense which he would not bestow on the equal distress of some more useful man, of some celebrated poet or philosopher, personally unknown,—ought we harshly to blame him, who, in proportion to the importance which he attaches to the views of his sect or party, becomes the general panegyrist of its friends and the general antagonist of its foes? English philosophers, as Mr. Burke very justly observed, have never been gregarious. They have consequently never been efficient. They have fallen singly, by the pin-stabs of old women, unaided. Body-spirit often arises from a benevolent sense of the importance of a cause: but it has still oftener been founded by the chieftains of sects on the vindictive passions of human nature. Is has most usually and most powerfully been excited by ascribing it in a high degree to the adversary, which never fails to beget a counter-spirit of retaliation. This game is now playing with considerable success by the anti-jacobins of England, who are endeavouring to give a paper currency to the once startling doctrines of passive obedience to the church and divine authority of the King; they seem to deem public opinion the creature of mechanical agency; and they impute conspiracy against the public constitution and religion to every admirer of Dr. Adam Smith and Mr. Gibbon."

A great portion of these volumes is occupied by the correspondence between William Taylor and Robert Southey, the late poet-laureate, and Quarterly Reviewer. The correspondence began before Southey had become renegade to his early principles, and produced "Visions of Judgment" to do as much mischief as his "Sapphics Dactylics" and "Wat Tylers." These letters show the point of weakness in Southey's character: his inordinate vanity required to be fed with the belief that he was a leader in every movement which he pleased to join; and when he found that the general public would not receive his interminable epics, he went over to the smaller but less scrupulous party, ever ready to gain the support both of the vain and the venal. But though all the world perceived that Southey had abandoned the principles of his youth, the poet-laureate seems never to have made the discovery himself: to the last he regarded himself as perfectly consistent, and he armed himself with a panoply of abstractions, by which he trusted to reconcile the most opposite and contradictory opinions. He joined in lamenting the Shearshes and other United Irishmen as martyrs, and he opposed the concession of any privileges to the Irish people. Taylor bore with all his friend's vacillations, but never abstained from protesting against his new opinions. He sometimes pointed out to him subjects for composition, and suggested hints for their treatment which it would be well for the fame of Southey if he had followed.

"The History of Portugal is a neat subject; it involves the commercial education of modern nations, as that of the Medicean dynasty does their literary education. The colonial system, and all that constitutes the exterior policy of Great Britain, is but a refinement of Portuguese undertakings, just as all the modern schools of poetry and art have run for models to Florence and to Rome. The relation which each country bears to the progress of universal civilization constitutes the cause and measure of its interest in universal history. To bring out in local history the facts and men and sweeps of event and general tendencies which influence the whole, constitutes the grand art of the historian. Individuals are not estimated by their positive but by their relative value; and we inquire much and long only about those who, like the seons in the pteroma, not only once partook but still influence the condition of humanity."

In the year 1801 Taylor wrote to Southey, announcing what he believed to be the course of policy about to be adopted by the English Government towards Ireland. The bigoted obstinacy of George III. prevented Mr. Pitt from adopting the course which Taylor anticipated; but no one can now read the passage without regretting that such an announcement was premature by more than a quarter of a century.

"The King's speech on Tuesday is to announce the abolition of the Test and Corporation Acts, and Popish Penal Laws. I grudge to Pitt the honour and popularity of so wise an innovation. By not acceding earlier to the repeal, he has needlessly occasioned a rebellion in Ireland, and murdered in civil war half a million of the people. It is comforting to find that at length philosophy subdues folly, and that, after kicking against her arguments eight or ten years, and sacrificing, to resist her, the lives and fortunes of millions, the doughtiest champions of superstition and slavery, the loudest clamourers for anti-jacobin torism, truckle to her will and execute her decrees."

Taylor visited France on the peace of Amiens, and his picture of society in Paris, when in its transition state from republicanism and infidelity to a new alliance between church and state, is valuable, not only as a graphic sketch of the crisis, but as a historical picture of a period which had no parallel in the annals of the human race.

"The French write in huge letters on those buildings, confiscated to the profit of the nation, LIBERTE, EGALITE, and other such words. It is curious that on the pavilion where Bonaparte resides should occur the word Equality, and where his guard and soldiers sleep the word Liberty. He governs wisely, I believe; but people are so much afraid to comment on his government, that Paris is quite another Venice. The allegiance of the army is very equivocal: a lieutenant was arrested while I was there for undertaking to shoot Bonaparte on the parade, and a general for undertaking to raise the troops in case of the assassination. A whole regiment was ordered to San Domingo for refusing to accept consecrated colours at the hands of the Chief Consul. The army is very anti-christian: sacrilegious songs are sung at camp, the Guerre des Dieux anciens et modernes is read there, and the late restoration of the old religion is unwelcome to the military. That was again an important moment during my stay, to see, not the resurrection of Christ merely, but of Christianity itself, celebrated in the very temple where the goddess of Reason had occupied the altar of the east-out Mary, and profaned the carpetings of holy tapestry for which Le Brun and Le Sueur had taken the designs from the Acts of the Apostles and the biographies of Jesus. The procession was not in good taste: military music, soldiers on foot, hack-coaches full of common-councilmen, military music, soldiers again and again, coaches full of legislators, military music, soldiers on horse-back, some Catholic ambassadors, Bonaparte and his wife, and other carriages of the family and of the consuls, and again military music and soldiery; soldiers lined the bridges and the quays, and you would have taken the whole show for people setting off for a review. I wanted to have seen the goddess of Reason tearing her robe of sackcloth and powdering her tresses with ashes, and carrying a penitential taper before a moving train of Magdalenes; and fathers of families leading their grown-up children to the altar to receive, now for the first time, both at once the long-interrupted sacraments of baptism and confirmation, while hoary bishops were calling down, with folded hands and wet eyes, the forgiveness and benediction of Heaven, and young acolytes were sweetening with incense the warm over-breathings of thronging devotion: but neither the people, nor the priests, nor the soldiers, seemed to be up or down to the occasion. Religion, however, is become the order of the day: the Jew lumberers exhibit at their windows the old-high candlesticks, purchased of the church-robbers, with the pikes; pious women buy these candlesticks and present them again to the church: crucifixes sell, and crosslets glitter on the necks of the ladies. The Esprit de Geron and other books of casuistry undergo new editions; the book-stalls are covered with what we should call tabernacle-classics: Chateaubriand's Genie du Christianisme is become the ten book: to write on religion is the task of hack book-makers; the very farce-writers of the Boulevards turn their quills to Entretiens de l'ame fidelle avec Dieu. Popery is returning with all its trumpery; indulgences are posted up in the churches, and the paltriest twopenny-half-penny woodcuts of Christ or the Virgin are wafered against the walls as the pious gifts of the Widow So-and-so to this church (I am describing what I saw at Montmartre for instance): even convents are re-occupied, as at Bruges that of English nuns. Protestantism seems to be becoming a genteeler religion than the Catholic, and evidently feels strengthened by the Concordat; at Arles and at Cuen two large congregations have originated almost spontaneously. The philosophes are all tongue-tied; under the name of professors, conservators, lecturers, &c., every writer and writerling of name has a salary from the Government and instructs the people. It is a Chinese constitution: merit, talent, are sought and lifted, but it is from within by the higher mandarins, not from without by the people: in both countries the atheistic sect occupies the mandarinship."

When Malthus's work on Population appeared, Taylor wrote a review of it, in which he forcibly combated the opinion that agriculture is more profitable to a state than commerce.

"Agriculture is an ephemeral, a dependent source of prosperity: a Babylon can grow up in a Mesopotamia of shepherds before the plough is invented, but husbandry cannot dispose of any surplus produce until industry have first built her cities of commerce and manufacture and provided the consumer with an income to offer at market. Our author is historically as well as theoretically mistaken in proclaiming agriculture to be a more permanent source of prosperity than commerce. . . . Agriculture has every where been the consequence of a contiguous market resulting from commercial industry. Manufactures precede husbandry. The oldest countries are the best cultivated. Norfolk, where the worsted manufactures began, has little waste-land, poor as its soil is. Lancashire, where the cotton-manufactures are recent, has comparatively little enclosure. The peat-bogs of Ireland will not be improved until the rise of large towns shall furnish to the farmer such customers as may replace to him the expense necessary for rendering them productive."

In a review of "Royou's History of the Lower Empire," we find the following remarks, which are peculiarly valuable at a time when hierarchical pretensions have been put forward in greater strength than at any period since the days of Gregory, Innocent, and Boniface:—

"The great lesson which the reigns of the Byzantine princes are adapted to teach and to enforce, is the importance of a total abstinence in the magistrate from theological interference and dogmatism. Let him strictly respect the political equality of religious sects, and not unlock the gates of advancement to the select or the alternate favourites of controversy. Whatever implies in the magistrate an opinion ought to be shunned as a badge of partiality and a harbinger of injustice. For want of this precaution the Constantinopolitan crown became the football of patriarchs and priests, and was tossed to new dynasties and upstarts, not for the imperial virtues of military excellence or legislative wisdom, but for preaching to seditious attroopments about the fractions of the Trinity, or heading the statueries in riots of the iconoclasts. The emperors who lent an ear to the alarms and apprehensions of their clergy became eventually the puppets of their patriarchs, and sullied their hands in the innocent blood of the zealous but ignorant pupils of fanaticism. Their empire weakened by division, their away reviled by the persecuted with hereditary obstinacy of discontent, the intolerant sovereigns have all descended with unfavourable tinges to posterity, and miss their natural chance for a lenient civility of estimate. A real feebleness of mind is, however, implied in the magistrate's anxiety about symbolic formulas; so true is the observation of an historian of our own times,—religiosa dissidia nix unquam nisi sub imbecilli imperio floruisse deprehendit."

We have been too much pleased with the suggestions in his "Review of the Reports of the Society for Bettering the Condition of the Poor," to withhold them from our readers. He proposed:—

"To station among them a class of teachers, who might receive from some metropolitan society, and promulgate in their halls of meeting, information favourable to the physical and economical amelioration of the families of the poor. It is desirable for every little cluster of villages to possess a man who sets the example of the domestic virtues and of skill in the household arts of life; who dispenses willingly instruction to the unlearned; whose heart renders him an acquaintance of the poor, and whose head of the rich; who delights in the discovery of obscure merit, and in ensuring its natural reward; a scatterer of those better aims of counsel and recommendation, which help not for the moment only, but for life; a mediator of benevolence, a confidant of remorse, a healer of human ills, a consoler of adversity, an angel of hope even to the dying. To teach the art of living wisely, as far as respects this world, is probably more within the competence of the established than of the methodist clergy; but it is perhaps to country surgeons that one ought preferably to look. Men of accomplished medical educations cannot at present afford to settle in the country; they could not repay themselves the capital vested in their qualifications. Of course the health of the people suffers from the ignorance of rural practitioners. If a salary, with the annexed condition of promulgating useful information with regular publicity, were allowed by Government to country surgeons,—to one, suppose, in every hundred,—the expense of an accomplished education with a view to country residence might safely be incurred. The loss of health from ignorance is very considerable, especially in the poorer classes; and there would be no injustice in levying a slight per centage on the title in behalf of a class of public instructors, a sort of medical establishment, who would assist the clergy in a branch of teaching for which their education does not adapt them."

We must make room for two noble passages, describing the importance of commerce. The first is from a description of the growing prosperity of the Prince of Wales's Island.

"The real lamp of Aladdin is that on the merchant's desk. All the genies, white, olive, or black, who people the atmosphere of earth, it puts in motion at the antipodes. It builds palaces in the wilderness and cities in the forest, and collects every splendour and every refinement of luxury from the fingers of subservient toil. Kings of the east are slaves of the lamp; the winds blow and the seas roll only to work the behest of its owner."

The second is from a description of the attempt to form a settlement on the island of Bulama, on the coast of Africa.

"What remains for national consideration is, the expediency of reviving a disposition to form settlements in Africa. This is the only quarter of the world in which British language and British commerce have struck no root: to which the advantage of our laws, the benefit of our protection, the civilizing influence of our manners, our intercourse, and our literature have not been extended. It is the bed of a soil which we have not attempted to cultivate; the atmosphere of a climate which we have not endeavoured to purify; the home of a barbarism which we have not sought to dissipate; the seat of a slavery which we have not taken steps to abolish. Let us try. The solid pyramids of African antiquity attest the possibility of labour in vain; let the hollow warehouses of modern industry demonstrate the possibility of labour to advantage. The first roads will only be accessible to the keel; but the next to the camel and the elephant; to fleets will succeed caravans; to a coasting trade, internal traffic."

Some of the hints in the following brief passage are worthy the consideration of "one-ideaed" reformers.

"It is mortifying to see these would-be reformers behaving like bishops at a council,—intolerant to every aberration from their own confined creed; and while they are complaining of the exclusive spirit of the state, themselves getting up an interior ostracism to defraud principle of its confessors and the poor of their advocates."

We have selected from the rich stores of Taylor's writings those passages which best illustrate the depth of his philosophy and the strength of his philanthropy; those who wish to know more of him as an author and as a man should obtain Mr. Robberds's volumes. They are equally creditable to the author and the subject; the biographer writes to the heart, because he writes from the heart, and he wins esteem for himself by the proofs he affords of his own power of appreciating the beauty of truth in conception and power in expression.

Morality is the most powerful means of the production of wealth.

The precept of doing as we would be done by involves the least practical repression of the powers of exertion in man.

Energetic usefulness is a debt to society, a test of sincerity, a passport to reward.—W. J. Fox.

Liberty is the bread which nations ought to earn by the sweat of their brow.—De la Mennais.

THE FUNDS.

| | Sat. Feb. 24 | Mon. Feb. 25 | Tues. Feb. 27 | Wed. Feb. 28 | Thurs. Feb. 29 | Fri. Mar. 1 |
|----------------------|--------------|--------------|---------------|--------------|----------------|-------------|
| Bank Stock | 195½ | 195½ | 195½ | 195½ | 195½ | 195½ |
| 3 per Ct. Red. Ann | 98 | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ |
| 3 per Ct. Con. Ann | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ |
| 3 per Ct. Red. Ann | 101½ | 101½ | 101½ | 101½ | 101½ | 101½ |
| 3 per Ct. Ann. new | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ |
| Long An. Ex. 1860 | 12½ | 12½ | 12½ | 12½ | 12½ | 12½ |
| Cons. for Acc. | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ |
| Ex. Bille | 69 pm. | 69 pm. | 69 pm. | 69 pm. | 69 pm. | 70 pm. |
| Ind. Bds. und. 10000 | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| India Stock | 106 | 106½ | 106 | 106½ | 106½ | 106½ |
| Belgian | 106 | 106½ | 106 | 106½ | 106½ | 106½ |
| Chilian | 79 | 79½ | 79½ | 79½ | 79½ | 79½ |
| Colomb. ex. Venes. | 131 | 131½ | 131 | 131½ | 131½ | 131½ |
| Danish | 89 | 89½ | 89 | 89½ | 89½ | 89½ |
| Dutch 5 per Cent. | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ |
| Dutch 2½ per Ct. | 53½ | 53½ | 53½ | 53½ | 53½ | 53½ |
| Mexican, 1837 | 31½ | 31½ | 31½ | 31½ | 31½ | 31½ |
| Portuguese, conv. | 46½ | 46½ | 46½ | 46½ | 46½ | 46½ |
| Buenos Ayres | 34 | 34½ | 34 | 34½ | 34½ | 34½ |
| Spanish 5 per Ct. | 23½ | 23½ | 23½ | 23½ | 23½ | 23½ |
| Ho. 5 per Ct. | 33½ | 33½ | 33½ | 33½ | 33½ | 33½ |
| Peruvian | 31 | 30½ | 29½ | 30½ | 30½ | 30½ |

MARKETS.

CORN MARKET.

MARK-LANE, Monday, Feb. 26. — The supply of English Wheat this morning was very short, and last week's prices were readily obtained. The demand for Foreign was slow, at last week's rates. There was a good supply of Barley, and all, except the finest samples for malting, were 1s. cheaper. No alteration in Beans and Peas. The arrivals of English, Scotch, and Irish Oats, though not very large, were more than equal to the demand. The sale was slow at a decline of 6d. from this day week.

B. H. LUGAN and Son.

Account of CORN, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 18th to the 24th of Feb. 1844, both days inclusive.

| | Wheat. | Barley. | Oats. | Beans. | Peas. |
|---------|--------|---------|-------|--------|-------|
| English | 3214 | 2941 | 4491 | 1871 | 903 |
| Scotch | — | 2996 | 3400 | — | — |
| Irish | — | 779 | 17763 | — | — |
| Foreign | 600 | — | — | — | 310 |

Flour, 7247 sacks. Malt, 6783 qrs.

Wheat, English, Red New... 45s to 55s
Do, do, Old... 45s to 55s
New, do, White... 45s to 55s
Old, do, do... 45s to 55s
Dantz... 45s to 55s
Baltic... 45s to 55s
Barley, Malt... 45s to 55s
Distilling... 45s to 55s
Grinding... 45s to 55s
Beans, Tick... 45s to 55s
Harrow... 45s to 55s
Pigeon... 45s to 55s
Old Harrow... 45s to 55s
Peas, White... 45s to 55s
Do, Bolders... 45s to 55s
Grey... 45s to 55s

MARK-LANE, Friday, March 1.—The supplies of Wheat, Oats, and Barley since Monday are moderate. The trade in all grain is exceedingly dull, and the little business doing is at Monday's prices. There was no alteration in the duties yesterday.

Account of Corn, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 16th of Feb. to the 23rd of Feb., both inclusive.

| | English. | Irish. | Foreign. |
|-------------|----------|--------|----------|
| Wheat..... | 2870 | — | 1850 |
| Barley..... | 5980 | — | 830 |
| Oats..... | 2870 | 7710 | — |

A WEEKLY REPORT of the NUMBER of QUARTERS, and the AVERAGE PRICE of CORN and GRAIN, sold in the several Counties of England and Wales (comprising the Two Hundred and Ninety Towns named in the Act of the 5th Vic., cap. 14), which governs Duty.

WEEK ENDED FEBRUARY 27, 1844.

| | WHEAT. | BARLEY. | OATS. | BEANS. |
|----------------------|--------------|-------------|-------------|-------------|
| | Qrs. sold. | Qrs. sold. | Qrs. sold. | Qrs. sold. |
| Weekly Averages.. | 110,070 55 1 | 99,037 33 7 | 52,632 19 7 | 13,815 30 4 |
| Aggregate Averages.. | 52 11 | 35 5 | 19 2 | 29 11 |
| Duty..... | 18 0 | 5 0 | 7 0 | 11 6 |

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 27.

BANKRUPTS.

C. B. DAYLEY, Abingdon, Berks, draper. [Ashurst, Champsade.
T. HODSDON, Harrow, Middlesex, butcher. [Poole and Gam-len, Gray's-inn-square.
W. H. CHAPLIN, Inworth, Essex, bricklayer. [Bell, Bedford-row; Mayhew, Coggeshall, Essex.
W. SCOTT, Regent street, wine merchant. [Clark, George-street, Manly-house.
T. GREENING, Worcester, surgeon. [Robinson, Bromsgrove.
T. GRIFFITHS, Stoke-upon-Trent, Staffordshire, draper. [Middleton, Stone; Hodgson, Birmingham.
G. COPAGE, Wolverhampton, victualler. [Phillips and Bolton, Wolverhampton.
R. PADDON, Hartlepool, Durham, chemist. [Wilson, Hartlepool; Meggison and Co., King's-road, Bedford row.
E. BRASS, Taunton, Somersetshire, grocer. [Trenchard, Taunton; Terrell, Exeter; Whitaker, Lincoln's-inn-fields.
J. GOSB, Devonport, draper. [Crosby and Compton, Church-court, Old Jewry.

DIVIDENDS.

March 21. J. Furze, Panmure, Devonshire, victualler—March 21.
J. R. Beer and H. Bantick, St. Thomas the Apostle, Devonshire, coal merchants—March 21. T. Trapp and T. P. Trapp, Church-street, Southwark, tallow chandlers—March 19.
W. Mays, Brigstock, Northamptonshire, feltmonger—March 19.
W. Tomlinson, Green-lanes, Stoke Newington, tavern keeper—
March 19. J. R. Hitchcock, New Sarum, Wilts, hosier—March 19.
W. Howarth, Swaffham, Norfolk, wine merchant—March 19.
J. Bates, Three Colt-street, Limehouse, grocer—March 20.
J. L. Fernandez, Wakefield, Yorkshire, corn merchant—March 20.
J. R. Potter, J. Potter, and J. Potter, Manchester, cotton spinners—March 21. E. B. Bayley, Pendleton, Lancashire, stuff printer—March 20. H. Denzlie, Bridport, Dorset, grocer—
March 20. H. Thompson, Liverpool, merchant—March 20. J.
Cowherd, Huggill, Westmoreland, miller—March 20. J. Heslop, Morpeth, Northumberland, grocer.

CERTIFICATES.

March 19. S. H. Angier, Philpot-lane, bookseller—March 21.
E. Brain, Rodney-street, Pentonville, copper plate printer—
March 21. H. Steinger and J. Steinger, Cateaton-street, ware-housemen—March 19. R. Evershed, Purborough, Sussex, timber merchant—March 22. T. Digby, Lower Clapton—March 26.
G. Barnes, Portsea, luncheon—March 19. Jenkins, Symond-street, Chelsea, cowkeeper—March 21. W. Hubbard, South Shields, pawnbroker.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.

J. M'ARTHUR, Linlithgow-bridge, Linlithgowshire, blacksmith—A. WILSON, Paisley, grocer—J. CAMPBELL, Edinburgh, baker—J. M'LEOD and CO., Edinburgh, linen-draper.

RAMS FOR RAISING WATER without Labour.
where a fall can be obtained—Deep Well Engines—Pumps of every description—Buildings heated by hot water, &c. Every description of Fountains erected by F. ROE, 70, STRAND, Ornamental and House Engineer.

IN a Select ESTABLISHMENT for Young Ladies, situated in a healthy part a short distance from Town, there are VACANCIES for ONE or TWO PUPILS, on moderate terms. Masters of eminence attend the School, and the Pupils receive, as far as possible, the comforts of home combined with the discipline of School. A vacancy occurs for a Half-Boarder.—Letters, free, to J. H., care of Mr. Wickham, League Office, 68, Champsade.

CARPETS.—Persons desirous of purchasing
BRUSSELS CARPETS, of the best quality, will find a splendid selection at the Establishment of W. CUMMING and CO., 98, Hatton-garden. Being warehousemen, and very extensive buyers, they have determined to charge a single carpet at the wholesale price. A large stock of Kidderminster, Venetian, and other Carpets. Agents for the new domestic luxury, "The American Rocking Chair."
W. CUMMING and CO., 98, Hatton-garden.

TO MANUFACTURERS.—The Advertiser, who has for several years been engaged in the Commission Trade, doing business with the Wholesale and Shipping Houses in London, principally in the Silk, Silk Handkerchief, Printed Dress, and Shawl departments, is desirous to ENTER into an ENGAGEMENT with a Manufacturing House, either on Commission or at a Fixed Salary. Please address A. B., care of Messrs. Palmer and Son, 18, Paternoster-row.

FOR all Disorders of the Stomach, STIRLING'S PILLS are particularly adapted, being prepared with the sulphate of quinine, extract of camomile flowers, and the most choice stomachic and aperient drugs of the Materia Medica. These Pills were patronised by the late Sir W. Blizard, and many other eminent medical men, who knew their composition, and strongly recommended them, not only for their general efficacy in cases of sudden illness, but likewise for their invaluable properties in all stomach and liver complaints, and for persons of a plethoric habit, subject to drowsiness, dimness of sight, loss of memory, giddiness, &c., and as a preventive of apoplexy, paralysis, &c. Children and persons of all ages may take them at any time, as they do not contain mercury, nor any ingredient that requires confinement or restriction of diet. Many healthy aged individuals, some of them upwards of seventy and eighty years of age, take them two or three times a week, by which they remove the causes that produce disease, and keep off the infirmities of age, retaining, in a surprising degree, the energy, vivacity, and cheerfulness of their youthful days.—Prepared only by Stirling, Pharmaceutical Chemist, 84, Whitechapel. Sold in boxes at 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each. Ask for Stirling's Stomach Pills, and be sure the name is engraved on the stamp.

Just Published, No. 3 of the ANTI-MONOPOLIST, Religious and Political.
Price 3d., stamped.
London: G. and T. Dyer, 24, Paternoster-row; Newcastle-on-Tyne, F.
Sanderson, 15, Collingwood-street.
P.S. On sending three postage stamps to F. Sanderson, it will be forwarded to any part of the United Kingdom.

Now ready,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW, No. 80, for MARCH.

- CONTENTS:—
1. Shakespearean Criticism and Acting—Macbeth.
2. Progress of Art.
3. Knight's Ecclesiastical Architecture of Italy.
4. Stratford.
5. The Land Tax.
6. Niebuhr and the Classical Museum.
7. Etruscan Monuments.
8. British Embassy to Shoa.
9. Promotion of Architecture (with Illustrations).
10. Earl Spencer and the State of Parties.

Postscript—Van Sanden—The Corporation of London—The
New Duty on Coal, &c.
Samuel Clarke, 13, Pall Mall East.

TO BRITISH ADVERTISERS.—
The Proprietors of "WILLMER and SMITH'S EUROPEAN TIMES" beg to solicit your advertising patronage. Their "European TIMES," which has now obtained by far the largest circulation in the United States, Canada, Nova Scotia, the West Indies, and South America, of any Newspaper published in England, affords decidedly the best medium for British Advertisements.

It circulates most extensively in the following places:—
Antigua. Grenada. Port Phillip.
Anguilla. Guadeloupe. Prince Edward's Island.
Albany. Halifax, N.S. Porto Rico.
Baltimore. Hong Kong. Puerto Cabello.
Barbadoes. Honduras. Pernambuco.
Bermuda. Kingston, Canada. Quebec.
Barbuda. Kingston, Jamaica. Rio de Janeiro.
Berbice. London, Canada. Savannah.
Buenos Ayres. Lima. Sydney.
Bibla. Montreal. Salem, Mass.
Boston. Malta. St. John's, N.B.
Batavia. Madras. St. John, Newfoundland.
Bombay. Manila. St. Thomas.
Calcutta. Mauritius. St. Vincent.
Charleston. Martinique. St. Lucia.
Canton. Montserrat. St. Kitts.
Cape Breton. Maranham. St. Domingo.
Cape of Good Hope. Mexico. Santa Martha.
Ceylon. Macao. Singapore.
Carthage. Nassau, N.P. Trinidad.
Cuba. New Orleans. Tobago.
Chagres. New York. Tampico.
Demerara. Philadelphia. Valparaiso.
Dunkirk. Washington.
Gibraltar.

And to all the principal News Rooms and Club Houses in England,
Ireland, and Scotland.
"WILLMER and SMITH'S European Times" is prepared and published expressly for transmission by all the steam-ships leaving England for the above parts of the eastern and western world.
WILLMER and SMITH, Liverpool.

MR. BEARD'S DAGUERRETYPE, or PHO-TOGRAPHIC PORTRAITS.—These invaluable and much-admired Portraits, in which further improvements have lately been effected, are taken by the Patented, at 85, King William-street, City; 34, Parliament-street; and at the Royal Polytechnic Institution, 209, Regent-street. By whom, also, Licenses are granted for exercising the invention in provincial towns and districts.

CHINESE COLLECTION and GRAND DISTRI-
BUTION (admission free), value £5000, on the principle of the Art-
Union, in prizes, consisting of Chinese curiosities and Parisian novelties, on April 8, at the Chinese and Parisian Magazine, 7, Old Jewry. Every subscriber will obtain a handsome prize, consisting of Chinese jars, pictures, &c., or a splendid package of French ingenuity and taste. This division will take place under the highest patronage. The prizes are now on show at the above establishment. Tickets, 6s. each, may be obtained by applying as above, or at the retail branches of the Chinese and Parisian Magazine, 41, Fleet-street, and corner of the Old Jewry, Champsade; also of Hewitt and Co., 18, Philip-lane, W. Ancier and P. Ledoux, rue de Lombardes, Paris, will supply the Parisian articles, and the indefatigable exertions of the proprietors for the last ten years will furnish a magnificent collection from the Celestial Empire.
TAYLOR, Brothers, and HERWET, Chinese and Parisian Magazine, wholesale department, 7, Old Jewry, Champsade.

CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE.—If the direct written testimony in favour of the purity and perfection of BARRY'S PATENT BRANDY, given, after analysis, by three of the most eminent Chemists of the day, needed any confirmation, it will be found in the fact, that it is employed, in preference to Foreign Brandy, under high medical direction, in many of the principal hospitals, infirmaries, and other public institutions in the kingdom; among which it may suffice to name Guy's, St. George's, and the Westminster Hospitals in the metropolis; and the Manchester, Bristol, and Bath Infirmary. Distillery, No. 7, Smithfield Bars, leading to St. John-street. Price, pale or coloured, in quantities not less than Two Gallons, Eighteen Shillings per Gallon.

THE NEW MANURE.

HUMPHREY'S FARMERS' COMPOUND, possessing superior advantages to any manure yet offered to the public.
It is rich in the Phosphates, Silicates, and Nitrogen, with certain new agents, so as to prove most economical and effective for Wheat, Barley, Pulse, Potatoes, Meadow Land, &c. Being manufactured on a new principle, this Manure will not wash off the soil like guano, or the salts; but, with the lasting qualities of the "Home-made," combines the most energetic fertilising chemical agents; adapted to all the purposes of Husbandry and Garden Culture, and unrivalled as a Top Dressing for all Spring Crops.—
21s. per cwt. Wholesale Agents, DAVY, MACMURDO, and CO., 101, Upper Thames-street, London.

THE AMERICAN ROCKING-CHAIR.—None are genuine unless they have "Luck, Kent, and Cumming," painted on the bottom. This chair, so much admired by all who have visited America, for the remarkable ease, pleasure, and comfort which it affords, is just imported, and for Sale at the extensive Carpet and Upholstery Establishments of LUCK, KENT, and CUMMING, No. 4, Regent-street; Carpenters' Hall, 68, London-wall; and WM. CUMMING and Co., 98, Hatton-garden. It is asserted with confidence that there is no piece of furniture in use in a civilized society more sought after and approved of when known.
The price, 25s., with a liberal discount to the trade. Stout persons and Invalids will find these chairs invaluable.

THE TOILET of BEAUTY furnishes innumerable proofs of the high estimation in which GOWLAND'S LOTION is held by the most distinguished possessors of brilliant Complexions. This elegant preparation comprehends the preservation of the Complexion, both from the effects of Cutaneous Malady and the operation of variable temperature, by refreshing its delicacy, and sustaining the brightest tints with which beauty is adorned. "ROSEMARY SHAW, London," is in white letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is genuine. Prices 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d., quarts 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Medicine Venders.

WEAK LEGS, KNEES, AND ANKLES.—
SURGEONS in England, Ireland, and Scotland, continue to recommend BAILY'S ELASTIC LACED STOCKINGS, KNEE CAPS, and ANKLE BOOTS; they are light, cool, and warranted to wash. Since the reduction of postage, afflicted persons in the country can have any bandage by post, for a few pence, by forwarding their measure. The particular property of the Stocking is to give constant support in varicose veins, weak, swollen, or dropsical affections of the legs, or in any case requiring equable pressure: the Knee Cap will be of great service where the knee-joint requires support, from accident to the pain of the knee, after inflammation, rheumatic or gouty affections, or in any case where, from weakness of the part, support may be required.—W. H. Bailey, 418, Oxford-street, London.

STOOPING OF THE SHOULDERS AND CONTRACTION OF THE CHEST, so injurious in Young Persons and oppressive to the invalids and the infirm, entirely prevented, and gently and effectually removed, by the occasional use of the Patent ST. JAMES'S CHEST-EXPANDER, which is light, simple, easily employed outwardly or inwardly, without bands beneath the arms, uncomfortable constraint, or impediment to exercise. The great improvement it causes in the figure is immediately apparent; but the paramount benefit of this invention is its obvious tendency to prevent the incursion of consumption and other pulmonary disease in youth, and to afford a comfortable support to the chest and back in the aged and weakly, or those who are accustomed to sedentary occupations. Full particulars may be obtained on application to Mr. A.
Blyden, 44, Tottenham-street, Strand, London, by enclosing a postage stamp.

THE NEW LIGHT.—A GREAT NOVELTY.

The patent CAMPHINE LAMP gives a light of surpassing softness, and purity, without any kind of grease or dirt, except the description of lamp, pedestal, or gas fitting. It is not easily put out by draft. The Camphine (also a patent) is 4s. per gallon, and is so pure if split on any article of dress or furniture will not leave either stain, while it consumes so slowly that, at the cost of three shillings hours, it gives a light equal to twelve mould candles, without any it will be found far less expensive than any, and incomparably all existing lights. To be seen burning at Rippon and Burton's (sole sale and retail agents for English Patent Camphine).—N.B. The Patent Camphine Lamp has "Rippon and Burton, Wells-street, Great street," conspicuously placed on its head. The public are cautioned all not so marked.

DAYLIGHT AT NIGHT! CAMPHINE!

The patent Camphine Lamp gives a rich light, surpassing purity and brilliancy, is simple in construction, and emits neither nor smell. May be seen burning at F. Barnett's Furnishing Ironmongery and Lamp Warehouse, 25, Oxford-street, where a large assortment may be selected from, all at the lowest possible prices. Any Lamp Lamp may be fitted with a Camphine head. Patent Camphine Lamp Spirit, 5s. 6d. per gallon. Observe, 25, Oxford-street, one door west of Rathbone-place.
Hall Lamps, 11s. 6d.; Ground Glass Patent Solar Lamp, from 2s. 6d.;
Palmer's Patent Candle Lamps, from 5s. A most elegant assortment of Table, Bracket, Slideboard, and suspending Lamps, in ornola and at extraordinary low prices. Lamps cleaned or altered to the sole principle. Lamp shades, 6s.; cottons, 4d. per doz. Palmer's Patent Candle, 6d. per lb.

BELL'S BALSAM OF ROSEMARY FOR

COUGHS is justly esteemed the safest and most certain medicine ever invented, and will be found to act like a charm in allaying coughs of every kind. Rosemary has long been used as a domestic remedy in cases of coughs and colds in the form of tea, or by infusing a few sprigs in gin and taken at bedtime. The Balsam possesses the medicinal properties of the plant, which are tonic, expectorant, and diaphoretic. It acts gently on the skin and mucous membrane of the lungs and bronchial tubes, the carrying off the disease by perspiration and expectoration. One trial will prove its extraordinary powers. As a defence to the chest, BELL'S MEDICATED TISSUE PAPER will be found invaluable. Being im-permeable to air, it effectually excludes cold and damp, and simply requires to be pinned and worn outside the flannel in the form of a large plaster, is tacked to a piece of silk or any other light material.

Preparing Agent—J. Balmer, Chemist, 87, St. John-street-road, London; and sold by Edwards, 67, St. Paul's; Bullock, Princes-street, Manchester; Priestley, Lord-street, Liverpool; Ross and Burton, Hull, &c. &c. is bottle at 1s. 1d. and 2s. 9d.; and in sheets, 2d. each, or lined with silk, 1s. each.
N.B. The paper can be sent by post.

PATRONIZED AND SANCTIONED BY HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN, H.H. PRINCE ALBERT, THE ROYAL FAMILY, AND THE SE- VERAL COURTS OF EUROPE.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the Growth and for Preserving and Beautifying the Human Hair. Price 4s. 6d.

7s. Family Bottles (equal to 4 small) 10s. 6d., and double that also 21s.
CAUTION.—SPURIOUS COMPOSITIONS are frequently offered under a FICTITIOUS name or the word "GENUINE." It is therefore imperative on purchasers to see that the words "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" are on the Wrapper of each bottle, and on the back of the wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 29,024 letters. All others are FAL-SULENT COUNTERFEITS. The principle on which "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" is prepared, is confined solely to the knowledge and practice of A. ROWLAND and SON, who are still at an immense expense in completing its preparation, and the amalgamation of its PURELY VE-GETABLE MATERIALS renders abortive any attempt to discover its component parts.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for Improving and Beautifying the Skin and Complexion. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included.
ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, renders the Teeth beautifully White and preserves the Gums. Price 2s. 9d. per box, duty included.

CAUTION.—It is imperative on purchasers to see that the word "ROW-LAND'S" is on the Wrapper of each article. For the protection of the Public from fraud and imposition, the Honourable Commissioners of the Majesty's Stamps have authorised the Proprietors' Signature to be engraved on the Government Stamp, thus, A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden, which is affixed to the Kalydor and Odonto. Sold by them and by Chemists and Perfumers.

* * All others are SPURIOUS IMITATIONS! * *

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH, Mr.

THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM, price 4s. 6d.—Patronized by Her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. This valuable SUCCEDANEUM for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity, is far superior to anything ever before used, as it is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and in a short time becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary. It arrests all further progress of decay, and renders them again useful in mastication. All persons can use Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM themselves with ease, without the aid of a dentist, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 68, Bernersstreet, Oxford-street, price 4s. 6d., and will be sent by post to any part of the kingdom.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. Thomas continues to supply the loss of teeth, and has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, which will be found very superior to all others, as they will never decay nor become discoloured, and their perfect resemblance to nature defies detection even by the closest observer. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. The charges will be found less than most dentists.—Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 68, Berners-street, Oxford-street. At home from eleven till four.

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED WITHOUT

SPRINGS, CLASPS, or WIRES, LOOSE TEETH FASTENED, and FILLING DECAYED TEETH with MINERAL MARMORATUM.
Mons. Le DRAY and SON, Surgeon-Dentists, 42, BERNERS-STREET, OXFORD-STREET, continue to restore DECAYED TEETH with this celebrated MINERAL MARMORATUM, applied without pain, heat, pressure, preventing and curing the toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary. They also fasten loose Teeth, whether arising from age, neglect, the use of Calomel, or disease of the Gums. Incurable, artificial, or natural teeth of surpassing beauty, fixed, from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, at the following Paris charges:—
A Single Tooth 20 10 0
A Set 5 5 0

Arranged on a principle yet unrivalled, rendering it impossible to distinguish the artificial teeth from the natural ones; answering most satisfactorily all the purposes of the original teeth in mastication and articulation, imparting to the countenance a younger and improved appearance, preventing the adjoining teeth, and remaining perfectly secure in their places.
Artificial Teeth repaired, remodelled, and brought to their former shape and appearance.

Artificial Palates of the most improved construction.—At home every day from Ten till Six.
N.B. Removed from 60, Newman-street, to 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

FRAMPTON'S PILL OF HEALTH.

Price 1s. 1d. per box.

THIS excellent Family PILL is a Medicine of long-tried efficacy for correcting all Disorders of the Stomach and bowels, the common symptoms of which are costiveness, flatulency, spasms, loss of appetite, sick headache, giddiness, sense of fullness after meals, dimness of the eyes, drowsiness, and pains in the Stomach and Bowels. It produces a torpid state of the Liver, and a consequent Inactivity of the Bowels, causing a disorganization of every function of the frame, which most excellent preparation, by a little perseverance, be effectually cured.
Two or three doses will convince the afflicted of its salutary effects. The Stomach will speedily regain its strength; a healthy action of the Bowels, and Kidneys, will rapidly take place; and, instead of heat, heat, pain, and jaundiced appearance, strength, activity, and renewed will be the quick result of taking this medicine according to the directing accompanying each box; and if taken after too free an indulgence in they quickly restore the system to its natural state of repose.

Persons of a FULL HABIT, who are subject to headache, drowsiness, and singing in the ears, arising from too great a flow of the head, should never be without them, as many dangerous symptoms be entirely carried off by their immediate use.

For FEMALES these Pills are most truly excellent, removing all distressing headache so very prevalent with the sex; the of spirits, dulness of sight, nervous affections, blotches, pimples, tousness of the skin, and give a healthy and juvenile bloom to the
As a pleasant, safe, easy aperient, they unite the recommendation of mild operation with the most successful effect, and require no diet or confinement during their use. And for ELDERLY PERSONS will be found to be the most comfortable medicine when the Sold by T. Frampton, 329, Strand, London. Price 1s. 1d. and 2s. 6d.
and by the Vendors of Medicines generally throughout the Kingdom.

Ask for FRAMPTON'S PILL OF HEALTH, and observe the address of "Thomas Frampton, 329, Strand, London," on the Government

London: Printed (at the office of Palmer and Son, 18, Paternoster-row, street) by A. W. FARRER, of Barton-on-Urwell, Lancashire, and street; and published by him at Ten Lanes, 10, W. 17, W. 17,
Saturday, March 2, 1844.

THE LEAGUE.

No. 24.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 9, 1844.

[3d.]

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND, £100,000.

All subscribers of £1 and upwards to the ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUND FUND, will be entitled to, and receive a copy, weekly, of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have forwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the Offices of THE LEAGUE, Newall's-buildings, Manchester, or 67, Fleet-street, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND, are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council respectfully request that their friends, in all places where committees for raising subscriptions to the £100,000 Fund have not been already formed, will proceed to their formation as soon as possible, and transmit their names to the LEAGUE Offices, Manchester.

WHY NOT HOLD COUNTY MEETINGS?

Nothing is more remarkable in the Pro-Corn-Law movement than the fact that the monopolists can nowhere hold an open meeting. In Somersetshire they were signally defeated in a county meeting; at Aberdeen, from their temerity in attempting an open meeting, they met with the same fate; at Northwich, in Cheshire, they were driven from the Market-hall to "the large room at the Crown," and at Chesterfield their opponents, according to the statement of their own organ, constituted so large a proportion of those present that the monopolist resolutions, if passed at all, were passed in dumb show. Nor do the actors at these meetings hesitate to admit, that it is only by rigid exclusion of all discussion they can carry their resolutions, or even secure unanimity amongst themselves. Thus, at Chesterfield, the person who proposed the first resolution said—"Their object was not to discuss the propriety of a fixed duty, or the duties of a sliding scale; they left that to wiser heads." And the same nervous anxiety to prevent the orthodox monopolists of the sliding scale falling foul of the heterodox monopolists of the fixed duty is exhibited by all the prominent speakers at these meetings. So, on the same occasion, when Mr. Sayer and Mr. Hurst of Chesterfield endeavoured to move an amendment, they were stopped at once by the Chairman, who said, "they were not met to discuss the reasonableness or otherwise of the Corn Laws, but to do a specific act,—to agree to a petition, and to adopt certain resolutions,—any interference with that intention, by way of endeavouring to prevent it, would not be permitted." Again: Mr. Harford, at Bristol, said "he was perfectly willing, when the report of the proceedings should go forth to the public, to have it said, that he for one had borne a part in a packed meeting." Now, the monopolists have a perfect right to meet in any way they please, and the Free-Traders who constitute the League invariably discountenance any attempt to interfere with these meetings, called, as they are, for a special object, and which are essentially private meetings.

But how is it, if there be a shadow of truth in the round assertions made in every such meeting, that the landlords, the farmers, and the agricultural labourers are interested in maintaining the Corn Laws, that the protectionists can only meet with closed doors, and can only pass their resolutions by closing the mouths of every individual who would "discuss the reasonableness or otherwise of the Corn Laws?" How is it that all this—we suppose we must in courtesy call it—agitation is confined to the country, and usually the most retired and rural locality of each county? Where is the Central Protection Society in London? As yet we have had only Mr. Doran Maillard's exhibition at Freemasons' Tavern. And what do the high and mighty agitators think of the success of that feeler? Indeed the disavowal by the Morning Post of that experiment upon the gullibility of the working men of the trades' unions may be taken as a sufficient answer to the question. But where are the "farmers' friends," who have undertaken to persuade the practical middle classes of the metropolis that a nation is to grow rich by setting each class to rob every other class? As Mr. Villiers wittily said, "The Duke of Richmond takes the chair daily in his own parlour, and the Duke of Buckingham sits opposite him;" and this, as yet, has been the sum and substance of the metropolitan high-rent agitation.

But do we say the monopolists are wrong to meet with guarded doors? Do we pretend that they are not wise in their generation to prevent all kind of discussion even in their own packed meetings? Do we hint that the noble dukes are not acting the part of discreet leaders by keeping in their own mansions rather than by facing the outspoken men of London? Far from it. On the contrary, we admit the prudence—for their own objects—of the course they have pursued; but we may be permitted to add, that they have forgotten one precaution, the neglect of which we suspect will mar all—they have not excluded the reporters!!

Now, if we had it simply announced, that at such a time and such a place certain dukes, earls, lords, baronets, and squires had met in conference with so many occupying farmers, and that the strongest reprobation of the acts of Free-Traders and of the principles of Free Trade had been there expressed; that efficient means for making farmers rich and prosperous without reducing rents or increasing production had been resolved on; and that so much money had been subscribed by the grandees, present and by proxy, to "put down the League" and the "pestilent doctrines of Free Trade," possibly upon the principle that men are very apt to take—though often erroneously—the unknown for the magnificent, the Free-Traders might have trembled at the mysterious resolves of a dominant oligarchy. But, alas! all this the too faithful reporters have spoiled. The lordly and worshipful monopolists have spoken, their speeches have been recorded, Post-ed, and instead of making the Leaguers tremble, they have made them laugh. Take, for example, the following gems of reason and reasoning from the speech of Lord Sondes, at Lynn, in Norfolk. With that power of penetration—that faculty of seeing further into a millstone than common men can—which the nominal and apparent possession of a certain quantum of land is supposed to confer in this country, Lord Sondes said, "He had from the commencement considered the League the most dangerous association ever formed, which, in order to gain hidden advantages to carry out some unseen object, conspired to ruin their fellow-subjects; for he maintained the Anti-Corn-Law League must have some other object than the repeal of the Corn Laws: their proceedings proved it." Such is lordly eloquence! Now, if demonstrating that Free Trade would increase the profits of capital and the wages of labour, add to the productiveness of our own soil, and greatly augment the public revenue,—and all this the Free Traders of the League have demonstrated;—if they have cast aside all party preferences,—if they have sunk all political differences of opinion in order to unite in one strenuous effort to obtain a free trade in corn,—it certainly does require the penetration of a Sondes to discover that their real object is not their declared one, and that they seek to ruin "their fellow-subjects" by augmenting all the acknowledged elements of national prosperity. But away with such nonsense; nonsense which could only proceed from men who have been fenced by the peculiar privileges of caste from all real knowledge of the world; who are the spoiled children of society, whose intellects have never outgrown their babyhood, mere breeched believers in "Jack the Giant Killer," and such nursery tales. Again, as a specimen of landed-lordly reasoning, this redoubtable Lord Sondes said, "They (the League) had excited the people in the north, so that the Government was obliged to put them down. He believes, however, the good sense of the people would keep the League down." To ordinary understandings the second sentence seems to answer the first, and the first to be a reply to the second; doubtless this is a landlord way of reasoning. But if the "good sense" of the people will "keep down" the League, the NONSENSE of the landed aristocracy seems to be giving itself a great deal of superfluous trouble. Possibly, however, there is a "hidden" meaning in these lordly revelations which it is not given to the industrious classes to understand. Let it be remembered, however, that these speeches, this double-distilled silliness, is addressed to the industrious classes. Oh, why do not the monopolists, in mercy to themselves, in justice to our national character for common sense, exclude the reporters?

But there is another reason why the monopolists, if they were wise, would exclude the reporters. In every meeting it is broadly asserted that agricultural wages in this country rise when the price of corn is high, and fall when it is low; and upon that assertion the most extravagant conclusions are founded. We have shown, in another column, that directly the reverse of this is the fact. Wages, measured in corn and comforts, real wages, invariably increase as the price of corn decreases, that is, where the labourers do in fact receive anything as wages. But there may be a sense, and there are circumstances, in which the monopolist assertion is apparently true. That is, if the pittance of 6s. or 7s. a week—which is paid to the agricultural labourers of Dorsetshire, Wiltshire, Buckinghamshire, and other peculiarly landlord-ridden counties—can be called wages, and where the peasant—whose right to be saved by society from starvation is recognised alike by Christianity and by law—is habitually upon the verge of destitution; where the way in which he supports himself and his family upon his so-called wages is a mystery and a miracle to his more fortunate fellow-countrymen; where, as the Rev. Mr. Osborne says is the case in Dorsetshire, "the relief given by a board of guardians to the family of a man who, from illness or accident, is rendered unable to work, exceeds by some shillings his earnings when he works," in such sense, and under such circumstances, wages, as they are called, possibly may rise and fall with the rise and fall of the price of corn. But, even then, they do not rise in the same proportion, for 1s. to 1s. 6d. a week is the greatest advance the west country serf receives in periods of the highest prices; while, assuming him to consume the same quantity of bread, the advance would not meet by one half the additional cost of his food. Neither do his wages fall ever below the average rate. Oh no; for it is a matter of surprise to boards of guardians—who can go to the best markets for what they supply to the poor, while the poor themselves go to the very worst—how the labourer, earning the average wages, contrives to support his family. The guardians can't do it so cheaply by some shillings a week!!!

Verily the day will come when the landowners may wish their tongues had been blistered before they drew attention to these things. Could a man of sense and humanity stand up at this moment before the European public, and declare himself a Wiltshire or Dorsetshire landowner, and an advocate for enhancing the price of bread by a legislative scarcity, without feeling his cheeks tingle with shame?

FREE-TRADE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. Calhoun, of South Carolina, one of the ablest, most earnest, and consistent Free Traders of America, has just published a letter, declining to stand as a candidate for the Presidency. Every friend of Free Trade throughout the world will regret this decision. When nations shall choose for their rulers enlightened statesmen like Mr. Calhoun, who looks forward to the triumph of Free Trade as "the harbinger of a new and brighter and higher civilization," the world may have hopes that the millennium of "peace on earth, goodwill to men," is approaching.

The Free-Trade triumph of the electors of London has given new life and hopes to the Free Traders all over the world. Mr. Calhoun says, in reference to it—"I, who upheld it against monopoly and plunder in the worst of times, and braved the menaces of administration and opposition when backed but by a single state (South Carolina), will not, cannot abandon the glorious cause now, when its banner waves in proud triumph over the metropolis of the commercial world."

We extract the following from his letter:—

"Be your decision what it may, I shall be content; but I regard it as due to the occasion, to you and myself, to declare that, under no circumstances whatever, shall I support any candidate who is opposed to Free Trade, and in favour of the protective policy, or whose prominent and influential friends and supporters are. I hold the policy to be another name for a system of monopoly and plunder, and to be thoroughly anti-republican and federal in its character. I also hold, that so long as the duties are so laid as to be in fact bounties to one portion of the community while they are oppressive on the other, there can be no hope that the Government can be reformed, or that its expenditure will be reduced to the proper standard.

"Were I, with the evidences before me, to say otherwise of my course, it would be practically to declare that I regard the protective policy to be an open question, so far as the party is concerned; which I would consider, on my part, a virtual abandonment of the cause of Free Trade. That can never be. I have done and suffered too much for it, when its friends were few and feeble, to abandon it now—now, when the auspices everywhere, on this and the other side of the Atlantic, proclaim the approaching downfall of protection, and the permanent triumph of Free Trade. I, who upheld it against monopoly and plunder in the worst of times, and braved the menaces of administration and opposition when backed but by a single state, will not, cannot abandon the glorious cause now, when its banner waves in proud triumph over the metropolis of the commercial world. No: I shall maintain immovably the ground I have so long occupied, until I have witnessed its great and final victory, if it shall please the Disposer of Events to spare my life so long. It will be, indeed, a victory—the harbinger of a new, and brighter, and higher civilization."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

THE FREE-TRADE MIRROR OF PARLIAMENT FOR THE SESSION 1844.

Fifth Week, ending Saturday, March 9.

During the past week some discussion has taken place, both in the House of Commons and in the leading morning newspapers, on a subject of more importance to the public at large than at first sight they might think. We allude to the wishes expressed on both sides of the House, and by both sides of the Press, for shortening the debates. The cry now is, that Parliament, or at least the House of Commons, speaks too much; that not only members but the public are wearied by these interminable discussions, lengthy speeches, and frequently adjourned debates; and it is boldly and broadly asserted that, if we wish to preserve the public interest in parliamentary proceedings, there must be shorter debates, smarter speeches, and fewer speakers.

It is unquestionably true that there is more talk in the House of Commons now-a-days than in those palmy times when the House was almost as easily managed as a Select Vestry. More individual members take part in debates, longer speeches are made, they are also reported at greater length than they used to be; and to read a full report, even of a single night's discussion, as given in the Times or the Morning Chronicle, requires some amount of time and perseverance. Hence has arisen the practice of giving summaries, or brief abstracts of the debates, in order to enable people in a hurry to get an idea of what has been said and done, without the necessity of wading through deep and dense columns of small type; and as it is impossible to read all the speeches, fretful folks are apt to anathematise the debates, and to compensate the annoyance given to their own self-importance, by declaring that what they have not read must, therefore, not be worth the reading.

But graver evils arise from the length of the debates. The art of speaking, like the art of poetry, does not come as natural as walking to every man; and facility in pouring out a string of sentences will no more make an orator, than cleverness in jingling rhymes constitute a poet. Parliamentary oratory ought to be a measuring standard of the national intellect. It should be the medium through which the noblest and most commanding minds reach the feelings as well as the understanding of the people; by which the highest political truths, conveyed in the choicest language, should be lodged, not alone in their brains but their hearts; the great engine for wielding national will and power. But if everybody tries to speak, whether he can speak or no, the art of oratory will be degraded to the habit of talking; people will become insensible to "thoughts that breathe, and words that burn," because they will miss them in the crowd of cold, lifeless words by which they are governed; and they will lose the habit of looking to Parliament for that political instruction without which no nation can long maintain its spirit and its freedom. Then, to all this, add the obstruction to business—the wasting of the session in fruitless debates and endless talk—and the apathy which it must engender, even in our representatives themselves, who will lose all interest in the performance of their duties.

There is some truth, and more plausibility, in ideas like these; and there is a strong disposition to take advantage of what is supposed to be a prevalent opinion and feeling, in order to abridge, if not the freedom, at least the length, of Parliamentary speech. "Shorten the debates!" exclaims the Times, "and let every Wednesday be a holiday." "Ay, do!" re-echoes the Chronicle, itself the greatest sinner of the press, in giving the debates at great length; and it instructs members in the best mode of constructing short speeches, proposing, at the same time, with apparent gravity, that no member should be allowed a standing in the newspapers who had not got a standing in the House—that is, that no member should be reported who was not recognised as a speaker in the clubs and coteries. And then Mr. Williams, the member for Coventry, complains that four-fifths of the session is usually spent in idle talk; whereupon the ministerial members cheer loudly, the translation of the cheer being,—"But for you and your fellows we would get through our business with silent celerity, with little trouble, and small talk!" Honest Mr. Brotherton, too, the recognised time-keeper of the House, grieves over long speeches, and would put a check upon legislative loquacity; and so, we suppose, the feeling will spread, that Parliament does talk too much, and ought to hold its tongue a little more.

Now, admitting the evils of the present system,—confessing that many members speak when they have nothing to say, and frequently do not stop their speeches when all they have to say is exhausted,—still we look with suspicion on this combined movement to abridge Parliamentary debate. It would, no doubt, be very convenient if the House of Commons were once more reduced to that happy state of discipline, when, to adopt Mr. Tierney's phrase, each member would belong to one of two great parties—"Her Majesty's Government," or "Her Majesty's Opposition." Then, all debates would be arranged between the Treasury and the clubs; on occasional "field nights" nobody but the "officers" of each party would be allowed to speak; the business of the "privates" would be simply to cheer, to vote, and never utter a word, unless they had an occasional petition to present, or were concerned with some local Paving and Lighting Bill; and when the game was played out—when parties were changing places—when "Her Majesty's Government," passed, in due order of rotation, to the Opposition benches, and "Her Majesty's Opposition," as its turn had come, to the Government benches,—then the clever fellows, who had done all the talk, should, as a reward for their "much speaking," get much place and patronage. Under such a system, if any member broke through the conventional arrangements of the two parties, he would be coughed or groaned down within the House, and "sent to Coventry," at the clubs; or, if he were a determined man, not to be put down, he would be tolerated as a sort of fugleman, scattering his jokes, or displaying his oddities, while the parties were arranging their troops, and the leaders preparing to fire off their great guns.

Who is the author of the greatest check upon executive government which has been achieved in modern times? Was it a man with the philosophic grandeur of Burke, the brilliancy of Canning, the stately declamation of Macaulay, the sparkling rhetoric of Shiel, or the flowing elocution of the present Prime Minister? No! It was a man who, when he first appeared in the House of Commons, had a provincial accent, a confused vocabulary, whose figures of speech were the very antipodes of his figures of account, "a mock at Tattersall's and Brookes's," and a sneer at St. James's." When he began his career, now many years ago, the public accounts were in a most shameful condition. They were made the cover for every extravagance the most unprincipled, for every job the most rank. Heads of departments relied on their subordinates for effectually puzzling the estimates; and as the national accounts were too mysterious to be understood, and too intricate to unravel, the national money was easily obtained, and profusely wasted. But our man addressed himself to a task more herculean than cleansing the Augean stables. Pelted with stinging jokes from witty Canning; flouted by every underling of the Treasury; sneered at by clever but pert Stanley; the butt of the House, and the horror of all fashionable circles; he, year by year, continually took his pencil, looked after the "tattle of the whole," waded through dreary piles of figures, questioned every item, divided the House against every extravagance. At last public opinion began to stare upon the Treasury; clerks of departments, in making up their accounts, became afraid that they might be seen through the loopholes which JOSEPH HUME had struck in their walls; columns of figures became more straight; jobs were compelled to skulk into closer concealment; extravagance trembled at every annual granting of the supplies, and furiously declared Joe Hume to be a terrible bore; but, bore or not, he has performed for his country a greater service than the creation of the Thames Tunnel; he has reformed the whole accounts of the Executive, established the principle that the country has some right to information on the mode and manner in which its money is expended, and made publicity the rule instead of being the exception. Honour to JOSEPH HUME. You may not approve of all his political opinions, nor even of all his economy; but by dint of speeches, which neither Murray nor Longman would think of collecting and binding up into handsome octavo volumes, he has brought about practical changes as important and lasting as any achieved by the most eloquent man, with the exception of Burke, that ever appeared in Parliament.

Again, if it were the rule not to allow a new member a "standing" in the newspapers until he had gained a "standing" in the House, would not Mr. Cobden have experienced a most serious obstruction in rising to his present deserved eminence as a public man? We have heard all his speeches since he entered Parliament in the autumn of 1841—have marked every stage of his Parliamentary progress. To those who are not in the habit of witnessing and watching it, there seems something inexplicable in the idea, that a man accustomed to address public audiences out of doors should feel awkward or timid in first addressing the House of Commons. So it is, however; and those who require an explanation must be content with a very vague one—the tone of the House is different from that of any other audience. Mr. Cobden, when he first entered the House, was eyed suspiciously; the Anti-Corn-Law League was then but in its infancy; and the general feeling on the Ministerial benches seemed to be, "Oh, he may do very well to excite a set of vulgar Manchester fellows, but he won't do for us!" Never was there a more determined effort to put a man down. At first, in the rapidity of speaking, some of his phrases were perhaps not very felicitous or correct; and though the instances were few in number, they were eagerly seized upon, and an effort made to turn him into ridicule. Nay, who can forget that Ferrand was unchained and let loose upon him, dragging the details of his business before the House? Above all, who can forget that Sir Robert Peel, in an evil moment for his own reputation, attempted to extinguish him by an imputation of the foulest nature? Every effort failed—the man was literally propelled upwards by these attempts to put him down: not by intrusive conduct—not by bullying—not by vulgarity—but by clear, pungent common sense (that commonsense so uncommon), by force of intellect and exquisite tact, he subdued the House of Commons, and compelled it to give him a high place in its ranks. One great excellence he has—he only speaks when he has something to say, and then he says it in the tersest way, and at the fitting opportunity.

For all the reasons we have given we must protest against any attempt to abridge the debates, if that abridgment is to be effected by a loss of liberty, or by returning to the old mere party warfare of former days. Rather let us "bear the ills we have" than "fly to others that we know not of." Every man who, in his political conduct, acts on the apostolic maxim of "speaking the truth in love,—in season and out of season," will be apt to be considered a bore by those who do not wish to listen to his preachments; but had speeches are better than bad legislation. It may be true that everybody cannot read all the speeches spoken in the House of Commons; and it is wearisome to sit them all out. But then every constituency is interested in the speech of its own member,—a species of political education very different from the silent system of former days; and, amid all the multitude of speeches, great orators will always command the attention which their abilities deserve.

The first regular Free-Trade debate of this session was brought forward on Thursday night by Mr. Labouchere. The subject, as our readers are aware, was our commercial relations with the Brazil; and Mr. Labouchere stated the case with great clearness and ability. We were glad to hear him quote the Economist as an authority for some of his statistical statements; and still more pleased to see that the Liberal members around the right hon. gentleman indicated their appreciation of its value by loud cheers on the mention of the name of that valuable periodical.

The case, as stated by Mr. Labouchere, resolves itself into this:—A vast and fertile country, with a population now amounting to seven millions, has three great articles of production (not to mention innumerable others), sugar, coffee, and cotton wool, ready to be poured into this country at a reasonable rate, by which our greatly-increasing population might receive abundant supplies at a cheap rate, and yet that very cheapness would increase wages by the additional employment which the exchange of Brazilian produce for our manufactured goods would create. Yet cotton-wool is the only article we admit at a reasonable rate; on Brazilian sugar we lay a duty of three hundred per cent., and on coffee two hundred per cent. We persist in this policy, in the face of the fact that, with our increasing population, the consumption of sugar in this country is decreasing; and in the face of another fact, that our merchants, unable to bring home return cargoes from the Brazils, are compelled to send their ships on circuitous voyages;—ay, and in the face of another great fact, that the quantity of slave-grown sugar which we import is regularly increasing, which we refine in bond in order to evade the duty, and then send out to our West India colonies, and elsewhere, for consumption.

This strong case was met by Mr. Gladstone in a way which Mr. Bright well characterized as so many smooth, unmeaning words, glibly thrown together. The Government are actually going to make some alteration in the sugar duties; their intentions were indicated by Lord Sandon, who, on Thursday night, said that 63s. for protection is perfectly absurd. They feel, as in the case of the old sliding scale, that the differential sugar duties confer the "odium of too much protection;" but, instead of boldly dealing with the subject on sound principles, they are about to give us a new sliding scale for sugar as they gave us a new sliding scale for corn. Ashamed immediately to avow this, both Mr. Gladstone and Sir Robert Peel declared that they would hold their tongues about any contemplated alteration, for what is to be proposed in April was not fitting to be spoken of in March!

The whole defence, on the showing both of Mr. Gladstone and Sir Robert Peel rests on this—that by increasing the cultivation of Brazilian sugar we will increase the slave traffic between the Brazils and the coast of Africa. Lord Palmerston remarked that Ministers have now shifted their ground; formerly it was slavery in the Brazils—now it is the slave trade. For Mr. Gladstone expressly said, that if we could stop the slave trade he would not care about slavery, but would admit the slave-grown sugar of the Brazils on the same terms as we admit the slave-grown cotton of the United States.

During the two speeches of Mr. Labouchere and Mr. Gladstone the House was thinly attended. There was a very fair muster on the Opposition side during Mr. Labouchere's speech, and even on the Ministerial side there was a decent attendance of moderate men, who listened quietly; but at the magic hour of seven o'clock nearly every Ministerial member fled to dinner, and Mr. Gladstone spoke to all but empty benches on his own side of the House; there being, till past nine o'clock, not more than twenty on the Ministerial, and at least forty on the Opposition benches. About ten o'clock, those who had dined, but had heard nothing of the debate, came down to vote. Mr. Milner Gibson, in his bold, pithy way, put the case on its proper footing,—that of a concealment of monopoly by the thin veil of a horror of slavery. Then rose Mr. Bright, who broke through the mere conventional proprieties of the House, and at once linked sugar and corn together as twin monopolies, whose fruits were the pauperism of the United Kingdom—Ireland, England, Scotland. The word "corn" set all the members who had just dined into convulsions of horror. What has corn to do with sugar? "Question!" they bawled out. "That is the question," replied Mr. Bright. Colonel Sibthorp shouted. Unearthly voices were heard. One contented, yet discontented monopolist, up in the side gallery, threw himself back on his seat, shut his eyes, and emitted every kind of modification of "hear, hear!" from a grunt to a yell. The general desire was to get Bright down—don't let that odious Leaguer talk of corn in connexion with sugar. But Bright was not to be put down; he spoke his speech, and it lashed Sir Robert Peel into a passion; for, though Sir Robert Peel affected to be very jocular on commencing, and declared that he would preserve a very moderate tone, he was internally raging with passion. He would not imitate the tone of Mr. Bright—oh, no!—yet, unable to restrain himself, he ventured to raise a cheer, by resorting to a miniature performance of the same ungenerous artifice which he formerly practised towards Mr. Cobden. He insinuated that though Mr. Bright was a member of the Society of Friends, yet, unlike the Friends, he would rather have cheap sugar than put down the horrors of slavery! Mean, ungenerous, and we are sorry to add, we think, deliberate perversion. Lord Palmerston, with great spirit, defended Mr. Bright, and rebuked Sir Robert Peel, and after ably showing that all this horror of slavery was the cant of monopoly, the House divided, when 132 Free Traders supported the motion against 205 monopolists.—Majority 73.

ANTI-CORN-LAW MEETING AT DURHAM.—We hear that a requisition to the High Sheriff of the county of Durham is in course of signature, requesting that he should call a public meeting of the freehold and other inhabitants of the county, to petition the Legislature for the removal of all restrictions on trade, and for the repeal of the bread-tax. In the event of the sheriff summoning the meeting, it is expected that John Bright, Esq., M.P. for the city of Durham, will be present to expose the fallacies of the advocates for a tax on the importation of foreign grain.—Newcastle Advertiser.

TITLES.—Title and ancestry render a good man more illustrious, but an ill one more contemptible. Vice is illustrious, though in a prince; and virtue contemptible, though in a peasant.—Adrian.

GREAT MEETING AT COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE.

The usual aggregate weekly meeting of the Anti-Corn-Law League was held on Wednesday evening in Covent-Garden Theatre. The house was filled by an audience comprising, as usual, many thousands of the most respectable and intelligent of the inhabitants of the Metropolis, showing that the frequency of these vast assemblages causes no diminution of interest in the great question which brings them together. The same good order, and attention to the speakers which has hitherto prevailed, characterized the audience.

The following gentlemen were observed by us on the platform:—

Hon. C. P. Villiers, M.P.; John Temple Leader, Esq., M.P.; T. M. Gibson, Esq., M.P.; Sir Valentine Blake, Bart., M.P.; John Bright, Esq., M.P.; Dr. Bowring, M.P.; Robert P. Collier, Esq.; James Chadwick, Esq.; Eccles, P. A. Taylor, Esq.; T. A. Shaw, Esq.; W. A. Wilkinson, Esq.; Samuel Harrison, Esq.; Samuel Lucas, Esq.; John Ashton Yates, Esq.; Cornelius Nicholson, Esq.; of Kendal; R. W. Cole, Esq.; Joseph Ivimey, Esq.; Joseph Fenwick, Esq.; Robert Clark, Esq.; Colonel Tucker, Thomas Carr, Esq.; Frome, Henry Esq.; Colonel Clark, Esq.; E. J. Salisbury, Esq.; Thame, Esq.; Cowden Clark, Esq.; John Tuxar, Esq.; Richard Andrews, Esq.; Southampton; John Tuxar, Esq.; Beverley; Norman Wilkinson, Esq.; Butterworth, Esq.; Rochdale; W. E. Hutchinson, Esq.; Leicester; William Stevenson, Esq.; Dr. Mascher; W. Roberts, Esq.; Rochdale; L. D. Bradford, Esq.; Manchester; R. G. Welford, Esq.; Arthur Pattison, Esq.; Wm Lockett, Esq.; Manchester; James Brotherton, Esq.; Manchester; F. Cordingley, Esq.; C. O. Boyse, Esq.; Henry Russell, Esq.; Capt. Dawson; Henry Lancaster, Esq.; Henry Edward Krie, Esq.; John Jones, Esq.; F. H. Toone, Esq.; Adam Smith, Esq.; W. Ibbotson, Esq.; Sheffield; W. A. Thomson, Esq.; Buffalo; W. Hannay, Esq.; J. P. Burnard, Esq.; W. E. Hutchinson, Esq.; Leicester; Rev. John Pyer, Devonport; John McLeod, Esq.; J. N. Collins, Esq.; J. Cox, Esq.; James Banner, Esq.; E. Patterson, Esq.; R. L. Tweedale, Esq.; Martin Thackeray, Esq.; Henry Lloyd, Esq.; Thomas Hubback, Esq.; &c.

At seven o'clock, the Hon. C. P. Villiers, M.P. (in the absence of George Wilson, Esq., who was attending a meeting at Manchester), took the chair amidst much applause.

Mr. SAUL (the secretary,) then read the minutes of the last meeting, which, on the motion of Mr. BRIGHT, M.P., seconded by Mr. LEADER, M.P., were confirmed by acclamation.

The CHAIRMAN then came forward and said:—Gentlemen and ladies, the chairman of your conspiracy, I regret to say, is unable to attend this evening—"hear, hear," and laughter)—and I have, in consequence, consented to become criminal in his place (renewed laughter); but I am happy to learn that it is not for the purpose of being innocent or idle himself that he is absent from his post to-night (hear, hear): on the contrary, I hear that he is attending a meeting of very special conspirators in the country—"hear, hear," and a laugh)—of men who have no fear of dukes before their eyes, and who, I believe, have no more respect than ourselves for what I see, the squire term "a cherished institution of the state," which, as you know, is the law which provides for the necessities of great men out of the necessities of poor men. (Loud cheers.) Your chairman is, I hear, at Manchester to-night, presiding in the great hall, which has been built there for the express purpose of conspiracy (laughter), and where the men of Lancashire do meet, and regularly combine, for the purpose of making trade free and bread abundant (cheers); where they endeavour, as we do here, to propagate the principles of Sir Robert Peel (laughter), and get credit for that sort of household wisdom which he thought it wise to preach on his coming last to power—(hear, hear, hear)—which, if I mistake not, amounted to this, that when people have occasion to purchase what they want, they should not pay more for it than they need (a laugh); and when, on the contrary, they want to dispose of what they have, not to take less for it than they can get. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) These, if I mistake not, are the principles which Sir Robert Peel, in an ungarded moment perhaps, ventured to say that he did not hesitate to declare he believed were true (a laugh); and which one might have thought, if an oracle of less note than the first Minister had proposed, would have been believed. (Hear, hear.) Yet, I fear, if history is fairly written, posterity will learn that what agitated British society most, and what chiefly engaged the attention of the British Legislature in the middle of the nineteenth century, was the difference of opinion about this simple rule, grave doubts being asserted of its wisdom, and graver difficulties being offered to its adoption. (Hear, hear.) The organ of the Government, only two days since, devoted a column to its discussion, and then concluded, that if Sir Robert Peel ever said it he never meant it. (Loud laughter.) His disclosure of the doctrine, however, is what has brought on him the charge of treachery by his friends; it is really what has caused discord in the Conservative family (laughter); and it is this which has drawn so large a portion of the peasantry into the field of agitation. (Hear, hear.) It was at a meeting the other day that some squire said it was to expose and refute for ever this "fraudulent theory" that he had spoken out. (A laugh.) It was to crush this "pestilential fallacy" that some lord said he had come to St. Alban's. (Laughter.) It is to protect the peasantry from this poison that the Tory papers say they see with deep satisfaction that the Duke of Richmond takes the chair, at his own house (loud laughter), and the Duke of Buckingham sits opposite to him (continued laughter); it was on this account, in fact, that "the great chiefs," as Queen Pomare calls her Richmonds and Buckinghams, have leagued together to suppress your rival body. (Cheers.) But, gentlemen, however little chivalrous, and very ludicrous, this occupation and position of the nobility of England may appear, yet we must remember that they have at present the best of the joke (hear, hear); and that it is far less ludicrous to enforce the rule of buying dear and selling cheap upon others, than to submit or to assent to it ourselves. (Hear, hear.) We must not be idle, therefore, because they are foolish (hear, hear); and we must not lose the great advantage they are giving us by the course they are pursuing. What they call "speaking out," is just what we want them to do, and which, while they had the sense to leave their cause in Sir Robert Peel's hands, was never done. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) Our cause was so plain, men would not believe it was rejected on its merits only; and while Sir Robert conducted their defence, no one did exactly know what he meant, or what we meant. Some thought we attacked the church, some thought the colonies, and some the constitution; and the result of a discussion was rather to mystify than clear the mind upon the matter (laughter); but now, it seems, they repudiate Sir Robert's help, and have served us by taking their cause into their own hands, by becoming their own counsel, and having themselves for clients, which, as you know, is not always thought the wisest thing to do. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) By the line they have been lately taking, they bid fair to aid us, as an author in Swift's time is said to have helped himself, who wanted much to draw the public notice to some view he took of public matters, but in which, for some reason, though he wrote a pamphlet about it, he did not succeed. The notion then struck him that he would write another in answer to himself; and the line he took in the reply was to heap every kind of abuse upon himself, to impute the vilest motives to himself, and charge himself with every crime of which man could be guilty, and which he did to such degree, that shortly the world began to ask what this was that had been written, against which so much was said ("hear, hear," and laughter); and, as the story goes, the town was for some time divided between the enemies of the author and of the supporters of his work. (Laughter.) However, his object was then accomplished, his work was read, and a general verdict was given in his favour. (Cheers and laughter.) Just what we expected would follow from the vehement abuse which these great men are pouring upon the League. (Hear, hear.) There are thousands who, above want themselves, and not too much alive to the wants of others, have never given this matter of the Corn Laws a thought, but are awakened by this cry of fire, and thieves, and murder, which the nobility and gentry have raised in all the counties ("hear, hear," and a laugh); they are those whom we may count as converts, when they discover that the hubbub is all owing to some classes of industrious men seeking to sell their wares where they can get most for them, and buy their food where they can pay least for it (hear); and that the disturbance is caused, in fact, by those who deal in food, and have monopoly in the sale. (Cheers and laughter.) The more people they awaken to a consideration of the subject, the better will it be for the League: for, abuse the League as they may, charge it with crimes as they will, sooner or later the whole community will see that this is the question after all, and that the subject of the dispute is just as I have here described it. (Cheers.) That they will go on in just the course they are doing I sincerely trust, for nobody can better know than those who have had to fight this matter, of what use it is that they should throw aside the mask, that they should put off all disguise, and no longer cloak their cause with false pretence. (Hear, hear.) They now come boldly forward and rest upon the strength of might, and with open weapons bid us all defiance. They have wisely driven from their agricultural societies the friends of agriculture, and have converted them into what perhaps they were always meant to be—only landlord's clubs. (Hear, hear.) They have manfully thrown all their old pleas overboard, and have come to the conclusion of the Morning Post, that the great duty of the landlord is to take care of himself (laughter and cheers); and perhaps also to that of the Morning Herald, that they should seize the present moment to get money for a future fight. And I see, at a great meeting held for the county of Surrey, that their objects and intentions have now assumed a clear and definite appearance of this kind. It was summoned, as usual, for the protection of agriculture; the spokesman selected on the occasion to represent the landlord interest was a Mr. Drummond, a large proprietor and a man of great ability. He saw no necessity for reserve, and he, as they call it, spoke out on the occasion. He seems to be a loyal man, as the landlords are when things go right ("hear, hear," and a laugh); so he enters at first into some speculation about the support of the Throne, and he tells the meeting on what the Throne must not rely, that is, on manufactures, railroads, and the funds. (Laughter.) There is no reliance there, he says; and the stock on which he says it can alone depend, is horses, cattle, pigs, and sheep. (Loud laughter.) However, he then proceeds to the business of the meeting: I have here a report of what he said; he deliberately told the meeting that he came there, and that they came there, for the purpose of protecting his and their own interest as landowners; and he knew, and they knew, that that interest was, that corn should be dear (hear); and the real question which they had come that day to discuss was, how they could make corn dear; and whether what they were about to propose would have the effect of making corn dear. If it would, he was satisfied; but if not, he had an amendment in his pocket which he would propose. (Loud cries of "Hear, hear," and laughter.) Now, this was all clear, distinct, and unequivocal; this was the object of all protection meetings, as announced by a great and leading landowner. (Hear.) I do now really hope that, when anybody sees a flourishing account of a county meeting, decked out as usual with dukes, barons, and baronets, he will remember the speech of Mr. Drummond as the honest and candid commentary on all such meetings (hear); and I do trust that those among our friends who are fastidious as to the manner in which this question should be argued, and who object to such views being imputed to our opponents, will see and confess that there has been no exaggeration in what has been said. (Cheers.) I trust that the people, who know that the landlords of the country are the rulers of the country, will not be surprised in future when they hear that foreigners in every country view with suspicion and mistrust those professions of excessive zeal on our part to spread the gospel in the most distant parts of the world, and of excessive sympathy with the sufferings of the working classes of other countries where slavery exists, when they see that with all our anxiety to christianize savages and emancipate slaves, so regardless are we of the precepts of that gospel at home, and of the sufferings of the poor that we have amongst us, that for the purpose of raising their incomes our rulers are daily engaged in devising modes for rendering the food of the poor dear and difficult to attain, apparently regardless of the evidence which hourly offers itself of the misery and death they produce, and all the other hideous consequences of their policy. (Loud cheers.) Gentlemen, I have to apologise for making these observations: my duty to-night was more properly to introduce to your attention gentlemen far abler than myself to discuss the question; I will now call upon Dr. Bowring to address the meeting. (Loud and general cheering.)

Dr. Bowring, M.P., on coming forward, was greeted with loud plaudits from all parts of the theatre. He said:—Ladies and gentlemen, if it were possible that, in advocating the great cause that brings us together, there could come over us at any moment a feeling of wavering or of discouragement, the presence and co-operation of a meeting like this would drive all doubts and despondency away. We are again and again taunted with our failure; and yet, week after week, encouraging and enthusiastic multitudes come together to declare in our behalf that "they never fail, who strive in a good cause" (loud cheers)!

"When the heart and the mind,
And the voice of mankind,
Unite in communion,
Who—who shall resist that broad union?"

With my honourable friend who has just spoken, I agree that we have reason to congratulate ourselves that our adversaries are at last appearing in the field, and that the war of words and strife of argument have commenced. We have hitherto been combating with shadows, but at last we see something like a substance to grapple with. And I rejoice in it, my friends,—I rejoice that, at last, the pressure of necessity has forced our adversaries into the open field of combat, and that we are now standing face to face in the broad sunshine of truth. Who can doubt where the victory of truth will be? I rejoice that we shall now have an opportunity of meeting our opponents with some chance of being listened to by them. (Hear, hear.) The word "protection" has been again and again brought forward, and the phrase "independence of foreign nations," frequently reiterated. Now, we do not object to any man "protecting" himself, or being as independent as he pleases of the other communities of the globe; but what we require, demand, and insist upon is this, that he shall not attempt to "protect" us according to his interpretation of protection. (Cheers.) Let him be as independent as he will. Let him go and live with the Australian savage, and eat dirty grub for his breakfast, and undressed shellfish for his dinner, and we will not complain. (Cheers and laughter.) If such a man choose to be ignorant, let him say, "I will not learn to read from books, because books are made of rags that come from Italy; I will not be taught to write with ink, because ink is made of the gall of Alop-po;" but we, who are determined to be instructed, we who will have pens and paper and ink, insist upon the privilege—the high and noble privilege—which enables us to invite other lands to come to us with their contributions, and to offer to them our contributions in return. (Cheers.) Time was, my friends, when in this country, too, the people were rude savages, wholly independent of other nations, who, instead of wearing garments, covered their bodies with yellow and red ochre, and, instead of comfortable homes, made their huts of hurdles and their roofs of fern-leaves, rejoicing, perhaps, in their independence of foreign lands. I do not complain of the man who says, "I will feed on an aboriginal cabbage (loud laughter); I will make my pies and puddings of aloes and haws and blackberries, because they are the produce of my native soil; and God forbid I should go to the south and introduce grapes and plums and peaches and all the beautiful produce of a benignant sun." ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) Let such a man be delivered over to his own mode of enjoyment, but what business has he to interfere with my enjoyment? (Cheers.) A man may choose to be independent of foreign nations, and say, "I will stork a staff in the sand, and I will watch hour after hour the progress of the day when the sun is shining;" or, if the sun was not shining (as it does not always in a climate like England), he might, perhaps, do what I have seen pursued among the Arabs—he might hang up a pitcher and fill it with water, and make an exceedingly small hole in the bottom, and so by watching drop by drop he might measure the moments from the rising to the setting of the sun. But if intelligence and civilization and attention and the noble intellect of man should produce that wonderful combination which we call a watch, the fine iron of which shall have been imported from Sweden, the gold from Africa or Asia, and the precious stones which often adorn it from various parts of the world, is he to deny to me the privilege of carrying about me the means from hour to hour of tracing the progress of the day? (Loud cheers.) Let him wallow in his ignorance if he pleases; let him deny to himself every enjoyment that is unwelcome to him; let him sit in a hovel to which nothing but his native land shall have contributed the materials; let him have his oak table, and his dinner on a trencher, with a hole in it for his salt; and let him serve himself with his finger, for instrument of gold and silver he shall have none. What matters it to me, or to you, if he choose to dress himself in garments of coarse wool; if he declare that he will wear nothing, will enjoy nothing, but the indigenous product of his native land. No doubt I should mourn over his degraded taste,—I should wonder greatly at his backwardness; but what business has he to interfere with me?—with me who have that which other nations are willing to receive, and for which they will be grateful, and in return for which they will be delighted to offer me the produce of the universal world? (Loud cheers.) And this is the history of civilization—this is the history of commerce; in this consists the great victory of man over distance and clime, and by which man has made the wide universe, with all its wealth, subservient to his mind, and tributary to that activity which gives new intelligence to all, and from which all derive new intelligence. (Cheers.) Why, when, in a country like this, I see the poor labouring man at his loom, rising ere the sun rises, and retiring to rest long after the sun has descended, I see in that being—that virtuous, that honoured, that honourable being—one who is spreading the bonds of amity and friendship over the universal world (loud cheers); that which he produces bringing to all around him, ay, and to all above him, enjoyment, which, without him, never would have reached our native land. (Cheers.) If we are anything,—if we are great, and great we are,—if we are influential, and influential no doubt we are,—it is because we have made ourselves dependent upon other nations; and to the extent to which we have made ourselves dependent we have made them tributary to ourselves. (Loud cheers.) It is indeed, lamentable, in days like these, to hear the strange infatuated language with which men sometimes talk of the foreign relations of our country, while there is not one man amongst them all who despises and so crumples our foreign commerce, that from morning to night is not himself an enjoyer of the advantages which that foreign commerce has brought to him. (Cheers.)

All that he hath, all that he eats, almost all that he drinks, everything with which he clothes himself, almost every decoration in his dwelling, he owes to foreign commerce. (Cheers.) And I confess I should like nothing better than that such men should be condemned to the punishment of having their own principles applied to their own passion of being made independent of foreign nations, and should be confined to such articles as existed before the artisans and manufacturers and merchants of England made her name illustrious equally through the civilized and the uncivilized world. (Cheers.) I should like to strip from their backs the garments they have received from foreign lands, and I venture to say they would walk in your streets in nakedness. ("Hear," and laughter.) I should like to take from their tables, also, the contributions from other countries, and I venture to say that two or three days would behold them in a state of starvation. (Cheers.) I should like to take from the backs of their wives and daughters the grand and beautiful things which they have received from foreign countries, and I am quite certain they would not venture to show themselves in Houndsditch or St. Giles's. (Cheers and laughter.) No; it is from the dependence of man upon man that our virtues and our felicity equally spring. (Cheers.) I can understand well the theory of those who teach us that if we cross a brook, or wander over a mountain, there we are no longer to deal out love but hatred—there we are no longer to find a friend but an enemy—there we are to seek, not to benefit, but to destroy. But that is not our theory—those are not the principles which we desire to advocate, for Free Trade is connected with the diffusion of human happiness. (Loud cheers.) Free Traders deem it their most high and most honourable mission to remove the mass of misery where they find misery, and to develop happiness where they see any means of doing so. (Cheers.) Our attention is often called to what is passing elsewhere; and our thoughts have been lately directed to that great ocean, the Pacific, over which I hope the magnificent bark of Free Trade ere long will float in all its majesty (renewed applause); and I think, as I have duties elsewhere, I cannot better conclude what I have said than by giving you a tale of the South Seas to laugh at or to cry at, just as you please. (Cheers.)

"I'll tell you a tale of the southern seas,
You may laugh at, or cry at, just as you please.
Scant was the growth of the bread-fruit tree,
On the beautiful Isle of Owyhee,
While, gift of Heaven, it richly grew
O'er the sunny fields of Wahoo;
And it seemed as Nature had placed the isle
In reach of each other's verdant smile,
That what'er was wanting on either shore,
From the other might swift be wafted o'er.
The Wahooan nymphs arrayed
In trinkets by Owyheean made;
While Owyhees well fed should be
By Wahoo's sweet bread-fruit tree.
But, alas! even happy isles like these
Have a people upon them called Grandees;
And where there are lords, I need not say,
Things will go on in a lordly way."

Heard you that cry, whose withering sound
Saddens the sunny prospect round?
From a million of voices it sings on high,
'We starve—we starve!' their fearful cry!
Know you what, midst such fertile scenes,
That awful voice of Famine means?
Oh! hat to me—in Owyhee,
There were lords and squires of high degree,
Who in bread-fruit held large property—
And of all afflictions, ill, and vices,
Thought none so dreadful as low prices;
Wherefore they held it just and meet
That the world should not too cheaply eat,
Nay, deemed it radical insolence
To wish to dine at a small expense;
And swore, for the sake of themselves and heirs,
That, happen what might with other wares,
No bread should be less dear than theirs.
In vain the Owyheean said,
'My lords, we must respect your bread,
But, with all due reverence for your graces,
Would rather have cheaper from other places.'

"In vain from the Wahooan shore,
Barques, filled with bread-fruit, winged them o'er.
'Twas vulgar, cheap, and taxed must be
Before 'twas fit for good company;
Nor must the poor devils swallow a bit,
Unless he swallowed a tax with it.
And what said the lords of Owyhee,
And the Owyheean squirearchy,
In defence of their joint gentility?
Why, they said that they and their squire before 'em
Had shone in the senate, camp, and quorum;
Had all been rich, had managed to get,
As became their station, deep in debt;
And thought it hard that men of reading,
Who had cost themselves so much in breeding,
Should now fall victims to cheap feeding,
Shorn of their beams of wealth and state,
To help low fellows to masticate:
'How little,' said they, 'the thoughtless poor
Can know what the suffering rich endure,
In bringing up dozens of young grandees—
In paying off horrible mortgages—
In saying nothing of assignees, leasers,
And an endless quantity of more of these
'Heavy things that end in ees.
And though (as honest Figaro says)
If a gentleman owes, and never pays,
'Tis just the same, be it great or small,
As if he, in fact, owed nothing at all;
Yet, somehow, unless one something pays,
Lenders are shy of one, now-a-days.'
In short, if the bread-tax once was gone,
These lords and gentlemen 'couldn't get on';
And they were hinted, awfully,
That if e'er in the Isle of Owyhee,
Bread, pudding, in price should humble be,
All was o'er with the aristocracy;
One penny, saved by clods who dine,
Being sure to bring all nobles to nine.
Meanwhile, that cry, that dreadful cry,
'We starve, we starve,' rose loud and high,
'Till—that was the upshot, all shall see,
In the second canto of Owyhee."

After the recitation of this humorous satire, from the pen of Thomas Moore, which was constantly interrupted by bursts of laughter and applause, the hon. gentleman next introduced Mr. Leader, M.P. for to the meeting.

LEADER, Esq., M.P., on advancing to the stage was received with tumultuous applause.

to the old arithmetic process of "bringing

He said:—Ladies and gentlemen, I must first congratulate you upon the altered and improved position of the Anti-Corn-Law League, and of those great, those fair and intelligent meetings which assemble in this theatre to hear what the Council of the League and its friends have to say. (Hear, hear.) When I had the honour of appearing before you on these boards last year, the League was an object of contempt with its opponents, was a thing to be sneered at, laughed at, and ridiculed; but now things have quite changed with the League and its opponents. The League has now become an object to be feared, to be hated, to be called, as it was last night, a dangerous conclave. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) The League has now become worthy of being opposed by an Anti-League, an Anti-League composed of great dukes, and lords, and squires, with a slight sprinkling, as an auxiliary force, of Conservative operative associations. (Cheers and laughter.) Now, we must examine for a little what sort of power this Anti-League is. They tell us, and they tell us in a very boasting way, that if the Anti-Corn-Law League can raise £100,000, they can raise £200,000 with equal facility. Perhaps they can. They have, no doubt, got plenty of money. It would be very hard, indeed, if they had not. (Cheers.) They are rich, I dare say; and they are rich because they have had protection for years; they are rich, because they have compelled the people to buy their goods at a high price; they are rich, and they are growing richer, but they are growing rich at the expense of the community; and if they stop not, but continue to protect themselves, they will put money in their own pockets; but whilst they become themselves rich, they will make the community poor. (Cheers.) Of money, therefore, I dare say they will have plenty. They will get up county meetings, because in many counties they possess so large an extent of land that they can do just as they please. (Hear, hear.) And they will, no doubt, have plenty of meetings at Freemasons' Hall. (Cheers and laughter.) By-the-by, I wonder very much that the Anti-League should have met at Freemasons' Hall. I wonder they were not afraid of a word of such an ominous sound. (Laughter.) I should have thought a word having anything of "free" in it must have reminded them of Free Trade. (Loud laughter.) For my part, I should like to see some of the Anti-League gentlemen here. I think it would be much better than having the talk all one way. They could then offer their arguments, and the Anti-Corn-Law party could hear them, and, I am sure, would give them a fair hearing; that, I should think, would be much better than that each party should have its own meeting, even though one met at Covent-garden Theatre, and the other at Freemasons' Hall. (Cheers.) Now, I suppose that they have plenty of money, that they have county meetings, that they have Freemasons' hall meetings, and that they will have plenty of Conservative operatives to explain the state of the country to them; but I doubt very much whether, with all these means and appliances to boot, they will be able, ay, even in a year to get as much influence as the Anti-Corn-Law League can exercise in a week. (Cheers.) And I will tell you why; because I conscientiously believe that the arguments and statements of this League are founded upon truth; and because I as conscientiously believe that the arguments and assertions of the Anti-League—the agricultural gentlemen—are founded upon fallacies, and upon bad reasoning based upon those fallacies. (Cheers.) Now, what are the general arguments—you cannot indeed call them arguments—topics made use of at these meetings? Why, really, to listen to them, or to read them, one might fancy that they proceeded from some Squire Westerns, in their after-dinner talk, one hundred years ago; one can hardly believe that the esquires and the great landed proprietors of this country, in the 19th century, should deliver themselves in such a way—full of nothing but intemperate abuse of Free-Traders—calling them villains and ragamuffins, and hinting in a peculiarly country gentleman-like way to their listeners, that it would be a very picturesque sight to see an Anti-Corn-Law man stuck up to his chin in a horse-pond. (Laughter.) At those meetings they are not satisfied with attacking Free Trade, but they must also show their dissatisfaction with the Government, and for every bold, straightforward blow which they plant in the breast of the Anti-Corn-Law League, they give an equally severe backhander to Sir Robert Peel. (Cheers and laughter.) And I will tell you why: because (though I do not think Sir Robert Peel is the best possible Minister for Free-Traders) he is a great deal better than his supporters—a great deal better than those gentlemen of the Anti-League, whose language at their meetings, indeed, clearly proves that they have no confidence in him, and that they only support him for fear of being driven to measures of Free Trade by a more liberal Ministry; and, judging from the specimens of such men as we have had, we may readily conceive what we might expect from them if they had everything their own way. (Cheers.) Now, let us consider for a little the actual state of the country as it would be under these Anti-League gentlemen. I am not inclined to set one class against another, to excite the manufacturers against the landowners, or to say anything that would set land against trade; because I believe that both must stand or fall together, and because I believe their interests to be so interwoven that what is bad for the one must ultimately be bad for the other, and what is good for the one must ultimately be good for the other. (Loud cheers.) But whenever any particular class set themselves up as the especial protectors of the poor, or of the agricultural labourer, or the farmer, it is but fair that we should inquire what real pretence they have to that character. (Hear, hear.) One may see a little what the landed gentry mean by "protection of the poor," from the acts which they are constantly getting passed in the Legislature. At this present moment there is a bill before Parliament, brought in by some of the friends of agriculture, which I think pretty clearly shows what is the meaning of their "protection to the poor." It is called an enclosure bill—that is, a bill for enclosing common lands and commons in the country, in order, as the landlords say, to bring more land into a better state of cultivation, and thus to confer advantages upon the poor of the neighbourhood. Now, what is the real state of the case? There is a good article in the Times of yesterday—a very good article about it—which states the case with tolerable clearness and a great deal of force. The bill was brought in by Lord Worsley, and I have not a word to say against that nobleman. He is a liberal man, and one of the best of his class; but in this case he is mistaken. (Hear, hear.) In the county with which he is connected—Lincolnshire, and the neighbourhood—his bill might be of use, because there is a great deal of uncultivated land which might be very much improved; but the bill for the whole country would be a serious evil to the poor who have common rights, and to the public generally who receive any advantages from commons. (Cheers.) In a letter in the Times a correspondent asks, "Why does not some one in the House of Commons prevent the bill from passing?" The reason is, the landlords have such a majority in that House, that it is quite impossible to prevent any bill from passing which they desire to pass. (Cheers.) With respect to this very enclosure bill, for example, seven or eight years ago I opposed Lord Worsley on this very subject, and what was the utmost I could gain from the House of Commons? Why, that within a certain distance of certain great towns commons should not be enclosed: that was all. Yet we see every year attempts made to enclose Hampstead Heath or Blackheath, while the landlords tell you it is all for the benefit of the poor. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) I should like to know what would be the benefit to the poor if Hampstead-heath were covered with houses? It would be very good for the lord of the manor, who would get a greatly increased rent-roll; but it would be very bad for those who like fresh air, and who wish to enjoy their common rights upon the waste lands of the country. (Hear.) Now, that is a specimen of what landlords call protection—protection which they, or at least the more politic amongst them, say is not for themselves, but for the farmers and the poor. Their protection, in the case of agricultural produce, is precisely of the same character as that which they extend to the poor in the enclosure of commons (hear, hear); and you may depend upon it that in every enclosure the rich men of the parish get the lion's share, whilst the poor man gets little or nothing but the mere talk of "protection." Just so it is with the laws relating to the import of corn: the real protection is to the purses of the landlord, and the comforts or conveniences, in any respect, either of the farmers, the farm-labourers, or the community at large, are wholly disregarded. (Cheers.) In short, the protection afforded by landlords to the poor is exactly like the protection afforded by a strong nation to a weak one; that is to say—the strong nation reaps all the advantages, and expects the weak nation to be excessively grateful for all that which it does not get, but which it sees the strong nation reaping to its cost under the generous and disinterested pretence of protecting it, the weak one. (Loud cheers.) Now, we hear a great deal said at these Anti-League meetings, and I really wonder that gentlemen have the face to make assertions, about the League agitating solely for the purpose of bringing down wages in the manufacturing districts; and they hold up the manufacturers of this country as monsters of cruelty and iniquity, who, in every act of their lives, dream only of lowering wages. 'Why, the manufacturers' profit does not depend nearly so much on low wages as upon a plentiful demand for their goods; and as for the working man himself, it is notorious that the price of bread does not at all affect wages. Wages are affected really and truly by the supply and demand. If there be more hands than there is work for them to do, of course wages must be low; and if there be more work to be done than hands can be found to do it, I need not tell you wages must be high. (Cheers.) And the real truth is, that if by throwing open trade we could increase the demand for goods, wages must in consequence rise, because there would in reality be an increased demand for labourers. (Hear, hear.) Then, just let us consider the improvement that must arise in the comfort and well-being of the community from the difference in the price of bread. Whenever bread is very high in price, the working man is obliged to spend the greater part of his wages in obtaining the real necessities of life, of which bread forms a large item; but when bread is low, the working man is able to spend all the difference between the high and low price of bread upon other articles. By that means he increases the demand for, and by the demand, the price of, goods; by that means, also, he increases the demand for labour; and thus there is a general diffusion of prosperity, which acts and reacts throughout the community at large; so that, high or low, the price of bread is the cause of more misery or prosperity than any other cause which I can imagine. (Cheers.) But we are told that in this country the representative system is so well and so wisely arranged, that the power, being in the hands of the agricultural classes, they ought to have a predominant influence in the Legislature. (Hear, hear.) We are told that it would not be advisable—that it would be unwise—to do anything to deprive them of any portion of the power they possess; and that if they will not yield, it is impossible anything can be done to make them do so in a legal way at the call of the people; and that they would not enrich themselves at the expense of the community. From Parliament, therefore, there is little to be expected at present. Are we, then, to despair? I say, far from it. I say, everything shows that the cause of Free Trade is making rapid advances; that our arguments are gaining converts in every district of the country, and even in high places; and that in the Legislature, and in the very Government itself, there is an inclination towards Free Trade. (Cheers.) Even last year, we had an instance of it in the Canada Corn Bill. Now, as corn may be imported from Canada at 1s. per quarter duty, I should like to know why we may not have it from every other British colony at the same rate. (Hear.) But there is another advantage in the Canada Corn Bill, in addition to the admission of the principle, and that is, that it is possible our neighbours, the Americans, will smuggle a great deal of corn into Canada, and that we shall get no small quantity of American wheat at the idea of dian. Now, the landlords are very angry at the idea of this, because they pretend that one of their great reasons for upholding the Corn Laws is, that we should not depend upon foreign countries for the supply of the necessities of life; they are equally angry, though the supply comes from the colonies; and the reason is, to that landlords do not so much object to foreign as to cheap corn; and whether it be colonial or foreign corn, if it is cheap it must be bad, and it must be a bad law which enables it to come in cheaply. (Cheers.) Now, in the course of next week, the question of the Corn Laws will be discussed again in the House of Commons, and what result, and what will be the course of the debate, I suppose you pretty well know. (Hear, hear.) Our worthy and respected friend Mr. Cobden (loud cheers) will introduce the subject with his usual perspicacity and talent. (Cheers.) He will this year, as in former years, put the case so clearly before the House, that the members of that

NEWS

House, if they are not interested against him, and if they vote conscientiously, will vote with him. (Hear, hear.) He will make a speech so full of sound argument, so happily illustrated, so ably delivered, that there will really not be a word to add to his statements; a speech which must carry conviction to the breast of every disinterested man. (Cheers.) But what will happen? Some country gentleman will get up, and, if he does not call Mr. Cobden a ragamuffin to his face (laughter), he will insinuate that he is nothing better than an ignorant man, and that, as he is not possessed of many acres of land, he is not a fit man to develop the policy to which the House should agree, or to introduce alterations into the existing laws of the country. After that, we shall have some more friends of a repeal of the Corn Laws,—Mr. Villiers, or Dr. Bowring, or Mr. Gibson (loud cheers),—who will add force to the statements made by Mr. Cobden. Then, on the other side, a number of country gentlemen, abusing the League, and the supporters of the League, calling them a set of ill-bred ragamuffins, and that no importance is to be attached to anything they say, their efforts being directed to overturn the church, the constitution, and all our revered institutions. (Cheers and laughter, occasioned by the honourable member's imitation of the manner of Sir Robert Inglis.) These gentlemen will also say that, as long as they have a seat in the House, they are determined to stand by the throne and the altar—and the Corn Laws. (Laughter.) Then, probably, we shall have some determined enemy of manufactures, like the member for Knarborough (hisses, and laughter), who will get up and deliver a most violent philippic against every man who ever was a manufacturer, or ever was connected with manufactures; or whoever had anything to do with the trade or commerce of his country; forgetting that these country gentlemen themselves owe one-half of their fortunes to manufacturers; for I will venture to say, that, since the introduction of manufactures upon a large scale into this country, the value of landed property has been doubled. (Cheers.) Well, after a night or two of debating, as they call it—where the argument is all on one side, and the personalities on the other—Sir Robert Peel will rise and make a most plausible ministerial speech. He will probably speak for three hours, but you must not suppose that in those three hours he will tell you anything (laughter and cheers); for, I assure you, of all the men I ever heard speak, Sir Robert Peel appears to me to have the most singular facility of being able to talk a long time, and yet, at the end of his speech, to leave his audience in doubt as to the side to which his opinion inclines. (Laughter, and cheers.) He appears to be a most happy illustration of the witty saying of a great French diplomatist:—"That language was given to man in order to enable him to conceal his thoughts." (Laughter.) After all this we shall have a division, and, as a matter of course, the numbers will be pretty much as they were last year. Now, when you consider all that has been done since last year on the subject of the Corn Laws,—when you remember all that has been said and written,—when you remember the number of meetings where resolutions in favour of a repeal of the Corn Laws have been unanimously carried, even in country districts,—when you remember the number of farmers themselves who have been converted to our doctrine,—is it not surprising that in the House of Commons you do not find one single convert. (Hear.) And why? It is because a man's interest is generally a great deal stronger than any reason that can be adduced against it, and will generally enable him, if he cannot conscientiously support his opinions, to find some fallacious or frivolous way of doing so which coincides with his own interest. (Cheers.) The question, then, as concerns the House of Commons, is settled for this year; the case is before a packed jury (loud cheers); or rather, one may say that the House of Commons are actually judge and jury in their own case (loud cheers); but that is no reason why we should despair of succeeding. I dare say there are many here who remember the carrying of the Reform Bill. That was a much more difficult thing to effect, because in that case there were men sitting, not only for their own seats, but returning actually ten or twelve members each, and having consequently all the influence of the country in their hands. Yet, they yielded to a well-conducted and vigorous agitation when they found that the conviction amongst the middle classes was greatly against them, and that public opinion was becoming so strong that it could no longer be safely resisted. (Cheers.) But, unhappily, it appears to me to be the great misfortune in all English legislation, that reforms are conceded too late; they are conceded when they do not bring with them the advantages which the people have a right to expect; they are conceded when the evil has so far eaten into the vitals of the nation, that the remedy comes too late to restore it to that state of prosperity in which it might have been placed had the remedy been sooner applied. (Cheers.) We may see this illustrated by looking to one or two instances of modern legislation. Look, for example, at the case of Catholic Emancipation. I ask you, and I would ask any intelligent and disinterested man, whether if Catholic Emancipation had been carried at the time of the Union Ireland would have been in her present miserable state? Whether if, according to Mr. Pitt's plan, when the union of Ireland and England was effected, the Irish Catholic establishment had been paid, and Catholics had been really emancipated, Ireland would have been in her present condition? On the contrary, I affirm, that instead of being as she is,—poor, miserable, and convulsed by agitation,—I believe she would have been, and would now be, as prosperous, happy, and contented as Scotland is at this present moment. (Cheers.) Another example is to be found in the granting the Reform Bill. If the Reform Bill had been carried twenty years, or, as it ought to have been, fifty years sooner, the advantage derived from it would have been infinitely greater than it has been. For my own part, I do not see what advantage we have from it now (cheers, and laughter), for, though the House of Commons is called a reformed House, they will not listen to the voice of the people, neither will they give you what you ask for with so much reason and without violence; they will not even give you a repeal of those laws which make the necessities of life dear to the poor man. (Cheers.) In fact, I am afraid that, in this agitation against the Corn Laws, we shall have to wait some time before we can bring the reformed House of Commons to reason. But if by any combination of circumstances, the Government and the aristocracy, in the course of years, are driven into the repeal of the Corn Laws, they will then have to say that, in past times having refused mercy, they have been terrified into doing justice to the people (hear); and the advantages to be derived from the repeal of the Corn Laws then will not be one-tenth of what they would be now, or would have been two or three years ago (cheers); for one of the results of keeping up the protective system has been to prevent our making commercial treaties with foreign nations. Whenever a foreign treaty is proposed with France or Portugal, or Spain or Brazil, we are answered, "No; repeal your Corn Laws, repeal your extravagant tariff, and then we will negotiate with you; but so long as you have a protective system in England, as you have grown rich and prosperous, no doubt you have derived benefit from it, and we will follow your example" (cheers); so that one consequence of this protective system being kept up by landlords is, that the country is daily losing its markets in foreign nations. (Hear, hear.) But whenever the repeal of the Corn Laws comes—whether we get it in a year or two, or have to wait a longer period—of this I am certain, that the agitation commenced by the Anti-Corn-Law League has done essential service in diffusing information and enlightening the people upon this subject. (Loud cheers.) Whenever the repeal of the Corn Laws comes, men will be able to say, and to say with truth, that the attack upon the protective system was first commenced by the Anti-Corn-Law League; that they first produced all those horrid and damnable truths which bear against the system; that they were, of course, hated for it; that their diligence collected their details, while their eloquence displayed them; that though their steps were clogged by disappointment and difficulties, yet that they inflicted upon the system of protection a deadly blow, from which, by the blessing of God, it never recovered. (The hon. gentleman on resuming his seat was greeted with most hearty and universal cheering.)

The CHAIRMAN then came forward and said:—A gentleman will shortly address you, who is the son of a very staunch friend of our cause, Mr. Collier, the late member for Plymouth, and a gentleman who was himself a Free-Trade candidate for the borough of Launceston.

Mr. R. P. COLLIER came forward amidst considerable cheering and said:—Ladies and gentlemen, I entreat your attention for a short time to a stranger, whom nothing but the strongest sense of the necessity and duty of agitating the Free-Trade question would have brought before you. Gentlemen, we live in no common times, and this is no ordinary agitation. We are now transacting an important passage in the history of our country. The present struggle of monopoly—which I believe to be its death struggle—is naturally a violent one; and I consider that the present time renders it imperative on every Free-Trader, if he be a true man, to come forward and lend his assistance to the Anti-Corn-Law League. (Loud cheers.) I am one of a large class of Englishmen—of whom, I doubt not, there are many here present—who detest agitation, but whom, nevertheless, certain circumstances will compel against their inclinations to become agitators. I would infinitely rather address myself to the reason of Parliament than their fears, did I see the slightest chance of success, if I was aware of any one concession which they ever made to reason, unbacked by some popular demonstration. Gentlemen, reason has been said to be the characteristic of man; but I think there hardly could be found a philosopher fanciful enough to designate reason as the characteristic of Parliament. (Cheers and laughter.) A demonstration appears to be the last thing that affects a Parliament. Argumentative speeches appear to be the signal for retiring to dinner; a long chain of reasoning usually leads to the counting out of the House—the profoundest speeches of Burke, which can perish but with the language, were addressed to empty benches. Yet, ears deaf to the mild accents of reason and persuasion have shown themselves not insensible to the loud and angry voice of the English nation. It is notorious that the inhumanity of negro slavery, the injustice of Roman Catholic exclusion, the rottenness of Gattin and Old Sarum, were apprehended by the nation long before they became evident to Parliament; experience points to pressure from without as the only agent to which reformers can look. Sir Robert Peel thought proper to taunt Mr. O'Connell with having addressed himself to the Irish people, rather than to Parliament; but I ask whether Sir Robert Peel, in his heart of hearts, believed that the eloquence of Mr. O'Connell, if addressed only to Parliament, would have produced the slightest effect towards the removal of any one of the grievances of our unfortunate sister kingdom (loud cheers), had he not been backed by the thunders of the Irish nation? I ask, if Mr. Cobden or Mr. Bright, addressing Parliament for five years would have obtained five votes? and yet their arguments have been appreciated by millions of their fellow-countrymen. Without, however, proceeding now to inquire into this unfortunate predilection of our rulers for everything that is rotten in the state, and their detestation of everything which is renovating—their extraordinary blindness to grand principles; as far as the present question is concerned we have the declaration of Lord John Russell in the House of Commons, of what indeed it needed no ghost to tell us, that the opposition to the repeal of the Corn Laws is a selfish, interested, and sordid opposition. (Hear, hear.) I believe, from my heart, that the landlords are mistaken; I am satisfied that they do not see their true interests. They forget the fact that commerce is the greatest of all fertilizers of the earth: they import into this country bone dust and guano, excellent and serviceable manures; but the most that bone dust and guano can do, is to raise corn and crops; whereas, commerce makes the barren places of the earth produce Manchesters and Liverpools (loud cheers); and, I ask, do Manchesters and Liverpools add nothing to the value of the land on which they stand, as well as that which surrounds them? Has the rental of Lancashire not increased within the last fifty years; and would it not have increased, and gone on increasing, though corn had been no more than 20s. a quarter? Our commerce, restricted even as it has been, has called up thriving cities from barren heaths. Is there any reason to suppose that were all the dams thrown down, and its full and fertilizing tide left to flow freely over the country, that we should not see new towns and villages rising out of the earth, and then would nothing be added to the rent-roll of the land? (Cheers.) I am convinced that a more comprehensive view would open to the eye of the landlord sources of rent, in the increased demand for land consequent on commercial prosperity, fuller and less exhaustible than those derived from the foul reervoir of monopoly;—sources pure and uncontaminated, unembittered by the tears of their countrymen. But the landlords are not acquainted with political economy; it has been hitherto a degraded science—matter of trade and commerce have been considered as dry and uninteresting. Aristotle, moreover, was not acquainted with political economy; they have, therefore, not thought fit to teach it at our schools or in our universities; I am convinced that the most useful of all societies would be a society for the propagation of economical knowledge among the landlords. (Cheers and laughter.) But the nation cannot wait until the landlords perceive their true interests; the people of England cannot starve while their convulsions are growing. Gentlemen, you have tolerated monopolies too long; your ancestors would not tolerate monopolies; you would not tolerate monopolies under that name, but you do so under the appellation of "protective duties." But monopolies, like all unjust things, have had their day; that day is now closing, and their sun is fast setting. You, men of London, assembled weekly at Covent-garden Theatre, announce to monopolists of every sort and kind, in terms not to be mistaken, that it is time for them to set their house in order. It is now sixty years since those principles for which we contend were first demonstrated by Adam Smith in his immortal work. For sixty long years have those principles mainly dwelt in the unsubstantial regions of abstraction—a sufficient time, surely, one would think, to satisfy the most abstract of philosophers, even Mr. Baring himself. (Laughter.) Since that time the attention of the country has been directed to a thousand questions, some trivial and some important; and you have overlooked those monopolies which have been silently and secretly preying on the vitals and the best interests of the country. While your attention has been otherwise engaged landowners and sugar dealers have been allowed to pass laws for their own exclusive benefit; to please them you have converted the foreign ploughman into a manufacturer, because you refused to take his corn in exchange for your clothing, which he was willing to have bought of you. Their policy has raised up mills and factories on spots destined by nature for the corn-field and the vineyard. You have sown dragon's teeth all over the Continent, which have sprung up in a harvest of competitors who have excluded you from markets which might have been all your own. (Hear, hear.) At length came a succession of bad harvests; and then the eyes of the country became opened to the fact that our population had been increasing at the rate of 1000 a day for more than twenty years, while we had taken no thought to procure an increase of food. Pale, hungry countenances glared on us on every side; the cry of suffering millions went forth infuriated by the pangs of hunger and the arts of demagogues, in too great pain to be reasoned with, clamouring against their knew not what, accusing machinery as the cause of their distress, and invoking the demon of Chartism to their rescue. All this state of things presented, as it were, in a picture, before the eye of every Englishman, startled the most apathetic, and forced on the most unthinking the conviction that such vast and enormous distress, in a country destined by nature to be the most flourishing in the world, argued some gigantic error of legislation. (Loud cheers.) At this juncture the energetic apostles of Free Trade went forth on their mission. They pointed out the cause of that distress in our ruinous commercial policy; they showed us that the first principles of political economy are not to be violated for centuries with impunity, or without drawing down upon a nation a just and awful retribution. (Hear.) Those principles we have at length rescued from the dust and silence of the book-shelf; we spread them before Parliament, and demand if they are refutable? If not refutable, we demand a reason why they have not been, and why they are not acted on? And what reply do we get? We are answered by the sneer of a supercilious majority of a Parliament which mocks rather than represents the nation. (Cheers.) I rejoice that the squirearchy has fairly hunted Sir Robert Peel out of the vague cover of his favourite generalities, into the open field. I am glad that we know what we have to expect from him. I rejoice to see that he has "nailed his colours to the mast"—to the mast of protection fixed to the rotten, sinking vessel of expediency. (Hear, hear.) The declaration of Sir Robert Peel has fairly divided the country into two parties; and it is well that all men know on what ground they each take their stand. We, Free-Traders, are one party, and we contend for unlimited freedom of importation, on the ground that whatever is imported adds to the wealth of the country. By the nature of things nothing can be imported except in exchange for something of less value which we export, and by the difference of that value the wealth of the country increased. (Loud cheers.) We would therefore add to the wealth of the country, in order to provide for its increasing population. And what would our adversaries do? Why, they would prevent the wealth of the country increasing, in order that that which exists may be unfairly and unequally divided. With regard to the principles for which we contend, and to the fact that commerce enriches a nation, there can scarcely be said to be two opinions. On one side we have the profoundest thinkers, the best writers of our language, the periodical press, reviews, newspapers, and magazines, the authority of the Premier, and the leader of the Opposition; and we have, I may say, the authority of every man in the kingdom capable of understanding the subject. What have we on the other side? Why, there is the Morning Post. (Laughter.) I must say, gentlemen, that those articles in the Morning Post headed "Protection to Agriculture" are really the most melancholy things in the world to a believer in the progress of the human intellect. It is not probable that any number of that journal should survive for any length of time, but suppose some number to arrive at distant posterity, we will say in the shape of the cover of a book, or the lining of a trunk, or something of that kind, how might the future historian be misled! He would be sorely puzzled about dates. He would say—"Is it possible that such things could have been written after the time of Adam Smith, Ricardo, M'Culloch, and Malthus?" He would be inclined to place the present age a century behind its time in the career of civilization. I maintain that the keeping of the Morning Post is a dangerous practice; it should be carefully burnt; or, if it is preserved, let it be bound up with its antidote—Punch. (Loud cheers and laughter.) But I think principles which can find no better advocates than the Morning

Post, and such of the squirearchy who swear by the Morning Post, may be considered as fairly abandoned by all rational men. (Hear.) The fight, then, is a contest between principle and expediency: we argue for a great principle; our adversaries for a miserable exception. But no two of our adversaries appear agreed upon what footing of expediency they rest their cause. One man says, agriculture must be protected on account of the burdens upon land; and yet that man annually refuses to accede to Mr. Ward's motion to inquire into those burdens. Another says—"Without the Corn Laws you will not be able to pay your taxes;" that is to say, in order to enable us to pay one tax we must submit to another. (Laughter.) This appears to me a most extraordinary argument. Why, you levy duty only on that quantity of corn which is imported. If you import two millions of quarters, at 5s. duty, you obtain £500,000 revenue; but, suppose twenty millions of quarters to be in this country, the price of each of these quarters is raised by 5s., and a tax of £5,000,000 is inflicted on the country. Well may we say, therefore, "Remit to us the tax of five millions to the landlords, and we will furnish the wherewithal to pay the £500,000 to the state." Then, again, we hear other persons declare that the Corn Law is a labourers' question. They say dear bread is the best thing in the world for the agricultural labourer. Now, how stands this question? You are all aware that, from the best authority, it is stated that the agriculturists are at present one-third of the population of the kingdom. They have been more, but now they are one-third; they have not increased for more than twenty years, and they do not increase now. Do we suppose that these landlords and farmers, and labourers are rigid disciples of Mr. Malthus? (Laughter.) No; they are not so: but manufactures and commerce have drawn off the surplus population from the land; therefore, these gentlemen will be singularly benefiting the agricultural labourer, if they impoverish these manufactures which take off the surplus population from the land and prevent its being flooded by an overflow of pauperism. Then, again, we have other parties who use, I think, more serious, honest, and convincing arguments. I allude to Sir Edward Knatchbull. (Laughter.) I must say, that he appears to have offered at least the most sincere argument I have heard in defence of the Corn Laws, when he said that the landlords would not be able to pay their mortgages and marriage settlements; but, for some unaccountable reason, this argument appears now to be entirely dropped, and we hear nothing more of it. The arguments, however, in favour of the Corn Laws waxing somewhat threadbare, and, being considerably damaged by Free Traders, in a lucky moment they have hit upon a new and inexhaustible mine of arguments, as good, if not better, than the old ones: this mine is abuse of the Anti-Corn-Law League. (Laughter.) They appear to consider that to convict the League of the smallest inconsistency is the same thing as proving the justice and utility of the Corn Laws. They say, "Oh, Mr. Cobden said so and so, at such and such a place; and Mr. Fox said something different at another meeting—therefore the Corn Law is a good thing." (Laughter.) They say "the League are a low, unprincipled, revolutionary, incendiary body—therefore the Corn Law is a good thing." The League authorizes the burning of haystacks, and the assassination of Prime Ministers—therefore the Corn Law is a good thing." (Laughter.) This is the kind of logic with which the miserable farmers are deluded by those whom unfortunately they have been led to respect. But doctrines even worse than these have been promulgated, which have been alluded to by Mr. Villiers. I saw some time ago a letter in the Morning Post, which produced a much greater impression on my mind than most things I read in that journal: it is signed by a member of Parliament, and addressed to the farmers of Essex; and the writer warns them, not only against the importation of foreign corn, but also against producing too much at home. (Hisses, and cries of "Shame.") He said: "Beware of over-production! the more you produce, the lower will be your prices." We have always considered that one most beneficial feature of the agitation of the League has been the stimulus it has given to agriculture. Meetings of farmers have been held; philosophers have penetrated into marl-pits; learned professors have analyzed manures; experiments have been made; agricultural shows increased; Lord Stanley and Sir Robert Peel have addressed the farmers on the necessity of taking care of themselves, and resorting to improvements in agriculture; and, at all events, the men of Tamworth have been indebted to the League for that incomparable Bull of which we have heard so much. (Loud laughter.) But, says this member of Parliament, all these are worse than useless; the more corn you raise, the less will be the price of it. Why, I verily believe, that if that man were in a besieged town, and possessed the only acre on which corn could be grown, he would only cultivate one-half of it, on the speculation of obtaining more than a double price. It is true his fellow-citizens might be starving around him, but all these would be only so many proofs of his favourite scarcity of corn. That hon. member, in walking the streets of the metropolis, may see, at every corner, in the faces of wretched objects, abundant evidence of the scarcity of food which he recommends. Hardly a newspaper is to be met with which does not contain some account of death from destitution. Every one of these is a proof of that scarcity which this man has the effrontery to recommend. The League is accused of being revolutionary; they may smile at such an accusation; but what say you to such doctrines as these? The sure way to revolutionize men is to starve them. I denounce this unfeeling monopolist—I will call him by no milder name—who preaches starvation on principle—this disseminator of doctrines which array in arms against them the first principles of human nature, self-preservation—I denounce that man and his crew as the apostles of revolution. (Cheers.) Among our adversaries there is also a small class of men—of very respectable and excellent individuals—who labour under a complaint which I characterize by no other term than "the reciprocity monomania." These men appear to think that the surest way to ruin this country on the part of foreigners is to combine and inundate us with their goods, and to take none of ours in return. Gentlemen, we have heard of killing with kindness, but I think this is carrying on the experiment on a larger scale than I ever heard of before. But Mr. Cobden has dealt with this, which we may consider as forming the extreme rear of that motley and heterogeneous army of crusaders against the League marching to battle under the banner of the redoubtable Post. (Laughter.) And the mode in which they would combat with us is altogether worthy of them; they would attack the tradesman through loss of custom and exclusive dealing. But how do the doctrines of Free Trade shew out in comparison! We do not advocate the exclusive benefit of any one class; we would enrich the whole country in order to provide for our increasing numbers; we would take that protection from the farmer to which he has never had a right, which has been his bane, and acted as an opiate on British agriculture, the proceeds of which have been swallowed up in rent. We point the attention of the farmers to the state of the protected interests throughout the world. There is the planter of Jamaica, with a protection of 150 per cent. against all the globe, producing less sugar now than he did thirty years ago. Then there is the Mauritius, with the greatest amount of protection of any of our colonies, invariably complaining of distress. (Hear.) On the other hand, we would point his attention to the free and industrious manufacturers of Switzerland, the most flourishing in the world, enjoying the greatest prosperity in defiance of hostile tariffs. (Hear.) We would point his attention to the false prophets who have ever been deluding him, who predicted the most ruinous consequences from the reduction of the duty on wool, precisely as they do now with reference to the abolition of the Corn Laws. We will direct him to the state of the silk trade, of which it was stated in 1825, that Mr. Huskisson would be the utter ruin; and yet, in 1831, his carriage was dragged into Macclesfield by the weavers of that town. We will demonstrate to him, moreover, that it is impossible to remain as we are. There are but two roads before us,—the one leading to ruin; if we hesitate long the choice may no longer remain to us. Foreign nations are now looking with a watchful eye upon the Free-Trade movement. Our fatal election of monopolists in 1841 was mainly instrumental in causing the tariff of America. The Brazilians are now looking to us, and the Ministry are pursuing the fatal policy of alienating from us their market. (Hear.) Everything now depends on the people of England. Gentlemen, if you allow yourselves to relax in your exertions on account of a temporary revival of trade, produced by one or two good harvests, you will be assisting the monopolists in turning the blessings of Providence into a curse, and making good men pray for dearth. (Hear.) But I will not believe this of you. When I look to the footing of demonstration on which our principles rest—to the eternal principles of justice on which our cause depends—when I behold the energy and ability of its principal supporters—when I see these assemblages of the men of London weekly in this vast theatre, sufficient to appal the heart of the stoutest monopolist—when I see the array on one side, truth, justice, talent, energy, numbers, determination, and the exhibition of ignorance, selfishness, and gaudy coronets on the other—I will not persuade myself to believe that an unprincipled Minister and a tyrant majority will be suffered to perpetrate the ruin of their country. (The hon. gentleman sat down amidst loud cheering.)

The CHAIRMAN then stated that Mr. Fox would address the meeting. Mr. W. J. Fox came forward amidst prolonged and enthusiastic cheering. Silence having been restored, he proceeded to address the meeting as follows:—Mr. Chairman, many allusions have been made this evening—some most felicitously by yourself, Sir—to the associations which are now forming in different parts of the country, and which are at this time engaged in establishing in the metropolis their "Central Anti-League." But in those allusions one particular view has not been taken, or, at least, it has been but slightly glanced at, which is, to my apprehension, the most important in which they can be contemplated. In those Anti-League Associations I see one of the greatest triumphs that this League has achieved, one of the most remarkable indications of its rapid and successful progress. (Hear.) For what are they? They are a confession that the public voice must at last decide this great question of the repeal of the Corn Laws. They concede that even Parliament is not the ultimate tribunal for the settlement of this point; but that there is a greater power which has to be conciliated by persuasion, and by the semblance, at least, of facts and arguments. (Hear, hear.) In those associations we have dragged the landed aristocracy of Great Britain to the bar of public opinion, and made it plead there. (Cheers.) Their resolutions and speeches are all addressed to the public ear. These inheritors of ancient titles that have descended almost from the Norman Conquest—these lords of Parliament, and possessors of the broad lands of England, with all their pomp of station and of office—these men, the farmers' masters, clergymen's patrons, the supporters, or deemed so, of whatever is rich, varied, grand, and lovely in art or science—this great and proud body confesses that it is put upon its defence; that an indictment has been found against it; that it must answer for its doings to the public; that it must plead in a court where "not guilty, upon my honour," will never be admitted, but where valid arguments and substantial facts must show its case if it has one, or consign it deservedly to general reprobation. (Loud cheers.) What can we desire better than to bring matters to this issue? We have the aristocracy now—the monopolists—where we have always wished to find them: in a position in which they must submit to certain awkward cross-questioning like other people, who have to hold up their hands at the bar—where former deeds and doings may be gone into, where the history of class misgovernment for class interests may all be exposed to the public gaze and canvassed according to its true merits—and where the question may be put to them which has been found so awkward by many personages at the bar of justice:—"Pray, were you ever in trouble before?" (Cheers, and laughter.) Whether their answer be in the affirmative or the negative, unless they get well through the matter, they will be very likely to be in trouble again ere long; for, if their obstinacy prevent the just and speedy settlement of this question, the time may come when the question will be enlarged, and indemnity for the past will be coupled with security for the future. (Cheers.) One must look with elation on exertions which are made in a new sphere (laughter); and I would in all friendliness, as one who may have seen something more of popular agitation than many of the titled personages who are now engaging in it, suggest to them some matters which may be worthy of their consideration; and one especially which is, that they should take care not to under-rate the understandings of the public to the extent to which they seem disposed, no, not even of any class whatever. The people of this country, if they have not the advantage of instruction in Latin, Greek, and mathematics by college tutors, have yet eyes, ears, and brains, and are not so easily imposed on as some seem to think, by that species of logic or rhetoric which is known by the name of "Humbug." Some observations in reply to us have been thrown out in the shape of a small paper which has been given away by thousands, and which were distributed, I understand, to almost every working man who entered Freemasons' Hall on the memorable 4th of March, which is an exhibition of that kind of disregard of the intellect of the working people of this country which I had in view. Now, there are many matters in this paper, which is headed "The Corn Laws," printed and published at the "Church and State" office, No. 342, Strand, and which professes to be rather a catalogue of facts than anything else. It contains matters which must be very trite to such an assemblage as this. I will read a few of these facts as a specimen of the manner in which the young agitators—these new-fledged demagogues—enter upon their novel functions. The paper is headed, "Facts are stubborn things." The first fact is this: "According to the census of 1831, there are in the United Kingdom 2,470,411 males above twenty years of age employed in agriculture; and 710,531 in manufactures. Seven-ninths of the population are dependent on agriculture, and two-ninths on manufactures." Setting aside all other deductions from this most extraordinary classification, why, it would occur, I should think, to almost every journeyman weaver as he entered Freemasons' Hall and looked at this paper, that this calculation threw the whole of Ireland into the scale of agricultural population. Well, take it on that ground. What business, then, have the monopolists to talk of the agricultural interest? For, if their assumption be right, we have a majority of that agricultural interest in our favour; we have had, I say, the voice of the Irish people pronounced here by their acknowledged leader,—and re-echoed by your sympathies on a very recent occasion—declaring that they were heart and soul with us in this cause of a repeal of the Corn Laws. (Vehement and prolonged cheers.) And why should they not be? A perilous subject is this Ireland to the agricultural monopolists' interest: for there the Corn-Law system is exhibited in full blossom. Why, the soil in that country seems to grow landlords like potatoes! (Laughter.) I have heard of many a tenant who has four to his own share; all of them squeezing something out of the produce of his daily toil until perhaps he has come—a labourer and a beggar—to this country to obtain wherewith to pay the rental of his own potato patch. (Cries of "Shame.") Pursue the system there, and it will be shown as bringing humanity down to the lowest stage of distress and want,—as inconsistent with all social order and human comfort and enjoyment; as a state of things which ought not to be endured an hour longer than any people could shake off the yoke. Ireland is a demonstration of the futility and mischievousness of the landlords' system, and of the fallacies which our new agitators have endeavoured to thrust into the minds of the credulous. (Loud cheers.) Another of these alleged facts is, that every quarter of wheat introduced into the country supersedes just as much labour as would be required to produce it at home. Why, surely that depends on how it is introduced. There might be some feasibility in such a statement as this if the land grew such quantities of food that every individual in every locality had as much as he could consume; but while there are millions "rejoicing," as it is called, "on potatoes,"—multitudes, able and willing to work, but who have no means, by any thing that they could produce having a sale in this country, to earn the food they need,—why, how glaring, how cruel and insulting a falsehood is this to the honest man who would win his food from the foreigner! (Cheers.) Another of these facts is, that in Prussia land can be rented at 1s. 3d. per acre, and that wheat is sold for 14s. 9d. per quarter; and that the labourers' wages are 5d. per day. Now this, I think, was not a wise thing to tell the workmen of London; still less prudent to speak in this manner to the tenant-farmers and agricultural labourers through the country. There are very many of them who would deem it no great mischief if the lands were rented at 1s. 3d. per acre, instead of from 18s. to 30s. (Hear.) It would be just as fertile, and certainly would not return less profits; and the condition of the labourer would be never the worse, if here, as in Prussia, he could earn the annual rent of two acres of land in the course of a week. (Cheers.) Another fact is, that "agricultural wages in England are regulated by the price of wheat, the value of a day's labour for the last hundred years being one peck of wheat." This is said on the face of authentic records of wages, and the price of wheat, which show that the weekly wages of the farm-labourer, as measured in pints of wheat, have varied from 63 to 96; and that, as to the mechanic and artisan, their wages have remained exactly the same when wheat was at 52s. as when it was at 105s. per quarter. It will never do to trifle thus with the working classes of this country. (Hear.) This may be called—and to a certain extent it is—a middle-class agitation. I am sorry that there should be any deduction from the unanimity of the working classes in their support of it—(hear, hear)—because it is pre-eminently their question; and more deeply cause it is pre-eminently the rights of industry which are at stake in that assertion of the rights of industry which the League is so determinedly making. (Hear, hear.) But, with all my regret as to the deduction of their support, I think it becomes this meeting, the British people, and the aristocracy especially, to render the respect which is due to the character and intelligence of the working people of this country. (Cheers.) Their errors, in some measure, have leaned to virtue's side. The worst fault ascribed to them of late years has been an excessive eagerness in the pursuit, and too little scrupulousness in means for the attainment of political rights; that they were more impatient than was prudent of being in a slave class, and not members of a free community; that they wished to realize at once what is called the great maxim of our constitution, that no one should be taxed but by his own consent. (Hear, hear.) The fault, if it be such, has something in it which is truthful, praiseworthy, and honourable; while in their indomitable energy, their patience under that toil which no people on the face of the earth can endure as they do, from week to week and year to year; in their teachability, and the progress which they have made in the use of the different means of knowledge which have been placed within their reach; in the number of men eminent in our literature, and in the annals of science, which have sprung from their ranks; in all that belongs to the history of the working classes of this country,—I say that they have shown themselves, not only strong in arm, but sound in head, true of heart, deserving of the sympathy of all, and especially of respectful treatment for their minds and interests from the aristocracy. (Loud and prolonged cheering.) But, to return to our subject. I said that we have now got the aristocracy at the bar of public opinion. They take great pains to assume the world that their position is one of "self-defence." (Hear.) I believe that scarcely one Anti-League has been formed in any place throughout the country, which has not set forth in its first resolution that it is merely "a defensive body." In the selection of this word "defensive" there is perhaps something skilful, because men are naturally inclined to look favourably upon those who merely defend themselves. But yet there is a further question to be put to these gentlemen. Having thus told us that they only act on the defensive, they must submit to be asked—"What is it, then, which you defend?" (Hear, hear.) Why, the thief in the streets acts on the defensive when he knocks down the man whom he has robbed. (Laughter.) If it should appear that they are defending as their right that which is the produce of our wrong—if it should turn out that what they really mean to defend is our money in their pockets—why, defensiveness then loses its former favourable association. (Cheers.) However gallant may be the stand made by a body in such a cause as this, it can bring with it no glory. (Hear.) There will be no niche in the columns of history—no wreath assigned by the poet of future ages—to those who shall have defended to the last the spoils which they had extorted from industry; nor can they be entitled to any more favourable regard because their defence was not made with the struggle of the battlefield, but by acts of Parliament, which they were enabled to pass by corrupting or intimidating voters, giving the landowners themselves power to lay a tax on the food of the community. (Loud cheers.) But they are not satisfied with being brought within the meaning of the proverb to which our Chairman alluded, of a man being his own client; but in this self-defence they have pushed forward others. At one time it is tenant-farmers who take the chair, make the speeches, and propound the resolutions: for in this vigorous self-defence all means are adopted. In self-defence they associate; for this purpose they organize themselves in a manner which they had previously described as illegal. (Hear, hear.) In self-defence they correspond with other societies, and in self-defence they even venture to county meetings like that at Somerset, and get soundly beaten—all in self-defence. (Loud cheers, and laughter.) But, to make amends for the meeting to which I have alluded, another was held at Bristol, which was to counterbalance the effect produced at that of Bridgewater. (Hear.) Well, upon this latter occasion a tenant-farmer was placed in the chair. What was the best thing which he could find to say? Why, that the farmers of England were capable of competing with the foreigners of any other country, provided they only started upon fair ground (laughter); that it was hardly just that they should proceed upon such a race with a heavy weight upon their shoulders, having to compete against those who had comparatively nothing to carry. If the farmers of England have a heavy weight of taxation upon their shoulders, I should like to know who laid it there? (Hear.) Who are the authors of the burthen of which they complain, but those very landlords whom they are coming forward, or are pushed forward, to screen from the attacks made upon them. Who is it that has oppressed the farmers thus unequally and heavily? Not the Anti-Corn-Law League assuredly; there is not one member of that body in Parliament who would not readily give his vote for an equalization of the farmers' burdens if such equalization be really necessary. It is from the side of the House on which the Free Traders sit that inquiry has been demanded as to what these burdens on land really are; while the farmers' masters—if I may not call them farmers' friends—are the parties who have pertinaciously resisted such inquiry. (Hear, hear.) But if the burdens are equal, surely it is not by levying another tax on the consumer that the farmer will be enabled to run his race. If our debt be heavy—if the impost which it requires be such as to press heavily on industry—it should bear upon all classes alike; and that which should be spared to the very last is, poverty with its requisition of the necessary means of supporting human existence. (Loud cheers.) I cannot imagine that the tenant-farmers willingly or cheerfully allow themselves to be put forward upon these occasions. (Hear.) It is an ungracious task, in which they have little interest, however loudly they may cry out at these one-sided meetings—for two opinions are never allowed at them—and whatever protestations they may make. They remind me of a scene I once witnessed in an infant school, where the children, having been well patronised, were taught a parody on a song then much in vogue—

"Home, sweet home!"

I saw the master fix his knuckles into one of the little one's heads, telling him to sing out louder; while the poor thing did with a most dolorous voice and rueful countenance:—

"School, sweet school,
There's nothing like school!"

(Loud laughter and cheers.) Were the tenant-farmer free to express the feelings of his heart, I cannot help thinking that something like this would appear in the features of many a farmer, who at these Anti-League associations has to sing out,

"Protection, sweet protection,
There is nothing like protection."

(Cheers and laughter.) The tenant-farmers not being strong enough for the work imposed on them, there comes forth a miller to the rescue. A considerable stress has been laid in different newspapers, both metropolitan and provincial, on a letter of Mr. Biddle, who is described as the largest corn-dealer and miller in the West of England. His testimony is to this effect. He goes through the lists received from his correspondents of the price of wheat in the different parts of the Continent—at Odessa, Alexandria, and so on—and then sums it up thus:—"In sorted wheat quite as high as the quotations I have received for the last month; still I find the average to be about 31s. 3d. per quarter, being somewhat under 3s. 11d. the imperial bushel; and this," he states, "includes freight and all other expenses except the duty." "Now, gentlemen," he says, "the plain question is, can you grow wheat at this price, and live? The League will reply, 'Oh, but, the prices will rise abroad.' Do not listen to such deceptive nonsense; the extra thousands upon thousands of acres that would be brought into cultivation would soon fully counteract the extra demand. Only let the foreigner find a regular cash market for his corn, and I will almost defy you to say how cheap he will grow it. Look at the great continent of America: that country alone can spare land enough to send us the produce of more acres than is grown in England." What, is it really so, that 25s. is the difference of price per quarter of wheat made to us by the Corn Laws? Are the landlords really taxing us to this extent? They talk of exaggeration in the statements we make here: no allegation of ours has ever charged upon them a grosser fraud and more extensive and onerous imposition than is here taken up in the way of their defence, and set forth to show how much spoil there is for them to rally round. (Cheers.) Why, if they have done this—taking the average income, as is stated by Mr. McCulloch, of the people of England at about £17 per annum—they have levied a poll-tax of 20s.; an income-tax on that average of six per cent., three per cent for Sir Robert Peel and the Government, and six per cent. for the landlords and the Corn Laws; and they have levied this as a poll-tax, pressing more heavily the lower you descend in society, until at last it makes its invasion upon those necessities which are essential to the very support of our existence. This is their defence, gentlemen! (Loud cries of "Shame.") This their apology for agitation! Good Heavens! What, then, would they regard as an accusation if this is their defence? (Loud and continued cheering.) And when is it that this is done—under what circumstances? Why, at a time when the price of food is not being so inordinately high as it frequently has been, has caused a revival of manufactures to a certain extent,—enough to be the subject of boast by those who wish to uphold the cause of monopoly,—when yet, under these favourable circumstances, with the winter passing away, we cannot take up a daily paper without seeing something about the destitution in the metropolis, enough to wring any compassionate heart! Why, only within the last two days we read that the Bank of England, the East India Company, the Worshipful Companies of Mercers and Grocers, have during the past week each subscribed the liberal sum of £200 in aid of the fund of the Bishop of London's Association for Visiting and Relieving the Poor at their own Dwellings. The gross amount of the fund of this association is now, we hear, above £20,000; and little enough too for the purpose for which it is needed. At the same time an institution at Mile-end reports to its subscribers that 3500 adult persons have been visited at their homes, and that there are 5000 more to be visited, and if possible relieved, if the society can but obtain pecuniary means equal to the emergency. With all this going on, we are yet told, as a defence of the Corn Laws, that they cost the country a larger sum annually than is needed to relieve all this destitution! Why, though I would not willingly consent to any compromise whatever on this momentous question (hear), yet there is one form of compromise that might make me pause; and that is, if leaving the bread-tax upon all who are in such a situation of life that they are secure from the pinchings of want,—if the bread that is doled out at the poorhouses and by charities; the food of the working classes, and the bread that is intended to feed those who make up the various items in the great total of destitution,—if that could be let into the country free of all duty, I should then say that we might well pause, and think whether in this concession there was not something that had a claim on the consideration of humanity. As it is, there is no relaxation of the monopoly of the great on the plea of charity. Out of this £20,000 which was collected for the Bishop of London's fund for the relief of destitution in the metropolis, if it be all given away in bread, we cannot reckon a smaller sum than £6000 as bread-tax taken on behalf of the landed aristocracy. (Loud cries of shame.) You cannot disentangle the bread-tax from the charity. There is no subscribing to one without swelling the gains of the other. You are really giving your shillings and your pence in this charity to the nobility of the country (hear); and for every 14d. that you subscribe for the starving shirt-women and other poor of the metropolis, you give 6d. to the Dukes of Buckingham and Richmond. (Loud and prolonged cheering.) Wretched, indeed, must the cause be when the articles of its defence let us into such a scene as this,—showing the splendour of ducal palaces, rendered more gorgeous by taxation on the food that is doled out at the neighbouring workhouse. (Renewed cheering.) Men who make such infringements on what are justly deemed the rights of their fellow-subjects should bethink themselves,—when they come to plead their own cause, and ask, if not for justice, at least for mercy, in that court of public opinion,—they should look well to it how they deal out justice and mercy to others. They allow not the plea of ignorance of the law in those on whom the law lays its iron hand. They excuse not on the ground of the value of the thing taken, the attempt to take it, if it is connected with their property or pleasure. It was only three or four days ago that the papers reported a case of poaching at the petty session at Ashby-de-la-Zouch, in which three men were charged with having fixed a net on a Sunday, not having a game certificate. This was the offence, but it was got up into four parts. They were first charged with having a net; they were then accused with doing the act on a Sunday; they were then charged with a trespass in the pursuit of game; and they were lastly charged with an assault on the game-keeper. These three men were each, in a summary mode, by the magistrates, themselves perhaps interested in this very case, sentenced to a fine of £5 each for three offences out of the four, and £2 each for the remaining offence, and in default of payment they were sentenced severally to three months' imprisonment for each of the first two offences, and to two months for each of the other offences, making in the whole a fine of £31, or ten months' imprisonment, for each of these three men. (Loud cries of "Shame.") If such a righteous measure of punishment for desiring to taste the rich man's bird, what should be the measure of punishment for taking by wholesale the poor man's bread? (Vehement cheering.) The penalties in that case, I think, ought not to be less heavy than those legally incurred, but which will not tell on the parties who have incurred them, by betting at horse-races, which has lately been made the subject of legislation. For penalties do not reach those who were described by one of the members of their own senate, as "gentlemen whom this house would not wish to see convicted." (Hear, hear.) There is another caution I would give our fellow-agitators and conspirators in their new attempt; and that is, to avoid such exhibitions as one which took place the other day at a meeting of the Newton Abbot Agricultural Society. This was not an Anti-League Association. It was neither more nor less than the annual ploughing match. The high sheriff of the county was present, and a peer and some members of the Lower House formed part of the company. There were thirty-nine ploughs in the field, and men were called upon to contest for various prizes. Amongst other things on the ground was a waggon surmounted with flags, upon one of which was inscribed, "Protection to Agriculture," and on each side of this waggon there were three cannons. Such may be the ultimate argument of monopolists, as they have been said to be of sovereigns. (Hear.) It may be that at the present moment, were there not such things as cannons, muskets, and bayonets in the country, the delay of right and justice would not be continued so obstinately as it is. (Hear, hear.) But still, I say, it is not prudent in 30,000 people,—for the owners of the land amount to no more—even though the rest of the community may be taxed for the purpose of paying the soldiery to fire artillery,—it is not prudent in the thousands to remind the millions of such a contest as this. (Loud cheers.) We have better weapons than all the cannon they can muster, whether in ploughing or on fields of battle (cheers): there are arms which swords cannot reach, against which military manoeuvres are quite harmless. There is a power in society, spread as it were through the atmosphere we breathe, and which an electrical touch may bring down at once with a force that nothing can resist, whatever its array of antique state or its boast of physical force. (Immense cheering.) They have appealed to that; but I would advise them well to mark the symptoms of public opinion; let them watch the indications of the way the tide is flowing; let them ask where the conversions are. It was remarked by one of the speakers this evening, that there had not been a single conversion to Free Trade in the House of Commons. Has there been a single conversion to monopoly out of that assembly? (Hear.) Do we not find, even in the ranks of the nobility, that from week to week still some fresh name is announced—all coming from the monopolist camp—giving, in their adhesion successively to the cause of Free Trade; showing that opinion is flowing on like the tide, that it cannot ebb, and that its resistless course can only end in the attainment of its object. Let them mark, in another direction, the result of calling any meeting that is open to all comers; let them grow wise by the experience of Somerset, and add to that by the experience recently gained at Freemasons' Hall. (Laughter.) I believe they dare not, in any part of the country, give fair play, and have open meetings. Why, they dare not even hold open agricultural meetings, nor trust the tenant-farmers with the expression of different opinions upon the question of Free Trade or Monopoly. (Hear, hear.) If they talk of their strength in Parliament, let them mark the course of opinion in reference to the Legislature; let them note the silence of both Houses on subjects upon which nobody out of Parliament is silent; let them observe the contrast which those assemblies present to the feeling out of the House, their silence being only to be accounted for upon the supposition that those who wish to uphold the present system feel that "the least said is soonest mended;" and that they by no means are in the way to win popularity by being the friends, or saying anything in favour of, monopoly. Let them note, too, the way in which the mention of the Legislature is received at public meetings all over the country. (Hear.) I have never been present upon any occasion, at any public meeting, however great the distance from London, where the announcement made this year of the determination of the League not to petition the present House of Commons any more was not received with shouts of responsive acclamation. (Cheers.) And is this a wholesome or safe state of things for those who live in a land where the Government, if it exist at all, must be based upon public opinion? There can be no hesitation in the mind of any lover of his country in assenting to the statement that this division of feeling should be abated as soon as possible, and remedied in the only way in which it can be—by conceding the claims of charity and justice, and adopting the policy of those measures which are demanded by the advocates of Free Trade. (Hear, hear.) Here, then, upon the ground now taken by our opponents, we are content to contest the question in future. With them we go to public opinion: as they have appealed to it, by its decision they must abide. (Cheers.) We go with them to Opinion—the Ruler of the world;—Opinion, which is the breath of the body politic, without which it soon sinks in the death of despotism, or becomes a mass of corruption;—Opinion, which anticipates the province of history, and which glorifies those whom unjust verdicts may condemn (tremendous cheering);—Opinion which, while it can irradiate the dungeon, strikes cold apprehension into the bosom of the powerful sophist, fearing that in history he may only find himself "damned to everlasting fame;"—Opinion, which gives its worth to whatever is most highly prized, without which the Crown is but wood and velvet, and coronets, mitres, and Georges are worth just as much as they will fetch at the pawnbrokers';—Opinion which, when it refers to the great elementary principles of truth and justice, rarely, if ever, mistakes;—Opinion, to which the Monopolists have now appealed, by which they must stand or fall; and which has already, and does now by your voices, pronounce the Corn Laws a false policy, a base fraud, and an atrocious crime, which ought to be obliterated for ever from the statute-book of this country. (Mr. Fox sat down amidst prolonged and most enthusiastic cheering.)

The CHAIRMAN then declared the proceedings terminated, and the meeting dissolved.

A letter to the farmers of Worcestershire addresses them as follows:—"The Worcestershire Agricultural Protection Society will take your light sovereigns; and remember, every twenty shillings given will pay you fifty per cent. in the dissemination of truth and the advocacy of your cause."

The largest quantity of waste land in any county of England is in the North Riding of Yorkshire, there being no less than 132,815 acres of common or waste land out of 1,897,592. The total of waste land in England and Wales is 1,800,232, out of the total of 8,616,115 acres of land of all kinds.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE £100,000 FUND.

Subscriptions received during the week ending Wednesday, March 6, 1844.

N.B. As the subscription list is made up from Wednesday to Wednesday, contributions received on Thursdays and Fridays are not published in the LEAGUE of the Saturday immediately succeeding, but are included in the list of the week following.

| | |
|--|---------|
| Salford, small sums per Mr. Larkin | £0 16 9 |
| Levi Wood, Frome, Somerset | 5 0 0 |
| Sam. Oller, Urmeton, near Manchester (a labouring man) | 0 2 6 |
| G. A. Inglis, Dunfermline, N.B. | 1 0 0 |
| Workmen of Thornton, Brothers, Marsh Mills, Cleckheaton, Yorkshire | 1 2 0 |
| John Duncan, writer, Stonehaven, N.B. | 1 0 0 |
| An Overlooker | 0 5 0 |
| Potter, Brothers, Lloyd-street, Manchester | 20 0 0 |
| John Watt, Cheapside, Kilmarnock, N.B. | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Rankin, King-street, do. | 2 0 0 |
| John Stewart, Regent-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Hugh Paton, do. | 1 0 0 |
| David Alexander, King-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Andrew Aitken, Portland-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Taylor, Bank-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Muir, Portland-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Alexander Brown, do. | 1 0 0 |
| A. J. Bruce, do. | 5 0 0 |
| Sir J. C. Fairlie, Bart., Fairlie House, by do. | 3 0 0 |
| James Donald, Portland-street, do. | 2 0 0 |
| Charles Hood, King-street, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Wm. McAdam, Greenholm, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Lawson, Portland-street, do. | 1 1 0 |
| George A. Duncan, Clark-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Robert Wilson, Tichfield-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Allan Strang, Portland-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Purvis, Cheapside, do. | 0 5 0 |
| James Mathie, King-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Brown and Howie, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Thomson, rope spinner, do. | 0 15 0 |
| Wm. M'Whirler, draper, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Hugh Roxburgh, confectioner, do. | 0 4 0 |
| Joseph Dickie, seedman, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Lymburn, shoemaker, do. | 0 10 0 |
| John Clark, Langlands-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Robert Hargreaves, Bridge, Baddens, Lancashire | 1 0 0 |
| Patrick Cavan, banker, Ayr, N.B. | 1 0 0 |
| Mrs. Holland, 86, Grosvenor-street, Manchester | 5 0 0 |
| Thos. Norton, 41, Rutland-street, C.-on-M., do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Milles, Bridge-street, Peterborough | 0 10 0 |
| George Custer, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Wm. Pool, 237, Deansgate, Manchester | 0 10 0 |
| Wm. Atkinson, South Parade, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Mark A. Young, Aytoun-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| J. B., do. | 1 1 0 |
| Lewis Levy, 103, Oldham-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Edwd. Morison, 67, Thomas-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| James Barlow, 7, Dantzic-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Chas. Edwd. Bond, Faulkner-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| A. H. Midwood, at Carlton & Co.'s, Mosley-st., do. | 0 5 0 |
| T. R., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Robt. Lowe, 6, Upper Medlock-st., Hulme, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Smith, 21, Devonshire-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thos. Denbigh, at Carlton & Co.'s, Mosley-st., do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Stanning, Halliwell, near Bolton, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums | 0 4 0 |
| Mr. Siblethorn, Messrs. Leese, Kershaw, and Co., Manchester | 20 0 0 |
| Mr. Bakeman, do. | 5 0 0 |
| Reles, Brothers, Victoria-street, do. | 25 0 0 |
| Thos. Cooke, St. Mary's-gate, do. | 1 0 0 |
| William Burnett, Bradshaw gate, Bolton | 0 10 0 |
| James Wharton, do. | 0 2 6 |
| George Bell, Derby-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Haworth, Higher Bridge-st., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Rev. Jas. Whitehead, Alnworth, do. | 10 0 0 |
| Wm. Forbes, Sefton Arms, St. Helen's | 1 0 0 |
| George Hargreaves, Underbank, Bacup | 0 5 0 |
| Jas. Ogden, Ridgill-lane, Staleybridge | 0 5 0 |
| Wm. Brewer, Church-street, Midhurst | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Barnard, do. | 0 2 6 |
| J. R. W., do. | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend, West-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| William Gadd, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Henry Court, June-lane, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Bowles, North-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend, per do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thos. King, North-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend, do. | 0 5 0 |
| James Martin, North-street, Midhurst | 0 5 0 |
| Thos. Martin, sen., Eastbourne | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend to the cause, Midhurst | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend to the League, do. | 0 2 6 |
| do., do. | 0 10 0 |
| Mrs. Hill, North-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Miss Hyde, do. | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend to the League, do. | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend, R. C., do. | 0 5 0 |
| James White, do. | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend to the Cause, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Henry Grist, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Chas. Reed, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Rev. James Eaton, do. | 0 5 0 |
| William Len, Bumbold's Hill, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums | 0 2 0 |
| Friends to Free Trade | 20 0 0 |
| Kvan Leigh, Ashton-under-Lyne | 10 0 0 |
| Fraser, Leeds | 1 1 0 |
| Walker, Smith, and Co., Bury, Lancashire | 200 0 0 |
| Samuel Mason, do. | 5 0 0 |
| James Hocking, do. | 2 0 0 |
| A Friend, Darwen, Lancashire | 2 0 0 |
| Henry Lightbown, Market-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Walmley Preston, Bolton-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| G. H. Openshaw, Vale Mill, do. | 1 1 0 |
| John Place, manufacturer, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Place, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Hodgson, Huddlesden, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Cowell, bookkeeper, do. | 0 3 0 |
| J. Carlisle, Darwen-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Jas. Holden, Market-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Robt. Smith, Bridge-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Isherwood, Duckworth-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thos. Rawcroft, Bridge-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| James Preston, Hollins, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Clegg, Duckworth-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Jas. Lightbown, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Edwd. Cucknell, Bolton-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thos. Fish, Back Duckworth-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| A Workman, do. | 0 0 6 |
| Rml. Gregson, Market-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Benjamin Gregson, Duckworth-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Knoch Hargreaves, blacksmith, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Joseph Gregson, Market-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Henry Lees and Brothers, Cromford-st., Manchester | 40 0 0 |
| John Christian, Gilling, near Richmond, Yorkshire | 1 0 0 |
| W. Hancock, Market-place, Wivelscombe | 1 0 0 |
| J. B. Clarke, North-street, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Thos. Newton, Market-place, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Matthew Hodge, Church-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Edwd. Lansdowne, High-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Wm. Burton, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Brewer, do. | 0 2 6 |

| | |
|--|---------|
| John Dorch, Golden-hill, Wivelscombe | £0 2 6 |
| Robert Stone, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Benjamin N. Colliard, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Newton, Golden-hill, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Henry Larcombe, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Lacey Colliard, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Robt. Howell, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Lewis, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| James Stone, West-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| W. Robinson, Golden-hill, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Richards, Church-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums | 0 18 0 |
| George Brown, coal merchant, Sleaford, near Edinburgh | 1 0 0 |
| J. P. Heane, surgeon, Gloucester | 1 0 0 |
| Alfred Gould, Barbaran House, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Davies, shipbroker, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Charles Pressly, wireworker, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Ben. Bonnor, solicitor, do. | 0 5 0 |
| J. McClymont, farmer, Balsagart, Maybole, N.B. | 1 1 0 |
| Wm. Brown, banker, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Walter Andrews, writer, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Rev. John M. Thomson, do. | 1 1 0 |
| James Main, baker, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas McCrorce, farmer, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas McIlraith, merchant, do. | 0 2 6 |
| James McClure, mason, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Gendie, merchant, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Andrew Baird, do. | 0 5 0 |
| James Rennie, innkeeper, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. McFarlane, surgeon, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Stillie, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Mitchell, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Robt. Allen, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Hugh Crawford, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Mitchellson Porteus, do. | 0 3 6 |
| Small sums, do. | 3 0 0 |
| S. N., Manchester | 0 5 0 |
| R. Parkinson, 81 A, Market-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Higginson, 48, Travis-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Summerfield, 94, Ormond-st., C.-on-M., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Samuel Pearson, 26, Dale-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Airey, 26, Brewer-street, Port-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| W. Rothwell, 36, Dale-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Parry, Ashton-road, Openshaw, near do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Rawson, 5, Aldred-street, Salford, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Daniel Slater, Ordsall lane, Regent-road, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Reuben Gill, St. Mary's-gate, do. | 1 0 0 |
| J. M. Cavafy, Ionides and Co.'s, Greek-street, do. | 5 0 0 |
| James Symons, Duke-st., Stretford-road, Hulme, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Evans, Stretford-road, Hulme, do. | 5 0 0 |
| Harrison and Sale, Barnes-street, do. | 10 0 0 |
| Daniel Percival, 24, King-street, do. | 20 0 0 |
| J. F. Pettigrew and Sons, Back George-street, do. | 0 1 0 |
| Small subscription, do. | 15 0 0 |
| James Peirce, 45, Fore-street, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Mr. Cunningham, Brentford | 1 1 0 |
| Wm. M' Rae, Beddington-corner, Mitcham, Surrey | 0 2 6 |
| John Evans, 31, Newcastle-street, Strand | 2 2 0 |
| James Hendry, Cambridge-terrace, Hyde-park | 0 10 0 |
| A Reader of the Bible, do. | 1 0 0 |
| C. Turner, Sun Hotel, Southampton | 1 0 0 |
| John Hawkins, 2, Hanover-crescent, Brighton | 1 0 0 |
| W. A. Rogers, Alton, Hants | 1 8 0 |
| Free Trade Association of Shepton Mallet, second subscription, per W. Richardson | 10 0 0 |
| Giles Iles, tenant-farmer, Clapton, near Berkeley, Gloucestershire | 1 0 0 |
| Rev. Francis Muir, Leith | 1 0 0 |
| David Ewart, 13, Finch-lane | 1 0 0 |
| "Instead of a new bonnet?" | 1 1 0 |
| Mr. Gatto, 9, Hanway-street, Oxford-street | 1 0 0 |
| Dr. Hutton, Galashiels, N.B. | 1 0 0 |
| Edward Foster, Brooklands, Cambridge | 1 0 0 |
| Frederick Pattison, 574, Old Broad-street | 10 0 0 |
| Arthur Pattison, 573, Old Broad-street | 10 0 0 |
| Mr. Harman, carpenter, Highgate | 0 2 6 |
| David Dignam, 5, Carlton Cottages, Brunswick-st., Dover-road | 0 2 6 |
| George Reed, Burnham, near Bridgewater | 2 0 0 |
| H. R. W., Hastings | 0 10 0 |
| "Nine is a square number," Hastings | 0 10 0 |
| { J. and W. Archibald, manufacturers.. | 3 0 0 |
| { Hunter and Donaldson, merchants | 1 0 0 |
| { Andrew Dawson, Mar-street | 1 0 0 |
| Alloa, N.B. | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Lowrie, Dalkieth | 1 0 0 |
| George Newsome | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Wilson | 0 10 0 |
| John Whitaker | 1 0 0 |
| Robert Wilson | 0 5 0 |
| Robert Keighley | 0 7 6 |
| Joseph Parker | 0 5 0 |
| Jeremiah Hudwell | 0 5 0 |
| William Thompson | 0 2 6 |
| William Bailey | 0 1 0 |
| Frank Ubad | 0 3 0 |
| Robert Bleakley, Aylsham | 1 0 0 |
| George Birch, 13, Platt-terrace, Somers-town | 0 2 6 |
| P. R. Collier, Plymouth | 5 0 0 |
| H. Grant, Pleasant-row, New-road | 1 0 0 |
| W. Harrison, Hadlow, Kent | 1 1 0 |
| Small subscriptions | 9 11 0 |
| Rochdale, { John Fenton, Crimble | 100 0 0 |
| 8th Remittance. { Richard Whitworth, Yorkshire-st. | 5 0 0 |
| { Squire Barlow, tea dealer, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Henry Cornish and fellow-workmen, Wall-bridge Mills | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Trueeman and fellow-workmen, Southfield Mills | 1 0 0 |
| Mr. Denton and fellow-workmen, Thrupp Foundry | 1 10 0 |
| H. Hooper and fellow-workmen, Pitchcombe Mills | 1 0 0 |
| E. H. Durden, do. | 2 0 0 |
| John Ferrabee and Sons, Thrupp Foundry | 5 0 0 |
| B. Bucknall, King-street | 1 0 0 |
| C. B. Tanner and Friends, Thrupp, near Stroud | 1 15 0 |
| Rev. John Ewen, Hobkirk | 2 2 0 |
| Jas. Turnbull, Galahaw | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Scott, Karlstone | 1 0 0 |
| John Stone, Laidlaw's factory | 1 0 0 |
| James Dalgleish, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Alex. Law, woolsorter | 1 0 0 |
| Jas. Miller, warehouseman | 1 0 0 |
| Andrew White, baker | 1 0 0 |
| James Inglis, spinner | 1 0 0 |
| Andrew Rome, Mr. Elliot's factory, in addition to 2s. 6d. | 0 17 3 |
| John Rule, Wm. Wilson and Son's factory, in addition to 12s. 6d. | 0 7 6 |
| Neilson & Co., Kirkland, second subscription | 5 0 0 |
| John Gibb, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Jas. Peter, do. | 1 0 0 |
| D. Trail, for self and weavers of Kirkland Works | 1 1 0 |
| Alex. McIntyre, for self and flaxdressers of do. | 1 1 0 |
| Alex. Morris, for self and workmen employed in the spinning mill, Kirkland | 1 8 0 |
| Mr. Watson, manager, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Mr. Ross | 0 3 0 |
| Rbenezer Martin, Millbank, by | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Symington, Bleachfield Mill, for self and 11 other subscribers | 1 0 0 |
| Robert Bruce, for self and three other subscribers | 1 0 0 |
| James Steele, for self and eight other subscribers | 1 0 0 |

| | |
|---|---------|
| An Empty Stomach | £1 0 0 |
| Andrew Anderson, painter | 1 0 0 |
| David Littlejohn, merchant | 1 0 0 |
| John Alexander, jun. Abercrombie | 1 0 0 |
| James Bremner, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Friends at Millbreck | 1 0 0 |
| James Gregory, tailor, Knutsford | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Walter Edgar, Hight-street, Crieff, N.B. | 0 2 6 |
| Alex. M'Donald, do., do. | 0 2 0 |
| John Spencer | 4 0 0 |
| Robert Carswell, Lonsdale-place | 1 0 0 |
| Henry Perry, Keckle-grove, near | 2 0 0 |
| Henry Dobson | 1 0 0 |
| Rev. J. B. Sheppard | 1 0 0 |
| George Wattlesworth | 0 5 0 |
| W. Handleson | 2 0 0 |
| J. A. Tulk | 1 0 0 |
| Edwd. Thomas, Cleator, near, 2nd subscription | 1 0 0 |
| Cleator Mill, { James Williamson | 0 4 0 |
| 2nd subscrip. { Thomas Burns | 0 4 0 |
| { Malcolm Christie | 0 4 0 |
| { Samuel Bleakley | 0 4 0 |
| { James Meek | 0 4 0 |
| J. M'Clellan, Lowen Works | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums | 0 5 0 |
| John Ashton, Bewsey-street | 3 0 0 |
| Jos. Crossfield, Bank-quay | 50 0 0 |
| Thos. Haddfield, Buttermarket-street | 25 0 0 |
| A Friend, per Peter Rylands | 0 10 0 |
| Wm. Milner, Sankey-street | 5 0 0 |
| Mr. Tate, do. | 2 0 0 |
| Marshall and Co. | 590 0 0 |
| John Waddingham, Cookridge-street | 50 0 0 |
| Joseph Bateson, Park-cross-street | 10 0 0 |
| R. and T. Harrison, 46, Hunslet-lane | 2 2 0 |
| W. E. Hepper, Wortley | 1 0 0 |
| J. A. Ikin, Park-row | 8 8 0 |
| Maurice Jarvis, Basinghall-street | 2 0 0 |
| H. J. Marcus, do. | 2 0 0 |
| R. and J. Mortimer, Neville-street | 1 0 0 |
| Geo. Palfreyman, Briggate | 0 10 0 |
| G. Piesch, 168, Wellington-street | 10 0 0 |
| J. W. Smith, 1, Briggate | 5 0 0 |
| R. Varley and Co., near Wellington-street | 10 0 0 |
| Joseph Wilson, Duke-street | 0 5 0 |
| William Wilks, stonemason | 1 0 0 |
| John Kenworthy | 5 0 0 |
| Joseph Ogden, manager, Failsworth, near Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Brooks, grocer, Scott-field | 0 5 0 |
| Job Lees, Greenacres, near Manchester | 5 0 0 |
| Jacob Ratcliffe, Bank | 5 0 0 |
| John Haigh, spinner, Waterhead Mill, Greenacres, near Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| Hiram Robinson, shopkeeper, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Lees, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| James Schofield, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| James Thowlis, agent, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Hardman, agent, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Charles Turner, hosier | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Holt, waste dealer, Greenacres, near Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| James Nichols, grocer, Lees-road | 0 2 6 |
| John Dronsfield, waste dealer, King-street | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade, Portwood | 3 3 0 |
| Mrs. Woolley, Market-place | 1 1 0 |
| Henry Robinson, Millgate | 2 0 0 |
| Charles Robinson, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Munro, Lancashire-hill | 1 0 0 |
| Ephraim Hallam, Shaw-heath | 3 3 0 |
| Thos. Goulden, surgeon | 2 0 0 |
| James Southworth, Edgeley | 2 0 0 |
| Mrs. Southworth, do. | 1 0 0 |
| J. J. Moody, Poplar-grove | 3 2 0 |
| Mrs. Moody, do. | 0 10 6 |
| Messrs. Fernley's workpeople | 3 0 0 |
| William Robinson, Unicorn Inn | 1 1 0 |
| John Hurst, Mill-lane | 1 1 0 |
| Mr. Stewart's workpeople | 4 0 8 |
| William Charlesworth, Wellington-road | 3 3 0 |
| Isaac Lomas, 16, Castle-street | 1 0 0 |
| William Williamson, jun., Wellington-road | 10 0 0 |
| William Williamson, sen., Cale-green | 2 0 0 |
| John Torkington, Gt. Portwood-street | 1 1 0 |
| William Baddeley, Market-place | 1 1 0 |
| Samuel Smith Taylor, Wellington-rd. South | 1 1 0 |
| A Friend, per E. Hollins, Market-place | 5 0 0 |
| Saml. Bradburn, Meal-house Brow | 3 3 0 |
| Saml. Woodhead, Lower Hillgate | 1 0 0 |
| William Leah, Castle-street | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Jackson, 31, Park-street | 1 1 0 |
| William Wild, Lower Hillgate | 1 1 0 |
| Hiram Wakefield, Heaton-lane | 3 0 0 |
| Moses Chadwick, jun., Lancashire-hill | 1 1 0 |
| Edward Tomlinson, Underbank | 2 2 0 |
| William Watts, Middle Hillgate | 2 2 0 |
| John Jackson, Travis Brow | 2 0 0 |
| Peter Henshall, 54, Lord-street, and others of Mr. Orrell's hands | 0 5 0 |
| Daniel Donnelly, Heaton-lane | 0 5 0 |
| Samuel Birchington, Castle-street | 0 5 0 |
| Jesse Hulme, Shaw-heath | 0 5 0 |
| Wm. Henshaw, Wellington-road North | 0 5 0 |
| Charles Sefton, Grosvenor-street | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Henshaw, Wellington-road North | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend, Edgeley | 0 5 0 |
| Henry Dickens, 42, Ridgeway-lane | 0 2 6 |
| Samuel Bullock, Chapel-street | 0 5 0 |
| William Garside, Park-street | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend again, Edgeley | 0 2 6 |
| Samuel Shepley, George's-road | 0 5 0 |
| James Daniels, Golden Lion | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Smith, 198, Heaton-lane | 0 2 6 |
| John Neild, Lower Hillgate | 0 2 6 |
| Charles Dow, do. | 0 2 6 |
| William Holt, Middle Hillgate | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Holland, do. | 0 10 6 |
| Joseph Goodwin, Travis Brow | 0 2 6 |
| John Allmev, Lower Hillgate | 0 5 0 |
| Samuel Birch, Ridgeway-lane | 0 2 6 |
| W. W. Stones, Old-road | 0 2 6 |
| The Workpeople of Mr. Ashton, Apethorne Mill, near Stockport | 5 13 11 |
| A Friend, per William Tym | 1 1 |
| A. and A. Darby, 13, James-street | 200 0 0 |
| Thos. and John Brocklebank, Rumford-street | 100 0 0 |
| Richard Allison, jun., Wootton Hays | 25 0 0 |
| Joseph Robinson, 13, St. James's-street | 25 0 0 |
| A Friend, per J. Robinson | 1 1 |
| B., per do. | 1 1 |
| W. T. Moule, Wellington-terrace, Holt-hill, Tranmere, Cheshire | 1 1 0 |
| Richard Dodd, 33, Bold-street | 5 0 0 |
| James Spence, jun., 28, Chapel-street | 25 0 0 |
| James Ryley, jun., 5, Exchange-street West | 30 0 0 |
| Potter, Brothers, Cotton-court, Sweeting-st. | 1 1 0 |
| Thos. Wylie, 56, Gloucester-street | 1 0 0 |
| Frederick Robison, 6, Chester-street | 2 2 0 |
| Mrs. Sarah Cousin and Daughter | 0 5 0 |

| | | | | | | | | | | | | | | |
|--|---|----|----|---|--|---|-----|---|---|---------------------------------|--------------------------------|----|----|---|
| Sunderland, Fourth Re- mittance. | William Bell, Ford | 45 | 5 | 0 | Derby, Second Remittance. | C. Topham, Green-lane | 250 | 0 | 0 | Huddersfield, Tenth Remittance. | John Cooke, New Town | 20 | 2 | 6 |
| | Matthew Baldwin, East Cross-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | John Hill, St. Alkmund's Churchyard | 5 | 0 | 0 | | William Richardson, Jeweller | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| | J. Preston, Lambton-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | J. and E. Massey, London-road | 5 | 0 | 0 | | Uriah Lodge, Castle-hill, near | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | T. R. Wilson, draper, High-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | | F. Swanwick, Whittington, near Chesterfield | 2 | 0 | 0 | | Rev. J. Trappes | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Bernard Ogden, Dunning-street | 1 | 1 | 0 | | Wm. Horsley, Sadlergate | 2 | 0 | 0 | | Solomon Bykes, Lepton | 0 | 4 | 0 |
| | Thomas Reed, 11, Nicholson-street | 1 | 1 | 0 | | F. Waite, City road | 2 | 0 | 0 | | Martha Lodge, do. | 0 | 8 | 0 |
| | C. H. M. | 1 | 1 | 0 | | Thomas Tunaley, Workop | 1 | 0 | 0 | | John Castle, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| | William Ray, 22, Moorgate-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | J. R. Bindley, Ashby-de-la-Zouch | 2 | 0 | 0 | | Robert Whitehead, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| | R. B. Cox, King-street | 5 | 5 | 0 | | N. Truscott and Friend, Silwell-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Small sums, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| | Anti-fendallists | 1 | 0 | 0 | | John Hutton, Engineer's Office, Railway | 1 | 0 | 0 | | George Tolson, Dalton, near | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Hathersage, North Derby. | Thos. Wright, 14, Norfolk-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | A Friend to Free Trade | 1 | 0 | 0 | Jasper M'Kean | 0 | 0 | 6 | | |
| | A Friend to the League, J. A. | 1 | 0 | 0 | A Farmer | 1 | 0 | 0 | A Friend | 0 | 0 | 6 | | |
| | J. Hutchinson, jun., Sunderland-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | James Wightman, Crich, Derbyshire | 1 | 0 | 0 | William Batley, New North-road | 2 | 10 | 0 | | |
| | A Free-Trader | 1 | 0 | 0 | George Fritch, Peters-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | J. S. Booth, Buxton-road | 1 | 10 | 0 | | |
| | Rt. Cook, landowner, farmer, & manufacturer | 10 | 0 | 0 | Richard Bryer, Cornmarket | 1 | 0 | 0 | J. and A. Bennett | 20 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Charles Silvester, farmer and landholder | 0 | 5 | 0 | A Friend to Justice | 1 | 0 | 0 | Richard Roberts, Lowerhead-row | 10 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Tobias Child, farmer | 1 | 0 | 0 | T. Roberts, St. James's-lane | 1 | 0 | 0 | George Tetley, Cross Church-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Rev. T. Ross | 0 | 5 | 0 | John Bindley, Wilfred-cottage, Ashby-de-la-Zouch | 1 | 1 | 0 | From R. W., after reading Mr. Trotter's speech at the meeting of the Lords of the Soil | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | James Morton, farmer and landlord | 0 | 5 | 0 | W. Abel | 1 | 0 | 0 | R. W. C., Lounhead | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | William Middleton, farmer | 0 | 2 | 6 | John Porter, Ashbourn-road | 1 | 0 | 0 | John Cochran, M.D., Lawnmarket | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| Kendal. | T. Marsden, small farmer | 0 | 5 | 0 | W. Taylor's Workpeople | 8 | 8 | 0 | R. Carmichael, 75, Northumberland-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Charles Elliot, farmer | 0 | 5 | 0 | John Merry | 0 | 2 | 6 | Ennetta and Pass, 107, George-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | A Friend to the Repeal of the Corn Laws | 0 | 5 | 0 | Joseph Stocks and Co. | 100 | 0 | 0 | Alex. Henderson, 72, Leith-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | John Harfield | 0 | 2 | 6 | A Friend | 20 | 0 | 0 | Robert M'Donald, 275, High-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Richard Froggatt, farmer | 0 | 5 | 0 | Eli Bates | 20 | 0 | 0 | John Ralph, 7, Kirkgate, Leith | 2 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | R. Greaves | 0 | 2 | 6 | John Balmforth, Northowram, near | 1 | 0 | 0 | James Scott, Royal-terrace | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | George Wilson, wheelwright, &c. | 0 | 16 | 8 | George Moore, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | Rev. George Sandy, Gore-bridge | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Small sums | 0 | 16 | 8 | "Gallev" | 0 | 5 | 0 | J. T. Straton, 106, Princes-street | 5 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | William Whitwell, for Free Trade generally | 20 | 0 | 0 | Joseph Biddle, Regent-place | 2 | 0 | 0 | A. Brooks, 61, do. | 0 | 10 | 6 | | |
| | Corn. Nicholson, Cowan-head, Kendal | 20 | 0 | 0 | John Rodgers, Broad-street | 2 | 2 | 0 | James Walker, 4, Wharton-place | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| Stockton-on-Tees, Second Remittance. | Robt. Benson, Park-side | 20 | 0 | 0 | John Owen, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | Surplus arising from Sale of Tickets on 11th Jan., at the Meeting in Music Hall, after defraying all expenses | 2 | 8 | 8 | | |
| | J. J. and W. Wilson | 20 | 0 | 0 | William Parker, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 | A Friend, South-bridge | 2 | 2 | 0 | | |
| | John Wakefield, Sedgwick (an Advocate for a low fixed duty) | 10 | 0 | 0 | Thomast Gossage, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | J. W. | 0 | 10 | 6 | | |
| | Thomas Robinson and Co. | 10 | 0 | 0 | Somerville Beckhans, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | A. B., 28, George-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Thompson Bindloss | 10 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Greenwood, Islington | 0 | 5 | 0 | David Forrester, 1, West Newington-place, (second subscription) | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| | John Thompson and Co. | 10 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Little, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | Small sums | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | Edward Whitwell | 10 | 0 | 0 | William Ryland, Ladywood-lane | 1 | 0 | 0 | Per John Wylie, Wylie and Lockhead, Cochran-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Isaac Whitwell | 10 | 0 | 0 | Henry Buck, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | Per John Stark, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | William Ball, Rydal | 10 | 0 | 0 | James Hare, Oozele-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | James Thomson, West Arbuckle, 104, Hill-street, Garnet-hill | 10 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Isaac Wilson | 10 | 0 | 0 | John Beck, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | John Murray, 408, Argyle-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| Wakefield, Third Remittance. | Edward Brown | 10 | 0 | 0 | Joseph Bentley, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | Malcolm Kerr, Queen-street | 2 | 2 | 0 | | |
| | Rd. Fothergill, Bridgehouse | 5 | 0 | 0 | Workpeople at T. H. Ryland and Co.'s manufactory | 2 | 1 | 0 | James Scott, Exchange-square | 50 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Saml. Marshall | 5 | 0 | 0 | A Friend | 1 | 0 | 0 | John Monteith, 20, Miller-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Saml. Whineray | 5 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Scott, Steelhouse-lane | 0 | 5 | 0 | Andrew Brand, 32, St. Vincent-place | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | John Hudson | 5 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Palmer, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | Alex. Morris, 4, Wilson-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | C. Metcalfe and Sons | 5 | 0 | 0 | Edward Thomas, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 | David Rattray, 6, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | "Corn Laws make Paupers" | 4 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Scathergood, do. | 0 | 15 | 0 | John Ewing, Greenhead | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | Edward Swinburn, Troutbeck Bridge | 4 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Hodgkins, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | James Broom, 163, Ingram-street | 10 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Saml. Rhodes | 4 | 0 | 0 | Thomas Watts, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | J. and G. Pattison, Buchanan-street | 25 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Geo. Chamley | 4 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Avis, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 | James Lamont, Madeira-court | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| Wakfield, Third Remittance. | Mrs. Margaret Marriott, Stramongate | 3 | 0 | 0 | Thomas Lytle, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | Thompson and Stirling, Queen-street | 5 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | John Farrar | 3 | 0 | 0 | Mr. James, Snowhill | 0 | 10 | 0 | W. S. Gilchrist, per H. Kennedy | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | A Repeater | 2 | 10 | 0 | R. Tomkinson, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | Jameson and Buntin, Oswald-street | 5 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | A Friend to Free Trade | 2 | 10 | 0 | W. Pickering, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | Workers of James Anderson and Co., South Hanover-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | J. A. Knight | 2 | 2 | 0 | W. Turner, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | Campbell and Henry, 209, Argyle-street | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| | Henry Hewitson | 2 | 2 | 0 | John Houghton, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | John Wallace, farmer, Netherplace, Newtown-mearns | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| | John Hewitson | 2 | 2 | 0 | Mr. Pole, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | Donald Ross, jun., Miller-street | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| | Edmund Cockshutt | 2 | 2 | 0 | Mr. Jones, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | Neale Thompson, Campbell | 50 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | George Dent | 2 | 0 | 0 | G. Lingard, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 | John Bowden, 13, Turner's-court | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | James Holmes | 2 | 0 | 0 | Benjamin Jefford, Bull-street | 0 | 10 | 0 | Wm. Thomson, 43, Argyle-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| Wakfield, Third Remittance. | Miss Shutt | 2 | 0 | 0 | T. Brooks, Steelhouse-lane | 0 | 10 | 0 | Wm. Kerr, 43, Queen-street | 3 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Edward Burton jun. | 2 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Holland, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 | Robt. Barclay and Co., Slip Dock, Bromielaw | 2 | 2 | 0 | | |
| | Rev. T. Wilkinson | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Lycett, Barr-street | 0 | 10 | 0 | Robert Morrison, 186, Gallowgate | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Jonathan Younghusband | 1 | 0 | 0 | Smith and Kemp's outworkers | 0 | 12 | 7 | Wm. M'Nab, 10, Russell-street East | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Andrew Thompson | 1 | 0 | 0 | John Poncia, Pershore-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | Duncan M'Donald, 39, Gallowgate | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | George Braithwaite | 2 | 0 | 0 | Edward Harcourt, 49, Smallbrook-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | John M'Nab | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Miss Thomson | 2 | 0 | 0 | Charles Smith, 97, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | A. and J. M'Nab, 145, Ingram-street | 5 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Reginald Remington | 2 | 0 | 0 | Thomas Hudley, 9, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | J. and D. Anderson, 88, Stockwell (2nd sub.) | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | John Mann | 2 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Redfern, 85, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | Small sums | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | J. and E. Busher | 1 | 0 | 0 | Thomas Forgham, 96, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | Workers of Miller and Caldwell, Port Dundas | 2 | 2 | 0 | | |
| Wakfield, Third Remittance. | John Wilson, Town View | 1 | 0 | 0 | A Friend | 0 | 3 | 0 | David Walker, 43, Portugal-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | James Parker | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Suckling, Smallbrook-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | James Black, 71, Candleriggs | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | James Braithwaite | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Bishley, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | James Russell, 95, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Mark Beaufoy, Bowness | 1 | 12 | 0 | T. Bishley, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | Andw. Robertson, 85, do. | 0 | 7 | 0 | | |
| | Joseph Levers | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Withers, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | William Wilson, 73, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Edward Busher and Sons | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Moore, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | Robt. Fleckfield, 119, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | Thomas Robinson | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Madenberg, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | John Dawson, 35, Ingram-street | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| | William Kitching | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Dodge, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 | George Lyle, 127, Brunswick-street | 0 | 10 | 0 | | |
| | Simon Mashiter | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Beat, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | James J. Robertson, Queen-street | 10 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | John Banks | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Mills, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | George Robson, do. | 5 | 0 | 0 | | |
| Wakfield, Third Remittance. | Michael Raine | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Jones, trunkmaker, New-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | James Wylie, 52, Wilson-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | L. O. Connell and Co. | 1 | 0 | 6 | Mr. Jackson, carrier, Navigation-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | Archibald Walker, 17, Nicholson-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | John T. Collinson | 1 | 0 | 0 | A. and J. Salt, Dudley-street | 5 | 0 | 0 | A Mechanic | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | Thomas Tate | 1 | 0 | 0 | W. Bradley, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | Archibald Buchanan, 25, Kent-street | 0 | 7 | 6 | | |
| | Stephen Robinson | 1 | 0 | 0 | Lewis Lyons, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | John Rankine, 103, Hospital-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | George Allen | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Woolley, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | Peter Smith, 21, Thistle-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | John Hoggarth | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Millward, Inkleys | 1 | 0 | 0 | Peter McKinnon, 11, Stobcross-street | 0 | 8 | 0 | | |
| | No Compromise | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Sheldon, Hurst-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | George Lanaster, Clyde Bank | 2 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Samuel Compston | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Mulligan, Blue Pig, Moor-street | 0 | 10 | 0 | Alex. Fotheringham, 86, Wellington-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Anthony G. Geldart, innkeeper | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mr. Power, diesinker, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | Workers with do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| Wakfield, Third Remittance. | Thomas Blacow, hatter | 0 | 10 | 0 | Mr. Evans, New Meeting-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | Workers with D. and J. Anderson, 30, South Hanover-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Benj. Broadbent | 0 | 10 | 0 | Mr. Taft, whipmaker, Freeman-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | John McIntyre, Greenlaw-place, Paisley-road | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Robert Dent | 0 | 10 | 0 | J. Aspell, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 | A Friend | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Thomas Rigge, draper | 0 | 10 | 0 | Samuel Thornton, Bradford-street | 5 | 0 | 0 | George Wilson, St. Vincent-place | 20 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Miss Steel | 0 | 10 | 0 | E. Grimley, Wood-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | Robert Hutcheson, Hutcheson-street | 20 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Miss Ann Maud | 0 | 10 | 0 | Jenkins and Ashford, Digheth | 2 | 2 | 0 | Workers of T. Kennedy & Co., Little Govan | 1 | 14 | 0 | | |
| | Leonard Machell | 0 | 10 | 0 | J. R. Boyce, Alcester-street | 1 | 1 | 0 | Adam Walker, Broad-street, Mile-end | 2 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Thomas Field | 0 | 10 | 0 | John Hardwick, Bradford-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | Workers with T. Hamilton, 95, London-st. | 1 | 8 | 0 | | |
| | John Mallinson | 0 | 10 | 0 | Mr. Nickling's workmen | 1 | 0 | 0 | Robert McGregor, Chronicle office | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Samuel Bolton | 0 | 10 | 0 | Mr. Mee, Great Hampton-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | J. McKenzie, manager, Dandyvan Iron Works | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| Wakfield, Third Remittance. | Mr. Morris | 0 | 10 | 0 | Mr. Edmonds, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 | Workers Caledonian Pottery, St. Rollox. | 1 | 1 | 1 | | |
| | William Tindall | 0 | 10 | 0 | Friends at Grand Turk | 1 | 0 | 0 | Do. Bottle Works, do. | 2 | 16 | 6 | | |
| | Miss Rodick | 0 | 10 | 0 | W. H. Smith, Gough-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | Do. Couper, Maitland, & Co., do. | 1 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | John Hebron | 0 | 10 | 0 | James Baldwin, New Hall-street | 5 | 0 | 0 | Do. Messrs. Patterson, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Brocklebank and Gawith | 0 | 10 | | | | | | | | | | | |

Francis Hansell £1 0 0
Gilling and Smith 1 0 0
David Baker 1 0 0
A. B. 1 0 0

Bradford, Yorkshire, James Firth, yarn merchant .. 10 0 0
11th Remittance. John Baines, Shelf 2 0 0

A Friend to Free Trade 5 0 0
A Landowner 2 0 0
Mountford Fynney, King-street 1 0 0
T. H. Hillard, Stockwell-street 0 10 0
James Wingood, Derby-street 0 5 0
John Barlow, Spout-street 0 2 6
James Beard, London-street 0 2 6
William Birch, Ball Hay-green 0 2 6
Wm. Hollingworth, Spout-street 0 2 6
Haml. Johnson, Workhouse-street 0 2 6
Wm. Lovatt, Overton's-bank 0 2 6
Thos. Rider, Ball Hay-green 0 2 6
Wm. Tatton, Pickwood-road 0 2 6
Alfred Trafford, Workhouse-street 0 2 6
Levi Trafford, Alsop's-row 0 2 6

James Harrison, Market-place 1 0 0
John Whitehead, coal proprietor 1 0 0
John Holland, batter 0 10 0
A Friend 0 7 0
Edmund Butterworth, shopkeeper, Church-st. .. 0 5 0
James Simpson, The Park 0 5 0
John Ward, butcher 0 5 0
John Wrigley, Lark-hill 0 2 6
William Horaman, printer 0 2 6
J. Rushton, E. R. Brown, J. Smith, and J. Hughes, 5s. additional each 1 0 0

Workmen of Roberts and Mettam 1 1 3
Workmen of Mr. Tofteld 1 0 0
Workmen of Gouldthorpe and Greaves 1 0 0
Workmen of John White, Workhouse Croft .. 1 2 0
Workmen of John Walters 1 0 0
Workmen of W. Fisher 1 0 0
Workmen of Thos. Turton and Sons, further amount 0 17 0
Workmen of Joseph Rodgers and Sons 3 17 3
Workmen of Waterhouse, Hatfield, and Co. .. 1 10 0
Joseph Prith, Crabtree, near 1 0 0
Thomas Wilde, Wisewood, near 1 0 0
Peter Tinsley, Loxley House, near 1 0 0
Joseph Siddons 0 2 6
Joshua Wilde, Wisewood, near 1 0 0
Thomas Parkin, do. 1 0 0
Thomas Adair 1 0 0
John Sawyer, High-street 1 0 0
Thomas Hague, Tudor-street 0 5 0
James Green, Fargate 1 0 0
John Sawyer, Bell-street 0 10 0
Wm. Murfin, Eyre-street 0 2 6
J. Warburton, do. 0 2 6
George Roberts, Pond-street 0 10 0
Wm. White, 36, Furnival-street 0 2 6
George Allen, Duke-street 0 5 0
Joseph Yates 0 2 0
Small sums, per George Johnson 0 4 6
Chadburn, Brothers 3 3 0
No. 100 0 9 0
Wm. Shaw, Chelerton 0 5 0
James Chesterman 1 0 0
Friend, per J. S. Davy 0 5 0
Adams and Stubbs, Fargate 1 0 0

The following are the particulars of subscriptions, amounting to £20 17s. 6d., received from the workmen at Messrs. T. Turton and Sons' Spring-works, Sheffield, advertised in LEAGUE, No. 23.

George Wragg £1 10 0
Edward Inmann 1 1 0
John Booth 1 1 0
George Swinden 1 1 0
Thos. Hague 0 10 6
Joseph Harrison 0 10 6
James Nuttall 0 10 6
Samuel Maraden 0 10 6
Wm. Mason 0 10 6
John Green 0 10 6
Paul Wild 0 10 6
Thos. Warburton 0 10 6
George Shitt 0 10 6
Hiram Young 0 10 6
G. Thompson 0 10 6
Jas. Cockayne 0 10 6
Thos. Broadbent 0 10 6
Jas. Benton 0 5 6
Wm. Blake 0 5 6
John Foster 0 5 6
T. Bramhall 0 5 6
Wm. Bleath 0 5 6
John Rickard 0 5 6
John Pitt 0 5 6
John Witham 0 5 6
John Butler 0 5 6
Chas. Wragg 0 5 6
Chas. Grey 0 5 6
Wm. Howson 0 5 6
Wm. Hartle 0 5 6
T. Hawksworth 0 5 6
T. Heath 0 5 6
Philip Thomas 0 7 0
John Goddard 0 5 6
G. Cliffe 0 5 6
D. Fletcher 0 5 6
George Hayes 0 5 6
George Dawson 0 5 6
H. Wilkinson 0 5 6
J. Haywood 0 3 0
J. Loxley 0 5 6
G. Roebuck 0 5 0
J. Lishman 0 5 0
K. Smith 0 2 6
J. Green 0 2 6
T. Nutbrown 0 10 6
J. Badger 0 5 6
W. Kemp 0 10 6
T. Bradbury 0 5 6
T. Wilkinson 0 5 0
G. Smith 0 3 0
Small sums 0 2 0

Sandiacre, Feb. 24, 1844.

DEAR SIR, I consider the Corn Laws unreasonable, anti-scriptural, and unchristian. All laws that make labour scarce and bread dear must be wicked. I therefore heartily approve of the labours of the National Anti-Corn-Law League to get these laws erased from the statute-book. I consider Almighty God as the great parent of all that breathe! That nothing He has made is beneath His notice! That all His designs and purposes are founded in infinite wisdom and benevolence! That God must have some wise and benevolent design in causing one country to be productive of some articles useful to man, and in causing other countries to be equally prolific and productive in other articles equally useful for the whole family of man. I believe one design of this is that there might be a Free Trade, or an interchange of different articles, in order that man might find nought in man but a friend and a brother. Another design of God in this is, that war may cease—that there may be universal peace and good-will between all the nations of the earth, and that swords be beaten into ploughshares, and spears into pruning hooks. May God hasten the time! I gave two sovereigns last year to the £50,000 fund; and this year I beg your acceptance of £5 towards the £100,000 fund.

I am, dear Sir, yours most respectfully,

Z. TAFT,

Wesleyan Minister.

P. S. Please to enter this £5 as follows:—
Z. Taft, Wesleyan Minister .. £2 10 0
Mrs. Taft 2 10 0

£5 0 0

towards the League Fund.

George Wilson, Esq., Chairman of the League.

GREAT MEETING OF THE LEAGUE AT MANCHESTER.

MANCHESTER, Thursday.

The Anti-Corn-Law League had a meeting last night in the Free-Trade Hall, when George Thompson, Esq. (recently returned from India), and Thomas Plint, Esq. (of Leeds), having been announced as speakers, there was a crowded attendance. G. Wilson, Esq., presided, and among the gentlemen present, in addition to the speakers, we noticed the following on the platform:—Alderman Brooks; Alderman Armitage; Thomas Bazley, jun., Esq.; W. Harvey, Esq.; Thomas Woolley, Esq.; R. R. Moore, Esq.; Henry Rawson, Esq.; J. B. Scott, Esq.; B. Syddall, Esq.; Joseph Simpson, Esq.; Joseph Thompson, Esq.; S. Lees, Esq.; A. Bauer, Esq.; C. Cobden, Esq.; James Harvey, Esq., Liverpool; John Souchay, Esq.; W. Ryder, Esq.; Alfred Charlton, Esq.; John Whitlow, Esq.; Richard Wilson, Esq.; J. Diggle, Esq.; Joseph Leese, jun., Esq.; W. Bow, Esq.; Dr. Clark, late from India; W. Woolley, Esq.; Richard Gardner, Esq.; B. A. and W. Evans, Esqrs., &c.

The Chartist disturbers, satisfied with the check they received at the last meeting, did not renew their attempt on this occasion.

The Secretary, Mr. HICKIN, having read the minutes of the last meeting, on the motion of Mr. Alderman Brooks, seconded by Mr. BAZLEY, they were confirmed.

The CHAIRMAN then rose and said:—Ladies and Gentlemen,—One of the most novel topics of the monopolist press, and of some of the speakers at their principal meetings, who have circulated the information, is, that since the declaration of Sir Robert Peel in Parliament of his intention to maintain the Corn Laws inviolate, the Anti-Corn-Law League has been extinguished. (Laughter.) They are not sure to whom they are indebted for this extraordinary proof of intellectual power and skill. Some say the squire, at their meetings, have had such an influence over public opinion, that to that cause, in a great measure, the fall of the League may be attributed; others think that the Premier himself did it; others that the Trollopes, the Tyrells, and the Knatchbulls, and other monopolists, have so far coerced him, that the Premier himself, under their coercion, has done it for them; but they all agree in this, that, whoever has done it, the thing is palpable and evident to everybody, and that very soon the Anti-Corn-Law League will be heard of only as a matter of history! (Laughter and applause.) Now, we shall not enter into discussion with them upon that subject, but we will submit to them and others that which we thought was apparent to everybody,—that, so far as we have yet proceeded, there is no evidence whatever of diminished interest in the proceedings of the League. (Loud cheers.) It is quite true that some of the noble lords who have addressed these meetings have made what they consider to be heavy lunges at us,—have hit us some hard blows, as they are described to be,—but, then, these we expected. They have been dealt out so much at random, too,—the men themselves have dealt in misrepresentation so much, that the most charitable construction one can put upon them is, that the men who used them were labouring under such a state of mental aberration that it behoved their friends to look to them, to see that they no longer had the control of their own affairs, much less to exercise the functions of legislators in the upper House of Parliament. (Much laughter and applause.) Oh, it is an excellent thing, this misrepresentation! It is the invariable weapon with which cowards seek to oppose great truths. (Applause.) We say, "Repeal the Corn Laws;" the answer is, "You are incendiaries!" We say, "Diminish the tax on labour;" the answer is, "You want to destroy the higher orders of society!" (Applause.) We say, "Let go your hold of the people's food;" and the answer is, "Be gone; our marriage settlements and mortgages forbid it!" (Loud cheering.) We have heard a great deal—we have heard exaggerated accounts of their meetings. We have repeatedly given instances of these exaggerations, at our meetings, and in the LEAGUE newspaper. Why, the accounts published in their own journals are proof of this. I take the last account. They had a meeting at Durham, and the Morning Herald put down the numbers at 1800; the Morning Post more modestly puts it down at 1500; another journal, not choosing to split hairs about the matter, said from 1000 to 2000; another says from 400 to 500 (laughter); while letters, which we have received from private hands, say that at no time were there present more than 350 in the room. (Much laughter.) Well, it may be said that parties are liable to be mistaken: they are; but the room has since been measured! (Applause.) It contains 153 square yards, a considerable portion of which was taken off for the platform, while at the higher end seats were placed round the room. At one end it was crowded, but at the other end there were seats for people who were overheated (laughter), near the platform, to cool themselves; and, taking into consideration everything—the numbers who went there on business, those who went there out of curiosity, the numbers who were compelled to go—we have reason to believe that not one quarter of the number of people were there who are down in the Morning Herald, the ministerial organ of the day, as being at that meeting. (Applause.) Another move has been to advertise requisitionists. And if requisitionists really signed requisitions to lord-lieutenants of counties to call these meetings, if they signed them and did it spontaneously, and without influence from their landlords, then we admit that these requisitions would present a tolerable idea of the opinions of the farmers in the various places where they have been got up; but one requisition, as an instance to the contrary, was got up in Kincardineshire, signed by 456 people; the meeting took place on the 26th of February at Stonehaven, the Lord-Lieutenant, Lord Arbutnot, took the chair; and how many of the requisitionists, think you, attended? Fifteen! (roars of laughter); and of these there were two landlords, two sons of landlords, and three were occupiers. But we need not go there to show that they have no strength in counties. Yesterday, at Northwich, which is purely an agricultural district, the monopolists, finding there was a large majority against them, proposed an adjournment to some hole-and-corner meeting, where they could pass resolutions unmolested by the populace of the town. (Laughter.) And so it is everywhere. At Chesterfield a similar meeting was held; at Freemasons' Hall the same was the result. They have no power over public opinion to succeed in obtaining large meetings, where the votes can be taken openly, under any circumstances whatever, either in agricultural or manufacturing districts. (Applause.) We have heard that one of their great moves will be to petition the Legislature. Well, we have tried that: we tried it for five years. It has not answered with us: it may answer better with them. We petitioned, first, and had half a million signatures; we petitioned next with a million of signatures; we petitioned with a million and a half (cheers); and we petitioned the next time with about two millions of signatures; but we found that whether with one million or two millions—more or less—they appeared to have no influence on the Legislature in inducing them to relax this law. But, gentlemen, had petitions had influence, the Corn Laws would never have been passed in 1815. (Loud cheers.) If petitioning had had influence, the Corn Laws would have been long ago abolished. (Renewed cheers.) We rejoice, however, take what steps they will, to see them take the field. (Hear, hear.) There now can be no middle course to take: betwixt them and us, betwixt the Rent League—which is to vindicate these monopolists in taking a part of the hard earnings of industry from year to year for their own use, without any equivalent—and our League, which is to protect the industry of the country, there can be no mistake. (Applause.) Let every man select for himself under which flag he will choose to take his stand—there is no intermediate ground: the large boroughs are declaring with us, with one or two exceptions, which we hope speedily to set right (applause); and in the agricultural districts the monopolists are losing ground from day to day; go where you will, the proof is evident that the Corn Laws, and other monopolies united with them, will be abolished, and the supporters of them become the laughing stock and derision of the whole world. (Great cheering.) Ladies and gentlemen, we shall be addressed this evening, first, by our excellent friend, Mr. Plint, from Leeds (applause); and then by our excellent friend, Mr. Geo. Thompson, whose absence from England the Anti-Corn-Law League has had very great cause to regret during the last eighteen months. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. PLINT, of Leeds, then came forward, and in a short but eloquent speech, after describing the rapid progress which Free-Trade principles had made, and were making in Yorkshire as well as Lancashire, exposed the gross falsehoods and exaggerations put forth by the Anti-Leaguers. The Church and State Gazette, in quoting from a Parliamentary document as to the returns from consuls abroad of the corn exported by various countries, quoted the quantity which Dantzic could export at 3,000,000 instead of 300,000 (round numbers), and which Hamburg could export at 5,000,000 quarters instead of 500,000. (Much laughter.)

Mr. GEORGE THOMPSON then stepped to the front of the platform, and was received with the most enthusiastic burst of cheering we ever heard in the Free-Trade Hall. He was proceeding to address the meeting, when the cheering was again renewed and continued for several minutes, the whole company rising and cheering again and again, the ladies waving their handkerchiefs and the gentlemen their hats. Again and again the cheering was renewed while Mr. Thompson gave utterance to one or two sentences which we could not hear. After the applause had subsided, he spoke as follows:—Ladies and Gentlemen,—Out of a full and overflowing heart I thank you for the more than cordial welcome you have given me to Manchester after a somewhat protracted absence. Since I bade you farewell in another place, I have travelled far and seen much; have been incessantly occupied in matters wholly extraneous from the subjects on which you are accustomed to be engaged. But I have not on that account lost sight of your rapid and triumphant progress, still less have I ever for a single moment swerved or seen any cause to swerve from that great and holy principle upon which your movements are based—namely, that the bounties of Divine Providence spread over the earth for the benefit of all, should not be intercepted between the Giver who is in heaven and the recipient who is on earth, by any laws or interpositions like those of the Corn Laws. (Applause.) Ladies and gentlemen, though otherwise occupied I have not been wholly idle in your cause, or ignorant of what you were doing; nor have I discovered an absence of interest in your proceedings among the Europeans with whom I have associated in going and returning to and from India. Upon the Atlantic and the Mediterranean,—ascending the Nile and traversing the Red Sea,—in the Gulf of Bengal and on the banks of the Ganges,—to the foot of the Himalaya mountains,—everywhere I have found men conversing upon the extraordinary—the almost unparalleled progress of your great and patriotic cause. (Great applause.) I have not been able to exert myself as heretofore in addressing multitudinous assemblies, for it is difficult to find in any other part of the world than in Manchester, either that feeling in the community, or the community itself capable of exhibiting so rare and exhilarating, and I will add, sublime a spectacle as that upon which I at this moment gaze; but so far as I could, in conversation and by means of my pen, I have endeavoured to extend still further the knowledge of your principles, or to confirm men's minds in their attachment to those principles, by illustrating them in connection with the associations, and the scenes by which our countrymen are surrounded in other and distant lands. ("Hear, hear," and applause.) Ladies and gentlemen, having traced the effects of your movements upon the minds of men at the distance of 10,000 miles from the spot on which I stand, I return again, through the kindness of a watchful Providence, to this, the spring-head of Anti-Corn-Law feeling and energy, and I exult in the sight of your have in no way deteriorated, in no way changed for the worse; that there has been no abatement of principle, no relaxation of energy, no falling off in numbers, no letting down of your great purpose, nor any relaxation from your efforts, nor the slightest wandering from your original doctrine and principle; all changes have been for the better: your leaders are more eloquent; your meetings are doubled and quadrupled. I left you in a room up two flights of stairs, and I find you in the largest room in the kingdom. (Great applause.) I left the ladies busy in the Theatre Royal in Manchester, and I come back and find the gentlemen busy in the Theatre Royal, London, with audiences that would fill a manager's eyes with tears of joy, if he did not die of an actual paralysis of bliss upon the spot. (Prolonged applause.) Yet it is said the League is expiring ("hear, hear," and laughter); and last week it was my misfortune to read gloomy and distressing prognostications of the utter annihilation of this body by a race of giants that were to make their appearance at Freemasons' Hall, in London, on Monday evening last. They met. Gentlemen, we read in an ancient book that the people who lived in the plains of Shinar came together, and they said one to another, "Go to now, let us build a tower, the height of which shall reach to heaven, so that we may not again be swept away when the waters shall overflow the earth;" and while they were building this tower, it happened to them as it happened to the people in Freemasons' Hall (only to the latter it happened much sooner than to the former, for they made considerable progress in their work, though they did not get up to heaven), it happened to them that, in laying this mighty tower, they were smitten with a confusion of tongues (long-continued applause); and their great demonstration, which was really to annihilate the League, was only a little demonstration of the absolute absurdity of endeavouring to persuade men that they should starve their own bellies. (Great applause.) Gentlemen, I am glad to find that, by a rapid process, you are analysing severely and accurately the population of this country; that you are now distinguishing systematically, and by infallible signs, your friends from your opponents, at the same time you are constantly increasing the number of the former, and lessening at once the number and importance and strength of the latter. You have taken up the question of questions; you have compelled all parties and ranks to speak out; you have at length constrained the principle with which you are grappling to take a name and an embodied form, and I congratulate you equally with Mr. Plint on the fact that you have constrained this principle—which aforesaid you were obliged to state for yourselves and embody for yourselves, and to battle with your own representations and embodiments—you have constrained this principle to take a form and a name and an embodiment, and now you have the decks clear, you have your opponents themselves in the field; and there is no sign to me more exhilarating, or more prognosticating of a sure and speedy triumph, than that you have brought your opponents from their hiding-places—that their silence is broken—that the oracle now speaks—that the high priests are before your eyes—and that you need not now, like "Tom Thumb" of old, make a giant that you may slay him; Goliath is in the field, and, if I may use another figure, you have the pebble from the brook. Let your trust be alone in Him who can give success to mortal efforts, and the giant now challenging you to the combat shall, ere long, be prostrate in the dust, and your foot be upon his neck. (Long-continued cheering.) While, therefore, you congratulate me on my return from a distant journey—a journey full of interest of every kind—a journey respecting which, when your triumph shall be achieved, and the laurels shall grace your brows, I may, perhaps, find audience of you to tell you something about (loud cheers),—while you congratulate me upon my return from a distant pilgrimage to my native land, and welcome me once more to your ranks with a heart more firmly attached than ever to your cause, I must congratulate you upon the progress you have made, and the position you have attained. (Hear, hear.) I have been complimented since my return by some of my kind friends upon my improved appearance. On this subject I cannot be a judge myself; but what the ladies say must be true. (Hear, hear.) Well, I beg leave to return the compliment; and I may say to you, "Dear me, how stout you are grown; why, you are twice the size you were when I parted with you! And how much your circumstances have improved; and your income is larger! And then you have crept into favour." (Hear, hear.) But I know the reason of all this. I left you pent up in the manufacturing districts, but you have been taking your rural rides (cheers and laughter), and your rural sports (hear, hear); you have been "whistling at the plough" (renewed and continued cheering); you have been arm-in-arm with Keuben in the turnip-field and in the cabbage-garden (great applause and laughter); you have got away from the town into the country; you have been keeping company with fox-hunters and country squires (applause and laughter); and no wonder that instead of the smoke of Manchester I see the bloom which only the fresh breath of heaven can give when uninterrupted it is permitted to fall upon your cheek. Well, gentlemen, I congratulate you upon this—upon the increase of your income—upon the improvement of your appearance—upon the splendid building you have got. When I went away,—and if Mr. Gadsby be on the platform I should not like to lose his friendship.—I left you circulating a shabby little paper called the Anti-Bread-Tar Circular; I come back and I find you circulating a paper larger than the Spectator, racy as the Examiner, and, what is better than all, with a circulation which the Guardian, and the Times, and the Courier, and whatever other papers there are in Manchester—the Chronicle, too, if it lives, but I don't know (laughter)—peace to its ashes if it is gone—must envy; I say, how they must envy this mushroom growth of a newspaper from nothing in Manchester, to 20,000 in Crane-court, London. (Hear, hear.) Gentlemen, I congratulate you on these facts. I congratulate you, too, on another fact—that you have had your electioneering victories. (Loud cheers.) You drew a Bright sword at Durham (cheers); a good sword it was; and I will undertake to say it will never lose its temper, or its edge, or its brightness in this bloodless contest. (Cheers.) Why, you conquered—where?—under the shadow and beneath the beetling towers of the Durham Cathedral, and then, flushed with your victory, you hoisted your standard in London, and achieved another triumph under the benignant smiles of Gog and Magog, in Guildhall. (Applause and laughter.) Need I say that the contemplation of these things gives me the sincerest joy. (Hear, hear, hear.) You have been faithful hitherto, and you have your reward. True, you have not yet carried the citadel; and do not let us think that anything is achieved until we have attained the thing we ask. Let us not stop short of the goal; let us not be satisfied till we have accomplished our reasonable and righteous desires. (Cheers.) You have not yet carried the citadel but you have had a triumphant march to the very gates; and none but those you seek for the sake of our country and mankind to conquer, can for a moment doubt the issue of the strife, come when it may. (Great cheering.) Sirs, this comes, in my opinion, of beginning well. You have had wisdom to direct you—consummate wisdom; you have had talent to execute your behests—unrivalled talent. (Hear, hear.) That men are eloquent in this cause I do not wonder; it is a theme that would make any man eloquent. We plead for hunger without bread, for energy without employment, for a nation that is the nursery of the arts,—the emporium of commerce,—the sanctuary of religion,—mistress of the seas,—that cannot feed her own children. (Great applause.) We plead against laws that have been enacted to debar mankind here, where God has been most bountiful, from participating in that which he never withheld where he has been least bountiful. (Hear, hear.) Men are starving, yet diamonds are let in duty-free; corn is taxed, but turtle is let in free; corn is taxed, but pictures are free; industry is taxed, but that which the rich alone want is free; that, without which the poor cannot exist, and which God through the bounty of our mother earth has given for all—that is prohibited by the law-making machinations of a sordid few whose rent-rolls to them are more sacred than the primeval charter of man's sovereignty over the globe, and God's ordination that the labourer is worthy of his hire! (Immense applause.) I say, again, this comes of beginning well. Your cause would never have been in this position if you had not settled it at first upon principle. You took the highest ground at first, though you had to stand alone; since then, all men have been coming up to you. You have not descended to them; you have stood nearest to Heaven itself in the assertion of the righteous, the immutable, the everlasting principle that that which God has freely given, man shall freely enjoy; and yet a little while, and save and excepting only the grovelling creatures of earth, whom you still leave at the base, you will shake hands with every opponent at the summit. (Cheers.) The consequence has been, therefore, that, just in proportion as your principles have been developed, in that precise proportion have they been adopted. And then the motives by which you have been sustained—they, too, have been of the loftiest and most moving and powerful description: the relief of general distress,—for what distress could be more general, more deeply planted, more hopeless, than that which I beheld ere I left these shores? (Hear, hear.) I have traversed many lands since then; I have witnessed deeper superstitions than any ever witnessed in this country—superstition in its most revolting and unadorned aspects; I have seen a mixed despotism of the most harsh and cruel character; I have seen ignorance of the most stolid kind; I have seen poverty, too; but human misery in combination with skill and energy, and the will to work,—I have seen nothing anywhere approximating in its moving characteristics to that which I have witnessed amongst the most skilled and energetic labourers on the face of the earth,—the labourers of Manchester and of Lancashire, and of Yorkshire. (Hear, hear, hear.) Well, when I left you you had this motive, and if it does not exist in all its force to-day, be not deceived by present enjoyments or present possessions; think not that your principles have changed because your circumstances have changed. No; others I have no doubt have accounted to you for the present spur to trade and industry which you are indulging in to-day. Beware! dark days are still before you unless you place the commerce and trade and industry of the nation upon the only sure foundation for the guarantee of a permanent prosperity—the principle of a free and universal intercourse. (Very great cheering.) Another of your motives, too, has been the permanent good of your country; another, the setting of a noble example to the world; another, the extension of the blessings of peace and civilization by the expansion of peaceful and honourable trade upon free and unrestricted principles; and lastly, the vindication of Providence from the libel of those who would exclude or narrow its bounties. Rather let me see the assertion of the rights of your selves and your fellows everywhere, as set forth by that code of universal and divine justice which ordains that human labour shall receive its just and equal reward. (Great cheering.) Ladies and gentlemen, ever since my boyhood it has always been to me a matter of the most thrilling interest to contemplate the progress of enlightened and Christian views upon matters affecting the destinies of men and of nations. How interesting then must it be to me, and to all who are here to-night, to watch the effect of that great truth upon individual minds in the first instance—to witness the early and almost unperceived efforts of a despised few to bring that truth which is their grand aim—the truth which may have been hidden for ages—to the notice of an undiscerning public—to mark the reception of that truth; to observe the suspicion, and to trace the hatred and malice of those whose profit or whose power, or, as in the present case, both, may be considered as jeopardised by the propagation and the triumph of this truth; to note the curiosity, and the admiration, and the thoughtfulness, and the gratitude of others who receive this truth, and hug it to their hearts; to see it taken up according to the peculiar education of men, and their different constitutions, habits, and pursuits, and to see it applied—as I will venture to say the Corn-Law question is applied—in a thousand ways; to note, in the first instance, how it answered, even to the dreams of those who sought to bring it in its simplicity and its application to one particular branch of the subject before the minds of men; to see it laid the root of some stupendous and antiquated abuse—an abuse venerated and cherished because deemed to be essential to the power and influence of a dominant faction in the country; to see this truth wielded—what shall I say?—let us borrow another figure from the sword—though with eternal weapons we have nothing to do, for there are other swords mightier than these, more mighty because they are unseen and can never be struck down,—more mighty because they come from the armory of Heaven, and when wielded in faith are ever omnipotent over the confederation of our enemies. I say, Sirs, to see this great truth, at least, wielded like the sword of Rinaldo against the tree in the enchanted gardens, amid the howlings, and thunderings, and gibberings of unclean animals—to see it fall, and to behold the blackness at once disperse, the sun appear, the prospect serene and lovely, and to hear the sweet chorus of thousands, blessed by the destruction of that which, while it lasted, held them in miserable thralldom. (Long-continued applause.) Gentlemen, there have been many such instances. There was a man who combated the dogmas of the priesthood, who gave them a pure system of astronomical science. He was persecuted, —ay, persecuted to the death. He printed his book by stealth, and just before he expired the first copy was brought to him; he hugged it to his bosom; he said, "The world will not believe it, but it is true," and he died. That man was Copernicus; and the world has done justice to his talents, and the system lives, though he died a martyr for its sake. There was another man, in the seclusion of a cloister; he wiped the dust of ages from a neglected volume; he read there that God could alone pardon sin, and that between the human conscience and the throne of grace there should stand no one but He, who was at once God and man. He went forth with this volume to propagate the truth amid the thunders of the Vatican; he feared not; he sailed aloft upon a steady pinion, and, ere he died, he looked down upon revolutionised Europe. And that man was Martin Luther. (Loud applause.) There were a few men in Manchester; who knew them? None but their own immediate associates and relatives; they were humble, they were poor, or, if not poor, they had not the wealth and rank which give prominence and consciousness to men. What did they do? They saw that the great principle, that the bounties of God, given for the sustentation of his family on earth ought not to be intercepted by unjust and monopolising laws. (Great applause.) They saw an assumed right set up by an oligarchy in the kingdom to an exclusive monopoly in the staff of life. What did they do? They met in back rooms and dark rooms in Manchester: they, if you please, "conspired" (great cheering) to bring this truth into existence—they were the leaders of the reformation that is now spreading over the land. (Loud cheers.) True, they have not heard the thunders of the Vatican, but they have heard the thunders of St. Stephen's and the mutterings of Downing-street. (Hear, hear.) But what have they done? They have continued to publish that truth through evil and through good report; and as surely as the system of Copernicus shall live, improved by his successor Sir Isaac Newton—as surely as the great principles of Protestantism shall survive, when every species of religious error shall have passed away—so surely and truly shall the great principle enunciated by the Anti-Corn-Law League of this town live, and the leaders of this cause shall be the Brooks's, and the Wilsons, and the Rawsons (long and continued cheering); and, let me finish—finish I cannot, for time would fail to tell the names of these men, they become so many now that we must call them legion; but, let me add to those I have named, the Cobdens and the Brights. (Long-continued cheering.) When we feel more than ordinary pride, a few years to come, we will say, in order to swell our importance in the eyes of our fellows, I was the friend of John Brooks, I was the friend of George Wilson, I was the friend of Richard Cobden. (Cheers.) Mr. Thompson then alluded to the recent trials for conspiracy, and remarked, that if any parties were to be indicted for this offence it should be those who were conspiring to deprive the people of food by keeping it at an exorbitant price. He also combated the old fallacy of machinery being the cause of our recent distress, and contended that it was rather an effect of distress than a cause, and on that ground was an argument for the repeal of the Corn Laws; while, on the other hand, assuming, for the sake of argument, that machinery was the cause of distress, then it followed that the necessity for repealing the Corn Laws was still greater, in order that the people might be enabled to enjoy that food of which machinery had deprived them. His speech was listened to with profound and breathless attention, and the speaker, at its termination, was most enthusiastically cheered.

Alderman Brooks moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Plint and Mr. Thompson, which Mr. HANVEY of Liverpool seconded; the vote was carried by acclamation. The meeting separated about ten o'clock.

FREE-TRADE MEETING IN THE POTTERIES.

On Tuesday evening a crowded meeting of the friends of Free Trade, in the Potteries, was held in Shelton, in the large school-rooms erected by John Ridgway, Esq. The number present exceeded fifteen hundred, and great multitudes were obliged to return home without being able to obtain admittance. Several Chartists got into the room on forged tickets, and seemed anxious to make up for the paucity of their numbers by the loudness of their clamour. The chair was taken by Wedgwood, Esq., after which the meeting was addressed by Col. Thompson and Mr. Cobden. When Mr. Cobden sat down, a Socialist lecturer named Kidd presented himself, and offered to prove that the Corn Laws were wise, just, and useful to the operative population. The repugnance of the meeting to such an interruption was in some degree subdued by curiosity to hear what could be said in support of such a proposition. Instead, however, of attempting to defend the Corn Laws, the Socialist entered into a long rambling discussion of the leading tenets of Socialism, which quite exhausted the patience of the meeting, and he concluded by moving a vote of censure on Mr. Cobden, which was received with shouts of laughter.

After this interruption the business of the meeting was resumed, and spirited addresses in favour of Free Trade were delivered by Messrs. Moore, Ricardo, M.P., and Ridgway. More than £200 were collected in the room, and the sum would have been much larger had not the interruption of the itinerant Socialist protracted the proceedings to so late an hour that it was deemed advisable to defer the collection until the following day.

The usual vote of thanks to the deputation of the League was carried with general unanimity, many of the Chartists appearing to concur in the compliment, and seeming to feel ashamed of their interruptions in the early part of the meeting.

The League subscription at Kendal last year was £140; this year it is upwards of £400.

SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR THE LEAGUE IN MANUFACTORIES.—Liberal subscriptions to the Anti-Corn-Law League fund have been received from workmen of several manufactories, and many more are in progress. We trust that the workmen of other manufactories will imitate this example. They have surely reason enough, in their unexampled sufferings of the last few years, and in the growing foreign rivalry to which we are subjected last week, to use their best exertions to strike off the fetters on freedom of industry.—Sheffield Independent.

LEAGUE SUBSCRIPTIONS.—Our friends in Kilmarnock have now set about raising subscriptions in aid of the League Fund; the workers at Greenholm Print-Works (Messrs. Macadam and Co.) have gathered about £4 amongst themselves; thus showing the good effect of Messrs. Bright and Thompson's addresses upon a class of men formerly the bitterest opponents of the League. If this example is imitated by the other works in town, a very large sum may be collected, in addition to the subscriptions from the electoral classes.—Ayr Advertiser.

NORTHALLERTON—FARMERS' MEETING.—On Wednesday, the 26th ult., Col. Thompson and Messrs. Prentice and Plint addressed the farmers of this neighbourhood. At the hour appointed, the large room of the Black Bull Inn was so crowded that an adjournment to the Market-place became necessary. At this time, between five and six hundred persons were assembled, of whom a considerable majority were farmers. Mr. Prentice commenced, and spoke for upwards of an hour with vigour and effect. Colonel Thompson and Mr. Plint followed in succession, occupying another hour. The utmost order prevailed throughout the whole time, and the addresses were listened to with earnest attention and interest.

ANTI-CORN-LAW MEETING.—On Monday, the 12th ult., a meeting was held in the Secession Church, Moniaire, Dumfriesshire, for the purpose of petitioning Parliament for the abolition of the corn and provision laws. Mr. John Young, farmer, Kirkcudbright, was called to the chair. Mr. William Morton, hostler, in a luminous speech exposed the unjust and injurious nature of these oppressive enactments; and moved the adoption of a petition, praying for the immediate and unconditional abolition of the corn and provision laws. Mr. William Hunter, wool merchant, in seconding the adoption of the petition, spoke at considerable length upon the operation of these laws since 1815, showing that the landlords only were interested in maintaining them, and exposing the fallacy propagated by the landowners, that cheap corn means low wages. He showed also that the price of labour, like many other articles, was entirely regulated by supply and demand. The petition was unanimously adopted; after which it was agreed that it should be transmitted to Lord Kinnaird and William Ewart, Esq., for presentation. The body of the church was completely filled by a respectable audience; and although this is entirely an agricultural and rural district, Free-Trade principles have long been in the ascendant.

PRO-CORN-LAW MEETING AT NORTHWICH.—We have to acknowledge from "A Tenant Farmer," a copy of a circular of certain resolutions passed at what purports to be a meeting of "tenant-farmers and others interested in agriculture," held in a snug room in the Crown Inn, Northwich, but when, the said circular saith not, to take into consideration the most effectual measures for the protection of landowners, tenant-farmers, and all classes directly and indirectly affected thereby. Our correspondent, who happens to be one of those neither very much attached to the sliding scale, nor to protection at the expense of the farmers' best customers, cannot hear of any tenant-farmers who have attended any such meeting; but, after making diligent inquiry, he found that on a certain day, certain stewards and land-agents had a most mysterious confab at the place mentioned; and then and there did doubtless perpetrate the circular above mentioned. It appears that under the signature of "Peter Carter, secretary," a circular has been also issued calling a meeting of "tenant-farmers, owners, occupiers of land, and of those friends to native industry whose principles are in accordance with the accompanying resolutions," to be held at the Market-hall, Northwich, on Tuesday next, and all who have been honoured with the said circular are respectfully invited to bring with them such friends as may be disposed to promote the above objects; so that the matter is to be as snug and exclusive as possible. We know of nothing that can keep corn-consumers from attending, as they are both directly and indirectly affected by what is called landed protection. Why not at once submit the question at issue to the test of public discussion?—Chester Chronicle.

PROTECTION MEETING, NORTHWICH, March 5.—The meeting proved an entire breakdown,—not in point of the number of squires, who, with their stewards and agents, poured in. I have not yet had time to ascertain who were there, but most of the neighbouring gentry, and some from a distance attended. There is, luckily, a public right of road through the market-house, and, though it was talked of, it was not dared to close it against all comers, so that access to the public could not be prevented; consequently, it soon filled. The tenants, who had been collected from all quarters, formed their share; but it soon became evident that there was a very strong "anti-protection" section, of which an extensive joiner and builder of the name of Thompson, of this town, appeared a leader. One of the squires, a Mr. Harper, of Davenham, asked Thompson privately, "to tell him candidly whether, if the proceedings went on, he was intending to move an amendment?" to which Thompson replied, "that it was not unlikely." Whereupon, some little consultation took place, which ended in Mr. Carter (the secretary to the embryo association) coming forward and saying, that "he was the person who called the meeting together, but as he saw by looking round, that for one in favour of the resolutions there were twenty against, he therefore adjourned the meeting." The scene was then ludicrous in the extreme. One by one—gentlemen, stewards, and all—crept out, without another syllable of explanation, and as each was recognized a tremendous hooting was set up. Thompson was then voted by acclamation into the chair, and spoke for nearly an hour. Mr. Slater (an extensive farmer at Woodford-hall, in this county, a clever practical man, and, to his honour, one of the very few tenant-farmers who venture to disregard their landlords' dictation when contrary to sense) followed, and was succeeded by several others. Resolutions were passed in favour of Free Trade, and thanks to the League. A good many straggling farmers stayed, looking excessively astonished, and hardly crediting the defeat of their masters. The minority, or as many of them as could be accommodated in a small room at the Crown Inn, in Northwich, went there and passed their resolutions, without further risk of contradiction.

FRONKHAVEN, February 26.—A meeting of the noblemen, gentlemen, commissioners of supply, justices of the peace, owners of land, and farmers of the county of Kincardine, was held here this day, in consequence of a requisition addressed to Lord Arbutnot as lord-lieutenant of the county, to which, by great exertions, and in consequence of being circulated through the county, about four hundred and sixty names, of all sorts of persons (including those of fifty-one fishermen belonging to the fishing village of Portlethen), were appended; Lord Arbutnot in the chair. But the weather being very unfavourable, and many of the requisitionists being, no doubt, lukewarm in the cause, and others pressed into the service, exactly ten proprietors of land, two sons of proprietors, and three tenant-farmers attended, making the meeting in all consist of only fifteen persons, exclusive of spectators, of whom there were about thirty present. The meeting was addressed by Mr. Barclay of Ury (the priest), in support of the Corn Laws; he concluded by moving certain resolutions to the same effect; the resolutions were seconded by Mr. Anderson, one of his own tenants. Mr. Innes, of Cowie, addressed the meeting to the purpose, that he could not comprehend the principles of Free Trade, most of the spectators were of opinion, from the manner in which he expressed himself, that it was impossible to comprehend him. The chairman concluded with a speech in favour of the sliding scale, and against a fixed duty; and by proposing a petition to both Houses of Parliament, in the same terms as the resolutions, to be circulated through the county for signature. We have only to add, that the proprietors and representatives of the greatest extent of land in the county, such as the Earl of Kintore (by far the greatest proprietor in it), Sir Thomas Barnett, of Leys, Sir Alexander Campbell, of Blackhall, Mr. Duff, of Fetteresso, Mr. Macfar, of Durns, Lord Keith's trustees, and a great many others, did not sign the requisition. All those we have named, and many more, are, we believe, favourable to a total repeal, or at least a modification, of the Corn Laws. The same opinion, we are happy to say, is making progress among the tenant-farmers of the county; one of the most respectable of whom was heard to express regret, some days previous to the meeting, for having signed the requisition; and also, that his belief was, that the best thing for the farmer would be a speedy settlement of the question by a total abolition.

WHEAT AND WAGES.—Mr. George Crawshaw, of Gateshead, in a late lecture on "Free Trade and Wages," observed:—"The Duke of Northumberland talked of the delusive cry of cheap bread. This, however, was not a fair way of putting the question. The Free-Traders were crying for no law to make bread cheap. It was the Duke, and such as the Duke, who clamoured for a law to make bread dear. The Free-Traders asked for no law: they only asked to be let alone. (Applause.) But those who contended for the intermeddling of parliaments with the operations of commerce—the dukes, and the barons, and the baronets and squires—these men argued, that if their laws made bread dear, they also made wages high. They reminded him of the story of the American gentleman, who was so tall that he was obliged to go up a ladder to shave himself. (Laughter.) The monopolists, in their great love of the people, having passed a law to make bread dear, professed to give them the ladder of high wages, that they might go up and feed themselves. But surely the tall man could shave himself, and the labouring man feed himself, quite as well, and much more safely, on the level ground. (Applause.) It was not true, however, that in raising the price of bread the monopolist raised the amount of wages. Every working-man's experience too painfully told him that the fact was far otherwise—that dear bread checked the demand for labour, and aggravated the privations of the people, by diminishing their employment and their wages. The notions of such men as the Duke of Northumberland would be really very amusing, if it were not that they were the notions of men who had the making of our laws, and the disposal of the destinies of millions."—Gateshead Observer.

PARLIAMENTARY PROTECTION FOR LABOURERS.—The fusion cutters of Manchester have addressed a memorial to the two Houses of Parliament, stating that their wages are deplorably low, and praying that they will pass an act of Parliament for the protection of their labour, which does not yield the head of the family more than seven shillings a week, out of which he has, in many cases, a wife and children to support. It is highly probable that these fusion cutters will receive no answer to their petition; but if an answer is vouchsafed it will be this, that Parliament cannot interfere with the protection of labour, the only protection they can give is protection to the price of corn. Think of the consequences to the landed interest of an act to protect labour, when the labourers in husbandry in the south of England seldom earn more than from 7s. to 9s. a week!

Mr. George Crawshaw, the able secretary of the Gateshead Free-Trade Society, in a letter addressed to the Tyne Mercury, repels the insinuation contained in the letter of "A Radical Leaguer," which appeared in that journal, that the society would support a fixed-duty candidate at any election; and states that, while as individuals the members entertained their particular views on other questions, they are determined to make that of Free Trade a sine qua non in the election of any candidate at a future election.

In the speeches of Sir Walter Raleigh, delivered in the House of Commons, 1593, and preserved by Dr. Ewes, is the following passage. Having inculcated the "propriety of leaving every man free to employ his labour and capital in the way he might judge most beneficial for himself," he goes on to observe:—"that the Low Countrymen and the Hollanders, who never saw corn, have, by their industry, such plenty that they can serve other nations; and that it is the best policy to set tillage at liberty, and leave every man free, which is the desire of a true Englishman."

CORRESPONDENCE.

SUGAR MONOPOLY.

To the EDITOR of the LEAGUE.

SIR,—As the season is now approaching when the annual Sugar Duties Bill will be renewed, it appears to me a very proper time to draw the attention of the country to the evils of the monopoly, and also to the advantages likely to flow from a perfectly free trade in that commodity.

The only sugars admitted for home consumption are the produce of the colonies; viz., British West India Islands, Mauritius, and British India; all other descriptions are prohibited, or, which is the same thing, the differential duty is so high as to place them beyond the range of consumption: the duty on British Plantation being 25s. 3d. per cwt., while on all other kinds it is 66s. per cwt.

The quantity consumed in Great Britain and Ireland is about 200,000 tons per annum, or about the amount furnished by the colonies, and, therefore, leaving nothing over for an augmented consumption, either from increasing population or capability.

On a reference to the London New Prices Current of date 20th February, you will find it stated, that the quantity in bond for home consumption in the kingdom is 13,000 tons less than last year at same period; and the lowest price of brown quality is 58s. per cwt., including duty. The latest accounts from the West Indies are not favourable for the coming crop. This reduction of the stock must naturally be followed by advancing prices, until the consumption is checked down to the supplies. Those who have the means to pay high prices may still be enabled to purchase; but the great bulk of the consumers must submit to diminished quantity.

It might be all very well to submit to short quantity and high prices, provided these were the result of scarcity from natural causes. But such is not the case; these are confined entirely to British Plantation; while even now there is in the ports of London and Liverpool plenty of excellent sugars, and at very low prices. I need scarcely state to your numerous readers, that there are many countries from which we might draw our supplies. There is the island of Cuba alone, which produces probably as much as the whole British West Indies; while the extensive country of the Brazils is capable of giving us large supplies; besides in the east, Manila, Java, and China are large sugar-growing countries.

I have stated that the brownest British West India sugar is now selling at 58s. per cwt., duty paid; while good yellow Havana, of much better quality and equal to the other at 63s. per cwt., can now be purchased in London at 18s. per cwt., and, if admitted at same duty, would cost 43s. 3d. per cwt.: thus—

| | | |
|---|---------|----------|
| Good British West India sugar, duty paid, | £3 3 0 | per cwt. |
| Good Yellow Havana, equal in quality | £0 18 0 | |
| If admitted at same duty as | | |
| West India | 1 5 3 | |
| Dearer than British West India | 0 19 9 | per cwt. | or, in round numbers, British West India sugar is dearer by about 20s. per cwt. than similar quality from other countries. Assuming the consumption at 200,000 tons, this shows an annual loss to the country of no less a sum than four millions sterling.

The revenue from sugar paid into the Exchequer for state purposes is upwards of five millions sterling; and it certainly ought to make no difference to the Chancellor whether this amount is derived from a larger or a smaller quantity; but it makes a vast difference not only to the consumer but to the commerce of the country; and it is one of the great aggravations of the evils of this monopoly, that while a certain amount of revenue must be raised from the article, the limitation of the supply compels the tax to be levied at a much higher rate per cwt. than would otherwise be necessary to produce that amount.

The present duty on British Plantation I have already stated to be 25s. 3d. per cwt.; but supposing all descriptions of sugar were admitted indiscriminately, and the duty reduced to 12s. 7½d., or one-half that amount, the consumption would at once double itself. There cannot be the shadow of a doubt that the country would still continue to spend the same amount of money in sugar; and I will show that this sum would purchase a double quantity: viz. —

| | | |
|--|--------|----------|
| Present price of West India sugar equal to Havana, | 1 cwt. | £3 3 0 |
| Present price of good Havana, in bond, | 1 cwt. | £0 18 0 |
| Suppose duty reduced to one-half | 1 cwt. | 0 12 7½ |
| Cost of 1 cwt. | 1 cwt. | 1 10 7½ |
| Say another cwt. on same terms | 1 cwt. | 1 10 7½ |
| Cost of 2 cwt. | 2 cwt. | 3 13 3 ½ |
| Less than West India | 2 cwt. | 0 19 9 | or, in plain language, with open markets and reduced duty, 2 cwt. of sugar could be purchased for 1s. 9d. less than 1 cwt. now is, while the revenue would be maintained at the same point.

It is difficult to calculate to what extent consumption would be carried if the price of sugar was so moderate as I have stated, or to anticipate the vast collateral advantages to be derived from increased quantity. I have merely supposed that the same amount of money would continue to be laid out in sugar; but I have not the least hesitation in saying that this is very far below the mark. I have no doubt, judging from the instances in which cheap sugar has been allowed to prosperous communities, that the consumption would not only amount to 400,000 tons, but that it would soon reach 600,000, or perhaps even 800,000 tons.

Supposing, for the sake of argument, that the increase was only 200,000 tons, this would give an additional import from foreign countries equal to four millions sterling, which, in the ordinary course of trade, must be paid for by an export of our manufactures to that amount, being about one twelfth part of our present export trade.

The production of these manufactures would give increased employment to our artisans, and the money so earned by them would again be put into circulation, and give renewed prosperity to others; besides, the now dormant capital that would be actively engaged would increase the wealth of the country.

There is another branch of our national industry that would be greatly benefited—the shipping interest. To carry 200,000 tons more sugar would require 400 ships, each carrying 500 tons; or supposing them to make two voyages in the year, which they may do, to the West Indies, it would then take two hundred ships, each of which may be valued at £5000, and in these alone a capital of one million sterling would be invested. This would immediately give a great stimulus to ship-building, besides affording constant employment to four or five thousand seamen.

I might have gone much more extensively into the subject than I have done, but I think I have said enough to convince every unprejudiced reader that there is no monopoly, excepting only that in corn, that so hampers the trade of the country—that so narrows our foreign commerce—that so interferes with the labouring man in the full enjoyment of one of the most nutritious articles of food.

I have shown that great changes may be made, not only without risk to the revenue, but with every prospect of great increase.

If there is any argument wanting for an immediate and total change in our Sugar Laws, it is in the fact that in a few months the Brazilian treaty expires; and, if the country do not instantly demand a free trade in sugar, another instance will be given of the sacrifice of several millions annually of Great Britain's trade at the feet of monopoly.

I beg to subscribe myself

A FREE-TRADER.

To the EDITOR of the LEAGUE.

Clapton, Feb. 27, 1844.

SIR,—Having long wished success to the Anti-Corn-Law League, and considering that the LEAGUE paper does more towards opening the eyes of farmers, and exposing the fallacies imposed on them by the landlords, than any other paper I have read, I feel it a duty incumbent on me, as a tenant-farmer, and one who has suffered much from the Corn Laws and the Game Laws, to throw in my mite, in order to help to counterbalance the opposition now raised against the League by the landlords and their agents, and a few short-sighted tenant-farmers.

As to the outcry for protection, it shows meanness and weakness; and the idea of the Corn Laws being a protection is all a farce. I have observed the working of the Corn Laws for several years, and have always found that they failed of their pretended object. I hailed Canning's alteration in 1827 as a great boon; but I have been miserably deceived, by its never having realized that hope which it held out to us. I cannot remember much about the bill of 1815; but I have often heard a practical farmer speak of it, and complain, that it did not answer the purpose for which it was said to have been passed, namely, the benefit of the farmers. He would often say that the landlords had let their land according to the eighty-shilling per quarter bill; but since that bill was passed wheat had scarcely ever reached that price. Now, even if wheat had kept up to eighty shillings per quarter, the farmers would not have reaped the benefit: the landlords would have taken care of that. I have often conpared the farmers to spouts round a house carrying the water to the reservoir, but receiving no benefit from it; so the farmers convey the profits arising from the Corn Law to the landlord, and (in the majority of cases) have not a single shilling left for themselves. When will the farmers think and act for themselves, and rise above such mean-ness as wishing to be protected? Give us fair play: I want no more. How is it likely we can compete with farmers in other countries when so great a portion of our produce is devoured by things kept for the lordlings' sport; and farmers are bound by so many foolish and prohibitory clauses in leases and agreements. As to the Game Laws, I can safely say there is but one opinion among farmers respecting them; and, however the farmers may carry it before their landlords, they are generally ready to exclaim against the Game Laws behind their backs. Every thinking farmer must know that the game does an amazing amount of injury in the country; and, if they had honesty enough to speak out their opinion, that the Game Laws are a portion of that class legislation under which the country groans. When we consider the amount of produce destroyed by game, we must pronounce that man to be no friend of the farmer who can make or favour such laws. I would here make just a statement or two respecting the destruction of property by the game; and I do not base such statement on my own opinion, but on the opinion of others on the subject. It is considered that twenty per cent. loss is a moderate allowance for game where it is thick (and surely it is very plenty in the parish of Berkeley). Now, allowing twenty per cent. on the gross estimate rental of one tything in the said parish of Berkeley, the total loss amounts to £1856, being considerably more than double the amount of poor-rates in the same tything. This is exclusive of attendance and wide hedge-rows kept to encourage game; and all this sacrifice for about twenty-four hours' sport for one man! Now, Sir, you are at liberty to make what use you please of these few plain remarks. I have herewith sent you a post-office order for one pound towards the National Anti-Corn-Law League Fund of £100,000.

GILES LILES,

Tenant-Farmer.

To the Editor of the LEAGUE.

SIR,—As the comparative amount of taxes paid by rich and poor is a question much disputed, I beg to hand you the following accounts. The one is that of the expenses of the family of John Allen, an agricultural labourer, published by Sir F. H. Doyle, in his report to the Poor-Law Commissioners; and the other is that of a comparatively rich family with which I am acquainted, the accuracy of which I can also vouch for.

Analysis of Expenditure of John Allen, his Wife, and five Children, from March 1, 1841, to Feb. 28, 1842.

| | £ | s. | d. | | £ | s. | d. |
|---------------------------|-----|----|----|----------------------|----|----|----|
| Flour, 152½ stone | 20 | 1 | 1 | 15 per cent | 3 | 1 | 6 |
| Oatmeal, 4 stone | 0 | 8 | 0 | | | | |
| Meat, say 186lb., at 6d. | 4 | 12 | 4 | | | | |
| Bacon, 10lb., at 8d. | 0 | 6 | 8 | | | | |
| Potatoes | 0 | 16 | 7 | | | | |
| Cheese | 0 | 3 | 0 | | | | |
| Butter | 1 | 1 | 6 | | | | |
| Milk | 0 | 17 | 6 | | | | |
| Yeast | 0 | 12 | 0 | Duty on malt | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Candles, 25lb. | 0 | 14 | 2 | | | | |
| Soap, 30lb. | 0 | 17 | 2 | Duty on soap | 0 | 3 | 9 |
| Tea, 2½lb. | 0 | 16 | 4 | Tea, 2½lb., 2s. 1d. | 0 | 5 | 3 |
| Coffee, 7½lb. | 0 | 14 | 6 | Coffee, 7½lb. | 0 | 4 | 11 |
| Sugar, 70lb. | 2 | 2 | 0 | Sugar, 70lb., at 4d. | 1 | 3 | 4 |
| Apples, salt, pepper, &c. | 0 | 6 | 8 | | | | |
| Coal | 1 | 18 | 2 | | | | |
| Clothes, making, &c. | 6 | 12 | 4 | | | | |
| Miscellaneous | 0 | 15 | 1 | | | | |
| Boys' schooling | 0 | 6 | 0 | | | | |
| House rent | 4 | 0 | 0 | | | | |
| Balance | 2 | 15 | 4 | | | | |
| | £50 | 16 | 5 | Total of taxes | £5 | 0 | 9 |

Account of the Expenses of the Family of ———, consisting, on an average, of about ten Persons.

| | £ | s. | d. | | £ | s. | d. |
|--|-------|----|----|------------------|----|----|----|
| Washing | 37 | 10 | 6 | | | | |
| Servants' wages and young ladies' allowances | 232 | 10 | 4 | | | | |
| Fish, sausages, chickens, &c. | 29 | 6 | 9 | | | | |
| Expenses | 24 | 10 | 0 | | | | |
| Charity | 18 | 11 | 2 | | | | |
| Stamps and letters | 7 | 2 | 5 | | | | |
| Beer and porter | 12 | 0 | 3 | Malt duty on | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Rates | 10 | 12 | 5 | | | | |
| Butcher's bills | 60 | 3 | 11 | | | | |
| Fruit and vegetables | 18 | 0 | 2 | | | | |
| Doctor's bills | 33 | 6 | 5 | | | | |
| Milk and butter | 28 | 7 | 11 | | | | |
| Clothing | 16 | 14 | 9 | | | | |
| Baker | 28 | 10 | 10 | 15 per cent... | 4 | 5 | 6 |
| Books | 14 | 12 | 1 | | | | |
| Kitchen garden | 31 | 10 | 4 | | | | |
| Furniture | 45 | 14 | 2 | | | | |
| Wine | 35 | 10 | 8 | Estimated 30 | | | |
| Groceries | 32 | 5 | 7 | gals., 5s. 6d. | 8 | 5 | 0 |
| Concerts and balls | 9 | 13 | 11 | Estimated | 2 | 5 | 7 |
| Sugar | 20 | 16 | 8 | 540lb. at 4d. | 9 | 0 | 0 |
| Tea | 22 | 6 | 8 | 80lb. at 2s. 1d. | 8 | 7 | 6 |
| Coal | 33 | 2 | 6 | | | | |
| Travelling expenses, and staying by seaside | 130 | 7 | 11 | | | | |
| Schooling | 373 | 0 | 0 | | | | |
| Keep of two ponies | 40 | 0 | 0 | | | | |
| Linon | 18 | 1 | 11 | | | | |
| Rent | 40 | 0 | 0 | | | | |
| Window duty | 6 | 9 | 3 | Window duty | 6 | 9 | 3 |
| | £1412 | 17 | 6 | | | | |
| | | | | | 40 | 12 | 10 |

The Income Tax is to be added to this account, and at 3 per cent. on £1400, amounts to

£82 12 10

Which together amount to about six per cent. on this family's expenditure.

The taxes on the family of John Allen, amounting to £5 0s. 9d., and his income to £50 16s. 5d., he is consequently taxed ten per cent. on his expenditure.

If the rich man were taxed to equal extent with the poor man, the rich man in the above case should have paid £140, instead of £32. Or, if the family of John Allen had been taxed at the same rate as the rich man, he should only have paid £3, instead of £5.

Leaving the public to form their own opinion on the case I have here stated, I beg to subscribe myself,

Your obedient servant,

JUVENIS.

DEAR SIR,—With every sentiment expressed in the unanswerable speeches of yourself and Mr. Cobden, in the Covent-garden Theatre on the 13th ult., I cordially concur; and if my testimony, as a parish curate for 15 years in dense and poor populations, can be of any service in furthering the cause of a more plentiful supply of food to them, with an increase of employment and of wages, I will not withhold it. It grieves me to read of my brother clergy stepping forward at the agricultural protection meetings, to oppose the efforts of the League to remove restrictions against the people enjoying an abundance of the very necessities of life. I trust they do it in ignorance. But I cannot endure to see them producing the case of the poor labouring man as the chief reason why those societies should be formed for his especial protection. Really this is a mockery of the poor man's long-suffering woes. My experience among that class of the community, in the course of my pastoral visitations, has long convinced me that their situation—unless they are to be driven to an open agrarian and servile war—cannot be worse than it has been for a series of years past, and that any change for them must be for the better. The wretched state to which large masses of the daily-augmenting population are at present reduced appears to be mainly owing to the monopoly of the Corn Laws, which have poured overflowing luxuries into the lap of the landed interest, while its prohibitive influence over trade and commerce has debared the middle classes, but particularly the working and industrious producer, from realizing proportionate advantages, or raising themselves above the condition of mere animal wants and subsistence. This state of things is degrading to the human mind, and totally bars out the exercise of any spiritual impulse, all chances of mental and moral improvement, or the exhortations of the pastor. In short, his functions are neutralized by the absorbing pangs of a hungry body, without bread to invigorate it, clothes to cover its nakedness, or work to procure either. He may preach and pray, but he is first obliged, out of his scanty purse, to bestow some trifling alms before he can be listened to. This system cannot last;—the minister cannot relieve all;—the union-house they revolt at, and the end must be insurrection, produced by the fierce gnawings of hunger among myriads of starving wretches, if the Corn Laws be not repealed. To Geo. Wilson, Esq. A CURATE.

RELATION BETWEEN LANDLORD AND TENANT AS TO VOTING.

Previous to the recent election for North Wilts, a correspondence took place between a tenant of Lord Radnor and that nobleman, in consequence of the former having intimated that, if his lordship wished it, he would vote for the Free-Trade candidate, but that in doing so he would be acting contrary to his opinion. His lordship, in writing to his tenant, points out, in the true spirit of liberality, what are the duties of a voter:—

"Coleshill House, Feb. 7, 1844.

"To Mr. ————
"SIR,—I have just learnt, by a letter from Admiral Bouverie, that he had seen you, and that, on his canvassing you to vote at the approaching election for North Wilts, for Mr. Edridge, you had told him you would do so if I wished it; but that the doing so would be contrary to your own opinion. I cannot but feel much obliged by your readiness to comply with my wishes, but I must tell you plainly that I should have had a much greater respect for you if you had at once refused to act contrary to your own opinion. I assume that opinion has been formed on a deliberate consideration of the merits of the two questions, which are the grounds on which this contest is carried on,—Free Trade on the one hand, and the principle of Protection on the other; and that, after having well weighed the arguments on both sides, you have formed the opinion you have done. It is true that Admiral Bouverie has also informed me of a circumstance which might induce me a little to suspect that you had not very impartially examined the merits of one of the two principles, for he tells me that you refused to receive from him a tract put forth by one party, and which treated of the subject. I hope this refusal was not owing to any unwillingness to hear the argument, but to this, that you had already, as you thought, fully considered it, and had, upon deliberation, made up your mind. That being so, I must repeat, that I should have had much more respect for you if you had waived your civility to me, and, in spite of your wishes to oblige me as your landlord, you had sternly refused to enter into any compromise with your conscience and your duty, or to give your vote to the injury (as you supposed) of the country. "For you will be pleased to observe that, when you give a vote for a member of Parliament, you are executing a sacred trust, reposed in you by the Legislature, not for your own personal benefit or advantage; not in order to indulge any predilections you may have for one candidate or another; not in order to give effect to any wishes or fancies of me, who am your landlord, but for the benefit of the people at large; and that, if you give it, either ignorantly or intentionally, in a manner not consistent with that which is most conducive to their benefit, you violate that trust in the one case most culpably, in the other without blame, because through ignorance. But at the same time, if that ignorance is wilful, and occasioned by a refusal to be informed, or by any neglect in acquiring the information which was within your reach, it is itself not by any means free from blame.

"Of course, I have no wish to persuade or induce you to vote in any way contrary to your opinion conscientiously and deliberately formed, whatever it may be; but I must remind you, that the question at issue is one on which the happiness, and even existence, of hundreds of thousands of people depend, as well as the prosperity of all classes, and the wellbeing of the country. I feel, therefore, convinced, from the respectability of your character, that you will not vote hastily, inconsiderately, or without due information.

"I cannot conclude this letter without pointing out to you, and expressing a hope that you will acknowledge, the superior liberality of such conduct as mine over that of those landlords, if any such there be, who rigidly require that their tenants should vote according to their own opinions. I perceive that you are yourself prepared to submit to such treatment, and it is generally supposed that landlords, espousing the opinions which you hold, require that obsequiousness. For one, and I believe all those who agree with me—I am sure all those who are sincere with me in that agreement, and act accordingly—do not. And I think that my conduct, as it is more just and fair, and more consistent with the principles of the constitution, so also tends to raise the character of the tenant, who by the other mode of acting is reduced very nearly to the condition of a slave.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

RADNOR."

In a subsequent communication to the same party his lordship says further:—

"You tell me, as you have told me before, that you think a tenant should always vote according to the wishes of his landlord; and on the former occasion you added, that you should expect this from any tenant of yours, and that you will act on that principle yourself if I desire it. I do not desire it; but I am sure you will readily perceive, that, to act fairly and honestly up to that principle, you should express to your landlord neither opinion nor wish. Ready acquiescence (obsequious obedience) would be the more fit expression should be given at once. The poor tenant, like a slave, would be bound to attend to the whim of the landlord whatever it might be, and would spend his time uselessly if he attempted to acquire any information, or to form any opinion for himself. For my part I do not wish any tenant of mine to be in so degrading, so contemptible a situation. I repeat, I do not desire it.

"And, in point of morality, I hold that the principle you contend for is vicious. The Legislature gave you a voice in the election of members of Parliament; and thus puts into your keeping a trust to be executed, without reference to any 'private interests, prejudices, or partial affections,' for the good of the realm and of the whole people of the United Kingdom; and this trust you are bound to execute honestly, to the best of your knowledge and ability. If you think that you are yourself unable to form an opinion, and that your landlord can, you may very conscientiously and properly ask his advice, and act upon it; but if you can form, and have formed, an opinion for yourself, you are bound in conscience to give it effect. But it will be said, on the other hand, that the tenant owes a duty to his landlord, and should support him. I might, perhaps, be disposed to deny the position altogether; but, waiving the consideration for the present, and admitting for the sake of argument (but for the sake of argument only) that the tenant is in these matters under an obligation to his landlord, it is at best but an inferior obligation, to be postponed to the other; the duty to the individual must be of less obligation than that to the public, as the part is less than the whole, and to act upon it, is to prefer the inferior and less important to the higher and more sacred duty."

WAGES AND CORN.

Price of Wheat, and the Amount paid for a Week's Wages for a Farm near Winchester for sixteen years.

| | 80s. per qr. wheat.* | 9s. per week wages. |
|--------------|----------------------|---------------------|
| 1828. Sept., | 62s. | 9s. |
| 1829. March, | 76s. | 9s. |
| Sept., | 63s. | 9s. |
| 1830. March, | 62s. | 9s. |
| Sept., | 60s. | 10s. |
| 1831. March, | 66s. | 10s. |
| Sept., | 62s. | 10s. |
| 1832. March, | 56s. | 10s. |
| Sept., | 52s. | 10s. |
| 1833. March, | 50s. | 10s. |
| Sept., | 40s. | 10s. |
| 1834. March, | 39s. | 10s. |
| Sept., | 32s. | 10s. |
| 1835. March, | 41s. | 10s. |
| Sept., | 54s. | 10s. |
| 1837. March, | 48s. | 10s. |
| Sept., | 56s. | 10s. |
| 1838. March, | 63s. | 10s. |
| Sept., | 74s. | 10s. |
| 1839. March, | 76s. | 10s. |
| Sept., | 74s. | 10s. |
| 1840. March, | 74s. | 10s. |
| Sept., | 62s. | 10s. |
| 1841. March, | 60s. | 10s. |
| Sept., | 64s. | 10s. |
| 1842. March, | 64s. | 10s. |
| Sept., | 56s. | 10s. |
| 1843. March, | 56s. | 9s. |
| Sept., | 50s. | 9s. |

COST OF IMPORTING FOREIGN WHEAT.

The Liverpool papers of Tuesday contain a letter from Mr. Joseph Sandars, the well-known corn-dealer of that town, to Earl Talbot, president of the Stafford Agricultural Protection Society, in which, after requesting to be enrolled as a member of the association, and presenting a subscription of £30 to promote the sliding-scale agitation, he proceeds to abuse the Anti-Corn-Law League in that choice and elegant style which seems to have lately found so much favour with more aristocratic advocates of monopoly. Had his letter been confined to abuse, it would not have merited notice; but as it contains some statements regarding the average cost of bringing foreign grain to this country, which are calculated to mislead the public, we deem it proper to show that he is not worthy of being considered an infallible authority on such matters. After stating that Mr. Cobden has been "guilty of falsehood," or at least misrepresentation, for having stated that "the average cost of bringing foreign wheat to this country is 10s. 6d. per quarter," Mr. Sandars goes on to say:—"It is astonishing, after the repeated contradictions which similar statements have received, that any man can be found daring enough to repeat them. I now beg to state, from my own intimate knowledge of the foreign corn trade, that the freight from Hamburg has long ranged at 1s. 3d. to 2s. per quarter; and that foreign wheat, so imported, is subject to no charge, to which English, moved from one port to another, is not subject likewise; and, moreover, I state, without the fear of contradiction, that the rate of freight on such English wheat, moved coastwise, is as often above 2s. as it is below it. He is a bad calculator who thinks that the merchant in Yarmouth who buys wheat, and the factor in Wakefield who sells it, work without a commission. The charge for 'commission, portage, metage,' and the 'imaginary profits' of Mr. Macculloch, are common to all wheat, wherever bought or sold. Freight from the Danish ports vary from 2s. 3d. to 2s. 9d. per qr.; and from the Baltic ports, from 2s. to 4s. per qr., to which must be added 6d. per qr. Sound duties."

Now, let it be especially remarked, that notwithstanding the charge of "falsehood," which Mr. Sandars brings against Mr. Cobden, for having stated that the average cost of importation, including all charges, was 10s. 6d. per quarter, there is not the slightest attempt made by Mr. Sandars to prove that the statement is erroneous. He tells us, indeed, that "the freight from Hamburg has long ranged at 1s. 3d. to 2s. per quarter," but the question between him and Mr. Cobden was not as to what the mere freight is from one foreign port only, and that the nearest one to Great Britain, but as to what the average cost of carriage is from the various ports of the Continent and the United States. And, as for what is stated in the above passage with regard to the freight from Hamburg, we are not prepared to give it absolute credence, after what has been stated by Mr. James Meek, who was appointed by the present Government, in the latter end of 1841, to obtain information "concerning the cost and supply of various articles of agricultural produce in several parts of Northern Europe." In the report drawn up by that gentleman, which was laid before Parliament two years ago, and quoted by Sir R. Peel and Mr. Gladstone as the best possible evidence upon the question, we find the following answer to a question as to what the probable rate of freight from Hamburg to this country would be if the trade were permanently extended:—

"A fair average rate of freight would be 3s. 6d. per quarter. Exportation would be subject to other charges, amounting, on the whole, to from 2s. to 3s. per quarter."

Thus, with 3s. 6d. for freight, and 2s. 6d. (average) for charges of export, the cost of bringing wheat from the nearest and cheapest port, without reckoning any of the charges which Mr. Sandars repudiates, would be 6s. per quarter, instead of 1s. 3d. or 2s., of which he speaks. It appears to us, that Mr. Meek's estimate—furnished, as it has been, by a gentleman appointed by Government, for the express purpose of obtaining correct information on the subject of the Corn-Law question—is entitled to much more credit than the assertions of one who steps forward as an avowed partisan, and who shows, by the bitterness and virulence of his language, how deeply his feelings are embarked in the question.

Some people may be disposed to say, "Why should Mr. Sandars have any strong feeling on this subject? What interest can he have in the maintenance of the sliding scale? We believe that Mr. Sanders has good reasons for preferring a tax which causes great fluctuations in the price of corn. He is a man of good judgment in his business, taking great pains to procure information, and, if we mistake not, has been a bold and successful speculator in corn. His preference of the sliding scale is as natural as we believe it to be sincere; it rests upon the same grounds as the preference of Demetrius, the Ephesian, for idleness—"Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth."—Manchester Guardian.

* The first wheat sale on the farm by the present occupier.

AGRICULTURE.

FACTS OR FANCIES, WHICH?

The recent Pro-Corn-Law meetings have disclosed a fact which has hitherto remained unobserved or unrecorded. The country gentlemen have, up to this year of grace 1844, passed for somewhat dull men. They have doggedly and silently upheld the Corn Law in the face of the most cogent proofs of its being alternately mischievous and useless; and they have sent representatives to Parliament who have kept their secret with the most faithful perseverance. The peculiar representatives of the landlords in the House of Commons have as yet either voted in silence for monopoly, or have made speeches so cunningly contrived to bear the appearance of gross ignorance, that we do not believe there are ten individuals in the United Kingdom who, until the formation of protection societies, had discovered that squirearchical silence was deliberately designed; that the seeming stolidity of their parliamentary representatives was purposed, Brutus-like idiosyncrasy, and that the landowners of England are, in truth, the most imaginative of men!

Like most persons, however, who give reins to the imagination, our landed speakers disdain anything so commonplace and prosaic as the making their imaginative flights square with facts. Their speeches abound with hypotheses, their figures are purely ideal, and their fancies serve them instead of facts as the basis of an argument. But, unluckily for the unanimity, though luckily for the more sober advantage of the community, there are a great many common-sense sort of people who persist in saying that all these landlord imaginings, these "ifs," and apprehended impossibilities, over nothing, and insist in testing monopolist fancies by a reference to facts. Now, for the benefit of such undeal persons, we will compare some of the flights of fancy in which the Pro-Corn-Law speakers have indulged with the sober and too often sad realities. There is no topic upon which the squires are more disposed to "leave dull earth behind them" than in descending on the benefits conferred by the Corn Laws on the agricultural labourers. Thus, Mr. John Benett, one of the monopolist members for South Wilts, said at Devizes that, "every one knew that the price of corn governed the price of labour; the experience of the last hundred years proved that the wages of the labourer always rose or fell with the price of corn." And Mr. Sotheron, the recently-elected monopolist member for North Wilts, said on the occasion of his election, that it is "a well-known fact that the price of provisions regulated the price of wages, and that it was as clear as a mathematical axiom that wages must rise and fall with the price of provisions." Such are the fancies with which these imaginative legislators entertained the farmers of Wiltshire; now let us see what are the facts. In 1833 a full in prices produced a cry of agricultural distress, and a parliamentary committee sat to inquire into the subject, which, after hearing all kinds of evidence, reported that "the general condition of the agricultural labourer was better than at any former period, his money wages giving him a greater command over the necessities and conveniences of life." To ordinary minds this would seem to be a complete refutation; to an imaginative owner of acres it may possibly seem to be a triumphant confirmation. The public, however, to which the landowners have themselves at last been compelled to appeal, will soon decide the question. In the evidence adduced before the subsequent agricultural committee of 1836, when the prices of corn had for four years in succession been extremely low, it was admitted that the position of the agricultural labourers was most favourable; for it was proved that not only their money wages gave them great command over the necessities of life, but that the improvements by which farmers were endeavouring to meet the fall of prices had led to great employment of agricultural labour. To Mr. Sotheron's assertion the best answer we can give is the following extract from Lord Radnor's letter to the local paper on this very subject. His lordship said:—

"I find, by reference to the quarterly abstract of the Faringdon Union for the quarters ending at Michaelmas 1840, 1841, 1842, and 1843, that the average prices of the half-peck loaf for these quarters respectively were 15½d., 13d., 14d., and 10½d., exhibiting a difference of somewhere about 32 per cent. between the price in 1840 and in 1843. Will Mr. Sotheron contend that the labourer, for the same work, which in the quarter ending Michaelmas 1843 was paid for by 8s. per week, received at the corresponding period in 1840, 12s.?"

Such is the contradiction which the experience of our own times gives to Mr. Benett's assertion.

Now, let us refer to the "experience of the last hundred years," which that ardent monopolist says "proved that the wages of the labourer always rose or fell with the price of corn." This is directly the reverse of the truth. Adam Smith, writing about 1755, says "the money price of labour in Great Britain—and the real recompense of labour, the real quantities of the necessities and conveniences of life which are given to the labourer—have increased considerably during the present century." And the price of wheat up to 1766, as compared with the average price of the previous century, had fallen 16 per cent., the price of agricultural labour having actually risen 16 per cent. in the same period, making a difference in favour of the labourer of 32 per cent., or nearly one-third. And this we maintain would be the effect of free trade in corn on the condition of the rural labourer, which would be effected somewhat thus:—The price of wheat would probably settle somewhere about from 45s. to 50s. a quarter; and landlords and farmers, finding that all the delusion about protection was at an end, would look rationally at their land to see whether there were no means of increasing the produce to be divided between them. They would soon see this could easily be effected by a little additional outlay on the part of the landlord, and the tenant also if secured by a lease; and the immediate consequence would be increased employment for the agricultural labourer. If there be one class more than another which is interested in obtaining free trade in corn, it is the agricultural labourers. But to return to Mr. John Benett: what can be thought of a public man who makes such false assertions?

We remember to have heard an anecdote of Mr. Benett, who is a fluent talker, which those who have the patience to read his Devizes speech will think very apt. He was travelling with a Mr. John Gale—noted for saying bluff things—and having wearied that gentleman with rambling dissertations on things in general, and the Corn Laws in particular, which he continually interrupted with the interrogatory, "Do you understand me?"—until Mr. Gale, provoked beyond endurance, retorted—"Do you understand yourself?" Even John Benett's volubility received a decided check.

Again: Mr. Benett said, "Ask the labourers if they do not receive some degree of comfort, emanating from the residence of every landlord in the kingdom? But if the great moneyed man bought, he would buy for investment;—he would live in London—the old family house would be shut up—and then farewell to the comforts of the labourer." Now, this is pure idealism. Our readers have read something of the "comforts" which have "emanated" from the "old family houses" of the landlords of Dorsetshire towards the labourer of that county, and we will now inquire whether the condition of the Wiltshire peasant is superior to his brethren in Dorset. In the same letter we before quoted, Lord Radnor says:—

"At the present time, at and about Swindon, the agricultural labourer is receiving 8s.; at Chiseldon, at a very short distance, the ordinary wages are 6s., and a few miles further on, at Woolstone, there were, a very short time since, able-bodied young men, of from 23 to 26 years of age, working at 3s."

And we know that 8s. and 9s. a week are the very best wages obtained by the Wiltshire agricultural labourer: the local papers say 7s. a week is above the average paid. Well may it be asked, "How can the repeal of the Corn Laws injure the Wiltshire peasant?" But a large number cannot earn even this pittance, for the Wilts Independent says that,

"In Potterne, an extensive parish on the south-west side of Devizes, in which reside two country gentlemen who are magistrates, considerable landowners, and staunch advocates of the Corn Laws, besides other gentlemen of station and of wealth, the plan of billeting the labourers has been adopted; and the following are the prices which are put on those poor fellows who cannot get work at the average rate of 7s. a week, and of whom we understand there are, or lately were, about 40:—

| | |
|----------------------------------|-----------------|
| Able-bodied single men | 2s. 6d. a week. |
| Ditto married men | 4 0 do. |
| Ditto with two or three children | 5 0 do. |
| Ditto with large families | 6 0 do. |

At these rates, then, fixed with reference to the number of mouths to be fed, and not according to the ability of the parties as workmen—the object clearly being to reduce the poor's rates—may any person in the parish, or out of it either, we presume, command the services of any of these 40 unfortunates. We say command, for these independent labourers—"bold peasantry, their country's pride"—have no voice in the matter; they have not even the option of going into the Union-house while any one can be found willing to use up their sinews and their bones at this starvation price."

And similar facts may be learned by the most casual observer of the events of the locality in which these landed grandees dare to assert that the Corn Laws are beneficial to the agricultural labourer. Verily no terms of scorn and disgust can be too strong to apply to men who use such misrepresentations to uphold a rent-protecting law!

DAMAGE BY GAME—A WARNING TO FARMERS.

The following occurrence, which took place on the estate of the Earl of Malmesbury at Fordingbridge, in Hampshire, will at once show the extent of the damage done by game, and operate as a warning to farmers against trusting their capital upon the estate of a game-preserver on any terms. Before a new tenant enters upon a farm on this estate he is told that he must not kill even a rabbit; that the game is the first, the primary object of its lordly owner, which he reserves exclusively to himself; but that he will pay the tenant for all damage done by the game. This looks fair, and not a few good farmers—men who really understand the injuries inflicted by game—have been deluded by the specious bait.

Every year for year's past vast ravages were committed by game—which has been appropriately called the English locust—and a certain allowance made to the tenants as the amount of damage they had sustained. Of course, they were dissatisfied, for no allowance we ever heard of as made by a landlord, can compensate the tenant for the loss occasioned by game. However, one of the tenants on the Fordingbridge estate determined to bring the matter to the test of actual experiment: and so, having a field of wheat of forty acres in the part of his farm most afflicted by the incursions of the game, he fenced off by means of close hurdles about a quarter of an acre in the middle of the field, so that neither hare or rabbit could touch a blade of the corn within the enclosure. At harvest the difference between the "protected" and unprotected corn was obvious and surprising; and afforded a ready means of ascertaining the exact amount of the damage done by the game. The corn grown on this quarter of an acre of land, which had been protected from the game, was thrashed and measured, and compared with the produce of the same quantity of land to which the game had access, the difference upon the whole field amounted to a sum nearly equal to the rent of the farm; the noble landowner, true to the letter of his agreement, paid the full amount of the now proved damage, BUT THE TENANT IMMEDIATELY RECEIVED A NOTICE TO QUIT THE FARM!!! Farmers of England, ponder on this anecdote. Landlords never do and never intend to make good the damage done by their game; and where no compensation is pretended to be given to the tenant you will readily comprehend how—as in the instance mentioned in Mr. Lattimore's letter of last week—a small farmer may be actually ruined by game.

INJUSTICE OF THE GAME LAWS.

The following notice appeared as an advertisement in a provincial newspaper:—

"HAMLET OF BOURTON, PARISH OF BUCKINGHAM.—A deputation to kill the game, to fish, and otherwise sport upon and over the manor and hamlet of Bourton, having been granted to me by William Osmond Hammond, Esq., lord of the said manor, and owner of all the lands within the said hamlet, I hereby give notice, that the game and fish will henceforth be strictly preserved, and that any person found trespassing in pursuit of game, or otherwise, will be prosecuted at the law directs.—HENRY SMITH.—Maids Moreton Lodge, Feb. 20, 1844."

In that notice what a world of misery, degradation, and crime is promised to the hamlet of Bourton. Has Mr. Hammond let "all the lands within the hamlet" at their full marketable value? Knowing the landowners as we do, and presuming that gentleman to be neither better nor worse than his brethren, we may fairly assume that he had got all the rent the competition of farmers would give him. Well, then, having got all the rent he can out of farmers Dobson, Brown, White, &c., he lets the manor, with all his reserved right to hunt, shoot, fish, and fowl, to Mr. Henry Smith, who forthwith issues his ukase to inform the farmers of the district that he means to put all the horrible machinery of the game laws in force to preserve his hares, rabbits, and pheasants, which are to be fed on their corn. Can anything equal the legalized injustice of such a proceeding? To show the extent of injury done by game, we may mention a circumstance within our own knowledge. On a farm which a first-rate farmer left last Michaelmas on the expiration of his lease, and which he declined to renew because the landlord would reserve the game to himself; and on which the whole extent of arable land does not exceed 100 acres, the damage done to the new tenant by game since last Michaelmas has been valued at ONE HUNDRED POUNDS. And, farmers, it is to uphold the system of which this forms a part that you are to band yourselves into "Protection" Societies!!

HINTS FOR LANDLORDS.

IMMORALITY OF THE GAME LAWS.—No small portion of the aristocratic indignation which has been excited against the League is due to the unflinching way in which the advocates of Free Trade have exposed the dark spots in the system of landlord-rule of which the Corn Law is the corner-stone. Of these the game law forms one of the deepest, and has been necessarily made one of the prominent topics in our examination of the state of the rural districts. And amidst all the subjects discussed at the Pro-Corn-Law meetings, we never heard of a single squire who has ventured to pronounce the word game. And if any test were wanted to try the quality of the so-called tenant-farmers meetings, it would be found in the fact that the grievance of which tenants throughout England universally complain never finds utterance at these gatherings. Here, however, we have a witness against the game laws which the squire will find it difficult to gainsay:—

"POACHING AND GAME-PRESERVING.—An Old Vicar thus writes to the Church and State Gazette:—'Upwards of forty years' experience has proved the impossibility of convicting any poor parishioners, in four distantly-placed parishes, of the sin of poaching, or making them feel that they had broken a command of God when they killed hares which were destroying their garden's produce. I believe that all my rural brethren will agree with me, and also in the lamentable conclusion, that a labourer who once has been in goal for such an offence is that ruined, hardened, degraded, and yet thinks himself a martyr; that he thence imbibes a rooted hatred of the game laws, and turns radical. From this I would appeal to the game-preservers, and ask them, as Christians, 'who are not to seek their own, but rather another's good,' whether they can justify conduct which lays a snare for the conscience of a weak brother?'"

This is just what we have constantly said. And what is the chief inducement to poaching? The following is port from a local paper of a proceeding at a petty sessions in Bedfordshire will supply the best answer:—

"GAME.—Joseph Curtis, of Woolton, was charged with trespassing in pursuit of game in Kempton Wood. Defendant pleaded guilty, and said he could get no work, adding, 'If you can't get work and are starving, and nobody will help you, you must be expected to do such things.' Fined 4s., costs 17s. 6d., in default of payment committed for six weeks' hard labour."

Poverty, induced by uncertain and irregular employment, is in most cases the cause which makes rural labourers poachers; but the mere existence of game preserves is, in itself, an enormous evil. They injure the farmers, who readily wink, when they dare, at "offences against the game laws" committed by their labourers; and they offer an irresistible inducement to starving or ill-paid workmen to take the first step in crime. The truth of that which the experience of the "Old Vicar" has shown will be admitted by every one acquainted with the rural districts. We say advisedly, that there is no way in which one man can do so much local public mischief as by maintaining a game preserve.

PLAYING WITH EDGED TOOLS.—We really regard the Pro-Corn-Law writers and speakers with feelings nearly akin to those with which we should see a rash and foolish child brandishing dangerous weapons, with the use and power of which he is unacquainted. Take, for instance, the following paragraph from a monopolist organ:—

"A 'GREAT FACT' FOR THE LEAGUE.—The average price of a quarter of wheat, Winchester measure, in England and Wales, for the week ending March 5, 1791, was 50s. 8d., as stated in a Treasury notice contained in a newspaper of that period now before us. The price of the peck loaf of bread, weighing 17½ lbs., as set forth by the magistrates of Newcastle, was 2s. 2d., on the 16th of March, 1791. These prices bear a very remarkable approximation to the prices now ruling after a lapse of 53 years, during which period almost every article of domestic use has increased greatly in value. It cannot be said that bread is now dearer than it was half a century ago, and when the public burdens upon the agriculturists were not half what they are at present."—Newcastle Journal.

Very well: prices of grain are nearly the same as they were fifty years ago; but what are rents? How does it happen that, with the prices received by his grandfather, the modern farmer pays double, treble, or quadruple rent? Doubtless, vast improvements have been made in husbandry since 1791, and the gross produce of the land is far greater now than then; but who is the gainer? Into whose pocket has all the increase gone? Has not the landlord obtained the lion's share, and more than the lion's share, has he scarcely left a bone to be picked by the farmer?

Does the farmer of 1844 make as good a return for his outlay and his labour as was obtained by his predecessor of 1791? We leave the farmers of England to answer the question!

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Though rather late, we must make room for the verses of Perthensis on the late "repudiation" of Free-Trade principles by the monopolists of his county.

THE COUNTY OF PERTH OBTAIN THE ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE

"The Yorkshire of Scotland seems all in a flutter,
Its farmers are on edge, its landholders bluster;
The tocsin is sounded, the muster-roll called,
Of the landlord's yoked serfs to be doubly enthralled:
At their masters' proud bidding they signatures give,
Not their rents to release, but that lordlings may live;
Their names they append to a sage declaration
(Like Jonathan dealing on repudiation),
For their wisdom announcing Free Trade as the foe
Alike (noble thought!) of the high and the low;
While scarce one in twenty of all the array
One sensible word on the subject can say.
But what is its weight, though signed by each minion,
It weighs as a feather—in public opinion;
Pray what solid basis can it have to rest on,
When its pith and its marrow is begging the question?
All its argument seems that monopoly claims,
By a grand muster-roll of subservient names,
In a hostile position to take up its station,
Against the just rights of a suffering nation.
But, thanks to good sense, a more generous feeling,
There are noble exceptions, to justice appealing:
In favour of commerce, that main-spring of Britain,
The happiest scene that her offspring can meet on,
Claiming speedy redress for the wrongs of fair trade,
And its rights to reclaim, lending freely their aid:
To this patriot law would the muse grateful pay
The people's best thanks, in her own simple lay.
Lo, the farmers have worked by a magical spell,
The train of their selfish lease-granters' base swell.
Did they think for them selves, they would quickly perceive
That they, too, have reason as others to grieve;
Back-rented, of this they ought sole to complain;
With moderate rents, by the change they would gain;
While commerce reviving, as quick would they see
What a mart for their grain would its industry be.
Home demand is the farmer's best market—a nation Composed of a skilful Free-Trade population."

"J. G., Loughborough."—Trade-men putting monopoly petitions in their windows are advertising themselves as candidates for the Gazette.

"One of the League" sends the following scrap as an extract from Franklin: we have not found it in the doctor's works, but it is not unworthy of his pen:—

"FREE TRADE, OR TRADE AND THE MANUFACTURES.
Suppose a country, B, with three manufactures, as cloth, silk, and iron, supplying three other countries, A, B, C, but is desirous of increasing the vent and raising the price in favour of her own clothiers.

"In order to this she forbids the importation of cloth from A.

"A in return forbids silks from B.

"Then the silkworkers complain of decay, and B, to content them, forbids silks from B.

"B in return forbids ironware from E.

"Then the ironworkers complain of decay, and E forbids iron from C.

"C in return forbids cloth from E.

"Q. What is gained by all these prohibitions?

"Ans. All four find their stock of comforts and conveniences diminished."

"A Constant Reader."—We cannot tell the price, but believe the book to be cheap.

"R. W." is thanked, but the fallacy has been sufficiently exposed before. It is a work of supererogation.

"Thrice to vanquish all our foes,
And thrice to slay the slain."

"G. W. W." letter is referred to the agricultural department of the League.

"The League" will be taken into consideration so soon as the many demands on our time afford us sufficient leisure.

"H. L." is referred to Mr. Bright's speech at Covent Garden reported in our last paper.

"A Friend."—The list shall not be lost.

"G. P."—The lines have already appeared in the Anti-Bread-Tax circular.

"An Enemy to Monopoly" sends the following little ballad:—

"And he took up his pen and said,"

"I watched a Christian mother,
Grown pale with want and care,
As patiently she taught her child
Its simple morning prayer.
Its little hands bore famine's marks,
Its voice had sorrow's tone,
And the salt tears bedew'd his cheek,
As paled as her own."

"Each blessed sound the gentle child
Repeated as she read,
Until the words, 'Give us this day,
O Lord, our daily bread';
And then he paused, and sullenly
He hung his little head."

"Give us this day our daily bread;
The child was silent still
A moment more—then, as the tears
Were trickling like a rill,
'I've asked him many a time,' he said,
And yet he never will."

"The mother, shocked, 'He does, my child,
Rich waving fields display—
His bountiful supply for all—
'Then who takes it away?'
This question, tho' not answered now,
Must at a future day."

"Know ye a sweeter sound on earth
Than childhood's voice in prayer?
O man! thy hand for ever mays
All that is bright and fair;
And on the altar of the heart
Thy blight extends even there."

"J. G."—As neither statement is correct it would be useless to attempt to reconcile them.

"J. G."—In their private capacity the members of the League will soon have an opportunity of showing their gratitude to Rowland Hill; not only they, but all who are interested in advancing the interests of humanity, owe him a debt of obligation which can never be adequately discharged.

"H. V." is thanked, but there is no room.

"W. B."—The verses would require considerable improvement before they would be fit for publication.

"J. C., Newcastle-on-Tyne."—The sonnet might pain the person it is designed to celebrate.

"H. C."—The subject requires very delicate handling, but there is no doubt that misguided benevolence has done more injury to the poor than the most perverse malignity.

"A Country Surgeon" will find that his information has not been thrown away; but were we to publish the hundredth part of the instances of individual suffering arising from monopoly, which are daily sent to us, our paper would be nothing but a record of personal grievances.

"J. P."—Many such instances are daily brought to our notice.

"A Lover of Truth" has inquired about a monstrous fiction, uttered by some person named Heathcote; he should have put his question to the worthy M.P.

"R. R." will soon find that he is mistaken in his impressions.

"C. D."—The lines are not quite up to the mark.

"J. A."—We regret that we cannot oblige all our poetical correspondents, but we trust that they will believe us when we say, that rejection of what is dictated by right and noble feeling, from slight deficiencies in form, is the most painful part of our editorial duties.

An intelligent Working Man, writing from Stamford, thus exposes the mode by which signatures are obtained to petitions in favour of the existing Corn monopoly:—"The Tories of this borough went, on Wednesday last, from house to house, with a petition in favour of the Corn Laws, and imposed on the poor by telling them it was to raise their wages, and thus succeeded in obtaining a great many names. The parties consisted of a baker, a butcher, and a brewer, who compelled their workmen to sign the petition. I have it from a working man that his name and the names of many others were affixed to it without their knowledge. There was no public meeting called, nor did the people know anything of it until it was brought to their houses for signature."

Several reviews and other matters are unavoidably postponed till next week.

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any person forwarding 3s. 3d. by Post-office order, to the Publisher, 67, Fleet-street, London, will have one-quarter's copies of the LEAGUE forwarded by post on the days of publication. Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with J. Gadsby, Newall's-buildings, Manchester; and the LEAGUE may be had by order of any news-agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

We receive letters from different correspondents, containing complaints of irregularity in the delivery of the LEAGUE Newspaper. We can assure our friends in all parts of the country, that the utmost possible attention is paid to the transmission of the LEAGUE from this office; and whenever any of our Subscribers suffer disappointment from not receiving their copy in due course, the delay or non-delivery will almost invariably be found to arise from some irregularity in the Post-office; and we recommend in all such cases of disappointment, application to the Post-office at once.

NATIONAL ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE.

THE COUNCIL OF THE LEAGUE beg to announce that their next MEETING in COVENT GARDEN THEATRE WILL NOT TAKE PLACE until Wednesday evening, the 20th inst., engagements having been made by the Proprietors of the Theatre during next week which will preclude the possibility of making the requisite arrangements for holding the usual weekly meeting.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, March 9, 1844.

It is undoubtedly true, as was recently said at one of the League meetings, that no Monopolist member of the House of Commons appears yet to have been converted to the Free-Trade doctrine. We do not expect such conversions. A similar remark might have been made as to Catholic Emancipation, but a very short time before that measure was introduced by Sir Robert Peel. The majority of the House will not be converted piecemeal. Its movements will be like those of the French troops in July, 1830. Soldiers did not then step out of the ranks, walk across to the insurgent multitude, and do battle with their former comrades. No such thing. But whole regiments fired repeated volleys among the people, and then faced about, and hoisted the tricolor. The Ministerial majority is as well drilled as any regiment; and the military instinct is not more powerful than its party spirit.

We need not, indeed, go back to the period of Catholic Emancipation for an instance of the susceptibility of a party to a conversion which is looked for in vain amongst its individual members. Did not something similar happen only two years ago, and on this very subject of the importation of corn? Sir Robert Peel commenced Minister with a body of about 380 parliamentary supporters, almost all of them pledged against any change whatever of the Corn Laws; and yet they adopted, en masse, a new sliding scale, the proposition of which would have been tolerably certain of ousting the Whigs. It would have been scarcely, if at all, less the object of reprobation than the 8s. fixed duty. We do not argue on the chance of any similar exhibition in the Legislature of the military manoeuvre, "right-about face;" our purpose is simply to point out the modes of conversion in a parliamentary majority.

But although Monopolist conversions in the House of Commons be looked for in vain, it does not follow that no change, worthy of the name of conversion, is to be traced there. Important changes may and do take place, which yet leave the numbers on a division unaffected. At the meeting of electors of the Tower Hamlets, on Wednesday last, both the representatives of that borough declared their renunciation of a fixed duty, and their conviction that the time had gone by for any compromise of the principle of total repeal. Conversion of this sort is spreading rapidly in the House. And this is a real and tangible accession to the cause of Free Trade,—a cause which is as much opposed to, and has, perhaps, in the long run, as much to fear from, the system of "Protection" in the form of fixed duty as in that of a sliding scale. In this sense, conversions take place to a considerable extent, of which the two members just referred to are a specimen. And while this change is rapidly making, on the Opposition side of the House, there is an analogous process in operation upon the Ministerial side. There, too, the conviction is growing, that the season for compromise is passed. If any emergency should seem to demand the relinquishment of the present law, "Protection" will be abandoned along with it. With both political parties, the total repeal of the Corn Laws, from being wholly out of question, is becoming the only point that is in question. And although this sort of conversion may not tell upon the public mind, nor even attract public observation, like individual instances of distinctly-avowed change from Monopolist to Free-Trade principles, yet, it is of real and deep importance in reference to a final settlement; and it also affords encouragement to the practical work in which we have called for the co-operation of those who possess the elective franchise. Let all Free-Traders in the constituencies be on the alert. The memorializing of their members to support Mr. Villiers's motion will be sure to tell in some way or other. Every such document is an addition to that great moving power which sometimes has its full action upon the individual, but more frequently is less perceptible, though not less efficient in its influence upon the mass. This is the next and immediate duty of the electoral repealers: we rely on its being done, thoroughly and universally. By any neglect in it, we shall be untrue to our cause and ourselves. Let the impression be distinctly made upon the Legislature of the earnestness and determination of the public mind.

SUGAR MONOPOLY.—SERING IS BELIEVING.—One of the most practical exhibitions of the sugar monopoly that we have heard of took place at the Liverpool Exchange on Wednesday last. Samples of free sugar and monopoly sugar, with the prices and the duties upon each, were placed side by side in glass cases, and beside them lay a petition to the House of Commons, praying that the scandalous sugar monopoly should be abolished. There was no possibility of misunderstanding the question when thus brought under notice; seeing a believing; and when people saw sugar of similar quality lying side by side,—the one selling at 2d. per lb. and the other at 4d. per lb. in bond,—it created a sensation which twenty lectures would fail to produce. Every body remarked, this, at all events, is not a party question; and we are happy to hear that the petition was numerously signed by men of all parties. That our readers may judge of the nature of the robbery by the sugar monopoly, we give the following copy from the glass cases:—

| Free Sugar. | Protected Sugar. |
|-----------------------------------|--|
| Duty, 7½d. per lb. | Duty, 2½d. per lb. |
| Price in Bond. | Price in Bond. |
| Porto Rico, 18s. 6d. to 19s. | Jamaica, 37s. per cwt., or 4d. per lb. |
| per cwt., or 2d. per lb. | per lb. |
| Brazil, 20s. 6d., or 2½d. per lb. | Bengal, 43s. 6d., or 4½d. per lb. |
| Siam, 22s., or 2½d. per lb. | Jamaica, 37s., or 4d. per lb. |

It is intended to send the glass cases to some member of Parliament to be exhibited in the House of Commons during the debate on the sugar duties; and that the public may also see for themselves how they are plundered by the sugar monopolists, glass cases similar to those exhibited at Liverpool will be exhibited at the Offices of the League, No. 67, Fleet-street, London; and at the League Offices in Manchester.

THE FUNDS.

| | Mar. 3 | Mar. 4 | Mar. 5 | Mar. 6 | Mar. 7 | Mar. 8 |
|---------------------|---------|---------|---------|---------|---------|---------|
| Bank Stock | 98 1/2 | 98 1/2 | 98 1/2 | 98 1/2 | 98 1/2 | 98 1/2 |
| 4 per Ct. Red. Ann. | 98 1/2 | 98 1/2 | 98 1/2 | 98 1/2 | 98 1/2 | 98 1/2 |
| 5 per Ct. Red. Ann. | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 |
| 5 per Ct. Ann. New | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 |
| Long An. Ex. 1840 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 |
| Cons. for Acc. | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 |
| Rep. Bills | 69 pm. | 69 pm. | 69 pm. | 69 pm. | 69 pm. | 69 pm. |
| Ind. Bds. and 1000 | 86 | 86 pm. | 86 pm. | 86 pm. | 86 pm. | 86 pm. |
| India Stock | 27 1/2 | 27 1/2 | 27 1/2 | 27 1/2 | 27 1/2 | 27 1/2 |
| Belgian | 104 1/2 | 104 1/2 | 104 1/2 | 104 1/2 | 104 1/2 | 104 1/2 |
| Brazilian | 80 1/2 | 80 1/2 | 80 1/2 | 80 1/2 | 80 1/2 | 80 1/2 |
| Chilian | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 |
| Columbian Vene. | 14 1/2 | 14 1/2 | 14 1/2 | 14 1/2 | 14 1/2 | 14 1/2 |
| Danish | 87 1/2 | 87 1/2 | 87 1/2 | 87 1/2 | 87 1/2 | 87 1/2 |
| Dutch 5 per Cent. | 101 1/2 | 101 1/2 | 101 1/2 | 101 1/2 | 101 1/2 | 101 1/2 |
| Dutch 3 per Ct. | 84 1/2 | 84 1/2 | 84 1/2 | 84 1/2 | 84 1/2 | 84 1/2 |
| Mexican, 1837 | 34 1/2 | 34 1/2 | 34 1/2 | 34 1/2 | 34 1/2 | 34 1/2 |
| Portuguese, conv. | 48 1/2 | 48 1/2 | 48 1/2 | 48 1/2 | 48 1/2 | 48 1/2 |
| Spanish 5 per Ct. | 26 1/2 | 26 1/2 | 26 1/2 | 26 1/2 | 26 1/2 | 26 1/2 |
| Do. 2 per Ct. | 28 1/2 | 28 1/2 | 28 1/2 | 28 1/2 | 28 1/2 | 28 1/2 |
| Peruvian | 30 1/2 | 30 1/2 | 30 1/2 | 30 1/2 | 30 1/2 | 30 1/2 |

MARKETS.

CORN MARKET.

MARK-LANE, Monday, March 4. — The supply of Essex Wheat this morning was short, but there was a good show of samples from Kent; many of the latter were in bad condition, and for such there was a slow sale; but fine dry samples sold readily at 1s. advance on last week's rates. There was rather more inquiry for Free Foreign, but the transactions were not extensive, owing to the high rates that were insisted on by the holders. The business done was at last week's prices. Though the supply of Barley was not very large, fine Malting was 1s. per qr., and Distilling and Grinding 1s. to 2s. per qr., cheaper than this day week. Beans and Peas were in request, and for the former a slight advance was obtained. The supply of Oats was more than equal to the demand; and though a decline of 6d. per qr. was submitted to, the sale was very limited.

B. H. LUCAS and SON.

Currency per Imperial measure.

| | | | |
|---------------------|------------|------------------------|------------|
| Wheat, English, Red | 45s to 55s | Malt, Pale Suffolk and | 28s to 30s |
| Do., do., Old | 52s — 61s | Norfolk | 54s — 58s |
| New, do. White | 60s — 64s | Chevalier | 60s — 63s |
| Old, do., do. | 60s — 64s | Brown | 53s — 56s |
| Dantzic | 67s — 63s | Oats, English Feed | 20s — 22s |
| Stettin | 50s — 57s | Do. Short | 21s — 23s |
| Barley, Malting | 34s — 39s | Scotch Feed | 21s — 23s |
| Distilling | 32s — 34s | Do. Potato | 23s — 25s |
| Grinding | 28s — 32s | Irish Feed | 19s — 20s |
| Beans, Tick | 26s — 27s | Do. Short | 20s — 22s |
| Harrow | 28s — 30s | Do. Black | 19s — 20s |
| Pigeon | 32s — 34s | Do. Galway | 17s — 19s |
| Old Harrow | 33s — 35s | Flour, town made and | |
| Peas, White | 28s — 30s | beat country marks | 45s — 50s |
| Do., Bollers | 31s — 33s | Norfolk and Suff. | |
| Grey | 26s — 28s | folk | 40s — 44s |

Account of CORN, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 26th of Feb. to the 2nd of March, 1844, both days inclusive.

| | Wheat. | Barley. | Oats. | Beans. | Peas. |
|---------|--------|---------|-------|--------|-------|
| English | 5163 | 5226 | 4097 | 1573 | 976 |
| Scotch | — | — | 937 | — | — |
| Irish | — | 60 | 21294 | — | — |
| Foreign | 1350 | 880 | — | — | 6 |

Flour, 8455 sacks, 154 bbls. Malt, 6792 qrs.

MARK-LANE, Friday, March 8. — The arrivals of English Wheat since Monday are very moderate. Prices are the same as on Monday, and there is very little business doing. The supply of Barley is fully equal to the demand; the sale is slow at former rates. We continue well supplied with English and Irish Oats; and the dealers being now pretty well stocked, there is more difficulty in effecting sales. Where vessels are on demurrage, a decline of 6d. from Monday must be acceded to. The duty on Beans fell to 10s. 6d. yesterday; and there is, in consequence, rather more inquiry for Egyptian in bond.

B. H. LUCAS and SON.

Account of Corn, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 23rd of Feb. to the 8th of March, both inclusive.

| | English. | Irish. | Foreign. |
|--------|----------|--------|----------|
| Wheat | 3180 | — | 2350 |
| Barley | 5210 | 190 | — |
| Oats | 4250 | 14270 | — |

Flour 2040 sacks.

A WEEKLY REPORT OF THE NUMBER OF QUARTERS, and the AVERAGE PRICE OF CORN and GRAIN, sold in the several Counties of England and Wales (comprising the Two Hundred and Ninety Towns named in the Act of the 5th Vic., cap. 14), which governs Duty.

WEEK ENDED MARCH 8, 1844.

| | WHEAT. | BARLEY. | OATS. | BEANS. |
|---------|------------|-------------|-------------|-------------|
| | Qrs. Aver. | Qrs. Aver. | Qrs. Aver. | Qrs. Aver. |
| Weekly | 98,830 86 | 2 86,127 33 | 9 51,215 20 | 0 14,423 30 |
| Average | .. 53 8 | .. 33 5 | .. 19 4 | .. 30 1 |
| Duty | .. 18 0 | .. 8 0 | .. 7 0 | .. 10 6 |

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, MARCH 5

BANKRUPTCY SUPPLEMENT.

- H. SOUTHGATE, Fleet-street, auctioneer.
W. L. WOOD, Bishopsgate-street Within, export ironmonger.
BANKRUPT.
N. BLAKE, Edgware-road, linen draper. [Pain and Hatherly, Great Marlborough-street.
C. M. MOTTAM, Friday-street, Cheapside, warehouseman. [Sale and Worthington, Manchester; Reed and Shaw, Friday-street, Cheapside.
W. CHERSMAN, J. HODSON, and W. O. CHERSMAN, Brighton, china-men. [Cattlin, Ely-place, Holborn.
W. H. HAWKES, Brighton, common brewer. [Rickards and Walker, Lincoln's-Inn-fields.
E. TUCK, Haymarket, silversmith. [Mawe, New Bridge-street.
J. HUGGINS, York-place, High-street, Portland-town, poultryer. [Messrs. Lovell, South-square, Gray's-Inn.
J. TAYLOR, Daventry, Northamptonshire, ironfounder. [Addis and Guy, Great Queen-street, Westminster.
C. J. RIDDEY, Little Cretton, Northamptonshire, innkeeper. [Weller, King's-road, Bedford-row; Pell, Northampton.
C. COUCHMAN, Edward-square, Kensington, Middlesex, carpenter. [Atkinson, Carey-street.
J. JOSEPH, Peter's-lane, Paul's-wharf, City, clerk to a book-keeper. [Lane, Argyll-street, Regent-street.
H. TAYLOR, Bliton, Staffordshire, victualler. [Manby and Hawkesford, Wolverhampton.
J. CRUMP, Stanway, Gloucestershire, corn dealer. [Cheek, Kvesham; Dix, Bristol; Bell, Bedford-row.

DIVIDENDS.

March 26. F. B. Courtenay, Great Marlborough-street, book-seller—March 26. J. Andrew, Lad-lane, licensed victualler—March 26. P. Axmann and J. G. Christ, Mark-lane, foreign and general merchants—March 26. W. Keat, Covent-garden, engraver—March 26. T. Maggs, Cheshunt, upholsterer—March 26. W. Keap, Northumberland-street, Strand, tailor—March 26. C. Sharp and W. D. Clarke, Berners-street, upholsterers—March 26. E. Mackintosh, Haymarket, army accoutrement maker—March 27. J. G. West, Wandsworth, grocer—March 27. J. Willis, Osborne street, Whitechapel, ale and porter merchant—March 27. R. Kennet, New Bond-street, upholsterer—March 26. T. Balnes, Bradford, Yorkshire, worsted spinner—March 26. W. Fretwell, Leeds, colonial merchant—March 27. R. Hunt, Kingston-upon-Hull, booter—March 27. J. Crowther, Huddersfield, corn miller—March 27. T. Eyre, Gainsborough, Lincolnshire, corn merchant—March 27. J. Taylor, Middlesbrough, Yorkshire, coal fitter—March 26. H. Featherstonhaugh, Bishop Wearmouth, coal fitter—March 27. C. B. Buchanan and W. Cunningham, Liverpool, merchants—March 26. T. Bomford, Elmstone Hardwick, Gloucestershire, hay dealer.

CERTIFICATES.

March 26. C. Killick and J. Sudd, Blackman-street, Borough, paper stainers—March 26. T. W. Vine, Peers-lane, City-road, carpenter—March 26. F. B. Courtenay, Great Marlborough-street, bookseller.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATION.

P. SINCLAIR, Edinburgh, auctioneer.

RAMS FOR RAISING WATER without Labour, where a fall can be obtained—Deep Well Engines—Pumps of every description—Buildings heated by hot water, &c. Every description of Fountains erected by F. ROE, 70, STRAND, Ornamental and House Engineer.

WORTHY OF REMARK.—The fact that many of the principal Hospitals in the kingdom—among which it is sufficient to name Guy's, St. George's, and the Westminster, in the metropolis, and the Manchester, Bristol, and Brighton Infirmarys—have adopted BETTS'S PATENT BRANDY, in preference to Foreign, affords a sufficient guarantee to the consumers of Brandy of the extreme purity of the article; the connoisseur being, at the same time, baffled in his attempt to distinguish between its flavour and that of fine Cognac.—Price, pale or coloured, in quantities not less than Two Gallons, Eighteen Shillings per Gallon, at the Distillery, No. 7, Smithfield-barn, leading to St. John-street.

THE NEW MANURE.

HUMPHREY'S FARMERS' COMPOUND, possessing superior advantages to any manure yet offered to the public. It is rich in the Phosphate, Silicate, and Nitrogen, with certain new agents, so as to prove most economical and effective for Wheat, Barley, Potatoes, Meadow Land, &c. Being manufactured on a new principle, this Manure will not wash out of the soil like guano, or the salts; but, with the lasting qualities of the "Home-made," combines the most energetic fertilising chemical agents; adapted to all the purposes of Husbandry and Garden Culture, and unrivalled as a Top Dressing for all Spring Crops.—12s. per cwt. Wholesale Agents, DAVY, MACKINROD, and CO., 101, Upper Thames-street, London.

SEA SICKNESS—THOMPSON'S REMEDY.

This nearly tasteless and easily administered remedy has proved efficacious in upwards of 80 cases in 100, when the directions for taking it have been observed; and will be found invaluable for delicate Females and Children travelling by sea. Sold wholesale by T. Thompson and Son, chemists, Liverpool; W. Edwards, 57, St. Paul Churchyard, London; J. and R. Raines and Co., Dundee; Cockhart, and Co., and H. C. Baldon, Edinburgh; the Apothecaries Company, Glasgow; Wm. Jackson, 10, Lower Mecklenburgh-street, Dublin; A. Mordaunt, Southampton; Evans, Sons, and Co., and J. J. Jackson and Co., Liverpool; and by most respectable Druggists in the principal seaports in the United Kingdom, in packages, price 2s. 9d., and in tin cases, equal to six packages, price 11s. A post-office order for 2s. 11d. will ensure its prompt return by post.

THE AMERICAN ROCKING-CHAIR.—None

are genuine unless they have "Luck, Kent, and Cumming," painted on the bottom. This chair, so much admired by all who have visited America, for the remarkable ease, pleasure, and comfort which it affords, is just imported, and for sale at the extensive Carpet and Upholstery Establishments of LUCK, KENT, and CUMMING, No. 4, Regent-street; Carpenters' Hall, 68, London-wall; and WM. CUMMING and Co., 98, Hatton-garden. It is asserted with confidence that there is no piece of furniture in use in civilized society more sought after and approved of when known. The price 25s., with a liberal discount to the trade. Stout persons and Invalids will find these chairs invaluable.

WEAK LEGS, KNEES, AND ANKLES.—

SURGONS in England, Ireland, and Scotland, continue to recommend BAILEY'S ELASTIC LACED STOCKINGS, KNEE CAPS, and ANKLE SOCKS; they are light, cool, and warranted to wash. Since the reduction of postage, afflicted persons in the country can have any bandage by post, for a few pence, by forwarding the measure outwardly, property of the Stocking is to give constant support in various veins, weak, swollen, or dropsical affections of the legs, or in any case requiring equal pressure: the Knee Cap will be of great service where the knee joint requires support, from accident to the pain of the knee, after inflammation, rheumatic or gouty affections, or in any case where, from weakness of the part, support may be required.—W. H. Bailey, 418, Oxford-street, London.

STOOPING OF THE SHOULDERS AND

CONTRACTION OF THE CHEST, so injurious in Young Persons and oppressive to Invalids and the Infirm, entirely prevented, and gently and effectually removed, by the occasional use of the Patent ST. JAMES'S CHEST-EXPANDER, which is light, simple, easily employed outwardly or invisibly, without bands beneath the arms, uncomfortable constraint, or impediment to exercise. The great improvement it effects in the figure is immediately apparent; but the permanent benefit of this invention is its obvious tendency to youth, and to afford a comfortable support to the chest and back in the aged and weakly, or those who are accustomed to sedentary occupations. Full particulars may be obtained on application to Mr. A. Blyton, 40, Tavistock-street, Strand, London, by enclosing a postage stamp.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH, Mr.

THOMAS'S SUGCANEUM, price 4s. 6d.—Patronized by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. This valuable SUGCANEUM for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity, is far superior to anything ever before used, as it is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and in a short time becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary. It arrests all further progress of decay, and renders the tooth again useful in mastication. All persons can use Mr. THOMAS'S SUGCANEUM themselves with ease, without the aid of a dentist, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 68, Berners-street, Oxford-street, price 4s. 6d., and will be sent by post to any part of the kingdom.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. Thomas continues to supply the loss of teeth, which he has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, which will be found very superior to all others, as they will never decay nor become discoloured, and their perfect resemblance to nature defies detection even by the closest observer. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. The charges will be found less than most dentists.—Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 68, Berners-street, Oxford-street. At home from Eleven till Four.

CORROBORATION OF THE INNOCENT YET

RELIEVING PROPERTIES OF BLAIR'S GOUT AND RHEUMATIC PILLS.

TO MR. PROUT, 229, STRAND, LONDON.

Sir,—In recompense for the great benefit I have received from the use of Blair's Gout and Rheumatic Pills, I feel it a duty I have long owed to the afflicted with the excruciating torture of the Gout, to make your valuable remedy more extensively known.

I am upwards of seventy years of age, and have, when occasion required, used them for more than twelve years past. I have at all times found nothing to relieve me but them, and my firm belief is that they are not composed of anything injurious to the constitution, as I always find, after their use, my general bodily health renewed, and my appetite considerably sharpened.

Should you, Sir, think this statement worthy of insertion in your list of testimonials, I can with truth solemnly declare the above.

April 16th, 1842.

P.S.—I will with pleasure answer any application in proof of this testimony.

The never-failing effects of BLAIR'S GOUT AND RHEUMATIC PILLS in curing every description of Gout and Rheumatism, have secured to them a celebrity unequalled by any medicine of past or present times. They not only give relief in a few hours, where the patient has been driven nearly to madness by the excruciating tortures of this disease, but restore to perfect health in an inconceivable short space of time. They are equally speedy and certain in rheumatism, either chronic or acute, lumbago, sciatica, pains in the head or face, and indeed for every rheumatic or gouty affection (in fact, such has been the rapidity, perfect ease, and complete safety of this medicine, that it has astonished all who have taken it; and there is not a city, town, or village in the kingdom, but contains many grateful evidences of its benign influence.

Sold by Thomas Prout, 229, Strand, London; and by his appointment by all respectable Medicine Vendors throughout the United Kingdom. Price 2s. 6d. per box.

Ask for Blair's Gout and Rheumatic Pills, and observe the name and address of "Thomas Prout, 229, Strand, London," impressed upon the Government Stamp affixed to each box of the genuine Medicine.

Just published, by John Chapman (late John Green), 121, Newgate-street, THE LIFE OF CHARLES FOLLETT, By E. L. FOLLETT. 12mo., cloth, 6s. 6d.

Just published, by John Chapman, 121, Newgate-street (late John Green), 12mo., cloth, 6s. 6d.

HUMAN NATURE: a Philosophical the Divine Institution of Edward and Penkington, which changes the physical, intellectual, and moral constitutions of man.

THE FARMERS AND THE LEAGUE.

This day is published, the Fourth Edition, price 6d., of MR. GEORGE GAME DAY'S SPEECH AT HUNTINGDON, January 27, 1844.

Published by J. Ollivier, 59, Pall-mall, London.

Just published, price Sixpence, A SECOND LETTER TO THE FARMERS OF DORSETSHIRE, on the Cause of Depression in the Prices of Agricultural Produce. By EDWARD WARR, of Warrington.

Published by Charles Gilpin, 5, Bishopsgate Without, London, and may be obtained of any bookseller in London or in the Country.

FISHER'S COLONIAL MAGAZINE and Journal of TRADE, COMMERCE, and BANKING—No. II, for March, containing:—

1. New Australian Export—Tallow.
2. Dutch Settlements in Asia.
3. Western Australia: her Colonists and her Champions.
4. The Dismemberment of Spain and her Colonies—by G. T. W.
5. Colonial Statistics (New Series)—The Island of Jamaica.
6. A Voice from Trinidad—Chap. IV.—by H. B.
7. New Zealand—Emigrant's Relation.
8. Reviews of Books, including Pamphlets, Accounts of the Oregon Territory.
9. Original Correspondence.
10. Commerce of the United States.
11. Colonial Intelligence.
12. Imperial Parliament.
13. Monthly Obituary, &c. &c.

Fisher, Son, and Co., Newgate-street.

MR. BEARD'S DAGUERRETYPE, or PHOTOGRAPHIC PORTRAITS.—These inimitable and much-mirrored Portraits, in which further improvements have lately been effected, are taken by the Patentee, at 85, King William-street, City; 34, Pall-mall; and at the Royal Polytechnic Institution, 309, Regent-street, &c.; and also, Licenses are granted for exercising the Invention in provincial towns and districts.

CHINESE COLLECTION and GRAND DISTRI-

BUTION (admission free), value £5000, on the principle of the Anti-Union, in prizes, consisting of Chinese curiosities and Parisian novelties, on April 8, at the Chinese and Parisian Magazine, 7, Old Jewry. Every subscriber will obtain a handsome prize, consisting of Chinese jars, plates, &c., or a splendid package of French ingenuity and taste. This division will take place under the highest patronage. The prizes are now on show at the above establishment. Tickets, 5s. each, may be obtained by applying in advance, or at the retail branches of the Chinese and Parisian Magazine, 7, Old Jewry, and corner of the Old Jewry, Cheapside; also of Henshaw's, 18, Philip-lane. W. Ancier and P. Ledoux, rue de Lombard, Paris, will supply the Parisian articles, and the indefatigable exertions of the proprietors for the last ten years will furnish a magnificent collection from the Celestial Empire.

TAYLOR, Brothers, and HEWETT, Chinese and Parisian Magazine, wholesale department, 7, Old Jewry, Cheapside.

DINNER PARTIES.—May be had on hire, at HOPE'S Warehouse, 36, Rathbone place, Oxford-street (fifty years established), 2000 caned Chairs; 2000 feet of Dinner and Supper Tables; and 3000 feet of caned Seats. Ivory handled Knives and Forks to any extent. Table Linen, Glass, China, Plate, and Plated Articles in any quantity, with every other article requisite for Dinner and Supper Tables, at the most reasonable prices.

A FORTUNE IN LIVERPOOL.—Any Manufacturer wishing to establish an AGENCY in LIVERPOOL, may avail himself of the services of a Gentleman with an extensive acquaintance among the merchants and shippers of that port. Parties requiring an agent, will find all the requisites, including security, &c., to any amount, in applying, by letter, to A. A. Dartmouth Hotel, West Bromwich; Messrs. Dakin and Co.'s, Wolverhampton; or Mr. Lea's, 1, Dale-street, Liverpool.

DAYLIGHT AT NIGHT! CAMPHINE!

The patent Camphine Lamp gives a rich light, surpassing in purity and brilliancy; is simple in construction, and emits neither smoke nor smell. May be seen burning at F. Barnett's Furnishing Ironmongery and Lamp Warehouse, 25, Oxford-street, where a large assortment may be selected from, all at the lowest possible prices. Any Lamp Filler may be fitted with a Camphine head. Patent Camphine Lamp Spirit, 3s. 6d. per gallon. Observe, 25, Oxford-street, one door west of Rathbone-place. Hall Lamps, 11s. 6d.; Ground Glass Patent Solar Lamps, from 3s. 6d.; Palmer's Patent Candle Lamps, from 5s. A most elegant assortment of Table, Bracket, Sideboard, and suspending Lamps, in ornate and brass, at extraordinary low prices. Lamps cleaned or altered to the latest principle. Lamp shades, 5s.; cottons, 4d. per doz. Palmer's Patent Candles, 8d. per lb.

THE NEW LIGHT.—A GREAT NOVELTY.

The patent CAMPHINE LAMP gives a light of surpassing softness, and purity, without any kind of grease or dirt, smoke, or smell. The lamp is simply and beautifully constructed, and can be fitted to any description of lamp, pedestal, or gas fitting. It is not easily put out of condition. The Camphine (also a patent) is 4s. per gallon, and is so pure that if it is put on any article of dress or furniture will not leave either stain or mark, while it consumes so slowly that, at the cost of three farthings for six hours, it gives a light equal to twelve mould candles without any smell. It will be found far less expensive than any, and incomparably superior to all existing lights. To be seen burning at Rippon and Burton's (sole retail sale and retail agents for English Patent Camphine).—N.B. The ONLY Patent Camphine Lamp has a Rippon and Burton, Wells-street, Oxford-street, conspicuously placed on its head. The public are cautioned against all not so marked.

PATRONIZED AND SANCTIONED BY HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN, H.M.H. PRINCE ALBERT, THE ROYAL FAMILY, AND THE IMPERIAL COURTS OF EUROPE.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the Growth

and for Preserving and Beautifying the Human Hair. Price 2s. 6d. Family Bottles (equal to 4 small) 10s. 6d., and double the size 20s. 6d. CAUTION.—SPURIOUS COMPOSITIONS are frequently offered for sale under a FICTITIOUS name or the word "GENUINE." It is imperative on purchasers to see that the words "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" are on the Wrapper of each bottle, and on the back of the wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 39,028 letters. All others are FULSANT COUNTERFEITS. The principle on which "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" is prepared, is confined solely to the knowledge and practice of A. ROWLAND and SON, who are still at an immense outlay in completing its preparation, and the amalgamation of its FULSANT GETABLE MATERIALS renders abortive any attempt to discover its secret parts.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for Improving and Beautifying the Hair and Complexion. Price 4s. 6d. and 6s. 6d. per bottle, duty included. ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, renders the teeth beautifully White and preserves the Gums. Price 2s. 6d. per bottle, duty included.

CAUTION.—It is imperative on purchasers to see that the word "ROWLAND'S" is on the Wrapper of each article. For the protection of the Public from fraud and imposition, the Honourable Commissioners of Her Majesty's Stamps have authorized the Proprietors' Signature to be on the Government Stamp, thus, A. ROWLAND and SON, 39, Wells-street, Oxford-street, which is affixed to the Kalydor and Odonto. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers.

All others are SPURIOUS IMITATIONS!!!

BELL'S BALM OF ROSEMARY

COUGHS is justly esteemed the safest and most certain ever invented, and will be found to act like a charm in allaying every kind. Rosemary has long been used as a domestic remedy for coughs and colds in the form of tea, or by infusing a few leaves in brandy, and taken at bedtime. The Balm possesses the medicinal properties of the plant, which are tonic, expectorant, and diaphoretic. It opens the skin and mucous membrane of the lungs and bronchial tubes, carrying off the disease by perspiration and expectoration. It proves its extraordinary powers. As a defence to the throat, MEDICATED TISSUE PAPER will be found invaluable. It is pervious to air, it effectually excludes cold and damp, and is so light and pliable that it may be worn outside the throat in the form of a stick, or a piece of silk or any other light material.

Prepared by J. Bell, Chemist, 55, St. John-street, and sold by Edwards, 57, St. Paul's; Bullock, Prince-street; Priestley, Lord-street, Liverpool; Rose and Burton, 39, Wells-street, Oxford-street, and in sheets, 2d. each, of most N.B. The paper can be sent by post.

THE LEAGUE.

No. 25.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 16, 1844.

[3d.]

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND, £100,000.

All subscribers of £1 and upwards to the ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUND FUND, will be entitled to, and receive a copy, weekly, of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have forwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the Offices of THE LEAGUE, Newall's-buildings, Manchester, or 67, Fleet-street, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND, are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council respectfully request that their friends, in all places where committees for raising subscriptions to the £100,000 Fund have not been already formed, will proceed to their formation as soon as possible, and transmit their names to the LEAGUE Offices, Manchester.

THE DUKE'S OWN.

That very select secret association, which rejoices in the Duke of Richmond as its president, and in the "Agricultural Protection Society" as its title, has put forth a string of resolutions declaratory of its objects, means, and constitution. No information is imparted as to where, when, or by whom these resolutions were adopted: all that we know is negative or inferential. "The Agricultural Protection Society for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland" owes its birth to no public meeting or free discussion. No fair and open assemblage of persons interested in agriculture has hitherto been connected with its origin and progress, or with those of its branch societies. It is altogether a thing of darkness. The names of certain peers and other landlords, with a tail of plain Mist'ers, whom we are to take upon trust as tenant-farmers, are given to the world; and that is all. The titles may prevent the application of the old story of the three tailors in Tooley-street, who began their manifesto with, "We, the people of England;" but the real impertinence is not far removed. The titled exclusives have little more right to speak for agriculture than the tailors had for the population.

One rule, indeed, enacts that, of the General Committee of forty, "twenty shall always be tenant-farmers." But the twenty are effectually swamped, should there be occasion to swamp them, by the addition to the twenty landlords, of the president and vice-president, four trustees, and the chairmen of country associations. The tenant-farmers must also have already sworn allegiance to the principle of protection. And by what process are they selected? So far as appears, by the committee itself: i.e., in the first instance by the Dukes of Richmond and Buckingham, and their confederates; afterwards, by their nominees. Such is the central and ruling power. We should like to know what possible good the tenantry can reasonably expect from a committee thus constituted?

Will the landlords, who are a sure majority, to say nothing of their influence apart from numbers, trust the tenantry with the appointment of their own representatives in this committee? Or allow them a voice by rotation in its proceedings? Not they, truly. The avenues are barred every way. There will be no admission for any tenant who may be troublesome. We will answer for it that leases and rents will never be discussed in this committee. It will be no place for complaints. The tenants will be there just to do dirty work for their masters, and help on the game of false appearances. There is only one thing at which the world will laugh more scornfully than at this transparent humbug; and that is, at the tenant-farmer who dreams of deriving from it the slightest advantage.

Amongst the constitutional provisions of the society, there is one which strikes us as particularly superfluous. It is the latter clause of Rule 4, which enacts, "that the society shall on no account interfere in any election for a member to serve in Parliament." What room, we should like to know, is left for such interference? What means, of intimidation or corruption, are not already tried to the uttermost? If non-interference were the principle and the practice of the Protectionists, some credit might be taken for this forbearance. When the tenantry really feel themselves free in their voting, let them be thankful that no invasion of their liberty is contemplated. And let the tradesmen rejoice, over whom no influence has been exercised. But we must find them first, before we invite them to be grateful. Will advertisements and rewards discover them? Perhaps we have misunderstood the rule, and it is simply intended as an honourable pledge that the body shall not interfere with the electoral possessions of its individual members. There shall be no poaching on private manors. The committee shall not meddle in any duke's pocket borough. Electioneering perquisites shall be left just as they are. All very well, this agreement, or understanding, amongst themselves. To put it forward as a testimony of respect for the freedom of election, required no common degree of effrontery.

Not to interfere, constitutionally, with any election whatever, is a pledge that no honest man ought to give, or will give. If by communicating information he can aid the constituency towards a wise and right decision, it is his duty so to do. Not to interfere unconstitutionally, by deception, corruption, threatening, or undue influence, is a pledge that no honest man has occasion to give. Which do the Protectionists mean? As they accompany the promise with no renunciation of the system hitherto pursued, we can understand little else than that they will confine themselves to the unconstitutional interference as best adapted to their purposes.

O that the Monopolists would, collectively and personally, stick to the non-interference of which they talk, but for one general election! No more Free-Trade agitation would then be necessary. Uncertainty would no longer overhang the farmer's prospects, and confound his bargains. We should see whose interests had been consulted in all this chicanery. The dread of competition would vanish like smoke. Our farmers, as well as our manufacturers, would challenge the world. And the history of the past would be read with amazement at its absurdity.

The topics of Tuesday night's debate are those which would be inquired into by committees and associations, were committees and associations really formed for the promotion of agriculture and the good of agriculturists. Parliament would not entertain the inquiry. The facts of the case are not wanted by the landlord majority. They profess to subscribe for enlightening the country, and disproving the assertions of the League. What materials can be so authentic for that purpose as those which would be furnished by evidence taken before a committee of the House of Commons? They were invited and challenged to the investigation. They were offered a majority of the committee, and their own chairman. All would not do. They bluster, contradict, and abuse; but they will not investigate, nor allow investigation, so far as it is under their control. These people have no right to tell the public that they will "repel the imputations and point out the inconsistencies of those who oppose protection." The pretence cannot escape the charge of hypocrisy and bad faith, so long as they obstruct inquiry. Fallacy is branded on their foreheads. They meditate deception, or they would not preclude information. If the League be half so mendacious as they pretend, the success of the motion on Tuesday night would have been its death-blow. But they dared not trust the issue.

What question can be more interesting to the farmer than that of the proportion of his produce which he pays in rent? Mr. Cobden, in that masterly speech which every tenant-farmer should study well, as the best epitome of his case yet made, affirms this proportion often to amount to one-half. Lord Worsley, who is a member of the Protection Society Committee, strenuously combated this assertion. And how did he disprove it? By a calculation from "a farmer of great experience" in Lincolnshire of the outlay and returns of a farm of 200 acres. His figures show gross receipts (for a term of four years) of £3450 against rent for that period of £800. But, on looking into the items, we find the tithe just one-fourth of the rent. If, then, the tithe be the tenth of the produce, the rent is four-tenths; not very far from one-half. And the rent and tithe (which is also rent, the Church's rent for its share) taken together are exactly one-half. There are some other matters worth attending to in this statement of Lord Worsley. He reckons the wheat at 56s. per quarter. How many farmers have sold the whole of their last year's produce at that rate? Moreover, while the tenant has realized, in four years, only £200, after an investment of £1200 capital, the landlord has received £800 as rent. Is this an equitable distribution? The tenant has 4½ per cent. interest on his money, with no profits, nor any remuneration for his skill, toil, watchfulness, anxiety, and responsibility; and the landlord has £800. Let his lordship induce the protection committee to publish a few such statements as these in reply to Mr. Cobden and the League, and see what the farmers will think of them, or the public either. Every impartial mind must be struck at once by the enormity of the landlord's proportion, even according to this defensive computation. In fact, the Monopolists seem, by their conduct in this debate, to understand that their policy is to avoid not only investigation, but defence. They cannot adduce facts, they cannot even present calculations prepared for the purpose of defence, without showing how very unfavourable to themselves is the minutest ray of light which they can let in upon the subject.

For persons in such a predicament to hope anything from the forms and semblance of a public agitation is most forlorn. To make themselves ridiculous is the least evil that can befall them. However, they will be martyrs in a good cause, for the settlement of the question will be accelerated by their movement; and they will soon find the union of their two modes of operation to be quite impossible. They cannot at once bully the League and burk the question.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

THE FREE-TRADE MIRROR OF PARLIAMENT FOR THE SESSION 1844.

Sixth Week, ending Saturday, March 16.

This has been a very important week for the question of Free Trade in Parliament; and if there were any intelligent foreigner anxious on the subject, yet incredulous as to the extent, the power, and the vitality of public opinion on it, we would have asked no better mode to convince him than to have placed him in the gallery of the House of Commons on Tuesday night last.

The campaign was opened in the House of Lords on Monday night by the Earl of Radnor, who presented the county of Somerset Free-Trade petition, and raised considerable discussion. Every effort was made to discredit this "fact," and it being impossible to deny that a Free-Trade petition had been adopted at a great county meeting, all efforts were directed to show that the majority at the meeting had been improperly constituted, and did not fairly represent the feelings of the county. Even Lord Portman, who, as a Fixed-duty man, very appropriately termed himself a sort of "amphibious animal," did his best to show, that though Somersetshire has a representative like Colonel Gore Langton, who, during a long series of years, has supported free trade in corn and in everything, yet that the constituency were of a different mind! The most remarkable characteristics of the discussion were the declaration of the Duke of Wellington, and the speech of the Duke of Richmond. The duke, illustrious by deeds, said that it would be an impolitic thing to disturb the present Corn Law, because, like March Lamb, it is still young and tender; and the other duke, illustrious by the custom of the country, was of opinion that the Corn Law wanted no more discussion!

But it was on Tuesday night that the great interest of the week was centred. There was a dinner given to Mr. O'CONNELL on the same evening; and the name of Mr. COBDEN appeared amongst the list of stewards. It is impossible to describe the feeling of satisfaction which this little fact diffused amongst the monopolists in London. In Pall-mall and Piccadilly,—in the Carlton, ay, and even in the Reform Club (for there are some monopolists there),—the topic of discussion was whether or not Mr. Cobden would bring on his motion.

"Oh, is Cobden to bring on his motion to-night?"

"Don't know, but I should say he will not. He is advertised as one of the stewards to this O'Connell dinner."

"Indeed! I am right glad to hear of it. Of course there will be no House."

"Well, but suppose we go down to see. These fellows have an ugly way of sticking to business, and I should not wonder if Peel and Gladstone were in the way, ready to make some of their confounded damaging admissions!"

Down they come; and are rather nettled, if not amazed, to find, not only a house, but a crowded one. The benches on both sides are full; all the Ministers are in attendance; and, though a hum of conversation fills the atmosphere, there is evidently the expectation of a something. The SPEAKER calls on Mr. COBDEN; instantly there is a profound silence; and the Strangers' Gallery, which is crowded to suffocation, looks the very picture of excited satisfaction. The member for Stockport com-menaces his speech—one which, in sober verity and truth, takes rank with those effusions which are only made on grand occasions by men capable of rising to the height of their great argument. It was a speech of very considerable length; but it was heard with the intensest attention. There was no lack of cheering; but it was rather by the absence of cheering that the deep interest of the House of Commons was manifested. Members were anxious to listen; they seemed impatient of anything which interrupted their continuity of attention; if for the moment they joined in a cheer, they instantly checked themselves as if fearful of losing what was coming next; and never was an audience better repaid. Happily, a very large portion of the British public is now familiar with the style of speaking which may be termed Mr. Cobden's own. Clearness, distinctness, aptness both of argument and of illustration, the capacity to arrest an audience, and to keep them enchained—all these are qualities which very pre-eminently distinguish Mr. Cobden. But on Tuesday night he swept along as if hurried onwards by the impetuosity of a fervent enthusiasm. Every sentence—nay, every word—told on the audience—not one was lost. Yet, he seemed so charged with facts and arguments—so full of the matter in hand, and so earnestly intent in its enforcement—that he literally flew over the ground; and even the reporters, accustomed as they are to rapid elocution, looked at one another, and said, "At what a tremendous pace he is going!"

There was not the slightest attempt, in any shape or way, to turn the edge of Mr. Cobden's speech by any sarcastic "hears," or unseemly noises. The whole matter was too deeply interesting for that; and, besides, public opinion cannot now be outraged in this way. Once, indeed, when Mr. Cobden was picturing the condition of the farmers and the melancholy state of the labourers, as the result of a system which ought to make the monopolists "repent in sackcloth and ashes," the voice of Col. Sibthorp was heard, in an effort at a derisive laugh; but nobody seconded him, and the gallant colonel himself evidently was ashamed of it; for when Mr. Cobden adverted to the condition of the labourers of Lincolnshire, as being an exception to that of all other agricultural counties, the Colonel called out, "Hear, hear!" in a loud tone of satisfaction. But the most significant thing were the cheers of Lord Ashley. That certainly very respectable and very amiable nobleman was seated amongst a dense crowd of members near the bar of the House, and paid great attention to all that was spoken, especially respecting the condition of the agricultural labourers. He repeatedly cheered Mr. Cobden, in a tone which emphatically expressed his assent to particular sentiments, and his desire that they should be noticed. But it is needless to notice little incidents like these. Any one who reads Mr. Cobden's speech will feel, that, even in the hands of a dull man, the materials of which it is composed must have produced an effect; but worked up as they were in Mr. Cobden's admirably artistic way, and delivered with his telling manner and fervent spirit, the whole made an impression not soon to be forgotten, and marks an era in the history of the Free-Trade question in Parliament.

Mr. Gladstone replied; and paid a deserved compliment to Mr. Cobden for the temper which characterized his speech. But of Mr. Gladstone's own speech what can be said? The President of the Board of Trade is a very able man; but it requires great ability indeed to speak against one's own convictions, especially when there is a feeling of conscience and honour in the breast of the individual. The whole speech of Mr. Gladstone might be summed up in this way:—"You, Mr. Cobden, and your friends, think so-and-so, but there are others who differ from you. No doubt, much of what you say is true, but there are other individuals in this House ready to question other parts of what you say; and seeing that is the case, it would be a very inconvenient thing to appoint a committee, to inquire whether what you say is true or not. Take the question of rent, which is very difficult and abstruse. The doctrine of rent is a crack subject with your Ricardo and your political economists. How hard, therefore, it would be to compel fifteen unfortunate gentlemen of the House of Commons to sit down and master the question of rent; they have enough to do to get in their rents as it is. Besides, Mr. Cobden professed his willingness to allow a majority of protectionists on the committee—all he wanted was liberty to call his witnesses, and prove his case. But would it not be easy for these protectionists to protract the inquiry from session to session? and would you adjourn the Anti-Corn-Law agitation, and suspend all your meetings, until that report was made?" Mr. Bright called out that before one was willing to do so. "Yes," says Mr. Gladstone, "you may be willing to do so, but there are others who would not be willing to do so; and can you, therefore, think of pressing for this committee of inquiry? Country gentlemen would take it into their heads that there was to be another Corn Law and another sliding scale, and that would play the very mischief with us. It is all very well for honourable gentlemen to wish to bring differences of opinion to the test of argument and reason, based on a searching inquiry into the facts of the case; but such an inquiry would disturb the progress of agricultural improvement. In every way, it is much easier, much less troublesome, to go on asserting instead of proving that the farmer and the farm-labourer have a greater interest in the Corn Law than the landlord; and, therefore, it was expedient that the motion should not be granted."

Well did Mr. Hawes ridicule the utter want of the arguments of Mr. Gladstone, than whom no man could make a better defence if he had a tolerable case. Lord Pollington, one of the members for Pontefract, seemed to feel this; for he got up and said, boldly enough, that though he would not tax bread for the sake of revenue, he would do so for the sake of independence of foreigners and protection to agriculture. If this, in plain English, means anything, it signifies that he would not tax bread for the purposes of the nation, but he would do so for the sake of the landlords. This was put a little clearer by Mr. Francis Scott, who represents Roxburghshire, and is a son of Lord Polwarth, the head of the Border family of Scott, of which Sir Walter Scott was one of the branches. This young man, in a scolding tone of voice, which even his own side of the House felt was very injudicious in him to assume, railed away at the manufacturers because, he said, they made such a deal of money. If they could contrive to get a handsome profit on their capital by the exertion of their industry and skill, how hard it was not to let the poor landlords try to turn a penny by means of an act of Parliament! Besides, the duration of life was longer, on the average, in the rural than in the manufacturing districts—a strong reason for keeping out foreign corn. This sort of logic may perhaps answer amongst a majority of the landlords and even the farmers of Roxburghshire, where there is a strong objection to manufactures, even to paper mills; but what would the honourable and astute Mr. Francis Scott say to an act of Parliament compelling the farmers and landlords of Roxburghshire to sell all their produce to themselves?

Two Whig agricultural protectionists spoke in the debate,—Lord Worsley and Mr. Herbert Curteis. Lord Worsley is the eldest son of the Earl of Yarborough, whose property in Lincolnshire has become a princely one, by dint of spirited expenditure and improvement. But yet, in spite of the evidence before his own eyes, that, with capital and skill, British agriculture may defy the world, Lord Worsley clings to protection as if it had been the source and origin of Lincolnshire prosperity. Lord Worsley is a very respectable young nobleman, and is staunch to his party, except on the Corn Laws. The other Whig who spoke, Mr. Herbert Curteis, is member for Rye, and a Sussex landlord. He is a very honourable, spirited, out-spoken man, though mistaken in his corn policy, for, while he would venture the length of a moderate fixed duty, he is so afraid of total repeal that, rather than have that, he would keep up the sliding scale, the pernicious influence of which he acknowledges. He confessed that Mr. Cobden had made so fair a speech that he would vote for the committee, if he were not afraid that his vote would be misconstrued by his agricultural friends and neighbours.

Colonel Sibthorp spoke—of course; and he made one of those droll speeches which set every body laughing, not with but at him. He professed great horror of the LEAGUE, a paper which he would not tolerate on the table of his house. But how does he know what it contains, unless he sometimes reads it? There can be little doubt that the gallant colonel reads the LEAGUE; and, if he does, its influence can hardly be very despicable, after all. It may be a consolation to him to know that its weekly circulation is about twenty thousand copies.

Mr. Villiers took up the cudgels for Colonel Sibthorp, and told the Ministerial side of the House that it was both ungrateful and audacious to laugh at its own colonel, seeing that his speech was as good for protection as one with less fun in it. Mr. Villiers then, in his own nutshell-cracking way, stripped the pretences bare by which the motion of Mr. Cobden was resisted. Were not the very contradictions of Mr. Cobden's allegations all so many additional reasons why the committee should be granted, in order that the facts might be sifted? The same question was put by Mr. Bright, who, in doing so, made one of the best points during the whole evening. He told the House, that if the majority thought that the justice of the Corn Law could be proved, they would grant the committee at once! The very force of contrast made this a most striking illustration.

Of the entire discussion we may remark, that it evinces most strikingly the progress of public opinion. During the whole evening there was a full attendance of members. There was no emptying of the benches at seven o'clock—the hour of dinner. There was no skulking, no evasion; it was felt that the question must be met. But the most remarkable thing in the debate was the way in which the Ministerial side of the House treated Mr. Newdegate. That young man got up at a late hour, when the House was crowded, and charged the Anti-Corn-Law League with fomenting the disturbances in the manufacturing districts, and with having objects ulterior to the repeal of the Corn Laws. But even those around him refused to listen. The general feeling evidently was—"Oh, that game won't do now—we must give it up!" A loud noise of conversation drowned his voice; there was an intense anxiety for a division. To prolong the debate was clearly felt to be but a strengthening of justice, reason, truth. All the argument was on one side—all the moral weakness on the other. So they rushed to a division; and, at one o'clock in the morning, 133 friends of justice and fair play voted for the proposed committee, but were opposed by 214 fearful monopolists; the majority being ninety-one, exactly the same that installed the present Ministry in office.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Speech of Mr. Cobden, on Tuesday, the 12th instant.

Mr. COBDEN rose to bring forward his motion for a select committee to inquire into the effects of protective duties on imports on the interest of the tenant-farmers and farm-labourers of this country. He said—Sir, the motion I have to make is one of a nature which I believe is not ordinarily refused; it is for a select committee to sit up stairs, to take evidence on a question that excites great controversy out of doors, and which I believe is likely to cause considerable discussion in this House. It may be thought that my motion might have been appropriately placed in other hands. I am of that opinion too. I think it might have been more properly brought forward by a gentleman on the other side of the House, particularly by an honourable member connected with the counties of Wiltshire or Dorsetshire. But, although not myself a county member, that does not necessarily preclude me from taking a prominent part in a question affecting the interests of the tenant-farmers and farm-labourers of this country, for whom I feel as strong a sympathy as for any other class of my countrymen. We have instances of committees being appointed to take evidence as to the importation of silk, the exportation of machinery, the navigation laws, and on all questions of similar importance. It must also be admitted that such committees have been appointed without the parties more immediately concerned having, in the first instance, petitioned the House for their appointment. On the appointment of the committee relative to the exportation of machinery, the motion was granted, not at the instance of manufacturers who had a monopoly of the use of machinery, but by parties whose interests were concerned in the making and exporting of machinery. I do not therefore anticipate that any good grounds can be stated why the committee should be refused because petitions have not been presented demanding it. I shall now state what my views will be on entering the committee. I shall be prepared to bring important evidence forward, showing the effects of "protection," as it is called, to the agriculturists by the examination of farmers themselves. I will, in fact, not bring forward a single witness before that committee who shall not be a tenant-farmer, or a landed proprietor, and they shall be persons eminent for their reputation as practical agriculturists. (Hear, hear.) The opinion which I shall hold on entering the committee is, that "protection," as it is called, instead of being beneficial, is delusive and injurious to the tenant-farmers; and that opinion I shall be prepared to sustain by the evidence of tenant-farmers themselves. I wish it to be understood I do not admit that what is called protection to agriculturists has ever been any protection at all to them; on the contrary, I hold that its only effect has been to mislead them. This has been denied both in this House and out of doors. (Hear, hear.) I have recently read over again the evidence taken before the committees which sat previous to the passing of the Corn Law of 1815, and I leave it to any man to say whether it was not contended at that time that sufficient protection could not be given to the agriculturists unless they got 80s. a quarter for wheat. (Hear, hear.) I wish to remind the hon. member for Wiltshire (Mr. Bennett) that he gave it as his opinion before the committee of 1814 that wheat could not be grown in this country unless the farmers got 96s. a quarter or 12s. a bushel for it, while now he is supporting a Minister who only proposes to give the farmers 56s. a quarter, and confesses he cannot guarantee even that. It is denied that this House has ever promised to guarantee prices for their produce to the farmers. Now, what was the custom of the country from the passing of the Corn Law in 1815? Why, I will bring old men before the committee who will state that farmers valued their farms from that time by a computation of wheat being at 80s. a quarter. I can also prove that agricultural societies which met in 1821 passed resolutions declaring that they were deceived by the act of 1815, that they had taken farms calculating upon selling wheat at 80s., while, in fact, it had fallen to little more than 50s. In the committee which sat in 1836 witnesses stated that they had been deceived in the price of their corn; and I ask whether, at the present moment, rents are not fixed rather with reference to certain acts that were passed than the intrinsic worth of the farms? In consequence of the alteration that was made in the Corn Law in 1842, the rent of farms has been assessed on the ground of corn being 56s. a quarter. I know an instance where a party occupying his own land was rated at a certain amount, viz., at the valuation of corn being 56s. a quarter, while, in fact, it was selling at 47s.; and, upon his asking why he had been so rated, he was told that the assessors had taken that mode of valuation in consequence of what the Prime Minister had stated was to be the price of corn. ("Hear, hear," and "Oh, oh.") Hon. gentlemen may cry "Oh, oh," but I will bring forward that very case, and prove what I have stated concerning it. What I wish in going into committee is, to convince the farmers of Great Britain that this House has not the power to regulate or sustain the price of their commodities. The right hon. baronet opposite (Sir R. Peel) has confessed that he cannot regulate the wages of labour or the profits of trade. Now, the farmers are dependent for their prices upon the wages of the labourer, and the profits of the trader and manufacturer; and if the Government cannot regulate these—if it cannot guarantee a certain amount of wages to the one, or a fixed profit to the other—how can it regulate the price of agricultural produce? The first point to which I should wish to make this committee instrumental is to fix in the minds of the farmers the fact that this House exaggerates its power to sustain or enhance prices by direct acts of legislation. (Hear.) The farmer's interest is that of the whole community, and is not a partial interest (loud cheers), and you cannot touch him more sensitively than when you injure the manufacturers, his customers. (Cheers.) I do not deny that you may regulate prices for awhile—for awhile you have regulated them by forcing an artificial scarcity; but this is a principle which carries with it the seeds of self-destruction, for you are thereby undermining the prosperity of those consumers upon whom your permanent welfare depends. A war against nature must always end in the discomfiture of those who wage it. (Hear, hear.) You may by your restrictive enactments increase pauperism, and destroy trade: you may banish capital, and check or expatriate your population; but is this, I will ask, a policy which can possibly work consistently with the interests of the farmers? (Hear, hear.) These are the fundamental principles which I wish to bring out, and with this primary view it is that I ask for a committee at your hands. (Cheers.) With regard to certain other fallacies with which the farmers have been beset, and latterly more so than ever. The farmer has been told that if there was a free trade in corn, wheat would be so cheap that he would not be able to carry on his farm. He is directed only to look at Dantzic, where corn, he is told, was once selling at 15s. 11d. per quarter, and on this the Essex Protection Society put out their circulars, stating that Dantzic wheat is but 15s. 11d. per quarter, and how would the British farmer contend against this? (A laugh.) Now, I maintain that these statements are not very creditable to the parties who propagate such nonsense, nor complimentary to the understandings of the farmers who listen to and believe them. (Laughter.) It would be no argument against Free Trade, but quite the contrary, if wheat could be purchased regularly at Dantzic at that price; but the truth is, that in an average of years at that port, it has cost much more than double; and the truth, I suppose, is what all men desire to arrive at. The farmer will very easily be disabused on this and other points if you will grant me the committee I seek. We know what the price has been in the Channel Islands where the trade is free. These islands send the corn of their own growth to this country whenever it is profitable to do so, and they receive foreign corn for their own consumption duty free. (Hear, hear.) Sir, I know of no better test of what the price of corn in this country would be in a state of free trade, than the prices in the island of Jersey afford, taken, not like the Essex Protection Society for a single week or month, but for a number of years, comprising a cycle of high and low prices in this country. We know that the fluctuation of prices in this country embraces the fluctuation of the whole of Europe. We have papers on the table showing what the prices of corn were in Jersey in the ten years from 1832 to 1841 inclusive. The average price was in those ten years 48s. 4d. What do you think was the average price in your own markets in those years? It was 56s. 8d. (Hear, hear.) Now, I have taken some pains to consult those who best understand this subject, and I find it to be their opinion, that a constant demand from England under a Free Trade would have raised the level of European prices 2s. or 3s. a quarter during the where had the p (Hear wish of our prospe you m impos

From

above period. If this be a fair estimate, it brings the price up to within 5s. or 6s. a quarter of our own average. Was this difference in price to throw land out of cultivation, annihilate rent, ruin the farmer, and pauperise the labourers? (Cheers.) But in years of high prices the farmers do not receive the highest price for their corn. On the contrary, they sell their corn at the lowest prices, and the speculator sells his at the highest. (Loud cheers.) A short time ago I met a miller from near Winchester, who told me the prices which he paid every year for the corn which he purchased before the harvest and after the harvest during five years. That statement I beg to read to the House:—

| | | | | | |
|-------|-----------|-------|------|----------|----------------|
| 1839. | August | Wheat | | £19 10s. | load of 5 qrs. |
| | November | Ditto | | 16 0 | ditto |
| 1840. | August | Ditto | | 18 0 | ditto |
| | October | Ditto | | 14 5 | ditto |
| 1841. | August | Ditto | | 19 0 | ditto |
| | October | Ditto | | 15 0 | ditto |
| 1842. | August | Ditto | | 17 0 | ditto |
| | September | Ditto | | 12 0 | ditto |
| 1843. | July | Ditto | | 15 15 | ditto |
| | September | Ditto | | 12 10 | ditto |

Thus in these five years there had been a difference of £3 18s. a load, or 15s. a quarter, between the prices of wheat in July and August and in October and November in each year, showing, beyond dispute, that the farmer did not sell his corn at the highest, but at the lowest of the markets. (Hear, hear, hear.) Now, Sir, there is another point upon which as much misrepresentation exists as upon the one I have just stated, namely, the price at which corn could be grown abroad. The price of wheat at Dantzic during those ten years to which I have referred averaged upwards of 40s. a quarter; and if you add to it the freight, it will corroborate the statement I have made with regard to the price at which wheat has been sold at Jersey. (Hear.) Another point upon which misrepresentation has gone abroad, relates to the different items of expenditure in bringing wheat to this country. We have had consuls' returns from various parts of the charges for freight at various periods, but we have not had full accounts of the other items of expenditure. (Hear.) It would be important to elicit as much information as possible upon this subject, and the best means of arriving at it would be to examine practical men from the City before a select committee of the House as to the cost of transit. (Hear.) As far as I can obtain information from the books of merchants, the cost of transit from Dantzic, during an average of ten years, may be put down at half-a-guinea a quarter, including in this, freight, landing, loading, insurance, and other items of every kind. This is the natural protection enjoyed by the farmers of this country. (Hear, hear.) I may be answered, that the farmers of this country have the cost of carriage to pay also, as, for instance, from Norfolk to Hull or London. But I beg to remind hon. gentlemen that a very small portion of home-grown corn is carried coastwise at all. (Hear, hear.) Accurate information upon this point might be got before a select committee of this House. From information which I have obtained, I am led to believe that not more than 1,000,000 of quarters are carried coastwise at all, or 5 per cent. of the yearly growth of the country; the rest is carried from the barn-door to the mill. This is an important consideration for those who say that there is no natural protection to the farmer, inasmuch as it gives the farmer here a constant protection of half-a-guinea. But honourable gentlemen ought to bear in mind, that the corn which is brought from Dantzic is not grown on the quays there (hear, hear), any more than it is grown on the quay of Liverpool. On the contrary, it is brought at great expense from a very long distance in the interior. I have seen a statement made by an honourable member from Scotland, who said that the rafts on which the corn was brought down the river to Dantzic were broken up and sold to pay the cost of transit. (Laughter.) I have not been able to verify that statement in the course of my inquiries. (Laughter.) These are points which might all be cleared up by practical men before a committee; and thus, instead of resorting to prophecy, we should be able to judge from facts and past experience as to the ability of the English farmers to compete with foreigners. Honourable gentlemen would do well to consider what happened in the case of wool. (Hear, hear, hear.) Every prediction that is now uttered with regard to corn, was uttered by gentlemen opposite with regard to wool. (Hear, hear.) If hon. gentlemen visited the British Museum, and explored that Herculaneum of buried pamphlets which were written in opposition to Mr. Huskisson's plans for reducing the duty on wool twenty years ago, what arguments would they find in the future tense, and what predictions of may, might, could, would, should, ought, and shall! (Laughter.) But what was the result? (Hear, hear.) Did they lose all their sheep-walks? (Hear, hear.) Had they no more mutton? (Laughter.) Are their shepherds all consigned to the workhouse? Were there no more sheep-dogs? I have an account of the importation of wool and the price of wool, and the lesson I wish to impress on gentlemen opposite is this, that the price of commodities may spring from two causes—a temporary, fleeting, and retributive high price, produced by scarcity; or a permanent and wholesome high price, produced by prosperity. With regard to wool, you had a high price springing from the prosperity of the consumers. It so happens, in the case of this article of wool, that the price has been highest when the importation has been most considerable, and lowest in the years when the importation has been comparatively small. I beg to read a statement which illustrates this fact:—

| | | Imported, lbs. |
|------|--------------|----------------|
| 1827 | 10d. per lb. | 29,115,341 |
| 1829 | 7d. per lb. | 21,516,649 |
| 1836 | 18d. per lb. | 64,239,000 |
| 1841 | 11d. per lb. | 56,170,000 |
| 1842 | 10d. per lb. | 45,833,000 |

From this statement it appears that, in every instance where the price has been highest, the English farmer has had the largest competition from foreign growers, and that the price was lowest where the competition was least. (Hear, hear.) Well, that is the principle which I wish to see applied in viewing this much-dreaded question of corn. You may have a high price of corn, through a prosperous community, and it may continue a high price; you may have a high price through a scarcity, and it is impossible in the very nature of things that it can be permanent. (Hear.) Now, put this test of wool in the case of cattle and other things that have been imported since the passing of the tariff. I want this matter to be cleared up. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) I do not want gentlemen to find fault with the Prime Minister for doing what he did not do. I do not believe that he caused a reduction of one farthing in the price of articles of consumption. And I must say, with all deference to him, that I think he himself is to blame for having incurred that charge by the arguments which he brought forward in support of the tariff, for assuredly he took the least comprehensive or statesmanlike view of his measures when he proposed to degrade prices instead of aiming to sustain them by enlarging the circle of exchanges. It is said that the tariff has caused distress among the farmers. Why, I don't believe there has been as much increase in the imports of cattle as would make one good breakfast for all the people. (Laughter.) Did it never enter the minds of hon. gentlemen who are interested in the sale of cattle, that their customers in large towns cannot be sinking into abject poverty and distress without the evil ultimately reaching themselves in the price of their produce? I had occasion a little time ago to look at the falling off in the consumption of cattle in the town of Stockport. I calculated the falling off in Stockport alone for three or four years at more than all the increase in the importation of foreign cattle. It appears, therefore, that the distress of that town alone has done as much to reduce prices as all the importation under the tariff. It has been estimated that in Manchester forty per cent. less of cattle was consumed in 1842 than in 1835; and it has also been estimated that the cotton trade was paying £7,000,000 less in wages per annum in 1842 than in 1836. How could you then expect the same consumption? (Hear.) If you would but look to your own interests as keenly and as wisely as manufacturers look to theirs, you would never fall into the error of supposing that you can ruin your customers, and yet, at the same time, prosper in your pursuits. (Cheers.) I remember hearing Lord Kinnaird, whose property is near Dundee, state that, in 1835 and 1836, the dealers from that town used to come and bespeak his cattle three months in advance; but in 1842, when the linen trade shared the prostration of all the manufactures, he had to engage steam-boats three months in advance to bring his cattle to the London market. Hon. members who live in Sussex and the southern counties, and who are in the habit of sneering at Manchester, should recollect that they are as much dependent upon the prosperity of Lancashire as those who live in their immediate neighbourhood. (Hear, hear.) If graziers, on looking at the Price Current, find they can get a better price for their cattle in London than in Manchester and Stockport, will they not send their cattle up to London, to compete with the southern graziers? The point, therefore, which I wish to make known is, that the tariff has not caused the reduction in price. There is nothing which I regret more than that the Corn Law or the Tariff should have been altered by the right hon. baronet at all. Without this alteration I feel confident we should have had prices as low at least as they are: our lesson would then have been complete, the landlords and tenants would have been taught how dependent they are on their customers, and they would have then united with the manufacturers in favour of Free Trade. But, if the late alterations in the Corn Law and Tariff are now to be made the bugbear for frightening the farmers from the path of Free Trade—if they are to be told that those measures have reduced their protection thirty per cent.—then I think those political landlords who were returned to this House as "farmers' friends," pledged to defend "protection" as it stood, and who betrayed their trust, ought to do something more if they are sincere: they ought to reduce their rents in proportion to the amount of protection which they say they have withdrawn from the farmer—they ought to do this, not for one rent-day, but permanently; and they should do it with penitence and in sackcloth and ashes (laughter), instead of hallooing on the poor farmers upon a wrong scent after the Anti-Corn-Law League as the cause of their sufferings. (Cheers.) Now, with regard to the low prices having been caused by the change in the tariff, I do not know whether a noble lord happens to be present, who illustrated this very aptly, by stating that the farmers in the west of Scotland had been ruined by the reduction in the duty on cheese. (Laughter.) There could be nothing more unfortunate than that statement, as there happens, in that respect, to have been no alteration, and yet, I believe cheese fell in price as much as any other article. It is well known that whilst the price of cheese has fallen in the home market, the importation from abroad has been also considerably diminished. (Hear, hear.) There is another subject upon which I must entreat hon. members' forbearance, for it is an exceedingly tender point, and one which is always heard with great sensitiveness in the House. I refer to the subject of rent. (Hear.) We have no tenant-farmers in this House. (Hear, hear.) I wish we had, and I venture here to express a hope that the next dissolution will send up a bond fide tenant-farmer. I know nothing more likely than that to unravel the perplexity of our terminology—nothing more likely to put us all in our right places, and to make us speak each for himself on this subject. The landowners, I mean the political landowners—those who dress their labourers and their cattle in blue ribbons, and who treat this question entirely as a political one—they go to the tenant-farmers, and they tell them that it would be quite impossible for them to compete with foreigners, for, if they had their land rent-free, they could not sell their produce at the same price as they did. To bear out their statement they give a calculation of the cost per acre of growing wheat, which they put down at £6. Now, the fallacy of that has been explained to me by an agriculturist in the Midland Counties, whom I should exceedingly like to see giving his evidence before the committee for which I am moving. He writes me in a letter which I have received to-day, "You will be met by an assertion that no alteration in rent can make up the difference to the tenant and labourer of diminished prices. They will quote the expenses on a single crop of wheat, and say how small a proportion the rent bears to the whole expense, but that is not the fair way of putting it. Wheat is the farmer's remunerating crop, but he cannot grow wheat more than one year in three. The expense, then, of the management of the whole farm should be compared with the rent, to estimate what portion of the price of corn is received by the landlord. I have, for this purpose, analysed the expenses of a farm of 400 acres—230 arable, 170 pasture.

| | |
|-------------------------|-----|
| The expenses are:— | £ |
| Parish and county rates | 90 |
| Interest of capital | 180 |
| Labour | 360 |
| Tradesman's bills | 80 |
| Manure and lime | 70 |
| Wear of horses | 20 |
| | 700 |
| Rent | 800 |

So that on this farm, which is very fairly cultivated, the rent is £800, the other expenses £700. (Cries of "Oh, oh," from the Ministerial side.) Now, if it requires 58s. per qr. in an average year to enable the tenant to pay the rent, and make £150 profit, it is obvious that without any rent he would be able to pay his labourers and tradesmen as well, and put the same amount of profit into his pocket, with a price of 30s., supposing other produce to be reduced in the same proportion. But I do not anticipate that wheat will be reduced below 45s., even by Free Trade, and meat, butter, cheese, will certainly not fall in the same proportion. (Hear, hear, hear.) This, then, is a very important statement from a competent authority, and the gentleman who makes it I shall be very glad to have examined before the committee, if the House grant one. (Cries of "Name, name.") I believe that the writer will have no objection to his name being published—he is Mr. Charles Paget, of Ruddington Grange, near Nottingham. Allow me now to state the method by which I calculate the proportion which rent bears to the other outgoings on a farm. I ascertain first what amount of produce the farmer sells off his farm in the year, and next I inquire how much of the money brought home from market goes to the landlord for rent. I take no account in this money calculation of the seed corn, stock manure, horse keep, or other produce of the land used or consumed upon the farm, because these things are never converted into money, and cannot, therefore, be used in payment of rent, taxes, &c. Now, I am prepared to prove before a committee, by a Scotch farmer, that one-half of the disposable produce from a Lothian farm goes to the landlord for rent,—that 26s. out of every 52s. for a quarter of wheat is rent; and that, consequently, if they had their land rent-free, and sold their wheat at 26s. a quarter, they would do as well, pay as good wages, and everybody about the establishment be as well provided for as they are now, when paying rent and getting 52s. for their wheat. With such a margin as this I think we need not be in much fear of throwing land out of cultivation in Scotland! I believe many hon. gentlemen opposite have never made a calculation of what proportion of the whole of the saleable produce goes for rent. It must be borne in mind that every acre of a farm pays rent, although, probably, not more than one acre in three, and in the best farming not more than one in four, is in the same year devoted to the growth of wheat; whilst a part of the farm is often in permanent pasture. My mode of calculation then is this: ascertain the money value of the whole produce of every kind sold in a year, find how many quarters of wheat it is equal to at the price of the year; and next, divide the total number of quarters by the number of acres in the farm, and the result will give you the quantity of wheat sold off each acre in the year. I have made the calculation, and in doing so have had the opinions of those who have taken pains upon the subject; and these are the conclusions to which I have come. I calculate that an arable farm, on an average, does not yield for sale, of every kind of produce, more than equivalent to ten bushels of wheat per acre; so that a farm of five hundred acres would not dispose of more than what is equivalent to five thousand bushels. In many parts I believe that this estimate is too high, and that the farmer does not dispose of more than one quarter per acre. And the result of the inquiry would show, that in Scotland (where much of the labour on the farm is paid in kind) one half of the produce taken to market goes to the landlord as rent, whilst in England it will average more than 20s. a quarter upon the present price of wheat. With regard to cheese, I am prepared to bring witnesses to prove that more than the half of the produce goes to the landlord, owing to the fact of there being less paid in wages upon dairy farms. For every 5d. received for cheese, more than 2½d. is paid in rent; and upon grazing farms, also, for every 5d. received for a lb. of meat, at least 2½d. is paid to the landlord. This is, after all, the important point in the consideration of this question, because, it being settled, the public would no longer labour under the apprehension, that if Free Trade were adopted the farmers would suffer, or that land would be thrown out of cultivation. This is a point upon which I should not have entered had not the investigation been challenged by my opponents. It must not be imputed to me that I entertain the opinion that Free Trade in corn would deprive the landowners of the whole of their rents. I have never said so—I have never even said that land would not have been as valuable as it is now if no Corn Law had ever existed. But this I do mean to say, that if the landowners prefer to draw their rents from the distresses of the country, caused by their restrictive laws to create high prices through scarcity of food, instead of deriving an honourable income of probably as great, or even greater amount, through the growing prosperity of the people under a Free Trade, then they have no right, in the face of such facts as I have stated, to attempt to cajole the farmer into the belief that rent forms an insignificant item in the cost of his wheat, or to frighten him into the notion that he could not compete with foreigners if he had his land rent-free. (Cheers.) I shall now touch upon another and more important branch of this question, I mean the interests of the farm-labourer. We are told that he is benefited by a system of restriction which makes the first element of subsistence scarce. Do you think posterity will believe it? They will look back upon this doctrine, in less than twenty years, with as much amazement as we do now upon the conduct of our forefathers when they burnt old women for witchcraft. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) To talk of benefiting labourers by making one of the main articles of their consumption scarce! The agricultural labourers live by wages: what is it which regulates the wages of labour in every country? Why, the quantity of the necessities and comforts of life which form the fund out of which labour is paid, and the proportion which they bear to the whole number of labourers to be maintained. (Hear.) Now, the agricultural labourer spends a larger proportion of his wages in food than any other class. And yet, in the face of this evidence, do you go on enacting a law which makes food scarce in order to benefit the agriculturist? I hold in my hand a volume which has been presented to the House relating to the state of the agricultural population of this country, and which, I think, ought to have been brought under the notice of the House, by some one competent to deal with the subject, long before now. (Hear, hear.) Last year a commission was appointed to inquire into the state of women and children employed in agriculture. I beg to make a few observations before proceeding further, upon the manner in which this inquiry has been conducted. Some years ago the House will recollect that a commission was appointed on the subject of the hand-loom weavers. That commission sat two years; its inquiries have since been directed to the state of other manufacturing interests; and it is still, I believe, in existence. The inquiry upon the state of the labourers employed in those manufactures, therefore, will have been very fully gone into. But when an application was made to a member of the Cabinet to allow the same commission to institute a similar inquiry into the state of the labourers employed in husbandry, he refused to do so; but afterwards, he agreed that an inquiry should be made by the Assistant Poor-Law Commissioners, but that only thirty days could be allowed for such inquiry. The volume which I hold in my hand is, therefore, the work of four gentlemen during only thirty days; one of these gentlemen, Mr. Austin, set forward on his task, and consumed two days in travelling. He had thus only twenty-eight days to inquire into the condition of the agricultural population in four counties in the south of England. (Hear, hear.) We have, however, some facts elicited on that inquiry, which ought to have drawn forth remarks from honourable gentlemen opposite as to the condition of their own constituents. (Hear, hear.) Before I allude to the condition of the agricultural labourers, I wish to state that, whatever may have been the animus which influenced others in investigating the condition of the manufacturing districts, I am actuated by no invidious feeling whatever towards the agriculturists; for, bear in mind, that my conduct has been throughout marked by consistency towards both. (Hear, hear.) Had I ever concealed the wretched state of the manufacturing operatives, or shrunk from the exposure of their sufferings, my motives might have been open to suspicion in now bringing before your notice the still more depressed condition of the agricultural poor. (Hear, hear.) I was one of that numerous deputation from the north which, in the spring of 1839, knocked in vain at the door of this House for an inquiry at your bar into the state of the manufacturing population. (Hear, hear, hear.) I was one of the deputies who intruded ourselves (sometimes five hundred strong) into the presence of successive Prime Ministers until our importunities became the subject of remark and complaint in this House. (Hear, hear.) From that time to this we have continued without intermission to make public in every possible way the distress to which the manufacturers were exposed. We did more. We prescribed a remedy for that distress. (Hear, hear, hear.) And I do not hesitate to express my solemn belief that the reason why, in the disturbances which took place, there was no damage done to property in the manufacturing districts was, that the people knew and felt that an inquiry was taking place, by active and competent men, into the cause of their distresses, and from which they hoped some efficient remedy would result; and I would impress upon honourable members opposite as the result of my conviction, that if the labouring poor in their districts take a course as diabolical as it is insane—a course which I am sorry to see they have taken in many agricultural localities—of burning property to make known their sufferings; if I might make to those honourable gentlemen a suggestion, it would be this—that if they had come forward to the House and the country as we, the manufacturers, have done, and made known the sufferings of the labouring population, and prescribed any remedy whatever—if that population had heard a voice promulgating their distresses, and making known their sufferings—if they had seen the sympathies of the country appealed to, I believe it would have had such a humanising and consoling effect upon the minds of the poor and misguided people, that in the blindness of despair they would never have destroyed that property which it was their interest to protect. (Hear, hear, hear.) I have looked through this volume, which is the result of Mr. Austin's twenty-eight days' travels through the agricultural districts, and I find that during that period he visited Somersetshire, Devonshire, Wiltshire, and Dorsetshire. He has given the testimony of various respectable gentlemen in these several localities, as to the condition of the agricultural labourers. Some of these accounts are highly important. The first that I shall refer to is the evidence of the Rev. J. Guthrie, the vicar of Calne, in Wiltshire. He says (speaking of the agricultural labourers in that district)—"I never could make out how they can live with their present earnings." Dr. Greenup, M.D., Calne, says: "In our union the cost of each individual in the workhouse, taking the average of men, women, and children, is 1s. 6d. a week for food only; and buying by tender, and in large quantity, we buy at least 10 per cent. cheaper than the labouring man can. But, without considering this advantage, apply the scale to the poor industrious family. A man, his wife, and two children will require, if properly fed, 6s. weekly; their rent (at least 1s.) and fuel will very nearly swallow up the remainder; but there are many things yet to provide—soap and candles, clothes and shoes—a poor man are a serious expense, as he must have them strong, costing about 12s. a pair, and he will need at least one pair in a year. When I reckon up these things in detail, I am always more and more astonished how the labourers contrive to live at all." Thos. King, Esq., surgeon, Calne, Wiltshire, says—"If women and boys who labour in the fields suffer in their health at all, it is not from the work they perform, but the want of food. The food they eat is not bad of its kind, but they have not enough of it, and more animal food would be most desirable; but, with the present rate of wages, it is impossible. Their low diet exposes them to certain kinds of diseases, more particularly to those of the stomach."—Mr. Robert Bowman, farmer, and vice-chairman of the Board of Guardians, Calne Union, deposes—"In the great majority of cases the labourer's family has only the man's wages (8s. or 9s. a week) to live on. On that a man and his wife, and family of four, five, or six children must live, though it is a mystery to me how they do live." This was the evidence of a farmer.—Mrs. Britton, wife of a farm-labourer, says—"We could eat much more bread if we could get it."—Mrs.

Wiltshire, wife of a farm-labourer at Cherhill, Wilts, in her own pathetic way, says—"Our common drink is burnt crust tea. We also buy about 1lb. of sugar a week. We never know what it is to get enough to eat. At the end of the meal the children would always eat more. Of bread there is never enough. The children are always asking for more at every meal. I then say, 'You don't want your father to go to prison, do you?'" That is a specimen of the evidence collected in the south of England, in the purely agricultural districts, by Mr. Austin. I have myself had the opportunity of making considerable observations in the agricultural districts, and I have come to this conviction that the farther you travel from the much-maligned region of tall chimneys and smoke, the less you find the wages of labourers to be; the more I leave behind me Lancashire and the northern parts of England, the worse is the condition of the labourers, and the less is the quantity of food they have. Does not this, I will ask, answer the argument that the agricultural labourer derives protection from the Corn Law? (Hear, hear.) Now, what I wish to bring out before the committee is not merely that, in the abstract and as a general principle, the working class can never be benefited by high prices occasioned by scarcity of food, but, that even during your casual high prices, caused by scarcity, the agricultural labourers always suffer. (Hear, hear.) Pauperism increases as the price of food rises—(hear, hear)—and, in short, the price of the loaf is in a direct ratio proof of the increase of pauperism. (Cries of "No, no.") An honourable gentleman says, "No, no." I hope I shall have him on the committee, and if he will only hear me out, I am sure I shall persuade him to vote for the committee. With regard to the condition of the agricultural labourer, I have taken some pains to ascertain what has been the relative progress of wages and rents in agricultural districts. I know that this is a very sore point indeed for hon. members opposite, but I must tell them that in those very districts of Wilts and Dorset the wages of labour as measured in food are lower now than they were 60 years ago, while the rent of land has increased from two-and-a-half to threefold. (Hear, hear.) Mind, I don't pretend to decide whether with a Free Trade rents might not have advanced even fivefold, but I do contend that, under those circumstances, the increased value of land could have only followed the increased prosperity of every portion of the industrious community; and so long as you maintain a law for enhancing prices by scarcity, and raising artificial rents for a time, and by the most suicidal process, out of the privations of the consumers, you must not be surprised if you are called upon to show how the system works upon those for whose benefit you profess to uphold the law. (Hear, hear.) I find that the following were the ordinary wages of the common agricultural day labourers previous to the rise of prices after 1790, taken from the accounts of the respective counties, drawn up for the Board of Agriculture; not including hay time and harvest:—

| | |
|-------------------------------|--------------------------|
| Average price of wheat | 44s. 6d. |
| Devonshire | 6s. to 7s. 6d. per week. |
| Wiltshire | 6s. to 7s. " |
| Somersetshire | 7s. to 9s. " |
| Dorset | 6s. to 6s. 6d. " |
| (With wheat at 5s. a bushel.) | |
| Gloucester | 7s. to 10s. per week. |

Since that period money wages have hardly increased in those districts, and wages computed in food have certainly declined, while rent has progressed from two hundred to two hundred and fifty per cent. (Hear, hear.) I will mention another fact illustrative of the relative progress of rents and wages. When lately attending a meeting at Gloucester, I heard a gentleman say publicly that he had recently sold an estate which had belonged to his great-grandfather, and which brought him ten times the price his ancestor had given for it. But what, in the same time, has been the course of wages? It is stated in a work, attributed to Judge Hale, published in 1683, upon the condition of the working classes, that the wages of a farm labourer in Gloucestershire were 10s. a week, and he remarks—"Unless the earnings of a family, consisting of the father, mother, and four children, amount to that sum, they must make it up, I suppose, by begging or stealing." Wheat was then 36s. a quarter. Now that wheat is 40 per cent. higher, the average wages in Gloucestershire are only eight shillings to nine shillings, and in many cases seven shillings and six shillings. And Mr. Hunt, a farmer in Gloucestershire, who is also a guardian of the poor, stated publicly at the same meeting, that in his district it was found when relief was applied for, that in many instances families, who were endeavouring to exist on wages, were, taking the number of the family into account, only obtaining one-half the amount which their maintenance would cost in the workhouse. Mr. Hunt also stated that directions having been received by the guardians of the union to keep the poor who were inmates of the workhouse upon as low a diet as the able-bodied labourer and his family could obtain out of it, they were, on inquiry, startled at the small quantity of food upon which, from the low rate of wages, the labouring population were forced to subsist; and upon referring the point to the medical officer of the union, he reported that it would not be safe to feed the able-bodied paupers upon the scale of food which they were getting out of the workhouse. (Hear, hear.) Hitherto I have spoken of the food of the agricultural population; and when we speak of food, it implies lodging, clothing (hear, hear)—it implies morality, education, ay, and I fear, religion; and everything pertaining to the social comforts and morals of the people. (Cheers.) I have informed the House in what manner that population is fed; but there is another point in the volume before me which most especially calls for the attention of honourable gentlemen opposite—I refer to the lodging of the agricultural poor. (Hear, hear.) That is a point that more nearly concerns, if possible, the character of the landowner than, perhaps, the question of food. (Hear, hear.) Mr. Austin in the report from which I have before quoted, in reference to the four counties I have enumerated, says:—"The want of sufficient accommodation seems universal. At Stourpaine, a village near Blandford, Dorset, I measured a bedroom in a cottage. The room was ten feet square, not reckoning the two small recesses by the side of the chimney, about eighteen inches deep. The roof was the thatch, the middle of the chamber being about seven feet high. Eleven persons slept in three beds in this room. The first bed was occupied by the father and mother, a little boy, Jeremiah, aged one year and a half, and an infant, aged four months; second bed was occupied by the three daughters—the two eldest, Sarah and Elizabeth, twins, aged twenty, and Mary, aged seven; third bed was occupied by the four sons—Silas, aged seventeen, John, aged fifteen, James, aged fourteen, and Elias, aged ten. There was no curtain, or any kind of separation between the beds." Mr. Phelps, an agent of the Marquis of Lansdowne, says—"I was engaged in taking the late census in Bremhill parish, and in one case, in Studley, I found 20 people living under one roof; amongst them were married men and women, and young people of nearly all ages. In Studley it is not at all uncommon for a whole family to sleep in the same room. The number of bastards in that place is very great."—The Hon. and Rev. S. Godolphin Osborne, rector of Bryanston, Dorset, says—"Within this last year I saw in a room, about 13 feet square, three beds; on the first lay the mother, a widow, dying of consumption; on the second two unmarried daughters, one 18 years of age, the other 12; on the third a young married couple, whom I myself had married two days before. A married woman, of thorough good character, told me a few weeks ago that on her confinement, so crowded with children in her one room, they are obliged to put her on the floor in the middle of the room, that they may pay her the requisite attention: she spoke of this as to her the most painful part of that, her hour of trial."—Mr. Thomas Fox, solicitor, Beaminster, Dorset, in his evidence to Mr. Austin, says—"I regret that I cannot take you to the parish of Hook (near here), the whole parish belonging to the Duke of Cleveland, occupied by a tenant of the name of Rawlings, where the residences of the labourers are as bad as it is possible you can conceive: many of them without chambers, earth floors, not ceiled or plastered; and the consequence is, that the inhabitants are the poorest—the worst off in the country." He is asked—"Are you of opinion that such a want of proper accommodation for sleeping must tend very much to demoralize the families of the labouring population? There can be no doubt of it; and the worst of consequences have arisen from it, even between brothers and sisters." Mr. Malachi Fisher, of Blandford, Dorset, says, "that in Milton Abbas, on the average of the late census, there were 36 persons in each house. It is not an uncommon thing for two families, who are near neighbours, to place all the females in one cottage, and the males in another." And Mr. Austin, in his report, says, "The sleeping of boys and girls, young men and young women, in the same room in beds almost touching one another, must have the effect of breaking down the great barriers between the sexes: the sense of modesty and decency on the part of women, and respect for the other sex on the part of the men. The consequences of the want of proper accommodation for sleeping in the cottages are seen in the early licentiousness of the rural districts; licentiousness which has not always respected the family relationship." I am by no means desirous of using excitable language or harsh terms in anything I may have to address to the House upon this subject; but I should not do justice to my own feelings if I failed to express my strong indignation at the conduct of those owners of land who permit men, bred on the soil, born on their territory, to remain in the condition in which the labouring population of Dorsetshire appear, not occasionally, but habitually, to exist. ("Hear, hear," from Lord Ashley.) I am glad to hear that cheer from his lordship; I should have expected as much. You talk to us about the crowding together of the labouring population in the manufacturing towns, and charge that upon the manufacturer and the mill-owner, forgetting that the crowding together in towns cannot come under the cognizance of particular individuals or employers; but in the agricultural districts, we find the large proprietors of land, who will not allow any other person to erect a stick or a stone, or to build a cottage upon their estates, nevertheless permitting men, for whose welfare they are responsible, to herd in this beastly state (hear, hear), in dwellings worse than the wigwams of the American Indians. When we see these things, I repeat, that the persons by whom they are permitted to continue deserve to be visited with the most unqualified reprobation of this House. (Cheers.) It was well said by the late Mr. Drummond, "that property has its duties as well as its rights," but these duties are grossly neglected when a commissioner from the Government can find people living in such pig-sties—or worse than pig-sties—as have been described. (Hear, hear.) I have alluded to the evidence of the Rev. Godolphin Osborne. I have not the honour to be acquainted with that gentleman, and I have no doubt that in political matters we differ "wide as the poles," but I cannot but admire him or any other man who will come forward and express his opinion, and make public the state of a population so degraded. (Cheers.) That gentleman, in a letter lately written, says—"Our poor live on the borders of destitution.... From one year's end to another, there are many labouring families that scarcely touch, in the way of food, anything but bread and potatoes, with now and then some bacon. Bread is in almost every cottage the chief food of the children, and, when I know of what that bread is often made, I am not surprised at the great prevalence amongst the children of the labourers of diseases known to proceed from an improper or too stinted diet.... The wages paid by farmers I do not find exceeding 8s., except, perhaps, in the case of the shepherd or carter. In many parishes only 7s. a week are paid.... A clergyman in this union states to me that he had lately had four blankets sent to him to dispose of. In making inquiry for the most proper objects, he found in fifteen families in his parish, consisting of eighty-four individuals, there were only thirty-three beds, and thirty-five blankets, being about three persons to one bed, with one blanket. Of the thirty-five blankets, ten were in good condition, having been given them within the last four years, the other twenty-five were mere patched rags." Bear in mind that I am describing no sudden crisis of distress, such as occasionally takes place in the manufacturing districts, but the ordinary condition of the people. (Hear, hear.) The strikes and tumults of which you hear so much in those districts are the struggles of the operatives against being reduced from their comparatively comfortable earnings to the deplorable condition in which the agricultural population have sunk unconsciously, and, I am afraid to think, contentedly. (Hear, hear.) Speaking of the union of Tarrant Hinton, the same reverend gentleman says—"In Tarrant Hinton parish, a father, mother, married daughter and her husband, an infant, a blind boy of sixteen, and two girls, occupying one bedroom; next door, a father, mother, and six children, the eldest boy sixteen years of age, in one bedroom; two doors below, a mother, a daughter with two bastards, another daughter, her husband and two children, another daughter and her husband, one bedroom and a sort of landing, the house in a most dilapidated state! It is not one property or one parish alone, on or in which such cases exist; the crowded state of the cottages generally is a thing known to every one who has occasion to go amongst the poor. In one or two cases whole villages might be gone through, and every other house at least would tell the same tale; and I know this to be true out of this union as well as in it; and in some of these worst localities a rent of from £3 to £5 yearly is charged for a house with only one room below and one above. It may serve to corroborate what I have stated of the crowding of the villages to add, that I have now a list before me of forty families belonging to other parishes in the union who are now actually residing in the town of Blandford. Now, mark! the progress of the evil is this. The landowner refuses to build up new cottages, and permits the old cottages to fall down; and I speak advisedly when I say, that this is the course adopted systematically in Dorsetshire, and the people are driven to Blandford and other towns. And what a population are they thus sending to the manufacturing districts! Why, what are these villages but normal schools of prostitution and vice? Oh, do not then blame the manufacturers for the state of the population in their towns, while you rear such a people in the country, and drive them there for shelter when the hovels in which they have dwelt fall down about them. (Cheers.) I wish to be understood that, in speaking of the condition of the agricultural labourer, and of the wages he receives, I do not intend to cast imputations upon any individual. I attack not individuals, but the system. (Hear, hear, hear.) I say emphatically, I do not attack individuals, but a system. Although I hold the proprietor to be responsible for the state of lodging on his own land, I do not hold him responsible for the rate of wages in his district. I never held the farmers responsible for the want of employment or the price of labour, although it has been foolishly said of me that I did so. I challenge the Argus-eyed opponent I have to deal with, to show that I have ever done so. (Great cheering.) But, so far from that being the case, I have, in every agricultural district which I have visited, told the labourers "that the farmers cannot give what wages they please—wages are not to be looked upon as charity—the farmers are in no way responsible for low wages,—it is the system." (Cheers.) I have thus spoken of the food and lodging of the agricultural labourers, and shall content myself with one extract from Mr. Austin's description of their clothing:—"A change of clothes seems to be out of the question, although necessary not only for cleanliness, but saving of time. It not unfrequently happens that a woman on returning home from work is obliged to go to bed for an hour or two, to allow her clothes to be dried. It is also by no means uncommon for her, if she should not do this, to put them on again next morning nearly as wet as when she took them off." Now, what kind of home customers do honourable gentlemen opposite think these people are to the manufacturers? (Cheers.) This is the population who, according to those honourable gentlemen, are our best customers. (Loud cheers.) I should be glad for a moment to call the attention of the right honourable the Home Secretary to the present working of the new Poor Law in Wilts. I have observed in a Wiltshire paper a statement which I will read to the House. "In Potterne, an extensive parish on the southwest side of Devizes, in which reside two country gentlemen, who are magistrates, considerable landowners, and staunch advocates of the Corn Laws, besides other gentlemen of station and of wealth, this plan of billeting the labourers has been adopted; and the following are the prices which are put on those poor fellows who cannot get work at the average rate of 7s. a week, and of whom, we understand, there are, or lately were, about forty:—Able-bodied single men, 2s. 6d. a week; ditto married men, 4s.; ditto with two or three children, 5s.; ditto with large families, 6s. a week. At these rates, then,—fixed with reference to the number of mouths to be fed, and not according to the ability of the parties as workmen, the object clearly being to reduce the poor's rate,—may any person in the parish, or out of it either, we presume, command the services of any of these forty unfortunates. We say command, for these independent labourers, 'bold peasantry, their country's pride,' have no voice in the matter; they have not even the option of going into the union-house while any one can be found willing to use up their sinews and their bones at this starvation price." I have seen this in the Independent Wiltshire newspaper, and have taken it down, and had the names of the parties sent to me corroborating it. And is not this, I will ask, quite inconsistent with what is the understood principle of the Poor-law? Here is a sliding tariff of wages beginning at 2s. 6d. and ending at 6s., the men who are the victims of the system having no more voice in the matter than the negro slaves of Louisiana! Now, I put it to you, who are the supporters of the Corn Law—can you, in the face of facts like these, persist in upholding such a system? I would not, were I in your position, be a party to such a course—no, nothing on earth should bribe me to it—with such evidence at your doors of the mischiefs you are inflicting. (Cheers.) I have alluded to the condition of the people in four of the southern counties of England—in Wiltshire, Dorsetshire, Somersetshire, and Devonshire; and what I have stated in regard to those places would apply, I fear, to all the purely rural counties in the kingdom—(Colonel Sibthorp here made an exclamation of dissent)—unless you go northward, where the demand for labour in the manufacturing districts raises the rate of wages on the land in the neighbourhood. The honourable and gallant member for Lincoln says no; and I will concede to the honourable and gallant member, for I have no wish to excite his temper by contradicting him, that it is not so in Lincolnshire. ("Hear, hear," from Colonel Sibthorp, and loud laughter from both sides of the House.) I admit there is an exception to the general rule in regard to that county—there, I believe, both the labourers and farmers are in a much better condition than in the south. But I am referring to the condition of the agricultural population generally. And when we look at the orderly conduct of that population, at the patience exhibited by them under their own sufferings and privations—fortified, as it were, by endurance (hear, hear)—so much, that we scarcely hear a complaint from them, I am sure such a population will meet with the sympathies of this House, and that the noble lord the member for Dorset (Lord Ashley), whom I see opposite, and whose humane interference on behalf of the factory labourers is the theme of admiration (hear, hear), will extend to the agricultural population that sympathy which has been so beneficial in ameliorating the condition of a large portion of the labouring people. (Hear, hear.) But where are the Scotch county members, that they have nothing to say? In that country there is an agricultural population that, as far as their conduct is concerned, would do honour to any country. (Hear, hear.) Yet I find the following description of the diet of these labourers in a Scotch paper:—"In East Lothian the bread used by hinds and other agricultural labourers is a mixture of barley, peas, and beans, ground into meal; and you will understand its appearance when we inform you that it is very like the rape and oil cakes used for feeding cattle and manuring the fields; and it is very indigestible coarse food." And I have received from a trustworthy person a letter giving me the subjoined account of the peasantry of the county of Forfar. "In this county (Forfarshire), the mode of engaging farm-servants is from Whit Sunday to Whit Sunday; in some cases the period of engagement is only for half a year. The present average rate of wages is £11 per annum, or a fraction more than 4s. a week, with the addition of two pecks or 16lbs. of oatmeal, and seven Scotch pints of milk weekly. The amount of wages may be stated thus—

| | | |
|---------------------------------|-----|-----|
| Money | 4s. | 0d. |
| Oatmeal, two pecks at 10d. | 1 | 8 |
| Seven pints of milk at 2d. | 1 | 2 |

Total weekly wages 6 10

That is the current weekly wages of an able-bodied agricultural labourer. An old man—that is, a man a little beyond the prime of life—if employed at all, his wages are considerably lower. The universal food of the agricultural labourers in Forfarshire is what is locally called 'brose,' which is merely a mixture of oatmeal and boiling water; the meal is not boiled, only the boiling water poured on it. There is no variation in this mode of living; butcher's meat, wheaten bread, sugar, tea or coffee, they never taste. The outhouses they live in are called 'bothies,' and more wretched hovels than these bothies are not to be found among the wigwams of the uncivilized African." It really would appear, from the slight notice taken here of the state of suffering in the rural districts, that the county members were sent up to this House to conceal rather than disclose the condition of the people they left behind them. (Hear.) Then there is the case of Wales. There can be no excuse for ignorance as to the state of the Welsh people, for during the time of the recent disturbances we had the account given by the Times reporter, corroborated by persons living in the locality, showing clearly what was the condition of both the farmer and the labourer in that country. In one of those accounts it was stated:—"The main cause, however, of the disturbances is beyond question the abject poverty of the people. The small farmer here breakfasts on oatmeal and water boiled, called 'duffery' or 'flum-mery,' or on a few mashed potatoes left from the previous night's supper. He dines on potatoes and butter-milk, with sometimes a little white Welsh cheese and barley bread, and, as an occasional treat, has a salt herring. Fresh meat is never seen on the farmer's table. He sups on mashed potatoes. His butter he never tastes; he sells it to pay his rent. The pigs he feeds are sold to pay his rent. As for beef or mutton, they are quite out of the question—they never form the farmer's food." Then as to the labourer:—"The condition of the labourer, from inability in the farmer to give him constant employment, is deplorable. They live entirely on potatoes, and have seldom enough of them, having only one meal a day. Being half starved, they are constantly upon the parish. They live in mud cottages, with only one room for sleeping, cooking, and living—different ages and sexes herding together. Their cottages have no windows, but a hole through the mud wall to admit the air and light, into which a bundle of rags or turf is thrust at night to stop it up. The thinly-thatched roofs are seldom drop-dry, and the mud floor becomes consequently damp and wet, and dirty almost as the road; and, to complete the wretched picture, huddled in a corner are the rags and straw of which their beds are composed." I have now glanced at the condition of the agricultural population in England, Scotland, and Wales. You have too recently heard the tale of its sufferings to require that I should go across the Channel to the sister island with its two millions and a half of paupers; yet bear in mind, for we are too apt to forget it, in that country there is a duty this day of 18s. a quarter upon the import of foreign wheat. (Hear.) Will it be believed in future ages, that in a country periodically on the point of actual famine—at a time when its inhabitants subsisted on the lowest food, the very roots of the earth—there was a law in existence which virtually prohibited the importation of bread! (Cheers.) I have given you some idea of the ordinary condition of the agricultural labourers when at home: I have alluded to their forced migration from the agricultural districts to the towns; and I will now quote from the report of the London Fever Hospital, a description of the state in which they reach the metropolis:—"Doctor Southwood Smith has just given his annual report upon the state of the London Fever Hospital during the past year, from which it appears that the admissions during the period were 1462, being an excess of 418 above that of any preceding year. A large proportion of the inmates were agricultural labourers or provincial mechanics, who had come to London in search of employment, and who were seized with the malady either on the road or soon after their arrival, evincing the close connexion between fever and destitution. These poor creatures ascribed their illness, some of them to sleeping by the sides of hedges, and others to a want of clothing, many of them being without stockings, shirts, shoes, or any apparel capable of defending them from the inclemency of the weather; while the larger number attributed it to want of food, being driven by hunger to eat raw vegetables, turnips, and rotten apples. Their disease was attended with such extreme prostration as generally to require the administration of an unusually large proportion of wine, brandy, and ammonia, and other stimulants. The gross mortality was 154 per cent. An unprecedented number of nurses and other servants of the hospital were attacked with fever, namely 29, of whom six died." I have another account from the Marlborough-street police report, bearing upon the same point, which is as follows:—"Marlborough-street.—The Magdalen Society constables and the police have brought a considerable number of beggars to this court recently. The majority of these persons are country labourers, and their excuse for vagrancy has been of the same character—inability to get work from the farmers, and impossibility of supporting themselves and families on the wages offered them when employment is to be had. It is impossible to describe the wretched appearance of these men, most of whom are able-bodied labourers, capable of performing a hard day's work, and, according to their own statements, willing to do so, provided they could get anything to do. A great many of these vagrant agricultural labourers have neither stockings nor shoes on their feet, and their ragged and famished appearance exceeds in wretchedness that of the Irish peasantry who find their way to this metropolis. The magistrates, in almost every instance, found themselves obliged to send these destitute persons to prison for a short period, as the only means of temporarily rescuing them from starvation. Several individuals belonging to this class of beggars were yesterday committed." You have here the condition of the agricultural labourers when they fly to the towns. (Hear, hear.) You have already heard what was their condition in the country, and now I appeal to honourable members opposite, whether theirs is a case with which to come before the country to justify the maintenance of the Corn Laws? (Cheers.) Why, you are disinherited, and put out of court; you have not a word to say. If you could show in the agricultural labourers a blooming and ruddy population, well clothed and well fed, and living in houses fit for men to live in—if this could be shown as the effects of the Corn Laws, there might be some ground for appealing to the feelings of the House to permit an injustice to continue while they knew that they were benefiting a large portion of their fellow-countrymen. (Hear, hear.) But when we know, and can prove from the facts before us, that the greatest scarcity of food is to be found in the midst of the agricultural population, and that protection does not, as its advocates allege, benefit the farmer or the labourer, you have not a solitary pretext remaining, and I recommend you at once to give up the system which you can no longer stand before the country and maintain. (Hear, hear.) The facts I have stated are capable of corroboration. Before a select committee we can obtain as much evidence as we want to show the state of the agricultural population. We may get that evidence in less time and more satisfactorily before a select committee than through a commission. Though I by no means wish to undervalue inquiries conducted by commissions, which in many cases are very useful, I am of opinion that an inquiry such as I propose would be carried on with more satisfaction and with less loss of time by a select committee than by a commission. There is no tribunal so fair as a select committee; members of both sides are upon it, witnesses are examined and cross-examined, doubts and difficulties are removed, and the real facts are arrived at. (Hear, hear.) Besides the facts I have stated, if you appoint a committee, the landlords may obtain evidence which will go far to help them out of their own difficulty—viz., the means of giving employment to the people. (Hear, hear.) The great want is employment, and if it is not found, where do you suppose will present evils end, when you consider the rapid way in which the population is increasing? (Hear.) You may in a committee receive valuable suggestions from practical agriculturists—suggestions which may assist you in devising means for providing employment. There may be men examined more capable of giving an opinion, and more competent to help you out of this dilemma, than any you could have had some years ago. You may now have the evidence of men who have given their attention as to what can be done with the soil. Drain tiles are beginning to show themselves on the surface of the land in many counties. Why should they not also be placed under the surface, and why should not such improvements give employment to the labourers? (Cheers.) You do not want acts of Parliament to protect the farmer—you want improvements, outlays, bargains, leases, fresh terms. (Cheers.) A farmer before my committee will tell you that you may employ more labourers by breaking up land which has lain for hundreds of years in grass, or rather in moss, to please some eccentric landowner, who prefers a piece of green turf to seeing the plough turning up its furrows. This coxcombry of some landlords would disappear before the good sense of the Earl of Ducie. (Cheers, and cries of "Oh, oh," from the Ministerial benches.) You may derive advantage from examining men who look upon land as we manufacturers do upon the raw material of the fabrics which we make—(hear, hear)—who will not look upon it with that superstitious veneration and that abhorrence of change with which landlords have been taught to regard their acres, but as something on which to give employment to the people, and which, by the application to it of increased intelligence, energy, and capital, may produce increased returns of wealth. (Cheers.) But we shall have another advantage from my committee. Recollect that hitherto you have never heard the two sides of the question in the committees which have sat to inquire into agricultural subjects; and I press this fact on the notice of these right honourable baronet opposite as a strong appeal to him. I have looked back upon the evidence taken before these committees, and I find that in none of them were both sides of the question fairly stated. All the witnesses examined were protectionists—all the members of all the committees were protectionists. (Hear, hear.) We have never yet heard an enlightened agriculturist plead the opposite side of the question. (Hear, hear.) It is upon these grounds that I press this motion upon honourable gentlemen opposite. I want to have further evidence. I do not want a man to be examined who is not a farmer or landowner. I would respectfully ask the Earl of Ducie and Earl Spencer to be examined first. (Cheers from the Opposition.) And then honourable gentlemen could send for the Dukes of Buckingham and Richmond. (Loud cheering, mingled with laughter from the Ministerial benches.) I would like nothing better than that—nothing better than to submit these four noblemen to a cross-examination. I would take your two witnesses and you would take mine, and the country should decide between us. (Renewed cheers and laughter.) Nothing would so much tend to diffuse sound views as such an examination. (Hear, hear.) But you have even members on your own side who will help me to make out my case. There is the honourable member for Berkshire (Mr. Pusey); he knows of what land is capable—he knows what land wants, and he knows well that in the districts where the most unskilful farming prevails, there does pauperism exist to the greatest extent. (Hear, hear, hear.) What does he say to you? Why, he advises that, "more drains may be cut, were chalk be laid on the downs, the wolds, and the fens; spurt on the sand, clay on the fens and heaths, lime on the moors, many of which should be broken up; that old ploughs be cast away, the number of horses reduced, good breeds of cattle extended, stock fattened where it has hitherto been starved, root crops drilled and better dunged, new kinds of those crops cultivated, and artificial manures of ascertained usefulness purchased." Why, it appears from the testimony of your own side, that you are doing nothing right. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) There is nothing about your agriculture which does not want improving. Suppose that you could show that we are wrong in all our manufacturing processes—suppose a theorist could come to my business, which is manufacturing garments, and which, I take it, is almost as necessary in a civilized country, and with a climate like ours, as manufacturing food (cheers and laughter); suppose, say, a theoretical chemist, book in hand, should come to me and say, "You must bring indigo from India, madder from France, gum from Africa, and cotton from America, and you must compound and work them scientifically so as to make good pieces, to be sold for 3s. each garment." Why, my answer would be, "We do it already." (Cheers.) We require no theorist to tell us how to perform our labour. If we could not do this, how could we carry on the competition which we do with other nations? But you are condemned by your own witnesses; you have the materials for the amelioration of your soils at your own doors; you have the chalk and clay, and marl and sand, which ought to be intermingled, and yet you must have people writing books to tell you how to do it. (Loud Opposition cheering.) We may make a great advance if we get this committee; you may have the majority of its members protectionists if you will. I am quite willing that such should be the arrangement. I know it is understood—at least, there is a sort of etiquette—that the mover for a committee should, in the event of its being granted, preside over it as chairman: I waive all pretensions of the sort—I give up all claims—I only ask to be present as an individual member. (Hear.) What objections there can be to the committee I cannot understand. Are you afraid that to grant it will increase agitation? I ask the honourable baronet the member for Essex (Sir J. Tyrrell) whether he thinks the agitation is going down in his part of the country? I rather think there is a good deal of agitation going on there now. (Hear, hear.) Do you really think that the appointment of a dozen gentlemen to sit in a quiet room up stairs, and hear evidence, will add to the excitement out of doors? (Hear.) Why, by granting my committee you will be withdrawing me from the agitation for one. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) But I tell you that you will raise excitement still higher than it is if you allow me to go down to your constituents—your vote against the committee in my hand—and allow me to say to them, "I only asked for inquiry; I offered the landlords a majority of their own party; I offered them to go into committee, not as a chairman, but as an individual member; I offered them all possible advantages, and yet they would not, they dared not grant a committee of inquiry into your condition." (Loud cheers.) I repeat to you, I desire no advantages. Let us have the committee. Let us set to work attempting to elicit sound information and to benefit our common country. (Loud cheers.) I believe that much good may be done by adopting the course which I propose. I tell you that your boasted system is not protection, but destruction to agriculture. (Loud Opposition cheers.) Let us see if we cannot counteract some of the foolishness—I will not call it by a harsher name—of the doings of those who, under the pretence of protecting native industry, are inviting the farmer not to depend upon his own energy and skill, and capital, but to come here and look for the protection of an act of Parliament. (Loud cheers.) Let us have a committee, and see if we cannot elicit facts which may counteract the folly of those who are persuading the farmer to prefer acts of Parliament to draining and subsoiling, and to be looking to the laws of this House when he should be studying the laws of nature. (Cheers.) I cannot imagine anything more demoralising—yes, that is the word—more demoralising than for you to tell the farmers that they cannot compete with foreigners. (Hear, hear.) You bring long rows of figures, of delusive accounts, showing that the cultivation of an acre of wheat costs £6 or £8 per year. You put every impediment in the way of the farmers trying to do what they ought to do. (Hear.) And can you think that that is the way to make people succeed? (Hear, hear.) How should we manufacturers get on, if, when we got a pattern as a specimen of the productions of a rival manufacturer, we brought all our people together, and said, "It is quite clear that we cannot compete with this foreigner; it is quite useless our attempting to compete with Germany or America; why, we cannot produce goods at the price at which they do." But how do we act in reality? We call our men together, and say, "So-and-so is producing goods at such a price; but we are Englishmen, and what France or Germany can do, we can do also." (Loud cheers.) I repeat that the opposite system, which you go upon, is demoralising the farmers. Nor have you any right to call out, with the noble lord the member for North Lancashire—you have no right to go down occasionally to your constituencies and tell the farmers, "You must not plod on as your grandfathers did before you; you must not put your hands behind your backs, and drag one foot after the other in the old-fashioned style of going to work." I say you have no right to hold such language to the farmer. Who makes them plod on like their grandfathers? Who makes them put their hands behind their backs? (Loud cheers.) Why, the men who go to Lancashire and talk of the danger of the pouring in of foreign corn from a certain province in Russia, which shall be nameless—(loud cheers)—the men who tell the farmers to look to this House for protective acts instead of to their own energies—instead of to those capabilities which, were they properly brought out, would make the English farmer equal to—perhaps superior to—any in the world. (Loud cheers.) Because I believe that the existing system is worse for the farmer than for the manufacturer—because I believe that great good to both would result from an inquiry—because I believe that the present system robs the earth of its fertility and the labourer of his hire, deprives the people of subsistence, and the farmer of feelings of honest independence, I hope, Sir, that the House will accede to my motion for "a select committee to inquire into the effects of protective duties on imports upon the interests of the tenant-farmers and farm-labourers of this country." (Mrs. Cobden resumed his seat amid great cheering.)

MEETINGS.

PRESTON.

On Thursday evening the 7th inst. the great Anti-Corn-Law League meeting in aid of the League Fund, took place in the Theatre Royal; the attendance fully equalled all expectation. As early as half-past seven the pit and gallery were both filled, and the boxes also were crowded. Amongst the immense company present were many of the first families in the town and neighbourhood, including a good proportion of ladies. At a quarter to eight o'clock the deputation from the League, consisting of Messrs. Cobden and George Thompson, Colonel Thompson, and Mr. R. R. Moore, made their appearance on the stage, and were received with unanimous bursts of applause. The meeting at this time presented a most imposing and encouraging appearance; the boxes had become completely filled with ladies and gentlemen, and the stage was crowded with the more immediate friends of the movement. The building had been ornamented throughout with various Anti-Corn-Law devices and mottoes. A little before eight o'clock, Mr. Livesey proposed that Mr. M. Satterthwaite take the chair, which was at once carried with applause.

Mr. Satterthwaite, on assuming his duties, was received with applause. He would merely observe, that the object for which the present meeting had been convened would be apparent from the advertisement, which was to the following effect:—"The great Anti-Corn-Law Meeting will be held in the Theatre, on Thursday evening next, 7th March, to receive a deputation from the National Anti-Corn-Law League. The deputation will consist of Mr. Cobden, Colonel Thompson, George Thompson, Esq., and R. R. Moore, Esq." The deputation were now present, and consisted of the gentlemen just named, who alone would have to address the meeting that evening. He would introduce Colonel Thompson. (Cheers.)

Colonel Thompson, Mr. Cobden, Mr. George Thompson, and Mr. Robert R. Moore, having addressed the meeting in able speeches, the following subscriptions were handed in:—

The first subscription was Mr. Thomas Miller, 200l. (Immense cheering.) This subscription was four times more than last year. J. W., 5s. John Heaton, Charles-street, 20l. Samuel Makin, 1l. Mr. Henry Miller, 100l., being five times the amount of last year. (Loud cheers.) Mr. John Hawkins, 50l. (Cheers.) (Double.) A friend, 1l. E. Pinder, 5s. Mr. Moore said he did not like to see a mercenary spirit displayed by the meeting in only cheering when large sums were announced. A small subscription was as deserving of a cheer as a large one. The following announcements were then made in rapid succession. Mr. Chatham, 3l. Mr. Westhead, Duke of York, 1l. John Tomlinson, 1s. Messrs. Ainsworth and Co., 100l. (Loud Cheers.) A Chartist, 1l. The next card was "For screws to make up the coffin of monopoly," 5l. Mr. George Thompson said he would give 5l. to bury him. James Jones, Church-street, 1l. T. H., 2l. James Harlam, 5l. R. and W. Ascroft, 20l. (Cheers.) 1l. was here handed up without a name, the card having upon it St. George and the Dragon. A friend, 2s. Thomas Smith, 5s. Daniel Clinton, 1s. A lady, 2s. 6d. —, 38, Bow-lane, 5s. John Sleddon, Edgar-street, 1l. A friend, by John Bryce, 5s. John Noble, 1l. George Atkinson, 5s. Peter Eckersley, 3s. A friend, 1l. A friend, 2l. John Brice, Church-street, 10s. James Briggs, 1l. 10s. — Mayor, 5s. — William Boys, 1l. The next subscription announced was Mr. George Smith, 50l. (cheers); one son and four daughters, 1l. each, and Mrs. Smith, 5l. (Renewed cheering.) Cheap Bread, 2s. 6d. J. Harkness, 1s. A Radical, 5l. John Evans, 10l., being the second this year. (Applause.) Lawrence Harrison, 1l. W. N., 10s. A friend, 2l. J. Jesper, five guineas. E. Swinglehurst, 6d. A friend, 20l. (Applause.) A new subscriber, 5s. Richard Fairclough, Hill-street, 1l. Turn Coat, 2s. 6d. Duke of Buckingham, 1d. (Laughter.) Anti-humbug, 2s. 6d. A lady, 10s. A friend, 2s. 6d. Thomas Sutcliffe, 1l. William Ponsford, 1l. James Mole, Peter's-square, 5s. William Mole, 5s. Slender Billy, Temperance Hotel, Lane-street, 2l. James Laurison, 2s. 6d. No Monopoly, 5s. W. Halsall, 5s. — Hoole, 2s. Ralph Dixon, 2l. Bobby Peel, 4d. (Laughter.) A poor weaver, 10d. The Chairman, M. Satterthwaite, 20l. J. Livesey, 30l. (Both these were double.) Mr. Pritt, 1l. A friend to universal peace, 5l. Nicholas Hayes, 1l. Tambolf Stanley, 1d. (Laughter.) C. Clifton, 1l. John Goodwin, 10l. R. W., 1l. M. Nelson, 5s. A friend, 5s. To out Ferrand from Knaresboro', 1l. (Laughter.) Wilkinson, 1l. Pert, 1l. D. Wilcockson, Church-street, 2l. For monopoly's epitaph, 1l. (Laughter.) George Newton, 2s. An old struggler, 10s. W. T., 5s. A friend, 5l. Ditto, 2l. J. and W. Magguffog, 20l. T. B., 1l. A friend, 2l. A Teetotaler, 1l. Sir Robert Peel, 1d. William Eccles (new subscription), 50l. A lady who dislikes sour pie, 1s. A friend to universal peace, 5l. 5s. Jane Hodgkinson, 2s. Thomas Oldham, 1s.; R. T. Duckett, 1l. H. C., 2s. A junior, 10s. 6d. A friend to cheap butter, 1s. H. T. (meal dealer), 2l. Richard Howarth, 1s. J. Wainman, 1l. 1s. For my old woman, 1l. For my young woman, 1l. (Cheers.) A last gasp, 2l. Every subscription that was announced was received with cheering.

Mr. Moore then announced that the subscriptions had reached £813; last year, only £350 were subscribed. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. J. Livesey moved a vote of thanks to the deputation, to which Col. Thompson briefly responded, and proposed a similar compliment to the Chairman; the meeting broke up soon after 11 o'clock.

HASLINGDEN.

An Anti-Corn-Law meeting, following a tea-party, was held in the Independent Chapel on Wednesday the 6th inst.; Thomas Greg, Esq., of Rose Bank, in the chair. On the platform were Messrs. Henry Slater, William Dean, James Black, Rev. P. Ramsay, Rev. S. Smith; David Whitehead, Esq., and Peter Whitehead, Esq., of Holly Mount; John Lord, Esq., and John Earnshaw, Esq., of Bacup. The meeting was addressed by the deputation, which consisted of Colonel Thompson; C. E. Rawlins, jun., Esq., of Liverpool; W. Rawson, Esq., and A. Prantice, Esq., of Manchester. At the close the following subscriptions were made:—Mr. Henry Slater, 25l.; Messrs. Dean and Cronshaw, 15l. 15s.; Thomas Greg, Esq., 10l.; in addition to 100l. previously given in Manchester; Mr. James

Black and family, 5l. 5s.; a friend per do., 1l.; Messrs. Lawrence Whittaker and Sons, 5l.; a friend per Mr. Henry Slater, 5l.; Mr. Robert Stott, 5l.; Mr. Henry Rawstorn, 5l. 3s.; Mr. Thomas Hargreaves, 2l.; Mr. John Pilling, 2l.; Mr. John Parkinson, 1l. 10s.; Mr. Thomas Worsick, sen., 1l.; Mr. James Hayhurst, 1l. 1s.; Mr. John Rawstorn, 1l.; Mr. Thomas Haworth, 1l.; Mr. James Heaton, 1l.; Mrs. Fowler, 1l.; Mr. James Brierley, 1l.; Mr. Thomas Heap, 10s.; Rev. P. Ramsay, 5s.; Mr. William M'William, 5s.; Mr. Thomas Holden, 2s. 6d.; Mr. John Whitaker, 2s. 6d.; Messrs. J. and T. Worsick, 5l.; Mr. Henry King, 2l.; A friend per do., 10s.; Mr. Bennet Greig, 2l.; Mr. Jonathan Ormerod, 1l.; Mr. Marsden Hargreaves, 1l.; Mr. James Southurst, 1l. 1s.; Mr. William Yates, 1l.; Mr. George Pickup, 1l.; Mr. Alexander Maxwell, 1l.; Mr. Thomas Myers, 1l.; a friend per Mr. Black, 10s.; a pill for Dr. Peel, 7s. 6d.; Miss Ramsay, 2s.; Mr. John King, 5s.; Mr. James Heap, 2s. 6d.; more kitchen physic and fewer Tamworth pills, 2s. 6d.; a Poor Man, the class who suffer most by the most wicked law that ever disgraced any country, 1s.; collected in small sums, upwards of 5l. It is expected that the subscriptions will be considerably increased, as many friends were out of town and otherwise detained.—Manchester Times.

IMPORTANT MEETING OF FARMERS AT HARLESTON.

Wednesday evening the 6th inst. a meeting of the landed proprietors, tenant-farmers, merchants, and tradesmen was held at the Swan Inn, Harleston, to take into consideration the propriety of petitioning Parliament to repeal the duties on foreign corn, the duty on malt, and in favour of Free Trade generally. Thomas Lombe Taylor, Esq., of Starston, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN in explaining the object of the meeting observed:—"You are all aware that a meeting was held in this town upon this day week of those parties who were favourable to protection—protection only. Many individuals, holding the same politics as myself, considering that meeting was, as it had been stated, to be a public meeting, attended, but, to their astonishment, found they were not allowed to open their mouths. (Hear, hear.) For this reason as well as others the present meeting has been called. Upon this occasion full and free discussion is asked for—(hear)—the fuller and freer the better. With respect to himself, he said, "I am so connected with the land, that if the Corn Laws are beneficial to those immediately interested in land, they will be so to me. I state this, trusting you will be more inclined to listen to what I may advance in favour of an entire repeal of these Corn Laws. But, however dependent I am upon land, I would not advocate any law which might be thought to advantage one part of the community at the expense of another. The Corn Laws (and I beg to remind you that we have had several,—five, I believe, during the last 40 years) may at times have been a benefit to the landowners and titheholders, but it is doubtful whether they are now a benefit even to them, and I am of opinion, and will endeavour to show that they are now, and almost always have been, an injury to the tenant-farmer." The chairman addressed the meeting at length in favour of these opinions.

Mr. R. PRIEST (Harleston) moved the first resolution:—

"That it is the opinion of this meeting that the Corn Law, whilst injuring the consumer, has failed to benefit the producer of English corn, inasmuch as it has fixed the expenses of cultivation, without securing a corresponding price."

"That the duty on malt has proved a serious injury to both producer and consumer: to the latter enhancing the price, and to the former, not only lessening the demand, but entirely preventing the use of barley in its most advantageous form as food for cattle."

"That restrictions upon trade are frequently injurious and always impolitic—preventing its expansion, and tending to benefit one class at the expense of another."

"With the view, therefore, of forwarding the cause of Free Trade, it is the opinion of this meeting that a petition to the House of Commons, in accordance with the above resolution, be now adopted."

Mr. GEO. THEOBALD, of Starston, seconded the resolution. He advocated Free Trade upon the grounds of eternal justice, nor would he think of asking for its adoption if he thought for one instant it was contrary to the spirit of reason and truth. (Cheers.)

WALTER MASON (a Chartist) rose to move the following amendment:—

"That this meeting believes the principles of Free Trade, as propounded by the Anti-Corn-Law League, to be visionary and fallacious in the extreme; and that their practical operation would be productive of the most wide-spread and devastating distress; and further, that a just protection for ALL classes in the community is most likely to secure the happiness and promote the prosperity of society."

This led to a warm discussion, and, for a time, to a warm altercation. Mr. Henry Walne, of Syleham; Mr. Leapingwell; Mr. Cudden, of Bungay; Mr. James Pratt, Needham; Mr. R. B. Hervey; Mr. Sayer, &c., addressed the meeting, and the original resolutions were carried.

The petition was then put and carried unanimously.

C. A. MILLS, Esq. (Pulham), said, so many excellent speeches had been given in support of Free Trade, that he would not occupy the time of the meeting with any observations, beyond merely stating his conviction to be in favour of Free-Trade measures. (Hear.) He should conclude by proposing a vote of thanks to the chairman for his excellent presidency. (Cheers.)

WALTER MASON seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

The CHAIRMAN returned thanks, and could not avoid saying that he felt proud that the little town of Harleston, seated in the midst of an agricultural district, had originated the movement among agriculturists in favour of Free Trade. (Cheers.) Nor had this movement been the only one which had originated in Harleston, calculated to prove of benefit to agriculture. Recollect, farmers' clubs also originated in that town. (Hear.)— Ipswich Express.

BRISTOL ANTI-CORN-LAW SOCIETY.—A meeting of the Bristol Branch of the Anti-Corn-Law League was held on Wednesday evening the 6th inst., at the large Public Rooms, Broadmead, George Thomas, Esq., in the chair. There was a considerable attendance of members. The Chairman commenced the business of the evening by announcing that it had been arranged to have a tea meeting on the 10th of next month, in aid of the great League fund. This announcement having been received with much applause, the Chairman proceeded to address the meeting. Having referred to the formation of the Anti-League societies, he proceeded to notice the "protection meeting" recently held in Bristol, and ably criticised some of the speeches then delivered. He next showed how completely the several Corn Laws had failed of their professed object, namely, to produce steadiness of price; and that rent having been fixed on this expectation, the farmer was deceived, and every year became poorer and poorer. He was continually losing money, and he (the Chairman) had been told that if the farmers of England were to be sold up, the probability was that not one half of them would be found solvent. This was all the benefit the farmer got from protection, and his interest could be promoted by the abolition of the Corn Laws. If there were a Free Trade, he would soon come to know what the lowest prices would be likely to be; the prices, too, would be more equalized, and he would be enabled to make such arrangements with his landlord as would ensure to him a fair return for his capital, skill, and labour. The Chairman went on to remark that the farmer paid double the rent he did in 1791, although he did not get more for his corn. The fact was, that the laws were passed in order to keep up rents. The farmer had been deceived, and, in order to show that he had derived no real prosperity, it was only necessary to instance the fact that, during the last thirty years, there had been three committees appointed by the House of Commons to inquire as to the distress of the agricultural interest. (Hear.) There could be no clearer proof that protection, as a means of benefiting the farmer, had completely failed. The Chairman concluded amid loud applause.—H. Visger, Esq., in the course of an able speech, showed the effects of the Corn Laws on the shipping interest, and how their repeal would necessarily benefit that interest, and cause an increase of employment.—The meeting was subsequently addressed by the Rev. J. J. Waite and Mr. Waring; and, after a vote of thanks to the chairman, broke up.

ANTI-CORN-LAW MEETING, RICHMOND.—On Saturday, Colonel Thompson and Mr. Pilt attended at this town to address the farmers. The chair was taken by—Maxwell, Esq., the mayor; and the audience, which consisted principally of the townspeople of Richmond, and was large and respectable, was addressed for about two hours by the League deputation on the usual topics. There were a good many farm-labourers present, and a few farmers; the bulk of the latter, however, staid away. Effectual means had, it appeared, been taken to produce this result, so much desired by Pro-Corn-Law landlords, who seem to have a morbid dread, amounting to horror, of the farmers reading Anti-Corn-Law tracts, or listening to Anti-Corn-Law speeches. A meeting of farmers was held at twelve o'clock, whether for some Protection Society purpose or not is not ascertained, and an active Pro-Corn-Law agent went round amongst the farmers in the market-place, betwixt twelve and one o'clock, warning and entreating them not to attend the League meeting, as the "itinerant orators were a set of vagabonds." Whether from conviction, or from other motives less honourable either to them or to landlord influence, few attended; but the landlords may depend upon it that, for all this, farmers will read and think, and the issue is not doubtful.

DARLINGTON.—Two meetings were held in this town on Monday. In the afternoon, Colonel Thompson and Mr. Pilt addressed a meeting of about 150 to 200 persons; and in the evening, Mr. Moore and Mr. Pilt addressed a crowded audience of from 250 to 300 persons. It happened, unfortunately, that on the day of meeting, the place fixed upon and placarded was obliged to be given up, in consequence of the dangerous illness of a young man, whose bedroom was near the room of meeting; and only one hour before the time appointed was notice given of the change of place. The afternoon meeting was therefore small; but in the evening, considerably more went away, unable to gain admittance, than those who were so fortunate as to get seats or standing-room in the place of meeting. The addresses of Mr. Moore and Mr. Pilt occupied nearly three hours, and, inconvenient and heated as was the room, the attention of the audience was sustained to the last. It is quite apparent that here, as elsewhere, men want to hear all that can be said on the subject. They are in earnest. They believe the question involves their interests, and the national interests; and we are satisfied that the question has such hold on the national mind, that it will not be dismissed until it has received a satisfactory practical solution. No subscription was commenced at the meeting, in consequence of the unavoidable absence of several gentlemen who were expected to head the list; but a subscription will be opened soon, and it is understood that Darlington will not lag behind other places in liberality.

BRIMFIELD, NEAR LUDLOW, March 7.—Mr. Falvey, of the National Anti-Corn-Law League, has delivered five lectures on the subject of Corn and Colonial Monopolies, to crowded audiences in Leominster and Ludlow. His first lecture was delivered on Friday last, to about 500 persons, in the Assembly-room, Lion Hotel, Leominster, amongst whom were some of the most respectable tradesmen of the town, and several farmers from the neighbourhood. Mr. Falvey was opposed by a liquor merchant, but his arguments were so promptly and forcibly met by Mr. F., that when he found he was losing ground he fell into a passion, and was finally biased down by the meeting. Mr. Falvey proceeded to Ludlow, and addressed a meeting in the Market-square, on Monday afternoon, it being market-day. He addressed two large and enthusiastic meetings on the evenings of that and the following day, at which Free-Trade resolutions were carried unanimously. Last evening we had an excellent meeting, at which Mr. John Southall took the chair. Mr. Falvey delivered a most energetic and telling speech. A vote of thanks was given to the chairman, and a vote of thanks to the League, for its exertions in the cause of Free Trade, was carried with tremendous cheering; after which the meeting separated.

HARTLEPOOL.—On Tuesday evening, the 5th instant, Mr. Addell delivered a lecture on the Corn and Provision Laws, the Coal Tax, and Free Trade, in the Long-room, Turf Hotel, Hartlepool. The room was crowded to excess long before the hour for commencing the lecture; and the lecturer was heard with the greatest attention, though he spoke for an hour and a half. Joshua Johnson, Esq., was called to the chair; and after the lecture a number of resolutions in support of Free Trade, and condemnatory of the Corn Laws, were carried by general acclamation. Some subscriptions to the League Fund were then received, and the subscribers made arrangements for increasing their number and co-operating with the League.—Newcastle Courier.

GLASGOW TOWN-COUNCIL.—At a meeting of this body, held on Thursday, the 7th instant, Mr. Cross, a member of the council, in an able speech, proposed a series of resolutions in favour of Free Trade. An amendment was proposed by Bailie Hogle. On a division, there voted for Mr. Cross's resolutions, 19; for the amendment, 6; majority, 14.

ULVERSTON, March 7.—A correspondent of the Kendal Mercury gives a graphic description of "a protection meeting" held in Ulverston on the 29th ultimo. He says:—"At two o'clock, the time advertised, small signs of a muster appeared, not one person being in the room. Time passed on, and a few dropped in lazily. By-and-by more numerous bodies entered; and it was ascertained that several persons were running to and fro in the market, goading the farmers to attend, as they anticipated some opposition. At three o'clock, the muster-roll seemed to be strong enough, Mr. Woodburn, solicitor, and manager of the meeting, called upon some one to propose a chairman. Nobody seemed prepared, and some minutes elapsed. At this time a party of gentlemen from the board of guardians entered the room, apparently moved by curiosity to see how things were going on. Mr. Woodburn then proposed that Edward Braddyll, Esq., should take the chair. Mr. Braddyll came forward and declined the honour, as he was far from Ulverston, and could not stay long in the room. Several other gentlemen were then nominated.—Mr. Townley, Mr. Ainlie, Mr. Gibson, Mr. Hartley, &c. &c.; but some would not take the chair, and others did not seem to be desired by the audience. At last Mr. Gibson proposed an old farmer of the name of Ash-honour, was gently moved into the chair. At this moment, the Rev. Edward Hawkes, of Kendal, requested permission to offer a few observations, as he thought it was not expedient for any class of persons engaged in agriculture to petition for the preservation of the existing protection to agriculturists. An indescribable tumult then arose. The most inhuman shouts and yellings were raised, and chiefly by persons dressed as gentlemen. A butcher threw open the window behind the chairman, seized Mr. Robert Briggs's hat, while he was endeavouring to obtain a hearing for Mr. Hawkes, and flung it out of the window. Others called "fling him after it." After some time spent in this manner, it was regularly proposed and seconded, that Mr. Hawkes should be heard, and the chairman consented. But he had no sooner stated that the history of the operation of the sliding scale, during the first year of its enactment, proved that it was most injurious to the tenant-farmers, by causing a fall of prices in wheat to the extent of 13s. per quarter in the three months from July to November—the time when the farmer had to take his produce to market to provide for rent-day—than the same clamour was raised, and so pertinaciously persisted in that Mr. Hawkes desisted from any further observations. The remaining proceedings were hurried through without the slightest attempt at order or regularity, and the audience proceeded to sign the petition. Great dissatisfaction having been expressed at the violent and unreasonable conduct of this meeting, several gentlemen here determined to summon a public meeting, and issued a placard announcing it at the same place, to be held on Wednesday evening, March 6, at half-past seven o'clock p.m., and the object was stated to be "to discuss the principles of Free Trade, and to take such other measures as may seem desirable, in order to secure the complete adoption of them in the commercial system of the country." At the time appointed a large number of persons had assembled, which gradually increased until the room became very full, and around the platform densely crowded. Mr. Hartley, of Low Mill, proposed that Thomas Ainsworth, Esq., of the Floss, should take the chair. W. Wilson, Esq., of High Wray, seconded the proposal, and the nomination being confirmed, Mr. Ainsworth took the chair amidst the cheers of the meeting.—The Rev. Mr. Hawkes, W. Wilson, Esq., of High Wray, Mr. Blinn of Penny Bridge, in excellent speeches, proposed and seconded a series of resolutions embodying Free-Trade principles.—Mr. George Hartley moved a resolution, "That a Free-Trade Association for Lonsdale North of the Sands be now formed, and that the following gentlemen be appointed a committee, with power to add to their number." (Here follows the list of committee.)—Mr. Welch, of Backbarrow, seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.—Mr. Hawkes then moved a vote of thanks to the chairman, which was carried by acclamation, and supported with three hearty cheers.—Mr. Wilson rose, and after a few observations in explanation, said that they should not be doing their duty if they did not acknowledge their obligation to Mr. Hawkes for the noble and successful manner in which he had come forward in defence of Free-Trade principles in Ulverston; and he, therefore, moved the thanks of the meeting to him for his services.—The vote was passed with three hearty cheers.—A shout of three times three for the working class was hailed and heartily responded to; and the meeting broke up highly delighted, and determined to work out the principles advocated.

ANTI-LEAGUE MEETING AT SHAP.—The "dear broad" meeting of Westmorland and Cumberland "landowners, tenantry, and other persons favourable to agricultural protection," called by Sir George Musgrave, Baronet, of Eden-hall, took place this day (Friday), in the National School room at Shap. The hour appointed for the gathering was twelve o'clock at noon; but, owing to the non-arrival of several gentlemen who were expected to take part in the business of the day, the muster was delayed till some minutes after one. The number present, as nearly as we could estimate it, was from 320 to 350; among whom were Sir George Musgrave; R. Burn, Esq., of Orton-hall; Captain Wilson, of the Howe; Edward Wilson, Esq., of Abbot-hall; G. E. Wilson, Esq., of Everham; J. Hill, Esq., Bank-foot, Appleby; the Rev. R. Milner, Orton; the Rev. R. W. Fisher, Hill-top, Kendal; W. Ellison, Esq., of Sizergh; Mr. Benn, Lowther; Mr. Wm. Turner, travelling tea-dealer; and Mr. Gregg, of Kirkby Lonsdale. Of the tenant-farmers and statesmen of the county we could see but very few, except those marshalled by Mr. John Benn, the son of Lord Lonsdale's steward, and some others who, we were informed, were tenants-at-will of Sir George Musgrave; of Mr. Hasell, of Dalem; of the Messrs. Wilson, of Rigmaden and Abbot-hall; and of Mr. Alderman Thompson. These parties attended, of course, at the "spitting," and to do the bidding of their landlords; and, if we may judge of their inclinations from their respectful countenances and the slight and reluctant applause elicited by the speeches addressed to them, we should say that a large majority of the attendants would have preferred any other entertainment whatever to that of standing as passive auditors of the statements which their common sense could not but reject as absurd and illogical.—Kendal Mercury.

THE ANTI-LEAGUE ASSOCIATION.—At a meeting of the Broad Silk Handloom Weavers' Union, held on Saturday, we find from the Morning Chronicle that the following statement of the prosperous condition of the funds at the disposal of the so-called "Anti-League Association" was publicly made:—"Mr. Sherrard said, that according to an arrangement with Mr. N. Doran Maillard, who attended the last meeting of the weavers, he and the secretary met the committee of the Anti-League Association, on the Monday evening, about five o'clock. Mr. N. D. Maillard and a few gentlemen were there. After speaking upon the business about to come before the meeting, he mentioned to him that he and the secretary had been requested to appear there to support the resolutions, that they had lost nearly two days, and that it was but just they should be paid for their time. Mr. D. Maillard then took a half-sovereign from his pocket, which he gave to him, and remarked that he had no money in his pocket to remunerate the secretary, but that he should hear from him on Tuesday morning. The secretary, however, has never heard anything of his half-sovereign." (Loud laughter.)

BRIBERY BY LORD DUNGANNON'S AGENTS AT DURHAM.—Our readers are already aware, that, subsequent to the election of Lord Dungannon for the city of Durham, in April last, after the time for petitioning against his return would have expired according to the old law, his lordship's agents, Mr. George Wilkinson and Mr. John Ward, solicitors, of Durham, paid head-money on the 8th of May, to a great number of the freemen who had voted for his lordship. On this being discovered, a petition was presented, under Lord John Russell's act (which declares head-money paid after an election to be bribery), and Lord Dungannon was unseated on the 14th July. At the recent Durham assizes, being the earliest at which the indictments could be prepared and the evidence collected, separate bills for bribery against Mr. Ward and Mr. Wilkinson were preferred before the grand jury, who found these bills on Wednesday last. We understand that each indictment contains allegations of three separate acts. The defendants immediately surrendered, and gave bail to take their trial at the next Durham (summer) assizes.

MACHINERY, FREE TRADE, AND THE WAGES OF LABOUR.

"I offer only simple facts, plain arguments, and common sense."

To the Editor of the Bolton Free Press.

SIR,—In reference to the above subjects, Mr. Dixon of Manchester, the other day, advised the working men of Bolton to oppose every agitation which had not for its object to secure to every working man the possession of ten acres of land, and a minimum rate of wages of 15s. a week. Mr. Dixon deprecated an extension of trade, manufactures, and improvements in machinery; and recommended his audience, by all means, to "get on the land." Allow me, Mr. Editor, to offer a few remarks, suggesting a somewhat shorter mode of improving the condition of the working classes, by means of the greatest possible improvements in machinery, coupled with perfect freedom of exchange for its productions. In other words, to produce as much at as little expenditure of labour as possible, and then to exchange the articles so produced on the best terms, either at home or abroad, for the articles of consumption which the labouring and other classes require; or, if more intelligible, to work less, and yet, by a skillful application of labour, and favourable conditions of exchange, to enable those now employed to labour and to consume, and those who are already, more or less consumers, to consume more. To increase the amount of all kinds of commodities in the country, and to enable every man to obtain a fair share of them, measured by his industry, his skill, his temperance, his economy, his perseverance, and his general prudence and good management. I disavow altogether any attempt to secure comfort to the idle, the intemperate, and the extravagant. No legislation can reach these.

It is objected to the use of machinery and to an extension of foreign trade, that, so far as we have had experience of them, they have not kept up wages.

Now, I have an impression that workmen in general can earn, by a day's labour, as much of any article, on which there is no "protective" duties, as they could thirty years ago. I believe, for instance, to take the article of clothing, that a labourer working with a spade, which costs half-a-crown, and has not been improved for centuries, and earning his two shillings or half-a-crown a day; or an operative cotton-spinner, earning his twenty to thirty shillings a week, on an improved machine, which costs two hundred and fifty pounds, can either of them earn, by a day's labour, as much or more clothing than they could thirty years ago.

Mark, Mr. Editor, I seek not to cram my nostrils down the throats of your readers. I ask every cotton-spinner, or day-labourer, to examine and calculate for himself, and deny my position if he can.

In many classes of factory hands—say card-room hands and pleasers—they can earn more clothing considerably—in some cases double and treble—than they could 30 years ago. If a family of six persons, for instance, required the factory labour of two individuals to clothe the whole family 30 years ago, I maintain that now such a family will require less than the labour of two individuals to clothe it. If this be so, who will assert that the working classes have been excluded from the benefits of improved machinery?

When labouring for food, another state of things arises. Food has been made scarce and dear by act of Parliament. A factory-labourer must produce from five to twenty-five times the quantity of manufactured cottons to procure the same quantity of food he got thirty years ago. In other words, a master cotton-spinner, or a master manufacturer, must sell so much greater a quantity of his produce to pay wages than he did thirty years ago. If those wages were paid in his produce—in kind—as in some instances agricultural labourers are, then I assert that there is no individual employed in the cotton trade who does not earn more than he could have done thirty years ago. Wages are only reduced when he is working for food, or other "protected" articles; and it is not only folly, but it is the grossest injustice as well as blindness, to abuse employers, and, at the same time, to maintain the laws which make food scarce and dear.

There is no absurdity I know of equal to that of working men, under the specious name of "protection"—which means robbery—advocating laws to make food scarce and dear. Horses kicking up their heels in the stable at a feed of corn, or donkeys braying with open mouth a denial to the offer of a bunch of hay, would be rational beings in comparison.

I repeat here, that I pay away as much of my productions in wages as any cotton-spinner did thirty years ago. If my workmen support a law which makes their wages lose their purchasing power, they do me an injustice when they blame me. They must thank their own folly in supporting such a law. The laws which regulate the distribution of wages and profits will not cease to operate because they allow their prejudices to overcome their judgment. They might as well complain that winter is cold or that grass is green, as lay blame on employers, because they cannot with the same labour earn as much food as formerly; themselves all the while doing all they can to prevent food being had at natural and not artificial prices.

I will here remark, that, in discussions about machinery, it might seem as if the machine itself dropped from heaven, without cost, at the beck of a grasping capitalist. I rather think our foundrymen, millwrights, engineers, machine makers, bricklayers, stonemasons, carpenters, slaters, plasterers, plumbers and glaziers, quarrymen, and the vast variety of workmen called into action before a single machine can be started, could tell a very different story.

Mr. Dixon says, employers would reap all the advantage of Free Trade, as they have, he says, the power to fix the rate of wages according to their will and pleasure. If so, I ask, why do not they reduce wages at this moment? To return to the argument. If any food were imported under a system of Free Trade, it must either be paid for, or else the foreigner would give it us for nothing. If paid for at all, it must be paid for in manufactures, or else in gold, purchased by manufactures; no matter which. In either case, more labour would be required to produce these manufactures.

It remains for Mr. Dixon to show how this increased demand for labour would tend to enable the employer to reduce wages. If improved machinery be introduced, the labourer himself partakes of the advantage of the cheaper manufactures produced by it. Of this advantage no one can deprive him. If he buys his manufactures cheaper, he has so much more to spare to purchase articles of furniture, or other luxuries. If he has his food cheaper by Free Trade, and his clothes cheaper by improved machinery, and his wages kept up to their present rate, or even raised (as I maintain they would be, in spite of the admitted selfishness of employers), then I am at a loss to conceive how he could fail to have his condition improved.

But Mr. Dixon repeats, all this is of no use. Cheaper food will do you no good, except you raise it off your own land. By the same rule, every one should make his own shoes; he should be his own tailor and baker, and butcher. I imagine, that if he has cheap food and cheap clothing, it is of little importance whether he produces these articles himself, or exchanges the produce of his own labour for them.

I will suppose, for the sake of argument, that a thousand families are taken from our population, and ten acres of land each given to them rent-free, then, I maintain, that our factory operatives, where good machinery was used, and with Free Trade, would have a greater command of the comforts and necessities of life; they would be better fed, and better lodged, and better clothed, and with fewer hours of labour, than these thousand families.

I should be glad to see this disputed; and, if I make out my case, then it settles the main question, namely, whether it is the interest of the operatives to join the Free Traders, or to take the advice of Mr. Dixon, and agitate for the destruction of machinery and of the factory system, the maintenance, under pretence of "protection," of the Corn Laws, the sugar duties, and all other monopolies; the abolition of foreign trade; the distribution of the land in lots of ten acres a piece, and a minimum rate of wages of 15s. a week.

I am, Sir, yours very respectfully,

A BOLTON COTTON-SPINNER.

Bolton, Feb. 26, 1844.

P.S. Objectors are requested to keep to the question, namely, the influence of Free Trade upon the condition of labourers. If disposed to abuse Free-Traders or Free Trade, machinery, employers, shopkeepers, capitalists, new poor-laws, Whigs, or what not, I specially request this may be done in a separate letter, and printed separately; so that we shall not be compelled to wade through it to get at any arguments which may be offered.

CONSERVATISM.—There is a noble conservatism as well as an ignoble. Would to Heaven, for the sake of conservatism itself, the noble alone were left, and the ignoble, by some kind, severe hand, were ruthlessly lopped away, forbidden ever more to show itself! For it is the right and noble alone that will have the victory in the struggle; the rest is wholly an obstruction,—a postponement, and fearful imperilment of victory.—Orville's Past and Present.

Alfred H. Helywell, Nottingham, Liverpool,
2nd
110
Glasgow, Fourth Remittance.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A VOICE FROM AMERICA.

Boston, U.S.A., Jan. 30, 1844.

DEAR SIR,—The Britannia, just arrived, has brought me several numbers of the LEAGUE, and I have enjoyed the high satisfaction of reading their contents, and observing with what overwhelming power the friends of Free Trade are advancing towards the consummation of the great and glorious object they have in view, and for which they are struggling so ardently and successfully. We are utterly surprised, on this side the water, at the gigantic strides which you seem to be making towards the abolition of the Corn Laws. The election of Mr. Pattison, for London, filled us with the greatest astonishment.

We have from the first rather desired than hoped for your success, but now we confidently expect that the glorious principles of Free Trade will be first embraced by Great Britain. Indeed, our national jealousy almost begins to be excited, for it would certainly be more agreeable to us that our own country should have the high honour of first illustrating the truly humane and Christian principles of Free Trade. But we cannot wish you to wait our tardy movement, nor ought we to grudge you the honour of so glorious a triumph, since it will not be obtained without a most arduous and heroic struggle.

Every enlightened friend of humanity in this country rejoices at the progress of the great Anti-Corn-Law movement. I say, every enlightened friend of humanity, for it is, unfortunately, but too true that we have multitudes in this country who are so blinded by ignorance and prejudice—so deceived and deluded by designing and interested monopolists—as not to perceive the great truth, that Free Trade must be the interest of every nation on earth. The great mass of the people in the United States do, however, cordially sympathize with you in your movement, and rejoice at every indication of your triumph.

My own interest in your operations is not a little enhanced by the acquaintance I have made with your country and countrymen, during the past year, while travelling through the length and breadth of the United Kingdom. I have seen your people; I have examined into the causes of their miseries; and believing, as I do, that the Corn Laws are one of the chief instruments of their oppressions, and that the abolition of them is one of the first and necessary steps towards their deliverance, I do look with the most intense anxiety upon all efforts made for that object.

How fallacious the idea that the people of England must necessarily starve! That the population is so dense that it cannot be fed! That the industry of England cannot produce bread enough for the people of England! How preposterous, I say is all this, and yet I often heard these assertions while travelling in your country. Out upon such libels on the most industrious and hard-toiling people on the face of the earth! There is not one word of truth in all this. The industry of the United Kingdom does produce enough, or rather perhaps I should say, would produce enough, if let alone by her rulers, to feed, clothe, educate, and make happy every man, woman, and child in the nation. Why, Sir, you can produce corn as cheap in Lancashire, Yorkshire, or Staffordshire, as we can in Ohio, Illinois, or Tennessee. You would not, indeed, produce it by the same process, but if there were that freedom of intercourse between the two countries which the repeal of your Corn Laws would at once bring about, you would get your corn as cheap and as plentiful by your manufacturing as we do by our agricultural industry. Is it not so? If you remove your restrictions on our provisions, you need not fear we shall long keep up our restrictions upon your manufactures. We never should have had a protective tariff in the United States had you admitted our corn, &c., free of duty. Nothing is more certain than this. Every man in America who understands the subject, knows that it was the argument that "Great Britain will not take our bread stuffs, therefore we ought not to take her manufactures;" that, alone, induced the people of the United States to introduce the odious system of commercial restrictions into their legislation. We were all averse to every thing of the kind. Now we have built up artificial interests, and created monopolies, and consequently shall have a struggle to get rid of them; but such is the real omnipotence of the people here, that they need only to see their true interests as they would be presented by the repeal of the British Corn Laws, to induce them at once to raise aloft the banner of Free Trade, and "open every port to every product."

Go on then, my dear Sir, with the utmost confidence that we shall reciprocate any and all liberal movements on your side the Atlantic. We are ripe for it, and shall do it.

I am surprised, and I will say, somewhat alarmed, at the herculean labours of Messrs. Cobden and Bright. I say alarmed, for I greatly fear that such unremitting efforts will destroy their health, and impair those energies which are so essential at the present exigency to the advancement of the cause. I had opportunity several times, while in England, to hear them speak, and know the fervour and zeal with which, under all circumstances, however adverse and dangerous, they advocate the rights of the people. I know their devotion to the work, and I do hope that their friends, and the friends of humanity in whose cause they are labouring, will recollect that they are men, and subject to the same physiological laws as other human beings, and that these laws cannot be violated with impunity. I wish my friends Cobden and Bright, yourself, and all others engaged in this glorious League, should live long and enjoy good health, so that you may continue to be a terror to all monopolists, the joy and rejoicing of the poor and oppressed, and the admiration and praise of the truly liberal and philanthropic throughout the world.

I have the honour to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

George Wilson, Esq.,
Chairman Anti-Corn-Law League, Manchester.

TEA DUTIES.

To the EDITOR of the LEAGUE.

SIR,—Perhaps at no period in the history of Great Britain have the duties of the Government been more onerous than at the present moment.

The experience of the last few years has disclosed an amount of destitution almost without a parallel, and altogether irreconcilable with the high state of civilization and extended commerce of the country, unless that commerce has been conducted on erroneous principles.

For the present there appears returning prosperity; but who can calculate on its being permanent? It is absolutely necessary that we have food for the inhabitants; but it is nearly equally so, that we have employment as the means of purchasing food. With a population increasing at the rate of 300,000 per annum, who can venture to predict, that three years hence, when we will have nearly a million more hands seeking employment, such will be had, or that we may not then have the recurrence of a similar convulsion to the one we have now passed?

There are two ways in which employment may be obtained: the one in the finding new markets for our manufactures, and the other in allowing a full development to those we already have. The former we have just accomplished in the opening of the five new ports in China; and in the latter I mean to show, that the amount of duty levied on tea enters largely into the question, and that, in point of fact, the extension of our trade with that country will mainly depend on the quantity of tea that can be consumed here.

The article of tea is in almost universal consumption, and it is only limited by the ability to consume. Tea is not now a monopoly, the whole tax beyond the value in the market of the world being paid into the exchequer; but in one sense, if the tax is exorbitantly high, it is very nearly the same thing to the people—it places it beyond their reach. The present duty is 2s. 2d. per lb., which is 100 per cent. on all good qualities, and 150 to 200 per cent. on all the middling and lower kinds. During the latter part of the East India Company's monopoly the duty was exactly 100 per cent., which bore equally on all sorts; but since the opening of the trade this was commuted to 2s. 1d. per lb., which, with 5 per cent., is the present amount. 2s. 1d. was fixed, as being a fair average; but since that period tea has fallen considerably in price, and it is now out of proportion to the value, and a much higher per centage than was originally intended.

The Government have just obtained a most advantageous treaty with China, in the admission of our ships and manufactures into that extensive region on extremely moderate terms. They have been asked by our merchants, on the principle of reciprocity on which they lay so much stress, to respond to that treaty by admitting all kinds of tea at 1s. per lb.; and I trust they will do so. They have now an overflowing exchequer, and, if ever, now is the time to make a grand experiment on the consuming powers of the people, by the admission of the great staple articles at so low a rate of duty as to give scope to vast consumption,—thereby increasing the comforts of the population, extending the demand for our manufactures, increasing the employment of the operatives, and enlarging the quantity of the exchangeable commodity of the merchant.

Were the duty reduced to 1s. per lb., there cannot be a doubt the consumption would be greatly increased. The same amount of money expended would of itself purchase one-fourth more quantity; besides, it would place it within the range of a lower grade, and, of course, more numerous body of consumers.

The present consumption is 40,000,000 lbs. for Great Britain and Ireland, or about 1½ lb. per head per annum. The allowance by families to their female servants is two ounces per week, or 6½ lbs. each per annum; and this quantity is much below what persons in comfortable circumstances consume; and certainly there is no reason to suppose that the consumption of the majority would not amount to this were it only within their reach. Supposing only one half of the population were enabled to consume in the proportion of 6½ lbs. each, this would amount to no less a quantity than 84,500,000 lbs. per annum, or 4½ millions lbs. beyond doubling the present quantity, and at once paying a revenue fully equal to the duty of 2s. 2d. per lb.

The reduction in the price of tea is not the only advantage to the consumer; this is immediately followed by an increased demand for his labour. The cost of this extra quantity of tea may be estimated at about three millions sterling, which must be paid for by an export of our manufactures to that amount; and it is not too much to suppose that the money put into circulation in the production of these manufactures would give a stimulus to the home trade to an almost equal amount, and thus benefit, in no small degree, the agriculturists,—the parties most opposed to change. Who can tell the amount of benefit to the community of the productive employment of a single individual? Who can tell the effect in all its ramifications of his earnings put again into circulation, and accumulating as they ascend higher and higher in the scale, until they reach the pocket of the peer.

To carry 44,500,000 lbs. more tea would require a fleet of nearly 100 ships, which, at average freights, would yield an income of £500,000, and give employment to 2000 seamen, besides calling into activity a vast amount of profitable labour, in a great variety of forms.

The time has gone by when the commerce of the country is to be viewed merely as a medium for taxation. The question must now be, how light can the duties be made? And if a given amount is to be raised by any article, the rate must be so low as scarcely to interfere with the free current of trade, or prevent its greatest possible expansion; to abstract as little as possible from the earnings of the great body of the people, thereby enabling them to consume not only the productions of this but of every other country.

There is another most important point in connexion with the reduction of the duty on tea, the effect that it will have on the consumption of sugar. If the increase in tea be 44,500,000 lbs., it must necessarily be followed by an increased consumption of sugar of 100,000 tons, the proportions being 5 lbs. to 1 lb.; and the additional revenue on this extra quantity alone would amount to £2,500,000 sterling at the present rate of duty.

March 9, 1844.

A FREE-TRADER.

Fordingbridge, 9th of 3rd mo., 1844.

RESPECTED FRIEND,—In presenting to the Council of the League our collections from Fordingbridge, for the use of their fund, I may congratulate them on the amount being more than three times that subscribed last year. Thanks to our Anti-League friends for much of our success; they are capital auxiliaries in stirring up those who have hitherto thought but little on the subject; if people can only be induced to think, they must in time be Birmingham, Fourth Remittance.

Glasgow, Fourth Remittance.

Liverpool, Fourth Remittance.

Nottingham, Fifth Remittance.

Holywell, Flintshire.

| | | | |
|--|-----|----|----|
| J. Birch, Temperance Coffee-house, Price-st. | 41 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Blows, Bartholomew-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Wm. Middlemore, Holloway Head | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Herbert Hodson, Digbeth | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Joseph Gillott's workmen | 2 | 10 | 0 |
| B. H. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| John Buckley, Glib-beath | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| J. F. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Burgess of St. George | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Workpeople of J. B. Nettlesford | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A Friend | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Workmen of J. Tongue, Parade | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mr. Stokes, Baskerville-house, Bread-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mr. Wilmot, Bread-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| G. H. Simpson, Camden-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Workpeople of Joseph Rawlings, Deritend | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| J. B. Rodway, Edgbaston-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Edward Williams | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Aaron and Son | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A. Vitta | 1 | 9 | 6 |
| Amount collected by E. V. Blyth | 1 | 5 | 0 |
| Workpeople of John Rubery | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Bodington, cornfactor, Warston-lane | 2 | 9 | 0 |
| Friends to the Repeal of the Corn Laws, per Mr. Spicer, Snowhill | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Workpeople of Souter and Son, Gt. Russell-st. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. J. Gibson, 19, Weaman-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| B. Beasley and Son, 21, Ludgate-hill | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Charles Wright, 27, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Richard Edmonds, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Mr. Wilkins, Hockley-hill | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Wright, Balsall Heath-road | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Thomas Tye, 33, Meriden-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Farmer, 18, Oxford-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Mackay, Coventry-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Friend | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Solomon Sacks, Bordesley-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Joseph Oakes, Oxford-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| League Incog. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| X. Y. Z. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Mr. Woller, Edgbaston-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Pereira, Worcester-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| An Old Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Charles James, at Mr. Ault's, Broad-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A Friend | 1 | 2 | 4 |
| Mr. Harrison's Workpeople, Fisher-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| James Barlow, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Barlow, jun. do. | 3 | 12 | 3 |
| James Barlow's Workpeople | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Gilman, Gosta-green | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Cosens, Moland-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| R. B. Cooper, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Mr. Chadnor, Islington-row | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Cresswell, do. | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| Mrs. Hollyman, Islington | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Mr. Turton, Broad-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Mr. Durning, Eagle Foundry | 0 | 11 | 9 |
| Small sums | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mr. Sims, Little Hampton-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George Haden, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| G. Farmer, Little Hampton-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend to the Cause | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Mr. Hickman, William-street North | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| A Friend | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| Smith and Kemp's Workmen, Brearley-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Smith, Buckingham-street | 0 | 11 | 4 |
| Mr. Turley's Workpeople, Hospital-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Mr. Stamp, Sumner-lane | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Mr. Willmore, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Taylor, do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Mr. Bullock, Cleveland-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Mr. Mills, Howard-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Spicer, Snow-hill | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thomas Waddleton, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Waddleton, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Joseph Fish, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Sam. Reading, Great Hampton-street | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Small sums | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Wm. Morgan, solicitor, Waterloo-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Whyte, 132, Tringate | 100 | 0 | 0 |
| James Lumden, Queen-street (Lord Provost) | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Steel, 25, Thistle-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Rev. W. Auld, Tollcross | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| King and Co., Camlachie | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexr. Frew, Port Dundas, (collected by) | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Tallaway, 10, George-street | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| Wm. Carawell, jun., 26, George-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Guild, distiller, Camlachie | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Hugh Aitken, dyer, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Robt. Aitken, do., do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Colin Frame, Queen-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Lawson, Glassford-street | 0 | 15 | 0 |
| J. H. McFarlane, distiller, Port Dundas | 0 | 4 | 0 |
| Workers of Lapraik Reid and Co., E. Milton-street, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Buchanan and Cairns, Wilton-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William Watson, 3, Brandon-place | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Gibson, Melrose-street | 3 | 3 | 0 |
| James Hedderwick and Son, St. Enoch-square | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| A. and J. Walker, Mile-end, the workers of | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Stewart, 7, Dalmarnock-road | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Thomson, 82, Miller-street | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| T. and D. Wilson, 145, Ingram-street | 0 | 12 | 6 |
| Workers of James Buchanan and Co., coach-builders, Union-street | 6 | 8 | 10 |
| Workers of Johnson, Galbraith, and Co. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Workers of M. McFarlane and Co., distillers, Port Dundas | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Andrew Hamilton, miller, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A. G. | 0 | 4 | 7 |
| Small sums | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| Huddersfield, { John and Edward Dent | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| 11th Remittance, { Floyd and Booth | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Malton, { Preston Cobb | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| 2nd Remittance, { John Wainwright, surgeon-dentist | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| { An Enemy to Monopoly | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| { John Hardcastle, tenant-farmer | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| { Walter Taylor | 0 | 8 | 6 |
| Watson, Brothers, and Co., 22, Fenwick-street | 100 | 0 | 0 |
| Christopher Cooper, 128, Richmond-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Mrs. Cooper, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Morecroft, 3, Clayton-square | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. Morecroft, Rockferry, Cheshire | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| Miss Louisa Morecroft, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William Geddes, Temple-place | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| H. W. | 25 | 0 | 0 |
| John Blaylock, Tranmere, Cheshire | 0 | 2 | 4 |
| Peter Harris, 20, Clarence-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| George Kellar, 83, Grafton-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Stephenson, 4, Limekiln-lane | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| E. R. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Joseph Nieburg, St. Mary's-place | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Jonathan Burton, Carrington, near | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Hinton, Barker-gate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Herbert, St. Mary-gate | 10 | 10 | 0 |
| John Keely and Son, Orchard-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| T. and W. Hill, Byard-lane | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| Luke Hardy, Derby-road | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Hall, Lister-gate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Lloyd, Hafod, near Mold | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Edward H. Williamson, Greenfield | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George P. Noakell, Flint | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| J. F. Buckley, Walwen | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Lawrence | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Alexander Leask, 46, High-street, Montrose | 1 | 0 | 0 | brought to see the sad effects of "monopoly" on the welfare of the community.

Low wages and want of employment in the agricultural districts form a part of the evils arising out of this selfish system.

The Game Laws form another part, which cannot well be modified before a repeal of the Corn Laws; the destruction caused by game alone, with its appendages to preserve it, might be estimated at an amount equal to what it costs the country in foreign importations of corn. What is it prevents leases and other fair adjustments between landlord and tenant, but these acts of Parliament. What hinders the due cultivation of the land and its progressive improvement but that delusive dependence on mis-called "protection."

Perhaps the most painful part of monopoly to parents (farmers as well as others) are the difficulties it throws in the way of settling their children in business. Let every parent make his child acquainted with the grand impediment to his getting forward in life; teach him that monopoly cripples the resources of native industry—that there would be more than room enough for all, were it not for unjust laws to make a few rich at the expense and impoverishment of the many; that monopoly is stationary whilst the population progresses, consequently, that all born beyond a limited number must be consigned to pauperism. Let us impress these truths on the minds of our offspring, and lead them to subscribe to the League; and let them know that this is a benevolent institution formed to remove these appalling evils. I am not enforcing this advice without setting the example. I consider our children would do better without an inheritance with Free Trade, than with riches and the present system of monopoly. It is well worthy of remark, that even the monopolist, with all his possessions, would do vastly better if the energies of the nation were allowed full development. He is like "the dog in the manger," who would neither eat the hay himself nor suffer the ox to eat it.

With my best wishes for the League's prosperity,

I remain respectfully, &c.,

G. Wilson.

JONAH NEAVE.

We have received the following letter from an Essex farmer occupying above a thousand acres of land, enclosing a contribution to the fund of the League.

"To the EDITOR of the LEAGUE.

"SIR,—I have read with feelings of pity and sorrow the reports of the meetings of tenant-farmers in this county, to form what they call an "Agricultural Protection Society." Pity, because it is distressing to find men whom I believe mean well so led away by their prejudices; sorrow, because it is the means of creating and increasing a party spirit, and of disturbing instead of appeasing the already troubled waters. I sincerely wish they could be brought to reason upon the subject—to take a dispassionate view of the case: surely it would well become the goodwisher of his country to read and to think upon a matter of such serious import—one which, advancing with such rapid strides, must ere long occupy every one's thoughts. I, Sir, am a tenant-farmer; all that I possess, all that I hope for, is bound up in land. When first the subject of the Corn Laws engaged my attention, I was so wedded to agriculture that it was some time before I could bring myself to believe that they were not a "protection" to the interest; yet every succeeding day has convinced me they are exactly the reverse, and I am now thoroughly persuaded that, unless they are speedily repealed, agriculture, as well as every other pursuit, will sink into nothing: in fact, that we shall eventually become a cypher among nations.

"I much fear that many of my brother farmers are led away by their superiors; it more behoves them to look deeper into the facts of the case, and ascertain whose interests they are most promoting by their mad career; it has long been my opinion that we are the tools of a more wary class. To sum up all, Mr. Editor, my purpose is to say that the doings (?) of one portion has induced another portion of the Essex tenantry to join the League (myself among the number), and we most heartily wish you speedy success in your arduous undertaking.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"HENRY ST. JOHN JOYNER.
"Chadwell-place."

TO THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF HAREWOOD,
PRESIDENT OF THE YORKSHIRE SOCIETY

For Keeping up the Price of Bread and the Rent of Land.

MY LORD,—At the meeting of landowners and farmers over which you presided at York on Thursday week, your lordship and most of the other speakers brought grave and heavy charges against the Anti-Corn-Law League. As an humble member of that League, I undertake to prove that these charges are untrue. I am able to show that your assertions are unwarranted, your arguments false, your fears exaggerated, and the cause you undertake to defend incompatible with the general and permanent interests of the nation. I can show, on the other hand, that the principles and objects of the Anti-Corn-Law League are just, benevolent, and patriotic.

At the above meeting an association was formed which you modestly designate "The Yorkshire Protective Committee for the Defence of British Industry." But I appeal to common sense whether it would not have been more candid to take the title which I have put at the head of this letter, and to call yourselves "The Yorkshire Society for keeping up the Price of Bread and the Rent of Land." It is true, this does not sound quite so disinterested and public spirited, especially on the part of gentlemen nearly every one of whom has, or believes he has, a pecuniary interest in dear corn and high rents. But it is impossible to read the proceedings at that meeting, and not to see that the object, first, last, and midst, with the speakers was, to keep bread at a high and artificial price in this country.

Now, as bread is the life's blood of "industry," I ask if it is rational to talk of "protecting and defending British industry" by making bread scarce and dear? The first and great object of all industry is to obtain bread; and surely it is the oddest way possible of "defending industry" to raise the price and stint the quantity of that indispensable article! You might with some show of reason allege that the industry of the corn-growers would be "defended" by making corn dear, though this would not, I conceive, be true either of the farmers or their labourers, at least in the long run; but, admitting that it were, still the corn-growers must be much more numerous than the corn-eaters, and of course the "industry" of the corn-eaters cannot be "defended" by keeping the price of corn unnaturally and unnecessarily high.

Let us not be deluded by words. Men often talk of the "price" of corn; but the only thing that is of the slightest consequence to the labourer is the quantity he can obtain by his labour. The larger the quantity, the better he is off; the less the quantity, the worse he is off. Now, your society sets about to "protect" and "defend industry," by making corn scarce in the country! For this is the only conceivable end of the Corn Laws. They shut out foreign corn, and they do it on the express ground that it is cheaper than our own, that is, it could be obtained with less labour. No man can pretend to deny this. But this shutting out of cheap corn has necessarily the effect of diminishing the quantity in the country, and, by so doing, it raises the price. It makes the labourer's food scarce and dear. He must either eat less bread, or he must buy it with more labour than would be necessary if there were no Corn Laws. Is it not, then, a palpable delusion to call your society one "for the defence of British industry?" Ought you not rather to say that it is a society to keep up prices and rents, at the expense of industry?

It is common, my lord, for the speakers at Pro-Corn-Law meetings to talk of the principles of Free Trade as "fallacies," as "delusions;" and that wise gentleman, the Earl of Tyrconnel, said at the York meeting:—

"Gentlemen, of all delusions, I look upon that of Free Trade as the greatest delusion that was ever attempted to be palmed upon our country." (Hear.)

Permit me, then, very briefly, and very plainly, to state what the principles of Free Trade really are, and then to appeal to the common sense of my readers, agricultural or manufacturing, whether those principles are either "delusive" or "fallacious."

"Free Trade" means perfect freedom for every kind of industry; and it includes liberty to every man to employ his money or his labour in the way that he himself thinks most advantageous, and to buy and sell wherever he can do so with the greatest profit.

This freedom is man's natural right. Of course, it ought not to be invaded in society, unless such invasion can be shown to be necessary for the general good of the community. But the general good of a community requires that its individual members should exercise their natural right of choosing their own occupations, and carrying them on where they please,—at home or abroad, by land or by sea, in tilling the earth, or making cloth, or getting metals, or buying and selling what others have made, or in whatever way each man finds best suited to his particular talent, taste, or means. It is obvious that this must be the general rule and practice in every community. Governments could not, if they would, take upon them to tell every man what occupation he should follow, or where he should settle, or how he should employ his money, or whom he should serve. And it would be the height of folly for them to do it if they could: because the self-interest of each individual is at once his strongest stimulus to exertion, and his surest guide in the search for profit or subsistence. Unless we could find a minister who has several millions of eyes, and an omniscient acquaintance with all the men and all the circumstances of the country which he governs, it would be preposterous to take from the individual subjects of that country the right of using their own limbs, under the guidance of their own reason, for the providing of their own subsistence.

This will not be denied. It is too plain for an instant's doubt. Neither will it be denied that, inasmuch as a nation is made up of individuals, the prosperity of those individuals makes up the prosperity of the nation. The richer and more comfortable are the individual families, the richer and happier is the nation.

These things are perfectly indisputable. But they are as practically important as they are indisputable. For we have here the rule of national policy. And upon this rule all Governments do and must act in 999 out of 1000 cases. This rule of Freedom of Industry—which contains in it, when practically applied, an admirable self-regulating and self-adjusting principle—determines how many men shall engage in each particular employment, so as to keep the wants of the community duly supplied. It is this which regulates the supply of food, of clothing, of commodities of every kind, and the number of tradesmen and labourers of every class, for each village, town, city, and county of the entire kingdom.

Just imagine the wild confusion, the ruin and starvation, that would ensue, if Government should take upon it to settle these things, instead of leaving them to settle themselves under the guidance of individual instinct and self-interest. Suppose Sir Robert Peel or Mr. Gladstone were to prescribe how many acres of your estate should be sown with wheat, oats, or turnips,—how many butchers there should be in Leeds,—how many bakers in York,—how many mills in the West Riding,—how many grocers in London,—how many ships should sail from Liverpool or Hull,—how many coal-pits should be worked in Staffordshire,—how many pairs of stockings should be made at Nottingham,—how many barristers there should be in Westminster Hall,—how many physicians and surgeons should pass the Colleges,—what should be the rates of wages and prices and profits in all these employments,—if in these and like matters Government should undertake to dictate, is it not certain that the result would be to produce a mass of ridiculous blunders, and to make confusion hopelessly confounded?

Well, then, we see that the principle of freedom of industry and freedom of trade regulates the endlessly diversified affairs of the millions of our population. It regulates them as infallibly as Providence itself; because it is the wise and beautiful law of nature, that men, in promoting (without compulsion or dictation) their own interests, promote the interests of the community,—or, as the poet expresses it, that "self-love and social are the same." We see that this rule of freedom applies to all the operations of industry, small and great, simple and complicated, near and remote; it resembles the law of gravitation, which keeps atoms and worlds alike in their places.

I dwell upon this principle of Free Industry or Free Trade—for they are the same thing—because if it were generally understood, in its grandeur, its excellence, and its universal applicability, we should never hear such egregious folly as that in the sentence above quoted from the speech of Lord Tyrconnel. It is from the want of a distinct perception of the infallibility and omnipotence (so to speak) of this law of nature that statesmen have presumed to substitute for it the dictates of their own short-sighted and erring judgments—that they have undertaken to restrict commerce, prohibit exchange, and force particular kinds of employment.

There are many, indeed, who admit the rule, but take upon them to make exceptions to it wherever their own particular interest seems to require it. In so doing, however, if they promote their immediate interest, they seldom or never promote their permanent interest; and, if they benefit the few, they invariably do it at the expense of the many. One man asks Government to "protect" corn; another, to protect manufactured goods; another, to protect cattle; another, to protect sugar; another, to protect iron or copper; another, to protect ships; and each one of them by the "protection" which he himself gets injures all the rest! Common justice requires that if one is "protected," all should be "protected;" but common sense shows us, that where all are "protected," none are protected. The comparative state of each is just the same as it would have been if "protection" had never been thought of; but all are really and alike injured by such a monstrous system of mutual shackles and balanced burdens.

The claims of individual interests to "protection" are just as irreconcilable with the general good as if individual farmers should pray for and could obtain an unfair proportion of the sunshine or the showers. If the thing were practicable, is it not clear that the arrangement which frustrated the one field would starve the next? And are we not certain that, after all, the man who thus attempted to monopolize the favours of Providence would manage the rain and sunshine ill, and would have just such crops as his greedily folly deserved?

The principles of freedom apply just as much to foreign trade as to home trade. Commerce distributes over the globe the productions which are peculiar to certain climates, soils, or districts, and enables each nation, by exchanging its own particular products for foreign commodities, to obtain all that it requires. One country has peculiar natural advantages for producing corn, another for timber, another for iron, another for clothing, another for wine, and another for sugar. It is the interest of each to produce the commodity for which nature has designed it, and to barter that commodity with other nations for the articles in which they respectively excel. For example, nature has given to the southern states of North America peculiar advantages for growing cotton, and to England peculiar advantages for manufacturing it. The interest of each country is to obey the dictates of nature; by doing so, England obtains her cotton-wool much cheaper than if she grew it herself (even if her climate would grow it at all), and America obtains her prints and muslins cheaper than if she manufactured them herself. The man would be a dolt who should say that England ought to grow her own cotton, or Georgia and Alabama to manufacture their own clothing. In the same way Portugal is adapted by nature for producing wines, and England for manufacturing woollens; the exchange is mutually advantageous; and every man feels that the Portuguese Government is as short-sighted in attempting to force manufactures, as the English Government would be if it were to force the growth of wines.

A particular country may be adapted for producing a dozen or a hundred different articles, and yet it may not be adapted for a dozen or a hundred other articles which are equally desirable for its inhabitants. What then? Will not Free Trade best determine what articles the country should produce, and what articles it should import? Can a government tell this so well as individual producers, consumers, and dealers? Of this we may be certain—and I wish the landlords understood the truth, simple and self-evident as it is—a country will import nothing that it can produce as good and as cheap at home. Your lordship will not send to London for game or garden stuff, which you have in abundance at your doors; but you will get your oranges from the Azores, rather than grow them in your own hothouse. And ought not a nation to act on the same common-sense principle? And will it not so act, if you let it alone?

Those who talk of "protecting domestic industry" forget that you can import nothing without paying for it by the produce of domestic industry. Foreigners do not give us their commodities—they sell them for an equivalent. The only question for us is, whether it costs us less money and labour to produce the equivalent, or to produce at home the commodity which we purchase by means of it. If we find it cheaper to import, we ought to import; if cheaper to produce at home, we ought to produce at home. To act on any other principle is to outrage common sense, and to throw away our money and labour.

I am persuaded, my lord, neither you nor any of the speakers at the York meeting would venture to dispute any of the above positions or arguments. You would admit them as incontrovertible: but when we come practically to apply them, you seek out for shifts and pretences to escape.

Now, these incontrovertible principles are precisely the principles of the Anti-Corn-Law League, neither more nor less. They ask nothing but freedom for industry. They want no favour or "protection," no restrictions or fetters. They would cheerfully grant to others all they ask for themselves. Their cause is based on common sense and common justice. They are favourable to commerce, which enriches the nation. They are equally favourable to domestic industry, by allowing it to run in those channels which experience shows to be the most productive. And they do not hesitate, as you do, to apply principles which are undoubtedly true to practice. They have the firmest possible conviction that the carrying out of their principles would conduce to the highest and the permanent prosperity of the nation, and moreover that their adoption is indispensable to prevent evils of the greatest magnitude.

With these enlarged views, and these just and patriotic objects, the Anti-Corn-Law League has claims on the support of every enlightened and good man. It is superior to your censure, and may despise your calumny. Yet, my lord, you are represented in the Yorkshire Gazette—I would fain hope falsely—to have not only talked of "the ruinous and unconstitutional proceedings of the Anti-Corn-Law League," but to have uttered the following incredible slander. You are reported to have said,—

"There are other views in this Anti-Corn-Law League agitation than those which meet the eye of the public. What happened to a farmer the other day, in Lincolnshire or Norfolk, I forget which? He attended a meeting, and openly stated his opinions against the Anti-Corn-Law League, which every Englishman has a right to do, when his crops and his stacks were burnt that night! No man in his senses can doubt the intentions of the Anti-Corn-Law League!"

Now, my lord, if this be a correct report of your speech (which I hope it is not), I tell your lordship that a fouler and more disgraceful calumny was never uttered. If this report be correct, you have dared to charge the League with encouraging midnight burnings! You have dared to launch this hideous slander against a body whose only crime is that they wish industry to be free, and food to be abundant and cheap! But it is impossible that the Gazette should have reported you correctly. It is quite incredible that you should have cast such a charge, where you were so ignorant of the circumstances as not even to know whether the alleged fact took place in Lincolnshire or Norfolk! Such a wild and wanton outrage on probability and on decency is beyond belief. On the other hand, if you should let the report of your speech pass uncontradicted, many will certainly suppose that the report of the Gazette was correct. I hope you will do yourself the justice to disavow it.

The Anti-Corn-Law League, my lord, has no object on earth but obtaining the repeal of laws which the greatest statesmen, the wealthiest and most enlightened landowners, and the most experienced merchants have declared to be false in principle and mischievous in practice. Among these I may mention Lord Grenville, the Marquis Wellesley, Mr. Huskisson, Earl Spencer, the Earl of Leicester, Earl Fitzwilliam, the Marquis of Westminster, Earl Duane, Mr. Alexander Baring (in his better days), and Mr. Samuel Jones Loyd. You are also perfectly aware that even Sir Robert Peel and Mr. Gladstone, with all their Conservative and Agricultural connexions, are in principle Free-Traders, as was shown over and over again in the debates on the tariff. The Prime Minister made it his boast that he should render provisions cheaper; and he told the people that this would enable them to pay their taxes better, and even to bear the new burden of the income tax. Is it, then, a crime in the Anti-Corn-Law League to hold the very same principles, and to seek the very same objects, as the head of the Government, with much greater consistency? They wish to make provisions cheaper, and especially bread, the staff of life; they wish to see the nation better fed; they wish to enable it to sustain its burdens more easily. They believe that the supply of food lies at the foundation of the national prosperity. They see that the Corn Laws have placed its trade and industry in a false position, which the rapid growth of the population on our limited soil is every day making more dangerous. They deride the outrageous absurdity of supposing that, by the free admission of foreign corn, "half the land of this country would be thrown out of cultivation,"—an absurdity of which your lordship was guilty in your speech at York,—knowing that nature has placed insuperable bars to the importation from distant countries of any considerable proportion of the food required for 27,000,000 of people. But what they want is, that the people should possess all the advantages which nature would confer upon them, being assured that thus the prosperity of the nation would be carried to the highest point of which it is capable.

I sum up what I have said on the elementary principles of this great question in the following propositions:—

1st. Domestic industry obtains its largest and best reward when it is permitted to exert itself in whatever channel, whether of agriculture or commerce, it finds to be the most profitable.

2nd. We can import nothing from abroad, without paying for it by Domestic industry.

3rd. Abundant and cheap food is the greatest of all material blessings to the people.

4th. The Corn Laws, by violating freedom of industry, and amongst the people, and that a great and oppressive evil is being done to the country,—an evil which grows with the growth of the population.

It is my intention to send a letter to examine and refute the arguments of Lord Eversham, Mr. Bethell, Mr. John Hand, Mr. Milnes, and other speakers at the York meeting.

I have the honour to be, my Lord,
Your lordship's most obedient servant,
EDWARD BAINES, JUN.

Lancashire Mercury Office, March 2, 1844.

A WEEK IN WINDSOR FOREST.

BY ADAM BROWN.

No. II.—Prince Albert's Farm continued.

From what I heard said by some of the natives of the forest relative to the undue number of Scotchmen—gardeners, grooms, farriers, and others—filling offices up to the Master of the Household and the Master of the Horse, both in the royal establishment and in the service of noblemen and gentry in the neighbourhood, I expected to find that the two farms of his Royal Highness would be managed by Scotchmen. Such was not the case: both were Englishmen; one of them a native of Norfolk. But the number of Scotchmen and other strangers employed about Windsor is certainly deserving of remark. So also is the bitterness which distinguishes the conversation of the native workmen in reference to those strangers. At first I attributed it to the ignorance and prejudice of the individual who spoke to me; but from subsequent experience, among various labourers and mechanics, I found the sentiment of opposition to strangers and exclusive "protection to native industry," a very general one. It reminded me of the evidence of a witness examined before the parliamentary committee on the payment of wages two years ago. His name was Oldfield. He came from Chorley, in Lancashire, and was examined relative to Mr. Cobden's printworks.

Question 1775. (By Mr. Ferrand.) "Is not Mr. Cobden considered one of the best masters in that part of the country?"—
"Yes, he is."

Question 1776. "And he pays his workpeople in money?"—
"Yes, he does. The only thing I have heard against Mr. Cobden is, that he employs too many Scotchmen: that is the chief complaint in our neighbourhood."

Mr. Cobden, being in principle a Free-Trader, doubtless procures his workmen from any part of the kingdom, or perhaps from any other kingdom, where he can get the most useful supply. So do those who manage her Majesty's establishment. But if the inhabitants of that part of Berkshire in which Windsor stands, and of the parts of Bucks, Middlesex, and Surrey adjoining, returned a majority of the members of Parliament, or themselves formed that majority, they would pass a law to protect themselves from the employment of Scotchmen or any other strangers. They would enact laws for the "protection of native Windsor gardeners, for the protection of native grooms, for the protection of native farriers, and for the protection of everybody who belonged to that part of England, to the exclusion of everybody who belonged to any other part of the world.

So would it be at Chorley, in Lancashire; and so in every county and parish in England. Those who now form a majority in Parliament do not enact a law to exclude Scotchmen from Lancashire, nor Lancashiremen and Scotchmen from Windsor, because the employment of strangers in any one locality does not injure their own supposed interests. They do not themselves work for wages in the stable, the farrier's shop, the garden, or on the farm. The wages of labour being the property in which only working men have an exclusive interest, it is the working men only who would protect themselves against the importation of working strangers. But the majority of members in the Houses of Lords and Commons have the power to protect themselves; and they do so. They are owners of property which is valuable only in proportion to the amount sold of corn, cattle, sheep, pigs, butter, cheese, and other farm produce which they are dealers in; and believing, most erroneously, that by restricting the use of such articles to what they furnish is the only way to keep up prices, they make a law to that effect.

It would be intolerable if the native inhabitants of Lancashire had the power of excluding every workman from the factories who was not a native of that county. It would, like the protective law of the landlords, be highly pernicious. That general intercourse which sharpens the intellect, obliterates prejudices, and makes men courteous and helpful to one another, would be obstructed, and never would have existed, and civilization and science would be unknown, if the men at Chorley, in Lancashire, or the men at Windsor, in Berkshire, had the power and the will—they have the will, but happily not the power—or if the men of any other county or parish had the power, of objecting to the employment and settlement amongst them of men from other counties and parishes and nations. Yet their ignorance of the value of human intercourse, of county with county, nation with nation, race with race, is the same kind of ignorance which makes the parliamentary majority of landowners set limits to the commercial intercourse which they think would lessen the price of that produce of the land in which they are dealers. They who thus act because they can, and the men who would so act if they could, are governed by the same motives, and labour under the same mistakes. As it is with the intercourse of individuals, so it is with nations. Prejudices are removed; asperities softened down; projects for commercial transit are undertaken and accomplished jointly which none could have done singly; new energies are awakened; new power created—power which tends to elevate the whole human race nearer to the moral image of their Maker, and place them at a greater distance from the degradation and destructive propensities of the savage. Let us increase the intercourse of nation with nation, and we render the possibility of war the less; while, by an interchange of commodities, each nation becomes richer than when it stood alone. The supply of wants creates new ones in communities of men as in individuals. The lowest tribe of savages have fewest wants; they never know what enjoyment is, so they do not seek to enjoy. Give England a supply of that corn and sugar of which she has too little under the present protective duties, and new wants will be created, the profits of supplying which will do far more for those who are now protected than their monopoly does for them.

On the contrary, concede the principle of protection from free competition, and concede it in practice to those who demand it, but have not the power to obtain it, as well as to those who demand it, and have the power to obtain it for themselves, and who enforce it for themselves, and where would we end? The civilization to which we have attained through a common intercourse with one another would prevent us from returning all at once to the life of the savage. But such protection from competition, if possessed by all who desire it, would at once enable the Lancashire workmen to turn every one out of the factories who were not Lancashire men; which act of protection to the natives by themselves would be their own destruction by the entire stoppage and annihilation of those works in which they are employed. Such a power would enable the Berkshire blacksmiths to demand, and enforce their demand, that Berkshire blacksmiths should have the exclusive privilege of shoeing the royal stud. It would be the same with grooms, with valets, with coachmen, carpenters, shoemakers, tailors, everybody; and the consequence would be, that there would be no work and no payment for any of them: for under such intolerable and savage despotism the monarchy and civilized society could not exist. The very idea of such "protection to native industry" represents an impracticable monstrosity; for such a law of "protection," could it have existed by any possibility, would have prevented the existence of those very employments, of which the working members seek to be so protected from a competition with persons not born in their own localities. Under such a system the town of Maidenhead, where the coaches used to stop before the Great Western Railway was made, would want protection from Slough, where the trains stop, and which is now growing into a town since the railway has been made. The owners of land in the parish of New Windsor, where the inhabitants are numerous, and the corn produced is scanty, would pass a law of protection against the corn-growers of the parishes of Egham, and Staines, and Datchet, where the corn grows more plentifully.

I have followed this subject farther than I intended when making the remarks about the number of Scotch men employed at Windsor; but the fact of such men being there, together with the objection to them on the part of the forest-born workmen, is a matter worth noting in these days of "protection to native industry."

I have said Flemish Farm and Norfolk Farm, which are both occupied by the Prince, are each managed by an English bailiff. But both the farms and the bailiffs are under the immediate superintendence of one of the gentlemen of the Prince's establishment, Major-General Wemyss. I had not a sufficient opportunity to ascertain the general's merits as an agriculturist. Everybody spoke well of him as a gentleman; and he had no fault that I heard of with any, save with a few of the natives, and their objection to him was, that he was a Scotchman, and brought too many of his own countrymen about Windsor, to the injury of the native workmen.

In journeying towards the homestead of Flemish Farm, after quitting the men who were draining, I left the field they were in on my right, and proceeded westward. The field in which two men were spreading manure, and three ploughs were beginning work, lay on my left; and I was now about ten hundred yards from the eastern boundary of the farm where I first entered. At every step I had ascended higher and higher, and was now on an elevation, the highest part of which, several acres in breadth, lay northward to my right, and was covered with a thicket of young timber.

Looking to the west, at the distance of three or four hundred yards, there lay down below me, in a hollow, the Prince's barns and stables, wagon-shed, rick-yard, and bailiff's house. There was no road from this part of the farm to the homestead, nor from any other part, save in one direction, where a road ran along the low grounds northward and north-west, to meet the Windsor road from Ascot Heath and country adjoining. But though there was no road, properly so called, by the way I approached the homestead, there were wagon tracks plenty. The manure, which was in process of being ploughed into the field above, had been brought up from the farm-yard evidently with prodigious labour. The ground was cut up by the wheels; and, as is always the case where there is not a proper road, the wagons and carts had travelled over a space sufficient for three or four or five roads. The ruts were like open drains; and the upturned earth was so rough, and yet so soft in the melting frost, that to walk was almost impossible.

I turned aside amid the rushes and furze which dotted a piece of old pasture ground of considerable breadth, extending downwards to the houses. This was exceedingly wet, although it was a hanging declivity, facing the south-west, and bore all the appearances of poverty and sourness of soil. It being winter time, wetness might have been accounted for; but the rushes told that they enjoyed that wet bed even in summer, when other vegetation, on such a soil, tries to raise its head and thrive, but at last dies in the hopeless effort.

The bailiff's house is a plain whitewashed cottage of two floors, fronting up the hill. It stands on the north side of the farm offices, the rick-yard being on the south side. As I approached it I saw nobody, and nothing moved within the compass of the eye but a little dog, which came half way up the hill, proclaiming with much noise that I had better not come any farther. I moved forward, however, and it, being in front of me, moved backwards, disputing every step of the way.

I saw, by the appearance of newly-thrashed bean straw in front of two barn doors, that somebody was or had recently been at work thrashing beans, and I advanced into the yard. There was nobody. All was quiet, and, for the time, deserted: even the little dog was away. I suppose, when it saw me pass into the farm-yard, it ran off to its master, to tell him that he had better come himself, for the stranger would not be stopped by all the barking which it could bark.

Accordingly, its master came, and it came with him, and, holder than ever, told me I had no business there, and intimated that if it was only big enough it would let me see what it would do. The master bade it be quiet, but it was determined to let me know that this farm was its farm,—this yard its yard,—that house its house; that its own house was its own castle; and that until I explained who I was, what I was, and what I wanted there, it would not yield its right to challenge me. Nor did it until I had explained all that, and entered into familiar conversation with its master.

First of all he told me that there was very little to be seen that could in any way be interesting to a stranger; and probably he was right. But the fact of this being the Prince's farm was a sufficient reason for me feeling an interest in it,—as I hope it will be a sufficient excuse for this detailed description. He showed me a four-year-old heifer, which was being fattened for the next Christmas show in London, and told me that two more from Scotland were to come soon for the same purpose.

Other matters, such as the want of good water and good roads, the great difficulty of getting either, and the daily toil and loss arising from the want of roads, were spoken of. But it is necessary to explain here that the observations which I may now make, and the information I may convey to others, have been described from various sources.

This farm is supposed to have been taken from the forest and the Great Park, sixty or seventy years ago. At first it consisted of 400 acres, but has been lessened to about 350, in order that certain meadow land in the park which grows hay for the deer to feed on in winter might be extended. It is a heavy clayey soil, and very difficult to work. The homestead has been unfortunately placed on lower ground than the general elevation of the farm, which renders it necessary that nearly all the manure from it should be conveyed up hill; and it is carried up hill without roads. There is only one road, as I said before, and it leads out to Windsor. A large quantity of manure had been taken along it by the wagons to a field, where it was laid in a ponderous heap at the bottom, to be carted upland when required. Had there been a road from the farmyard towards the high ground, the manure-heap might have been laid at the top of this field as easily as it was brought to the bottom, and then one horse would have done as much in dragging it out, when the time comes to lay it out, as three horses will do; and this without breaking and tramping the land as three horses will. There is probably not a quarter of grain grown on this farm, nor anything else of equal value, which does not cost ten or fifteen per cent. more in its production than it would cost if there were good hard roads. And if we take into account the improvements which might be effected in changing the elements of the soil, but which cannot be effected without roads to convey the materials, the loss would appear enormous. But of those possible changes in the nature of the soil more hereafter.

Meantime let me call the attention of those who talk of the danger to English agriculture of a large and cheap importation of foreign wheat to the fact that in all those countries from which we could get a large supply, so far as the fertility and extent of fertile soil could produce it, there are no roads, neither private nor public.

Flemish Farm, I was told, would not be a bargain at more than 20s. an acre, annual rent; although, from the competition for land which now exists, there would be no difficulty in getting farmers to bind themselves to pay 30s. an acre.

George III. used to hold this farm. In that sovereign's latter days, and in the reign of George IV., it was let to a tenant who was bound to give it up when required so to do. He made a poor struggle in it, as any tenant under such circumstances might be supposed to do. Everything went to wreck, so I was told, and no useful improvement was effected beyond the mere necessities of the moment. But a fortunate day was in store for him. William IV., after his accession, chose to take the farm into his own hands. The tenant was paid to go out of it; and found himself what he had never been while he held it, a rich man. The present bailiff succeeded him, and found everything in a deplorable condition.

I observed that one of the wagons on this farm, and all of the wagons used in the Great Park, had belonged to his late Majesty; and this I discovered by seeing on them letters with the royal arms, which indicated that they now belonged to her Majesty Victoria the Fourth. It stood thus:—"V. R. IV." with the royal arms between the V and the R. This at first puzzled me, but on looking narrowly into it I found that there had once been a W where there was now a V, and that for economy's sake the half of the W had been painted out, and the other half left. Perhaps, on her Majesty's accession, somebody recollected what the enormous cost had been to the late king. £4000 alone, for the old trashy stock and implements of Flemish Farm, was enough to make the bailiff, or any one else, dread the employment of one of those who think they have only to set their feet on a royal farm to be sure of making a rich job.

Those days, however, are gone by. Her Majesty attends personally to many affairs which used to be managed or mismanaged by others; so the common report about Windsor says. There are people there, and many of them, who lament the departure of the days of George IV., when they could get more profitable jobs than they can get now; when, as a bricklayer told me, they "could get a pint of beer almost any how, any where, at any time;" but even those people are constrained to admit that the superior arrangement of everything under her Majesty does more good than a profuse but uncertain expenditure would do. In every case where the Queen has personally interfered to make an alteration in any usage, the change has been directed by practical good sense, which none deny, save those, perhaps, who have been personally interfered with. Added to this, there is the kind consideration of the Queen and the Prince for the public who visit the castle and the regal domain of the park. It is rare that in any nobleman's park, or near any private residence whatever, there is such freedom given to visitors as about the residence of her Majesty. It is rarer still for strangers to be so kindly permitted to approach the head of the family, to be bowed to, and their presence taken as if conferring a favour, as is the case with the Queen and the Prince. But rarest of all is it, that exalted personages, who, like them, fill the eyes of everybody, should, by the force of virtue alone, compel every evil-speaking tongue to speak well of them.

I am now about to give some opinions on the propriety of the Prince becoming a farmer, and on the benefit which other farmers may derive from a certain line of management being adopted which may be profitably introduced on Flemish Farm. This will lead me to speak of what the soil is, and what it may be made. But the subject is too large to enter upon in the present letter.

The speech of the Rev. J. Aspinall, rector of Althorpe, Lincolnshire, which was so rapturously received at the late evening meeting of the Anti-Corn-Law League in this town, has been reprinted by the National Anti-Corn-Law League, only a just tribute to one of the most splendid addresses on the subject that has been delivered in any part of England.—Hull Rockingham.

"Pa, I know, now, about the sliding scale." How so? "I tumbled down, to-day, on the flags in the street, and found it was owing to a slippery Peel."

AGRICULTURE.

WHAT IS RENT?

In rejecting Mr. Cobden's motion for a select committee to inquire into the effect of protective duties on the interests of tenant-farmers and farm-labourers, the landowners of the House of Commons have given a new proof of the hollowness of all their pretences at their "protection" meetings. It is not our present purpose to go over the ground of last Tuesday's debate; but there was one point touched upon in the course of that discussion which was much mystified by the Pro-Corn-Law speakers: we mean the proportion which rent bears to the produce of land. Mr. Gladstone professed to believe that the suggested inquiries involved some very abstruse and recondite investigations into the theory of rent. This was a mere delusion, a cloud of nonsense by which the speaker proposed to cover his intention of opposing a reasonable inquiry. But without undervaluing scientific formula for investigating rent, when properly applied, we propose to take a practical farmer-like view of the subject. And that view, after all, corresponds with great accuracy to the most scientific one. Now, what is the simple and natural mode of estimating rent? A farmer about to take a farm will ascertain what are the outgoings, as taxes, rates, tithes, and so forth; he will then estimate the quantity of produce which, according to his proposed system of farming, it will be in his power one year with another to take to market, and he calculates the prices he expects to receive for such produce; he will also calculate the cost of the labour he may require to raise the estimated produce, the amount of capital he may be able or willing to employ on the farm, and the lowest rate of profit for which it be worth his while to engage in farming. Until this process has been gone through—and it always is gone through with more or less of accuracy—he cannot form any opinion as to the proper amount of rent. The rent will be the surplus of the whole produce to be sold which shall remain after meeting all the foregoing expenses. Now, it depends upon the existing competition amongst farmers for farms whether the whole of this surplus shall or shall not be given for rent, or whether some incautious or unintelligent farmer may not agree to give even more than all the surplus, paying all beyond the actual surplus either out of his capital, or by getting into debt, usually with his tradesmen. And the same state of things will exist whenever the farmer shall be disappointed in receiving for produce the prices on which he founded his calculations. When rent is paid out of capital, the farmer must either diminish his stock, or lessen the number or lower the wages of his labourers, and he commonly resorts to all those methods of making up the rent. But the direct effect is a smaller produce in the following year, and thus in each succeeding year the rent eats deeper and deeper into the farmer's substance, until he is sold up, or voluntarily retires from the farm a pauper. That this has been the course run by hundreds of farmers during the existence of the Corn Laws is admitted by the monopolists, and a very little consideration will show how those laws have, in various ways, contributed to such unhappy results. The Corn Law of the day has always affected to keep up prices beyond the natural level, but it has been only in seasons of comparative scarcity that it has really done so. But as farmers, landlords, and landvaluers have all been led to found their calculations upon the prices held out by the Corn Law, whenever prices have fallen below that rate, the farmer must have necessarily paid some part—often the whole—of his rent out of his capital. In this way the Corn Law has been most prejudicial to the farmers. Then high prices of corn—whether really obtained or only expected—induce the farmer to rely too much upon his corn crops; he takes a corn crop somewhat too often; he is satisfied with a very small produce; and as a certain amount of corn may be grown under an inferior system of cultivation, requiring comparatively little labour, the farm-labourer suffers not only from the high price of food, but from want of employment.

Nothing can be further from the truth than the assertion, or assumption, so commonly made by the monopolists, that high prices induce either extended or improved cultivation, for directly the reverse is the fact; though unquestionably rents are thereby increased for a time; that is, so long as farmers can be deluded into engagements under which they have occasionally to pay rent out of capital. When prices are high, less capital, skill, and labour are required to raise a certain amount of marketable produce, and, from the smaller capital necessary to cultivate a given quantity of land, greater competition for farms is created. Both circumstances tend to increase the surplus or rent offered to the landowner.

This applies to average English farming. It is true that, by means of considerable capital employed upon a farm under the security of a safe tenure, where the farmer looks chiefly to growing large crops without reference to prices, a larger actual rent may be paid to the landlord, while a greater share of the whole produce may be retained by the farmer than under a system of high prices and low produce; but this is always disregarded by the monopolists, and the effect of their Corn Law is to prevent such permanent undertakings.

With this practical view before us of what rent is, let us examine Lord Worsley's statement of the "expense of managing a farm," which he received from "a farmer of great experience," and it will be seen how utterly delusive all such statements must be. According to this statement, an acre of light land, such as that of Lincoln-heath, will produce:—

| | | | |
|--|--------|--------|--|
| 1st year, 3 quarters of wheat at 56s. | | | |
| a quarter | £8 8 0 | £7 7 0 | |
| Deduct for seed | 1 1 0 | | |
| 2nd year, value of turnips | | 2 10 0 | |
| 3rd year, barley, 4½ quarters at 30s. | 6 15 0 | | |
| Deduct for seed | 0 15 0 | 6 0 0 | |
| 4th year, clover, | | | |
| To value of pasturage | 2 0 0 | | |
| Deduct for seed | 0 12 0 | 1 8 0 | |
| Making a total of receipts per acre during a | | | |
| rotation of four years | | 17 5 0 | |

In order to grow that produce, the following estimate of expenses is given:—

| | |
|---|---------|
| Rent for four years at 20s. | £4 0 0 |
| Parochial charges at 3s. [this is an overcharge of 3s.] | 0 15 0 |
| Tithes | 0 5 0 |
| Cost and keep of horses at 15s. | 3 0 0 |
| Labour, viz., farm-labourers | 1 0 0 |
| mechanics | 0 5 0 |
| Artificial manure | 2 10 0 |
| | 16 5 0 |
| Interest of capital employed, supposed to be | |
| £1200 on 200 acres, at rather less than 4½ | |
| per cent. | 1 0 0 |
| Making the total cost per acre | £17 5 0 |

Now, upon the face of it, this account balances most suspiciously, to say nothing of the slight overcharge of 3s. an acre, which would seem to indicate an intention to calculate up to a foregone conclusion. Lord Worsley multiplied these figures by 200, as giving the outlay and return of a farm of 200 acres of arable land on Lincoln-heath. We have had some individual experience in these farming estimates; we have seen precisely the same kind of accounts of the expense of an acre of wheat produced before every agricultural committee since 1813, in which the price of corn was assumed to be the act-of-Parliament price of the day, and which were imagined by those who put them forward to be decisive evidence that nothing less than some arbitrarily high price would enable the farmer to continue cultivation. It is a maxim of common sense, as well as of law, that "deceit lurks in generalities," and where these estimates are not merely fanciful or fabricated, the error will commonly be found to arise from the calculator basing his calculation on loose data, not on what has actually occurred within his own experience, but which he imagines, to use Mr. Cobden's expression, "might, could, would, or may," under some possible circumstances, occur.

No farming accounts or calculations are of the slightest value unless the actual payments and receipts are stated, and the acreage, description, and locality of the farm, as well as the real amount of capital employed, are given; and every one who has endeavoured to investigate this subject in a spirit of fairness will admit the difficulty of obtaining such accounts. Every farmer has some reason for not stating his own receipts and payments; most have some exceptional benefit or disadvantage on which they rely to take their own case out of the general rule, for it is obvious that, if such calculations as that of Lord Worsley prove anything, they prove too much. If they are true, no profit has been made in farming for some years; for Sir Robert Peel, in 1842, stated the average price of wheat for ten years was about 56s. a quarter. Now, this renders all such statements valueless. But, as this farming calculation is now put forth as evidence in support of a law intended to keep wheat at 56s. a quarter (though it cannot do so), let us analyze it a little. Now, it so happens that we have, as a help to such analysis, an account of the farming in that very district of Lincolnshire to which Lord Worsley's statement refers. We allude to Mr. Pusey's account of "Agricultural Improvements in Lincolnshire," in the last number of the "Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society." There, after detailing the high farming by which "Lincoln-heath, lately a warren, is now on a bright frosty day in December like a sheep market," Mr. Pusey shows that "noble crops" are raised "upon land for which a few years since the rent was paid by two rabbits an acre;" and that such results have been brought about by repeated dressings "quite unexampled" in other districts. Now, Lord Worsley's statement gives twenty-four bushels of wheat as the produce of an acre, which, instead of being a "noble crop" on land rented at 20s. per acre, is a very indifferent crop, and is from eight to ten bushels an acre less than the best farmers on light land grow as their average crop. Upon strong land good husbandry will produce a much larger crop. Next, £1 1s. per acre is deducted for seed, which gives three bushels at 7s.; whereas a good farmer would sow more than two bushels to the acre, and, when the land has been got into high condition, still less seed will produce better crops. It is only on land in a low state of cultivation that thick sowing is necessary; and we shall presently see that the scale of expenditure stated by Lord Worsley is sufficient to insure good farming. Here, then, we find eight bushels an acre of produce too little, and one bushel of seed expended too much—equal on one-fourth of a farm of 200 acres to fifty-six quarters of wheat. And precisely the same sort of calculation applies to barley, which may perhaps be increased by good husbandry in even a greater ratio than wheat.

Then we find the turnips valued at £2 10s. an acre; but Mr. Pusey tells us that from 10 to 12 large Lincoln sheep are wintered on each acre of turnips; and will any one who understands farming believe that no more than £2 10s. can be made by wintering 12 long-woolled sheep? Why, the wool alone would exceed that sum.

The statement of produce is one of very moderate farming. Now, let us turn to the outgoings; and here we shall somewhat alter the order of Lord Worsley's items. The wages of farm-servants are set at £200, giving, at an average, slightly under 12s. a week for each man, eight men employed throughout the year; a number fully sufficient to cultivate 200 acres in a manner much superior to average farming. The cost of horse-keep is exorbitant, unless the system of tillage be extremely high, and then much larger crops than we have mentioned should be the result. Tithes and parochial charges are also high, and both items would fall with any permanent reduction in the price of grain; while £125 yearly for artificial manure, which probably includes oilcake and similar purchased food for stock, might be profitably increased. If £1200 be employed on 200 acres of land, it is certain that an extra £500 would give increased produce in a proportion far greater than the additional capital. Nor is 4½ per cent. too high an interest for farming capital. This brings us to the only remaining item in Lord Worsley's account, namely, the RENT. Now, until the farmer has received back year by year all that he has paid as the expense of cultivation, whether it be horse labour or human labour or artificial manure, the tithes and rates which fall upon him as the occupier, together with the ordinary interest of capital, he has no fund properly applicable to rent. To put forth, therefore, an alleged calculation, in which rent forms a fixed item, is simply a delusion. But this is quite clear, even upon their own showing, that, if Free Trade in corn shall produce a permanent reduction in the money returns of farmers, the rent, that is, the surplus, must be the first source from which reduction must come. This can, no doubt, be met to a great extent by increased production on the part of farmers, but for that purpose they must be freed from the numerous disadvantages with regard to tenure and other matters under which they at present labour. In the meantime, nothing will sooner dissipate from the minds of farmers all the landlord-created chimeras than a practical, business-like examination of the question, WHAT IS RENT? Let such an examination be the business of every real farmer.

LANDLORD COMMON SENSE—PECULIAR BURDENS.

It is some compensation for the evils which are produced by the blockheads of a community taking the lead in its affairs, as is just now the case with the landowning and farming classes, that a vast portion of the latent, or at all events inactive, common sense of the same community is thereby aroused. Thus, we recently had to present to our readers the excellent letter of Mr. Bosanquet, a Conservative landowner of Herts, in favour of Free Trade, as earnest of the fruits which the Pro-Corn-Law agitation will produce in that county; so we have now before us a letter addressed to the farmers of Buckinghamshire, by a Whig landowner of that county, Sir Harry Verney. Differing, as we shall have occasion to do, from some of the conclusions of Sir Harry Verney, we cannot but congratulate the landowners upon his reasoning and sensible tone, and the business-like way of dealing with the question of the Corn Laws. Sir Harry says "the question is one of principle," and that he has endeavoured to satisfy himself whether legislative protection from foreign competition "has produced consequences beneficial or injurious to the farmers and the community at large."

He then rapidly traces the progress of the Corn-Law legislation "of the proprietors of the land" from the middle of the last century down to 1839, and shows that, notwithstanding the prohibitory duty of 80s. a quarter, "wheat in 1821-2 fell to 33s. a quarter; and that, under the law of 1828, 'by which less fluctuation in prices was promised, the price of wheat became higher than it ever had been under the [nominally] more protective law of 1815, and the fluctuation was from 35s. 4d. in December, 1835, to 81s. in January, 1839.'"

He then says that these laws have not produced "the promised benefit either of high or steady prices, and that they have not led to good farming," and asks—"who will maintain that our soil may not be made to produce double the amount of sustenance that it now yields for man or beast?" What intelligent agriculturist can read the following description of the actual state of husbandry on some of the best lands of England without doubting the value of his so-called "protecting" law? Sir Harry says:—

"Is it right that a system should be persevered in that provent, or at any rate that has not forwarded and effected to the extent that the country demands, an augmentation of produce? Look at the bad condition of farm-houses and buildings in many parts of the country. See how constantly four, or even five, horses are used in a plough when two would suffice; and consider that whole districts are cultivated with very small returns, although cultivated at an expense unnecessarily great. Why are manure heaps left in the field, where they lose their richness and fertilizing qualities? Why is the refuse from the farm-yard and dwelling-house allowed to escape into the common ditches, and to produce a rank crop of noxious weeds, instead of adding to the richness of the land? Why do we see ponderous four-horse waggons doing work for which two horses with light carts are sufficient? Why is farming expensive in particulars, in which cheaper cultivation would bring more produce? And why is there such unwillingness to expend capital, where that capital would give an ample return? The answer, I believe, is—imperfect farming, encouraged by unwise legislation.

And he adds that all the promises of the "farmers' friends" to keep up prices by act of Parliament have failed, "simply because it was impossible that legislation could regulate prices;" and the great landowners who passed, and now seek to maintain, the Corn Laws were most short-sighted in expecting to benefit themselves by a monopoly:—

"They should have considered, not so much the immediate price that we might get for our produce, as the great and ultimate advantage that you and I and all of us might obtain if the markets and resources of the country were extended. Remember how closely the manufacturing and commercial interests are allied to our own. Consider for what reason it is that land in our country is worth so much more than elsewhere. It is because we have better customers—I mean the multitudes who are engaged in manufacture and commerce. Why have our markets been improving during the last few weeks? Because, as Sir Thomas Fremantle said at Buckingham, the state of the manufacturer is improving."

And let us hear a landowner, a magistrate of Buckinghamshire, and one who diligently and impartially administers the duties entrusted to him. He says:—

"My friends, it is with pain that I contemplate the condition of the agricultural classes, especially of the agricultural labourer. See his damp, unwholesome, ill-ventilated, crowded cottage—ride through a village, where groups of men are standing about, unable to obtain work. Remark the downcast look of a man, as honest and upright as the most honest and upright amongst us, who has gone round from farm to farm and cannot obtain labour: follow him home to his family, and see him enter his cottage, where his wife and hungry children await his return, hoping that he may have obtained employment and food: but he has failed. The charity of a farmer, or the kindness of those who divide with each other the widow's mite, of some neighbour less poor only than himself, supports the family for a few days, until the order of admission to the workhouse is obtained. There are few, I hope I may say, no deaths from want in our agricultural districts: every poor family that has a crust, or a dish of potatoes, will divide it with their poorer neighbour who has none: in every village there are farmers and farmers' wives ready to assist a starving family. But are there no diseases brought on by poor living? no constitutions impaired by unwholesome and insufficient diet, want of clothing, and bad dwellings? are not the minds as well as the bodies, of our peasantry often enfeebled by their sufferings, and unfitted for the very exertions that would better their condition? Yes, as well as I do the reply to such questions."

Is not this another of those offensive answers to the monopolists' pretence that the agricultural labourers have been benefited by the Corn Laws, which they invariably receive whenever they meet with any who know the truth, and dare proclaim it?

And what is the remedy? Sir Harry Verney tells the Buckinghamshire farmers what we have again and again asserted, when he says:—

"It would be worse than useless, it would be mischievous, to address to you these observations, if no remedy could be suggested; but there is a remedy, and one which, aided by your landlords, it is in your power to adopt, viz., an improved system of farming. This would at once afford employment to the labourers, and the money which you now expend in poor's rates for the maintenance of their families would render them industrious and happy, and would yield to you a profitable return. In order to carry out such a system, you would require your farm-buildings to be adapted to increased produce from your land. You ought to have well arranged farm-yards, with the needful barns, and cow-houses, and stables, and with cess-pools, into which all your cattle-sheds and yards should drain. You ought to have encouragement and assistance in effecting permanent improvements, such as draining, &c.; and, having obtained these things, which it is as much your landlord's interest as his duty to provide, you ought to have the assurance of such permanency of tenure as will enable you to reap the fruit of any capital that you may embark in the cultivation of the soil."

Leases would enable the industrious agriculturist to do that which other classes do, namely, borrow from others a certain proportion of the capital he employs upon his farm. Sir Harry says:—

"I wish the wealth of the capitalist to be poured on your fields. I wish him to learn that it will never give him a more certain and speedy return than when employed by the skill and industry of the agriculturist. The coffers of our rich men are overflowing. Investments are sought in forming railways on the Continent, in the state stocks of America. In buying or selling land in New Zealand or Australia, in uniting the Pacific and the Atlantic by a canal, in working the silver mines of Chili or Peru; but there is a better and safer investment than any of these, one which, while it brings to the capitalist an ample interest, will augment the farmer's gains, and drive a equal poverty from the cottage of the peasant; investment in cultivating the soil of our own fair country, and in furnishing employment to our own honest peasantry. For such a purpose the capitalist will not advance his money without some permanency of tenure. Confident as the tenant may be in the good faith of one, under whose ancestors his forefathers have held their land for a century, the neighbouring banker or the capitalist in London cannot be expected to make the requisite advances of money except upon the security of a lease. We have in this country skilful farmers, we have the best labourers in the world, we have abundance of capital, and we have land on which the expenditure of capital will give an ample return. I desire to see a system adopted under which these possessions of ours may be brought to work for the common good; and for that system a certain permanency of tenure is requisite."

Nor is this system of making advances to farmers new; during the constantly rising prices of the war, advances were readily, often too readily, made by country bankers. But the most favourable way in which such advances could be made would be upon the security of the lease itself, to be repaid by certain definite instalments. On this topic, however, we shall have more to say elsewhere. Sir Harry Verney also thinks the £500 tenant-at-will clause in the Reform Bill has proved most injurious to agriculture by preventing leases, and rendering the farmers mere political tools in their landlords' hands. So far Sir Harry Verney's letter is unexceptionable; but he concludes by assuming that there are exclusive burdens on land, though he fairly proposes to subject that assumption to the test of inquiry, and says:—

"Agricultural members should never have permitted the Minister to resist a motion for inquiring into the peculiar burdens on land. It was proposed by a member who wished to prove them inconsiderable. The farmers' friends ought to have accepted the challenge, because they could prove them disproportionately and unfairly heavy, and that they are increased in every successive session of Parliament; because they could show that they are, in a great measure, sustained for objects that benefit the whole community, for instance, that personal property is protected by expenditure to which only real property contributes; and that justice demands that burdens imposed for the benefit of all classes should not fall on one alone. The nature and amount of these burdens ought to be investigated; they ought either to be compensated by a duty or removed."

And he would prefer the removal of these ideal burdens to a compensating duty. For our part, if the landlords will go into the inquiry, and can prove that they have exclusive burdens, they may be relieved therefrom as they like best, for in truth the notion of the existence of such burdens is a pure hallucination. How a man so obviously clear-headed as Sir Harry Verney could have fallen into it passes our comprehension.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Five-guinea Subscriber."—As the accounts are not made up, his first question cannot be accurately answered. In reply to his second, we have to state that arrangements for a systematic canvass of London are in progress.

"Anonymous."—The attention of the League is earnestly directed to the subject of registration.

The secret history of the parties engaged in getting up the Anti-League Society is a valuable document, of which we shall avail ourselves at the proper time.

"T. B. T., "R. S., "A. D., "X. Y. Z., "A Labourer."—The instances of aristocratic oppression which they have sent us show how erroneously the poet has spoken of "the short and simple annals of the poor." The ruin which the system of the Corn Laws has brought upon farmers and farm-labourers is an iniquity without a parallel even in the dark and blood-stained annals of monopoly.

"P. L." sends us the following spirited stanzas on unfurling the banner of Free Trade:—

"Unfurl the stainless banner—
The glorious flag unfurl,
Free as the winds that fan her,
Free as the clouds that curl;
Free as Heaven above us,
Free as wave and air,
And human hearts will love us
Who set it floating there.
And human forms who wander
In snow, and frost, and rain,
I hear them singing yonder
The song of want and pain;
I hear the children pining
With tiny voice and sad;
Oh, when shall we, with shout and glee,
Those wailing voices glad?"

"Then, when o'er girdling ocean,
Its folds of purest white,
Free as love's emotion,
Pure as young delight,
Blithe as radiant morning,
And steadfast as its glow,
Our noble banner acroving
The chains that bind her now.
Then, loose her folded glory,
And rend the chains away!
For rusted, foul, and gory
With human woe are they;
Till, free as Heaven above us,
It revels on the air,
And human hearts will love us,
Who set it floating there!"

P. L.

"J. B."—The time for compromise is past.

"J. T."—The League wars not with the dead, and the influence of the person he wishes to expose has been irrecoverably consigned to the tomb of all the Capulets.

"A Rate-payer of Windsor."—The grievance of which he complains does not properly come under the cognizance of the League.

"M. M."—Such tricks in procuring signatures to Pro-Corn-Law petitions are so numerous that we should exhaust our entire space were we to attempt their exposure.

"J. J."—His stanzas have great merit, but some of the lines violate the laws of metre.

"T. W."—An equitable land-tax is a national right, because property in land was originally constituted on the principle of the proprietors being bound to provide for the defence of the country. The lords of the soil were vassals to the crown as well as suzerains to their serfs or tenants; but their constant policy has been to maintain their feudal rights while they got rid of their feudal obligations.

"R. M."—His appeal is powerful, but in some passages it rather goes beyond the line of prudence. He should remember that discretion is not less necessary than valour in an important contest. "The sons of Zeruliah are yet too strong for us."

"A. B." assures us that the farmers in Renfrewshire are secretly inquiring for expert poachers to protect their crops.

"B. B." is thanked, but the League cannot meddle with a subject so remotely connected with the question of Free Trade.

"R. C."—The ingenious clerk who has written the twenty-five petitions for Halifax and its neighbourhood to support the cause of monopoly is not likely to acquire fame for himself or afford satisfaction to his employers.

"O. P. Q." will find that his hints have been attended to. "The Song of the Gathering" is very unequal: some passages have the true lyrical spirit, but others are deficient both in metre and point.

"G. W. W." is thanked, but the matter of his communication is too much expanded and weakened by a tendency to declamation.

"Z. X. Y." should send his suggestion to "H. B."

"X. Y."—The John Bull has taken the Bible as its cognizance, but significantly represents the book as permanently shut.

"W. J. J." has a right to vote.

"J. H." is thanked.

A subscriber at Wakefield sends us the following:—"A little fact which strengthens and confirms the great fact, 'that the Corn Laws are obstructive of agricultural improvement,' has lately come to my knowledge, and I hasten to give you the particulars, of which you can make such use as you think proper."

"A person in this neighbourhood who keeps a cow occupies a field belonging to an individual of respectable though not of independent property. Two or three months ago the tenant applied to the landlord to drain the field, as the rent is high, and in reply was told by the latter that he could not consent to bear the whole expense, but would provide the necessary tiles, on condition that the tenant would perform the other part of the work. To this the tenant demurred, saying that he would consider of the proposition. Early in last week he intimated to the landlord his willingness to accede to the terms proposed; but he received in reply that, since the proposal was made, Sir Robert Peel had declared his determination to make no alteration in the Corn Laws, and that, therefore, rents would be kept up without the landlord incurring any expense, and that he (the landlord) must, therefore, now decline laying out the money in tiles that he had originally proposed."

"This circumstance, certainly, took place only with reference to a single field, but the principle is no doubt equally at work in reference to whole estates, or even districts."

"I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,"

"A SUBSCRIBER TO THE LEAGUE FUND."

"G. W. W."—Under present circumstances we are unwilling to enter into any discussion of the currency question.

"A Member" cannot, under the circumstances, claim a vote.

"J. F. B."—One shilling.

We insert one of "J. R.'s" songs; the other is of inferior merit:—

A CANTICLE OF THE TIMES.

"Though great must be his guerdon, who gives to future years
The banquetings of monarchs, and the gazing bouts of peers;
For courtly pageants well describ'd he well deserves his bay:
Content am I; the poor alone, Heaven help them! claim my lays."—REID.

"What, are ye answered yet?"—Shylock.

"A father gazed upon his fading child;
He saw her young eyes' lustre wane away,
And that ripe lip that once upon him smil'd,
Blanch'd by the touch of premature decay."

"The music of her happy laugh was gone—
The voice that oft at eve had sooth'd his care
Now seem'd the echo only of a moan;
The sad low plaint of famine bred despair."

"She died! and then the grief-wild father now
Knew that the cruel, unrelenting hand
That set the seal of death on that fair brow,
Grew from a mortal, not divine, command!"

"And whilst he stood beside her aqualid bed,
Deep indignation mingled with his sighs;
And blest with holy breathings for the dead,
Would aullen thoughts of retribution rise."

"Proud crested chiefs, who sternly have denied
Freedom to patient, much-enduring toil—
Who, with oppressive laws and selfish pride,
Have banish'd commerce from our ocean isle."

"Ask ye of him allegiance mild and meek?
Ask ye of him submission to your power?
Or that devoted love the virtuous seek,
(And find) to buckler them in danger's hour?"

"Your laws have made the hearthstone cold and drear,
Where once content and peace and plenty met;
And she who lies all shroudless on her bier,
She died of hunger. 'Are ye answered yet!'"

Edinburgh, Feb. 29.

The following copy of a petition has been sent us, with a request that we should republish it: we gladly comply:—

"To the Honourable the Commons of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled:—

"The humble petition of the Committee of the London Peace Society,

"Sheweth:—

"That your petitioners are fully of opinion that war, upon whatever pretext it is engaged in, is inconsistent with the spirit of Christianity, and the true interests of mankind; and that the practice of having recourse to arms for the purpose of settling disputes, cannot but be displeasing to Almighty God, whilst it is fraught with unnumbered evils to all parties connected with it, and is altogether unavailing for the equitable adjustment of such disputes:—

"That your petitioners do consequently regard the existence of large military establishments as an evil on all accounts to be deprecated by every lover of peace and good government, and as repugnant to the free spirit of the British constitution:—

"Your petitioners do therefore pray your Honourable House, that there may be no increase whatever made to the existing military establishments of the empire; and that your Honourable House will take into their most serious consideration the propriety of immediately adopting such measures as may, by your Honourable House, be deemed most suitable and effective for removing the fearful temptation to war which such establishments present:—and,

"Your petitioners are the more encouraged to urge this upon the attention of your Honourable House, because, in common with their fellow-subjects at large, they have received with unfeigned satisfaction the confident announcement made from the Throne at the opening of the present session of Parliament, that 'the general peace, so necessary for the happiness and prosperity of all nations,' is expected to continue uninterrupted."

"And your petitioners will ever pray, &c."

An esteemed correspondent sends us the following strictures on the annexed extract from the speech of the Rev. H. F. Yeatman, at Sturminster:—"Why, I know well, that when the new tariff was under consideration in Parliament, a deputation of English clay merchants waited on the Vice-President of the Board of Trade, and represented that they could not compete with the foreign clay merchants without a protecting duty of 20 per cent.; they waited also on my ever honoured and learned friend, Geo. Banks, Esq., one of our most vigilant and ever active representatives in Parliament; and I know, Sir, that, mainly and instrumentally through Mr. Banks's great exertions, a sufficient protecting duty was granted in favour of, and in support of, the British clay merchant against his foreign competitor." The above is reported in the Sherborne Journal of the 22nd Feb., and is an extract from the speech of the Rev. H. F. Yeatman, delivered at Sturminster, but, being totally destitute of foundation, it seems to require some answer. The clay trade has no protecting duty under the new tariff; George Banks, Esq., was never asked to apply for, and never did exert himself to obtain, a protecting duty; there are not, and never were, any foreign competitors; and the clay merchants never waited on the Vice-President of the Board of Trade with such a representation: being themselves exporters of clay to foreign countries, they have no reason to ask for a protecting duty in favour of, and in support of, their produce against any foreign competitor. A reference to the new tariff will show that the importation of clay is allowed free of duty, but that there is a duty on exportation of 5s. per ton. Previously to the new tariff being passed, the importation was allowed free, and the exportation subject only to a nominal duty; by the new tariff it was first proposed to lay on an export duty of 30s. per ton; but George Banks, Esq., exerted himself on behalf of the clay proprietors and merchants, who are undoubtedly under great obligations to him for, in this case, advocating the principles of Free Trade; and there is every reason to believe, that mainly and instrumentally through his great exertions, the export duty was lowered and finally fixed at 5s. The gist of the argument of the Rev. H. F. Yeatman is, that the principle which regulates one trade ought to be applied to another; and as he has chosen the clay trade to exemplify the position, I am led to ask whether the Anti-League party would be content with the same kind of protection which the clay trade receives? Whilst I entirely acquit the Rev. H. F. Yeatman of any intention to mislead, I would suggest that it might be prudent for him to consider whether he is supporting his own case by directing public attention to the manner in which the same parties who give agricultural protection deal with some other trades. There are parties interested in the clay trade, proprietors of lands as well as merchants, in this county, and also in Cornwall, favourable to the principles of Free Trade; and it is that they may not be chargeable with inconsistency that I think it necessary to point out how much in error the Rev. H. F. Yeatman is on this point."

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any person forwarding 3s. 8d. by Post-office order, to the Publisher, 67, Fleet-street, London, will have one quarter's copies of the LEAGUE forwarded by post on the days of publication. Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with J. Gadsby, Newall's-buildings, Manchester; and the LEAGUE may be had by order of any news-agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

NATIONAL ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE.

THE COUNCIL OF THE LEAGUE beg to announce that the next Meeting in COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE will take place on WEDNESDAY EVENING, the 20th instant. The Right Hon. the EARL OF RADNOR will take the Chair precisely at Seven o'clock. Richard Cobden, Esq., M.P., Mr. Charles Lattimore, of Whithamstead, Hants, and other gentlemen, will address the meeting. Tickets of admission may be had on application at the Office of the League, 67, Fleet-street, from eleven to four o'clock on Monday and Tuesday. Registered Members admitted as heretofore.—Doors to be opened at Half-Past Six o'clock.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, March 16, 1844.

NATIONAL ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE.

Manchester, March 12th, 1844.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have been directed by the council of the League respectfully to call your attention to the following clauses of their address to the people of the United Kingdom, issued previous to the commencement of their plan of operations for the present year:—

"Prompt measures will be taken to ascertain the opinions of each elector, in every borough, with the view of obtaining an obvious and decided majority in favour of the total and immediate repeal of the Corn Laws."

"Every constituency whose representatives have not hitherto supported Mr. Villiers's motion for the repeal of the Corn Laws will be invited to memorialize its members to vote for such motion when next brought forward."

The period is now arrived when active measures should be adopted for carrying out the objects of this announcement. The council, therefore, respectfully, but earnestly, request that you will, at your earliest convenience, endeavour to form a committee, or, if there be an Anti-Corn-Law committee in your borough, that you will call them together for the purpose of submitting to them the following recommendations:—

1. That a memorial be immediately prepared, to be signed by the electors of your borough, requesting your representatives to vote for Mr. Villiers's motion in the present session for the abolition of the Corn Laws.

2. That the committee proceed to divide the borough into districts, and also to prepare canvassing-books, containing the names of the voters for each district, as accurately and as carefully as if for an election.

3. That intelligent and trustworthy persons be appointed to canvass the whole of the electoral body for signatures to the memorial; and that every elector be called upon, in order that the opinions of the entire constituency on the question, as far as practicable, may be ascertained and registered in the canvassers' books.

4. That the canvassers be instructed to be especially careful not to receive any signatures but those of persons whose names appear on the register of electors for the present year; that each person shall sign for himself; or that, where the elector cannot write, the memorial shall be only signed for him at his own request and in his presence.

5. That the canvassers be also requested to enter in their books memorandums of all changes which may have taken place since the last registration, either in the residence or qualification of electors, whether householders or freemen, and to make a report of all such cases to the committee. It is hoped that by attention to these latter particulars much useful and important information will be obtained for improving the register during the present year, by removing those who have no qualification or have lost their right to vote.

6. That, as soon as the memorial shall have been completed, the committee shall make a return, addressed to the chairman of the council, at Manchester, specifying

The gross number of electors on the register for the present year.

The number of double entries on the register, and also of the amount to be deducted on account of deaths and removals from the borough since the last registration.

The number of signatures attached to the memorial.

7. That the same committee should hold itself in readiness to enter upon the business of registration in your borough, with a determination to increase as far as possible the strength of the Free-Trade portion of the electoral body.

As the council, in their address, have not this year recommended petitions to Parliament for repeal of the Corn Laws, it becomes the more urgently necessary that the business of memorializing should proceed without delay. It should be entered upon at once, and not a moment should be lost until the memorial is placed in the hands of your representatives.

The council are the more encouraged in recommending this course from the success which followed the very limited adoption of a similar proceeding previous to Mr. Villiers's motion of last year. Few memorials were presented on that occasion, but those few produced a considerable accession to the Free-Trade minority.

The council rely with confidence on receiving the most prompt and energetic co-operation of their friends throughout the country, and especially in the parliamentary boroughs, in support of the motion of Mr. Villiers, and in augmenting the strength of the Free-Traders in the various constituencies, by close and continued attention to the registration of electors. The present aspect of the Free-Trade movement, and the position now assumed by the supporters of monopoly, imperatively require this at our hands; and we trust that your committee will at once enter upon the discharge of these duties, with a determination not to relax its exertions until the question has been brought to a successful issue.

I am, dear sir, respectfully,

Your most obedient servant,

(By order of the council)

GEORGE WILSON, Chairman.

The circular of instructions, to which we alluded in our leading article of the 2d inst., as in preparation, has now been issued by the council, and will be seen above. Its directions are plain and practical. We earnestly hope the importance will be felt of their being acted upon at once, and everywhere.

There is no time to be lost. The interval from now to the expected coming on of Mr. Villiers's motion in the House of Commons is not at all too long for the canvassing to be completed, and the results brought into the form in which they will most conduce towards the desired result. We call on the friends of Free Trade in every locality to help. Any person, whether himself a voter or not, who enables the committee of his district to ascertain that but a single Free-Trader is wrongfully omitted from the registration list, or but a single voter for monopoly wrongfully inserted therein, renders a valuable service to the cause. And that service is doubled by any one who can so instruct and convince his enfranchised neighbour as to obtain his signature to the memorial for supporting Mr. Villiers's motion, though he may heretofore have exercised his franchise for the support of monopoly.

These memorials are, in fact, a poll of the constituencies upon the specific question at issue. They afford the electors an opportunity for retrieving past errors, or redoubling former exertions. In this one act of memorializing our representatives we concentrate the various exertions that have usually been expended upon separate petitionings. It is, for the present year, the single palpable form in which our principles and wishes present themselves to the attention of the House of Commons. It is absolutely necessary for it to be as complete as possible. Any neglect is treason to our cause at a most critical moment.

About it, then; and with the spirit and perseverance of those who are worthy to fight the great battle of commercial freedom against the most powerful class ascendancy, by which industry has ever been plundered of its rights and fettered in its operations. Enrol yourselves, everywhere, on behalf of Free Trade. Let the magnitude of its peaceful, but resistless, army be shown in the great muster-roll of memorialists. If your numbers appear as we hope, the stroke is decisive. "Up to your duty," and work as if the cause were to be made triumphant now, or never.

REVIEW.

The Poetical Works of Ebenezer Elliott. People's Edition. Tait, Edinburgh.

This cheap and beautiful edition of Ebenezer Elliott's Poems is highly creditable to the public spirit of its enterprising publisher. We rejoice to see poems of and for the people placed within the reach of every class of readers. To the wealthy Elliott's verses are valuable, as the exposition of the feelings which rankle in the bosoms of those who are the victims of class-legislation; while to the industrious poor they afford, at least, the consolation of knowing that intellect sympathises with their sufferings, and genius denounces their wrongs. It would be out of place to give a formal review of productions so long before the public, and so highly and justly appreciated. We shall, however, take the opportunity afforded by this cheap edition to extract a few of the pieces which have been most effective in pointing out to the great body of the operatives the nature of the wrongs which they suffer from the bread-tax, and to combine with them a few extracts illustrative of the peculiar powers of the author. There is a melancholy sweetness in the following lines, reminding us of the effect produced by the dirges of the dead wafted to the ear from a distance on the evening gale:—

SONG.

TUNE—"The Land o' the Leal."

"Where the poor cease to pay,
Go, lov'd one, and rest!
Thou art wearing away
To the land of the blest.
Our father is gone
Where the wrong'd are forgiven,
And that dearest one,
Thy husband, in heaven."

"No toil in despair,
No tyrant, no slave,
No bread-tax is there,
With a maw like the grave.
But the poacher, thy pride,
Whelm'd in ocean afar;
And his brother, who died
Land-butcher'd in war;

"And their mother, who sank
Broken-hearted to rest;
And the baby, that drank
Till it froze on her breast;
With tears, and with smiles,
Are waiting for thee,
In the beautiful isles
Where the wrong'd are the free."

"Go, lov'd one, and rest,
Where the poor cease to pay!
To the land of the blest
Thou art wearing away;
But the son of thy pain
Will yet stay with me,
And poor little Jane
Look sadly like thee."

A fiercer spirit breathes through the lines entitled "The Black Hole of Calcutta;" it opens with the following bold burst of interrogatory:—

"What for Saxon, Frank, and Hun,
What hath England's bread-tax done?
Ask the struggle and the groan
For the shadow of a bone;
Like a strife for life, for life,
Hand to hand, and knife to knife,

"Hopeless trader! answer me,
What hath bread-tax done for thee?
Ask thy lost and owing debts;
Ask our bankrupt-throng'd Gazettes.
Clothier, proud of Peterloo!
Ironmaster, loyal too!

"What hath bread-tax done for you?
Let the Yankee tariff tell,
None to buy, and all to sell;
Useless buildings, castles strong,
Hundred thousands, worth a song;
Starving workmen, warehouse full,
Saxon web, from Polish wool,
Grown where grew the wanted wheat,
Which we might not buy and eat.
Merchant, bread-tax'd trade wont pay—
Profits lessen every day;
Sell thy stock, and realize,
Let thy streeted chimneys rise;

"And when bread-tax'd ten are two,
Learn what bread-tax'd rents can do.
Sneak! that wouldst for groat a year
Sell thy soul, and sell it dear!

"Self-robb'd servile! sold, not bought,
For the shadow of a groat!
Unbribed Judas! what thy gain,
By sad Europe's millions slain—
By our treasure's, pour'd in blood
Over battle-field and flood!
Bread-tax'd profits, endless care,
Competition in despair.

"With thy bile, and with thy gear,
Wheels and shuttles gainless here,
With the remnant of thy all,
Whither, reptile, wilt thou crawl?
What hath bread-tax done for me?
Farmer, what for thine and thee?
Ask of those who toil to live,
And the price they cannot give;
Ask our hearths, our gainless marts,
Ask thy children's broken hearts,
Ask their mother, sad and gray,
Destined yet to parish pay."

"Bread-tax'd weaver, all can see
What that tax hath done for thee
And thy children, vilely led,
Singing hymns for shameful bread,
Till the stones of every street
Know their little naked feet."

"Building lawyers' nominees!
What hath bread-tax done for thee?
Ask thy fainting thoughts that strive
But to keep despair alive;
Ask thy list of friends betray'd,
Houses empty, rents unpaid,
Rising streets and falling rents,
Money-fights for half per cents;
Ask yon piles, all bread-tax built,
Guiltless, yet the cause of guilt,
Swallowing fortunes, spreading woes,
Losing, to make others lose.
Bread-tax-eating absentee,
What hath bread-tax done for thee?—
Cramm'd thee, from our children's plates,
Made thee all that Nature hates,
Fill'd thy skin with untax'd wine,
Fill'd thy purse with cash of mine,
Fill'd thy breast with hellish schemes,
Fill'd thy head with fatal dreams—
Of potatoes basely sold
At the price of wheat in gold,
And of Britons sty'd to eat
Wheat-priced roots instead of wheat."

Passing over some passages, the strength of which is rather weakened by unnecessary coarseness, we come to the conclusion, and make no comment on the reflections which its powerful appeal suggests.

"Peer, too just, too proud to share
Millions wrung from toil and care!
Righteous peer, whose fathers fed
England's poor with untax'd bread!
Ancient peer, whose stainless name
Ages old have given to fame!—
What shall bread-tax do for thee?
Make thee poor as mine and me:
Drive thee from thy marble halls
To some hovel's squalid walls;
Drive thee from the land of crimes,
Houseless, into foreign climes,
There to sicken, there to sigh,
Steep thy soul in tears, and die—
Like a flower from summer's glow,
Withering on the Polar snow."

"Church bedew'd with martyrs' blood,
Mother of the wise and good!
Temple of our smiles and tears,
Hoary with the frost of years!
Holy church, eternal, true!
What for thee will bread-tax do?
It will strip thee bare as she
Whom a despot stripp'd for thee;
Of thy surplice make thy pall,
Low'r thy pride, and take thy all—
Save thy truth, establish'd well,
Which—when spire and pinnacle,
Gorgeous arch, and figured stone,
Cease to tell of glories gone—
Still shall speak of thee and Him Whom adore the Seraphim."

"Power, which, likest Heaven's, might seem Glorious once in freedom's beam;
Once by tyrants felt and fear'd,
Still as freedom's dust revered!
Throne, established by the good,
Not unstain'd with patriot blood,
Not unwatch'd by patriot fears,
Not unwept by patriot tears!

What shall bread-tax do for thee,
Venerable Monarchy?
Dreams of evil, spare my sight!
Let that horror rest in night."

"Winhill" is a poem which, in many passages, may challenge comparison with Coleridge's "Hymn in the Vale of Chamouni." The conclusion will be recognised as a brilliant specimen of the genuine sublime even by those who differ most from the political principles of the writer:—

"Thy voice is like thy Father's, dreadful storm!
Earth hears his whisper, when thy clouds are torn;
And Nature's tremour bids our sister-worm
Sink in the ground. But they who laugh to scorn
The trampled heart which want and toil have worn,
Fear thee, and laugh at Him, whose warning word
Speaks from thy clouds, on burning billows borne;
For, in their hearts, his voice they never heard,
Ne'er felt his chastening hand, nor pined with hope deferred.

"O Thou whose whispering is the thunder! Power
Eternal, world-attended, yet alone!
O give, at least, to labour's hopeless hour
That peace, which thou deny'st not to a stone!
The famine-smitten millions cease to groan;
When wilt Thou hear their mute and long despair?
Lord, help the poor! for they are all thy own.
Wilt Thou not help? did I not hear Thee swear
That Thou would'st tame the proud, and grant their victims' prayer?"

"Methought I saw THREE in the dreams of sleep.
This mountain, Father, groan'd beneath thy heel!
Thy other foot was placed on Kinder's steep;
Before thy face I saw the planets reel,
While earth and skies shone bright as molten steel;
For under all the stars Thou took'st thy stand,
And bad'st the ends of heaven behold and feel,
That thou to all Thy worlds had'st stretch'd thine hand,
And curs'd for evermore the Legion-Friend of Land!"

"He is accursed!" said the sons of light,
As in their bowers of bliss they listen'd pale;
"He is accursed!" said the comets, bright
With joy; and star to star a song of bale
Sang, and sun told to sun the dismal tale,
"He is accursed!" till the light shall fade
To horror in heaven's courts, and glory veil
Her beams, before the face of Truth betray'd;
Because he curs'd the Land, which God a blessing made!"

"He is accursed!" said the Prince of Hell;
And—like a Phidian statue, mountain-vast—
Stooping from rocks, black, yet unquenchable,
The pale shade of his faded glory cast
Over the blackness of black fire, aghast—
Black-burning seas, that ever black will burn;
"He is accursed!" and while hell shall last,
Him and his prayer heaven's marble roof will spurn,
Who curs'd the blessed sod, and bade earth's millions mourn!"

The fervid fire of the ancient lyric appears in every line of the following hymn. Tyrtæus never uttered more stirring strains; and the righteousness of his cause gives Elliott a moral sublimity which was wanting in his Greek prototype:—

"Lord! to the rose-thy light and air
Impart the glory which they share;
To air's embrace her sweets she owes—
With morn's warm kiss her beauty glows:
Give us Freedom! Give us Freedom! Free Trade!"

"Hark! how it floats the vale along!
'Tis music's voice—'tis Nature's song!
It charms the woods, the rocks, the skies;
And hark! how echo's soul replies!
Give us Freedom! &c."

"The lone flower hears the skylark sing,
And trembles like his raptur'd wing;
But pays the song that cheer'd and bless'd,
With dewdrops, shed beside his nest.
Give us Freedom! &c."

"The wild bird hears the foodful seed
To farthest wilds, where birds would feed:
Lo! food springs up where hunger died,
And beauty clothes the desert wide!
Give us Freedom! &c."

"Streams trade with clouds, seas trade with heav'n,
Air trades with light, and is forgiv'n;
While man would make all climes his own,
But, chain'd by man, laments alone.
Give us Freedom! &c."

"Where torrid climes intensely glow,
Lo! trade buys gold with polar snow;
Then let Bourdeaux hire Glasgow's loom,
And in our hearts Gaul's vintage bloom!
Give us Freedom! &c."

"Thy winds, O God! are free to blow;
Thy streams are free to chime and flow;
Thy clouds are free to roam the sky;
Let man be free his arts to ply!
Give us Freedom! &c."

"The fiends would chain the winds and sea,
Who furnish men and libel thee;
Lord! give us hope! O banish fear;
'From every face wipe every tear!
Give us Freedom! &c."

There is a vindictive feeling in another of these hymns which removes it a little beyond the range of our sympathies; but we quote it both for its fervid force, and still more for the note of warning which it strikes in tones not to be mistaken:—

"Lord! bid our palaced worms their vileness know,
Bleach them with famine till they earn their bread!
And, taught by pain to feel a brother's woe,
Marvel that honest labour toils unfed!"

* It was a maxim of the Roman law, that whoever made his property a nuisance, should cease to be a man of property; and this maxim was but a commentary on the unwritten law of God—unwritten, or, with the pen of desolation, written over the face of fallen empires. When the patricians of Rome destroyed the Licinian law, and monopolised the soil, did not their heads then ever after fall like poppies?

"They never felt how vain it is to seek
From bread-taxed trade its interdicted gain;
How hard to toil, from dreary week to week,
And, ever labouring, labour still in vain.

"They never heard their children's grim despair
Cry, 'Give us work, ere want and death prevail!'
Then seek in crime, or in desponding prayer,
A refuge from the bread-tax crowded jail.

"They never saw the matron's breaking heart
Break slowly o'er her son's desponding sigh;
Nor watch'd her hopeless mate, when glad to part
From all he lov'd and left beneath the sky.

"They heed not, though the widow wrings her hands
Above her wo-worn husband's nameless grave,
When her last boy departs for distant lands,
Rather than live, or die, a bread-tax'd slave!"

"But, Lord, thou hearest when the sufferer cries!
Thou markest when the honest heart is rent!
Thou hearest when the broken-hearted dies!
And thou wilt pardon when thy foes repent.

"Then, let them kneel—oh, not to us, but thee!
For judgment, Lord, to thee alone belongs!
But we are petrified with misery,
And turn'd to marble by a life of wrongs!"

There is exquisite beauty in the following lines:—

"Star!—brightest far of all that beam
O'er nightly hill, on wood and stream!—
Fair is thy light o'er wilds afar,
And lovely is thy silence, Star!
How calm thou art! while forests rave,
And tempests wing the groaning wave.

"What hand unseen hath rent thy shroud?
Black rolls on high the broken cloud:
Lo! Care walks here with troubled eye,
To chase thee through the hurried sky!
Why, what art thou? A world like this,
Of weeping toil and fleeting bliss?"

"A world where wretches curse their birth,
And whence they eye the bread-tax'd earth—
A star to them, as thou to me?
Then, frantic in their misery,
Wish they could mount the maneless wind,
To leave their woes and thee behind?"

"O for my mother's wormy bed!
Would I were as the dust I tread!
That me no more might power enthral,
And weave for Hope a funeral pall!
Or lawless law, his helpless slave
Fling, shrieking, over rock and wave!"

"Then, gentle earth! to this sad heart
Ere venom'd fangs no more would dart!
But oft, with many a cherished tear,
A form of grace might visit here;
And oft bend o'er her poet's stone,
Like a torn willow all alone.

"Star! would'st thou then make haste to streak,
Through widowed locks, a wither'd cheek,
And on her forehead, once so fair,
In shadow, paint her faded hair?
O for repose! my soul is press'd
Down, down to earth, and yearns for rest."

The simplicity of the following stanzas, and the tone of moral earnestness pervading the appeal they make, recommend them to the memory of the head and the sympathy of heart:—

"The gnat sings through its little day;
The tiniest weeds, how glad are they!
Man only lives, on tears and sighs,
A living death before he dies!"

"Yet while the tax-gorged lords of land
Blast toil's stout heart, and skill's right hand,
We curse not them who curse the soil;
We only ask for 'leave to toil!'"

"For labour, food—to us our own;
For woven wool, a mutton bone;
A little rest, a little corn,
For weary man, to trouble born!"

"But not the sneer of them we feed!
Their workhouse graves! their chains for need!
The dying life of blighted flowers!
And early death for us and ours!"

"We only ask to toil and eat!
But hungrier men with us compete;
For they who tax our bread, and smile,
Deprive of bread our sister idle!"

We must make room for another of a different character:—

THE UNWRITTEN WORD.

"Hast thou not spoken, God,
When wrongs unchain the slave;
And slaves make every sod
A slave's or tyrant's grave?"

"Dost thou not speak to all,
When names made bright by thee,
Blaze comet-like, and fall
From heaven to obloquy?"

"How like a trumpet's blast,
By thee in whirlwind blown,
Thy stern Napoleon past
Through shrieks of states o'erthrown!"

"What crush'd him, disarray'd,
When perish'd man and steed?
Thy outraged laws of trade!
They crush'd him like a weed!"

"A voice of many sighs,
Woe's still small voice of doom,
Whisper'd—'and seas and skies
Sang, 'Lo, the Island-Tomb!'"

"For hosts, of many tongues,
That voice array'd in might;
A universe of wrongs
Arm'd wrongers for the right."

"But curs'd by battles won,
What learn'd they, triumph-taught?
That victory, self-undone,
Hath lost the fight unfought."

"Napoleon could not shake
What pigmies have overthrown!
O outraged England, wake!
O Nature, claim thy own!"

"When shall we hear again
Thy still small whisper, God?
O break the bondman's chain!
Uncurse the tax-plough'd sod!"

"If still thy name is love,
Be Labour's sons thy care!
And from thy earth remove
The vermin all can spare."

"Deaf reptiles—they devour
The honey and the tree,
Root, branches, fruit, and flower:
But not our trust in thee!"

Space compels us to omit much more which we had marked for extract; but we lament this the less, because the cheapness and beauty of this volume must ensure for it a general circulation among all who admire genius, and desire to see justice to humanity the proud achievement of our generation.

LODGERS' RIGHT TO VOTE FOR MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT.—The Court of Common Pleas, under the provisions of the late Registration Act, has decided that a "room" is within the meaning of the Reform Act, such a "building" as will confer the right of voting upon its occupier.

The number of cattle, sheep, and pigs, imported last year, under the new tariff, amount only to 2099, whilst during the preceding year it was 5316.

THE FUNDS.

| | Sat. Mar. 9 | Mon. Mar. 11 | Tues. Mar. 12 | Wed. Mar. 13 | Thurs. Mar. 14 | Fri. Mar. 15 |
|----------------------|----------------|-----------------|------------------|-----------------|-------------------|-----------------|
| Bank Stock..... | Shut | Shut | Shut | Shut | Shut | Shut |
| 3 per Ct. Red. Ann. | Shut | Shut | Shut | Shut | Shut | Shut |
| 3 per Ct. Con. Ann. | 98½ | 98½ | 98½ | 98½ | 98½ | 98½ |
| 34 per Ct. Red. Ann. | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| 34 per Ct. Ann. new | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ |
| Long An. Rk. 1860 | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| Cons. for Acc. .. | 98½ | 98½ | 98½ | 98½ | 98½ | 98½ |
| Exc. Bills .. | 73 pm. | 71 2 | 70 2 | 70 3 | 70 3 | — |
| Ind. Bds. und. 10000 | — | 88 90 | 88 90 | — | — | — |
| India Stock | 282 | 283 4 | — | 285 | 286½ | — |
| Belgian | — | 104½ | 104 5 | 104 | 104 5 | — |
| Brazilian | 81 | 81½ | 79½ | 81½ | 82½ | — |
| Chilian | — | 101 | — | 104 5 | 104 5 | — |
| Columb. ex. Venes. | 14½ | 14½ | 14½ | 14½ | 14½ | 16 |
| Danish | 101½ | 101½ | 101½ | 101½ | 101½ | — |
| Dutch 5 per Cent. | 56½ | 57 | 57½ | 57½ | 57½ | 57½ |
| Dutch 2½ per Ct. | 36 | 36 | 36 | 36 | 36 | 36 |
| Mexican, 1837 .. | 47 | 46½ | 46½ | 47 | 46½ | 47 |
| Portuguese, conv. | — | 38½ | 38½ | 38 | 38 | 38 |
| Buenos Ayres .. | 25½ | 25½ | 25 | 25½ | 25½ | 25½ |
| Spanish 5 per Ct. | 35½ | 35½ | 35½ | 35½ | 35½ | 35½ |
| Do. 3 per Ct. | 30½ | 30 | 30 | 30½ | 30½ | 30½ |
| Peruvian | — | — | — | — | — | — |

MARKETS.

CORN MARKET.

MARK-LANE, Monday, March 11.—The supply of Wheat from Essex and Kent was very short this morning; the condition of most of it was very inferior. The best dry samples sold readily at last week's rates, but other descriptions of English and Foreign Wheat met a slow sale. There was a good supply of Barley, and last week's prices were barely maintained. Though the supply of Beans and Peas was not large, they were not taken off so readily as last Monday, and other prices of that day were with difficulty supported. In addition to a good supply of Oats during last week, most of which remained on hand, there were several cargoes fresh up this morning from Lincolnshire and Yorkshire. The sales were very limited, at a decline of 6d. from this day week.

S. H. LUCAS and SON.

Currency per imperial measure.

| | | | |
|---------------------|------------|------------------------|------------|
| Wheat, English, Red | 45s to 55s | Peas, Maple | 28s to 30s |
| New, do., Old | 52s to 61s | Malt, Pale Suffolk and | — |
| Do., do., White | 60s to 68s | Norfolk | 54s to 58s |
| New, do., White | 60s to 68s | Chevalier | 60s to 63s |
| Old, do., do. | 60s to 68s | Brown | 58s to 60s |
| Dantzic | 57s to 63s | Oats, English Feed | 20s to 22s |
| Stettin | 50s to 57s | Do. Short | 21s to 22s |
| Barley, Malt | 34s to 38s | Scotch Feed | 21s to 22s |
| Distilling | 32s to 34s | Do. Potato | 23s to 25s |
| Grinding | 28s to 32s | Irish Feed | 19s to 20s |
| Beans, Tick | 26s to 27s | Do. Short | 20s to 22s |
| Harrow | 28s to 30s | Do. Black | 19s to 20s |
| Pigeon | 32s to 34s | Do. Galway | 17s to 19s |
| Old Harrow | 33s to 34s | Flour, town made and | — |
| Peas, White | 28s to 30s | best country marks | 45s to 50s |
| Do., Bollers | 31s to 33s | Norfolk and Buf. | — |
| Grey | 26s to 28s | folk | 40s to 44s |

Account of CORN, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 4th to the 9th of March, 1844, both days inclusive.

| | Wheat. | Barley. | Oats. | Beans. | Peas. |
|---------------|--------|---------|-------|--------|-------|
| English | 5322 | 8084 | 3473 | 1867 | 717 |
| Scotch | 167 | 1560 | 3702 | 25 | — |
| Irish | — | 198 | 16838 | — | — |
| Foreign | 2350 | — | — | — | — |

Flour, 7593 sacks, 2065 bls. Malt, 10816 qrs.

MARK-LANE, Friday, March 15.—There are very short supplies of English Wheat, Barley, and Oats since Monday; not a single Irish or Foreign vessel has arrived during the week with any description of grain. There is scarcely any business doing, and prices are nominally the same as on Monday. There was no alteration in the duties yesterday. The inquiry which we noticed last week for Egyptian Beans has ceased, in consequence of the holders at Liverpool having been willing to accept rather lower rates than the holders here; some sales have been made there at 18s. per quarter.

S. H. LUCAS and SON.

Account of Corn, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 11th to the 15th of March, both inclusive.

| | English. | Irish. | Foreign. |
|--------------|----------|--------|----------|
| Wheat | 1410 | — | — |
| Barley | 2180 | — | — |
| Oats | 840 | — | — |

Flour 1290 sacks.

A WEEKLY REPORT OF THE NUMBER OF QUARTERS, and the AVERAGE PRICE OF CORN and GRAIN, sold in the several Counties of England and Wales (comprising the Two Hundred and Ninety Towns named in the Act of the 5th Vic., cap. 14), which governs Duty.

WEEK ENDED MARCH 8, 1844.

| | WHEAT. | BARLEY. | OATS. | BEANS. |
|-------------|---------|-------------|--------|-------------|
| | Qrs. | Aver. price | Qrs. | Aver. price |
| Weekly | | s. d. | | s. d. |
| Averages .. | 104,694 | 56 0 | 81,358 | 53 6 |
| Aggregate | | s. d. | | s. d. |
| Averages .. | 54 4 | 83 5 | 19 6 | 30 8 |
| Duty | 18 0 | 5 0 | 7 0 | 11 8 |

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, MARCH 12.

BANKRUPTS.

- J. SCHOLEFIELD, Cheapside, cutler. [Shield and Harwood, Queen-street, Cheapside.]
 W. SMITH, Strand, printer. [Webber, Caroline-street, Bedford-square.]
 T. ADAMS, Newport, Isle of Wight, publican. [Foster, Jermyn-street, St. James's.]
 C. EICK, Rotherhithe, iron rivet manufacturer. [Taylor, Clement's-lane, Lombard-street.]
 A. SPARKER, Jewin-crescent, Jewin-street, City, wine and spirit merchant. [Chisholm, Cook's-court, Lincoln's-inn.]
 W. POTT, Macclesfield, silk throwster. [Abbott, Charlotte-street; E. and R. Bennett, Manchester.]
 T. MILLAR, Liverpool, hosier and draper. [Abbott, Charlotte-street, Bedford-sq.; E. and R. Bennett, Manchester.]
 R. ALKOP, Manchester, grocer. [Johnson and Co., Temple; Hitchcock and Co., Manchester.]
 R. CROWDER, West Auckland, Durham, ironfounder. [Stevenson, Darlington; Burn, Great Carter-lane, Doctors'-commons.]
 W. SMITH, Nottingham, smallwareman. [Cowley, Nottingham; Mottram and Co., Birmingham.]
 G. WOOD, Ingram, Northumberland, banker. [Nicholls and Co., Bedford-row; Kent, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.]
 G. LIMBERT, Boroughbridge, Yorkshire, shopkeeper. [Williamson and Co., Gray's-inn; Blanchard and Co., York.]
 C. A. STOREY, Leeds, corn and flour merchant. [Summers Princes-street, Leicester-square; Hay, Leeds.]

DIVIDENDS.

- April 4. R. Brain, Rodney-street, Pentonville, copperplate printer—April 3. E. Cooper, High-street, St. Giles's, stationer—April 3. R. H. and J. Frary, Oxford-street, carpet warehousemen—April 4. J. Wolland and W. Wolland, Kxeter, turners—April 4. P. and M. D. Protheroe, Bristol, West India merchants—April 4. J. Harford and W. W. Davies, Bristol, iron masters—April 3. C. F. Dawson, Birmingham, victualler—April 3. M. Cook, Evesham, Worcestershire, hotel keeper—April 3. S. Cook, Dudley, Worcestershire, draper—April 3. C. Powell, Coventry, watch manufacturer—April 3. W. Stone, Birmingham, printer—April 3. J. H. Perryman, Birmingham, bookseller—April 4. T. Redshaw, Bourn, Lincolnshire, saddler.

CERTIFICATES.

- April 12. R. Tebay, Winchester, plumber—April 2. J. Reaveley, Hammond's-wharf, Queenhithe, paper commission agent—April 2. W. and I. Dunnage, Tooley-street, plumbers—April 2. C. Parlow, Blackman-street, Southwark, tailor—April 2. T. Alford, Harrow-road, Paddington, licensed victualler—April 3. G. Chamberlain, Wivenhoe, Essex, shipowner—April 2. H. Jones, Cheapside, jeweller—April 3. W. Stinton, Duke-street, Grosvenor-square, cook.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.

- W. GEDDES, Aberdeen, commission agent—A. MARSHALL, Aberdeen, brassfounder—D. MINTYRE, Glasgow, grocer—J. CALDER, Redmill, Whitburn, victual dealer—H. BROWN, jun., and Co., Glasgow, ship and insurance brokers.

MR. BEARD'S DAGUERRETYPE, or PHOTOGRAPHIC PORTRAITS.—These inimitable and much-admired Portraits, in which further improvements have lately been effected, are taken by the Patentee, at 84, King William-street, City; 34, Parliament-street; and at the Royal Polytechnic Institution, 809, Regent-street. By whom, also, Licenses are granted for exercising the Invention in provincial towns and districts.

CHINESE COLLECTION and GRAND DISTRIBUTION (admission free), value £5000, on the principle of the Art-Union, in prizes, consisting of Chinese curiosities and Parisian novelties, on April 6, at the Chinese and Parisian Magazine, 7, Old Jewry. Every subscriber will obtain a handsome prize, consisting of Chinese jars, pictures, &c., or a splendid package of French ingenuity and taste. This division will take place under the highest patronage. The prizes are now on show at the above establishment. Tickets, 6s. each, may be obtained by applying as above, or at the retail branches of the Chinese and Parisian Magazine, 44, Foultry, and corner of the Old Jewry, Cheapside; also of Hewitt and Co., 16, Philpot-lane. W. Ancier and P. Ledoux, rue de Lombardes, Paris, will supply the Parisian articles, and the indefatigable exertions of the proprietors for the last ten years will furnish a magnificent collection from the Celestial Empire.

TAYLOR, Brothers, and HEWETT, Chinese and Parisian Magazine, wholesale department, 7, Old Jewry, Cheapside.

THE AMERICAN ROCKING-CHAIR.—None are genuine unless they have "Luck, Kent, and Cumming," painted on the bottom. This chair, so much admired by all who have visited America, for the remarkable ease, pleasure, and comfort which it affords, is just imported, and for sale at the extensive Carpet and Upholstery Establishments of LUCK, KENT, and CUMMING, No. 4, Regent-street; Carpenter's Hall, 68, London-wall; and WM. CUMMING and Co., 98, Hatton-garden. It is asserted with confidence that there is no piece of furniture in use in civilised society more sought after and approved of when known. The price, 32s., with a liberal discount to the trade. Stout persons and Invalids will find these chairs invaluable.

GOWLAND'S LOTION, for Purifying the Skin and Preserving the Complexion.—The use of GOWLAND'S LOTION is speedily followed by the disappearance of every species of eruptive malady, discolouration, &c., and the establishment of a pure Surface of the Skin, accompanied by the brilliant circulation which constitutes the "Tint of Beauty," whilst as a refresher it preserves the most delicate Complexion, and sustains to a protracted period the softness of texture and vivacity peculiar to earlier years. "Robert Whaw, London," is in white letters on the government stamp, without which none is genuine. Price 3s. 9d., 6s. 6d., quart 12s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Medicine Vendors.

STOOPING OF THE SHOULDERS AND CONTRACTION OF THE CHEST, so injurious in Young Persons and oppressive to Invalids and the Indolent, entirely prevented, and gently and effectually removed, by the occasional use of the Patent ST. JAMES'S CHEST-EXPANDER, which is light, simple, easily employed outwardly or inwardly, without bands beneath the arms, uncomfortable constraint, or impediment to exercise. The great improvement it causes in the figure is immediately apparent; but the permanent benefit of this invention is its obvious tendency to prevent the incursion of consumption and other pulmonary diseases in youth, and to afford a comfortable support to the chest and back in the aged and weakly, or those who are accustomed to sedentary occupations. Full particulars may be obtained on application to Mr. A. Binjon, 40, Tavistock-street, Strand, London, by enclosing a postage stamp.

SEA SICKNESS—THOMPSON'S REMEDY.—This nearly tasteless and easily administered remedy has proved efficacious in upwards of 80 cases in 100, when the directions for taking it have been observed, and will be found invaluable for delicate Females and Children travelling by sea. Sold wholesale by T. Thompson and Son, chemists, Liverpool; W. Edwards, 67, St. Paul's Churchyard, London; J. and R. Raines and Co., Dundee; F. Lockhart, and Co., H. C. Baildon, Edinburgh; the Apothecaries' Company, Glasgow; Wm. Jackson, 10, Lower Macleanburgh-street, Dublin; A. Mordaunt, Southampton; Evans, Sons, and Co., and J. J. Jackson and Co., Liverpool; and by most respectable Druggists in the principal seaports in the United Kingdom, in packages, price 3s. 9d., and in tin cases, equal to six packages, price 11s. A post office order for 2s. 11d. will ensure its prompt return by post.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH, Mr. THOMAS'S RUCCIANUM. price 4s. 6d.—Patronised by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. This valuable RUCCIANUM for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity, is far superior to anything ever before used, as it is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and in a short time becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary. It arrests all further progress of decay, and renders them again useful in mastication. All persons can use Mr. THOMAS'S RUCCIANUM themselves with ease, without the aid of a dentist, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 68, Berners-street, Oxford-street, price 4s. 6d., and will be sent by post to any part of the kingdom.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. Thomas continues to supply the loss of teeth, and has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, which will be found very superior to all others, as they will never decay nor become discoloured, and their perfect resemblance to nature defies detection even by the closest observer. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. The sharper will be found less than most dentists.—Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 68, Berners-street, Oxford-street. At home from Eleven till Four.

SMITH'S STANDARD LIBRARY.

Works recently published.
 ESSAYS, By R. W. Emerson. 2s.
 A JOURNEY ROUND MY ROOM; from the French of Count Xavier DE MAISTRE. 1s.
 STRIFE AND PEACE; a Tale by FRANCESCA BURNER. 1s. 6d.
 THE H— FAMILY. By FRANCESCA BURNER. 2s.
 THE PRESIDENT'S DAUGHTERS. By FRANCESCA BURNER. 2s. 6d.
 CARY'S DANTE. Revised and corrected by the Translator. 6s.
 NATURE, an Essay, and Orations, By RALPH WARDO EMERSON. 1s. 6d.
 SINTRAM AND HIS COMPANIONS. A New Translation from the German of FOUQUE. 1s.
 * Every Work is published in this Series, a list of which may be had at the Publisher's.

London: William Smith, 115, Fleet-street.

In 8vo., price only 1s., or postage free, 1s. 6d.,
THE NEW BRITISH TARIFF; with the Old
 Duties in juxtaposition, the net amount received on each article, the new clauses of the Act of Parliament, the Corn Duties, and an Index. Official Edition.

In 8vo., price 2s. 6d., or postage free, 3s. 6d.,
THE NEW AMERICAN TARIFF, alphabetically
 arranged; showing the Old and New Duties in juxtaposition, with the Legal Provisions relating thereto, and a variety of other useful information. Official Edition.

In 8vo., price only 1s., or postage free, 1s. 6d.,
THE NEW BANKRUPT AND INSOLVENT
 ACTS, with Commentaries and Indices. By a Barrister.
 London, James Gilbert, 49, Paternoster-row.

Now ready, Second Edition, price 4s. 6d.
THE PAPAL and HIERARCHICAL SYSTEM

compared with the RELIGION of the NEW TESTAMENT.
 "A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land; the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means, and my people love to have it so, and what will ye do in the end thereof?"—Jer. v. 30, 31.
 "So clear and scriptural are the views put forth, and so truly Protestant, that the Author in writing and publishing the work has conferred an inestimable benefit, and at a most seasonable time, upon the Christian church."—Evangelical Magazine, Aug., 1843.
 "A seasonable and able discussion of a subject which will, ere long, command the rapt attention of the civilised world."—Nonconformist, Sept., 1843.
 Just published, price One Shilling.

HYDROPATHY DEFENDED by FACTS; or, the COLD WATER CURE shown to be as safe in Practice as it is rational in Theory. By J. COUGRAN, Surgeon, R.N., Hantsgate.
 Complete in 1 vol., at 3s. 6d., originally published in 2 vols. at 21s. The Seventh Thousand of this Edition.

ESSAYS on the PRINCIPLES of MORALITY, and on the Private and Political Rights and Obligations of Mankind. By JONATHAN DYMOND, Author of 'An Enquiry into the Accordancy of War with the Principles of Christianity,' &c.
 In this work will be found some clear views on the popular questions of the day—the Education of the People, and the Connexion between Church and State. Price 1s.

ESSAY on the ACCORDANCY of WAR with the PRINCIPLES of CHRISTIANITY. By JONATHAN DYMOND.
 "No one can hope to overthrow the reasoning of Dymond without denying the truth of the book (the Bible) from which he deduces his arguments."—Second Edition, with Additions and Corrections, price 4s. 6d.

THE WATER CURE. By E. S. ABDEY, A.M.,
 Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge, and Author of "A Journal, &c., in the United States."
 Mr. Abdey is already favourably known to the public as an author, and his present able work may be safely recommended as containing the best exposition of the principles of Hydrotherapy, as well as an interesting and convincing statement of facts.

London: Charles Gilpin, 5, Bishopsgate Without.

ATLAS PRIZES ESSAYS AND SUPPLEMENT.

—Another Portion of the PRIZE ESSAY of £100, "On the Causes of, and Remedies for, the Distress of the Country," awarded to S. LAING, Esq., late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, will be published in the Atlas of Saturday next, together with a LITERARY SUPPLEMENT of eight pages, embracing Reviews of new Books, Music, Fine Arts, Science, &c.

The SECOND PRIZE ESSAY of £50, awarded to the Rev. JOSEPH ANOUS, M.A., will follow the completion of the above.

ADJUDICATORS.

SIR DAVID BURNETT, D.C.L., F.R.S., Vice-President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and Principal of the United Colleges of St. Salvator's and St. Leonard's, St. Andrew's.
 HENRY MERIVALE, Esq., M.A., of Balliol College, Oxford, late Professor of Political Economy in that University.
 GEORGE PAYNE, Esq., M.A., Professor of Political Economy, and late Fellow of Trinity College, in the University of Cambridge.
 THOMAS TOULKE, Esq., F.R.S., and Vice-President of the Statistical Society of London.

JOHN WILSON, M.A., Oxford, F.R.S.E., Professor of Moral Philosophy and of Political Economy in the University of Edinburgh.
 The Arbiters have decided that SAMUEL LAING, Esq., late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, the writer of the Essay bearing the initials H.L., is entitled to the First Premium of £100;—that the Rev. J. ANOUS, M.A., the writer of the Essay bearing the initials B.C.E., is entitled to the Second Premium of £50;—and that EDWARD BARNES, jun., Esq., editor of the Leeds Mercury, and author of "The History of the Cotton Manufacture," &c., the writer of the Essay bearing the initials L. T. S. R. P., is entitled to the Third Premium of £25.

CANDIDATE, ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT.
 On Saturday, the 17th February, the publication of the First of the Three Prize Essays commenced in the columns of the Atlas, and will be continued weekly until the whole is completed. To make room for this important and valuable matter, a portion of the Reviews of Books, Music, Fine Arts, Science, &c., which usually appear weekly in the Atlas, will be reserved for a MONTHLY LITERARY SUPPLEMENT, to be presented gratuitously to subscribers. By this arrangement the readers of the Atlas will obtain complete copies of the Essays, without diminishing the general interest of the publication; and, as they are the productions of gentlemen eminent for their powerful attainments, it is hoped that their labours will effect their praiseworthy objects, and be the means of indicating those measures which may tend to the alleviation of the distresses of the country.

The Atlas is a General Newspaper and Journal of Literature, established eighteen years, especially adapted for respectable families. Price 3s. 6d. An Edition for India and the Colonies is published monthly, so arranged as to be peculiarly fitted for readers abroad.

Atlas Office, 8, Southampton-street, London.

AGRICULTURAL IMPROVEMENT.—SPRING
WHEAT.—Humphreys's Farmers' Compound, manufactured on a new principle, so as to present a cheap Manure, of greater power and more extensive usefulness than the Guano, and without its caustic rankness and liability to wash out of the soil. From its wholesome character, it is unrivalled for Garden Culture, and as a top-dressing for all Spring Crops. Per acre for WHEAT, BARLEY, &c., with a bad soil, five cwt.; with better land, three or two. GRASS, on the average, two cwt.; TURNIPS, three or two. Price 12s. per cwt. Agents, DAVY, MACKINNOCK, and CO., Manufacturing Chemists, 105, Upper Thames-street, London.

HUMPHREY'S INODOROUS SOLUBLE COMPOUND, to promote the Growth and Beauty of Flowers. A few grains dissolved in the water and used occasionally are effective. See Gardener's Chronicle, &c. Sold in bottles, 1s. 9d. each, with full Instructions, by the leading Druggists and Seedsmen in town and country.

PATRONIZED AND SANCTIONED BY HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN, H.R.H. PRINCE ALBERT, THE ROYAL FAMILY, AND THE SEVERAL COURTS OF EUROPE.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the Growth
 and for Preserving and Beautifying the Human Hair. Price 2s. 6d.—7s. Family Bottles (equal to 4 small) 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s.

CAUTION.—SPURIOUS COMPOSITIONS are frequently offered for sale under a FICTITIOUS name or the word "GENUINE." It is therefore imperative on purchasers to see that the words "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" are on the Wrapper of each bottle, and on the back of the wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 29,025 letters. All others are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS. The principle on which "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" is prepared, is confined solely to the knowledge and practice of A. ROWLAND and SON, who are still at an immense expense in completing its preparation, and the amalgamation of its PURELY VEGETABLE MATERIALS renders abortive any attempt to discover its component parts.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for Improving and Beautifying the Skin and Complexion. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included.
ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, renders the Teeth beautifully White and preserves the Gums. Price 2s. 9d. per box, duty included.

CAUTION.—It is imperative on purchasers to see that the word "ROWLAND'S" is on the Wrapper of each article. For the protection of the Public from fraud and imposition, the Honorable Commissioners of Her Majesty's Stamps have authorized the Proprietors' Signature to be engraved on the Government Stamp, thus, A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden, which is affixed to the Kalydor and Odonto. Sold by them and by Chemists and Perfumers.

* All others are SPURIOUS IMITATIONS !!!

HOLY GILD OF ST. JOSEPH AND OUR BLESSED LADY.

ON SUNDAY NEXT, 17th instant, FESTIVAL
 OF ST. PATRICK, Apostle of Ireland, DANIEL O'CONNELL, Esq., M.P., will be solemnly invested with the FESTIVE ROBE and SACRED INSIGNIA of the HOLY GILD, at the Catholic Chapel, 11, GINLA-STREET, Ratcliff Highway, by the Rev. JOHN MOON, Chaplain of the Brotherhood. The solemn inauguration will take place at six o'clock p.m. precisely. Admission by Tickets, to be had of Mrs. Little, 34, Regent-street, Covent-garden; T. Jones, 63, Paternoster-row; and of Mr. Muldoon, Virginia-street.
 N.B. No seats will be reserved after six o'clock.

RAMS FOR RAISING WATER without Labour,
 where a fall can be obtained—Deep Well Engines—Pumps of every description—Buildings heated by hot water, &c. Every description of Fountains erected by F. ROE, 70, STRAND, Ornamental and House Refractor.

TABLE CUTLERY at the Manufacturing Prices.
 Be not deceived by parties selling Cast-iron Goods, but go direct to GEORGE'S CUTLERY MANUFACTORY, 20, Crescent-street, Easton-square, or 15, Park-terrace, Camden-town.—Ivory Handle Table Knives from 12s. per doz.; Dessert, 9s.; Carvers, per pair, 4s. 6d.—N.B. Several thousand Second-hand Knives for sale or hire on very low terms.
 An Apprentice wanted.

BERDOE'S Superior REALLY WATERPROOF
PROCKS FOR THE PRESENT REASON.—An extensive variety of the above in NEW and greatly improved materials (in lieu of the wretched rubbish made by slop-sellers) now ready, guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever, and confidently recommended to those who regard a respectable appearance, or wish to avoid disappointment and vexation. First-rate Clothing of every description upon the lowest terms possible, consistent with true economy and ultimate satisfaction.
 W. BERDOE, Tailor, Waterproofer, &c., 69, Cornhill (north side).

THE NEW PATENT INKSTAND by RAT-
CLIFFE is free from the defects of those recently patented. The ink is drawn from the top, and remains clear and fluid after many months' use; is not affected by variation of temperature, easily cleaned, and, from its simplicity, cannot be got out of order. HYPPE and CO., London Agents, who continue to manufacture their Manifold Writer, as supplied to her Majesty's Stationery Office. Several letters, with a copy, result from one operation; is effective in its application, and very portable; and retains its properties in all climates. Price Ten Shillings.
 Paper and Envelope Warehouse, 61, Fleet-street.

EASE IN WALKING AND COMFORT TO THE
FEET.—HALL and CO., Wellington-street, Strand, London, Patentees of the PANNUS CORIUM, or Leather-Cloth Boots and Shoes, proved to be the softest and easiest ever worn for tender feet.—Also, their Elastic Boots and Shoes, which are drawn on without the trouble of lacing or buttoning, and afford much support to the ankle; and the India Rubber Gaiters, which effectively preserve the feet from damp and cold. Their Water-Proof Dresses for Gentlemen claim attention, 21s. the suit; Ladies' Gardes d'Armes, with Hoods, 18s. These articles can be carried in the pocket with convenience.

CARPETS.—Persons desirous of purchasing BRUSSELS CARPETS, of the best quality, will find a splendid selection at the Establishment of W. CUMMING and CO., 98, Hatton-garden. Being warehousemen, and very extensive buyers, they have determined to charge a single carpet at the wholesale price. A large stock of Kidderminster, Venetian, and other Carpeting. Agents for the new domestic luxury, "The American Rocking Chair."
 W. CUMMING and CO., 98, Hatton-garden.

CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE.—If the direct written testimony in favour of the purity and perfection of Barry's PATENT BRANDY, given, after analysis, by three of the most eminent Chemists of the day, needed any confirmation, it will be found in the fact, that it is employed, in preference to Foreign Brandy, under high medical direction, in many of the principal hospitals, infirmaries, and other public institutions in the kingdom; among which it may suffice to name Guy's, St. George's, and the Westminster Hospitals in the metropolis; and the Manchester, Bristol, and Brighton Infirmaries. Distillery, No. 7, Smithfield Bars, leading to St. John-street. Price, pale or coloured, in quantities not less than Two Gallons, Eighteen Shillings per Gallon.

DAYLIGHT AT NIGHT! CAMPHINE!
 The patent Camphine Lamp gives a rich light, surpassing Gas in purity and brilliancy; is simple in construction, and emits neither smoke nor smell. May be seen burning at F. Barnett's Furnishing Ironmongery and Lamp Warehouse, 35, Oxford-street, where a large assortment may be selected from, all at the lowest possible prices. Any Lamp Pillar may be fitted with a Camphine head. Patent Camphine Lamp Spirit, 3s. 6d. per gallon. Observed, 25, Oxford-street, one door west of Rathbone-place.
 Hall Lamps, 1s. 6d.; Ground Glass Patent Solar Lamps, from 2s. 6d.; Palmer's Patent Candle Lamps, from 6s. A most elegant assortment of Table, Bracket, Sideboard, and suspending Lamps, in ornate and bronze, at extraordinary low prices. Lamps cleaned or altered to the Solar principle. Lamp shades, 5s.; cottons, 4d. per doz. Palmer's Patent Candles, 6d. per lb.

THE NEW LIGHT.—A GREAT NOVELTY.
 The patent CAMPHINE LAMP gives a light of surpassing power, softness, and purity, without any kind of grease or dirt, smoke or smell. The lamp is simply and beautifully constructed, and can be fitted to any description of lamp, pedestal, or gas fitting. It is not easily put out of action. The Camphine (also a patent) is 4s. per gallon, and is so pure that if spilt on any article of dress or furniture will not leave either mark or stain, while it consumes so slowly that, at the cost of three farthings for two hours, it gives a light equal to twelve mould candles, without any attention. It will be found far less expensive than any, and incomparably superior to all existing lights. To be seen burning at Rippon and Burton's (sole wholesale and retail agents for English Patent Camphine).—N.B. The ONLY Patent Camphine Lamp has "Rippon and Burton, Wells-street, Oxford-street," conspicuously placed on its head. The public are cautioned against all not so marked.

BELL'S BALM OF ROSEMARY FOR
COUGHS is justly esteemed the safest and most certain medicine ever invented, and will be found to act like a charm in allaying coughs of every kind. Rosemary has long been used as a domestic remedy in cases of coughs and colds in the form of tea, or by infusing a few sprigs in gruel and taken at bedtime. The Balm possesses the medicinal properties of the plant, which are tonic, expectorant, and diaphoretic. It acts gently on the skin and mucous membrane of the lungs and bronchial tubes, thus carrying off the disease by perspiration and expectoration. One trial will prove its extraordinary powers. As a defence to the chest, BELL'S MEDICATED TISSUE PAPER will be found invaluable. Being impervious to air, it effectually excludes cold and damp, and simply requires to be pinned and worn outside the flannel in the form of a large plaster, or tacked to a piece of silk or any other light material.
 Preparing Agents—J. J. Balmer, Chemist, 89, St. John-street-road, London; and sold by Edwards, 67, St. Paul's; Bullock, Princess-street, Manchester; Priestley, Lord-street, Liverpool; Ross and Burton, Hull, &c. &c. In bottles 1s. 1d. and 2s. 9d.; and in sheets, 2d. each, or lined with silk, 1s. each. N.B. The paper can be sent by post.

FRAMPTON'S FILL OF HEALTH.
 Price 1s. 11d. per box.

THIS excellent Family FILL is a Medicine of long-tried efficacy for correcting all disorders of the Stomach and Bowels, the common symptoms of which are costiveness, flatulency, spasms, loss of appetite, sick headache, giddiness, sense of fullness after meals, distension of the eyes, drowsiness, and pains in the Stomach and Bowels. Indigestion, producing a torpid state of the Liver, and a consequent inactivity of the Bowels, causing a disorganisation of every function of the frame, will, in this most excellent preparation, by a little perseverance, be effectually removed. Two or three doses will convince the afflicted of its salutary effects. The Stomach will speedily regain its strength; a healthy action of the Liver, Bowels, and Kidneys, will rapidly take place; and, instead of listlessness, heat, pain, and jaundiced appearance, strength, activity, and renewed health will be the quick result of taking this medicine according to the directions accompanying each box; and if taken after too free an indulgence at table, they quickly restore the system to its natural state of repose.

Persons of a FULL HABIT, who are subject to headache, giddiness, drowsiness, and singing in the ears, arising from too great a flow of blood in the head, should never be without them, as many dangerous symptoms will be entirely relieved by their immediate use.

For FEMALES these Pills are most truly excellent, removing all obstructions; the distressing headache so very prevalent with the sex; depression of spirits, dulness of sight, nervous affections, blotches, pimples, and colouring of the skin, and give a healthy and juvenile bloom to the complexion. As a pleasant, safe, easy aperient, they unite the recommendation of a mild operation with the most successful effect, and require no purgative diet or confinement during their use. And for ELDERLY PEOPLE they will be found to be the most comfortable medicine hitherto prepared.

Sold by T. Prout, 339, Strand, London. Price 1s. 11d. and 2s. 6d. per box; and by the Vendors of Medicines generally throughout the Kingdom.
 Ask for FRAMPTON'S FILL OF HEALTH, and observe the name and address of "Thomas Prout, 339, Strand, London," on the Government Stamp.

London: Printed (at the office of Palmer and Clayton, Crown-court, North-street) by A. W. PAVSON, of Barton-on-Irwell, Lancashire, and of Fleet-street; and published by him at Ten Lucas's Office, 67, Fleet-street, on Saturday, March 16, 1844.

VAL
VILL.
S. and VIL.
Mr. of Hamp.
Mrs.

DOUR, every ion of so Ho.

CS., vices to ncom-s from vousand

OF
ity of rched rma ctable loch.
true

T.
The nther from vita,
Ma-
opepro-

HE aten-ored ntile butshou, vood lual with ing did oudeed do.

re's
heat rein's, the then-

in dis-ry be be or d

's
's
's

1
2
3

4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18 19 20 21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28
29
30
31
32
33
34
35
36
37
38
39
40
41
42
43
44
45
46
47
48
49
50
51
52
53
54
55
56
57
58
59
60
61
62
63
64
65
66
67
68
69
70
71
72
73
74
75
76
77
78
79
80
81
82
83
84
85
86
87
88
89
90
91
92
93
94
95
96
97
98
99
100

101
102
103
104
105
106
107
108
109
110
111
112
113
114
115
116
117
118
119
120
121
122
123
124
125
126
127
128
129
130
131
132
133
134
135
136
137
138
139
140
141
142
143
144
145
146
147
148
149
150
151
152
153
154
155
156
157
158
159
160
161
162
163
164
165
166
167
168
169
170
171
172
173
174
175
176
177
178
179
180
181
182
183
184
185
186
187
188
189
190
191
192
193
194
195
196
197
198
199
200

201
202
203
204
205
206
207
208
209
210
211
212
213
214
215
216
217
218
219
220
221
222
223
224
225
226
227
228
229
230
231
232
233
234
235
236
237 238
239
240
241
242
243
244
245
246
247
248
249
250
251
252
253
254
255
256
257
258
259
260
261
262
263
264
265
266
267
268
269
270
271
272
273
274
275
276
277
278
279
280
281
282
283
284
285
286
287
288
289
290
291
292
293
294
295
296
297
298
299
300

301
302
303
304
305
306
307
308
309
310
311
312
313
314
315
316
317
318
319
320
321
322
323
324
325
326
327
328
329
330
331
332
333
334
335
336
337
338
339
340
341
342
343
344
345
346
347
348
349
350
351
352
353
354
355
356
357
358
359
360
361
362
363
364 365
366
367
368
369
370
371
372
373
374
375
376
377
378
379
380
381
382
383
384
385
386
387
388
389
390
391
392
393
394
395
396
397
398
399
400

401
402
403
404
405
406
407
408
409
410
411
412
413
414
415
416
417
418
419
420
421
422
423
424
425
426
427
428
429
430
431
432
433
434
435
436
437
438
439
440
441
442
443
444
445
446
447
448
449
450
451
452
453
454
455
456
457
458
459
460
461
462
463
464
465
466
467
468
469
470
471
472
473
474
475
476
477
478
479
480
481
482
483
484
485
486
487
488
489
490
491
492
493
494
495
496
497
498
499
500

501 502
503
504
505
506
507
508
509
510
511
512
513
514
515
516
517
518
519
520
521
522
523
524
525
526
527
528
529
530
531
532
533
534
535
536
537
538
539
540
541
542
543
544
545
546
547
548
549
550
551
552
553
554
555
556
557
558
559
560
561
562
563
564
565
566
567
568
569
570
571
572
573
574
575
576
577
578
579
580
581
582
583
584
585
586
587
588
589
590
591
592
593
594
595
596
597
598
599
600

601
602
603
604
605
606
607
608
609
610
611
612
613
614
615
616
617
618
619
620
621
622
623
624
625
626
627
628
629
630
631
632
633
634
635
636
637
638
639
640
641
642
643
644
645
646
647
648
649
650
651
652
653
654
655
656
657
658
659
660
661
662
663
664
665
666
667
668
669
670
671
672
673
674
675
676
677
678
679
680
681
682
683
684
685
686
687
688
689
690
691
692
693
694
695
696
697
698
699
700

701
702
703
704
705
706
707
708
709
710
711
712
713
714
715
716
717
718
719
720
721
722
723
724
725
726
727
728
729
730
731
732
733 734
735
736 737
738
739
740
741
742
743
744
745
746
747 748
749
750
751
752
753
754
755
756
757
758
759
760
761
762
763
764
765
766
767
768
769
770
771
772
773
774
775
776
777
778
779
780
781
782
783
784
785
786
787
788
789
790
791
792
793
794
795
796
797
798
799
800

801
802
803
804
805
806
807
808
809
810
811
812
813
814
815
816
817
818
819
820
821
822
823
824
825
826
827
828
829
830
831
832
833
834
835
836
837
838
839
840
841
842
843
844
845
846
847
848
849
850
851
852
853
854
855
856
857
858
859
860
861
862
863
864
865
866
867
868
869
870
871
872
873
874
875
876
877
878
879
880
881
882
883
884
885
886
887
888
889
890
891
892
893
894
895
896
897
898
899
900

901
902
903
904
905
906
907
908 909
910
911
912
913
914
915
916
917
918
919
920
921
922
923
924
925
926
927
928
929
930
931
932
933
934
935
936
937
938
939
940
941
942
943
944
945
946
947
948
949
950
951
952
953
954
955
956
957
958
959
960
961 962
963
964
965
966
967
968
969
970
971
972
973
974
975
976
977
978
979
980
981
982
983
984
985
986
987
988
989
990
991
992
993
994
995
996
997
998
999
1000

1001
1002
1003
1004
1005
1006
1007
1008
1009
1010
1011
1012
1013
1014
1015
1016
1017
1018
1019
1020
1021
1022
1023
1024
1025
1026
1027
1028
1029
1030
1031
1032
1033
1034
1035
1036
1037
1038
1039
1040
1041
1042
1043
1044
1045
1046
1047
1048
1049
1050
1051
1052
1053
1054
1055
1056
1057
1058
1059
1060
1061
1062
1063
1064
1065
1066
1067
1068
1069
1070
1071
1072
1073
1074
1075
1076
1077
1078
1079
1080
1081
1082
1083
1084
1085
1086
1087
1088
1089
1090
1091
1092
1093
1094
1095
1096
1097
1098
1099
1100

1101
1102
1103
1104 1105
1106
1107 1108
1109
1110
1111
1112
1113
1114
1115
1116
1117
1118
1119
1120
1121
1122
1123
1124
1125
1126
1127
1128
1129
1130
1131
1132
1133
1134
1135
1136
1137
1138
1139
1140
1141
1142
1143
1144
1145
1146
1147
1148
1149
1150
1151
1152
1153
1154
1155
1156
1157
1158
1159
1160
1161
1162
1163
1164
1165
1166
1167
1168
1169
1170
1171
1172
1173
1174
1175
1176
1177
1178
1179
1180
1181
1182
1183
1184
1185
1186
1187
1188
1189
1190
1191
1192
1193
1194
1195
1196
1197
1198
1199
1200

1201
1202
1203
1204
1205
1206
1207
1208
1209
1210
1211
1212
1213
1214
1215
1216
1217
1218
1219
1220
1221
1222
1223
1224
1225
1226
1227
1228
1229
1230
1231
1232
1233
1234
1235
1236 1237
1238
1239
1240
1241
1242
1243
1244
1245
1246
1247
1248
1249
1250
1251
1252
1253
1254
1255
1256
1257
1258
1259
1260
1261
1262
1263
1264
1265
1266
1267
1268
1269
1270
1271
1272
1273
1274
1275
1276
1277
1278
1279
1280
1281
1282
1283
1284
1285
1286
1287
1288
1289
1290
1291
1292
1293
1294
1295
1296
1297
1298
1299
1300

1301
1302
1303
1304
1305
1306
1307
1308
1309
1310
1311
1312
1313
1314
1315
1316
1317
1318
1319
1320
1321
1322
1323
1324
1325
1326
1327
1328
1329
1330
1331
1332
1333
1334
1335
1336
1337
1338
1339
1340
1341
1342
1343
1344
1345
1346
1347
1348
1349
1350
1351
1352
1353
1354
1355
1356
1357
1358
1359
1360
1361
1362
1363
1364
1365
1366
1367
1368
1369
1370
1371
1372
1373
1374
1375
1376
1377
1378
1379
1380
1381
1382
1383
1384
1385
1386
1387
1388
1389
1390
1391
1392
1393
1394
1395
1396
1397
1398
1399
1400

1401
1402
1403
1404
1405
1406
1407
1408
1409
1410
1411
1412
1413
1414
1415
1416
1417
1418
1419
1420
1421
1422
1423
1424
1425
1426
1427
1428
1429
1430
1431
1432
1433
1434
1435
1436
1437
1438
1439
1440
1441
1442
1443
1444
1445
1446
1447
1448
1449
1450
1451
1452
1453
1454
1455
1456
1457
1458
1459
1460
1461
1462
1463
1464
1465
1466
1467
1468
1469
1470
1471
1472
1473
1474
1475
1476
1477
1478
1479
1480
1481
1482
1483
1484
1485
1486
1487
1488
1489
1490
1491
1492
1493
1494
1495
1496
1497
1498
1499
1500

THE LEAGUE.

No. 26.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 23, 1844.

[3d.]

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND, £100,000.

All subscribers of £1 and upwards to the ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUND FUND, will be entitled to, and receive a copy, weekly, of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have forwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the Offices of THE LEAGUE, Newall's-buildings, Manchester, or 87, Fleet-street, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND, are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council respectfully request that their friends, in all places where committees for raising subscriptions to the £100,000 Fund have not been already formed, will proceed to their formation as soon as possible, and transmit their names to the LEAGUE Offices, Manchester.

PROTECTION TO BRITISH INDUSTRY.

The self-constituted stewards of the food of the people have confessed that the industrious in England want protection, and that unfair conditions interfere with the remuneration of labour. They have raised the cry of "Protection to British industry;" we join it heartily, simply demanding that the words should have a meaning, and earnestly hoping that the phrase will have a reality. Does industry in England need protection? Assuredly it does, if the operatives and labourers are not, by the produce of their toil, adequately fed, housed, and clad. Are they so now? Let the reports laid upon the table of the Houses of Parliament give an answer. Food is dear, while flesh and blood are cheap; the fact meets us everywhere: it is sulkily acknowledged by our opponents, and sorrowfully proclaimed by ourselves. Industry does not obtain its due reward; a fair day's work does not procure a fair day's wages for the sempstresses of London, the labourers of Dorsetshire, or the serfs of Ireland. Industry, then, wants protection, not against something which may exist, but against something which does exist; not against a speculative future, but against an oppressive present; not against possible freedom, but against real monopoly. How the leaders of the Anti-League could ever have joined in a cry which contains within itself the sentence of their own condemnation, is explicable only on the supposition of their having become the victims of that monstrous folly which proverbially goes before perdition. Of such recklessness, indeed, we see, and not without some regret, many sad evidences; assertions are hazarded in high places with such utter disregard not merely of truth but of plausibility, or even possibility, that our wonder at the hardihood of the speakers is surpassed by our wonder at the patient politeness of the hearers. A noble duke, the consistent patron of gambling on the race-course, and gambling instead of trade in the corn-market, declares that Mr. Cobden fled from a meeting which he never attended, before an opponent whom he never met. It is perhaps a ducal privilege not to inquire into facts before making assertions; but accuracy in matters of easy exposure has hitherto been deemed necessary in aspirants to political leadership, and its recent abandonment seems to argue utter desperation. Again; we find a magistrate accusing himself of misprision of treason, by avowing himself cognizant of a plot against the state of which he has not given information, and, with still greater infelicity, virtually asserting that the ministers whom he supports deserve impeachment, seeing that they had laboriously collected evidence, and had yet forborne prosecution. It would be a good subject for a Newdigate prize-poem—"The aspect of the Lancashire riots, as seen by the Premier through a Gregorian telescope;" but if this aspect were such as it is described in Newdigate prose, Sir Robert Peel should stand at the bar as a criminal, and would be sure of a conviction without the aid of a Smith or a Pennefather. Another worshipful gentleman informs his gaping auditors that the League is a dangerous conspiracy against Church and State. But does he not see that such a charge falls less heavily on the League than on the well-paid and highly-salaried functionaries intrusted with the guardianship of Church and State? Conspiracy in our day has been taken in so wide an acceptance, that it may mean anything which anybody dislikes; and yet with all this latitude for accusation, and all this eagerness to accuse, the League is left to pursue the even tenor of its way without any sign of a monster brief and case of pistols being provided for the Attorney-General.

Protection to rent was the avowed object for which the Corn Laws were established by Lord Liverpool, and it was long the war-cry of the monopolists; with short-sighted craft they substituted for this intelligible proposition, "Protection to agriculture," that they might seem to include the farmers in their combination to maintain their own selfish interests. But this enlargement of the cry has led to consequences which were not anticipated by the monopolists. When the farmers were told that they needed protection, they naturally began to inquire what were the things against which they required to be protected? Many of them discovered that stern realities were more onerous than remote probabilities,—that high rents, uncertain tenures, and game preserves were substantial wrongs, while the menaced competition with foreigners was a remote and contingent evil. The Monopolists soon felt that the farmers had begun to interpret the cabalistic war-cry in a sense different from that which its devisers had intended; they found that "Protection to agriculture" had a meaning more extensive than the exclusion of foreign corn; even Sir Robert Peel attributed to it a wider signification, making it include the destruction of hares and rabbits, the purchase of a bull in Birmingham, and courses of lectures on agricultural chemistry. A new cry became clearly necessary, and in an evil hour for themselves, but to the decided advantage of the general community, they raised that of "Protection to British industry."

It is instructive to glance at the short-sighted policy which led the Monopolists into this error. They learned from the newspapers that a noisy and unscrupulous party, composed of the remnants of the Trades' Unionists, the rag-end of the Chartists, and the least sane portion of the Socialists, had taken it into their heads that some legislative artifice could be devised which would raise the natural rate of wages just as the Corn Laws had raised the natural price of food; they further learned that these men had placed themselves beyond the reach of argument by drowning remonstrance with clamour whenever reasoning was tried with them. Here, then, were apparently three grounds of union between the extremes of Monopoly and of Chartism,—a cry for protection, in its undisguised meaning, of "robbing somebody else,"—unreasonableness in discussion, and unscrupulousness in the use of means. An alliance was accordingly proposed, the high-contracting parties being the titled Monopolists on one side, and the mendicant leaders of Chartism on the other. It requires no great stretch of imagination to picture to one's self the lord of Goodwood enacting the part of Cleopatra, and purchasing the aid of Chartism with much the same spirit that the Egyptian queen bought "the pretty worm of Nilus;" we can fancy the agent employed to buy the Northern Star, describing his success in the terms used by the clown in the tragedy, "Truly I have him; but I would not be the party that should desire you to touch him; for his biting is mortal; those that do die of it, do seldom or never recover." We may further suppose the duke to inquire into the efficacy of this perilous agency in opposing the progress of the League in the North, and the go-between, still using the language of the clown, "Truly the trades' unions make a very good report of the worm; but he that believes all that they say will never be saved by half what they do; but this is most fallible—the worm's an old worm. You must think this, look you, that the worm will do his kind." At the Freemasons' Tavern the worm has been "doing his kind" with a vengeance.

It needs little argument to show that the Trades' unionist cry of "Protection to labour," however similar in sound to the Monopolist cry of "Protection to British industry," is wholly different from it in meaning, object, and purpose. Of this fact the leaders of both parties are well aware, but they hope for a season to disguise it from their followers. The itinerant lecturers of Chartism want money, the Monopolists want support from the masses; each hopes to gain by a profitable exchange, but each dreads the power of the other to supply the pressing want. We know that the itinerants of Chartism have not the masses to give, and we suspect that the Monopolists will not be very generous of their cash to the self-elected leaders of non-existing multitudes.

But, however this may be, we are far from regretting that the cry of "Protection to British industry" has been raised; so far as Corn Laws can afford protection to the agricultural labourer against foreign competition, he has had it for more than a quarter of a century. What is he the better for it? Is the remuneration for his industry greater than it was before the Corn Laws existed? What says the labourer himself,—is he contented with his lot, and satisfied with his wages? He neither is, nor ought he to be so. Well, then, it is not against foreign competition but against something else that protection to British industry is wanted; it needs to be protected against a system of monopoly which on the one hand limits the amount of profitable employment for labour, and on the other, raises the price of the necessaries of life. It was a sad blunder in the Monopolists to raise the cry of "Protection to British industry," for it provokes the question, "Against what does British industry require to be protected?" and the solution of this question is within the capacity of all men and women, and most children, between Caithness and Cornwall.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

THE FREE-TRADE MIRROR OF PARLIAMENT FOR THE SESSION 1844.

Seventh Week, ending Saturday, March 23.

Grave events are in progress, in relation to FREE TRADE, for which the public are, even yet, scarcely prepared, and the full importance of which is but dimly understood. The great breach which has occurred in the ranks of the Ministerial supporters may be apparently closed; a truce may be concluded for a time; and the hopes of mere partisans, who look only to the game of ins and outs, may be doomed to a longer disappointment than sanguine and impatient expectations may think endurable. But, nevertheless, there are sufficient indications that the Government is on the top of its own sliding scale, and is going downwards; and though there may be "rests" at particular stages, and the momentum may be occasionally checked rather than accelerated, the movement is necessarily that of a falling body. Let the public, then, be prepared for the "beginning of the end;" another GENERAL ELECTION rises on the horizon; when it arrives, the battle will be for pure and unlimited Free Trade, without the use or the abuse of party; and the great body of the constituency, called on to decide, not so much for and against Whig and Tory, as for and against themselves, will decide whether British enterprise and industry are to remain in the prison-house of an ignominious bondage, expiring under the weight of their fetters, or are to have their manacles struck off, the prison doors thrown open, and FREEDOM written on every work of their skill, and every exertion of their industrial power.

The event on which these expectations are based is the defeat of the Ministry by Lord Ashley and his supporters, and that we are not exaggerating its importance will best appear from a plain narrative of facts.

Every body is aware that Lord Ashley is the leader of the "Ten Hours" agitation, or, in other words, that he is the chosen advocate of those who contend that the daily labour in factories should be restricted to that period. Now, freely conceding to Lord Ashley the unquestioned character of a humane man, desirous to ameliorate the condition of the working classes, nobody will deny that the ten hour agitators have been in the accustomed habit of painting the manufacturing districts as regions of immitigable horrors—that they are the "dark places" of our land, full of "the habitations of cruelty;" that there, Mammon is lord of the manor; that his stewards are the master manufacturers, who look upon human beings as mere flocculent particles flying about their machines; and that MIND and MORALS, all that makes the distinction between the brute that perishes and the being that lives for ever, are there ground down into "devil's dust," in order that more wool and cotton might be spun. This may not be precisely Lord Ashley's style; but it is the style of the Times, the Post, of Oastler and Ferrand, of all whose heated imaginations scorch their judgments; and they have been supported by honest and dishonest evidence; by well and by ill founded complaints; by individuals deceived and by individuals malignant; and the whole has been embodied in the shape of the Ten Hours agitation.

Now, nobody likes to be overworked—the very cook in her kitchen, whatever taste she may have for her employment, has a decided objection to perpetual boiling, roasting, frying, and long, at times, to be dressed in her gayest attire, and to go forth, occasionally, to see green fields, and breathe fresh air. The factory operatives, therefore, have joined very generally in the desire that Parliament should interfere to shorten their hours of labour, and to make the manufacturers pay the same wages for a smaller quantity of work. And, if it could be done, with justice to all parties, who would oppose so reasonable a desire? The very slave-driver, unless he be a mere manufacturer of Cuba cigars, does not wish to kill his valuable slaves by over-till; and as all the manufacturers of this country are not precisely demons in human shape—nay, as there are positively some amongst them who know the meaning of religion, and can read the Bible—there are not a few of them disposed to act towards their workmen in the spirit of the merciful man, who is kind even to his beast.

But here ensues a great difficulty. The system under which we live is plainly but aptly illustrated by the common saying of the candle burning at both ends. The law-makers of this country have erected, according to Sir James Graham, a "House of Cards," of which, if one be touched, the whole fall down. The system, of which the Corn Law is the corner-stone, renders Human Food scarce and dear, and Human Beings abundant and valueless. In the nightly struggle going on between a restricted field of employment and an increasing population this wonderful fact is created—that a vast factory, with its complicated machinery, its capital, its skill, its power, is reduced to look to the last hour of every day for the turning point of its profit. Most strange, most wonderful, yet most true. Lop off, therefore, that hour, without enlarging the field of industry, and you will shut the doors of all these factories, ruin those whose capital is invested in them, and very effectually shorten the hours of labour of the operatives, by giving them no employment at all.

There were those, however, deeply interested in the maintenance of monopoly, of whom it is no evil-speaking to say, that they used Lord Ashley as their tool. The landlords are protected—tell the operative that Parliament will protect him too. Pay no heed to the talk about rates of profit, and so forth—the greedy, grasping manufacturers are too rich already, and we will make them disgorge. This is the style of argument in which, in this most thinking country, the genius of HUMBUG grins at COMMON SENSE. For poor BABBLE-TONGUE, blind of an eye, casts his purblind vision over the question, and, with gibberings unutterable, mopes and mews about "Protection to British Industry." One might smile at Babble-tongue, if it could be safely done. But the creature has power; and Christian forbearance, and dignified contempt, scornful derision, all evaporate, and in their place come burning indignation, when one thinks that in his withered, impotent hand Babble-tongue grasps, and tries to crush, the destinies of a mighty empire.

At the last general election many were the pledges of the farmers' friends—many the vows of the Ten Hours friends of the manufacturing operatives. Let this, however, be remembered to the honour of Lord Ashley, that he refused to accept of office under the present Government, because Sir R. Peel refused to pledge himself to the principle of the Ten Hours. Meantime, the thing has gone on; the Corn Law has become a changeling; the New Tariff is law; and the corn of Maine may come in, if it likes, by the Canadian back door. Agitation, too, has gone on; a flood of light has been poured in upon the dark condition of the agricultural labourer; and he has been exhibited lying in an ignorance, a squalor, a poverty, from which the factory operative, toiling through a long day, would start back in amazed horror. Another event also occurred. Sir Robert Peel, instead of holding a high hand over the monopolists, fell down on his knees, and promised to sin as little as he could, for the future, with that accursed thing called Free Trade. Murmurs of satisfaction broke out when they saw him on his knees; soon would they place him on his back; and, if necessary to keep him down, would walk over his body. They have done so.

On Friday night week Lord Ashley brought on the debate whether or no the duration of labour, as regulated by the proposed Government Factories Bill, should be "Ten" or "Twelve" Hours. Of Lord Ashley's long speech what can be said? It was of great length, marked by an apparent straightforward candour, and presenting fearful pictures of demoralisation, exhaustion, and injury, to say nothing of mortality, as the result of factory labour. Yet even the Times admits that it was a one-sided picture. The great opponent, on Friday night, of the noble lord was Mr. BRIGHT, whose speech, in a great measure, reversed the medal, and, by its exposure of the trustworthiness of some, at least, of the authorities on which Lord Ashley relied, made him lose his temper. His lordship, whose general manner is mild and conciliatory, replied with a pertness which was mistaken for smartness, and, therefore, elicited great cheering. But the tables were turned, when Mr. Bright, producing specific authority, compelled Lord Ashley to acknowledge that one of his most notable informants, on whom he had bestowed both his money and his meat, was unworthy of his kindness and his credence.

The debate was adjourned from Friday till Monday, and the interval was not one of "rest" to the Government. The individual who, under the forms of our constitutional government, bears the dignified title of "Whipper-in" to the Government supporters (does not the use of this "slang" term imply that it must have originated and been perpetuated by a legislative assembly composed mainly of fox-hunters?) had a serious task assigned him. He went about in the Carlton Club, and elsewhere, whispering in mysterious accents to the country gentlemen that, if they voted for Ten Hours, then down would go the Corn Law! In other words, he plainly told them that the Corn Law was built upon the extra and excessive toil of the Factory Operative! His language, when translated, meant this:—"Oh, country gentlemen, your own Ministry know a great deal more than you; they know that the Corn Law so cuts down the rate of profit that, if you cut down daily labour, the loss will fall, not on the master manufacturer, if he is able to carry on at all, but on the wages of those whom he employs. Therefore, beware what you are about! Vote for ten hours at your peril! Ministers will not and dare not do it!"

But "Young England" also spoke to the country gentlemen; and the country gentlemen, anxious to show Sir Robert Peel that they could be independent, shook their heads in saucy defiance, and the Whipper-in went to report the failure of his mission. Monday came, and it was whispered in the Reform Club that Ministers were not unlikely to be defeated. So strange an announcement whetted curiosity to the utmost. "Let us all vote," said many of the Liberals, "for the Ten Hours, on the principle that the labouring population of this country work too long, and eat too little; and if the consequences of interference be a fall in wages, then the Corn Law and all other monopolies must be swept away."

Monday came; and with it came the sitting of the House. The public, admitted as strangers into the House, were not all aware of what had been going on, or what was apprehended; but there were the initiated, with peering eyes, looking unutterable things—

"With arms encumbered thus, or this head-shake, Or by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase, As—Well, well, we know;—or, We could an' if we would;—If we list to speak;—or, There be, an' if they might;—"

and these, when they did venture on their oracles, would point out to you the anxious faces of the Ministers, apprehensive of their first Parliamentary reversal.

Mr. Warburton opened the adjourned debate, and, in a speech of science and statistics, showed that all these wild stories about factory horrors were apt to dissipate, when touched by the probe of investigation. Other members addressed the House, enlarging on the Rights of Labour—an excellent matter, if coupled with the Rights of Food. Sir George Grey also spoke, and admitted his conversion to the principle that excessive factory labour was exhausting to the human frame, and destructive to domestic life, when viewed more especially in reference to females and children—but hinted that the Corn Law lay at the bottom of all this controversy. The same line of argument was adopted by Lord John Russell, who briefly stated that the great evil of the working population of this country was excessive toil and scanty subsistence. Then, as if to show that this was not a mere manufacturer's question, such men as Mr. Fielden and Mr. Hindley, who derive their wealth from manufactures, pleaded the cause of the Factory Operative.

But the speeches of Sir James Graham and of Sir Robert Peel were the remarkable things of the debate. Sir James Graham emphatically addressed himself to the country gentlemen. His tone, his manner, his words, were all significant to his own side of the House. "Beware," he said (and the country gentlemen knew that he was lecturing them), "what you are about; reduce the hours of labour to ten instead of twelve, and you will reduce the wages of the operative twenty-five per cent. The whole system is a house of cards," he added; "displace one, and it will all tumble about your ears!" Sir Robert Peel was as emphatic, if not more so. What are you about to do? he said, in effect; see the thousands upon thousands who, in this country, are dependent for their wages on the profit which is extracted from the last hour of the day's toil! And he cried aloud, as if to startle the country gentlemen by the warning sound, that never, during his whole life, would he forget the horrible scenes of 1841-1842, when, in Paisley alone, from twelve to fifteen thousand individuals were dependent on charity.

All was in vain—the Government were defeated by 179 to 170.

Next day Lord Ashley stated the nature of the clause he intended to propose on the Friday. He would permit twelve hours till October next; after that time, eleven hours for the ensuing two years; and then, with this long preparation, commence the ten hours. But Sir James Graham declared the determination of the Government to resist all interference with their absolute twelve hours, and their intention to take the "sense of the House," once more, on the subject, on Friday (yesterday). The result is, of course, unknown to us at the early hour at which we are obliged to go to press.

On Tuesday, Mr. John Ricardo, the member for Stoke-upon-Trent, and who inherits with the name the clear, sound, far-reaching principles of his celebrated relative, brought on a most important motion:—

"That an humble address be presented to her Majesty, praying that her Majesty will be graciously pleased to give directions to her servants not to enter into any negotiations with foreign powers which would make any contemplated alterations of the tariff of the United Kingdom contingent on the alteration of the tariffs of other countries; and humbly expressing to her Majesty the opinion of this House, that the great object of relieving the commercial intercourse between this country and foreign nations from all injurious restrictions will be best promoted by regulating our own customs duties as may be most suitable to the financial and commercial interests of this country, without reference to the amount of duties which foreign powers may think it expedient for their own interests to levy on British goods."

This motion he supported by an able speech, full of details. He showed the folly of diplomatizing with other countries for commercial treaties, through long and expensive negotiations, instead of boldly acting on an independent, which he proved would be the most profitable, policy. Commerce, he showed, required no leading-strings; it could walk alone, if they would only let it. Never mind what other countries did; open our ports on equitable principles; make it the interest of other nations to send here their corn, wine, and oil; and depend upon it, the more that comes in, the more we must send out, profitably to all concerned. If we had to send gold to one place, we would have to send goods to another, in order to get the gold; and all our transactions with all parts of the world would be settled, regenerated, balanced, by those magic bills of exchange, which harmonise exports and imports, and, like winged messengers, go forth to every country and clime.

The powerful case made by Mr. Ricardo was met by Mr. Gladstone in that evasive way which, unhappily for his own reputation, he is doomed to assume, by the neutral and equivocal position in which the Government stands. All he had to say was, that the resolution was "broad," "inconvenient," "abstract," and so forth.

Lord Howick made a most admirable speech in favour of Mr. Ricardo's motion. He at once took up his ground on the abandonment of reciprocity, showed the folly of all that vast laborious trifling of which our commercial diplomacy has been composed for the last thirty years, and, in a tone of fine statesmanship, called on the Government to place the greatest of commercial countries in its natural position, that of setting an example of sound principle to all the nations of the earth, but needing the aid of no other reciprocity than that which the self-interest of other countries may inspire. He also spoke of the struggle of capital and labour in this country,—the rate of profit down to the lowest point,—the pressure on the springs of industry,—everything calling aloud for a bolder and a better policy.

The matter was too strong to be resisted; so, while Mr. Home was speaking, all the Ministerialists suddenly disappeared, leaving Sir Robert Peel and Sir Edward Knatchbull "alone in their glory," then in walks a Ministerial Member, moves that the House be counted, and, before the Free Traders could rush to their places in sufficient numbers, it was found that there were only thirty-nine present, one less than makes a House, and so the whole was brought to a conclusion by an adjournment.

A similar fate, on Thursday night, attended another Free-Trade motion. Mr. Ewart brought on the following resolution:—

"That it is indispensable to the maintenance and extension of this country that those duties be repealed which press on the raw materials of manufacture, especially the raw materials of the woollen and cotton trade."

"That it is expedient also that those duties be greatly reduced which press on articles of interchange in return for our manufactures; especially such articles of interchange as at the same time concern the subsistence of the people; being (besides corn, which is the subject of superior and separate consideration) such articles as tea, sugar, coffee, bacon, butter, and cheese."

"That it is expedient that those duties also be greatly reduced which, by their amount, encourage smuggling; being at once injurious to the revenue and dangerous to the morality of the country; such as the duties on tobacco, silk goods, and foreign spirits."

"That whatever temporary deficiency of revenue be caused by such reduction ought, until the revenue regain its former amount, to be sustained by the property, and not by the trade and labour, of the country."

Mr. Ewart was making an excellent speech, full of the science of commerce, when suddenly it was moved that the House be counted, and only thirty-eight being present, there was necessarily an adjournment.

The only remedy for this state of things is for the country to return a House of Commons which will supersede all necessity for listening to Free-Trade arguments; by granting FREE TRADE itself.

MEETINGS.

GREAT MEETING AT COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE.

The usual aggregate weekly meeting of the members and friends of the National Anti-Corn-Law League took place in Covent-garden Theatre on Wednesday last. The house was densely crowded in every part, and the proceedings were altogether of the most enthusiastic character. At seven o'clock the Right Hon. the Earl of Radnor (chairman of the evening) advanced on to the platform. His appearance was greeted by several rounds of applause. The noble lord was accompanied by Mr. Cobden, M.P., Mr. Bright, M.P., and several other influential members of the Council of the League.

Among the gentlemen on the stage at this time were the following:—

John Bright, Esq., M.P., Dr. Bowring, M.P., Joseph Brotherton, Esq., M.P., Thomas Glasborne, Esq., M.P., Hon. Edward Bouverie, Edward Ellice, Esq., M.P., Rear-Admiral the Hon. D. P. Bouverie, James Pattison, Esq., M.P., Sir William Haynes, Bart., E. Vickers, Esq., Sheffield; Lawrence Hill, Esq., Glasgow; F. H. Toone, Esq., Colonel T. P. Thompson, James Wilson, Esq., R. R. R. Moore, Esq., Wm. Evans, Esq., Manchester; Robert P. Collier, Esq.; J. B. Scott, Esq., Manchester; W. Locket, Esq., Manchester; James Brotherton, Esq., Summers Harford, Esq.; Rev. J. Barlett, Salisbury; Charles Squarey, Esq., Salisbury; Charles Lattimore, Esq., Wheathampstead; James Chidwell, Esq., Winchester; George Chidwell, Esq., do.; N. Gedke, Esq., W. Thornburrow, Esq., Henry Whitwell, Esq., George Beacon, Esq., Henry Birkbeck, Esq., C. Green, Esq., Edmund Gurney, Esq., George Ridout, Esq., George Crawford Heath, Esq.; Alexander Smyth, Esq., Glasgow; W. Scott, Esq.; Thomas Harbottle, Esq., Manchester; J. M. Muscott, Esq., G. Parsons, Esq., J. U. Harwood, Esq., Anthony Austin, Esq., J. Barton, Esq., the Lord Provost of Glasgow; Alexander Johnston, Esq., late M.P. for Kilmarnock; Henry Lloyd Morgan, Esq.; James Harvey, Esq., Liverpool; J. Ackroyd, Esq., Bradford; Hamer Stanfield, Esq., Mayor of Leeds; Benjamin Walton, Esq., Wolverhampton; Henry Ashworth, Esq., Bolton; — Hunt, Esq.

Lord RADNOR having taken the chair,

Mr. SAUL (the secretary,) read the minutes of the last meeting.

The Noble CHAIRMAN, who, as he advanced to the table, preparatory to addressing the meeting, was received with renewed and reiterated applause, then spoke as follows:—Ladies and gentlemen, it becomes my duty now to open the proceedings of this evening; and, in doing so, I must claim your indulgence, for, though I am not altogether unaccustomed to public speaking, notwithstanding the practice I have had, I always speak with considerable difficulty. I have another reason for which to claim your indulgence this evening, and that is, that though I am not altogether a very young man, yet this is my first appearance upon this stage. (Cheers.) But, ladies and gentlemen, having been invited to make my appearance here this evening, and having been honoured with the offer of the chair, I have not hesitated to accept the honour, and that very willingly for several reasons. The first reason that weighed with me was this, that I was anxious, in as public a manner as possible, to pay my tribute of admiration and applause to the gentlemen who have been engaged in the same cause with myself, but who have been much more active in their exertions—I mean the gentlemen of the League. (Loud cheers.) I have been desirous to express, in as public a manner as I could, my admiration of the ability, the perseverance, and the courage with which, now for several years, they have been carrying on the contest with Monopoly, and standing up for the principles of Free Trade. (Loud cheers.) I have been the more anxious to give utterance to this opinion at the present time, because I wish to express my entire disapprobation of the abuse that has been lavished upon those gentlemen. (Cheers.) The common expressions of scurrility and abuse which have been poured out upon them I really think are quite beneath our notice; but there have been one or two notable exceptions, of so serious and so flagrant a character, that they may, perhaps, deserve a little attention. They have been accused of inclining to lucubration, — a crime which I am sorry to see by the papers this day, is still prevalent in counties not far distant from the League, in which I now stand. Ladies and gentlemen, no satisfaction has been made by more than words, or by penance, rank, and station; but one noble lady, who publicly gave expression to the accusation, when I had stated to him that I should make some appeal various upon it, though he admitted that he had made it, neither withdrew it nor came forward to justify it, or to state the grounds upon which he had alleged it. (Cheers.) How my Lord Harewood, or any other person, can justify to himself such conduct, remains for him to explain. I, for one, do express here now, as I did in the House of Lords (and I am sure you will agree with me in expressing it also), my utter contempt for such an accusation, and my confident assurance that the charge is perfectly groundless, and that the gentlemen against whom it was levelled are as incapable of any such act as the noble lord himself. (Cheers.) Other accusations have been made against those gentlemen of the League. It has been said that they are interested persons, and that they only agitate this matter for their own exclusive benefit, and to accumulate money in their own pockets. Supposing this accusation to be true, I am yet to learn that any person in any situation of life is not entitled, and is not bound by the duty which he owes to his family and to himself, to consult his own interest, provided he can do so without injury to others (cheers); or, as I think I shall be able to show you in a few words, in this case, to the benefit and advantage of the whole community. (Cheers.) Whether our adversaries can say as much for themselves remains for the country to determine; but I maintain, that even admitting, for the sake of argument—and for the sake of argument only—that these gentlemen are carrying on this contest for the mere purpose of supporting and promoting the cause of manufacturers as distinct from other classes of society, I say they are really doing that which is beneficial to the country. (Cheers.) I am old enough, ladies and gentlemen, to remember the times when war was raging, and when this country, in consequence, was brought into great straits; the younger part of this company may not recollect it, and I hope they may never hereafter experience the horrors of war (cheers); but during those times I remember well that the great theme of admiration, and the great boast of the various Ministers who brought forward the budget upon different occasions for the purpose of raising money for the support of the war, was the flourishing state of the commerce and manufactures of this country. It was upon the resources supplied by their means, in consequence of the success attending their industry, that this country principally relied for the support of the war, and for obtaining what has been called "the sinews of war"—money, and which happily brought the war ultimately to a successful conclusion. (Cheers.) I say, therefore, that, generally speaking, upon this ground alone, if there were no other, manufactures are deserving of the greatest encouragement. But let us consider a little further what these manufactures do for us. This is a great country, very highly civilized, very fully populated, having advanced far in all the arts of civilization and in all the refinements of civilized life. The country itself from its size, its natural soil, and its climate, is not capable of supplying all the wants and of satisfying all the desires of its refined and civilized population. How, then, are the articles the country needs to be acquired? (Hear, hear.) They are to be obtained from foreign lands. (Cheers.) How are they to be procured from foreign lands but by exchanging the produce which this country can afford to give. Our natural products are few in comparison with those which we wish to obtain from other countries, and it is only by working up raw materials into manufactured articles, articles desired and coveted by other countries, it is only by the accumulation of wealth invested in our excellent machinery, it is only by the skill and the industry of our manufacturers, that we obtain the means of sending out those exports in exchange for which we receive the commodities of other countries which we require for our use. (Cheers.) The value of the exports, the produce of the manufactures of this country, last year was upwards of forty-seven millions sterling. Very little of that consisted of raw material produced in this country. I don't say none of it was, but it was a very minute part indeed; the great thing was the additional value given to the natural article by the labour, the ingenuity, and skill of our manufacturers. (Cheers.) I say, therefore, that by promoting the manufactures of this country, we increase the means of ministering to the comfort and enjoyment of the people, by procuring for them those articles which are necessary for their use from foreign countries. But is that all that manufactures have done for this country? Let us look for a little to our own internal state. The population of this country has vastly increased in the course of the last few years. It increases now at the rate of about 1000 per diem. How are these persons to be employed? What gives employment to them? Is it the agriculture of this country, which is sometimes talked of as being the great fundamental interests of the country? No, it is not; but it is the manufactures. (Loud cheers.) It is a curious thing to observe,—but we know the fact from an examination of the census which has, for some time past, been taken every ten years,—from the classification of the different orders of people as exhibited in that census, that the agricultural population of this country has been gradually diminishing. (Hear.) It appears from the census returns that the proportion of the population employed in agriculture in the year 1811 was 352 out of every 1000. In the year 1821—the next period at which the census was taken—the population employed in agriculture was not in the proportion of 352 but of 332 out of every 1000. (Hear, hear.) In 1831 the proportion had again diminished from 332 to 281. (Hear, hear.) Now, the census was taken again in 1841, but the classification of the different orders of the community has not yet been made public. Supposing, however, that the proportion went on as in preceding years, the number of persons employed in agriculture would be 240 out of every 1000. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) From this you will readily perceive that there has been a gradual decrease in the proportion of the population employed in agriculture, and that this increased population, if not employed in agriculture, must be provided for in some other way. (Hear.) You will observe, too, that if this continues in the same ratio as hitherto, in 1851 the number employed in agriculture will be 205 out of every 1000, and in 1861 it will be reduced to 175 in every 1000. (Cheers.) Now, if the manufacturing interest has been able hitherto to absorb this increasing population, which is not called for in agriculture, it is most desirable, I think you will all admit, that no check should be given to those manufactures which may be called upon hereafter to absorb so large a portion of the population. (Cheers.) I find, also, that exactly in the same proportion, or, at least, contemporaneously with the diminution of the number of people employed in agriculture, the number of persons employed in the manufacturing counties has increased. (Hear.) I find that a good many years ago,—so long since as 1870, nearly 300 years since,—there was some account taken of the population of the country; that population then was considerably less than at the present moment. I find that it was pretty nearly equally apportioned in different parts of the country; but, in order to make the comparison to which I desire to draw your attention, I should remark that the country has been divided into two several portions—the agricultural part and the manufacturing and commercial part—and it happened, singularly enough, that what may be called the commercial and manufacturing counties, in 1814, consisting of fourteen counties, occupied just one-third of the whole area of the country, while those termed agricultural, being 38 in number, occupied two-thirds of the whole area of the country. Now, in the year 1870 the population was divided in the same proportion as the area of the kingdom: that is to say, the manufacturing and commercial area was one-third of the whole, and its population was also one-third; and the agricultural area was two-thirds, and its population two-thirds of the whole. At that time the population in the one-third of the area, or in the manufacturing and commercial counties, was 1,239,000, and in the agricultural counties 2,498,000, the proportion in area and in population being nearly equal; that is, one-third area manufacturing and commercial comprised one-third of the population, and two-thirds area agricultural included the remaining two-thirds of the population. But in the year 1801 the proportions very much altered; and in the manufacturing and commercial counties the population increased to upwards of 3,900,000, whilst in the agricultural counties it was 4,400,000. It was then not quite equally divided, the proportions being 47 per cent. for the manufacturing and commercial counties, and 53 per cent. for the agricultural counties; a very unequal proportion as compared with the area of the country. At each succeeding period the proportion became more unequal. In 1811 the population of the manufacturing and commercial counties was 48 per cent.; in 1821 it was 49 per cent.; in 1831 it was 52 per cent., above half of the whole; and in 1841 it was 54 per cent., that is, 8 per cent. more than half of the whole population of the country. (Cheers.) So that that part of the country which occupies only one-third of the area of the whole, but which is the manufacturing and commercial part, contains 54 per cent. of the entire population, while the other two-thirds, which form the agricultural part, contain only 46 per cent. (Cheers.) Then, I say that it is a manifest benefit to the whole country that manufactures should flourish, and should be enabled to employ so large a proportion of the population. We know well enough that the population of this country increases; we know well enough from the melancholy statements which have lately been made public, and to which no reply has been or can be given, for they cannot be refuted, that the agricultural counties are overburdened with population. We hear lamentable accounts of cottages crowded with the poor, who are suffering both in health and morals. What, then, can be a better or more advantageous resource for the agricultural counties than to have a district—one-third part of the country—devoted to commerce and to manufactures, which can absorb, if not completely at least to a great degree, the surplus population, much to their own as well as to the advantage of the public. (Loud cheers.) And that they do so to the advantage of the people themselves, I think will appear evident from the circumstance that the poor-rates in the commercial and manufacturing counties are much less in proportion than the poor-rates in the agricultural counties. (Cheers.) I have not got the return of the total amount of poor-rates down to a later period than 1841; but that, you will recollect, is the precise period at which the census was taken; and in that year the poor-rates paid in the commercial and manufacturing counties—which, as I have already frequently told you, though it formed but one-third of the area of the whole country, employed more than half of the whole population—amounted to only 42 per cent. of the whole of the poor-rates of the country; whilst the poor-rates in the agricultural counties—which occupied two-thirds of the area of the whole kingdom, and which only contained 46 per cent. of the population—amounted to 58 per cent. of the whole poor-rates of the country (cheers), the result being, that the amount of poor-rates paid in the manufacturing and commercial part of the country was at the rate of 4s. 10d. per head of the whole population, whereas that paid in the agricultural part was at the rate of 7s. 10d. per head. (Cheers.) Then, I say that the manufacturers and the manufacturing interest of this country deserve the support of the nation, not only for the good things that they bring to us from abroad in exchange for their manufactures, but likewise for the benefit that they confer upon every class of the country, and more particularly upon the agricultural portion by absorbing that population which otherwise would be a burden upon the country, more especially upon the proprietors and occupiers of land. (Loud cheers.) Another ground upon which we say that the manufacturers deserve the support of all classes of the people is this, that by their great skill, ingenuity, activity, perseverance, and industry, and by the excellent machinery which they use and which they are daily improving, all the necessities of life that pass through their mills are gradually becoming cheaper, and in consequence more within the reach and scope of small incomes. (Cheers.) This appears in a very remarkable manner when the price of those articles is contrasted with the value of agricultural produce. And here, ladies and gentlemen, perhaps I may be allowed to say that I am the less unwilling to hold up, in this way, the manufacturing interest, not in hostility to, but in comparison with, the agricultural interest, as I myself am wholly and solely connected with the latter interest. (Great cheering.) I have no connexion whatever with manufacturers except from acquaintanceship and goodwill, and from my belief that they are a most important part of the community. Gentlemen—I don't say ladies, because these are things, perhaps, to which they don't much direct their attention (laughter)—but gentlemen here are aware that returns are made annually to Parliament of the value of exports, and that there are always two columns in these returns, one representing, as it is called, the official value, and the other representing the real or declared value. The reason of the difference is this: that some 150 years ago, in the year 1694, a practice was commenced of entering the value of the exports of the country, and a certain sum of money was put down opposite to each item as the value per lb., or the value per owt., or whatever it might be at that period. The sum or official value has never been varied, but the real value has varied very much; and as it was very desirable to know the real value as well as the official value, it has been the practice for some years past—I don't know how many—to give the declared as well as the official value. The declared value, therefore, will point out what is the real value of the articles exported: the official value will give you no insight into what the real value is at the present time, but it will give you a perfect insight into what it would have been in the year 1694; and it will likewise give you a perfect and accurate measurement as to the quantity that has been consumed. (Hear.) Now, it appears from this that the principal articles of manufacture have decreased in value (the comparison has been taken in three years)—the decrease being at the rate of about 60 per cent. Well, then, upon the other hand it appears that agricultural produce has increased in value: while the other has decreased and diminished, agricultural produce has increased in value at the rate of 143 per cent. (Cheers.) So that now the agricultural produce, which in the year 1694 was worth £100, is now worth £243; whilst, on the other hand, the manufactured goods which in 1694 were worth £100, are now worth only £40 (loud cheers)—a matter of which the agriculturists have, I think, no right to complain (renewed cheers), inasmuch as the result is that agricultural produce to the amount of £100 would now purchase produce, in mines and manufactures, to the extent that £600 could have done in the year 1694. (Cheers.) Now, I really think that if this do not make the agriculturists rather wish that manufactures should thrive and flourish, I don't know very well what will. (Laughter and cheers.) It shows at least that the benefit is all on one side, and that side in reality is theirs. (Loud cheers.) For these reasons amongst others, I for one am anxious, and I think that the country ought to be anxious that manufactures should flourish; and my desire to express that anxiety has been one of the reasons which induced me to accept the offer made to me to address you this evening. (Cheers.) If I do not weary you (loud cries of "Go on," and great cheering), there are one or two other reasons (hear, hear, hear,) which I would urge before I resume my seat: one of them is my anxiety to express here, in as strong a manner as I can, my adherence to what are now called the principles of Free Trade. (Great cheering.) I believe that the principles of Free Trade are those upon which the happiness and the welfare of this country will in future depend. I believe, however, that their success will very much depend upon the exertions of you, ladies and gentlemen, and other persons, who have on former and similar occasions to the present, met in this theatre, and to your and their continued exertions in furtherance of them (cheers); for we have some resolute, and, I believe, some very interested opponents. (Ironical cheers.) I consider, however, that the principles of Free Trade, as they are said to be the principles of common sense, are also the principles of benevolence, charity, and of universal goodwill. (Loud cheers.) I believe, gentlemen, that they are the soundest principles upon which any country can stand—the principles upon which, hereafter, the universal world will be guided and governed. (Loud cheers.) Now, let us consider, gentlemen, what these principles are, as carried out at the present time in this country. I have heard it imputed to the persons who espouse them, that they are hostile to the credit of the country, and hostile to the national faith, for it is said that if Free-Trade principles are carried out there will be an end to the payment of interest on the national debt. Now, I totally dissent from that proposition. I freely admit that, if we were precisely in that state in which one could wish to be, it might be convenient to have no taxes at all to pay (loud cheers); and that it might be very advantageous to commerce to be disencumbered of all customhouse duties, and everything of the sort. But this is not necessary for Free Trade; what is essential for Free Trade is, that there should be no tax imposed excepting what is absolutely necessary for the purposes of revenue, but, above all things, no tax imposed for the purposes of protection (cheers)—no tax imposed for the purpose of protecting one interest against another. (Cheers.) Those are what I believe to be really the true principles of Free Trade—the principles upon which I believe that gentlemen here around me, and all persons who seriously contend in behalf of that object, wish to maintain. (Cheers.) But it is said that all these principles are very good and very true, and that they are right in the abstract (laughter), but not in the concrete (renewed laughter); they will not apply, above all things, to the article of food—it is so important an article, the food of the people, that they will not apply to that. (Loud cheers.) Now, really, if these principles are good, it is the more necessary it appears to me that they should be enforced. (Hear, hear.) If they are not good at all, why enforce them at all? but if they are good, it becomes the more important that they should be adhered to, especially in the most important article of food. (Cheers.) But it is said that agriculture wants protection, and that if it is not protected it will be ruined. Whether it has been ruined or not under protection we will just inquire. Let us see what protection has done for agriculture. We are told that for hundreds and hundreds of years there have been Corn Laws in this country. Now, I admit it. I look in the statute-book, and I find laws relating to corn many hundred years back: four hundred, five hundred, six hundred years back. But I observe this peculiarity up to a particular period, that the object of the Corn Laws in ancient time was to secure food for the people by the introduction of foreign corn when there was a scarcity at home, and to take care that there was a supply from abroad when we did not grow enough at home for our own national supply. (Hear, hear.) But there was a particular period when the views of the Legislature took a different turn, and after the Restoration, at the time of Charles II., there were then commenced a series of laws affecting the introduction of corn, not for the purpose, as heretofore, of supplying the people with corn, but for the purpose of protecting the landed interest. (Hear, hear.) Now, there have been a great many acts passed since. The first act that I am aware of is an act of 12th of Chas. II. Since that period there have been, I believe, some 110 or 120 acts of Parliament regulating the importation and exportation of corn. (Laughter.) I think the number is a pretty good proof that none of the Corn-Law doctors have exactly hit upon the right remedy. (Renewed laughter and cheers.) Many people have tried their hand at it, and I think I am right in saying, that in every three, or in every two-and-a-half years, there have been bills introduced regulating the exportation and importation of corn. (Hear, hear.) This has been done for divers reasons; but in the early stage of the business, when there was no concealment of the matter, I find that the object was clearly avowed. I find this in the acts of Parliament that were originally passed. The 12th of Chas. II. was the first act passed for imposing duties on the importation and exportation of corn. The second was the 15th of Chas. II., fifteen years afterwards, and in the preamble of this act, entitled, "An Act for the Encouragement of Trade," it is stated, "Forasmuch as the encouragement of the tillage of land ought to be, in an especial manner, regarded," and so forth; "and in order that there may be much more corn produced, greater number of people having cattle employed, and other lands rendered more profitable; and whereas a very great part of the richest and best land of this kingdom cannot so well be otherwise employed and made use of as in the feeding and fattening of cattle, and that by the coming in of late of vast numbers of cattle already fatted,"—it does not say that the people could not eat them (loud laughter),—"such lands are in many places much fallen, and like daily to fall more, in their rents and values, and, in consequence, other lands also. Therefore be it enacted, that certain penalties be imposed on the importation of cattle." (Laughter.) Now, here the object was fairly avowed. The importation of good and fat cattle had been very apparent, and in consequence of that it was said that the rents and the value of land had fallen; and, therefore, the landed proprietors, who were predominant in the Legislature, enacted penalties against the importation of cattle. (Cheers.) And, in conformity with the same principle, that act not having been very efficacious, three years afterwards another act was passed, 18th Chas. II., c. 2, reciting "That the provisions of the preceding act have not been effectual, and that thereby the rents and values of the lands of this kingdom were much fallen, and like daily to fall more," and enacts that the importation of cattle from and after 2nd. Feb., 1666, "is a public and common nuisance, and should be so judged and deemed to be to all intents and purposes whatsoever." (Loud laughter and cheers.) It must certainly have been a nuisance to those whose rents fell, but how it could be a nuisance to the public in general I am quite at a loss to discover. However, there it is in the statute-book. It was so voted. (Laughter.) That, in early times, was the nature of what is called "protection" to land; and we see the animus, the mind, and the intention with which these acts were passed. From that time to this the Legislature, with one or two exceptions to which I shall presently point your attention, has been constantly employed almost every other, or every third year, in passing bills for the same purpose. A few years after this, in the year 1689, another bill was passed, in which a new principle or practice was introduced, which was that of giving bounties for the exportation of corn. Now, this might be very advantageous for those who grew corn, but for the public in general I think you will at once perceive how very injurious it was. By this act money was raised by a tax on the people of this country to buy up corn, which, as it rose in price, was bought up and sent abroad. That was the principle adopted; but, however, as I stated before, nothing prospered under protection; and it is remarkable enough, that, during the seventy or eighty years that this extreme protection was enacted by the Legislature, there were no fewer than seventeen or eighteen acts of Parliament passed, suspending and prohibiting, for a time, that exportation; so that it is manifest, I think, that even this which was the extreme of protection, did not effect its purpose; it did not produce that which it was intended to produce, a very large supply of corn, though the protection was as great as it possibly could be by giving bounties on the exportation of corn. (Hear.) This system went on until about the year 1774, and then an act was passed, which was the exception, to which I said I should draw your attention, diminishing that protection to corn, and declaring, that after corn had attained the price of 48s. it should be admitted at a duty of 6d. That continued, in fact, till the year 1815. I say in fact, because, though several acts of Parliament were passed during the intermediate period with the same view of protecting corn and limiting the price at which corn should be admitted, the prices never fell so as to come within the provisions of those acts: Free Trade in corn, therefore, continued up to 1815. Thus those acts were altogether unnecessary, and a dead letter; and, I believe, in no period of English history will it be found that agriculture flourished more—particularly in the latter part of that period—being a time of war: notwithstanding all the disadvantages and difficulties that must occur from war, the distresses arising out of it, and the great taxes raised to carry it on; I say, at no period did agriculture flourish more. (Hear, hear, hear.) In the year 1815, a law was passed by which protection was given of a different kind from that to which I alluded before, a protection which was an absolute prohibition until corn reached a particular price. That act, I dare say you all know, was repealed; and, in 1828, another act was passed, giving protection to corn, not quite so great, but still very great: that was again repealed two years ago, still leaving protection somewhat less. Under these systems of protection, I would ask the question, Has agriculture flourished? During this protection we heard nothing but complaints about agriculture,—nothing but complaints of the distress of the farmers and landowners. Parliament has been called upon to consult, and committees have been appointed over and over again, on the subject of protection; but it has never answered its purpose; and I believe that, as in other cases, so in this, Free Trade would be most beneficial to agriculture. (Cheers.) At all events, no system of protection hitherto adopted, or which has been in existence during the last 150 years, has answered its purpose. (Cheers.) But I am afraid I am trespassing on your attention. (Cries of "No, no," and "Go on.") My anxious wish is, for the sake of agriculture, that protection should be removed from it, and I for one wish to see the total abolition of the Corn Laws. (Loud cheers.) But I am told that ill effects would ensue from their abolition; and when one wishes to inquire into these matters it is very well sometimes to see what our adversaries say. Now, I dare say there are very few people in this assembly who are not aware that some days ago in the House of Commons, a speech was made, not immediately for the abolition of the Corn Laws, but on a question relating to them by an hon. gentleman here present (Mr. Cobden). (Loud cheers.) That speech, I believe, is admitted by all persons, even by his opponents, to be one of consummate ability, and one which contains the soundest and most powerful arguments. (Cheers.) It was answered by Mr. Gladstone, who is an official man (laughter), the President of the Board of Trade—a man undoubtedly of great talent and ability; I therefore read and looked with great anxiety to his speech, to see what could be said in answer to the other. Now, I find very little in that speech, except this:—"You, Mr. Cobden, think so and so, other gentlemen think so and so. (Laughter.) This is a matter of very great importance. It is a question which agitates the public mind; it is a matter about which a great deal of excitement exists, and therefore,"—the natural conclusion I should have thought would have been—"let us inquire and see who is right." That was what Mr. Cobden proposed, but no; the answer was—"This is a matter about which there is so much anxiety and doubt, we had better say nothing about it; we will not do what you require, by appointing a committee." (Laughter and cheering.) The whole of Mr. Gladstone's speech, as it appears to me, is pretty well comprised in these few words, excepting one or two passages, on which, with your permission, I will make a few comments. The first part is exactly in the strain which I have mentioned:—"The hon. gentleman was prepared to show that protective laws were useless, and positively injurious to farmers and farm-labourers. Well, many hon. gentlemen were prepared to argue the very contrary." He does not come to any conclusion there. "He (Mr. Gladstone) had himself heard the hon. member for Wiltshire argue with great ingenuity, and a good deal of truth, that one of the most inconvenient results in effecting any change of the Corn Law was the sudden and violent change as regarded the farmers." Now, I am acquainted with the member for Wiltshire—I know his feelings and opinions, and I have read the evidence which he has given—and I am astonished that such sentiments should come from him or from any other person, because I find by the evidence which he gave in 1814, that previously to the passing of the act which was prohibitory of the importation of corn till the price reached 80s., he declared that corn could not be grown at a profit in this country at a lower price than 96s.; and yet he was instrumental in the passing of an act of Parliament by which a pretty stout change was effected. Well, the hon. member for Wiltshire reasoned thus:—"The landlord must live." (Laughter.) Now, when I read that I was really surprised; and somehow or other there came into my head a story which is told of Cardinal Fleury. The cardinal was one day walking in his grounds, when he was met by a man who put a pistol to his head and asked him for his purse. The cardinal remonstrated, and the man rejoined, "Oh, it does not signify—I must live!" (Loud laughter.) To which the cardinal, with a great deal of coolness, replied, "My dear fellow, I do not see the necessity for it at all." (Renewed laughter.) Now, I do not wish to apply that tale to the agriculturists; and, whatever my Lord Harewood may say, I do not think the gentlemen of the League would apply it either. (Cheers.) But, however, after reading a little further, I find that I had had something like a second-sight anticipation of what was coming, for I read on, "The landlord must live, and if he cannot get a fair rent for his land, he will endeavour to effect that object by taking it out of the pockets of the farmer." (Loud laughter.) Now, this is very like petty larceny—it very much resembles what the man attempted with Cardinal Fleury. (Laughter and cheering.) This is said by Mr. Gladstone to possess a good deal of ingenuity and truth—but not much honesty I think, (laughter); and, with respect to its ingenuity, I dare say that within the vicinity of this place, or in this city at least, there are many gentlemen who could act very ingeniously in the same way. (Loud laughter.) In point of fact, he said, "If you press upon the landlord, you will force him either to farm his own land or to adopt cheaper modes of cultivation." Now, I have often heard of landlords managing their own land; but generally they do it very badly—something after the manner of the lawyer who pleads his own cause, and is said to have a fool for his client. (A laugh.) A gentleman may farm his own land, but generally he is a loser by it. What, however, is the other alternative? "He must adopt cheaper modes of cultivation." Why, I really wondered when I read such a sentiment, for I was of opinion myself that that was the very thing we wanted. The agriculturist says he wants protection, because the modes of cultivation are so expensive; and that, if you can find cheaper modes of cultivation, he will not want the same degree of protection;—or that if you get the cheapest modes of cultivation, he will not want any protection at all. (Cheers, and laughter.) "And he confessed it was no absurd or improbable supposition, that if there were any great pressure on the landlords as a class, they might extend their efforts to new modes of managing and cultivating their lands—he did not mean new modes of carrying on the process of cultivation." That is a pity! (laughter,) because that is the thing which is most desired. (Cheers.) "But," he adds, and I beg you to attend to this, "he meant that other persons of a different class or description would settle upon farms, which, being no longer occupied by men of limited capital, a system of wholesale management would be introduced with a view to the more economical regulation of agricultural produce." Now, I sometimes read—I don't say hear, because in these protection societies persons who dissent are not admitted—(loud cheers)—but I read that at these protection societies it has been thrown out as a reproach, and a most unjust and unjustifiable reproach it appears to be, that these gentlemen of the League have accumulated immense wealth. For instance, they say that Mr. Cobden has realized £200,000 or £300,000: you never heard of a farmer doing that, and why don't you? (Cheers.) Because they don't adopt cheap modes of cultivation—(cheers)—because they don't do as, says Mr. Gladstone, they would be compelled to do if Mr. Cobden carried his point—because they do not like persons in a different description of business to expend large capital in the cultivation of land. (Cheers.) Now, it is perfectly well known that, supposing this question were settled, and that there were the same certainty that there has been with respect to raising manufactured goods, there would be a great deal of capital ready to be employed for that purpose—(cheers)—a great deal of capital in money—of capital in science and in knowledge, which is now kept out of the market—which is precluded from being employed thus advantageously to the country by the uncertainty of trade—an uncertainty produced by the Corn Laws. (Loud cheers.) What would have happened in the manufacturing districts if people had been content with the employment of a little capital,—if, instead of having a large engine—I do not know of what size the engines are, say perhaps 300 horse power or more,—they employed an engine of eight or ten horse power instead, do you think you would have our manufactured goods cheapened to the extent they now are? By no means. But it is because great capital has been employed and well directed, and because great science, knowledge, industry, and constant attention have been given to manufactures, that they have risen as they have done. (Cheers.) I, for one, see no reason to think (and it is a thing devoutly to be wished), why the same industry, the same capital, the same knowledge, the same science should not be applied to agriculture with like success. (Cheers.) Well, then, Mr. Gladstone went on to say—this is the quotation—"And it was quite possible," he admits this, "it was quite possible that such products might be raised at a cheaper rate when the cultivation of the land was taken out of the hands of the farmer, who held a middle place between the landlord and the labourer." And why not? Why is the whole country to be precluded from such advantages lest there should be a violent change in the condition of the farmer? He then goes on to say, "Of course it must follow on his supposition that many farmers would be superseded, not having capital enough to carry on the cultivation of their farms under the new system, and, after suffering the greatest inconvenience themselves, would aggravate the evil in the case of others for whose farms situated in other places they would become competitors." Now, this really is exactly like a person whom I am very well acquainted with, who has a great aversion to railways. His aversion to them arises from the fact that they have superseded the use of inns and posthorses. He contends that it is exceedingly hard upon the innkeepers for people never to go to their inns; accordingly this gentleman, who lives some distance from London, and is within reach of a railroad which would bring him to town in two hours and a half, whenever he has occasion to come, either drives over the evening before twenty miles to meet a coach which brings him to London in seven or eight hours, or else he starts off early in the morning with post horses, which he sometimes finds great difficulty in procuring, and passes a day in his journey to London, fearing lest these innkeepers should be injured by having their custom taken away. (Loud laughter.) I quote from the Morning Chronicle the admission of Mr. Gladstone; the whole case, and the very point which we all desire, and which others profess to desire, is, in reality, conceded. (Hear, hear.) But there is one other sentence, which I must give. He says it would displace the farmer and the farm-labourer. He said—"Well, if one looked at the case of the labourer, there were many who were seriously of opinion that the danger of causing a great and sudden displacement of rural labour was the best and most valid argument against a change in the Corn Laws." Against a great and sudden displacement of rural labour! Have any gentlemen here read the accounts of the agricultural labourers in Dorsetshire? ("Hear, hear," and applause.) If so, do they think there would be any great misery inflicted by displacing some of them, where the poor-rates are as high as 7s. 10d. per head, while in the manufacturing districts they are only 4s. 10d. per head? (Cheers.) It appears to me that the argument is all the other way, and that what I have here read from Mr. Gladstone's speech is conclusive upon the point, that nothing could be more beneficial to agriculture, to the farmers, and to the agricultural labourers themselves than a repeal of the Corn Laws. (Cheers.) Gentlemen and ladies, I am afraid I have detained you much too long. (Cries of "No, no.") I shall detain you but a few minutes longer. I say that even beyond the point I have been urging, both for the sake of the manufacturers themselves, and for the sake of the manufacturing interest itself, and likewise for the interests of the agriculturist,—not only on these grounds am I for a repeal of the Corn Laws, but still more because I think the Corn Laws and all protective laws in point of fact fly in the face of Providence, and deprive us and others whom they may affect, of the benefits arising from the beneficial arrangements of Providence. (Cheers.) It is one of the most beautiful matters of contemplation, and so ordained by a beneficent Providence, that one country supplies one thing for the wants of mankind, and another country supplies another—all countries combining to acquire those things which may be supplied from different parts of the globe. (Cheers.) The object of such a dispensation as I look upon it is this—to bring men into amicable relationship with each other—to prevent hostilities and animosities—to make every person and every nation feel that they are dependent on the good will and good offices of others, and to bring them into kindly intercourse and benevolent communication one with another. (Loud cheers.) Countries are united—some continents, some islands like our own—by the sea, which is called the great highway of nations, affording a means of intercourse to distant parts of the world, being by Providence so ordained. This is manifest, since you can go to any part of the world upon its surface. I never yet heard of any country or island, not uninhabited, where the people were so uninformed and ignorant as not to have some means of navigation—some means of employing that element which sometimes appears so formidable and threatening, but which is the means of communication between the old world and the new—between different countries and different climes. (Hear, hear.) If we prohibit the introduction of the products of other countries, we set at nought this beneficent arrangement, and do what we can to interfere with its operation. I think, therefore, to cultivate friendly intercourse between different classes of mankind is the ordination of Providence; and that it is flying in its face, and going directly in opposition to it, if we wrap ourselves up in our own consequence and dignity, and refuse to have any communication with other nations. We have now seen an era of peace of nearly thirty years—and it appears to me from what I have seen of the world, from what I can collect of the feelings of the world at large, and, generally, from the feelings of governments, that the time for wars is at an end. (Loud cheers.) And I believe that the progress of knowledge and education among the different people of the world has been such that had geverments would find it difficult to incite them to war in the way they formerly did. (Cheers.) I therefore hope, for the sake of those who are to come after us—younger people than myself—that the days of war are over, and that the days of universal peace and amity throughout the world are not far distant. (Cheers.) But nothing is more likely to produce this result than the extension of commerce, and the termination of all protection. (Hear, hear.) Let us consider the case with respect to our Corn Laws. Some years ago a proposition was made to the Government of this country, that if they would lower the duty upon corn, the country making it would reduce the tariff with respect to the introduction of British goods. Unfortunately that offer was rejected by the English Government; and, notwithstanding that there has been no feeling of hostility between the two countries since, I believe that the friendship existing between them would have been much strengthened by the consciousness that each country was dependent on the other for the necessities and for the enjoyments of life. (Loud cheers.) Nothing is more likely to lead to a continuance of peace and tranquillity throughout the world than the abolition of restrictive laws, and of all protective duties. (Renewed cheering.) By promoting Free Trade I believe you will advance that which will be most advantageous to the interests of the country—which will tend most to strengthen it—which will tend most to its enrichment—which will tend in a great degree to the enlightenment and refinement of the lower orders of the people—and which will tend more than anything else to bring about that which must be the dearest wish of all mankind—"Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will towards men." (The noble earl resumed his seat amid immense applause.)

The noble CHAIRMAN then said:—Ladies and gentlemen, I have now the pleasure of introducing to your notice Mr. Lattimore, a tenant-farmer, who will next address you.

Mr. LATTIMORE, of Bride Hall, Hertfordshire, on coming forward was loudly cheered. He spoke as follows:—Ladies and gentlemen, I appear before you this evening as a tenant-farmer, and I beg to say that, should there be any here who entertain a doubt upon that point, I shall be very happy to satisfy them. (Cheers.) I am a farmer by choice, and I have chosen to be one from my natural bias and inclination in preference to any profession which could have been opened to me. My feelings and my inclinations are identified with farming. I am a farmer to some extent, and I trust you will give me credit when I state, that I have no desire to injure that interest; but entertaining views similar to those propounded to you by the noble lord, I believe that, so far from benefiting the agricultural interest by keeping up a system of monopoly, we are actually inflicting a great injury on ourselves. ("Hear," and cheers.) From all the facts that have been adduced—from the protection societies which have lately been established, showing that the parties who projected them have no argument, but a great deal of abuse—I am still more than ever confirmed in the conviction that, in promoting the cause of Free Trade, I am really promoting the cause of the agriculturists. (Loud cheers.) You have already heard some observations which have been made by the noble lord who has just addressed you, respecting the answer given by Mr. Gladstone to the speech of Mr. Cobden, the hon. member for Stockport (cheers), inviting these gentlemen to search and examine into this matter, not to do anything rashly or hastily, but to look well into it, and try to find out the advantages which accrue from the present protective system to the tenant-farmer and the agricultural labourer; and you have also heard how the question was shirked. I was always confident that it would be so shirked, because I feel assured that evidence would be fairly given by the tenant-farmers and labourers throughout the country as to the operation of this system of the Corn Laws upon their interests, and that such evidence would have proved the best argument that could have been adduced for a repeal of the Corn Laws. (Loud cheers.) The noble lord has also mentioned a remark made by Mr. Gladstone, to the effect that a repeal of the Corn Laws would displace a certain class of farmers, and throw a great deal of labour out of employ. Now, I am very happy to say, and I feel confident that a very great increase of employment would be given to labourers by a repeal of the Corn Laws (hear, hear), for it would be the means of bringing additional capital to the farm, which would enable the farmer to give employment to a greater number of labourers, whereby an additional amount of produce would be obtained, and blessings thereby dispensed throughout all classes of the community. (Loud cheers.) I am sure that a committee of intelligent farmers would give that their verdict and honest opinion upon such a case. Why, then, is the Corn Law not repealed? Because there is something else connected with it—there is the political part of the case. (Great applause.) I am here as a tenant-farmer, to say that farmers have no interest whatever in this part of the question. The landlords may in some instances expect to obtain some advantage from our present system of patronage and colonial government, church and state, army and navy promotion (laughter); but I say we, farmers, have no advantage from it—no interest to expect from it; and therefore it is on the simple basis that, as citizens of one common country, who have all an interest in good government, in equitable laws, in the increase of employment, of food, of health, and of morality among all classes of our countrymen—it is upon this basis that I, as a farmer, hold that man to be an enemy to his country as well as to his class, who tries to draw lines of demarcation, and to keep up those feelings of rancour and hostility between the agriculturists and manufacturers, which the Protectionists are at this hour promoting. (Cheers.) I lately read a speech made by the Duke of Richmond in the House of Lords, and you know that he is the top of this movement, as it were, the knob of the machine (laughter), in which he makes it his boast that he has got all the sympathies, feelings, and affections of the farmers with him, or words to that effect. (Hear, hear.) Now, I beg to tell the noble duke, that he is very much mistaken upon that point. (Cheers.) It is very true that he can command a certain number to rally round his standard; with your permission we will just see who they are. (Hear, hear.) We will analyze them. (Loud applause.) There is a certain class of amphibious farmers, who mix up land-valuation, auctioneering, and such like; I will give the noble duke the whole of that class to begin with. (Hear, hear.) Then there is another class of farmers, who may be occuplers of their own land to a certain extent, and they, some of them at least, may fancy that they have an interest in monopoly; I will give the noble duke the benefit of them also. Then we will take the leaseholders, those who have long leases, or who are leaseholders for life; and there are many such who think that they have a vested interest in monopoly. If you come to the tenant-farmers, I would give that portion of them who live under the immediate interest of their landlords to the noble duke; but, as a great body, the intelligent farmers of this country—though, in some instances, they may be induced to say, that neither their hearts, their affections, nor the interests of their families are by any means with us—I say, nevertheless, they are on the side of the people. (Applause.) The present position of the farmer (and I speak as a tenant-farmer), is a very anomalous one. You have heard the noble lord speak of their condition—you have heard him say that they have not been very prosperous—and I admit that there is ample reason for the remark. Under existing circumstances they never will be prosperous—they never can be prosperous. (Hear, hear.) Why, farming is a very simple process—it is only a question of income and expenditure; and, if certain burdens on the land—in the shape of rent, tithes, rates, taxes, and other demands—consume three-fourths of the produce, it is quite clear only one-fourth is left for the labourer and the farmer. (Cheers.) When you hear great sympathy expressed by certain landlords for labourers, you never hear of their giving up anything to enable the labourer to live better; they do not say that they will take their rent on the corn system, or that they will take the smaller produce and leave the larger for the labourer; but, it is clear that unless they produce more and take less, labourers cannot have more than they now have under existing circumstances. (Hear, hear.) We must, therefore, consider what we have in the background. The landlords do not intend that the labourer should have more, neither do they make sacrifices in order that they may obtain more; and, therefore, I do not give them credit for any sincerity in the matter. (Cheers.) The noble duke talks about the political independence of the farmer: I wish he possessed it. (Loud cheers.) He says he is entitled to it, and I admit it; but I say, under the Chandos clause, it is impossible for him to enjoy it. (Hear, hear, hear.) Will the noble duke give them the ballot? (Cheers, and laughter.) To prove the sincerity of those protective landlords, I invite them either to repeal the £50 Chandos clause, or else to give to the farmers the means of exercising the franchise conscientiously under it. (Cheers.) There is another subject not much talked of at these protective meetings, and that is the game system. (Cheers.) Now, there is a great deal of injury inflicted upon the farmers of this country, and there is a vast quantity of agricultural produce destroyed by game preserves. I do not hesitate to say that many farmers have been ruined in this country solely by the game system. (Cheers.) The very law itself is based on injustice and false principles. It makes game the private property of the landowners; but it does not make him liable for the damage it does to his neighbour's property. I think you will agree with me, that this is unjust. (Loud cheers.) Then there is the law of landlord and tenant. The landlords' property is very clearly recognised by the laws of our country; this proves the influence they have had in Parliament; but the law does not so distinctly recognise the property of tenants. Now, if they would extend protection to the tenants, if they would get their property clearly recognised by the Legislature, and protect the consciences of the farmers by the ballot, I should have some hope that we might get on better. (Cheers.) I have a very strong opinion upon this point; having suffered much political persecution for want of such protection. I believe that the basis of the liberty of the people of this country consists in the unfettered exercise of the elective franchise; and this applies not only to the farmer, but to the people generally. (Cheers.) And I venture to say, that our political landlords—for there is a great distinction, you must observe, between landlords—have endeavoured to carry out the compendious ideas of the monster Caligula: they know that our liberties have but one neck, and they wish to sever it at a blow. (Cheers.) It so happens that the noble earl who presides over the meeting this evening has lately been called upon to speak upon the question of the political franchise of the tenant. He happened to have a tenant unworthy of such a landlord. (Cheers.) The foolish man had some misgivings of his own upon the matter of voting, and, instead of inquiring of his neighbours or others who were willing to teach him, he wrote a letter to the noble lord, which, I think, was an insult to him; but, nevertheless, it afforded to that nobleman an opportunity of expressing his opinions upon the subject; and I am glad to say that as a farmer I honour him for those opinions. I will read an extract from his reply to his tenant. "You will be pleased to observe, that when you give a vote for a member of Parliament you are executing a sacred trust reposed in you by the Legislature, not for your own personal benefit or advantage, not in order to indulge any predilections you may have for one candidate or another, not in order to give effect to any wishes or fancies of me who am your landlord, but for the benefit of the people at large" (loud cheers); "and that if you give it either ignorantly or intentionally, in a manner not consistent with that which is most conducive to their benefit, you violate that trust: in the one case most culpably, in the other, without blame, because through ignorance. But, at the same time, if that ignorance is wilful, and occasioned by a refusal to be informed, or by any neglect in acquiring the information which was within your reach, it is itself not by any means free from blame." (Loud and long-continued cheering.) These are the sentiments of the noble lord who now presides over this meeting. I only hope that I, as a tenant-farmer, shall never fail to respect and appreciate such sentiments. (Cheers.) Permit me to say that I feel this the more deeply, because I have been told that when my property was invested in the soil of another, I bound myself to support his political views; but I had never entered into any political contract, and therefore it was most unjust afterwards to attempt to introduce one. I have been told that I should not be permitted to reap that which justice would award me, by giving me back what I had laid out. Such is the contrast between the noble lord and other landowners; I trust, when you consider such contrast, that you will never fail to show your superior respect for the noble lord, and for those who think and act with him. (Loud cheers.) Now, it is necessary for me to say a few words upon the present state of the farmers. (Hear, hear.) I recollect when a boy, that an old farmer, a most honourable and experienced man, bade me mark him, and said, he felt convinced, from his past experience, that if the Corn Laws should continue for another twenty years, the then race of farmers, with their capital, would be nearly annihilated. (Cheers.) In the parish in which I heard that, I have lately calculated the number of tenants and their condition. There are 21 farms in the parish let to farmers, in addition to others farming their own land. Those 21 farms have had 50 tenants; 21 farmers, now, of course, occupy those farms—but what has become of the 29 who previously occupied them? A few of them, of course, have gone to their final account, but the rest will be found in union workhouses, or in a state of miserable dependence, their prospects destroyed, their hopes blighted, their families ruined. (Loud cheers.) And now I beg to say, as a practical man, that I feel confident that in the course of the next three years, under existing circumstances and with a continuance of the present laws, a greater number of changes will take place in the occupancy of farms than have occurred in any three years preceding. Now, I say, with these facts before me, that if I were to support monopoly I should at least be an unwise, and, as I think, a dishonest man (cheers); and I beg to state as my opinion that if the English farmers generally understood and felt the evils of the present system, and allow it to continue, as the Duke of Richmond says it will, that their attachment to what injures them will indeed be—

"A surprising truth—
The beaten spaniel's fondness not more strange."

(Cheers.) I conceive, also, that the abolition of the Corn Laws would naturally lead to an abolition of feudal privileges; I am confident that you can never obtain the full produce of your soil, or give full employment to the labourer, so long as you maintain the feudal privileges of the country. (Cheers.) I consider, too, when we look at the great advances of rents since the operation of the Corn Laws, that we may fairly regard the Corn Laws as a rent question. (Cheers.) I think it more a rent question than a question of protection to the farmer. I am at a loss to know how it can protect the farmer when its tendency is to annihilate and sweep him away from his occupation. (Cheers.) Another point upon which I must touch is the position of the labourers. Noble lords say it is necessary to continue the Corn Laws for the sake of the labourers. Now, I believe, if they could reduce the condition of the labourers to the full extent that they desire, their state would indeed, be low enough. (Cheers.) It is a melancholy subject for reflection, that in this country the reward of labour and of industry should be so small as it is. You have heard of the wages for making shirts—of the miserable price for which some poor women in this great city toil day and night, and which scarcely enables them to obtain the means of subsistence; I add to that, that in the agricultural districts, also, the poor labourers with their utmost exertions can barely procure a sufficiency of food to satisfy the cravings of nature. I have known an instance of a labouring man with his wife, and a family of six children all under nine years of age, who have vegetated, I won't say subsisted, upon 9s. a week, out of which they had to pay 2s. a week for rent, and actually to pay poor-rates out of the remaining 7s. ("Hear," and cries of "Shame.") Eight persons compelled to keep soul and body together out of 7s. a week! Now, you will no doubt think this almost incredible; but I do myself believe that but for the sympathy of those who surrounded them they must have been lost for want. (Cheers.) I should like to see noble lords who are advocates of the bread-tax, go to such places and take it in kind. (Hear, hear.) Could the wretched wasted forms and haggard countenances of their children, with the stamp of misery upon their brows be depicted, it would be a study for an artist, and would form a fitting adornment for a protection hall. (Loud cheers.) I have often thought, and Heaven forgive me if I was wrong, that more attention is paid in this country to our dogs and horses than to the poor. I say then, under all these circumstances, to which I might add numerous instances of misery and degradation, that the labourers at least have gained no advantage from the Corn Laws. (Cheers.) You must not suppose that I am charging the farmers with not paying more than they should pay to their labourers; I say that it is not in their power to do so; for, unless more be produced from the soil, or less be taken from them in the shape of rent, it is impossible that the labourer under the present system can have more. (Cheers.) But one great advantage of the repeal of the Corn Laws to the labourer would, I conceive, arise from an increased demand for his labour, enabling him to obtain for himself a larger proportion of the necessities of life. If he could do that he would be much better off; and, unless you can give him that, all the pity and all the arguments of noble lords will be of no avail. (Cheers.) I cannot help remarking here upon what appears to me to be the grossest hypocrisy upon the part of many who express an anxious desire to promote the spiritual welfare of the poor, whilst, at the same time, they use their utmost endeavours to prevent them obtaining an increase of food. Why, nature has implanted within man so forcibly his physical wants (undoubtedly for the purpose of promoting human activity) that it is vain to hope for any mental improvement till these wants are first attended to. (Cheers.) It is vain to preach to a starving man. First supply his physical wants, and then he is in a condition to listen to you; but I say that the man is a hypocrite who pretends that he is desirous of promoting the spiritual welfare of the poor if he raise his voice against any measure calculated to obtain for them an increase of food. (Cheers.) It is well known that in a savage state man advances by slow degrees to civilization, and civilization tends to promote a higher tone of morality. Thus the character of man is raised by imperceptible degrees, and it is quite certain that man is a cook long before he is a gentleman. (Cheers and laughter.) With these convictions upon my mind, I feel confident that the only chance of raising the character of the farmer, and of increasing the food of the country, is by the total abolition of all monopolies. (Cheers.) By retaining these monopolies, we are violating the laws of nature and the law of Providence, who hath wisely dispensed His bounties, giving different productions to different climates, with the beneficent intention of promoting the good, the convenience, the welfare, and the happiness of all. (Cheers.) Another feature in this case, which ought to have influence with every well-disposed and intelligent man, is, that by the abolition of monopoly we take the surest means of promoting a kindly feeling with every country in the world; for by such a course all nations would advance in civilization, feeling their mutual dependence upon each other, so that no Government would be able long to oppress them. I have no doubt that the hostile tariffs of America have had their origin in the operations of the Corn Law. (Cheers.) Take away that Corn Law; open the trade of this country with America and with the world, and I am sure that the good sense of the American people would soon cause such restrictions to be removed, whilst they would, at the same time, hold out the right hand of fellowship, not only to this country, but to the world at large. Gentlemen, as an agriculturist, I don't feel highly honoured by the great outcry that has been raised of "protection to agriculture." Agriculture is a pursuit as honourable—perhaps as conducive to health and right feeling—as any profession we can pursue; and no one need feel shame to be engaged in that which has been the occupation of the wise and good of all ages— which, in the zenith of imperial Rome, formed the dignified relaxation of the immortal Cicero—which employed the pen of the accomplished Virgil; in which was nursed the manly mind of the noble Cincinnatus; and which, in our own country, has been followed by a Leicester, by the noble Radnor, by our Spencer, by our Ducie, by our Kinnaird (cheers), and by many others who may be considered as the finest noblemen of our country. (Cheers.) I say it is an insult to them and to the intelligent tenant-farmers of this country to tell us that the goodly vessel of British agriculture dare not put out to sea save under the rotten flag of protection, lest, perchance, some petty bark of competition should board that stately vessel, and make us all prisoners. (Loud cheers.) Gentlemen, I have a far higher opinion of British agriculture. (Cheers.) I believe that we have resources enough within our own soil to give employment to the poor and food to the country, if we would but abolish all monopoly, give ourselves full freedom in the exercise of our natural powers, unfettered by political degradation, and unshackled by those feudal privileges which cripple us, which destroy our energies, which add to the mental degradation, and enfeeble the physical capabilities of the people. I hail, therefore, with delight the intellectual discussions which take place weekly within these walls; I congratulate you upon such magnificent assemblies; I know that there are hearts in this meeting which sympathize with the wants and the sufferings of the poor, hearts anxious to promote the independence of agriculture, and secure the happiness of all classes. (Cheers.) I feel confident of the issue of this struggle—I know that if good principles be developed, they will wax stronger and stronger; and there is a certainty that ultimately they will arrive at maturity, and bear fruit in due season. (Loud cheers.) I have detained you very long—I have to apologise for doing so, and to thank you for the kind attention with which you have listened to me. (Cheers, and cries of "Go on!") Believe me, what I have spoken is the language and feeling of my heart; I utterly disown anything in the pursuit of agriculture which should make me look with jealousy or suspicion upon the welfare of another man; and, I say, depending as we do upon the genial revolution of the seasons, and the benignant smiles of Heaven for success, it is our duty to promote kindly feeling and to hold out the right hand of fellowship to all; in the words of that distinguished prelate, whose name at least I hear, when upon his way to the stake, I say:—"Be ye of good cheer, for I trust that we shall by this discussion have kindled such a flame in England, not of discord, bitterness, and animosity, but of concord, universal benevolence, and good will, as, by the grace of God, shall never, never be extinguished." (Mr. Lattimore was loudly cheered on resuming his seat.)

The CHAIRMAN then announced that Mr. Hunt, who was also a tenant-farmer, would address the meeting. Mr. HUNT came forward amidst considerable applause, and spoke as follows:—"My lord, ladies, and gentlemen, I do not appear before you on the present occasion from a belief that I may be able to render much service to the cause which the League meets weekly in this place to advocate; but I have come here at the request of some friends of mine, being willing to throw in my humble mite towards aiding them. (Cheers.) At this late period of the meeting, and occupied as your time has been so much better than I could have occupied it, I do not intend to address to you many observations. Before I proceed any further I will just state to you that I am a tenant-farmer, a tenant-farmer only, and, comparatively speaking, a poor tenant-farmer. All the capital that I have is invested in agriculture, and therefore you may reasonably suppose that I could not, if I knew it, do anything to injure my own interest. I am one of those who believe that very mistaken notions prevail as to the value of agriculture. I compare commerce and agriculture to a pair of scissors, very good when the two parts are properly united together, but separate and apart nearly valueless. (Loud cheers.) However agriculture in days that are gone might have been of primary importance in this kingdom, I believe at the present period that state of things has passed; and, although myself engaged in agriculture, I believe the manufacturing interest to be of paramount importance in this country. It appears to me that it is in consequence of those mistaken notions to which I have alluded that the Corn Law, more particularly that of 1815, was imposed. It is well known that during the war it was a very easy matter to pay rents, and for landlords to receive them; and it is equally clear to my mind that the landowners, who formed a large majority in both Houses of Parliament at that time, they do at the present moment, passed the Corn Law with the view of securing their incomes, instead of trusting to those means to which they ought to have resorted for that purpose. I consider that the viciousness of the principle which was then adopted has produced from the first, and is still producing its legitimate effects. All bad principles and vicious laws are sure to cause injury, and these enactments, which were passed professedly for the benefit of the agricultural interest, I believe are productive of real injury to it. It appears to me that the landowners of this country have been trusting to these laws to maintain their rents, instead of directing their attention to the improvement of the article from which they derive their income, as manufacturers have been compelled to do; and hence arises the present disastrous state of things. There is a great deal said about protection, in Parliament and out of Parliament; and there are protection societies, as we all know, formed; but my opinion is, that that which is called protection is a real injury; and that the best defence which the farmer and the landed interest can have is the application of right principles. (Cheers.) I would just for a few moments investigate the present condition of the landed interest of this kingdom, more particularly with reference to tenant-farmers. Landlords, as I have said before, instead of turning their attention to the improvement of their estates, and adopting those measures which would best secure an economical expenditure and a large return, have been trusting to these Corn Laws for their rents; and the farmers have been too much led away by the delusion, that by legislative enactments they would be enabled to make their rents; the consequence has been—and to a great extent is at the present day—that the landowners have reduced their tenants to a state of great political vassallage. (Cheers.) I know something of the habits of farmers; I have mixed with them all my life, and I am bold to declare it as my firm conviction—one which I believe the tenant-farmers of this country, as a class, cannot deny—that they have no political independence, neither have they scarcely any political sentiment. (Hear, hear.) Among the landlords there are honourable and bright exceptions, as has been shown in the case of our noble Chairman this evening (cheers); but, generally speaking, I declare that the tenant-farmers of this country are driven hither and thither, to and fro, by their landlords, wherever they may please to take them. Notwithstanding this state of things, they have not derived that pecuniary advantage which we might reasonably have expected they would have obtained before they consented to surrender their privileges and liberties as intellectual beings. (Hear, hear.) I believe that at the present time the condition of the tenant-farmers of this kingdom is deplorably bad; and I am satisfied that it is not likely to improve under the restrictive laws now in force. (Cheers.) Another consequence of these laws, and an evil consequent upon the present state of agriculture, is, that there is by far too small a demand for agricultural labour. I will tell you how I prove this statement. The landowners of this country—as our friend Mr. Cobden very aptly and properly said in the House of Commons the other night—have certain old-fashioned notions which they do not like to break through; and having derived their rents, as they imagine, from the Corn Laws, they are apprehensive that the repeal of these Corn Laws would compel them to surrender these old-fashioned notions, and hence they stand up for them. In the first place, then, I maintain that one effect of these legislative restrictions is a bad system of agriculture. Since I left Bristol this afternoon, I am satisfied that I passed over thousands and thousands of acres of land which, by a comparatively small but judicious outlay of capital, might be made to produce more than double what it now does, thereby calling into demand a greater amount of agricultural labour, and thus benefiting that class of the community. (Loud cheers.) As our friend Mr. Cobden very properly said, the landowners of this kingdom, as a class, have a great dislike to the conversion of their old pastures into tillage-land; but it is known by all who have paid attention to the subject, and I believe all good farmers will admit the fact, that one hundred acres even of the poorest pasture-land, properly managed and brought into tillage, would not only give employment to a much greater number of labourers, and circulate a large amount of money in the improvement of this land, but the produce would be, in many instances, more than doubled; and labour, also, would be required not only at the outset, but permanently. (Hear, hear.) Speaking of the agriculture of this kingdom as a whole, I believe that by any improved or better system of farming—I think I am very much below the mark but I, at all times, dislike to exaggerate—I believe, if the land of this country were properly cultivated as it should be, that it would yield the largest amount of return for the capital expended on it,—that where one agricultural labourer is now employed, we should want at least three, and that not temporarily, but permanently. (Cheers.) You must know that in the cultivation of land under the best system, not only is greater capital required, but more labour is necessary; that the returns are larger, and consequently, that the net profit is greater. Now, I apprehend—and those of us who are tenant-farmers, and advocate the repeal of the Corn Law, all believe—that the landowners of this country,—who at present consider that their interests depend upon these laws, and that they of course could not look to them for protection if they were repealed—they would be driven—as they ought to be, in my opinion, and as the manufacturer is—to improve the article from which they derive their income; and hence a larger amount of labour would be called into requisition. (Loud cheers.) But I would also tell you, that notwithstanding what the President of the Board of Trade said recently in the House of Commons respecting the landlords taking their farms into their own hands, and so forth, although I admit there may be exceptions to that which I am about to state, yet, speaking of them as a class, they cannot cultivate their own land, because they have not the means. (Loud cheers.) Well, then, if we should have by the repeal of the Corn Laws—as I most assuredly believe would be the case—a very improved state of agriculture, that must be effected by a judicious outlay of capital, generally speaking, by the tenant-farmers; and these farmers would only consent to that outlay under the protection of long leases, the granting of which would destroy that which is one main ingredient in the present system of the political tyranny which exists among landlords. (Loud cheers.) I should just like to show you how the thing works under the present system, which is usually that of annual leases. Every good farmer, while he farms for himself, must, of necessity, farm also for his landlord; no farmer can farm well without improving the property of the owner of the soil. If a man, under the present system, lays out a large sum of money in the improvement of his land, trusting to the kindness and forbearance of his landlord, expecting that he will not take advantage of him, why, under peculiar circumstances, his expectations may be realized. But, on the other hand, death may intervene; the property may change hands, and thus the tenant may be prevented, from various circumstances, from reaping that which he had sown. But the thing in the present day, and under the present system, works in a much more injurious manner than even this. If a farmer invest £300, or £400, or £500 in the improvement of his farm, and an election comes on, his landlord forwards to his agent, probably, a letter; the agent sends to the tenant "the Duke of So-and-so's compliments," or "Mr. So-and-so's compliments, and would feel obliged by his voting for So-and-so." If he neglect or refuse to vote as he is requested he receives a notice to quit. The consequence of this condition is that he has to subvert to this political degradation, or to take the chance of being turned out of his farm, with his property remaining in its soil. I believe that the repeal of the Corn Laws would certainly effect much improvement in the agriculture of the kingdom, which can only be effected, generally speaking, as I said before, by investment of capital by the tenant-farmers. This they would only do under the protection of leases, which I imagine is the great obstacle to the repeal of the Corn Laws in the minds of a large proportion of the landowners at the present time. But I am bold to inquire also—and I would ask the question in any meeting of tenant-farmers—what have we as tenant-farmers done for ourselves? There are none of us who have grown rich; many of us have become poor; and a large proportion of us are struggling on and suffering in many instances great privation. (Hear, hear.) While protection is continued, let us see—for it should be shown to us most clearly—that that protection which it is said is afforded to the farmer has been productive of benefit to us. We are told at these protection meetings that upon the repeal of the Corn Laws such and such consequences would follow. They ought to show us that under the present system we are deriving great advantages, which I believe they would fail in showing. Then, again, great sympathy is expressed at these meetings for the agricultural labourers. I yield to no man in a desire to benefit not only the agricultural labourer, but the working classes of my fellow-countrymen of every kind. (Cheers.) I am bold to give it you as my opinion that, speaking of the agricultural labourers of this kingdom as a whole—there may be exceptions, and those exceptions will be found in the neighbourhood of large cities, towns, and manufacturing districts, where they receive much better and higher wages than they do in the purely agricultural parts of the country—the nearer to a manufacturing town the greater the number of manufacturers, or more contiguous to populous cities, there the rate of wages is the highest; and in proportion as you recede from those places towards the purely agricultural districts, there the wages are the lowest. I say, that having paid considerable attention to the subject, and speaking of the agricultural labourers of this kingdom as a body, I believe that, at the present time, their rate of living is very much below that of paupers in our union workhouses. In the county from which I come—Gloucestershire—which is not considered as one of the lowest in this respect, there are hundreds of families living at this present time, on 7s. a week. (Cries of "Shame.") There are districts in Somersetshire, also, where, I am told, they are receiving no more. In these localities, complaints are made by the farmers that they cannot keep their property—their gates and stiles, and so forth—from being carried away. I tell them, in reply, that it is for this very reason: the poor say they must live, that the rate of wages which they are receiving does not enable them to provide themselves with the necessaries of life, and at the same time with fuel; and, consequently, they are driven to thieving. This must, and I may say does, produce a very demoralizing effect upon those classes. But there is one sure criterion to which you may direct the Duke of Richmond or any other protectionist, in order to prove whether what I have said is correct or not. I believe, taking the average of the kingdom, the weekly expense of maintaining the poor in our workhouses is somewhat about 2s. per head, not including any charge for rent. According to this rate, an able-bodied labourer, his wife, and four children, living in the workhouse, would be maintained at a public cost of 12s. a week, exclusive of rent; and if we add 1s. 6d. for rent, it would make it 13s. 6d.; this, I believe, taking the average of the kingdom, is about half as much again as the independent labourers are earning out of doors. (Hear, hear.) These gentlemen talk about the condition of the agricultural labourers, and since I first spoke on the question at our county meeting at Gloucester, I have had many of them conversing with me, and calling me to account for what I then said, and I have asked every one of them who has spoken to me, "Will you tell me how often you consider your agricultural labourers eat meat?" They invariably answered, "We cannot tell." (Hear, hear.) I have asked them, "Do you think they taste fresh meat once a month?" and I have not met with a single farmer who could look me honestly in the face and say, "I believe my labourers do taste fresh meat once a month." I give it as my honest and conscientious opinion, that, speaking of the large proportion of the agricultural labourers, neither they nor their children taste fresh meat anything like so often as once a month. (Loud cries of "Shame.") One of the tenants of the Duke of Beaufort recently admitted this fact to me; he said, carrying his argument rather too far for his own purpose in endeavouring to prove the goodness of his position in reply to my question, "Do not talk of the agricultural labourers not tasting fresh meat! I know scores of farmers who cannot get it." (Loud laughter and cheers.) And yet all this is carried on, remember, and this state of things exists under what is called a system of protection to agriculture, which we must cry out for ever to maintain. (Loud cheers.) Well, then, I believe in the first place, that farmers would be extremely benefited by the repeal of these laws, in consequence of the change it would compel in the present system of agriculture. Upon this point I wish farmers to remember—and if I could speak to persons of that class, I should say the same thing—that they have been in serious error in estimating their ability to make their rent from corn, and corn alone. If we have received a higher price for our corn under some circumstances, what has been the case with other things? What has been the price of other produce—our cheese, butter, and those articles which I consider only as necessaries, and which ought to be within the reach of every poor man, but which, under the present system, must be regarded as luxuries by them. How often do they get these articles; and, in consequence of their not getting them, how have the farmers' prices of stock been depreciated? This is a part of the subject which occasions to my mind at times, when I think of it, infinite pain. The difference in the rate of living which may be experienced by the same class of persons under different circumstances, is, to me, truly awful to contemplate. (Hear, hear.) A few years ago, while the iron trade in Lancashire was very brisk, there was a demand for all kinds of agricultural produce from that neighbourhood; not only was the whole district round, around the glens, but we had butchers and shopkeepers from all quarters coming to Bristol for vegetables, cheese, butter, flour, and all such things; and not only so, but we had butchers coming to Bristol market, taking every week live stock to the amount of several hundred pounds, for sale in those manufacturing districts. At that time no one contended that the mechanics were living luxuriously; they did but live, and live decently. Since the change in the state of that trade, not only has Bristol market been entirely forsaken by this class of purchasers, but stock is actually brought from that quarter into our markets; and I believe that the consumption of produce in that iron-manufacturing district, for the last eighteen months or two years, has not been much more than one-third what it was in prosperous times. (Hear, hear.) This is a painful subject, as I said before, because it shows that it is considered that the mechanics there did but live before, and you see what a deplorable state they must be in now. (Hear, hear.) We are told, also, by many who advocate this protection, that a repeal of the Corn Laws would lower the price of wages; but I believe the effect would be very different: the price of wages, as Sir Robert Peel stated, must be regulated by the world's market; demand and supply must and will settle the price of labour at all times. (Loud cheers.) That is found to be the case at the present time; we farmers, when we have an increased demand for labour in the summer season, are obliged to pay higher wages than we do in winter: at the latter period, when there is less demand for labour, wages are considerably lower than at other times, and this result must inevitably follow. If, then, a repeal of the Corn Laws would lead to the improvement of the system of agriculture, it would call into demand an amazing amount of labour; three men would be required where only one is now employed.—I believe in that respect I am under the mark,—and, as a necessary consequence, we must, at least, pay as good, if not higher, wages than we do at the present time. (Hear, hear.) This is so self-evident to my own mind that I am quite astonished any one should dispute the proposition. I wish to be distinctly understood upon this point, that my brother-farmers may know I maintain that the abolition of the Corn Laws would improve our system of agriculture, call into demand a greater amount of agricultural labour, and hence the prosperity of England would be very much increased. I am perfectly ready to admit that if the Corn Laws were repealed, and, at the same time, the farmers and landowners pursued the present negligent system of management, which is by far too common, that the agriculturists, as a body, must go down; but I believe we should be driven not to our wit's ends, but to exercise our wit's ingenuity, and by so doing we should be able to do as the manufacturers have already done—to keep pace with the times. (Loud and continued cheering.) It is not my intention to detain you many minutes longer, because I know you are expecting to hear a gentleman whom it has been my pleasure to listen to many times. (Renewed cheering, and cries of "Go on.") From what I have said, you will easily be able to gather my sentiments upon this important subject. You will see that the opinions which I have expressed also militate very much against the argument which is used by many, that a great deal of land will be thrown out of cultivation by a repeal of the Corn Laws. Those men who call themselves the farmers' friends—these very men, I say, have proved themselves to be false prophets before; and hence it is that I must take leave very much to doubt what they say at the present time. The Duke of Richmond, who wishes now to be our champion, if I am not mistaken, a few years ago said that, if the duty were taken off wool, we should have no mutton to eat, and that our sheep walks would all be thrown out of use; and yet, in the face of that statement, wool has increased in value, and the number of sheep has increased also. There was a time when the agriculturists of this very county, I believe, petitioned against the improvement of the roads leading to the metropolis, because they said it would lessen the value of their land; and yet all experience has proved that their lands, and all other land, is very much increased in value by facility of communication with towns. These men also claim particularly to be our friends. Before the last general election they did the very same thing; they went to the farmers in the counties and said, "No surrender! the Corn Laws as they are!" and the farmers, under the influence of their landlords, returned a monopolist House of Commons. I believe no set of men were ever so deceived as the farmers were on that occasion: and I am convinced that within six months after the passing of the last Corn Bill, and the alteration in the tariff, if the independent voice of the farmers of this country could have been taken, that ninety-nine out of every hundred would have said, "Sir Robert Peel is a bad doctor, and we will call in a fresh physician if you please." (Cheers and laughter.) And yet these very men who profess to have been deceived on this question are now rallying round these identical farmers' friends, in the shape of agricultural protection societies. I rejoice in the formation of these associations, because I believe that they must either now be driven to discuss the question, or, if they remain silent, confess themselves beaten. Truth need fear nothing from discussion. I acknowledge that, from all I have read, I have never yet been able to meet with anything like what I could consider an argument on the question in favour of protection. Such a state of things as this, I believe, cannot last much longer; and then, as I said before, they will be driven to discuss the question. This discussion, I have no fear, will tend to elicit the very same information which would have been brought out by the committee moved for by Mr. Cobden, had it been granted. (Loud cheers.) I have forgotten the name of the member who used the expression, but, I believe in the debate which took place on our friend's motion, some member said, that there was a Mr. Day, who had been to some meeting, and had shattered the arguments of the Anti-Corn-Law League to pieces. I hope these protection societies will let in on our dark minds this light of Day (laughter and cheers), and, if they can, convince us of our error; but I confess to you I am very apprehensive they much fear their ability to do any such thing, and for this reason:—some of you, perhaps, recollect that a few weeks ago there was a county meeting held in Somersetshire. Though not living in that county, I attended, thinking I might pick up some information which, as a farmer, might be valuable to me. A more conclusive refutation of the principles of protection which were advocated at that meeting, I never heard, and a more triumphant decision by any assembly I believe was never arrived at. These protection societies have hitherto invariably precluded discussion. A few days after the Somersetshire county meeting and that of Gloucester, a society of this sort was established in Bristol. From the advertisement calling the meeting I considered—and some of my brother farmers were of the same opinion—that every man who professed himself a farmer and agriculturist had a right to attend and discuss the question, and we resolved to do so. We applied to the intended chairman, and we were told—"No discussion, gentlemen, if you please." (Laughter.) If we had gone there, and the question had been fairly discussed, I have no doubt that the majority of those present would have determined to form a society for the protection of agriculture in connexion with the Anti-Corn-Law League. (Loud and continued cheering.) In reference to that meeting I will just observe that I believe some London papers—our Mark-lane Express I know—boasted largely of the presence of 600 farmers, literally crowded into a room that would scarcely hold 200. (Laughter.) Whilst, then, I rejoice in the hope that discussion will be elicited by these societies, I am afraid they are very much disinclined for it. I should have noticed, had time permitted, some of the objections and arguments which are used by these protectionists as affecting taxes, and a variety of subjects which I shall not now refer to, any further than to this one point. A great deal has been said about the taxes which the farmers pay. I believe that farmers do not pay an inordinate or improper proportion of taxes; but I wish to show you what, in my opinion, has been the effect of the remissions of some of the taxes which have been made, professedly for their benefit. These landed gentlemen are wise in their generation, and they know very well that they can only reasonably expect their rents from the surplus of the farm produce after the expense of its cultivation and maintenance are paid. They know that the charges of cultivation must first be paid. If a riding horse or a shepherd dog is wanted, and a tax is laid on it, they know, in point of fact, that that tax must come out of the rent, because it would lessen the surplus; they therefore very ingeniously remitted the taxes on our riding horses, our windows to a certain amount, and also on our shepherd dogs, knowing, as I believe they did, that such remission would be so much augmentation of their rents. This I am satisfied is the real fact of the case. Now, from what I have said you will see that I am opposed to these laws from purely interested motives, letting alone any higher consideration. But you may also gather from what I have said that I am opposed to them because I believe them to be immoral and inequitable laws. I consider they are immoral as regards our labouring population; and I hold them to be inequitable, inasmuch as they were imposed for the benefit of the few at the expense of the many. (Loud cheers.) On these high grounds alone, independent of any other consideration, I argue for the abrogation of these laws. Rather than live on the wages of industry, I would doff my coat and go to work to-morrow. (Renewed cheers.) The religious society with which I am connected interfere, comparatively speaking, but little with politics. I myself consider that this subject ought to be discussed calmly and deliberately, apart from politics. If I were to express my political creed perhaps I should not agree with many, and I might go further than most; but I look to measures and not to men. I would simply state my creed to be civil, religious, and commercial equality. (Loud cheers.) Whilst, then, I disclaim any political feeling, I would also candidly and openly avow, that I advocate the repeal of these laws from a belief that they are injurious to my own interests, that they are injurious to the poor, and also that they are decidedly unjust. I wish my brother farmers calmly and seriously to investigate and inquire into the matter. I hope and trust the Anti-Corn-Law League will not relax their efforts in enlightening my brother farmers on this question; let them go into counties and hold their meetings. If they could only employ a few good practical farmers as lecturers in this cause, I believe they would do an immense amount of good at the present time. (Hear, hear.) I know that the minds of the farmers are now very much alive to the subject, and that serious inquiries are going on among them in respect to it. I have also reason to know that the effect of our county meeting in Gloucester has been entirely to change the opinion of many farmers who were before decided opponents of the repeal of these laws. I wish to encourage the League to the continuance of their valuable labours, and I desire my brother farmers seriously and calmly to investigate this subject and to act independently. I would persuade them, if I could, that the principal element of power is knowledge. Let them acquire this knowledge, let them become enlightened on this subject, and then I would only ask of them to do what their conscience would dictate, and become free in every sense of the word. I would say to them, remember, that he only is a freeman whom knowledge on this question makes free. (Mr. Hunt resumed his seat amidst loud applause.)

The CHAIRMAN rose and said that he had now the pleasure of calling upon Mr. Cobden to address them.

Mr. COBDEN then came forward amidst the most enthusiastic and frequently-renewed cheering and waving of hats and handkerchiefs, which prevented the honourable gentleman for some time from addressing the assembly. Silence having been obtained he proceeded as follows:—My lord, ladies, and gentlemen, I think you will now be at no loss to understand why it was that I was refused a parliamentary committee to inquire into the condition of the tenant-farmer and farm-labourer. (Hear.) I have now come from that assembly to which I alluded, and appear before you as a court of appeal. The gentlemen who have just addressed you are our first witnesses. (Cheers.) You have been addressed to-night by two bona fide real live farmers. (Laughter.) As to their talents as speakers, judge for yourselves. I have had an opportunity of visiting the farm of one of those gentlemen, although I have not yet had the same privilege with respect to the other; but I have been over Mr. Lattimore's farm at Whethampstead, in Hertfordshire, and I challenge his brother farmers in that county to tell me whether I am not correct in saying that he is one of the best practical farmers in that county. (A voice, "He is.") Nay, more: I will undertake to say, although in that gentleman's presence, that his farm produces on an average in the year one-third more crops than are ordinarily raised upon the same acreage in his parish, and that he employs twice as many labourers as are commonly employed upon the same surface of land. (Cheers.) But, ladies and gentlemen, this is only the beginning of the evidence which we intend to lay before you, obtained from the lips of practical agriculturists, as to the real nature of the benefit which the Corn Laws confer upon their order. You have heard some statements to-night respecting the agricultural labourers; I wish we could bring a few of them upon this platform, and let you see the garments of those men whom we are told are "the best of home customers for the manufacturer." (Hear, hear.) Our friend, Mr. Hunt, has told us, that at the protection meetings which are now being held in every part of the country discussion upon this subject is not allowed. No, gentlemen; examination into this subject is not liked by the landlords, either at county meetings or in Parliament. I have courted discussion at all my county meetings for Free Trade. I have held twenty-eight open-air meetings in as many counties, inviting all comers, at all of which I was invariably glad to find an opponent. (Hear, hear.) Some mention has lately been made of one Mr. Day, of Huntingdon. I believe that a nobleman—the Duke of Richmond—stated in his place in the House of Lords, that I ran away from Mr. Day at Huntingdon. This statement is only one of those slips which his grace is in the habit of making. The fact is, I was not at Huntingdon at all; it was the only place which I did not happen to visit. Huntingdon is the only locality in which we were ever outnumbered by a majority. I do not mention this, however, to take any credit for myself, but I allude to it for the purpose of accounting for the defeat, on that occasion, upon another hypothesis. Somehow or other, Huntingdon has always been a little behind the other counties of England. (Hear, hear.) It is a curious historical fact connected with that county, that it was the last place where they burnt old women for witchcraft. (Laughter.) It is a remarkable circumstance, but nevertheless true, that up to this day a sermon is annually preached in Huntingdon by a fellow of one of the colleges of Cambridge, who goes there once a year for that purpose, in fulfilment of a bequest made by some charitable person—against the sin of witchcraft. (Loud laughter.) Do not you think it would be a pious act for some man to perform, in making his will, to institute a second foundation, by which another of these fellows of Queen's College, Cambridge, should be required to preach a sermon every year against the Corn Laws? (Hear.) For I do not see much difference between burning old women for witchcraft and starving poor old women and little children by bad laws. While I am upon this subject of the Duke of Richmond's high authority, Mr. Day, I may mention that the protectionists have been very extensively circulating a pamphlet written by that gentleman with very great industry and ingenuity,—I wish I could say with as much truth and candour,—in which he has gone through all the speeches that we have made for the last five years—and it is no slight task; I give him credit for his industry; and out of that heap of rubbish—for I must say that we have talked a great deal of nonsense in past times—he has collected everything that he could find least worthy of being recorded. By ingeniously transposing sentences and suppressing dates, this person most dexterously manages to give a totally different meaning to that which the speakers had intended. I need not to trouble you with more than one instance. Mr. Day wants to prove my inconsistency; and how do you think he attempts to do it? He first quotes from a speech in which I told the operatives of Lancashire, that they ought to have their bread at one-third, or thirty-three per cent. less than what they were at that time paying. He then makes an extract from another speech of mine, in which I stated to the farmers of Bedfordshire, that I did not think with a free trade in corn that their corn would be cheaper than it then was. Now, though he gives a date to the first quotation, which was in 1810, when wheat was upwards of 70s. a quarter, he does not mention the time of the second extract from my speech, at Bedford, which was delivered only last June, when wheat had fallen more than thirty-three per cent., being at that time only 47s. per quarter. (Hear, hear.)

Some little interruption was here caused by an individual in the meeting, which produced a general call for his expulsion from the theatre.

Mr. COBDEN resumed: No, no; we never turn any one out here; we wish our opponents to stay, that we may put some common sense into their heads. (Laughter.) I think I have shown you that Mr. Day is about as good a pamphleteer as the Duke of Richmond could find, and one whom I should think that nobleman would do well to quote from frequently for the future. Ladies and gentlemen, you have heard to-night the statement of our agricultural case. Some persons have been at a loss to understand how Free Trade would benefit the merchant, manufacturer, and consumer, without lowering the price of food. All these individuals invariably proceed upon the erroneous assumption that we have already enough to eat. (Hear, hear.) They forget that under the present system, regularly and constantly, there are at least 10,000,000 people in these islands who never have a sufficiency of food (hear, hear); and that the growers of wheat—for that is their darling pet article—are raising their produce for the subsistence of not more than 20,000,000, at all events, out of the 28,000,000 of our population. By this restrictive and suicidal system, the rest of the community are thrown out of the market for wheat, and are compelled to live upon potatoes, oatmeal, barley bread, or beans. (Cries of "Shame.") We say, let these people into the markets—bring them into a condition to become consumers of your wheat—and then you may sell all you now grow to the people who are at present your customers, and also bring your paupers into a state in which they may earn wherewithal to buy the wheat which is brought from abroad. A calculation was given to me the other day by a very large biscuit baker, and a statement like this is worth something as coming from a practical man. He says—"If you give to the people of these islands 24 ounces more bread a day, it will amount to 3,000,000 quarters of wheat. If you allow the 10,000,000 of your population who have an insufficient supply of food to have the workhouse allowance in addition to that which they already have, it would amount to an importation of 10,000,000 quarters of wheat." (Hear.) This is the compensation we offer to the landowners and farmers of this country, if they will allow the people to prosper, instead of determining, as they now do, that they will have paupers to subsist upon their land, whereas they might have them for customers in the towns. (Cheers.) But there are periods when corn is sold as low—pay, lower—in this country under the present system of the Corn Law than it would be with a perfectly Free Trade at all; because, when you have famine seasons—as you must always have if you will limit your supply to this narrow island, with its capricious climate, in which you very often have three or four years of famine in succession, as we had from 1838 to 1842—what is the consequence? Why, you starve down your population; you banish them from the country. (Hear, hear.) I tell all those farmers who would like to have their customers at home, that, during the four years from 1838 to 1842, no less than 500,000 people emigrated from this land to find food in other countries. ("Hear, hear," and cries of "Shame.") At the termination of these periods of dearth, when there has been but one good harvest, the agriculturists are astonished to find that they have not customers ready to consume the extra produce of their land. Why, the fact is that they have in the meantime been destroying their customers; bringing the labouring classes down to potatoes and oatmeal, and sending away every man who could get the money to carry himself off to those countries which are not cursed with a Corn Law. (Loud cheers.) Now, I am of opinion—and I have stated the same sentiment in the House of Commons, where I am not in the habit of paying compliments, or saying anything that would be too pleasing to its members—that neither landlords, farmers, nor labourers, have derived any benefit from this system. (Hear, hear.) I believe that land would be more valuable in this country if you had at once an entire abolition of the Corn Laws. I applied to the Government last autumn, and asked them to send out to Switzerland, and instruct our ambassador there to obtain accurate accounts of the value of the land in that country, which I am prepared to say is worth more than that in England; and yet in Switzerland there is a perfectly free trade in corn. (Cheers.) I say most unfeignedly, that if I were going to take a farm upon a twenty-one years' lease, I would rather have it at the present rental, if the Corn Laws were abolished to-morrow, than I would place upon myself the burden of cultivating the land if I knew this system of restriction would continue (hear); because, in the first place, I should be sure that I should be surrounded by a prosperous community, capable of consuming all I could produce; but I would not confine myself to the production of old-fashioned wheat. In the other case, I should dread the retribution which is coming on the land and the farmers—in the shape of pauperism, the income-tax, and rates of every description, county rates as well as general taxes—which, if this system continues, threatens to render the land valueless both to landlords and tenants. (Loud cheers.) With these convictions in our minds, and backed as we are by the most intelligent landowners and farmers, why need we continue to treat this as a class question? (Hear, hear.) We will not do so. We are no longer a body of manufacturers and traders; we have the best of the landlords and farmers with us. (Loud and prolonged cheering.) I do not despair yet of representing the county of Buckingham in Parliament. (Laughter.) The time is not far distant when the landowners will be just as anxious to claim for themselves the merit of being Free Traders, as we find now in the House of Commons a body of West Indian proprietors standing up and virtuously professing their abhorrence of slavery. (Laughter.) You see what we have done for agriculture already. Look what the League is doing to promote, at this very time, the best interests of agriculture, by the improvement of tillage. Who can go through the country without seeing that beautiful spectacle—the red draining-tiles—sparkling upon the surface of the land in all directions. (Hear.) If we have done all this by exciting the mere fright of Free Trade, what would Free Trade itself do for the land? (Cheers.) I had a letter the other day from Northumberland, in which the writer, who is himself connected with agriculture, tells me that the manufacturers of agricultural implements, draining-tiles, agricultural chemists, and persons of that class connected with scientific improvements of that description, ought to subscribe and present me with a piece of plate for what I had done for their interests; and he says he will be bound that the Duke of Buckingham would subscribe to it. (Laughter.) Picture to yourself a candle-labrum standing on a tripod! (Renewed laughter.) What shall we have for the design? Why, a plough at one corner, a power-loom at another, and a ship at a third. There would then be the union of manufactures, commerce, and agriculture. (Renewed laughter.) I have no doubt we shall all shake hands upon this question in less than five years from this time (hear, hear), and therefore I am anxious that we should make the repeal of the Corn Laws less and less of a class question, and take in more and more of agriculture in the view which we have of it. (Cheers.) I say the agricultural ground is the strongest upon which we can stand. Why, you have heard what has been said to-night relative to the present condition of the farmers. A gentleman upon the platform told me just now that he was in company the other day in the south with fifty farmers, and a wise man at his elbow whispered in his ear and said, "There are not two out of the whole fifty men who will not be bankrupts in less than three years." You have also heard what has been said of the condition of the landowners,—that they cannot cultivate their own land, inasmuch as they have not got the means. (Hear.) I was once at a large dinner in a midland county upon the occasion of a ploughing match. The company were very free and joyous after dinner. There were present a miller, a land-valuer, and a worthy baronet, and they talked very freely upon the circumstances and condition of the farmers in the county. I listened attentively to the discussion, the result of which was that they all agreed that if the tenantry of the county were sold up they would not be found solvent. The conversation subsequently turned upon the landowners, and the result of this discussion also manifestly was, that if the landlords of the county were sold up, they too would not be found to be solvent. Having listened to all their statements, I ventured to make this remark:—"Well, gentlemen, you have had all your own way for this last twenty-eight years, and it does not appear that you have been able to take care of yourselves; now, let us Free-Traders have a turn, and we will see if we can do better for you than you have been able to do for yourselves." (Hear, hear.) After the evidence we have had to-night, that you will go away with this impression, which I unfeignedly entertain, that what we ask in Free Trade is not a possibility, it is the agricultural labourer. (Hear.) He is already doing as he can be. You have heard from Mr. Villiers, I believe would be verified by intelligent persons from all parts of the country,—that if your land was cultivated, not up to an imaginary picture—not up to the pitch of garden cultivation—although you never can stop in improvement till you come to that,—but if the land of England was cultivated up to the point at which the farmers in the north of England—I mean in North Northumberland and in Scotland—have brought their farms, that the land in this country would then produce double what it does now, and would yield three times the demand for labour which it does at present. (Cheers.) You have also heard some statements relative to the superstitious reverence which the landowners have for their acres; that they will not allow a change to be made in their estates which may be even displeasing to the eye. (Hear.) They will not only not suffer the avenues of trees to their mansions to be touched—one would not quarrel with that—but even will not allow the removal of those which are scattered over their estates, blighting the crops, interrupting the sun, and foiling the best efforts of the farmer. Not only will they indulge in such fantastical luxuries, but they will not allow the green pastures to be ploughed up, because their grandfathers before them looked on that pasture, and they will, therefore, continue to look at it till it actually becomes not grass but moss. I say this superstitious veneration for land as it is, would disappear before that stern necessity which must be imposed on the owners of the soil, when they see they have no other means of deriving rents to meet their mortgages and show themselves at the accustomed periods in the West-end circles, but by looking upon land as traders regard the commodities in which they deal, as something which, by the application of science, skill, and capital, they may draw the utmost possible produce from. I ask these farmers present, what is it that is most wanted in land on England? They will tell you, capital. ("Hear, hear," from Mr. Lattimore and Mr. Hunt.") By capital I mean not sacks of money; they would be useless; but what is wanted is more sheep; five, where there is now but one; three heads of cattle where there is now but one; better plough and harrows; under-draining in every acre. That is the capital they want, and that capital would be valueless unless it were allied with labour to give it a constant increasing production. (Cheers.) Now, I ask, how it is that there is not capital on the land necessary for its proper cultivation? Why, in this country, at the present moment, there is a positive plethora of capital. Money is down to two per cent.; every trade and manufacture is over-ridden by competitors having capital and wanting employment. Yet the complaint is that you agriculturists have not capital enough to till your land. Why is it? There must be a reason for it. You have heard the cause in the explanation of these intelligent agriculturists: they want security in the application of that capital. (Loud cheers.) This Corn Law, which they say is for the benefit of the agriculturists, deters the capital from being invested in land, because upon the Corn Law rests those other monstrous evils and grievances to which Mr. Lattimore and Mr. Hunt have referred. The landowners, not trusting to capital, skill, or the application of science to their land, what do they rely on? Why, the Corn Law. And how can they maintain it? By political means alone; by compelling their tenants in subjection as tenants-at-will they make every thing subservient to political power, and political power wholly subservient to the maintenance of the Corn Law; and, thus revolving in a vicious circle, the Corn Law is made to react on cultivation: thus it is at the basis not only of bad farming, but of the very humiliating grievances which the farmers labour under. It is not our business here to talk of game, but of corn; but if the landowners pass a law by which they prevent the people of these islands from being supplied with food from other countries, they invite an inquiry as to how they use that land upon which alone they insist that we shall be fed; and if we find that they are wasting the produce of the soil for their own senseless amusement, and denying the people the right of getting food elsewhere, then the game, parks, and every other arrangement they have about their estates, become a fair question of consideration. (Cheers.) When I was in Scotland recently, at a public meeting in Cupar in the county of Fife, a farmer sent a letter to me, which I read at the meeting; he gave me his name, which was published. This person was a tenant of Captain Wemyss, the member for that county. He stated that he and two other farmers rented 700 Scotch acres adjoining the preserves of that gentleman, and that he had a clause in his agreement by which he was entitled to receive compensation for damage done by the game, to be assessed annually by valuers to be agreed upon. He told me this astounding fact, which has never been contradicted, that in the year 1841, they received as compensation for destruction done to the crops upon that 700 Scotch acres—only one-fourth of which being in crop could be damaged by the game—£700; and yet he said that was not an equivalent to him for his loss, that nothing could compensate the farmers for the damage done by game; for it not only destroyed the crop of the year, but it poisoned the land for future crops, and it spoiled the fruits of not merely one year's labour, but the efforts of four years' preparation of the crop which was destroyed by the game. I have taken some pains to inquire as to the amount of damage done by game in this country. I have had intelligent farmers who have given me as their opinion, that, taking into account turnips, corn, and other things injured, the produce destroyed by game every year in this land would be equal to 2,000,000 quarters of corn. If we are not to be supplied with corn elsewhere, I say we have a right to call on the landowner to destroy these vermin that are eating up the corn which the people ought to have. (Loud cheers.) I am glad to find our agricultural friends here have put their brother farmers on the right scent: instead of being hallooed on by their political landlords to run hooting after the League, as a bugbear set up to amuse them, let them stick to grievances nearer home; let them call these politicians to account for their game-preserves. What is the system? A landlord lets his farm to a tenant: one of the clauses in the agreement states, that the game—rabbits, hares, &c.—are to be carefully preserved for the landlord and his friends. What does the landlord do then? He lets the manor to somebody else, to have the privilege of shooting and hunting over this land, which he has let to the farming tenant. There is one tenant who preserves the game, and another tenant over him, who has the privilege of destroying that game, without ever having paid the expense of its keep; and that is an ordinary and common process carried on. Therefore, I say, let the farmer look to those glaring evils near home; he would then find that our grievances are his grievances, our interests his interests. Now, at this late hour, I should be sorry to detain you. (Cheers, and cries of "Go on, go on.") But I have had transmitted to me from the United States of America a speech delivered by a senator of that country; and I am sure it would be gratifying to him as an ardent advocate of Free Trade there, to find that we reciprocate his sentiments from so gorgeous an assembly as this. The gentleman I allude to is named M'Duffie, and he has been for twenty years the Villiers of the Legislature of the United States. (Cheers.) He has sent me a copy of a speech he delivered last January. The people in America appear to be just precisely occupying the same ground against manufacturing monopolists which we maintain here against landowning monopolists. Fifteen millions of the people are there tyrannized over by a mere fraction of the community, who have managed to get possession of the political power, in order to uphold what is called "protection to native industry." (Laughter.) Now, these 15,000,000 of the community depend for their subsistence upon agriculture; they have the broad lands of the great West, where 200,000,000 human beings might subsist in comfort on the soil, without forge, factory, spinning-jenny, or power-loom; yet a few thousand men, who have established manufactures, have persuaded that country, with its universal suffrage and vote by ballot, to adopt the system of protection, and thereby deprive their own backs of clothing, as we have managed to allow our stomachs to be deprived of food. (Loud cries of "Shame.") They have an oligarchy of calico-printers in America. Mr. M'Duffie begins his attack upon the manufacturing monopolists in this way:—"A large proportion of the prints and calicoes consumed in the United States, and of which every female of the middle and poorer classes is a consumer, cost, in Manchester, from 6 to 12 cents a yard; but they are charged with duties of from 75 to 150 per cent. by the ingenious contrivance of an artificial and false valuation." Just like our sliding scale. "These articles are used by the wives and daughters of every farmer, planter, and labourer in the United States, who have no false pride to prevent it; and it is difficult to estimate the immense quantity which would be imported and consumed under a moderate duty. But when these articles come to the Custom-house, the importer is required to pay from 2½ to 6 times their original cost; not to raise revenue, but to exclude them altogether, and give the domestic manufacturers the exclusive right to supply the market at their own prices." That is our case completely. Change manufacturers of prints to growers of corn, and Mr. M'Duffie might be supposed to be Mr. Villiers talking in the House of Commons. (Hear, hear.) Here is the way in which he apostrophizes the oligarchy of the madder hogshead:—"Can they, consistently with their constitutional power—with any principle of sound policy, and without violating the principles of everlasting justice—permit their statute-book to be longer tarnished by a law imposing these unrighteous burdens, not for the legitimate purpose of raising revenue, but for taking money out of the pockets of one class of the community and putting it into those of another?" That is our case again completely. But Mr. M'Duffie goes on to state what are the arguments used by the protectionists there in defence of their monopoly; and, really, the Duke of Buckingham himself, if sent to the United States, could not have got his fallacies more completely by heart than they seem to have. (Laughter.) They tell Mr. M'Duffie that America must be independent of foreigners; they appeal to their national pride, and maintain that it is for the dignity of a great nation that they should make their own calicoes and gown pieces, or else they would be no longer independent of foreigners. (Laughter.) I think Mr. M'Duffie's answer to these statements is worthy of being repeated to this assembly. He says, "Mutual dependence between nations, created by the exchanges of an extensive commercial intercourse, is the highest state of political independence that can exist between the civilized nations of the earth. Mutual commercial dependence is mutual political independence. And I undertake to say, with all becoming solemnity, that God has not, in all His merciful dispensations, conferred any greater temporal blessing upon the human race than by that which has given rise to commercial intercourse among nations, substituting the usual blessings of prosperity, peace and good will, in the place of the curses of war, desolation, and a mutual spirit of hatred and revenge." (Loud cheers.) I look a little farther, and find the arguments with which he has to combat. I perceive that the manufacturers of the Birmingham of America say, "You must look to your home trade: you are sure of your own home trade,—that is actually at your doors. Would you risk your home trade for the sake of foreign dependency?" Then Mr. M'Duffie reasons, and Mr. Villiers speaks again. He says, "Distance makes no difference. Our natural markets—derived, not from human charters, but from the providence of God—are Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, and the other manufacturing towns of Europe. When you cut us off from these, you perpetrate the same injustice as if you were to prohibit the Massachusetts farmer from dealing with a neighbouring manufactory, by a prohibitory duty on their exchanges." Why, nothing could be sounder or better than this reasoning. We reciprocate with Mr. M'Duffie, and say, "Our natural market—derived, not from charters or acts of Parliament, but from the fiat of the Omnipotent himself—is the broad valley of the Mississippi, and that the corn which is grown there is as much ours by right, if we can produce in exchange for it the manufactures of Leeds, Birmingham, or Manchester, as that grown in the county of Buckingham itself." (Prolonged and most enthusiastic cheering.) The next argument is one which we have been familiar with for the last five years. Mr. M'Duffie says, "There is another argument, of which, I believe, the manufacturers keep a constant supply stereotyped for the use of their customers; that high duties upon foreign imports diminish, instead of enhancing prices!" The answer which is given by Mr. M'Duffie is a very good one. He says, "If high duties produce low prices, it would seem to follow that low duties would produce high prices; and the manufacturers should go strenuously for reduction." We may draw some consolation from what we find our friends doing in America. (Hear, hear.) In the first place, we may learn that there is an active and energetic spirit at work there, anxious to meet us on reciprocal terms, as soon as we shall have abolished our restrictions on the trade with the United States. We may draw another consolation. The Yankees boast of having thrown overboard what they are pleased to call the lumber of our crown, church, and aristocracy; they say they are very much more enlightened than we are, and that England is lagging behind in the race of intelligence and sound policy. Why, here we are with a noble earl in the chair, who is an honour to the peerage. (Tremendous cheering, and waving of hats and handkerchiefs.) Here we are with a crown to which we profess as strong an allegiance as the best protectionists we have (cheers)—with an aristocracy whose just privileges I do not wish to impair; and yet, notwithstanding, here we are under these circumstances, which our brethren across the Atlantic would assert to be such great disadvantages in running the race of commercial liberty, but still we shall have Free Trade first. I would lay a wager, if I were in the habit of betting, that we shall beat them in this respect yet. (Cheers.) I now will draw another moral: we have sometimes been met in our agitation with this unreasonable objection,—"Why don't you, instead of stirring up the country on this practical question of Free Trade, enlarge your basis of agitation, and, in place of going for this isolated question, advocate some great organic change which will give you that and everything else at once that you want?" I point to America, with its universal suffrage and republican institutions; they have neither obtained Free Trade nor got rid of slavery (cheers); and Mr. M'Duffie and his enlightened colleagues have as arduous a task to accomplish, to persuade the democracy of that country that it is for their interest not to purchase their clothing, salt, iron, and every other article of utility which they wear or consume at double the price at which they could buy in Europe; they have as arduous a duty to perform to persuade the democracy of America to adopt the enlightened principles of commercial freedom as we have in this old and encumbered country of England. This, therefore, should be an argument to mitigate the unreasoning hostility, sneers, and indifference of those who tell us that this practical agitation would not be necessary under certain forms of government, or with certain constitutional changes. I point to America to prove that it would be necessary under any circumstances to teach men what are their interests, to meet the fallacies that are presented to their minds, and which ever take the guise of specious self-interest, it would be as necessary under any future form of government which might be adopted as it is now; and that is our justification in constantly pressing this practical question on your notice. (Loud cheers.) Now, gentlemen, let me not detain you any further, I will ask how long will this absurd system be allowed to continue? There are the Americans with their piles of pork, bread, and beef, under which their warehouses groan, and which are actually rotting on their wharves. At New Orleans a quantity of flour which was collected one summer fermented and threatened to produce an epidemic in the town. Here are we in England with our heaps of goods, piled up one above another, and yet these two countries, so circumstanced as to be able mutually to aid and relieve each other by the interchange of their superfluous commodities, are separated by these restrictive laws; and these people, united as they are by language, blood, laws, and many kindred institutions, are denied the right—for it is an inherent right—to supply each other's necessities. (Tremendous cheers.) How long, I say, shall this absurd system be allowed to continue? Nature cries aloud against it—all the improvements in the arts war against it. What is the use of braving the Atlantic Ocean with our steamers, and bringing the continent of America alongside our shores? What is the use of these mighty developments of science, if you will not allow your commercial legislation to keep pace with the glorious discoveries and improvements of the age? (Loud cheers.) Such a system cannot, because it ought not to last. While we are speaking here, our voices will go across the Atlantic to Mr. M'Duffie and his fellow-labourers. We tell him from this spot that we are willing to shake hands with him, and offer him co-operation in our war against monopoly here and there. (Enthusiastic and prolonged cheering.) Ay; that cheer will be heard on the other side of the Atlantic; and I do not know that we could finish better than with such a cheer. And so, gentlemen, I leave the subject, having before I sit down to announce that Mr. Gisborne—who is here present, and who was to have spoken to-night, but pressed me forward into the service—has kindly volunteered to attend next week. (The honourable member sat down amidst enthusiastic cheering, which lasted for a considerable time.)

The CHAIRMAN then came forward and said: Ladies and gentlemen, I have now to announce to you that the proceedings of this evening are closed; and that another meeting will be held on Wednesday next.

Mr. COBLEN proposed, that, before the meeting separated, three cheers should be given for Earl Radnor; and, in order that they might be good ones, he himself would act as fagman. Three hearty cheers were then given for the noble earl, followed by vehement and long-continued waving of hats and handkerchiefs. Silence being restored,

The CHAIRMAN said: Ladies and gentlemen, I have scarcely voice left to thank you for the honour you have done me; I feel that I am most sincerely heart and soul in the cause, and I hope you are all the same. I believe you are; so I trust that you each, in your several stations, will exert yourselves, as I shall do in mine, and we shall soon completely triumph. (The noble earl left the theatre amidst loud cheers, and the meeting separated at twenty minutes to eleven.)

SADDLEWORTH.

On Friday evening, an extraordinary large meeting of manufacturers and operatives of almost every class was held in the Ebenezer Independent Chapel, at Upper Mill, Saddleworth: John Buckley, Esq., Mossley, in the chair. The meeting was addressed by R. Cobden, Esq., M.P., R. R. Moore, Esq., James Lees, Esq., and others. The amount subscribed in the room was 252l. 17s. 6d. James Bottomley, Esq., gave 50l.; James Lees, Esq., 30l.; Buckley Bent, Esq., 20l. The subscriptions this year towards the 100,000l. fund in Saddleworth, given by inhabitants of that town or parish at other places, will be upwards of 900l.—which is double the sum collected last year.—Preston Guardian.

FREE TRADE IN ESSEX.—Two lectures on the evils of the Corn Laws were delivered in the Mechanics' Institute, Chelmsford, on Wednesday and Friday evenings, the 13th and 15th instant, by Mr. Falvey. The lectures were well attended by the leading tradesmen of the town, as well as by the working people. On the second evening, such was the interest felt in the subject, that many had to go back for want of the hall; Mr. Falvey, in the course of his lectures, fully exposed the fallacies and misstatements published by Messrs. Copland and Baker, the Essex champions of the bread-tax. Mr. Falvey lectured in the Town-hall, Maldon, on Tuesday evening, the 14th.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE £100,000 FUND.

Subscriptions received during the week ending Wednesday, March 20, 1844.

N.B. As the subscription list is made up from Wednesday to Wednesday, contributions received on Thursdays and Fridays are not published in the LEAGUE of the Saturday immediately succeeding, but are included in the list of the week following.

| | |
|--|----------|
| Oxford-road Twist Company, Manchester | £200 0 0 |
| David Mitchell, merchant, Peterhead, Aberdeenshire | 1 0 0 |
| Rev. J. W. M'Phair, Little Hadham, Herts | 0 2 6 |
| Rev. Wm. Griffiths, jun., Wesleyan minister, Frome, Somerset | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Ashton, Hyde, Cheshire | 400 0 0 |
| Ed. Stubbs, farmer, Fish street, Wallingford | 1 0 0 |
| W. H. Tinkler, Castle-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Richard M. Brown, Crowmarsh Mill, do. | 1 0 0 |
| G. Young, Bell-street, Henley | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Partridge, Wood-street, Wallingford | 0 1 0 |
| A Friend, Fish-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| do., do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Astbury, Critchley, & Co., 65, Mosley-st., Manchester | 100 0 0 |
| A. Rogers, Littleboro', near Rochdale | 1 0 0 |
| Samuel Hewitt, 24, York-street, Manchester | 10 0 0 |
| Auchterarder, N.B., per Wm. Gardiner | 2 16 1 |
| Robert Sanders, Crescent, Exeter | 10 0 0 |
| Richard Thomas, Falmouth | 0 5 0 |
| John Booth, 10s., and four others, 2s. 6d. each | 1 0 0 |
| John Johnson, Clotton Lodge, Tarvin, Cheshire | 1 0 0 |
| A Chester Friend, per W. Evans | 1 0 0 |
| Richard Ashton, Bury | 200 0 0 |
| Wm. Ross, 18, Mosley-street, Manchester | 100 0 0 |
| Jas. Wrigley and Sons, Manchester | 100 0 0 |
| Thomas Collier, Howard-town, Glossop, Derbyshire | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Hegginsbottom, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Hannah Collier, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Small sums, do., do. | 0 2 0 |
| "Restitution" fourfold | 0 10 0 |
| Fred. Reyner, Newmarket-buildings, Manchester | 150 0 0 |
| Alfred Reyner, do., do. | 150 0 0 |
| Jas. Birch, 43, Cheetham-street, Red Bank, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Barratt, Sons, and Darbyshire, 80, Cannon-street, Manchester | 50 0 0 |
| Robert Chorlton and Sons, Blackfriars, do. | 25 0 0 |
| J. S. and J. Watts, New Brown-street, do. | 100 0 0 |
| John Gillibrand, Standish, near Wigan | 1 0 0 |
| Henry and Edmund Ashworth, Turton, near Bolton | 200 0 0 |
| Peter Heywood, Astley-bridge, near Bolton | 2 0 0 |
| T. Robinson, New Richmond, Pendleton, Manchester | 0 2 0 |
| John Dearden, Denton | 5 0 0 |
| Jos. Mowe, Hyde House, Haughton | 1 0 0 |
| John Irwin, Denton | 5 0 0 |
| Daniell Stubbs, do. | 1 0 0 |
| W. Wilcock, do. | 1 10 0 |
| John Feaster, Haughton, near Manchester | 1 10 0 |
| Small sum, Denton | 0 1 0 |
| Robert Thornber, Mill-street, Padham, Lancashire | 0 2 6 |
| Richard Marshall, Hepton, near do. | 0 2 6 |
| James Anderson, Burnley-road, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Stewart, Baxter's-row, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Whittam, Burnley-road, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Higham, Guy Fold, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Jonathan Pilling, Mill-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| James Howe, Guy Fold, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Henry Helm, Grove Cottage, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Elijah Helm, jun., Guy-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Waddington, Gowthrop-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| George Hargreaves, East-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Henry Hirst, Church-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thos. Robinson, Lower House, near do. | 1 0 0 |
| Reuben Longstaff, Grove Cottage, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Joseph Helm, Guy-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Longstaff, Garden-terrace, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Dewhurst, East-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| James Whitaker, Post-office, do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Fletcher, Burnley-road, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Charles Waddington, Bank-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Joseph Schofield, Bank-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| J. J. Helm, Guy-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Christopher Martin, Burnley-road, do. | 0 2 6 |
| W. Whalley, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Wilding, Church-street, do. | 10 0 0 |
| Elijah Helm, Guy-street, do. | 20 0 0 |
| James Helm, Mill-street, do. | 10 0 0 |
| Henry Helm, Guy Fold, do. | 10 0 0 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 16 6 |
| James Angus, Kirriemuir, N.B. | 1 0 0 |
| W. Wilcock, Denton House, Denton, Lancashire | 1 10 0 |
| John Irwin, Denton, do. | 5 0 0 |
| Dan. Stubbs, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Dearden, Prospect House, do. | 5 0 0 |
| Jos. Howe, Hyde House, Haughton, near Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| John Feaster, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Small sum, Hyde | 0 1 0 |
| John Henry Waley, Rawden, near Colne, Lancashire | 1 0 0 |
| John Wilson, Wine-wall, do. | 1 6 6 |
| Jas. Blackburn, Spring-row, near do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Pickles, Wine-wall, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Small sums, do. | 1 4 4 |
| J. T., do. | 1 10 0 |
| W. and J. Warburton, 22, Withy-grove, Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| J. and S. Dobell, 14, do., do. | 2 2 0 |
| Wm. Mayo, 13, Market-street, do. | 1 10 0 |
| Wm. Davis, 93, Hardman-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Burgess, 103, Oxford-street, C.-on-M., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Cutts, 95, Great Ancoats-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Benjn. Burton, Coronation-street, Salford, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Stones, 30, Stocks street, Cheetham, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Ralli and Marjani, Tib-lane, do. | 5 0 0 |
| A Friend, per Jas. Ashworth, do. | 0 10 0 |
| W. C. Gill, 27, New Richmond, Pendleton, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Jackson, 36, New Bridge-st., Cheetham, do. | 2 0 0 |
| Thomas Kendal, 99, Deansgate, do. | 1 10 0 |
| James Milne, 99, do., do. | 1 10 0 |
| L. G. Ziffo, Bridgewater-place, do. | 2 0 0 |
| Robt. & Jas. M'Lean, Stretford-road, Hulme, do. | 2 0 0 |
| Geo. Goodwin, 4, Renshaw-street, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Robt. Gardner, 11, Upper Medlock-st., do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Bradshaw and fellow-workmen, 13, Cobden-street, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| William Morris and fellow-workmen, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| 7, Apollo-street, Oldham-road, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Charles Hodgkiss, 88, Hodgson-street, Salford, do. | 0 5 0 |
| J. Baguly, Union-street, Ardwick, do. | 0 2 6 |
| S. Mendel, Parsonage, do. | 5 0 0 |
| Abraham Whitehead, Water Mill, New Church, near Rochdale | 3 0 0 |
| Mr. Hogg, farmer, New Bialsville by Lauder, N.B., per D. M'Laren, of Edinburgh | 1 0 0 |
| Mr. Jacques and three friends, Ripon, per R. Thomas | 1 0 0 |
| Geo. Sharp, Dogley Bar, Kirkburton, Yorkshire, per B. Bowers | 1 2 2 |
| Sir T. M. Brisbane, Bart., Makerston, by Kelso, N.B. | 1 0 0 |
| M. B., do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| George Thomson, Haymount, by A. Farmer, but a friend to Free Trade | 1 0 0 |
| Robert Martin, stationer, Kelso | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Robson, Bridge-street, Kelso | 0 10 0 |
| Geo. Sim, Market-place, do. | 0 3 6 |
| Jos. Middlemiss, Horse-market, do. | 0 3 6 |
| Thos. Scott, 1s.; B. W., 2s. 6d. | 0 3 6 |
| Jas. Yates & Co., 11, Dearden-street, Hulme, Manchester | 1 0 0 |

| | |
|--|---------|
| Wm. Chadwick, Arksey, near Doncaster | £20 0 0 |
| Willoughby Wood, Campall, near do. | 2 0 0 |
| Thos. Johnson, Hallgate, do. | 2 0 0 |
| Wm. Wagstaff, at the factory, Fisher-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Grimsbaw, Young-street, do. | 0 7 6 |
| Thos. Dickinson, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| B. Hammond, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| Isaac Blakie, Carr-lane, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Jonathan Allison, Market-place, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Francis Ingham, Corn-market, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Hatfield, Baxter-gate, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Thos. Brooks, High-street, do. | 0 15 0 |
| John Hatfield, do., do. | 0 15 0 |
| Jas. Aldred, French-gate, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Alderman Clark, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Mr. Snowden, Exthorpe, near do. | 1 0 0 |
| R. Milner, French-gate, do. | 2 0 0 |
| Miss Milner, do., do. | 0 10 0 |
| Miss A. M. Milner, do., do. | 0 10 0 |
| Master C. Milner, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| Master F. Milner, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Kent, Bawtry, near do. | 0 2 6 |
| J. Embley, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| W. Marriam, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Bedford, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Mrs. Chadwick, Hallgate, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Askham, Field House, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Friend, per Mr. Crowder, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Friend, per do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| R. Milner's Workpeople, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Adin Storer, Hall-gate, do. | 1 2 0 |
| Chas. Bradford, farmer, Blaxton, near do. | 0 5 0 |
| Mr. Duncan, French-gate, do. | 0 2 6 |
| J. Thirwall, Market-place, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Mr. Dearden, Baby, near do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Hutchinson, Market-place, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Thomas Hutchinson, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Pearson, St. George-gate, do. | 0 2 6 |
| R. Dale, Baby, near do. | 0 10 0 |
| G. Armitage, Marsh-gate, do. | 0 2 6 |
| J. Cherriman, French-gate, do. | 0 2 6 |
| H. Reid, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| J. Champney, Baby, near do. | 0 5 0 |
| T. Mitchell, Wood-street, do. | 0 3 0 |
| G. Dale, Sepulchre-gate, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Scholes, Hall-gate, do. | 0 7 6 |
| G. H. Hunt, High-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Friend, per J. H., do. | 0 5 0 |
| Hy. Bright, High-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| F. Clarke, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| J. Coles, High-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Miss M. B., per H. Woodmansey, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Miss F. B., per do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| H. Woodmansey, Scott-lane, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Edward Duncan, Baxter-gate, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Shearwood Lyon, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Septimus Anderson, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Joseph Wragg, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| William Carlton, Corn-market, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thos. Walker, cabinet maker, High-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thos. Oxley, Spring-gardens, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Miss Wright, Young-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| E. Wood, Horsefair, do. | 0 10 0 |
| G. Parkinson, Sandall, near do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Butterfield, Spring-gardens, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Mr. Kitchen, Bawtry, near do. | 0 2 6 |
| Mr. Roberts, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Mr. Lambert, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| James Dobson, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| B. Beavers, Mexbro', near do. | 0 2 6 |
| Geo. Lawrence, St. Sepulchre-gate, do. | 0 5 0 |
| R. Torr, Market-place, do. | 0 5 0 |
| G. H. Jun., do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| W. Aldred, St. Sepulchre-gate, do. | 0 5 0 |
| W. L. Spencer, do., do. | 0 3 0 |
| E. French-gate, do., do. | 0 3 6 |
| Mrs. Turner, High-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums, do. | 1 17 6 |
| Rev. E. Bewley, Cirencester | 0 2 6 |
| F. Mortimer, Cricklade-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Robt. Perrin, brewer, do., do. | 0 10 0 |
| Amor Patrie, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| A Free Trader, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Richard Budd, jun., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Prudence, Cricklade-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Robert Newcomb, corn dealer, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Robert Coates, shoemaker, do. | 0 2 6 |
| George Bevir, solicitor, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Protection for poor hungry Britons, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Four Members of the Mechanics' Institute, do. | 0 4 6 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 2 0 |
| R. G. T., do. | 0 7 6 |
| Mich. Strickland, 36, Upper Albany-st., Regent-s-park | 0 2 6 |
| The Workpeople of Joseph Twigg and Brothers, New-hill Pottery, near Rotherham, per John Twigg, 6th subscription since July | 1 10 0 |
| The Widow's Mite, per John Twigg | 0 10 0 |
| William Nisbet, 27, King-street, Plymouth | 0 5 0 |
| E. R. Strickland, Glympton | 1 1 0 |
| William Stares, Titchfield Mill, Titchfield | 1 10 0 |
| J. R., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Robert Ramsay, Kilmarnock | 1 3 0 |
| A. B. Oxford | 0 10 0 |
| Charles Till, Doncaster | 1 0 0 |
| Jane Moscrop, Percy-place | 0 5 0 |
| "One who earns his bread by the sweat of his brow" | 0 2 0 |
| "Try again" | 0 2 0 |
| John Scott, timber merchant, Morpeth | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums | 0 4 6 |
| Mr. Turner, Gatohead, per George Crawshaw | 2 2 0 |
| W. G. Balls, 30, Wilmington-square | 0 5 0 |
| J. A. and W. B., do. | 5 0 0 |
| Fence collected at the Coach and Horses, Water-lane, Fleet-street, per Edward Beaman | 0 8 0 |
| Frederick William Jacob, 59, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury | 1 0 0 |
| John Nussey, Battley, near Dewsbury | 10 0 0 |
| "From One without a Vote" | 0 2 6 |
| J. J., do. | 0 10 6 |
| Isaac Nichols, Plymouth | 1 0 0 |
| Banker's Clerk | 1 0 0 |
| W. H. Johnson, 7, Adelaide-place, Queen's-road, Dalton | 0 2 6 |
| David Robertson, 21, John-street, Cambridge-heath, Hackney | 0 2 6 |
| Received by a Juror for attending an Inquest in Tower Ward, on the body of a man unknown, who was supposed by the Jury, as stated in their verdict, to have died for the want of the necessities of life | 0 0 4 |
| Henry King, Church-street, Hackney | 1 0 0 |
| William Pollard, Chapel-end, Walthamstow, Essex | 1 0 0 |
| Mr. Cox, Swallow-place, Oxford-street | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Puzey, 17, Rockingham-row, New Kent-road | 1 0 0 |
| Henry Page, 5, Wittlebury-street, Euston-square | 0 2 6 |
| Lawrence Hill, Barlanark, Edinburgh | 1 0 0 |
| Pewtress, Low, and Pewtress, 30, Gracechurch-street | 1 0 0 |
| John M'George, Brighton, per K. G. Rose, jun. | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Miller and Co., Camomile-street | 5 5 0 |
| James Miller, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Alexander Strachan, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Small sums | 6 10 0 |
| A Friend | 53 0 0 |
| Riebd. Hall, Yorkshire-street | 0 10 0 |
| Thos. Riding, Burnley Wood | 0 2 6 |
| Mr. Arven, do. | 0 5 0 |
| James Rawlinson, St. James's-street | 0 5 0 |
| Small sums | 0 6 0 |

Burnley, 3rd Remittance.

| James Roberts and Co., Ashton-under-Lyne | | 432 | 0 | 0 |
|---|----|-----|---|---|
| Thomas Love, Butcher-gate | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| George Stubbs, White Hart-lane | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Crane, Edwells-lane, Scotch-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Black, Kitterby-street, Stanwix | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Stoddart, Brewery-row | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Wilson, Kitterby-street, Stanwix | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| William Anderson, Butcher-gate | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James McDonald, Willow Holme | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Mason, Princess-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| William Fisher, Union-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Deakray, John-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Robt. Satterthwaite, Keys-lane, Scotch-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Kay, Abbey-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Thos. Holstead, Castle street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Wilson, baker, Scotch-street | 0 | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Sawyers, druggist, Fisher-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Sawyers, innkeeper, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Fleming, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Miss J. Sheldale, Abbey-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Blaylock, watchmaker, Scotch-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Atkin, Ricker-gate | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Lonsdale, Journal office | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Howe, Kitterby-street, Stanwix | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Parkinson, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Whitridge, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Miss Margaret Bushby, shopkeeper, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Sundry Subscriptions, per T. L. and others | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Whitridge, stationer, Scotch-street | 0 | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Peter, at Mr. Holmes, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. McCutcheon, ironmonger, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Bell, currier, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Black, cloth dealer, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Donald Kyrington, currier, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Chambers, Glover-lane, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| E. Routledge, hatter, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| William Black, clothes dealer, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Robinson, shoemaker, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Noble, tailor, Law's-lane, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| C. Park, draper, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Messrs. Harrison, gunsmiths, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Howe, roper, Drovers-lane, Ricker-gate | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Bell, George and Dragon, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Sherrington, tobacconist, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| R. Tinning, Swift's-row, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Sowerby, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Gilbertson, Malt Shovel, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Beck, Wheat-cake, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Black, cabinetmaker, West Tower-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Blain, painter, Scotch-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Johnson, farmer, Dykesfield | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Moffat and Harrison, Annwell-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Knox, Chapel-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Armstrong, builder, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Potter, brushmaker, Scotch-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Noble | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Benson, stationer, English-street | 0 | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| John Sowerby, druggist, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Ramshaw, Naworth Castle | 5 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Ivison, Warwick-bridge | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Clarke, grocer, Shaddongate | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| George Hind, Holme Eden | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Story, Shaddongate | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| R. Pattinson, druggist, Caldewgate | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Padden, Butcher-gate | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Richardson, ironmonger, English-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Robinson, saddler, Castle-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Sowell, cutler, Castle street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| David Hamilton, Stearn-office | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Cullen, Spread Eagle, Castle-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Roy, silversmith, English-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Wilson, grocer, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Hutchinson, fishmonger, St. Alban's-row | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Charters, grocer, English-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Black, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| J. M. Hill, grocer, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Lewthwaite, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Ross, draper, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Duncan, Temperance Hotel, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Graham and Jefferson, drapers, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend to the League | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| T. Blair, English-street | 0 | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Contribution from Butcher-gate Ward | 2 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Christopher Gawthrop, Caldewgate | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Small sums | 4 | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Greaves, 273, North-road | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Hawkins, cotton spinner | 50 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Nairns, 38, Chaddock-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Chambers, draper, Fryergate | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| G. R. Penny, Fryergate | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Chatham, Woodcock's-yard, Fishergate | 3 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Rees, Rumber Bridge, near | 50 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Charles Wilson, Chappelside | 6 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Jeffer, do. | 5 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Robt. Benson, jun., Church-street | 5 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Geo. Thompson (one of the deputation) London | 5 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Thos. Barton, Marsh-lane Mill | 2 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| D. Wilcockson, Church-street | 2 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| T. Holden, do. | 3 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Charles Brown, Fryergate | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Briggs, Rosbud-inn | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Lawrence Harrison, Maudland-bank | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Isaac Wilcockson, Church-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Livsey, St. Ignatius-square | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| D. Westhead, Duke of York Inn | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Rt. Charoly, 61, Bow lane | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Anty Robinson, 38, Maudland bank | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Milner, Fryergate brow | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Dr. Robinson, 40, Cannon-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Richard Fairclough, Hill-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Jones, 08, Church-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Nich. Hoys, brushmaker, Fryergate | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Pomfret, 18, Lor-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Ra. Dickson, builder, North-road | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Rd. Duckett, Fryergate | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Thos. Sutcliffe, 42, Fille-road | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Haslam, Bolton-street | 5 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Richard Gornall, Fryergate | 2 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Butler, joiner, 15, Bolton-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Sharp, 5, Chappelside | 0 | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Ord, Charles-street | 0 | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Michael Satterthwaite, Fryergate | 20 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Small sums | 0 | 4 | 0 | 0 |
| Ebenezer Mills, Upper Surrey-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend to the Cause | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Lincoln, King-street | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Peter Jones, St. Margaret | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| R. J. Barlow | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Duman, B. secondale green | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Bunn, Lokenham | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| R. J. Barlow, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Bright, Larkham, near | 2 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Henry Fillett, St. Andrew's-street | 2 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| R. Sheen, Cross-street, West Pottergate | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| R. Olley, Gout-lane | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| W. H. Wells, Dileam Mills, Norfolk | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| William Ivory, Tumbled | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Samuel Brown, St. Martin's-palace | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| G. W. Howard, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| R. R. Blake, jun., do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Tassell, St. Saviour's | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| J. P. Watson, St. Clement's | 2 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Samuel Spinks, St. George's | 1 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Small sums | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |

weight of taxation on the shoulders of the consumers of food, as much as Mr. Dawson demanded an amount of protection equivalent to the taxes levied on the soil, and on the cultivators of the soil. He, therefore, moved an amendment as follows:—"That in consequence of the heavy taxes which the nation is bound to raise for the maintenance of the public establishments, it is expedient and just that the British people should be relieved from all monopolies and protecting duties whatsoever, which are beneficial only to a small class of the community, but injurious and oppressive to the country at large."—Mr. Pitt seconded this amendment in a very argumentative speech. Mr. J. B. Pitt, whose able and impartial conduct in the chair was highly appreciated, then put the question to the vote, when upwards of four hundred hands were held up in favour of the Free-Trade amendment, while the Monopolist motion was supported by only two persons, and these were Mr. Dawson and his land-bailiff. A more numerous, orderly, and enthusiastic public meeting has not been held in Selby for some time past.

LEEDS MERCURY.—DORMAN.—BARNARD CASTLE, Wednesday, March 13.—A deputation from the League, consisting of Colonel Thompson, and Messrs. Moore, Frontine, and Plint, was announced to address the inhabitants of this town and the neighbouring farmers on this day, being market day, but, owing to unavoidable obstacles, Mr. Plint only arrived at the appointed time. From 700 to 800 persons were assembled at the Union Hall, and, though the absence of so many members of the deputation was much felt (and more especially Col. Thompson), the audience listened with attention to Mr. Plint's address, which continued for nearly two hours. Mr. Chipchase presided on the occasion. Free-Trade principles have taken deep hold in this town and neighbourhood, and many of the farmers are convinced that an entire abolition of the Corn Laws would benefit all classes, including the landowners themselves.

STOCKTON, Thursday, March 14.—The place of meeting in this town was the theatre, which was filled to overflowing, the audience numbering from 600 to 700 persons. The stage and boxes were filled with the more opulent portion of the inhabitants, the seats being paid for, while the pit and gallery were thrown open to the public in general. Mr. Whalley presided, and, after some excellent and pertinent observations, called on Col. Thompson, whose speech was rapturously cheered; it was indeed most racy and animated. Mr. Plint followed in a speech replete with facts illustrative of the influence of restrictions on trade and industry. Some of his statements were questioned by a gentleman present, but were triumphantly substantiated. At the conclusion of his speech a Chartist stood forward to propose some questions to Mr. Plint, two of which he promptly and satisfactorily answered, but the audience decided by acclamation, and amidst much laughter, that the questioner had answered the others himself. There, as elsewhere, these extreme Chartists seemed to have only one object, viz., whilst apparently contending for the Charter, covertly to insinuate objections to Free Trade, and really to fight the battle of restriction and monopoly. The proceedings terminated in an enthusiastic demonstration of thanks to the deputation, and approval of the objects and proceedings of the League.

YORKSHIRE.—MIDDLESBRO, March 15.—The same deputation addressed a meeting of upwards of 300 persons in the Exchange Rooms of this rising port, Mr. Fallows, shipowner, in the chair. Their addresses were well received, and the proceedings terminated in a resolution approving of the League, and tendering thanks to the speakers, which was unanimously carried. The meeting at this place and that at Hartlepool were held in consequence of solicitations made to Colonel Thompson and Mr. Plint, at the Stockton meeting on Thursday, at which place they had arranged to terminate their week's labour. So pressing, however, was the invitation, that they complied, and were well rewarded by the excellent spirit displayed at each meeting, and by the evidence afforded them of the firm hold which the great question of Free Trade has on the public mind.

HARTLEPOOL, Saturday, March 16.—The meeting at this place was held in the Town Hall, — Johnson, Esq., in the chair. The first object of the meeting was to consider the propriety of petitioning Parliament for a repeal of the obnoxious and ruinous tax on the export of coal, a tax which is seriously injuring the coal-owner, and has failed as a tax for the revenue. The petition was unanimously adopted, after speeches in support of it had been made by the Chairman and Messrs. Lyndsay, Wortley, Thaler, and others. The meeting then resolved itself, as the parliamentary phrase is, into an Anti-Corn-Law meeting, and Mr. Johnson had just introduced Colonel Thompson, when simultaneously on the rising of the gallant veteran, the gaslights were extinguished, it is supposed by some Tory wag; there being a fire in the room the gas was soon re-lighted, and the circumstance only afforded amusement to the audience, which was numerous, orderly, and enthusiastic. Colonel Thompson delivered one of his best speeches, and was followed by Mr. Plint. Both speakers were heard with close attention and deep interest, and a vote of thanks to them, and approval of the League, alike in its principles and its objects, was unanimously passed. Some trifling opposition was offered by Mr. Rowell, late Mayor of Hartlepool, but he did not meet Mr. Plint's refutation: and it happened that one of Mr. Rowell's assertions as to wages in the agricultural districts was completely answered by a poor man present, who produced a letter from his daughter in Suffolk, quoting wages even lower than Mr. Plint had stated, and showing that the hours of labour are longer there than in the much-abused factory districts.

RIPON.—This meeting, held on Tuesday last, in the public room, Ripon, was called by placards, announcing that Col. Thompson, T. Plint, Esq., and Archibald Prentice, Esq., would deliver addresses on the principles of Free Trade, and the injurious influence of the Corn Laws. A meeting had been held by the supporters of the Corn Laws, at which the farmers were cautioned against listening to what the speakers thought fit to designate "the lash of the Anti-Corn-Law League," and in addition to this, handbills were plentifully distributed among the inhabitants, containing the most false statements, and attempting to dissuade them from being present on the occasion. Notwithstanding these exertions of the "Pro-Corn-Law" men, the room was literally crammed, and numbers were unable to gain admission. The proceedings were of the most animated nature. Mr. R. Lynn was called upon to preside on the occasion. He stated that he should not detain them long in declaring his sentiments on the question. He was for a total, unconditional, and immediate repeal of the Corn Laws, and, if he possessed the authority, he would repeal them that night. He held it to be decidedly wrong to tax the poor, and he avowed his conviction that the removal of this tax would be for the ultimate benefit of all classes. He would not trespass farther on their attention, but would call on Mr. Plint to address the meeting. At the close of an able speech, Mr. Plint moved the following resolution:—"That this meeting fully sympathizes with the movements of the Anti-Corn-Law League, and regards the Corn Laws as unjust in principle and oppressive in their influence, and is convinced that their existence is injurious to all classes of the British empire." The resolution was seconded by Mr. Thomas. Mr. Robson, coroner of Ripon, here rose, and after having made some remarks, proposed as an amendment, "That the Corn Laws are beneficial to the agricultural interests." Tomkins Lyons, Esq., landholder and magistrate, followed, and said, that he employed his labourers at the high price of 1s. 3d. to 1s. 6d. per day; he thought that this was very excellent remuneration. The amendment was put, and about fifteen hands were held up in favour of it. The motion condemnatory of the Corn Laws was then submitted, when a forest of hands were exhibited in its favour. There could not have been less than 400 people in the room. Votes of thanks were given to Mr. Plint and the Chairman, after the acknowledgment of which, three most hearty cheers were given for the League.

FREE-TRADE MEETING IN GATESHEAD.—The Gateshead Free-Trade Society held a meeting in the long-room of the Grey Horse Inn, on Wednesday evening, 13th inst. Mr. John Parnett was in the chair. There was a numerous but not a crowded attendance. Mr. C. W. Parnett, the secretary of the society, delivered an address, which was warmly applauded.

PLYMOUTH FREE-TRADE ASSOCIATION.—On Friday evening, the 8th inst., the members of the Free-Trade Association assembled at the Mechanics' Institute, for the purpose of hearing a lecture by the Rev. W. J. Odgers, "On the Moral evils resulting from Commercial Restrictions." The building was densely crowded. The chair was taken at seven o'clock by Mr. John Burnell, who, after some brief remarks, called upon Mr. Odgers to commence his lecture. On rising, the rev. gentleman was greeted with hearty cheering. The rev. gentleman then proceeded with his lecture, and by a variety of proofs, arguments, and illustrations, showed—1. That the Corn Laws are opposed to the laws of Divine Providence. 2. That they are opposed to the claims of humanity. 3. That they are unjust. 4. That they are opposed to the peace and happiness of the community. 5. That they stand in the way of the education and religious improvement of the great mass of the people; and, lastly, that they minister to crime.—At the conclusion the lecturer was loudly cheered. A short discussion ensued, after which three cheers were given for the Plymouth Free-Trade Association, three cheers for the Anti-Corn-Law League, followed by three cheers for "Justice for Ireland," proposed by G. W. Soltau, Esq. A vote of thanks was passed to the Chairman, and the meeting dispersed.—Plymouth Journal.

BURLEIGH.—On Wednesday evening the 13th inst., Mr. John Murray, of the National Anti-Corn-Law League, delivered a lecture in the Temperance Hall, Burleigh, admission free. Mr. Bligh Jones was called to the chair, and introduced Mr. Murray, who gave a homely but eloquent Free-Trade view of the character of the great monopolies which press upon the mercantile, manufacturing, and agricultural classes of the community. The lecturer was loudly and frequently applauded, and at the conclusion of his address time was given for any parties to put questions to him, but none were asked. Mr. Kennedy suggested the propriety of establishing an Anti-Monopoly Association for the town, in order to give an efficient and practical direction to public opinion on these questions: at present he would merely move that it was expedient to do so, and on some early occasion they could proceed to the formation of such a society. The proposition was seconded by Mr. Mayer, and unanimously carried. The Chairman concluded with some appropriate remarks, and after a vote of thanks to him the proceedings closed. Mr. Murray lectured at the Snayd's Arms, Tunstall, on Thursday night, and is expected to deliver another lecture at Burleigh in a few days.—Staffordshire Mercury.

BRECON.—On Tuesday evening, the 12th inst., a meeting was held in the large room at the Bull Inn, to take into consideration the existing Corn Laws. The assembly was addressed at great length by Mr. J. Jenkins, M.A., touching the operation of the present laws on the state of trade—the wages of labour, &c. The apartment was crowded to excess, and great numbers failed to gain admission. The greatest order prevailed, and the most profound attention was manifested by the audience to the statements of the lecturer. The following Wednesday afternoon, notice was given, by placards liberally distributed, that a public meeting would be held that evening in the Market-house (the use of the Town Hall having been refused). Accordingly, at the appointed hour of seven, a large concourse had assembled, which we have heard variously estimated at from 1000 to 1500 persons. The Rev. G. Griffiths, Welsh Independent minister, was unanimously voted into the chair, and opened the business of the meeting in a short address. Mr. Evan Jones next addressed the meeting at considerable length, and with forcible eloquence, in English and Welsh, frequently interrupted by loud cheers, which were warmly renewed when he concluded. The chairman then introduced Mr. J. Jenkins, M.A., of Swansea, as a representative of the Anti-Corn-Law League, who was greeted with much applause. After an address from Mr. Jenkins, Mr. Roberts moved, and Mr. Lloyd seconded, a resolution condemnatory of the Corn Laws; the resolution was carried with acclamation. After thanks to the chairman, and three cheers for the League, the meeting separated.—Silurian.

BRECON PROTECTION MEETING.—(From a Correspondent.)—The Brecon meeting exhibited in all its adjuncts how hollow are the displays which are made in favour of monopoly under the specious form of protection to agriculture, and how rotten the support which the landowners are able to give any government adhering to the Corn Laws. If the Brecon meeting with all its advantages, as being convened in a purely agricultural district—held in a town which is more immediately dependent on the agriculturists of the neighbourhood—and having no manufacturing population—is a specimen of the strength which Richmond brings to Peel, I think the Peel Government leans on a broken reed—trusts to a rope of sand. The meeting was convened anonymously, for we know not that we can designate a meeting convened without any party's name being attached to it, or responsible for it, otherwise than anonymous. And how was it made up? By the agents of the landowners scouring the country, and impressing the tenant-farmers into service for the intended county demonstration. Half an hour before the time of meeting, several carriages containing bodies of farmers were driven into Brecon as if to do their masters' bidding. One of these carriages belonged to and contained the tenants of the hon. member for Worcester, who, with his agents, seemed to take a prominent part, and became the putative father of the acknowledged bunting of the Breconshire squires—the "meeting of persons friendly to agricultural protection." "Ex uno disce omnes." A respectable authority informed me that he met a farmer whom he had known, and put the question if he came to town in order to be present at the Anti-League meeting. The honest farmer replied, that "his agent had been with him, and had requested him and his neighbours to attend the meeting, and that was all he knew about the matter. Now, was this a voluntary case? Several farmers with whom I conversed, plainly told me that they had strong doubts as to the benefits of the Corn Laws, and confessed that they were present that day only because they had been requested to attend the meeting. And yet after all this din and preparation of war, after scouring the country for days previous, and bringing into Brecon some 300 or 400 tenants, the landowners of Brecon have so little confidence in their cause and in their forces,—influenced, perhaps, by the many letter of Mr. Lloyd of Dinas, coupled, probably, with the knowledge that an advocate of Free-Trade principles was in town,—that, at the eleventh hour, they alter the place of meeting from the County Hall to a private room in an hotel in the town. At that meeting it is true that a tenant-farmer took the chair, and every resolution was proposed by a tenant-farmer, and seconded by either a landowner or clergyman; but the hon. member for Worcester was the alter ego of the chairman, in fact, did all the business that usually devolves upon that functionary; and I am credibly informed, that so well versed were the farmers in the subject-matter of their resolutions, that it was found necessary for parties standing behind to act the parts of prompters to the proposers. Not a resolution was submitted to the meeting as it was proposed; but at the conclusion the chairman held up several papers, and exclaimed—"Is it your pleasure that these resolutions should pass?" The result was disastrous to the object of the meeting as a county meeting, for which, I presume, it was intended to be passed off; for in their own meeting a forest of hands was held up against the resolutions, and three cheers given for the League. The impartial spectator could not have decided who had the show of hands. These observations will show how much importance is to be attached to the petition which was read at the meeting, and how hollow is all the show of strength in favour of "protection."

PRESENT TO THE COUNCIL OF THE LEAGUE.—AN ENORMOUS SIMNEL.—On Thursday last a large and odd-shaped box came to the League rooms, from Bury, and greatly puzzled those present, until, being opened, it was found to contain an enormous Bury simnel, the sweet cake made in this neighbourhood for Midlent, or Mothering Sunday, and in the manufacture of which Bury has long maintained a proverbial pre-eminence. A deputation of four gentlemen presented this cake to the Council of the League in the name and on behalf of the friends of Free Trade in Bury. The deputation consisted of Messrs. John Grundy, Edmund Grundy, John Mansell, and

William Bowman. Suitable acknowledgments for the very handsome and luscious present were expressed to the deputation on behalf of the Council. We understand, that this enormous cake was designed and prepared by Messrs. Henry Womersley, Joseph Ashworth, Henry Whitbread, and Christopher Clemishaw, confectioners, all of Bury, and it does great credit to their taste in design and in ornamental decoration. Of the "proof of the pudding" we cannot speak, as it has not yet been cut. Some idea may be formed of its bulk from the fact that it measures a yard in diameter, and from three to four inches in thickness, and weighs upwards of one hundred pounds. The upper surface is coated with sugar, like a bride-cake, and this white ground is the field for a variety of appropriate and pleasing inscriptions, devices, mottoes, &c. The centre is surrounded with a very handsome wheat-sheaf, several inches high; the wheatears being formed of silver, &c. The top of the cake is divided by a circular band, or rather into an outer ring and an inner circle. In this band is the inscription, "Presented by the friends of Free Trade in Bury to the Council of the National Anti-Corn-Law League." The outer ring is separated into four divisions, by as many coronets. At what may be called the upper part of the ring, is a marquis's coronet, encircled by two scrolls, on the lower one is the title "Westminster," and in the upper one, the family motto, "Virtus non stemma" (character, not pedigree, is the rank of nobility). The two coronets, on the right and left sides of the cake, are earls'; around that on the right are the title "Ducie," and his lordship's motto, "Perseverance"; on that on the left, "Radnor," and "Patria cara, color libertas" (My country is dear, but liberty dearer). At the foot is a coronet, with the title "Kinnaird," and his lordship's motto, "Pallur qui vinolit" (He who conquers, suffers). An ornamental scroll of wheat ears and stalks fills up the remainder of this outer ring, and the wheat-stalks are so contrived as to encircle the following names of active and energetic Free-Traders:—On one side, Villiers, Brotherton, Evans, Heyworth, Thorneley, Crawford, William Ashworth, House, Ward, Rev. T. Spencer, Bowring, Christie, and Gibson. On the other side, W. J. Fox, Chadwick, James Wilson, Ewart, Pattison, Warburton, Marsland, Leader, O'Connell, Brooks, Greg, Walker, P. A. Taylor, and Phillips. In the centre of the inner circle in the wheat sheaf already described, and around it, are six circular emblematical devices in colours. The uppermost contains the royal arms; a second represents commerce by the cotton-bale, marked "A.C.L. 1844," and other goods for export, an anchor, and a ship sailing from the shore, with the motto "Commerce the sure pledge of peace." The third represents Manchester cotton factories, and the motto of the corporation, "Labore et concilio." A fourth represents a beehive and its busy occupants, with the motto "Rights of industry." A fifth represents a ship, whose pennon is inscribed "Free-Trade," with the motto "Our commerce shall be free." The sixth represents a plough, spade, and other agricultural implements, with the motto "Speed the plough." Around these devices are the names of the principal members of the Council of the League and the advocates of total repeal:—Cobden, Bright, Wilson, Colonel Thompson, Moore, and G. Thompson. The whole has a very handsome appearance, and it has been the object of considerable curiosity at the League-rooms. We understand that it is to be removed to some more public situation, where it can be more generally seen.

We received, but at too late an hour for publication, a report of the Great Anti-Corn Law meeting held at Leeds on Wednesday evening.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. Elphinstone's Speech on Probate and Legacy Duties, on Thursday, the 14th instant.

MR. ELPHINSTONE: Sir, I rise, in pursuance of the notice which I have given, to ask the House to resolve itself into a committee of the whole House for the purpose of considering the statutes which impose taxes upon the right of succession to personal property after death, in the hope that the House will see not only the propriety but the justice of imposing similar taxes on real estate. (Hear, hear.) The House is probably aware, that, as the law now stands, the personal property of every person who dies worth more than £20 is subject to two taxes, called probate duty and legacy duty. Probate duty is an ad valorem tax imposed on the whole personal property of the deceased, which may be situated in any part of the United Kingdom, at the time of his death; and this is payable, in all cases, whatever may be the manner in which the personal property is left, whether the property be left to a near relation or to a stranger in blood. Legacy duty is a second tax on personal property, in addition to the probate duty, which is levied on the party who receives the benefit. The amount of this duty varies according to the degree of relationship of the legatee to the deceased, and widows are exempt from its operation. Legacy duties fall with great severity on strangers in blood, and in the case of natural children, who in the eye of the law are strangers in blood, are particularly severe. Administration duties (which are the duties levied when there is no will) are of the same nature as probate duties, and are imposed on precisely the same description of property as probate duties. The rate, however, of administration duty is higher per cent. than the probate duty. I think this distinction is wrong in principle, because it does appear to be unjust that a widow or children are to pay a heavier tax to the state merely because the husband, either by accident or design, has preferred that his property should be divided according to the known order of law. (Hear, hear.) There is this distinction between legacy and probate duty, that while probate duty is never in any case charged on real estate, nor on any interest arising out of land, nor on land directed to be sold, legacy duty is, in certain cases, under provisions of 43 George III., c. 48, payable upon annuities charged on land, or on land directed to be sold. Land itself, however, whether it be left as a whole in one estate, to one person, or whether it be divided into different farms and left to different persons, is not liable to the legacy duty. (Hear.) With this trifling distinction between these taxes, however, the House may take it as the general rule, that while personal property is in all cases subject to these heavy taxes, real property, be it freehold or be it copyhold, is entirely exempt. Now, I must say that I think this exemption in favour of freehold and copyhold property is most unjust to manufacturers and traders, to the great mass of the people, and to all the owners of personal property. (Hear, hear.) This act of injustice has also given rise to the injurious imputation that, inasmuch as the majority of the two Houses of Parliament consist of the owners of real property, this exemption has been made by the Legislature on private, and not on public grounds. The present legacy duty was originally imposed as a war tax; and when Mr. Pitt introduced the existing act, in 1793, he intended to apply its provisions to realty as well as to personalty; and, though the landed interest were too strong even for that powerful minister, it is perfectly well known that he stated, over and over again, that landed property ought not to be exempted from burdens to which personal property is subjected. Mr. Pitt said (Hansard XXXII., p. 658), in introducing the Legacy Bill—"In a war for protection of property, it was just and equitable that property should bear the burden. It was in the nature of things that landed property was the most permanent; it was fit that it should contribute accordingly. The legacy duty was not, however, to be confined to any species of property; it was to include both landed and personal." Mr. Pitt afterwards divided his bill into two parts: the one relating to personalty, and the other to realty. The bill for personal property passed the Commons without difficulty, and became the existing act—36 Geo. III., c. 53; but the bill for realty was opposed at every stage by the landed gentry of that day, and, after several very close divisions (in one of which the numbers were equal, and the Speaker was obliged to give a casting vote), Mr. Pitt carried the bill by only one vote. On the following day he came down to the House of Commons, and reluctantly yielded to necessity, and, contrary to his own opinion, withdrew the bill. (Hear, hear.) The exemption which the law has given to real property is in many cases absurd, as well as unjust. Leaseholds for years are considered as personal property, and, therefore, are liable to probate duty; leaseholds for lives are real estate, and therefore not liable. There are towns in the north of England, in the borough of Sunderland, for instance, in which in one part the houses are held on leases for years, and are consequently exempt; in the other part the houses are on leases for lives, and consequently liable. (On what principle of common sense or of justice are the inhabitants of one part of a borough to be liable to a tax from which the inhabitants of another part of the same borough are to be exempt? I ask, on what principle of justice can you possibly defend these mere legal distinctions? (Hear, hear.) Why is the inheritor of a large property in a town, consisting of leaseholds, to be liable to taxation, when the inheritor of a copyhold estate is to be exempt? (Hear, hear.) The sum paid annually by the owners of personal property is enormous. I find that, in the year ending January, 1844, the state received about two and a quarter millions of money from the personal property of the United Kingdom; and the capital which produced this large revenue, and which in passing from the dead to the living became liable to this heavy amount of taxation, was no less than forty-three millions.

RETURN OF AMOUNT OF DUTY ON LEGACIES, PROBATES, ADMINISTRATIONS, AND TESTAMENTARY INVENTORIES FOR THE YEAR ENDING JANUARY 5, 1844:—

| | Legacies. | Probates, Administrations, and Testamentary Inventories. |
|----------------------|----------------|--|
| England and Wales .. | £1,114,871 6 6 | £879,367 5 0 |
| Scotland .. | 85,977 18 6 | 53,413 0 0 |
| Ireland .. | 39,034 17 3 | 66,184 10 1 |
| United Kingdom .. | 1,240,884 2 3 | 998,964 15 1 |

Total legacies and probates, &c., in United Kingdom, £2,239,766 17s. 4d.

And since the year 1797, it appears, by the papers now on your table, that the immense sum of £66,835,959 has been yielded by these taxes.

TOTAL AMOUNT OF DUTY RECEIVED SINCE 1797 ON LEGACIES, PROBATES, ADMINISTRATIONS, AND TESTAMENTARY INVENTORIES:—

| | Legacies. | Probates, Administrations, and Testamentary Inventories. |
|-------------|------------------|--|
| England .. | £31,372,977 1 s. | £27,244,677 17 2 |
| Scotland .. | 2,037,324 19 0 | 1,390,606 10 2 |
| Ireland .. | 714,250 18 1 | 1,053,821 18 0 |
| Total .. | £34,124,552 18 4 | £29,691,205 5 4 |

I have little doubt but that, if legacy and probate duties were imposed on real property, an income nearly as large as that derived from personal property would be obtained with the greatest ease and facility. In the absence of precise information, there are various ways of making this estimate. Mr. Gwynne, late comptroller of the legacy duties, whose opinion is entitled to the highest consideration, estimated that about one-third of the whole personal property in the kingdom is annually subject to the probate and legacy duties. Sir Robert Peel, when he introduced the income-tax, in 1843 assumed the annual rent of land to be £89,400,000. Taking this at twenty-five years' purchase, would make the value of real property to be £2,235,000,000; and then, applying Mr. Gwynne's principle, you would have a capital of about £33,000,000 of real property annually subject to probate and legacy duty. The capital of personal property which was subject to these duties in 1843 was £43,000,000. This produced to the revenue, as I have already stated, about 2½ millions. It is, therefore, only fair to estimate that land of the value of £33,000,000 would, at the very least, produce 1½ million as revenue for the use of the state. (Hear, hear.) There is another mode of making this estimate. It appears by the accurate tables of Mr. Porter, in his able work "The Progress of the Nation," there are about 46 millions of acres of cultivated land in the United Kingdom:—

| | Arable and Gardens. | Meadows, Pastures, and Marshes. | Total cultivated. | Wastes capable of improvement. | Wastes not capable of improvement. | Total acres in United Kingdom. |
|------------------|---------------------|---------------------------------|-------------------|--------------------------------|------------------------------------|--------------------------------|
| England .. | 10,542,000 | 13,279,900 | 23,821,900 | 2,464,000 | 32,242,000 | 32,242,000 |
| Wales .. | 890,270 | 2,225,480 | 3,115,750 | 530,000 | 1,105,000 | 4,750,000 |
| Scotland .. | 2,491,960 | 3,771,040 | 6,263,000 | 5,940,000 | 8,538,930 | 19,738,930 |
| Ireland .. | 6,349,040 | 6,735,240 | 13,084,280 | 4,900,000 | 2,414,664 | 19,414,944 |
| British Isles .. | 19,273,270 | 23,981,660 | 43,254,930 | 13,834,000 | 44,190,594 | 44,190,594 |
| Totals .. | 19,273,270 | 23,981,660 | 43,254,930 | 13,834,000 | 44,190,594 | 44,190,594 |

If we consider the large rents that are obtained near towns, in all probability the rental of these 46,000,000 acres cannot average less than £1 per acre. If this estimate of the rental be nearer the truth than that of the right hon. baronet, as I suspect it is, it would give us a larger revenue (if probate and legacy duties were imposed on land) than is now derived from personal property. (Hear, hear.) The House will bear in mind that these estimates must be under the mark, as I have not taken into account freehold houses and other real property, which are now exempt. Whether, however, these calculations are too much or too little, it is clear that a very large revenue may be obtained for public purposes, and that land is now unjustly exempt from the payment of a heavy tax to which other property is liable. (Hear, hear.) How unjust it is, how unfair it is, that while the property of a merchant who dies, leaving but a bare provision for his family, is subject to a heavy probate duty, the family of the rich landed proprietor, who dies possessed of freehold land and freehold houses to the amount, perhaps, of a million, is not called upon to pay one farthing; and the distinction between the property of a landed proprietor and of the manufacturer is the more galling from this circumstance, that the very same land which, while it remains the property of the landed gentleman, is not liable to probate duty, becomes chargeable with this heavy tax the moment it is bought with partnership capital for the purposes of the trade of the manufacturer, because it is then considered to be personal property. (Hear, hear.) On what principle of fairness does this House enact that when a freehold estate is bequeathed by a rich proprietor to his rich heir, that this valuable inheritance is not to be charged with legacy duty, but that when the very same estate is devised to be sold in order to provide for the wants of a family, it is then to become subject to this legacy duty? (Hear, hear.) The hardship on the middle classes is the greater in the case I have just mentioned, because in nine cases out of ten where an estate is devised to be sold it becomes liable to the auction duty, and in every case to a conveyance duty, from both of which taxes the heir-at-law escapes. If any distinction ought to be made as to the payment of legacy duty between land devised to be sold, and on land not devised to be sold, it ought to be in favour of the former, as land devised to be sold becomes liable to the two duties I have just named. A tax upon the transfer of landed property after death has, from the earliest time, been usual in all civilized countries. We all have read in history that by the Julian law imposed by Augustus Cæsar, a very large revenue, under the name of the twentieth penny, "vicesima pars hereditatis" was derived from a tax of this nature on succession to real property. A similar tax is at this day levied in Holland, Belgium, France, Switzerland, Italy, and in some parts of Germany. I trust that the period is not distant when either a similar tax will be levied in the United Kingdom, or else that you will consent to take off those duties on personal property; they ought to be levied both on realty and on personalty,—on both or on neither. (Hear, hear.) In looking through the older acts of Parliament on this subject I have been struck with the anxiety the landowners have shown at all periods of our history to benefit themselves at the expense of others. There is a singular example of this in St Henry VIII. c. 6. Before this act was passed (which is entitled "Tees for Probates") land directed to be sold was considered as personal property, and liable to a probate fee: but by this act land directed to be sold is exempted from paying a probate fee, and this exemption continues to the present day, as such land (though subject to legacy duty) is not subject to probate duty. When this question was last discussed in the House, in April, 1843, while no one ventured to object to the justice of the principle for which I contend,—namely, that of treating every species of property (whether real or personal) on a footing of equality (hear, hear),—two specious objections were urged: the one relating to the burdens to which landed property is subject, in consequence of the stamp duties; and the other, that a probate duty on landed property would be easily evaded by putting the property into trust. With the indulgence of the House, I wish to make a few remarks respecting both these objections. In the first place, I find on inquiry (though there are no accurate accounts), from competent persons, that out of £1,600,000 received for stamp duties on deeds, not above £400,000 can by any possibility be considered to be paid by land (which is now exempt from probate duty), either in the shape of duties on conveyances, mortgages, settlements of landed property, or leases of farms, or other matters relating to realty; the remaining £1,200,000 are paid entirely by transactions relating to personal property, such as personal bonds, leases of houses in towns, mortgages of leasehold houses, and settlements of funded property, and other personal deeds of a similar nature. I also find in all the stamp duties relating to real property, that the principle is to favour the rich man and to make the poor man pay more than his fair proportion. Take the case of a mortgage—if a small farmer is in distress, and desirous to borrow £50 on mortgage of his small patrimony, he has to pay a stamp duty of £1. A wealthy landlord with a large estate wishes to borrow £20,000 for the purpose of improving his property and adding to his income, he has to pay, not a duty of £400, which he ought to do if he paid at the same rate per cent. as the yeoman, but a stamp duty of only £20; so that in this case the rich man contributes £380 less to the exigencies of the state than he ought to do. The same principle (though not to the same extent) pervades the duty on conveyances. The stamp duty on conveying a small property of £20, is 10s.—the stamp duty on conveying a large property of the value of £100,000 is only £1000, instead of £2500, as it ought to be if the stamp on large property was in proportion to the stamp on small. When a merchant under the right hon. baronet's tariff imports a large quantity of goods, this House does not enact that the wealthy merchant of Liverpool or of Bristol is to pay a smaller amount of import duty than the humble tradesman; on the contrary, this House, with perfect fairness, puts the large importer and the small importer on a footing of perfect equality, and makes each person pay at the same rate for the goods he imports. Then, if you act on this just principle in respect to trade and commerce, I want to know why are you to act on a different principle with regard to land? (Hear, hear, hear.) The greater part of conveyances in the course of the year are conveyances of small properties near towns, which belong to the middle classes; there can consequently be no doubt but the greater part of those very conveyance duties, for which a claim is now made upon us by the landowners, are paid by the middle classes, and not by the inheritors of large landed property. However, I am ready to admit that these stamp duties on the conveyance of landed property are injurious to the landed interest—that they tend to lessen the value of their estates by increasing the expense and difficulty of selling their property. It was suggested by the late Mr. Tyrrel and by Mr. Stewart, the eminent conveyancers, that these duties on the alienation of land should be altogether abolished, and that, instead, a probate duty should be imposed. I am ready to adopt their suggestion. I can only say that, if the House agree with my proposition, I should willingly vote to relieve the landed interest from this £400,000, though I believe that the bulk even of this £400,000 falls on the middle classes and on the small proprietors in the neighbourhood of towns. It was urged in the last debate by several honourable members, that a probate duty on landed property would be easily evaded by means of putting it into trust, and that by this means the large estates would escape. This difficulty, however, if the right hon. gentleman the Chancellor of the Exchequer were really in earnest, might easily be avoided. At present, as the law now stands, personal property under trust, under certain circumstances, escapes probate duty; but it would be very easy to enact that whenever the cestuique trust (that is to say, the person who has the beneficial interest) dies, that the tax should be levied on the next cestuique trust entering into the enjoyment of the beneficial interest, whether the interest were derived from personalty or realty. Sir, I have purposely, on the present occasion, confined the motion now before the House to probate duties, with the view of preventing the House being misled by any of the specious arguments which were used on a former occasion relating to the legacy duties. The right hon. gentleman, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, by taking advantage of the fact that, in particular cases, certain interests arising out of land are liable to legacy duty, endeavoured, by confounding probate and legacy duty, to induce the House to believe that land is liable both to probate and legacy duty, and that owners of real estate do, in a large degree, contribute to those taxes. Such, however, is not the fact, and I defy the ingenuity of the right hon. gentleman to show that, either land itself, or that any interest arising out of land (be it freehold or copyhold), is, in any single instance, liable to probate duty. (Hear, hear.) Sir, I trust I have stated enough to the House to induce it to agree to this motion. The people of England are lovers of fair play and honesty, and they cannot understand on what principle of justice Parliament imposes a heavy tax on the hard-earned savings of the working man, which he may have laid by for the support of his widow and infant children, when the property of the rich proprietor, which passes to the heir-at-law, utterly and entirely escapes taxation. I now beg to move "that this House do resolve itself into a committee of the whole House, on an early day, for the purpose of taking into consideration the acts 36 Geo. III., c. 52; 45 Geo. III., c. 28; 48 Geo. III., c. 149; and 55 Geo. III., c. 184, with the view of imposing the same amount of probate duty on real estate as is now in similar cases imposed on personal property; and, likewise, of considering the expediency of imposing a probate duty in all cases on the death of the cestuique trust (whether the trust property be realty or personalty); in order to substitute such proposed probate duty on real estate for some of those taxes which now press most heavily on the productive industry of the people." (Cheers.)

TO THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF HAREWOOD,
PRESIDENT OF THE YORKSHIRE SOCIETY
For Keeping up the Price of Bread and the Rent of Land.

LETTER II.

MY LORD,—I showed in my first letter to your lordship, that perfect freedom of industry and trade is conducive to the highest degree of national prosperity—that domestic industry is best promoted when left at liberty to find out the most profitable employments—that foreign trade cannot (nationally speaking) supersede domestic industry, because whatever we import must of necessity be purchased by the produce of domestic industry—that, under Free Trade, nothing would ever be imported which it was not more profitable to the nation to import than to produce at home—and that abundance and cheapness of food is the greatest of material blessings to a people.

If these plain and clear propositions, which are admitted as indisputable by all men whose opinions are entitled to respect, were once firmly fixed in the mind, they would answer nearly every objection that is made to the repeal of the Corn Laws. But if these are not held as certain and invariable truths, men are liable to be misled by minor considerations, arising out of partial and temporary interests, or entangled in fallacies devised for the purpose of perplexing.

Many of the advocates of the Corn Monopoly, perceiving that the arguments for Free Trade are unanswerable, endeavour to show that there are peculiarities in the circumstances of this country which make England an exception to the general rule. And the ground most frequently alleged to justify a departure from the rule is our heavy taxation. Mr. John Rand, of Bradford, who appears to have studied the subject much less than his brother, seems to rely on this point exclusively. He said at your meeting:—"I am decidedly of opinion that the agricultural interest of this country, with the amount of taxation which it has to bear, cannot enter into competition with that of other nations comparatively free from such burdens, should protection be withdrawn; and upon this ground the meeting very properly takes its stand."

Mr. Bethell also alleges taxation, but with a contractedness unworthy of his general good sense, and dwells upon the "County Rates," the increasing pressure of which afflicts him in his quarter sessions capacity!

Now, it is true that taxation is a burden which presses upon the whole community, and is felt as a weight in every race with our foreign competitors. It is also true that the taxation of England is absolutely larger than that of any other country, though it is by no means larger when compared with the wealth and resources of the respective countries. Mr. Rand does not say whether he means to allege the general taxation of the country as a ground of protection to agriculture, or the special burdens which are said to press on the land. If he mean the former, it affords no more ground of "protection" to agriculture than it does to every other branch of industry; and it is obvious, as remarked in my last letter, that to protect all is to protect none. The taxes on articles of general consumption, by which the bulk of the revenue is raised, press quite as much on the manufacturer and artisan as on the landowner or farmer. No one will pretend that the agriculturists are the only class who consume sugar; drink tea, coffee, spirits, beer, and wine; use tobacco, paper, timber, bricks, glass, soap, candles, tallow, cotton, and sheep's wool; take out excise licenses; use stamps; pay probate and legacy duty, window duty, carriage and horse tax, or postage. To show that the public taxes are such as press upon the whole population who eat, drink, wear clothes, and live in houses, I will quote from M'Culloch's "Statistical Account of the British Empire" the principal articles of taxation in the year 1837. The gross produce of the several taxes was as follows:—

| Customs and Excise. | Stamps. |
|-------------------------------------|--------------------------------------|
| Spirits—Foreign .. | Deeds and other instruments .. |
| Rum .. | Probate and Legacies .. |
| British .. | Insurance—Marine .. |
| Malt .. | Fire .. |
| Hops .. | Bills of Exchange, Bankers' Notes .. |
| Wine .. | Newspapers, &c. .. |
| Sugar and Molasses .. | Stage Coaches .. |
| Tea .. | Post-horses .. |
| Coffee .. | Receipts .. |
| Tobacco and Snuff .. | Other Stamp Duties .. |
| Butter .. | |
| Cheese .. | |
| Currants and Raisins .. | |
| Corn .. | |
| Cotton & Sheep's Wool .. | |
| Silk .. | |
| Hides and Skins .. | |
| Paper .. | |
| Soap .. | |
| Candles and Tallow .. | |
| Coals .. | |
| Glass .. | |
| Bricks .. | |
| Timber .. | |
| Auctions .. | |
| Excise Licences .. | |
| Miscellaneous Customs and Excise .. | |

It is evident, at a glance, that these taxes press upon consumption generally, that is, on the whole body of the people, and that they afford no pretence for "protecting" the owners or occupiers of land at the expense of the rest of the community. The agriculturists suffer from taxation, it is true, but not more than their fellow-subjects. To "protect" them alone, therefore, is robbing Peter to pay Paul. If they are a minority of the nation, what right have they to tax the majority—who suffer equally with themselves from taxation—for their own exclusive relief and benefit? And even if they were the majority—which they are not—where would be the reasonableness of aggravating the burdens of a minority, by shifting the load from their own shoulders to shoulders less able to bear it? General taxation affords no ground whatever for "protecting" any one interest in the country; and to attempt to protect all is ridiculous: for universal "protection" would only be another name for universal restriction. The process which is attempted has been well likened to the proceedings of a cage full of monkeys, who, being inveterate thieves, are every one pilfering from another's mess, and every one in turn being pilfered,—so that there is plenty of quarrelling and much loss of provision, but no gain whatever to any,—unless, perchance, one should be stronger than the rest, in which case he will plunder with impunity, and assume an air of lordly indignation if the weaker should remonstrate against his injustice. Such rapacious monkey would type a certain class of human—not humane—monopolists.

It is possible, however, that Mr. Rand may have meant that there were peculiar burdens borne by the landed interest, which entitle them to protection. I admit that, if there are such peculiar burdens, they ought either to be compensated or removed. But when Mr. Ward moved last year for a committee of the House of Commons to inquire whether there were any such peculiar burdens, the country gentlemen refused, for reasons best known to themselves, to go into the inquiry. Mr. Cobden is to make a similar motion this year, and I do not hear that your Pro-Corn-Law Societies have promised him their support. If it be true that there are such peculiar burdens on the land, let them be distinctly stated, and let us know the taxes themselves and their amount, on the authority of a Parliamentary Committee. To shrink from the inquiry is to betray a consciousness either that there are no such peculiar burdens, or that the Corn Laws give a compensation far beyond anything that is warranted.

Mr. Bethell, with a gravity quite enviable, says:—"Has there been any diminution made in those taxes bearing especially upon the agricultural interests? On the contrary are they not daily increasing? Are not county rates increasing, in spite of every effort to keep them down? I do not quarrel with this, for they are spent for the benefit of the country; but they form part of those expenses which fall upon the agriculturists. From the station which I occupy as chairman of a quarter sessions, I am well acquainted with the subject, and I know that the county rates are daily and hourly increasing."

Prodigious! A truly quarter sessions argument! County rates indeed! The whole amount of the county rates is little more than a million sterling; and this is, as Mr. Bethell admits, "spent for the benefit of the country"—of which country, my Lord, you and your fellow-landowners are. But I can tell Mr. Bethell that we in towns pay county rates, as well as you. To allege this, then, as justifying a "protection" of 30s. per quarter on wheat, is puerile. Yet not one single tax was mentioned in the course of your long meeting but this! Mr. Bethell says:—"The Anti-Corn-Law League do not propose that the burdens now paid by the agriculturists shall be paid by the Consolidated Fund. They do not wish that a single item of the taxes with which we are charged shall be placed to the public's account."

Modest man! Much injured landlords! You have by no means sufficient "protection!" You yourself, my lord, say:—"What is the protection now given to us? (Nothing—literally nothing!) Gentlemen, it is no more than we have a right to ask. [But it is much more than you have a right to ask.] I thought it was my duty to ask. [Cormorant!] but I am satisfied with the present. [Wonderful!] for it works well! [for the landlords!]

Are you not ashamed of your inactivity? Your thousands upon thousands of broad and fertile acres do not content you, without taxing the poor man's crust to swell your princely income! You belong to the wealthiest aristocracy in the world. The rental of your estate has been very greatly augmented by the industry of that manufacturing population whom you are now endangering, and of whom you have the ingratitude and arrogance to speak in the following terms:—

"The great places from whence all the outcry has emanated are the districts of the cotton manufacturers and the mill-owners. It is cotton against corn [No, it is cotton wanting corn]—against the landed interest of this country—Speculators—men who grind their poor to nothing—against the farmers and the landowners!"

I will not characterize this language as it deserves; it is needless; every reader has done it for me. But I will tell your lordship that these "speculators" are men who, out of the earnings of their toil and skill, pay their workmen far higher wages than you pay your labourers; and, moreover, that these men, by their talents, their industry, their enterprise, and their inventive genius, have borne up the landowners to their present unparalleled height of affluence, whilst you have been loitering in splendid but inglorious idleness. And yet you revile them, because they ask that industry may be free—because they seek even-handed justice—because, alarmed at the growth of our population on a limited soil, at the rapid progress of foreign competition with our commerce, and at the artificial and dangerous state of this nation compared with the rest of the world, they wish that every shackle may be struck off from industry, and that scarcity may be no longer enforced by act of Parliament!

To return; the opponents of the Corn Laws have, over and over again, declared, though Mr. Bethell may be ignorant of it, that if there are any peculiar and undue burdens on agriculture they ought to be removed; but I remind your lordship that, in the principal countries of Europe, the land pays a far larger proportion of the public taxes than in England. Mr. Macgregor, the well-informed secretary of the Board of Trade, has, years since, published the following comparison:—

| | Public Revenue. | Amount of Revenue derived from taxes on land. |
|-----------------------|-----------------|---|
| In Prussia .. thalers | 61,740,000 | 26,630,000 |
| In Austria .. florins | 164,000,000 | 87,000,000 |
| In France .. francs | 1,018,750,000 | 579,669,030 |
| In England .. £ | 52,236,950 | 1,531,915 |

"In the other German States" (says Mr. Macgregor), "and in Belgium and Holland, the proportion from land taxes contributed to the revenue is generally as great or greater than in Prussia."

"The landed interests of France, Flanders, Holland, all Germany, and all Italy, pay at least one-half of the national taxation by a direct tax upon land."

The land-tax, which raises £1,174,100 is exactly at the same nominal amount now as in the reign of William III. (a century and a half since), although the whole public revenue was then only £3,895,305, and is now £50,000,000, and although the land-rental of Great Britain and Ireland has risen within that time from £9,724,000 to £47,068,881! And yet Mr. Rand, Mr. Bethell, and the landowners make an outcry for "protection," on the ground of taxation, against the corn of countries where the special taxes on land are so immensely heavier than they are in England!!! You trifle wantonly with the public patience.

I know it is said that the manufacturers are protected as well as the agriculturists. But this is a delusion. The protecting duties on manufactured goods are inoperative. In all the large branches of our manufactures, cotton, woollen, linen, hardware, and cutlery, and even to a great extent in silk, the import duties are a mere name. This is evident when it is considered that in all these branches the manufactures of England are exported largely to foreign markets, and there undersell the manufactures of other countries. Now, if we can undersell our rivals in foreign markets, we surely need not fear them in our own.

The prices of those manufactures at home are fixed by the prices that can be obtained abroad, and abroad we must sell at least as cheap as foreigners. There cannot be two prices for the same article in this country; therefore it is evident that (with trifling exceptions) the people of this country now obtain their manufactured goods as cheaply as they could be had in any part of the world. Our manufactures have no effective "protection."

The Anti-Corn-Law League has, at its largest meetings in London and Manchester, year after year, avowed its readiness to dispense with all "protection" to manufactures. And if there are any smaller departments of trade where the same readiness is not displayed, how can you wonder at it, whilst the English workman must eat his bread so much dearer than the foreigner? Repeal the Corn Laws, and you may with ease sweep away every other vestige of monopoly. Preserve the Corn Laws, and it becomes positive injustice to remove other "protections,"—for it is only cutting off the branches, whilst you leave the parent trunk and root untouched.

I scarcely need remind you, that Mr. Rand and others, in defending the Corn Laws on the ground of taxation, occupy a position in absolute hostility to that taken up by Sir Robert Peel. When that Minister proposed his income tax, accompanied by his tariff reducing the duties on articles of consumption, he said:—

"With respect to those who hold land, and with reference to those whose income is derived from professions, I have the confident expectation that the reduction in the cost of living will compensate for a great part of the pecuniary burden I impose."

Cheapness of food, then, according to Sir Robert Peel, helps a nation to sustain the weight of taxation. But, according to Mr. Rand, cheapness of food would disable a nation from bearing the weight of taxation. The principles of the two are diametrically opposite; and I scarcely need say which is most entitled to attention.

I shall conclude this letter by putting a case, and making an assertion, which may startle you. They are as follow: Suppose a nation exclusively agricultural,—with a soil even inferior to that of its neighbours,—and loaded with a heavier taxation than any other state; I assert that, even in such a case, Free Trade would be the truest wisdom, and "Protection" would be folly.

"What!" say you; "admit foreign corn, cattle, sheep, wool, fruits, and vegetables? Why, you would starve and ruin every farmer and landowner in the country? This is the ne plus ultra of Free-Trade Quixotism!"

And yet, my Lord, Free Trade would be demonstrably the best course, even in these most unfavourable circumstances; and—what will seem most paradoxical of all—it would be best, not only for the occupiers of land, but even for the owners.

First, for the occupiers. It is admitted that they are in bad case—with a poor soil and heavy taxes. The question is, whether it would be better for them that Government should bind them exclusively to their own agricultural produce, or should leave each man to do the best he could for himself. I assert the latter. For it is certain that not a man amongst them would leave his own occupation of tilling the soil, unless he found that he could gain a better livelihood in some other way. Not a bushel of corn, not a pound of wool, not an apple or a cabbage, would he be able to get from any other country (however cheap they might be), without paying for them. In order to pay for them, he must produce something of exchangeable value. He would not turn to any new occupation unless it were more profitable to him than his old one. Suppose that he found an occupation, such as spinning worsted yarn (like Mr. Rand), by which, when the yarn was exchanged for corn and wool with another country, he could obtain more of both than he could extort from his own ungrateful soil. Would it not, beyond all possible doubt, be better for that man to spin yarn, export it, and import corn and wool, than to continue growing the latter? If it were not better for him, he would not do it. If it were better for him, he would and ought to do it. And, if he did it, you may be as certain that it would be better for him as that water runs down hill. Now, what is better for one man might also be better for a hundred or a thousand. We may be sure that not a creature would change his line of life unless he could improve himself, and if he could improve himself, who should forbid him to change it?

"Oh!" say you to yourself, "his landlord should; for otherwise the land would all be thrown up, and there would be no rents."

This brings me to my second point. I said Free Trade would be better even for the landowner.

But suppose it were not,—suppose he were a loser by it,—on what principle of reason would he be justified in keeping the occupiers and their labourers miserable, for the purpose of yielding him rents? Who made him their feudal lord and master, and bound them to sacrifice themselves in his service?

In the long run, however, if not at once, the very landowners themselves would benefit by Free Trade. We have seen that Free Trade would benefit the population generally; the increase of trade and manufactures would enrich them; the population would increase. Now, a rich and increasing population must of necessity require land, on which to build their houses, manufactories, and workshops, on which to pasture their horses and cattle, on which to raise their vegetables and at least a considerable proportion of their food. Gardens and parks would be in request. Timber would be valuable. With every addition to the population, the difficulty and expense of importing the requisite supply of food would be increased, and consequently it would become more profitable to raise food at home. As trade and wealth increased, roads would be improved, access to markets facilitated, more capital would be laid out on the soil, and the national burdens would become lighter as the people became more able to bear them. Then agriculture itself might flourish. Thus improvement would go on; unfettered industry and enterprise would ensure national prosperity; and national prosperity must inevitably bring a richer revenue to the owners of the soil than they could ever have wrung from a ground-down and starving peasantry.

You say this is all fancy. If it were so, it would nevertheless serve (like the parables of Scripture) to illustrate great truths. But cases analogous to this in every essential particular have been seen in various ages of the world; that is, cases in which Freedom of Trade and Industry has produced national greatness, and in which the land has acquired a far higher value from commercial prosperity than it could ever have received from restrictions and "protections." It was so in ancient Tyre, Palmyra, and Alexandria. It was so in the Low Countries, where the very soil was rescued from the ocean by its hardy trading inhabitants. It was so in Venice, which on her few rocky islets for many centuries governed the Mediterranean. But England and Scotland afford innumerable and indisputable proofs of the same great truths. Lancashire, Leicestershire, the West Riding of Yorkshire, Derbyshire, and many other counties, have had the rental of land doubled, trebled, quadrupled, and quintupled, solely as the effect of manufacturing and commercial enterprise.

But your lordship will observe that the case I have supposed has been purposely made the most unfavourable possible to my own argument, for the sake of testing to the utmost the principles of Free Trade. The supposed case is not the case of England, except you take it at a period when an advanced stage of commercial greatness has ensured the success of agriculture as well as trade. The soil of England is of much more than average fertility. The taxation of England is lighter, compared with her means of bearing it, than that of most countries of Europe. She has the accumulated advantages of ages,—the largest and wealthiest body of consumers for produce of every kind, and especially for wheat, in the world. Seas roll around her, which give a "protection" to her agriculturists never to be taken away. To import one-half of the corn she consumes—let alone other agricultural productions—would require her whole mercantile navy; and therefore, of course, your lordship's supposition of half the land being thrown out of cultivation by the admission of foreign corn is a wild absurdity.

But still the same invariable law governs here as all the world over. Still, freedom of industry is the grand source of prosperity. Still, restrictions and "protections" are mischievous folly. A rapidly-growing population makes the supply of food the paramount question with the nation. And if the landowners of England should selfishly cling to laws which make food scarce and dear, they will undermine the public prosperity, diminish the ultimate value of their estates, and, peradventure, impair their own security and that of all our institutions.

I shall be compelled to intrude upon your lordship with a third letter next week.

I have the honour to be, my lord,

Your lordship's most obedient servant,

EDWARD BAINES, Junr.

Leeds Mercury Office, March 9, 1844.

AGRICULTURE.

HOW MUCH GOES FOR RENT?

A short time ago it was a favourite assertion at Monopolist meetings to state, that, if half or all the rent was given up by the landlords, it would only make a difference of a few farthings in the pound upon the amount expended by a labouring man in bread. For several weeks the changes were rung upon this topic at every "protection" meeting, and landlord after landlord tried to prove his own disinterestedness by assuming that, come what may, he must be the last to suffer. We have no doubt that most of the landed monopolists believed this assertion. They have hitherto found farmers so readily deluded into promising rents they could only pay out of their capitals, except when prices were unnaturally high, that a different state of things can hardly enter into country gentlemen's comprehension. Somehow or other these calculations have been less rife of late; we have searched in vain through a multitude of Monopolist speeches delivered during the last few weeks for statements of the proportion which rent bears to produce, or the small portion of the price of corn which consists of rent. But, though the squires have dropped the subject, it is much too important to be forgotten, and accordingly the Free-Traders have taken up the question of rent, and have subjected it to an analysis which we suspect will not serve the purpose of the Monopolist originators of the idea.

Mr. Cobden, in the House of Commons, read a detailed statement of the receipts and expenditure of a farmer in a midland county, which proved that upon moderately good land the landlord receives as rent nearly one half of the whole saleable produce. To displace that fact, Lord Worsley produced his calculation from a farmer on Lincoln-heath, which we examined last week, and roundly asserted that there must be some peculiarity in the instance cited by Mr. Cobden. But how stands the fact? Why, Mr. C. Paget, the gentleman who had supplied Mr. Cobden with his details, immediately on seeing Lord Worsley's calculation, wrote to Mr. Cobden to say that his lordship's figures completely supported his own statement. Mr. Paget's letter will be found in another column, and it deserves the attentive perusal of all who seek to understand this part of the subject. The results are shortly these: Lord Worsley deals with two hundred acres of land, which require an expenditure of £500 in manure to maintain their fertility, while the fertility of the land on which Mr. Paget's figures were founded could be kept up by an outlay for manure of £140 only. His lordship states his rent and tithe (which together make the total rent) at £1000, to which must be added £300 as the excess of expenditure in manure to keep the Lincoln-Heath land "in heart"—making the rent and extra manure £1300, while the expenses are £1350; showing that, in effect, the landlord gets at least the same "lion's" share for the poor land on Lincoln-heath as he does for the richer land in Nottinghamshire. But this is not all; for, two days after the receipt of Mr. C. Paget's letter, Mr. Cobden received a letter from Mr. G. B. Paget, of Sutton, near Loughborough, in Leicestershire (which is also in another column), wherein, after stating that he is not an advocate for free trade in corn, he fully confirms his relative's statement as to "the proportion the rent of the midland counties bears to the other money payments of a farm;" and he states, in confirmation, that the yearly rent of his own farm amounts to £787 10s., while his yearly outgoings besides rent are £840. Nor does the corroborative evidence stop here.

The Economist, taking up the subject, and treating it with the searching power of analysis for which that journal is remarkable, educes results for which the Monopolists will not be prepared. The writer takes the statement made by Mr. Howden, of Huddingtonshire, to the agricultural committee of 1836, of the produce and expenditure on a farm of 626 acres. Upon an average of the three years, 1832, 1833, and 1834, 176 acres of wheat, 11 acres of barley, 125 acres of oats, 62 acres of beans, 93 acres of turnips, 6 acres of potatoes, and 125 acres of grass and clover, produced (supposing the whole had been sold) £3202 15s. 4d., which was thus distributed and expended:—Cost of cultivation, £1830 8s. 7d.; corn rent to landlord £1124 7s. 1d.; residue to tenant for interest of capital, skill, and industry, £247 19s. 8d.

The Economist subjects this to a strict and practical analysis, the details of which our limits do not permit us to extract; but the results are, that the tenant consumes on his farm, by his horses, servants, and family, so much of his gross produce—which we have seen amounts in value to £3202 15s. 4d.—as is equal to £1128 5s. 11d., while his money expenses, interest of capital, and profits, amount to £950 2s. 4d., the expenses being £780 of that sum. If we add £1124 7s. 1d., the rent paid to the landlord, to two previous sums, we shall exactly balance the gross produce. Now, if the tenant had had no rent to pay, but only the money payments and profits (£950 2s. 4d.), he could have given his horses the same allowance of food, his servants the same wages, and retained the same profits for himself, though he had only received 22s. 2d. a quarter for wheat, 13s. for barley, 9s. for oats, and 12s. 8d. for beans! Thus, 10s. 10d. of every pound received by the farmer for the produce he can sell goes to the landlord as rent. And it must be recollected that the three years to which Mr. Howden's statement applies were years of more than average produce, and that in ordinary and deficient years the proportion paid for rent is still higher. Following out this calculation, the Economist shows that, inasmuch as a quarter of wheat produces 125 four-pound loaves, when the price of wheat was 48s. 4d. per quarter, the proportion of the price of every four-pound loaf consumed in this country, which went into the landlord's pockets, was 2½d.; in 1837, when wheat was 55s. 6d., the landlord's slice of every man's loaf was 2½d.; and in 1838, when the average price of wheat was much above 70s. a quarter, the landlords actually received within a minute fraction of 4d. out of the price of every loaf consumed by the industrious population of the kingdom.

It is, therefore, demonstrated that every acre of land might be at least as well cultivated as it is at present, the labourers might receive the same real wages, and the farmer the same profits, as now, if wheat sold at 22s. 2d. a quarter, and other grain in proportion, provided the rent of the landlords could be annihilated. Now, as rent can fairly be paid only out of the surplus, and when farmers are no longer deluded by the expectation of high prices they seldom obtain, they will cease to offer rents which can only be paid out of capital, if Free Trade should, as the Monopolists pretend, reduce prices of agricultural produce to a very low rate, it will be the landlords, and not the tenants, whose interests must suffer.

This is a complete answer to the statements made at the protection meetings, that the Corn Laws do not form a landlord's question; it shows that it is exclusively a landlord's question, and they know it; and hence this outcry. The very consciousness that they (if any) are the gainers by the monopoly induces them to put forward their tenants as the most interested parties. But the analysis of the produce and expenditure of a farm, which the Monopolists themselves have suggested, furnishes conclusive refutation of the landlord-fallacy.

We do not say that, with Free Trade, prices of corn would fall to any great extent; on the contrary, all the evidence on the subject shows that nothing of the sort could happen; but, if the greatest fall, which the most exaggerated statements of the wildest Monopolist alarmists have suggested, should occur, it is as plain as the sun at noonday that this loss would permanently rest on the landlords, and the landlords alone.

LANDLORD AUDACITY.

It is said of the ostrich, that when fairly run down it hides its head in a bush, and fancies itself safe from pursuit. Just so does Mr. George Banks, under the shelter of a seat in the House of Commons, venture to assert that the Dorsetshire labourers receive in some form or other the wages of 11s. a week. That such a statement should be received with a cheer by the monopolist majority there, is not surprising; for though, after all the evidence to the contrary adduced by the Monopolists themselves, not a man could have believed the assertion, its audacity was accepted as an expression of defiance to "common sense." Yet the House of Commons can no more protect Mr. George Banks from exposure than the bush can guard the hunted ostrich from capture; for that intrepid advocate of the Dorsetshire labourers, the Hon. and Rev. Mr. Osborne, has addressed to his county representative a letter in which is the following contradiction. Mr. Osborne says:—

"But there are a few observations I must make upon another part of your speech; I do not think one man in this neighbourhood who reads it can fall of being amused at your coyness in putting the average of wages at 11s., exclusive of miscellaneous advantages. The truth is, the landlords are most of them paying 9s., the farmers, some of them, 8s., but many only 7s.; doubtless, in many cases, the men have more or less of the advantages you allude to; but I can get you the names of scores of labourers who get only 7s., without any advantages whatever. There is a good deal of piecework; but yet you will find on inquiry that such is the general condition of the labourer, that we are obliged to assist many out of the rates who are in full work on full pay; we have to keep all who fall sick, with scarce an exception, and to bury all who die at the expense of the ratepayers. As to the cottages, it is not, as you would have it inferred, merely the parish houses and small leaseholds that are indelicately crowded and in a ruinous condition; the cottages of many large proprietors are in the same condition; if you wish it, I will publish a well-authenticated list of cottages that have been destroyed by large proprietors within these thirty years, over a large tract of country, and the number that have been built; and I think I shall prove to your satisfaction, that if the parish houses and the cottages of small needy proprietors are indelicately crowded, it is owing, in a great measure, to the large proprietors having caused the great scarcity of dwellings, by pulling down so many and putting up so few."

Could anything be so stinging as that passage to a man to whom party and class prejudices had left the feeling of shame? Whether the facts stated by Mr. Osborne that Mr. Banks "is a strong party man, and aspires, in the county of Dorset, to the first place amongst the honoured at the market table," form a sufficient justification of his now refuted misstatement, we leave to the good sense of the public. Mr. Osborne then says:—

"As to the great vexatious question of the Corn Laws, I do not sufficiently understand it to have formed an opinion or attached myself to either party; but I do know enough of the condition of the agricultural labourer to make me feel it my duty to use every effort to draw public attention to it. The evils I deplore and seek to expose are, in my opinion, the results of a most mistaken policy; to persevere in it, I firmly believe, will at last be the utter destruction of all that makes landed property desirable; let the present rising generation of labourers grow up under all the evil influence of their present condition, and it needs not the spirit of prophecy to foretell the curae they will become to the country. It is not too late to rescue them from a great deal of impending evil. We are all to blame, landlords, tenants, and clergy; the farmer for their indifference to the growing misery around them, the latter for not having taken a bolder line in demanding for the poor of a Christian country the sympathy that is their due."

There is much sad reality in this passage; and we only wish benevolent men like Mr. Osborne would take one step further towards emancipating themselves from class prejudices, and apply their minds to a full and fair investigation of the operation of the Corn Laws upon the condition of the labourer. That such an inquiry would lead all such men to this great truth, that the emancipation of industry from all restrictive laws is a condition precedent to the elevation of the agricultural labourer, we have not the slightest doubt.

MONOPOLIST LANDLORDS AND RURAL LABOURERS.

We believe the latest monopolist returned to the House of Commons is Mr. Sotheron, the member for the Northern division of Wiltshire. That gentleman was elected simply as a monopolist: he had taken an active part in Pro-Corn-Law meetings, and he was supported by some monopolists who differed with him in general politics. At his nomination at Devizes he declared that he should have been quite satisfied to have relied for his election upon the votes of the agricultural labourers within a circle of ten miles of that town; and at the Wilt "protection" meeting he said:—

"The great question, however, which has rested itself on his mind was, the probable consequence of Free Trade to the labourer. This was a subject to which he had given much attention."

Now, the reader will not require to be reminded of the intimate connexion between the Corn Laws and low wages with uncertain employment, or that the districts in which protection from foreign competition is most anxiously sought are those in which game-preserves, inferior husbandry, and destitution prevail. Dorsetshire, probably, bears the bad pre-eminence of being the worst cultivated and most aristocratic county in England, but Wiltshire is a formidable competitor for that crown of ey-press. Knowing something of monopolists generally, and the monopolist landlords of Wiltshire in particular, we were not surprised to find that Mr. Sotheron's professions of regard for the labourer are sadly contradicted by his practice. In the report of proceedings in petty sessions at the County Magistrate's Office, Devizes, before T. H. S. SOTHERON, Esq., M. P., Major Grubbe, F. A. S. Locke, and P. E. Colston, Esqrs., and the Rev. A. Smith, we find the following case:—

"ASSAULT ON A POLICEMAN.—RESULT OF THE BEER SYSTEM AT ELECTIONS.—Robert Hampton, and Thomas Hampton, of Potterne, William Stephens, of Horton, Charles Eden, John May, Simon Ruddle, Charles Martin, William May, Edwin Tucker, John Gee, and George Logdon, were summoned by H. Riom, police constable, for assaulting and beating him on the afternoon of the 12th of February—the day of the North Wilt election—in the chapelry of St. James."

It appears that a great number of agricultural labourers had been brought into the town to grace Mr. Sotheron's election, to whom, as well as to the populace of the town, beer had been given in lavish abundance, and when a mob of several hundreds had assembled to witness a fight, the result of one of the innumerable drunken brawls of which Devizes was on that day the scene, the following savage attack was made upon the policeman who attempted to prevent the disgraceful disturbance:—

"On going among them Robert Hampton, the defendant, asked him what business he had there, and requested him to suffer the fight to proceed; having replied that he went to stop the fight, and that he would not suffer it to proceed, Robert Hampton began hustling him, and struck him on the left ear; the other defendant, Thomas Hampton, then struck him on the right ear with his flat; the mob then closed on him, and some of them caught him by the legs and threw him down; he was kicked and trampled on, and got many blows from all the defendants then in court. He got up as well as he could, and in making his escape from the field was struck again by Logdon and Stephens, and was followed over the bridge by the mob, who tried to break his back across some rails. He was seriously injured; so much so as to require medical aid; he was not even then perfectly recovered; he had done no nightwork since, and had been confined to the house three weeks."

That a man could sit as judge on the defendants whose brutal conduct was the result of his own act, the consequence of debauchery instigated to serve his own political objects, might well surprise any one unacquainted with the rural districts of England; but when we find that such a man had resisted a great act of justice to the community on the plea of the labourers' interest in the monopoly of corn, we must say that the whole matter reduces the value of his plea to a minimum. We shall, however, extract a passage or two from this examination, and leave the reader to judge as to the genuineness of Mr. Sotheron's love for the labourer.

"George Hunt: Saw Riom coming from where the fight had been, towards the town, with a mob at his heels; saw several of them 'pitch into him'; saw May strike him. He first saw him go into the field, and saw them all close round him and strike him; but cannot identify any of the defendants as having ill-used him there."

"Mr. Sotheron: Did you assist Riom?"

"Hunt: No, I dared not, they would have killed me."

"Mr. Sotheron: It was perfectly disgraceful in you to see the man served so, and not to help him."

"Hunt: What was I to do against 300 or 400."

"Mr. Sotheron: All you could."

"William Marshall, tap boy at the White Bear: Saw the defendant Tucker at the White Bear while the beer was given away; saw him about three o'clock go out with some beer."

"Tucker, to the Bench, said: When he went to the White Bear, to give the beer away, there were so many people there, that it was with difficulty he could get out again; he went from thence to the Cross Keys to give away beer, and then he went to Mr. Morris to give the beer, and to the White Lion, and to other houses to give away beer."

"Marshall: At half-past two o'clock, the taproom was full of people, who had all partaken of the beer that was given away; and Tucker was among them; there was fighting among them."

"Tucker, addressing himself to Mr. Sotheron: I was looking for you, sir, when the fight was going on."

Again:—

"Ann Hawkins, of Potterne, was at the fight, but did not see any one strike the policeman. Another woman named Archard made a similar statement."

"Mr. Sotheron told both these women that their conduct was shocking in being present at such scenes."

"Ruddle acknowledged being present. He had had some of the beer which had been given away. He saw a parcel of country people about the policeman beating him."

"John May said nothing except that he had been partaking of the beer which was given away."

"William Stephens said he saw the policeman down, and a lot of men on him, but did not strike him."

"Mr. Sotheron: Were you not ashamed not to help him? You were equally guilty, being present and not assisting him, as if you were one of the who actually struck him."

"—Stephens, sister to defendant, was present and saw the whole of the fight."

"Mr. Sotheron: Quite shocking."

"She saw the police man knocked down on the bridge, but her brother did not do it."

"Mr. Sotheron: You ought to have been standing there as of the defendants."

What monstrous mockery must it have been to have seen Mr. Sotheron turn up his sunny eyes and ejaculate "shocking" at deeds which were the direct and necessary result of his own act in giving away beer to an ignorant and half-starved population, to celebrate his own triumph as a monopolist of food! But hear what Mr. Sotheron the magistrate says to men incited to crime to serve the purpose of Mr. Sotheron the monopolist.

"The Bench, having consulted together sometime, proceeded to deliver their judgment, through Mr. Sotheron, who said: This is a most brutal assault committed on a policeman while in the discharge of his duty in endeavouring to stop a fight. It is a most cruel assault, and one which might have cost him his life. And we find you, Robert Hampton, Thomas Hampton, Wm. Stephens, Charles Eden, John May, Simon Ruddle, and Wm. May, guilty of taking part in it, and we convict you all. You two Hamptons, from your respectable dress and appearance, ought to have known better; you ought to have taken part with the police officer rather than against him. The other poor fellows are in a bad state of poverty, and, as I also know, of great ignorance, we shall not, therefore, inflict so heavy a fine on them as you. The sentence of the bench is, that you two Hamptons be fined £2 each, and in default of payment be committed to the New Prison for six weeks each; that the other defendants be fined 10s. each, or be committed for one month each. The costs in each case were 8s. 6d."

"The two Hamptons found security for their fine and costs, and were discharged. John May's fine and costs were paid by his brother. William Stephens begged hard of Mr. Sotheron to make it easy to him; he had a wife and four children at home to support—he paid 11s., and agreed that his master, Mr. W. Brown, of Horton, should pay the remainder out of his wages, by two weekly instalments; and the three, being destitute of work and unable to raise any money, were committed to prison for one month each."

Here we have a specimen of the "kindly" intercourse between landowners and labourers, of which we have heard so much at agricultural meetings. This shows the way in which alone the monopolists can get up a semblance of support from the agricultural labourers. Will the moral sense of the British people permit such a cause to be long upheld by such means?

PROPORTION WHICH RENT BEARS TO THE OTHER MONEY PAYMENTS OF THE FARMER.

"Ruddington Grange, March 14.

"My dear Sir,—It is a great satisfaction to me to find the statement I sent to you so fully confirmed by Lord Worsley."

"He takes a farm which is entirely arable, while the one whose expense I stated is 230 arable and 170 pasture, which is a fair proportion for the midland counties. His rent is divided between the landlord and the clergyman; mine is paid entirely to one landlord. He takes a farm which requires an outlay for manure equal to half the rent; I, one which will maintain its fertility at an expenditure of one twelfth the rent in artificial manure; and if you refer to the explanation appended to my statement, you will see that I consider it applicable to the heavy and mixed lands, and that for the poorer light lands a rectification was required for the quantity of manure purchased."

"Now, let us take Lord Worsley's statement. He takes:—

| | |
|----------------------------|---------|
| Landlord's rent | £800 |
| Tithe rent | 200 |
| | — £1000 |
| Add excess of manure | 360 |
| | £1360 |

"His horse keep ought to have been treated like his seed-corn: it is not an outgoing from the farm, but an abstraction from the disposable produce. His other expenses are:—

| | |
|--------------------------------------|-------|
| Farm labour | £800 |
| Mechanics or tradesmen's bills | 200 |
| Parochial rates | 150 |
| Interest of capital | 200 |
| | £1350 |

so that had his land been of such a quality that it would have required only £140, instead of £500, to maintain its fertility, he would of course have paid £360 more rent. The result then would have been:—

| | |
|----------------------|---------|
| Rent | £1360 |
| Other expenses | £1350 |
| Manure | 140 |
| | — £1490 |

Had one third of the land been old turf, the expenses would have been reduced £200. So that Lord Worsley more than confirms my statement."

"I see the Lothain farmers estimate the landlord's share at one half, while I only state it at 25s. out of 55s. for England."

"I believe the opposition you meet with is from an honest conviction that a change would be injurious to the tenant and labourer. I am therefore very sorry that your committee has been refused."

"I am, my dear sir, very truly yours,

"CHARLES PAGET."

"Richard Cobden, Esq., M.P."

"Sutton, near Loughborough, March 16, 1844.

"Sir,—I find that the statement made by my relative, Mr. Charles Paget, and brought forward by you in the House on Tuesday evening, on the proportion the rent of the midland counties bears to the other money payments of a farm, is not considered a fair one. I know well the farm it was taken from, and do not think a fairer could have been chosen, either in respect to quality of land, situation, or management. I have spoken to many tenants, who, upon consideration, generally agree with me that the proportion is as stated. I send you the accounts of my own farm of three hundred and fifty acres, valued at a fair rent, and managed much more expensively than land usually is, or than it would be advisable for a tenant to farm:—

| | |
|---|--------------------------|
| Rent of 350 acres, 176 plough and 174 grass, at 45s. | £787 10 0 |
| Labour | £350 |
| Bills | 66 |
| New implements | 20 |
| Rates | 54 |
| Interest on capital | 160 £3200 at 5 per cent. |
| Manure | 200 |
| | — £840 |

"I have not deducted for wear of horses or implements: the twenty pounds will buy new ones, and my horses I buy young, and sell all at as much or more when a little past their best. I do not charge my oilcake except at its value as manure, as I suppose the remainder is paid for in the increased value of stock kept."

"I do not agree with the object of the League, as I think there are peculiar burdens placed upon the land, and up to that amount duty should be levied upon foreign corn, and I declined to meet you at Nottingham on that account; but, knowing that discussion must elicit truth, I shall be most happy at any time to give you such statistical information as may be in my power."

"Make any use you please of this letter."

"Yours faithfully,

"Richard Cobden, Esq."

"G. B. PAGET."

CRUELTY OF CLASS LEGISLATION.—Mr. Matthew Nelson, of Preston, has two sons in America, who, to show their respect to their father, sent him three barrels of prime American flour. Mr. Nelson cheerfully consented to the charge for freight, insurance, dock-duties, portage, and carriage, but felt rather indignant when Mr. Customhouse Officer made his demand for 34s. This is just a taste of the sweets of class legislation.—Preston Guardian.

The Marquis of Londonderry, in a letter written from Paris, gives in his adhesion to the Durham Anti-League, but wisely adds:—"I beg to repeat to the farmers of the county of Durham what I have long since stated to my numerous and excellent tenants in Ireland—that it is prudent and wise for them to prepare for the worst; for, after the most extraordinary and inexplicable changes in the times we live in, no man can venture to predict or speculate with certainty on what may occur."

In consequence of the great length to which our Report of the Meeting at Covent Garden extends, we are obliged to omit our usual Notices to Correspondents, and several other matters, prepared for publication.

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any person forwarding 3s. 3d. by Post-office order, to the Publisher, 67, Fleet-street, London, will have one quarter's copies of the LEAGUE forwarded by post on the days of publication. Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with J. Gadsby, Newall's-buildings, Manchester; and the LEAGUE may be had by order of any news-agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

NATIONAL ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE.

THE COUNCIL OF THE LEAGUE beg to announce that the next Meeting in COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE will take place on WEDNESDAY EVENING, the 27th instant. The Hon. C. F. VILLIERS, M.P., will take the Chair precisely at Seven o'clock. Thomas Gibson, Esq., M.P., Commodore Sir Charles Napier, M.P., and Thomas Wakley, Esq., M.P., are expected to address the meeting. Tickets of admission may be had on application at the Offices of the League, 67, Fleet-street, from eleven to four o'clock on Monday and Tuesday. Registered Members admitted as heretofore.—Doors to be opened at Half-Past Six o'clock.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, March 23, 1844.

In his amusing entertainments called "Irish Evenings," Lover relates an anecdote of one of the Earls of Kildare, who excused himself for burning a cathedral on the plea that he thought the Archbishop was in it. A large section of the Monopolists have supported Lord Ashley's amendment on a similar principle: they have made an attack on the manufacturing interest in the hope of injuring the League. The fierce Kildare destroyed the church while the Archbishop escaped from his malice; and thus, too, the Monopolists will succeed in annoying the manufacturers; but, instead of destroying the League, they will give it fresh strength and additional importance. Those manufacturers who have hitherto been false to their order, and alien to the interests of their class, having received such signal proof that the landed oligarchy has resolved to prevent their growth and cripple their resources, will now come forward; and, though they join the movement at the eleventh hour, they will be found as enthusiastic, and probably more vigorous than those who have borne the labour and heat of the day. The operatives, mulcted of a portion of their wages, and having had bitter experience of what "short time" really means in the summer and autumn of 1841, will be animated by a firmer determination than ever to obtain the enfranchisement of industry, and adequate remuneration for labour. Deceived by the tales of self-elected delegates, the misrepresentations of discharged cotton-spinners, and the visionary dreams of itinerant and mendicant Socialists, the Monopolists have taken a step which it will be exceedingly difficult for them, if not quite impossible, to retrace. They have established the principle of interference between the employers and the employed. Be it so. Will the application of that principle stop at spinning-jennies and power-looms? Are there not mines and iron-works? Are there not milliners and haberdashers? What is the remuneration of the farm-labourer in Devon and Dorset? These are inconvenient questions, which the Monopolists must now assume the responsibility of answering; and these are problems of which they have forced the solution on the Legislature.

For the first time in the annals of commerce, a British Parliament has asserted its right to restrict the profits of capital and the wages of labour. The state of the money market affords sufficient proof that the profits of capital will not bear any further reduction without exhibiting a tendency to migration and displacement; and the rate of wages, even on the showing of the advocates of a ten-hours' bill, is even now exhibiting the signs of decline. No one can be such a fool as to suppose that increased wages can be had from diminished profits; and the operatives will not be long in discovering the real nature of the fraudulent boon proffered to them as an equivalent for Free Trade.

In fact the great masses of the operatives are well aware that what Lord Ashley proposes to them is what the emphatic language of Scripture describes as—"instead of bread, a stone; instead of a fish, a serpent." It is not effaced from their memory that the greater number of mills worked "short time" two years ago, and that Lord Ashley's experiment was then tried on a large scale. The arts of self-elected delegates and the itinerant agents of trades' unions cannot hide from them the nature of the results; they will look for an equivalent in place of the reduction which the Legislature is about to enforce; and we have yet to learn whence that equivalent is proposed to be obtained. We know, and the operatives know, that it can only be had from the increased demand for labour which Free Trade alone can create; and we, therefore, look upon Lord Ashley's success as the sure means of bringing into the ranks of the League large accessions of strength, both from the ranks of the manufacturers and operatives; the Monopolists will find that they have forced into our ranks many thousands who have hitherto viewed the Anti-Corn-Law movement with suspicion or indifference.

REVIEW.

The Land and the League, a Doggerel Ballad.
London, Wright.

"Poets," according to the old proverb, "succeed best in fiction;" but here is a bard risen to give the old saw the lie; his fiction beats Munchausen hollow, but his verse falls short of the insane effusions of Nat Lee, never coming up to the memorable description of poor Nat's hero:—

"He fatten'd padlocks on Antarctic food,
And drove, full butt, against the subjunctive mood."

The Anti-League rhymers opens his ballad with a description of her Majesty's visit to France, and her reception by Louis Philippe; his stanzas, however, would be more applicable to an interview between Queen Pomare and the King of the Cannibal Islands:—

"The aged king, with tenderest care,
Conducted her to land,
Where all his royal family
Embraced her on the strand.

"That aged king did gain new life,
To see our Queen his guest,
With brave Prince Albert, and full soon
He made a royal feast."

The feast is represented as a scene of bacchanalian revelry such as might become a carousal of the Ojibbeways:—

"Now flagons fill'd with choicest wine,
And meats both rich and rare,
Were spread, that such right royal guests
Right royally might fare."

"To be royal," was deemed in old times a phrase equivalent to "being more drunk than a lord;" and in that sense our bard seems to have taken it, for the after-dinner speech which he puts into the mouth of Louis Philippe surpasses in absurdity anything that was ever uttered by the Duke of Buckingham, or even Lord Stanhope himself. The bard, however, happens to be an honest fool, and by combining two dishonest excuses he unconsciously exposes the fraudulent absurdity of both. Louis Philippe thus speaks:—

"Oft have I thought, fair Queen, on all
The griefs that you disclose:
Full thirty years of grievance sore
Hath spoil'd your realm's repose.

"In jargon of philosophy,
With coldest-hearted saws,
Your senators and ministers
Have mystified its cause.

"Over-production they did blame,
And population cursed,
And poor-houses provided for Poor children to be nursed;

"Torn from their parents' natural care,
With scanty food beside,
Where, cold and comfortless in heart,
Right speedily they died.

"Lest over-population should
With over-produce meet,
And nature's wise provisions show
The legislature's cheat."

Here is a great truth unwittingly expressed. Over-population and over-production are inconsistent in terms, for "Nature's wise provisions" give the increasing powers of production to meet the increasing wants of population, and "the legislature's cheat" is simply that it interferes to prevent the exchange of industry's products for the supply of the people's wants; and, having thus interfered, it excuses itself with the double lie of "over-population" on one side, and "over-production" on the other. Production compensates population, and population compensates production; to assert that both could at the same moment co-exist in surplus, is the very consummation of human absurdity.

But let us return to the hiccupings which our bard irreverently ascribes to Louis Philippe:—

"Free Trade 'in theory' is fine,
In practice it won't bide,
Because the reciprocity
Is all upon one side.

"Look at your shipping, silk, and gloves!
Whose trade you've made more free;
Most ugly types of ruin those,
From reciprocity!"

From the poor creature who wrote these lines it would be unreasonable to expect comprehension of the meaning of a word of four syllables; it is clear that the term "reciprocity" is as mystical to him as "Abracadabra;" but if the poor fellow had taken time to inquire, he would have found that the instances which he has quoted are precisely those which most decisively establish the benefits of "Free Trade;" the silk manufacture especially has risen to become an important branch of industry, solely in consequence of the relaxations of the restrictive system effected by Mr. Huskisson.

We are not astonished to find this enemy of Free Trade a zealous advocate for repudiation, or at least for such a composition with the national creditor as would reduce the public debt to one half of its present amount. In this modest proposal he is of course but a humble follower of that signal of consistency, Sir James Graham. Since the days when the Norman barons raised an outcry against the Jews, and took advantage of the popular tumult to burn all the notes, bonds, and obligations which they had ever given for borrowed money, to the present hour escape from the just demands of creditors has been the recognised policy of the English oligarchy; at one time through Sir James Graham proposing to wipe out the debt with a sponge; at another time through Lord Mountcashel and Sir E. Knatchbull modestly demanding that the industrious portion of the community should pay their mortgages and settlements for them. Their bard proposes that both plans should be adopted, but contrives so to jumble them together as to render himself unintelligible without larger comment than we can afford, or indeed than the subject deserves.

Of the second and third parts of this ballad we can say nothing; they are unreadable; Job himself would not have patience to get through two consecutive stanzas. We must therefore dismiss the ballad with our heartiest commiseration for the printer's readers; it is not likely to have any others.

The Parliamentary and Newspaper List, published by Dawson and Son, is the most complete political analysis of Parliament and the Press which has yet been issued. It contains an accurate list of the House of Commons, with a coloured indication of the party to which each member belongs. In the newspaper list we have not only an index to the political sentiments advocated, but also an account of the number of stamps used by each journal according to the latest returns. Every Free-Trade will derive renewed hopes from consulting this list; it contains abundant proof that the strength of the good cause is on the increase; and it is particularly gratifying to find that the provincial journals of greatest circulation are those which advocate a repeal of the odious and destructive Corn Laws.

DURHAM AND THE CORN LAWS.—The County of Durham Society for Agricultural Protection, recently formed, has realized £675 19s. by the subscription of 64 persons, three-fourths of whom are well-known landowners. It may be true that "protection" is a farmers' question, but the farmers of Durham do not seem to think so.

THE FUNDS.

| | Sat. Mar. 16 | Mon. Mar. 18 | Tues. Mar. 19 | Wed. Mar. 20 | Thurs. Mar. 21 | Fri. Mar. 22 |
|-----------------------|-----------------|-----------------|------------------|-----------------|-------------------|-----------------|
| Bank Stock for ac. | 198½ | 198½ | 200 | 199½ | 200 | — |
| 3 per Ct. Red. Ann | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| 3 per Ct. Con. Ann | 98½ | 98½ | 98½ | 98½ | 99 | 98½ |
| 3½ per Ct. Red. Ann | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| 3½ per Ct. Ann. new | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ |
| Long An. Ex. 1860 | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| Cons. for Acce. . . | 98½ | 98½ | 98½ | 98½ | 99 | 98½ |
| Exc. Bills | 71 pm. | 47 pm. | 67 pm. | 70 | 71 pm. | — |
| Ind. Sds. und. 1000l | 88 5 | 85 pm. | 87 8 | 88 | 88 5 | — |
| India Stock | 285½ | 287½ | — | 289½ | 291½ | — |
| Belgian | — | 105 | — | 104½ | 104½ | — |
| Brazilian | 79½ | 83 | 82½ | 82½ | 82½ | — |
| Chilian | — | 101 | 105 | — | 104½ | — |
| Columbian Venes. | 14½ | 14½ | 14½ | 14½ | 14½ | 15 |
| Danish | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| Dutch 5 per Cent. | 101½ | 101½ | 101½ | 101½ | 102 | 102 |
| Dutch 2½ per Ct. | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| Mexican, 1837 . . | 8½ | 35½ | 35½ | 36 | 36½ | 36½ |
| Portuguese, conv. | 46½ | 40½ | 47 | 46½ | 45½ | 46½ |
| Buenos Ayres . . . | — | 38 | — | — | 37½ | — |
| Spanish 5 per Ct. | 24½ | 24½ | 24½ | 25 | 25 | 24½ |
| Do. 2 per Ct. | 36½ | 36½ | 36½ | 36½ | 36½ | 36½ |
| Peruvian | 30½ | 30 | 30½ | — | 30½ | — |

MARKETS.

CORN MARKET.

MARK-LANE, Monday, March 18.—The supply of Essex Wheat was short this morning, but there was a fair show of samples from Kent. The fine cold drying wind we have had the last day or two had not been sufficient to improve the condition much. The best dry samples were quickly taken off at fully last week's rates; but inferior qualities of English, and all descriptions of free Foreign, met a slow sale, and former prices were barely supported. The supply of Barley was short, and last week's rates were maintained. There was a good supply of Beans, and they were 1s. cheaper. No alteration in Peas. Although not a single cargo of Irish Oats had arrived up to Friday, the large quantity of 20,000 qrs. appears in the return; the whole of them having arrived in two days, Friday and Saturday. The sales to-day have been mostly confined to small parcels to country dealers. The prices of this day week were with difficulty obtained, and where vessels were on demurrage, a decline of 6d. per qr. was acceded to.

S. H. LUGGS and SON.

| Currency per Imperial measure. | | | |
|--------------------------------|------------|------------------------|------------|
| Wheat, English, Red | — | Peas, Maple | 28s to 30s |
| New | 45s to 53s | Malt, Pale Suffolk and | — |
| Do., do., Old | 52s — 61s | Norfolk | 54s — 58s |
| New, do. White | 48s — 60s | Chevalier | 60s — 62s |
| Old, do., do. | 60s — 64s | Brown | 58s — 60s |
| Dantzic | 57s — 63s | Oats, English Feed | 20s — 22s |
| Stettin | 50s — 57s | Do. Short | 21s — 23s |
| Barley, Malt | 34s — 34s | Scotch Feed | 21s — 23s |
| Distilling | 32s — 34s | Do. Potatoes | 25s — 26s |
| Grinding | 28s — 32s | Irish Feed | 19s — 20s |
| Beans, Tick | 26s — 27s | Do. Short | 20s — 22s |
| Harrow | 28s — 30s | Do. Black | 19s — 20s |
| Pigeon | 32s — 34s | Do. Galloway | 17s — 19s |
| Old Harrow | 33s — 34s | Flour, town made and | — |
| Peas, White | 28s — 30s | best country marks | 45s — 50s |
| Do., Bollers | 31s — 33s | Norfolk and Sur- | — |
| Grey | 26s — 28s | folk | 40s — 44s |

Account of CORN, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 11th to the 16th of March, 1844, both days inclusive.

| | Wheat. | Barley. | Oats. | Beans. | Peas. |
|-------------------|--------------------|---------|-----------------|--------|-------|
| English | 5751 | 2347 | 1860 | 1160 | 697 |
| Scotch | 69 | 620 | 2059 | — | — |
| Irish | — | 1497 | 19205 | — | — |
| Foreign | 1300 | 836 | — | — | — |
| | Flour, 6932 sacks. | | Malt, 5669 qrs. | | |

THE LEAGUE.

No. 27.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 30, 1844.

[3d.]

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND, £100,000.

All subscribers of £1 and upwards to the ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUND FUND, will be entitled to, and receive a copy, weekly, of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have forwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the Offices of THE LEAGUE, Newall's-buildings, Manchester, or 87, Fleet-street, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND, are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council respectfully request that their friends, in all places where committees for raising subscriptions to the £100,000 Fund have not been already formed, will proceed to their formation as soon as possible, and transmit their names to the LEAGUE Offices, Manchester.

The Council of the League would also suggest to their friends in the country, the importance of transmitting their copies of the LEAGUE newspaper, after perusal, to such parties (more especially farmers) as may be either hostile or indifferent to the question of Free Trade.

MINISTERIAL THRALDOM.

The little debate on the little question raised by Mr. Hutt, on Tuesday night, is chiefly interesting as it illustrates the position of the Ministry, and shows the extent and severity of the thralldom in which they are held by their makers and masters—the Monopolists. Colonies have been spoken of lately as part and parcel of the Mother Country. Manufacturers have been exhorted to look first, for their market, to the agriculturists at home; and then to the Colonies; and as for the rest of the world, to forget its existence. By rhetoric of this sort, the county members were coaxed into a very grumbling acquiescence in the Canada Corn Bill. There had been a previous understanding, they were told; and that, in fact, the fixed-duty law for Canada was an integral portion of the new sliding-scale bill for this country. All this seemed very strange, but there was no help; the time was too early, and the alternatives were too forbidding, for a breach; and so, Ministers had their way, with a monitory ejaculation to "Go, and sin no more."

It was a pitiful hodge-podge, this Canada Bill; looking towards Free Trade, but looking that way without moving; creating a new monopolist interest, while affecting to abate monopoly; and strengthening the sliding-scale policy by a partial application of the fixed-duty principle. Moreover, it related just to one of our colonies, and no more. The law exists as an anomaly, a singularity in legislation, for which no corresponding singularity of circumstances can be made out with any semblance of plausibility. If a wise measure, why not extend it to all our colonies? If an unwise measure, why tolerate its existence for any colony? So argued common sense and Mr. Hutt. His proposition was to put the rest of our colonies on the same footing as Canada. Mr. Gladstone and Lord Sandon put forth the usual diversity of answers made by puzzled men who are afraid or ashamed to tell the truth; they contended that corn would come in, and therefore it must be stopped; and that corn would not come in, and therefore ought not to be allowed; and they affected to be much alarmed for the reason that the agriculturists would be alarmed without reason; the upshot of all being plainer than any words could have made it, the unspoken truth, "Our masters, the corn lords, will not let us do this; Shylock holds us to our land."

The whole thing was, in itself, trifling and trumpery; a mere chip in porridge. The decision of the great Free-Trade Question can neither be advanced nor retarded by these very subordinate incidental discussions. Mr. Hutt also laboured under the disadvantage of having his proposed extension encumbered by the manifold incongruities of the original measure. Mr. Gladstone twitted him with this; and wanted to know whether India and Australia were to have a 3s. import duty as well as Canada;

thus ingeniously converting the faults of the Government measure into an obstacle to its extension. But, although we have called the question itself trifling and trumpery, we cannot apply those terms to the qualities of consistency and independence by which an Administration ought to be characterized. Lord Stanley and Mr. Gladstone must have felt how much they compromised themselves by their opposition to the motion, and by the excuses they were reduced to devise for that opposition. They are both high-spirited men, his lordship especially, and must have been painfully conscious of the degrading work devolved upon them. Sir Robert Peel is a cruel leader and coadjutor in emergencies of this description. Like a cunning manager of a theatre, he reserves for himself the great and graceful parts; but what cares he (the theatrical manager, we mean) for the wounded pride of his gentlemanly subordinates, who have to do the chain-dance, or propitiate the grumbling gods? He orders them to go on and say something; and they comply, with burning cheeks and indignant hearts. Was Mr. Hutt's motion not worthy the interposition of the Premier? Or did he not choose, even indirectly, in his own person, to confess of what a subjugated Government he is the nominal head? We will not speculate on motives. Anyhow, the job was done; and so done as that all the world may see how unrelentingly Ministers are held to their allegiance to the Majesty of Landlordry.

Be it so; our aim is not for a bit-by-bit reform of the laws against Trade, Commerce, and Labour. Were the landlords less tyrannical, and the Ministry less enslaved, there might be sundry half-measures and compromises that would indefinitely postpone the coming triumph of a Free-Trade policy. There might also be some reliance on the readiness of Ministers to seize occasions of doing a little in the application of the principles which they hold as abstract truth. The power that is over them will not, it appears, tolerate any such dalliance with the right. They must consult even the most preposterous apprehensions and morbid "sensitiveness" of their masters. No confidence is reposed in them. Be the occasion great or small, they must evince themselves true to the very letter of their bond. Now, we care little about the exhibition which the agricultural interest, as it claims to be called, makes of itself. The readiness to be thrown into a panic at the mere shadow of an ear of wheat thrown across the waters of a wide ocean, is terrible testimony both to incapacity and rapacity. But we know the spirit we have to deal with. The condition of the Slave-ministry is the more impressive spectacle of the day. That is enough to touch the heart of charity; and we wonder that Tories, bound to them by political opinions and sympathies, and not interested in the gains of Monopoly, should not make some effort to rescue the honour of their party, and the persons of their leaders, from this most degrading vassallage.

"No compromise" is our policy, as well as that of the food-monopolists. The firmer they affect to stand, the more certain is their fall. The great peril of the Free-Trade cause has hitherto been in the many interests and influences that seemed likely to combine for some patchwork and temporary settlement. Now, every public man must take a side. The demarcation of Free-Trader and Monopolist grows broader and broader, and the indications are proportionately strong, that the only settlement must be made on the plain and broad principle. For helping on this consummation, we thank the Protectionists, however unintentional their aid. Let them but continue to hold their slaves tight enough, and we shall be as secure from treachery and compromise, as we are, in that case, certain of eventual success.

POSITION OF THE GOVERNMENT.

King-maker Warwick was but a faint prototype of Cabinet-maker Richmond: the old baron allowed some show of liberty to his royal puppets; but the modern Duke holds his Ministerial nominees in such close duress, that they seem to have lost the power of independent action. His Grace is a hard taskmaster: not only does he hold those whom he has enslaved in rigid fetters, but he constantly keeps pulling at the chain in order to remind them of their thralldom. Pitiable, indeed, is the situation of those who have submitted to his yoke; the Premier sits sullen, and performs the ungracious task of preserving ruinous Monopoly in desperate silence; the Vice-President of the Board of Trade scarcely conceals his contempt for the sophisms he is compelled to utter; the self-satisfied stolidity of the Chancellor of the Exchequer does not save him from twinges of conscience when he finds that his system of taxation must gradually exhaust the springs of industry; hostile tariffs spread gloom through the Foreign Office, and West Indian complaints disturb the complacency of the Colonial Department. Placing himself in the van, as the representative and leader of the close oligarchy to which the manifold iniquity of the late general election has transferred the Government of the country, the Duke of Richmond enacts the part of Lord Protector with a calm consciousness of power which Cromwell himself might have envied. At his behest, the gambling of the rich is protected, and the food of the poor onerously taxed; he is the recognised patron of speculation in Newmarket and the Corn-market; the preserver of game and of gaming; the select dictator to whom the whole power of his party is confided. The Ministers, conscious of this bondage, exert every artifice to hide their thralldom from themselves and others; they will fight no battle at his command—their only care is to shuffle over the day of strife. Committees of inquiry are refused; inconvenient debates are set aside by raising some point of order, as on Mr. Elphinstone's motion, or by emptying the House, as was done when Mr. Ricardo exposed the absurdity of the cry for reciprocity. It is found to be inconvenient to recognise a truth in the abstract as conscience dictates, and to refuse its behests in the concrete at the dictation of a master.

We are not of those who complain of the use which the ducal dictator makes of his power. We do not very deeply lament his coming forward to the succour of the blacklegs of Newmarket, Epsom, and Goodwood; it is desirable to have it known that laws restricting vice or folly were never intended to interfere with aristocratic amusements:—

"Virtue, we grant, is now an idle bonst;
But shall the dignity of vice be lost?"

We could wish, however, that this tenderness to patrician failings were accompanied by some sympathy with plebeian feelings; and, if laws are to be relaxed in special cases of unequal pressure, we regret that there was no exceptional legislation for the pauperized labourers of Sussex.

To escape from the realities of thralldom, the Ministers have taken to abstractions; everything is now viewed "in the abstract;" in other words, the truth of principles is conceded, and their application refused. Now, this is, in fact, declaring that the adversaries of Free Trade are resolved for the future to rest the support of Monopoly either on political or physical force, and to place the issue of the question simply on material strength. During the debate on Mr. Cobden's motion, it was positively ludicrous to witness the dismay with which the Monopolists looked upon every speaker getting up on their side after Mr. Gladstone, and their open reliance, not on the strength of arguments, but on the number of votes. The anxiety to evade discussion was exhibited just as strongly on the question of the probate duties, and also on the question of reciprocity. It would seem as if the only answer that could be given to reason and argument was, "The Duke of Richmond wills it, and there must be an end of the matter."

In political parties it is quite sufficient to have the command of a majority; but the error made in the Government of this country is the supposing that the great bulk of the nation cares one straw for party and its objects. The Duke of Richmond rules Sir Robert Peel, simply because Sir Robert Peel consented to take office on a party tenure, with little respect to the will of the Sovereign, and with still less to the voice of the people in the matter:—

"His towering spirit now is broke,
His neck is bended to the yoke;"

and we doubt whether he has sufficient energy to work out his emancipation. At present, all his parliamentary tactics are directed to one object,—the getting over of the session with as little discussion and trouble as possible, trusting to the chances of time for something that will compel the oligarchy to loosen their hold on himself, or enable the people to effect his and their deliverance. There have been times when he seemed to have mustered up sufficient courage to assert free agency;

"But as a dog committed close
For some offence by chance breaks loose,
And quits the clog, but all in vain,
He still drags after him the chain,"

so the Premier is dragged back to his bondage by the heavy chain of county members in his rear, and is soon fastened to the Richmond clog again.

There are, however, ominous signs of danger abroad. The conversion of the Three-and-a-half per.

Cents. is a proof that the rate of interest on capital has been depreciated, and this has even been the forerunner of a lowering of the remuneration of industry. Capital itself is but accumulated industry; it is an aggregate of past labour; its fall in value must bring down other labour with it. All the revenue derived from industry is either a remuneration for the accumulated labour which has collected the elements of industrial reproduction, or a remuneration for the labour actually bestowed on the working up of these elements. In other words, industrial revenue consists of the profits of the capitalist and the wages of labour. When the profits of the capitalist decrease in any branch of industry or in a nation generally, there arises a tendency in capital to migrate and seek elsewhere for sufficient profits; the accumulated labour is transferable: it may be fixed in any place or devoted to any purpose. On the contrary, the operative mass—daily augmenting by the natural course of population, living from hand to mouth—having no means of migration, is equally unprepared and unable to resist any diminution of wages which must follow from a falling off in the industrial revenue. Capital has taken as large a share of the reduction as it can well bear; and the next commercial crisis which supervenes from a bad harvest, or from any other cause, must fall directly and immediately upon the wages of industry.

The question seen distinctly at the extreme of the political horizon, but which may come upon us with perilous rapidity, is the adequacy of the wages-fund or industrial revenue of the country to meet the increasing demands made upon it by an increasing population. The policy of the Duke of Richmond and the oligarchy is directed to diminishing the wages-fund: the income-tax is paid out of it, the customs are paid out of it, the excise is mainly paid out of it, and the profits of monopoly are exclusively paid out of it. It is evident that the industrial revenue is simply the difference in price between the raw material and the manufactured article; and this difference is as much diminished by enhancing the price of the raw material as by lowering the price of the manufactured goods. But food is the most important raw material in every kind of production, and a tax upon food is consequently a direct reduction of industrial revenue, that is, of the fund from which wages are to be paid.

The Duke of Richmond and his associates have attempted to create a diversion in their favour by appealing to the prejudices of a portion of the operatives, and joining with them in the complaint of the increasing disproportion between work and wages. No doubt Sir R. Peel, Sir J. Graham, and Mr. Gladstone contemplated this flirtation between the monopolists and trades' unionists at first with something like satisfaction; but there is just as little doubt that they now view it with alarm, and would very gladly evade this most inconvenient of all discussions. But the recent vote of the House of Commons on Lord Ashley's motion must force the question of wages into discussion; and gladly would we put the question of Free Trade on such an issue. The 'Ten Hours' Bill will make a large reduction of industrial revenue; its promoters have never inquired whether the industrial revenue of the country is in a condition to bear such a reduction, and have not even thought of the means by which the deficiency can be supplied. But though these questions seem not to be discussed by self-constituted delegates, or by those economic philanthropists who hope to acquire a character for benevolence at the expense of other people, they will be very earnestly and practically examined by the operative masses of the North of England. It is not very long since they had experience of what "working short time" really means; another commercial crisis would renew the bitter instruction, and give them fewer hours of labour than have been charitably ordained by Lord Ashley; we doubt whether the results would ensure public gratitude to the authors of the catastrophe.

The embarrassment of the Ministry arises not merely from their being pledged to monopoly, but also from the fresh difficulties which the monopolists create around them in the mere wantonness of power. Thanks to Lord Ashley, the question of wages has been placed in such a position before the country that it must be taken into consideration, and that right speedily: the Legislature has begun to tamper directly with the fund from which wages are paid, and has thus rendered it necessary to inquire what are the abatements to which it is already subject, in order to see whether it can bear the proposed diminution without danger.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

THE FREE-TRADE MIRROR OF PARLIAMENT FOR THE SESSION 1844.

Eighth Week, ending Saturday, March 30.

We were under the necessity of leaving the important proceedings of Friday week unrecorded in our last "Mirror;" and as every man who takes the slightest interest in the progress, either of commercial freedom or of the restriction of the hours of factory labour, is now well acquainted with the results of that night's debate, we shall advert to the matter very briefly.

The first victory which Lord Ashley gained was on a kind of preliminary tactical point, though substantially it amounted to an affirmation of the principle of "Ten Hours." It was on the question of the definition of the hours of NIGHT, which, by consequence, would settle those of the DAY. On Friday week the question was tried again, on arriving at the eighth clause of the FACTORIES Bill; and here the debate was on the formal, deliberate question, whether the hours of daily labour should be "Twelve," or "Ten." There was nothing very new urged on either side; the same arguments for the protection of the Factory Operative, on the ground of humanity, were met by the same allegations that this restriction on the working of machinery would destroy the manufacturer's PROFIT, and therefore would annihilate the FUND out of which the operative receives his wages.

There were, however, one or two speeches made on Friday week worth notice. Mr. CARDWELL, the member for Clithero, who seconded the address on the opening of the session, kept up the reputation which he then acquired by a very excellent speech against the "Ten Hours." He spoke immediately behind the Ministerial benches; he was listened to with marked attention; and Sir Robert Peel, Sir James Graham, and other members of the administration, testified, by looks, smiles, and cheers, how gratefully they felt the relief which his speech imparted. He pointed to Belgium, with its beds of coal, ready to work our machinery, now fast exporting there; and he warned the House, that if they laid restrictions on English capital, it would quickly follow the machinery. We hope some Free-Trade member of the House will get Mr. Cardwell's speech off by heart, and speak it, almost word for word, in favour of the motion to be proposed by Mr. VILLIERS, after Easter, for the total repeal of the Corn Laws.

Another speech was spoken on Friday week, which was striking, as being by far the cleverest, and, in many respects, apparently the most philosophical, reasonable, and rational which has been delivered in favour of the "Ten Hours." If any justification could be made out for a Free-Trader voting in favour of the limitation of the "Ten Hours," that speech did it. Mr. Charles Buller delivered it; and, as he is as cool as he is clever, he doubtless was perfectly conscious of the whole tendency of what he said. Certainly, no man can deny that there are evils connected with factory toil; none can deny that it would be a good thing if every working man in Great Britain could earn more money in fewer hours, and thus have more leisure for healthful recreation and moral and intellectual improvement; nor will the manufacturers refuse the boon claimed for them by Mr. Charles Buller, that of a reduction or abolition of the duties on raw materials, especially those on wool and cotton, or refuse to admit that they would thereby be better enabled to compete with foreign rivals, and therefore be somewhat better enabled to bear a reduction in the hours of labour. But if there be Free-Traders in the House of Commons, who vote for the "Ten Hours" on the double ground of humanity to the working classes, and in the hope that the limitation of the hours of labour will compel the repeal of the Corn Laws, they had better take the Easter holidays to think the matter over. It is quite possible that by restraining labour, before commerce is set free, we might bring about a state of things in which the repeal of the Corn Laws would prove as valueless as the note of a broken bank.

People are whispering that the Whigs who supported Lord Ashley were actuated rather by a desire to damage the Government than by any sincere conviction on the subject. We hope this is not true. We should be sorry to believe that such men as Lord John Russell or Sir George Grey were animated by any other than honest though mistaken motives in supporting Lord Ashley. If there were any who acted otherwise, they received a well-merited lecture from Mr. Ward on Friday week, who, in an honest and straightforward speech, characterised by his accustomed ability, rebuked the Whigs for their mistake in lending themselves to the support of so dangerous an experiment on the capital, the commerce, the trade, and the wages of the country.

Our readers are aware that Ministers were defeated on Friday week, by 186 to 183; and that again another division took place, when Lord Ashley was defeated by 188 to 181. By these two divisions the House was placed in the position of refusing to permit the factory operatives to work so long as "twelve" hours, or of limiting them to so short a period as "ten" hours. Under these circumstances, Sir James Graham asked till Monday to consider what should be done.

On Monday, he made a long and very able speech, to a crowded House. The decisions of the House appeared to point to "Eleven" hours as the proper duration of the factory day. But against the adoption of this compromise was the fact, that instead of putting it down, it would strengthen the Ten Hours' agitation; while, at the same time, it would be almost as fatal as that of "Ten," to the manufacturing interests of the country, and therefore to the interests of the operatives themselves. Mr. Charles Buller, on the previous Friday, had spoken of a new social state of things requiring the application of new legislative principles. Were they to act on such a dictum, it would be the commencement of a JACK CADE system of legislation. With all their respect for the opinion of the House of Commons, as expressed by a majority, Ministers not only stood firm, but had been confirmed in their conviction that a limitation to less than Twelve Hours would be fatal to the entire interests of the country, including the operatives themselves; and therefore, to get out of their difficulty, they proposed to drop the present Bill, and bring in a new one, containing the Twelve Hours, as before.

Member after member rose, in great indignation, to ask what Sir James Graham meant by "Jack Cade;" and Lord Ashley adopted the title, for he said, very truly, that the insurrection which was headed by Jack Cade was caused by people writhing under burdens too heavy to be borne. But this was rather unlucky of Lord Ashley. No doubt, not a few of the—"Rebellious hinds, the filth and scum of Kent," who followed "Mr. Cade" (as Charles Buller, with most respectful gravity, termed him), were animated by that

"rebellion of the belly," so vividly depicted in "Coriolanus." But these were others of Mr. Cade's followers who had notions somewhat similar to those advocated by the Northern Star at the present day. Dick the Butcher says to Jack,—

"My lord, when shall we go to Cheapside, and take up commodities on our bills?"

To which Jack—we beg pardon—Mr. Cade, replies—

"Marry, presently."

Now, we dare avouch that not a few of your unscrupulous Chartist disturbers of Anti-Corn-Law meetings, not being very fond of earning their subsistence by independent, honest, free, unfettered industry, as becomes Englishmen, would prefer being led up to London (and if led by Lord Ashley, so much the better), in order that they might "go to Cheapside, and take up commodities on their bills." But this is a system of credit of which the shopkeepers in Cheapside would be the last to approve, and it is a sort of Free Trade which is not taught by the Anti-Corn-Law League.

Meantime Lord Ashley, who was very stout on Monday night, has shrunk from "the sound himself" had made." On Wednesday he announced that he would not oppose Ministers in bringing in their new bill—which, in fact, will be almost identical with the old one—but that after Easter he will take a discussion on it. The meaning of all this is plain. Lord Ashley has become afraid of the consequences of his success. The greatest number of members who divided on the question of ten or twelve hours was 368—the rest of the 659 members of the House being absent. By postponing the discussion till after Easter, some five or six hundred members will be able to come to town; Lord Ashley's debate will be a sham one; and all this talk about humanity and so forth will evaporate under the crushing weight of a majority of sixty or seventy, by which the "Ten Hours" will be rejected.

If all the thinking working population of this country do not now see where their true interest lies, they stand lower in the scale of intelligence or of honesty than we are disposed to give them credit for. Ministers have distinctly declared that the Corn Law prevents the adoption of the "Ten Hours;" in other words, Monopoly makes the working man cheap; Free Trade would make him dear, because it would increase the demand for his labour. Let them "think on these things."

On Tuesday, the following motion was discussed in the House of Commons:—

"Mr. Hutt,—That this House resolve itself into a committee of the whole House on the Corn Laws, for the purpose of considering the following resolution:—'That it is expedient that corn imported into the United Kingdom from the British possessions in South Africa, India, and Australasia, be made subject to the same duty which is levied on corn imported into the United Kingdom from Canada.'"

To the credit of the Opposition side of the House, they successfully prevented repeated manoeuvres on the Ministerial side with a view to "count out;" and so Mr. Hutt was enabled to have both a discussion and a division. Without disrespect to Mr. Hutt, we may remark that his motion was not one which Free-Traders need care much about. Mr. Ewart very justly observed that we have got beyond such motions; the question is not now whether corn shall come in from our colonies, but from all quarters of the world. Yet it was an additional means of compelling Ministers to confess the utter weakness, futility, and meanness of the Corn Laws. Mr. Gladstone and Lord Stanley both resisted the motion, not because it would do any injury to our home interests, but because it would create a panic amongst "fussy and fidgety men." "Panic," we are told, comes from "PAN," a heathen deity, represented with two horns, a goat's beard, a goat's tail, and goat's feet; and this may be a fit enough emblem of our stupid monopolist agricultural interest. He is said to have accompanied Bacchus to India, and, by uttering a loud scream, which was repeated by the echoes, he scared away the enemy. Englishmen may emigrate; in silence, on the plains of the Cape of Good Hope, or of Australia, they may sow their corn; and in solitude they may eat it. But the moment that, animated by the energy and the industry of Englishmen, they say to one another—"We have kith and kindred in whirling Manchester; many-sounding Birmingham holds our brothers and our sons; tinkling Sheffield has our lineage and our blood; teeming Leeds and Glasgow acknowledge our relationship—let us send them corn, and they will send us clothing and cutlery and crockery; and on both sides of the globe shall be heard spoken the English tongue, and seen the English civilization, while British commerce belts the globe!"—The English agricultural god, PAN, listens, with his goat's ears, till he hears the word "corn" at the sound of it, he screams "panic!" Ministers act as his echoes; and the whole confederacy of monopolists are in a wilder commotion than a forest of baboons at the first sound of a musket-shot. Yes! it is right and fitting that English science, industry, skill—nay, existence, should be crushed, rather than their graces of Richmond, Cleveland, and Northumberland should have their nerves disturbed by a "panic!"

MEETINGS.

GREAT MEETING AT COVENT GARDEN THEATRE.

The customary aggregate weekly meeting of the members and supporters of the National Anti-Corn-Law League was held on Wednesday evening last, at Covent Garden Theatre. The attendance was to the full as great as we have noticed upon former occasions, and not a whit less enthusiastic was the reception which greeted each speaker upon his advance to the table for the purpose of addressing the audience.

At seven o'clock Mr. Milner Gibson, M.P., Mr. Cobden, M.P., Mr. Bright, M.P., Mr. Glaborne, M.P., Mr. W. J. Fox, and other of the most influential members of the Council of the League, made their appearance upon the stage, when their entrée was, as upon former occasions, the signal for loud and long, phew-phew-phew. Amongst the gentlemen present upon the stage at the time, we observed

T. Milner Gibson, Esq., M.P.; Dr. Bowring, M.P.; John Cobden, Esq., M.P.; John Bright, Esq., M.P.; William Glaborne, Esq., M.P.; H. W. Thompson, Esq., M.P.; Thomas Thompson, Esq., M.P.; William Thompson, Esq., M.P.; the Lord Provost of Edinburgh; George Thompson, Esq.; James Thompson, Esq.; Samuel Lucas, Esq.; P. A. Thompson, Esq.; and Union, Esq.; W. A. Williams, Esq.; J. Coleman, Esq., United States; Henry Storer, Esq.; A. Scholfield, Esq., of Rochdale; C. J. Hardman, Esq., of Hastings; A. Rose, Esq.; N. Overbury, Esq., of Westbury, Wilts; Jesse Goldsmith, Esq., of Trowbridge, Wilts; Henry Lloyd Morgan, Esq.; Count St. Monetta; Count Fé; J. Wynne, Esq., of Wolverhampton; Professor Von Raumer; W. Tooke, Esq.; Joseph Alnsworth, Esq., Bolton; Wm. Tait, Esq., of Edinburgh; A. M. Biddell, Esq.; Henry Briggs, Esq., Wakefield; Duncan Macgillivray, Esq., Glasgow; Wm. Thornburrow, Esq.; Henry Ashworth, Esq., of Bolton; John Richards, Esq., Birmingham; Major-General Briggs; E. Wright, Esq., Boston, United States; — Cressell, Esq.; George Borrett, Esq., Southampton; J. Mollett, Esq.; J. B. Scott, Esq., of Manchester; W. Corry, Esq.; John Hunter, Esq.; John Bickers, Esq.; Martin Thackeray, Esq.; George Ridout, Esq.; George Crawford Heath, Esq.; Professor Kay, &c.

In the absence of the Hon. C. P. Villiers, the chair was occupied by Mr. M. Gibson, M.P. for Manchester.

Mr. SAUL read the minutes of the last meeting, which, upon the motion of the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, seconded by PETER DIXON, Esq., were unanimously confirmed.

The CHAIRMAN, who on coming forward was received with vociferous applause, said:—Ladies and gentlemen, I am proud at having been invited to take the chair at one of these important meetings; but at the same time I cannot help expressing my regret at the circumstances which have induced our friends to ask me to preside. First, our able and excellent friend, Mr. George Wilson, who has so frequently presided at these meetings, is unavoidably absent in consequence of indisposition; and my friend, Mr. Villiers, who would have taken his place this evening, is also absent, I believe, in consequence of slight indisposition. I am, then, most proud to take upon myself, by invitation, the duties of the chair, though I feel that I cannot discharge them in the same able manner in which they have been hitherto discharged by those able and experienced gentlemen. (Loud cheers.) We are so well acquainted with the object which we have in view in assembling together within the walls of this theatre, and our whole proceedings are so well understood, that, perhaps, it is unnecessary for the Chairman to state to the meeting the object which we desire to attain; but if there be any here who may not have a clear idea of what is the end that the Anti-Corn-Law League desires to attain, I will simply state that the object we have in view is to accomplish the total and unconditional repeal of the Corn Laws, and of all other monopolies. (Loud and continued cheers.) Dr. Horsley, Bishop of Rochester, once said that the people had nothing to do with the laws but to obey them. (Ironical cheers.) We advocate obedience to the laws while they exist upon the statute-book; but we claim the right as free citizens, as we feel it also to be our duty, to endeavour, by intelligent reasoning, to induce the Legislature to place those laws upon the basis of justice, and a due regard to the rights of both the rich and the poor. (Loud cheers.) It is in this spirit that we assemble, as I understand, upon these occasions, to discuss the Corn-Law question: we do so because we believe the Corn Law to be an interference with our civil rights; we believe that it is an unjustifiable obstruction to trade; and we believe that it is maintained for the interest of a favoured few at the expense of the great body of the community. (Loud cheers.) We desire not to interfere with agriculture; we only ask others not to interfere with trade. (Renewed cheers.) We contend that merchants have as good a right to supply the market with food by the operations of trade as farmers have to supply the market with food by the operations of agriculture. (Cheers.) All we desire is freedom to industry; and we believe that, in advocating that great cause, we are advocating the true interests of all classes of her Majesty's subjects. (Loud cheers.) I beg now to introduce to your notice Mr. Gisborne, member of Parliament for the borough of Nottingham. (Great applause.)

Mr. GIBBORNE, M.P., on advancing to the table, was received with great applause. He spoke as follows:—Certainly, Mr. Chairman, the unabated zeal of the Anti-Corn-Law League, and the unabated sympathy exhibited by the public in this subject, may well lead you and me to form somewhat brighter anticipations of its result than we should be likely to feel in another sphere, in which it is our lot from time to time to move (cheers); but, with respect to myself, I feel that I might be more usefully employed in combating this question at a market-ordinary among farmers, than in addressing an approving audience at Covent-garden. (Cheers.) We get into very bad habits from addressing one-sided audiences. (Cheers and laughter.) We always fancy we are carrying everything before us. (Cheers and renewed laughter.) Now, I do not allude of course to such persons as the noble earl who presided over you here last week. (Loud cheers.) That noble person takes his part stoutly, and maintains it in the most hostile audience that exists in these realms. (Cheers.) He is in the habit of expressing and of maintaining principles which we are here to advocate, before an audience composed of landowners and lawyers and bishops. (Cheers.) Now, you will all agree, I am sure, that the landowners either are, or think themselves to be, interested parties; and for the rest, as far as my experience goes, if I had to look for the persons who possessed the grossest ignorance upon this subject, I should look for them amongst those clothed in lawn and ermine. (Loud cheers.) Nor, when I say that we get into bad habits by addressing one-sided audiences, do I allude to Mr. Cobden. (Cheers.) He is able to take his part before any audience in the world, wherever it may be opposed to him. (Loud cheers.) We see him from time to time among us, in the House of Commons: he is hardly like a member of our system, but he comes into our orbit like a comet (loud cheers and laughter),—like a comet, making us see his brightness, conscious of his power, and leaving no doubt upon our minds that, when the great interest to which he has devoted himself shall allow him, he will take that high position in political strife which he has acquired in this great struggle; and it will always be one of the features of this struggle that it will have given to a calico-printer, known some years ago for nothing save successful industry and domestic virtue, a place which shall be the more honourable because unconnected with personal ambition or personal aggrandisement. (Loud and prolonged cheering.) Neither, Mr. Chairman, do I, of course, allude to you in these remarks, but rather to myself and some smaller luminaries.—If, indeed, we be luminaries at all (a laugh)—who, hardly able to glimmer among the clouds of gossip, could have to exhibit our lesser lights in this noble and stirring cause, your approbation. (Loud cheers and laughter.) Sir, we must be much more sanguine, but, at the same time, I think not quite so well informed a man as I am, who can expect to state any new argument upon this subject, or even to put any old arguments in a new light. (Hear, hear.) But there is one point which I have happened to see, though, no doubt, it has been referred to a hundred times over,—which I think has been a little less alluded to in connexion with this question than many other points; and it is one which, as I am a farmer, naturally presents itself to my mind: it is this:—What have manufactures done for me as a farmer, and what have I, as a farmer, done for manufactures? (Cheers.) In order to decide this question, I go back to the time of my grandfather. (A laugh.) I think that is a fair time to go back to, and I will tell you why:—it is because, if I look at the manufacturing and the agricultural interests at that time, I find that they were in about the same state of improvement. (Hear.) I think the old plough and the flail are the fair counterpart of the spinning-wheel and the old loom which used to stand in the cellar of the labourer's cottage. Now, in my grandfather's time, he got for his quarter of wheat, I believe, about two and a half such shirts, probably, as I now wear (a laugh); at this time I get a dozen such for a quarter of wheat (cheers); and therefore it is that I say manufactures have done something for me in this instance. Now, I should not like to pry into such matters, but I rather believe there is a kindred article of female wear—(cheers, and prolonged laughter.) I will make a "shift" to get through the argument presently. (Renewed laughter.) Well, I believe, with respect to that article, that the same proportion would apply. (Cheers.) I may begin with the farmer's family, and may dress every one of them from head to foot, and I shall still find the same proportion apply. Then, having dressed his family, I go to the furniture of his house, and there, I believe, the argument will be stronger, and that I shall get for my wheat an infinitely greater proportion of furniture than my grandfather got before me. (Cheers.) Then as to the implements of my trade; if I go to the Sheffield manufacturers, I shall get seven or eight times as many sickles, scythes, and axes for a quarter of wheat as my grandfather before me would have got. (Cheers.) Perhaps some of you may be conversant with farming tools; now I could follow the argument through with almost every tool that the farmer uses. I say, then, that the manufacturer does me a great deal of direct good; I am not going to allude here to the indirect good which, as a customer, he does me, though in that respect also he does me a great deal of good. (Cheers.) I need not state the other part of the case; but it is evident, if they give me more for my quarter of wheat than they gave my ancestors and forefathers, of course I give them less in return for their goods than my ancestors and forefathers gave them. (Cheers.) That, I am sorry to say, would apply to one of the most material articles in farming and in the farmer's expenditure, as well as in the articles which I have already mentioned, namely, to labour. (Cheers.) I get more labour now for my quarter of wheat than my ancestors ever got before. (Cheers.) I may say that there are only two articles of farming expenditure to which this argument and these proportions would not apply, and these are rent and taxes. (Cheers.) Now, I think if a less wise man than Lemuel Gulliver had happened to be dropped in the island of Great Britain instead of the island of Laputa, and were acquainted with all these circumstances, that he would have been at no loss to determine who made the laws of this country. (Cheers and laughter.) Another point, which he would have been at no loss to determine either, would be, who profited by large expenditure in this country (cheers); and I have certainly one great quarrel with the agricultural interest, and that is, that they have always been in favour of extravagant expenditure. (Cheers.) Some gentlemen cheer—I hope they will not be offended at what I am going to say next—but I really think that you Londoners are just as bad (cheers and laughter): almost every one of you is very fond of a great deal of pageantry, and of large expenditure; and as soon as a man attempts to curtail the public expenditure, you meet him with a hostile feeling, and call his savings "candle-ends" and "cheese-parings." (Cheers and laughter.) Now, seeing that the manufacturers have done so much for the farmers, I must say I think it nothing more than fair play that they should call upon the farmers to do something for them (cheers), and that they should say, "If you either won't or can't do that for us, why do you prevent those doing it who will and who can do it?" (Cheers.) But the agricultural interest, or at least those gentlemen who call themselves the agricultural interest—for I am a farmer and have some small interest in agriculture, and I know that I have suffered a good deal under their legislation—this self-styled agricultural interest says, "No, we will do nothing either one way or the other." (Cheers.) Now, we had some talk the other night in the House of Commons about Jack Cade legislation. I call this Friar Tuck legislation (loud cheers and laughter); and if you will give me leave I'll tell you why I so call it. I was reading a few days ago, an account of Robin Hood and his followers, which states that upon one occasion they had taken a very great spoil, and appointed Friar Tuck to make a law for its distribution. When that law appeared, it was evident to every one of them that, under it, the friar himself would get by far the largest share. Now, public opinion was against the holy man. (Great laughter and cheers.) There was an anti-distribution-law league formed against him. (Renewed laughter and cheers.) But he met them boldly and candidly; he said, "For whose benefit are laws made?" And then taking the opportunity—as is sometimes very convenient—to answer his own question, he said, "First, for the benefit of those who make them, and afterwards, it's as it may happen." (Loud cheers and laughter.) That was not all his answer; he went on to say, "Was not I the lawmaker in this last instance, and shall I not benefit by my own law?" (Renewed cheers and laughter.) Well, he was a very straightforward fellow (cheers); but I am sorry to say that I can find only one very straightforward statesman of the Friar Tuck school; that one statesman is Sir Edward Knatchbull. (Cheers and laughter.) He defended the Corn Laws in a manly way. (A laugh.) He said they were necessary in order to enable such gentlemen as himself to keep their station in society. I really think I never heard anything so unjust in my life as the outcry raised against Sir Edward Knatchbull for making that statement: why, you blamed the only sincere man of the whole party. (Great laughter.) Directly he came forward, every one set himself against him and began to abuse him; now, I have always respected him for it. (Cheers and laughter.) The rest of the party used quite different language. They said to us when we advocated the repeal of the Corn Laws, "Oh; but you take a very narrow view of the subject; you are just able to make out that 2 and 2 make 4: that is a proposition which we don't absolutely deny, but still it is one which a wise and far-seeing statesman must take with great qualifications." (Loud cheers and great laughter.) "There are reasons of state, and you don't take a comprehensive view of all the interests of the country." Now, as I am unable to understand how taking a comprehensive view of all the interests of the country can result in giving a great advantage to one interest over all others, I own myself at once to be totally unable to argue with these far-seeing statesmen. (Cheers.) I admit at once that I can get no further than the simple proposition that 2 and 2 make 4, and I really do not believe that I shall get beyond that, at least in the matter of the Corn Law, till my dying day. (Loud cheers.) I have a particular dislike to gentlemen who meet the question of the Corn Laws in this way, because they not only wrong us by it, but they try to throw dust in our eyes at the same time. I would much rather endure Sir E. Knatchbull's opposition than that of other members of the Cabinet, because with him we know exactly what we have to meet: but with respect to the others it is impossible to bring them to any fixed point upon which we can answer them so as to settle the matter in a comprehensible manner; and that this is a subject which should be put upon comprehensible grounds, I think no one in this vast assembly will attempt to deny. (Cheers.) I don't know whether you are aware, but many of you no doubt know, that when young men enter a University they have a sort of small preliminary examination which they call their "little-go;" now, we had a "little-go" last night in the House of Commons about the Corn Laws. (Cheers and laughter.) Last year we let in corn from Canada upon certain conditions. Now, I am, I believe, a very sincere Corn-Law repealer; but I voted against letting in that corn, for I did not want to set up a Corn-Law interest in Canada—I did not want to give the Duke of Buckingham a strong ally upon the banks of the St. Lawrence. (Loud cheers.)—I did not want to encourage the Canadians to make a Corn Law for themselves, which was one of the conditions upon which we let their corn enter our ports. (Cheers.) The condition was, that if we let their corn into this country they should not let corn into their country without paying a duty. I disapproved of that, right or wrong, and therefore I voted against it. (Cheers.) Last night a similar proposition was made by a friend of mine (Mr. Huft), a most excellent, honest, and sincere man; if he have not already addressed you here, I hope that some night, ere long, you may have the benefit of profiting by his enlightened sentiments. (Cheers.) He proposed to extend this Canadian Corn Law to some other colonies. Well, I saw no reason for voting for such an extension. It so happened that nobody else of my party took similar views with myself, so that I found myself walking into the old lobby of the House of Commons surrounded by those who call themselves "the great landed interest of the country." (A laugh.) Certainly they glared at me a good deal with wondering eyes. I believe they thought I was going to wheel round about, and that I had got my left shoulder forward already. (A laugh.) But when they asked me why I voted with them, I answered in these words:—"I voted against the tinkering last year when it came from the Tory side of the House, and I thought it but consistent to vote against the patching this year, though it comes from the Liberal side of the House." (Cheers.) I am not one who thinks that the Corn Laws can ever be settled, or that they can be satisfactorily amended, by any of those tinkering or patchings (tremendous cheers); and I hope that the time may not be very far distant—but I will say a word about that just now—when we shall be able to deal with the Corn Laws upon a much more comprehensive principle. (Cheers.) Now we've had—(a voice, "Friday night?"). Didn't I hear some gentleman say, "Friday night?" Well, he is a sort of a prophet, because he has anticipated me in that to which I was going to advert. I was going to say that we have had another Corn-Law discussion,—I mean the Ten Hours' Bill. That is a Corn-Law question; but it does not suit gentlemen upon either side to argue it as a Corn-Law question in the House of Commons. (Loud cheers.) The advocates of the Ten Hours' Bill cannot argue it as a Corn-Law question for fear of losing many of their supporters, and the advocates of a longer period of labour cannot argue it as a Corn-Law question for the same reason; so that we hear extremely little about it as a Corn-Law question. Now, I voted against ten hours. (Cheers.) I am quite ready myself to take the Ten Hours' Bill if they will give me a repeal of the Corn Laws, and with it of all other restrictions upon trade. (Cheers.) And I'll tell you why I would take it upon those conditions:—I do not like a law that interferes with labour; but if you repeal the Corn Laws, that other law would administer itself; if you removed all restrictions from trade, you would want no inspectors or other persons to see that the labouring people did not work more than ten hours, for they would be in such a state of independence with their ten hours' labour that that would be the utmost limit they could be expected to work. (Cheers.) Mr. Muntz, a member of the House of Commons, who with some little eccentricity, at the same time never speaks without exhibiting a manly and independent understanding, told the House that the labouring people had no love for long hours of work—had no wish to make their children work long hours, or to deprive them of the means of education, but they were compelled by the necessity of eating, so to do. (Cheers.) Then, if you give them more to eat, you will remove that necessity (cheers); and when you have done so, those principles which Mr. Muntz sets forth will come into operation, and the poor labouring man will protect himself;—ay, and that is the only way in which he can be protected. (Loud cheers.) You may make what laws you will for his protection; they will all fail: the only way to protect him is to remove those laws which disable him from protecting himself. (Cheers.) There is only one other point to which I wish to allude, and if you will be so kind as to give me your attention, I shall not trespass on you long. (Cheers, and loud cries of "Go on, go on.") You may suppose that we, who have been with more or less activity engaged in this cause, now for some years, frequently ask ourselves the question, "When and by whom are the Corn Laws to be repealed?" (Cheers.) Now, what respect to the when, my own belief is, that the first time it pleases God to afflict this country with a bad harvest,—if that bad harvest should happen at a time there is but a small stock of corn in this country,—He will at the same time, by the merciful dispensations of His providence, relieve us from these laws. (Cheers.) I believe that these laws cannot sustain above one bad harvest. (Cheers.) Well, then, by whom are they to be repealed? Perhaps you will be surprised when I tell you that I think they will be repealed by the party now in power. (Hear.) I do not know whether any of you know anything of my politics; but I never hesitate to avow in any assembly that I am a downright Radical. (Tremendous applause.) Nevertheless, I do not advise you to look to the Radical party for the repeal of those laws; they will never be able to do it, at least, in my lifetime, though I hope they may attain to great power in the lifetime of many others here present. (Cheers.) I believe, then, that the Corn Laws will be repealed by the present party and by Sir Robert Peel himself, and I will tell you why. (Hear.) We had some discussion upon this subject one day this session in the House of Commons, and some member suggested to Sir Robert Peel, that he would probably repeal the Corn Laws. Now, Sir Robert Peel disclaimed it—he disclaimed it pretty earnestly; but he is not a very rash man, and he did not disclaim it without some reservation (a laugh),—the reservation he held was, that it was impossible to say what any man would, could, should, or might do hereafter—it was one of those words he used, but I am not quite sure which. (Laughter.) I suppose, therefore, that when a bad harvest, and when the other circumstances of which I have been speaking, shall have arrived, and when Sir R. Peel sees that the Corn Laws can no longer be sustained,—and there are very few men in this country who would be quicker to see that than Sir R. Peel,—then he will go to her Majesty and will inform her that he can no longer maintain the Corn Laws; that he thinks he is not the person, after all that has passed, to repeal them, and therefore he will beg her Majesty to accept his resignation of the situation which he holds in her councils. Well, having done that, upon some gloomy day (cheers and laughter), he will be obliged to call the agricultural interest together, and he will make to them the same communication that he has made to her Majesty; and heavy tidings they will be for the agricultural interest to listen to. (Cheers.) But when they have recovered from the consternation into which such a communication must throw them, no doubt they will address him as Saul did his armour-bearer, and say, "Draw thou now thy sword and thrust us through, lest these uncircumcised thrust us through and we die." (Loud cheers and laughter.) "The armour-bearer, we know, was inexorable, and he refused; but I must say I don't think Sir R. Peel is the man who would refuse under such circumstances. (Cheers.) I believe, that having drawn his sword and thrust it through the high churchman in the matter of the Test and Corporation Acts; having thrust it through the high Protestant in the battle for Catholic disabilities; he will draw it a third time and thrust it through the high protectionist in the matter of the Corn Laws. (Loud and prolonged cheering.) Having thus repealed the Corn Laws, or, at least, having told you how they are to be repealed, I have only in conclusion to thank you for the kindness with which you have listened to the few words which I have addressed to you, and will now make way for some other person who will, no doubt, be much more worthy of your attention. (Mr. Gisborne resumed his seat amidst unbounded applause.)

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Bright will now address you. (Cheers.)

Mr. BRIGHT, on advancing to the table, was received with loud plaudits from all parts of the theatre, which having subsided, he spoke as follows:—It is always to me a matter of very great consolation to remember that, wherever we are advocating the great cause of freedom of trade, we do not see around us and about us all those who are working in the same great cause, but that in every part of this country there are men as earnest and as anxious as we are in the prosecution of the great work to which so many of us have devoted ourselves. And not in this country only, but in other parts of the world, in every commercial, and in every civilized country, there are some men who are, so far as they have the power, anxious to put down this wide world's curse by which this country, perhaps more than any other, has been so long afflicted. (Loud cheers.) We are met here, in the heart of this metropolis, and we meet almost every week, to discuss this all-important question. A paper published in Plymouth advertises that a very intelligent gentleman there is giving lectures in favour of freedom of trade. Another paper, published on the banks of the Tyne, informs us that a gentleman there also is calling his townsmen together, and is delivering to them lectures on the same great subject. (Hear, hear.) At this moment there are two election contests proceeding in counties purely agricultural, and among each of these constituencies the lessons of Free Trade are being taught by those who are well able to communicate the truths which we are met on this occasion to impart. ("Hear," and cheers.) Hastings and Christchurch are now called upon to send representatives to Parliament. Be it borne in mind that these battle-fields are not those which we have chosen. (Hear, hear, hear.) It requires now much consideration when a borough is to be vacated, and the scheme is thought to be more perfect when two boroughs are vacated at the same time; and only those are vacated where there seems to be no chance of returning a Free-Trade candidate. (Hear, hear.) Hastings is a borough which I have visited during the present pending contest. Its constituency are not well informed on the question of Free Trade. Until now this question has not been made the one question in their elections. The electors have been banded about from Tory to Whig, and from Whig to Tory; they have been made the instruments for returning men to Parliament, having very frequently no strong or anxious political opinions; and now the consequence of all this is easily discoverable in that borough—that when a great question is brought before them, they look at it as one entirely new, and they seem almost unconscious that their electoral right has anything important to do with the true interests of their country. (Cheers.) There is scarcely any political feeling in that borough. Men of all parties come to a meeting, and men of all parties are willing to hear what is said on this question; but I suspect that, if there were two candidates instead of one, a very large number of the electors would give a vote to each candidate, although their opinions were diametrically opposed to each other. (Cheers and laughter.) Of Christchurch I cannot say much, not having been there, and not knowing much of it; but situate as it is in a purely agricultural county, and known as little as it is throughout the country for any political exertion it has ever made, I suspect that the case there is somewhat like the case at Hastings. (Hear, hear.) Now, we are a Mutual Instruction Society (hear, hear); we go down to Hastings for the purpose of letting every elector know the truth upon this question, and we go to Christchurch for the same purpose. ("Hear," and cheers.) We only pledged ourselves to contest these boroughs, and to inform the electors: we did not pledge ourselves to do that which is an impossibility—to return Free-Trade candidates on every occasion, especially on the first occasion of our contest in these boroughs. (Hear, hear.) But we are quite sure of this—that we are weakening the monopolist party in all these counties by each of these elections; and the landlords in Parliament, determined as they may be to uphold this monopoly, will by-and-by find themselves without support in the country, and will be obliged to yield to the voice of public opinion, which is daily gathering strength and which they have so long scorned and despised. (Prolonged cheering.) Now, the consequence of all this discussion is the dispelling of the numberless fallacies which the landowners have spread. (Cheers.) It is a fact worthy of notice that some of the largest landed proprietors and some of the clergy seem to be about the very last to get rid of these fallacies (hear, hear), and the last to cease from spreading them among their tenants. (Cheers.) The Morning Post of this day (laughter and hisses) has a report of a meeting held at Dunmow, in Essex—a meeting of the Essex Agricultural Protection Society (cries of "oh, oh")—from which, or from the speech of one of the gentlemen there, I will just read you an extract; and this gentleman is the Rev. Mr. Shepherd; he said:—"They did not wish to interfere with any one, but merely to protect themselves, and to prevent desolation spreading over the length and breadth of the land. He felt that, as a minister of the Gospel, he was not out of his place in attending there, and taking part in that meeting. He was then advocating a rightful cause." With respect to his being a "minister of the gospel," and "advocating there a rightful or a righteous cause," it may be that this Mr. Shepherd has been living in the seclusion of his clerical home, and has heard little and read little of that which has been passing in almost every newspaper that has been published within the last three or four years. He must know that the object of the Essex Agricultural Protection Society is to take especial care that the food of the people of this country shall not be so plentiful as to be afforded to them at its natural cost or its natural price (hear); but that, by means of the artificial scarcity created by law, food may be made dearer, even though the poorest portion of the people should thereby be prevented from obtaining their natural and sufficient supply. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) And this clergyman, doubtless, every week officiating in the capacity of a minister of the Gospel, reads from a book, nearly every page of which is a condemnation of this system ("hear, hear," and applause), and puts up a prayer to Heaven which is totally opposed to the exertions which he is making at this meeting. (Loud cheers.) He says again, "The soil had obligations attached to it which existed long before the tall chimneys were in being—long before they were heard or thought of; these obligations were entirely on the land, because there was not, at the time they were imposed, any other interest in being to divide the burdens with." Well, I believe, if there had been any other interest there would have been no burdens at all on the land. "He alluded to tithes and poor-rates, which amounted, according to a statement they had heard that day, to 11s. per acre. As occupiers and cultivators of the soil they were bound to discharge those obligations. They had done so, and they were content to continue to do so, and all they asked was, that Government would enable them to do so" (laughter),—forgetting the conclusion of the sentence, which should have been "at other people's expense." (Renewed laughter.) "They held their land upon certain conditions: that of maintaining the poor was as old as Revelation. They were there told that they should always have the poor with them. The condition of maintaining the poor, however burdensome, had always its pleasing reflection—the knowledge that they were preserving the old and infirm from want and starvation. ('Oh, oh!') It was true that the other interest had to bear a small share of those burdens (laughter); but the proportion was like that of a small rivulet to the mighty stream, and since stock-in-trade had ceased to be assessed, it had almost vanished." Now, this clergyman and these farmers seem never to imagine that the manufacturers or the shopkeepers, or those who live in houses in which they pursue no particular trade, have any poor's-rates whatever to pay. (Hear, hear, hear.) It is quite true that machinery does not pay poor's-rates; and that bales of cotton, and bales of woollen goods, and goods in shops, do not pay poor's-rates—and the reason is very clear: it would be impossible to assess them to the poor's-rates, because the quantities are always changing in all these things. (Hear, hear, hear.) The farmer pays a poor's-rate for his land; but he pays none for his cattle—none for his stacks—none for his farming implements—and none for capital which he may have by him in money, or which he may have in the bank (hear, hear); and, therefore, the manufacturer and the farmer are on precisely the same footing with respect to this charge of poor-rates. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) I find, at nearly all these meetings, that ignorant men like this Mr. Shepherd (laughter, and "hear, hear,") come forward and claim a Corn Law on the ground that they are unequally taxed in the particular payment for this charge of poor-rates; and at this meeting there was a "working man," of the name of Williams, who addressed the meeting at some length, "exposing the sophistries of the League." ("Oh, oh," and laughter.) Now, it is a remarkable fact that "a working man" is received with very great cordiality indeed when he gets on one of the protection platforms; his blistered hands—his fustian jacket—and, it may be, sometimes uncouth manners—the fact that he has no property—the fact that he has no ancestry—the fact that he has no family influence—the fact that he never can hope to be anything for them or to them—all these are overlooked, and he is received most cordially as though he were a person of very great importance. (Hear, hear.) These "working men" are generally stagnant working men. ("Hear, hear," and applause.) They are working men who do not work. (Cheers.) They are working men who live upon the delusions which they assist the landlords to spread among the working classes. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) Now, I think the working men would do better to look after their own order than to sell themselves to an order which despises them for the purpose of assailing in this continued oppression. (Cheers.) But there are other parties who are as bad as clergymen in this matter. (Laughter.) And, speaking of clergymen, I would just spend a moment in expressing my firm and conscientious opinion that this Mr. Shepherd does not represent the opinions of the best clergymen in this country. (Hear, hear.) I am persuaded that amongst the clergymen in this country there are hundreds, and probably thousands, who are anxiously looking for the success of the Anti-Corn-Law League; but among that body, as amongst other bodies, there is a great tyranny of opinion. A clergyman who is convinced that we are right scarcely ever comes from the ranks to say so. (Hear, hear.) We know many individual cases such as this; and I doubt not that these cases are, unfortunately, more numerous than either I or any one of us may at times suppose. The Post has also a report of a meeting at Jedburgh, taken from the Kelso Mail—the Roxburgh county meeting, as it is called—a county meeting at which and from which nineteen-twentieths of the county are excluded. (Ironical cheers.) Lord Polwarth spoke, in moving a resolution, and he acknowledged that "he would much rather have seen it moved by a tenant-farmer of Roxburghshire, because he was conscious that every word uttered by a landlord was looked upon with suspicion." (Laughter and cheers.) It was a day of confession for my Lord Polwarth. (Renewed laughter and cheers.) I hope the day is coming when these political and monopolist landlords will find themselves looked upon with so much "suspicion" that they will take a little less interested part in public affairs than they have done for the last thirty years. ("Hear, hear," and cheer.) He goes on with a great many statements with respect to the manufacturers of this country and the manufacturing districts, most of which appear to be precisely the same as those that were stated in the House of Commons the other night by the hon. member for Roxburgh, and who, as I believe, is a brother, or near relative, of Lord Polwarth. He says, "They should look at the rate of mortality, and consider whether, in throwing their population upon the towns, they were not increasing the miseries of the people. In the large manufacturing towns the rate of mortality had greatly increased since the increase in the population and in the productions of manufacture, during the last ten years." Well, I am informed that, with respect to Manchester, the average duration of human life has increased about 25 per cent. within the last 40 years. (Hear, hear.) So much in answer to the statement of this noble lord. And then he says, "Neither was there with the increased population any adequate provision for the religious or moral instruction of the people." Now, upon this point we have facts which are wholly undeniable, showing that, whilst in the manufacturing districts of the West Riding of Yorkshire, Lancashire, Cheshire, and Derbyshire, the population has increased by 127 per cent. since the commencement of this century, the facilities for public worship and the sittings in churches and chapels have increased by not less than 219 per cent. (Loud cheers.) So much for one of those facts which the Roxburgh farmers, auctioneers, land-valuers, and factors of every description (laughter) were gulled with at this county meeting. (Cheers.) He says again, "During the time in which manufactures had made such great and rapid strides the wages of the people employed in manufactures had declined." Now, it is a remarkable circumstance when contrasted with what we observe in agriculture, that every man or every person working in cotton manufactures at this day can obtain in exchange for his labour as large a portion of the produce of that labour as he could obtain 30 or 40 years ago. (Hear.) I believe that every worker in the cotton trade now can purchase a larger portion of the produce of that trade with his week's wages than he could have purchased thirty years ago. (Hear, hear.) But it is not so amongst the agricultural labourers of this country. Has not Mr. Gisborne already told you that since the days of his grandfather the farm-labourers of this country have been receiving less and less of the produce of the farm in exchange for their labour? Well, then, does not this show that, as far as the manufacturers are concerned, the duty of the manufacturers has been not inefficiently performed; that they have made everything cheaper by greater skill, greater industry, and greater intelligence; and that all those who purchase the produce of that skill, industry, and intelligence can have more of it than they had thirty years ago; whilst of the produce of the soil—that sacred property—that for which the law seems alone to be made, and to which everybody must bow down—those who work in the production of the produce of that soil are not able to obtain as much now in return for their industry as they were thirty or forty years ago? ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) Well, there was another lord at this Roxburgh meeting (laughter)—Lord John Scott, brother, I believe, to the Duke of Buccleuch. He said, "To begin with the beginning, he was sure that this meeting did not consider the present amount of protection more than sufficient when they took into consideration the burdens upon the land in this country." You will bear in mind that we have asked them over and over again to point out these burdens; and nobody has pointed them out, so far as I am aware, except a Mr. Baker, in Essex, whose statement has been declared to be grossly exaggerated, by one of the members for the county of Oxford. (Hear, hear.) "He was sure that this meeting did not consider the present amount of protection more than sufficient when they took into consideration the burdens upon the land in this country, the different state of society, the different food, the different clothing, the different habits of life among the labourers, whom they would not wish to see brought back to the condition of the labourers on the Continent—whose comparatively wretched condition he had himself witnessed—whatever Cobden might say to the contrary." (Laughter.) The Dorsetshire case is, I believe, not disputed; and the Rev. Mr. Osborne states, that to send the labourers from Dorsetshire into the neighbouring counties would be no gain to them, seeing that in those counties the same state of things exists (hear); and I can assert that to send them down into many counties of Scotland would be no gain to them, for labourers there may be had for 6s. a week. (Hear.) It appears to me, then, that this Lord John Scott, living, it may be, in luxury, and associating with the Duke of Buccleuch,—a man of enormous property,—has almost, or altogether, overlooked the real condition of the farm-labourers of this country (hear), or that he comes out before that meeting, and, with an effrontery which can scarcely be conceived possible, asserts that the labourers of this country are better off than those in many of the Continental states. (Loud cheers.) But he says more:—“Then there was another burden which the League looked upon as a trivial affair,—the burden of the national debt, which was borne by the land; and he wanted to know, until they could sweep away that debt, how they could expect that this country could maintain its position with a Free Trade?” Now, it always happens that, when the Corn Law is doing its work best, and giving us very high prices in corn, the revenue of this country seriously falls off, and, in order to quiet the fears of those who hold money in the funds, the statesmen for the time being are called upon to impose fresh taxes. (Hear.) If the Corn Law paid off the national debt, or paid the interest of it, how happens it that it did not pay that interest in the years 1838 to 1841? It is only when the Corn Law for a time ceases to do its work—and, by the blessing of Providence, we have harvests more bountiful at home, which bring us into a condition somewhat like that which we should be in if we had no Corn Law,—it is only then that the tax becomes more productive, and the revenue rises instead of falls. (Hear, hear, hear.) They said, speaking of their funds, “they did not wish in the slightest degree to infringe upon the constitution.” The constitution works so admirably for them that they have no idea of infringing upon it at all. “They were determined not to apply their funds for the purpose of influencing elections, which was infringing upon the constitution.” (Laughter.) And yet these very men insist upon their tenants voting as they vote, and their class universally throughout almost every county in the kingdom return the members to Parliament, and not the farmers or any other class of electors. (Prolonged cheering.) This is a piece of hypocrisy which one knows not how to speak of. (Hear, hear.) I cannot understand how one of these landlords can appear before a meeting, in which there are farmers or any independent persons present, and make use of language like this without blushing so deep a hue that every one present would know at a glance that he was committing a great fault in stating that which he knew to be utterly untrue. He says, “They raised the cry of cheap bread, and said the people were starving. The greedy manufacturer stopped the mouths of his workmen with the cry of cheap bread—put them into starvation to obtain his wealth, and said that the aristocracy starved them.” Now, we want to stop their mouths with bread and not with a cry. (Laughter and cheers.) No one can say that the manufacturers of this country diminish the amount of food in the country. They do not prevent the landlords growing as much as they like. (Hear, hear.) They do not force any of it to be sent out of the country. (Hear, hear.) Whatever the landowners grow the people eat; and if they be short of food at all, it must be the landowners and their law which starves them, and not the manufacturers, who are contending for freedom for industry, by which means they might be enabled to purchase food in abundance. (Applause.) Well, then, there is another paragraph which might as well have been said during the recent debate. He says, “The manufacturers do a great deal by the aid of machinery. By the aid of machinery the manufacturer got his work done by women and children. He kept no men; and as soon as the children came to a certain age, when they were not acquainted with any other business by which they could earn a livelihood, they were turned off, and the consequence was, that many became hand-loom weavers, at 5s. a week. But then, as children only were employed, these men got married in order that they might have children to support them (laughter), thereby increasing the population, and showing that, as trade increased, the greater must be the amount of misery.” Now, I know not in what other order of society you would have found a man who could put together so many things which have no sort of connexion with each other. (Hear, hear.) It is scarcely possible to understand what is meant. Here are three or four or five things, most of which are utterly untrue, jumbled together in one sentence, forming that of which no man living can make any sense whatever. (“Hear, hear,” and cheers.) In the first place, that the manufacturers keep no men is an utter falsehood, because it is notorious that, in all times of ordinary prosperity in the manufacturing districts, the labour of men is as difficult to obtain as the labour of either women or children (hear, hear); that in 1835 or 1836, there was not a working man in those districts, honest, industrious, and willing to work, who had not as much work as he chose to have; and it is perfectly absurd to hear men of this description talking about that of which they must be totally ignorant. (Applause.) It is not likely that Lord John Scott ever spent much time amongst the manufacturers in the north of England. He may have seen a mill or a chimney in passing through by the mail or by the railway; but I think he is one of whom I should not run much risk if I were to say that he had probably never in his life been inside one of these manufactories which he takes upon himself so unceremoniously to condemn. “A reduction of wages was what they were seeking for, and that reduction was to be made upon the ruin of the agricultural interest.” Now, I would not take up the time of this meeting by proving, again and again, for the thousandth time perhaps, that no reduction of wages can follow a repeal of the Corn Law. (Cheers.) We assert broadly, that, from the hour when the law was first enacted until the present moment, it has been a law working most insidiously, but most surely, a reduction in the wages of the operatives of this country. (Prolonged cheering.) And in all years of plenty when the Corn Law is almost a dead letter, wages constantly rise; but when the Corn Law operates with its intensest severity, then the people are thrown out of employ by thousands and thousands, and those who are employed receive less than their usual amount of wages. (“Hear, hear,” and cheers.) Lord John Scott then thanks the meeting for the attention with which they have listened to his observations, and congratulates them that Government have not submitted to interested clamour, and repealed a law this year which they made in the last. (Laughter.) As to interested clamour, there seems a consciousness, on both sides of the House of Commons, where this charge applies; for on the presentation of a petition, two or three weeks ago, by an hon. monopolist (laughter), he prayed the House not to listen to the interested clamour of parties who were speaking unfavourably of the Corn Laws (derisive cheers); and at the term “interested clamour” there was a general titter among many of those who sat on that side of the House, arising, no doubt, from the consciousness that they were the interested parties in the matter. (Cheers and laughter.) Well, there is a man, a farmer I suppose, of the name of Dudgeon (it should have been Gudgeon)—(great laughter)—and he acknowledges—in speaking of the condition of the agricultural labourer—that the agricultural labourer was now a better dressed man than the tenant was some years ago.” Well, I would ask a very simple question: who dressed him? (Cheers and laughter.) If the landowners had followed up improvements in agriculture as we have in manufactures, and had produced so great an abundance, and had at the same time so materially reduced the price, there could be no doubt that this country would, above all other countries, be that where not one single industrious individual would be found who had not a full supply, at least of the necessities of life. (Cheers.) Now, I have here a practical refutation of two fallacies which are very often made use of at these meetings—one of them is, “that if we were to take foreign corn, and manufactured goods were not taken in exchange, that there would be no increase of employment in the manufacturing districts.” The other is, “that as other countries would not take our manufactured goods if we did not take their corn, we should be obliged to pay them in gold.” Now, a gentleman in the City, who is very extensively engaged as a seedsman and, I believe, a cornfactor, has given me a cash to prove how literally untrue these arguments of the Monopolists are. There is a very small article—a comparatively small article of consumption—that of caraway-seed, which is used chiefly by confectioners, but which has lately become useful in several manufacturing processes. (Hear, hear.) Before Sir Robert Peel altered the tariff, the duty upon caraway-seed was 30s. per cwt., which was a duty entirely prohibitory; but, by the new tariff, the duty was reduced to 10s. per cwt., which, although very high, is not a prohibitory duty; it is a fixed duty. (Hear, hear.) Under the new tariff there has been a considerable importation of this article; and although the annual consumption does not exceed perhaps from 300 to 400 tons, yet not less than 100 tons of caraway-seed have been imported during the first year of the operation of the new tariff, and at this reduced duty. (Hear, hear, hear.) Well, now, if wheat were in the place of caraway-seed, we will see how it would work. This gentleman, to whom I have alluded, buys in Rotterdam a quantity of this seed. I have here invoices, and bills which were drawn for payment of this seed. Here is one of them, an invoice of caraway-seed bought at Rotterdam, to the amount of £77 17s. 6d.; and here is a bill to the amount of £77 17s. 6d., drawn by the party in Rotterdam upon the merchant or seedsman or factor in London. Well, now, where has this bill travelled since it was drawn? According to the fallacy which I am combating, it would have been necessary for this factor to have gone to the bank and have taken as many sovereigns as amount to £77, and afterwards shipped them to Rotterdam in payment for this caraway-seed. But, instead of that, this bill is drawn at Rotterdam—travels to Cephalonia—from Cephalonia to Corfu, and to the bank there, from whence it comes to London, to the house upon which it is drawn here, and then the transaction is settled; but during all this time no money has passed between this cornfactor and the Rotterdam dealer in caraway-seed; and if the transaction had been in wheat, precisely the same thing would have occurred. But I have another case from the same party stronger than that, and it shows the direct payments for each particular article, in goods from one of our manufacturing towns. (Hear.) Now, here is a bill, which amounts to £49 17s. 11d., and this was drawn for a shipment of caraway-seed; it comes through several hands, and, last of all, I find that it bears the endorsement of the Sheffield Banking Company, proving that this bill went to Sheffield to pay for some article which Sheffield had sent abroad. (Loud and repeated cheers.) Now, here is another case:—£245, an invoice of caraway-seed, all from Rotterdam. Here is a bill of £120, another of £125; and this last has several names on it as the others had; last of all I see there is an endorsement of Mr. Leo Schuster, a foreign merchant of the highest respectability, with whom many here are acquainted, who is carrying on business in Manchester, and who ships goods from Manchester to the Continent. (Loud cheers.) Now, look at the effect of that small reduction on the duty on caraway-seed. There was no trade in the article previous to that reduction. What we consumed was grown, I believe, chiefly in Kent and Essex: it was used only, or almost entirely, by confectioners. There has been an importation of 100 tons, and the price of caraway-seed has not fallen in consequence (cheers); but it is now applied to several other purposes, and is beginning to be used extensively in a variety of manufacturing processes, while, at the same time, it required more shipping to carry on the trade between Rotterdam and London with this alteration in the tariff than if no such alteration had taken place. (Cheers.) The goods which went out in payment for it required shipping to carry them there; and, throughout the whole transaction, you will see nothing but unmixed good to the industry of this country, and the complete refutation of, I will not say the arguments, but the absurd and childish fallacies which these landlords are constantly preaching up to their farmers. (Cheers.) And whilst we are on the subject of these seeds, I may mention another case. There is an article—canary-seed—with which most of us are acquainted, which is used in this country to the amount of 10,000 quarters annually, the greater part for the food of birds kept in cages. The duty under the old tariff was 60s. per cwt.,—entirely a prohibitory duty; under the new tariff it is 4s. a bushel, which is also entirely prohibitory. Now, nearly all the canary-seed grown in this country is grown in Kent, probably more than nine-tenths of it. Sir E. Knatchbull is one of the representatives of Kent, and a Cabinet Minister. It is affirmed by those who are anxious to magnify the statesmanlike qualities and deeds of that worthy and now right hon. baronet, that, through his overwhelming influence in the Cabinet of Sir R. Peel, he was able, for the protection of native industry, and especially for the protection of the independent men of Kent, to resist the threatened inroad on agricultural prosperity which would have occurred if this reduction in the small article of canary-seed had taken place. (Laughter.) Now, that seed is bought, I suppose, chiefly by hand-loom weavers in various parts of the country, by working journeymen tailors, by the shoemakers of Northampton, by men who work in their own houses and in little shops, and who have these birds,

“Whose lively song beguiles their daily toil.” (Cheers.)

Well, this magnanimous statesman must make use of all his influence with the Prime Minister to raise the price of the food of these little innocent canary birds, and to injure those men who work at shoemaking and other trades which I have mentioned. (Laughter and cheers.) Now, I believe that all the other fallacies which these people have propagated so industriously might be disposed of with just as much ease. (Hear.) The principles of Free Trade are so simple, that the mind of no unbiassed man who hears them will have any hesitation in receiving them as true. (Cheers.) Everything about him and around him, everything which he reads in history, everything which he sees in the arrangement of the universe, everything which he has in his own judgment, everything which prompts him in his heart, tells him that these principles of Free Trade should direct the world, and not that impious, that mischievous, that imbecile system of monopoly which we are here taking so much trouble to overthrow. (Loud cheering.) We ask that the world should be our workshop, and the wide world our market. (Cheers.) We are persuaded that public opinion is rolling on with a power and rapidity which nothing can now stop, and that the principle we have propounded must soon, very soon, be fully established in this country, and from our shores its adoption will soon spread to every civilized country in the world. (Cheers.) By the infringement of this great principle the landowners have brought themselves into almost inextricable difficulties. They make paupers by thousands in all the counties. (Hear, hear.) They render life and property insecure, and desolate the homes of that portion of the population over whom they ought to be the constant guardians and defenders. (Hear, hear.) They have themselves acknowledged a law which gives the pauper a right to a maintenance from the land upon which he was born; but when these paupers multiply to such a degree that rents are threatened, then they quarrel even with the law themselves had made, and the principles of their own adoption, endeavouring, in many cases, by extreme and unreasonable hardship, to prevent the paupers coming upon them for support. They passed a new poor-law—a bill which, whether it be just or unjust in principle, is, at any rate, utterly impracticable with the amount of pauperism there is at present in the country. (Hear.) Thus you find that from time to time the commissioners have had to relax its operation in many parishes and counties—and now even Government itself—is proposing to make a considerable relaxation. There can be no doubt, if the tide of pauperism cannot be checked in some other way, that this present poor-law will be as full of evils, and those of quite as great magnitude, as the old law. Then they set up a great many other cries; they know what is right, but they will not come to it. (Hear, hear.) They are like a man in the mud—the more he struggles the deeper he gets. They kick in all possible directions, and set up any false scent that the people will run after, spreading false and most childish statements, and affecting to believe them themselves; and all that they may for a time save their own order from that which is at last inevitable—a return to an honest and wise course of policy. The Prime Minister himself did not hesitate at one time to throw out an insinuation, that there was something in the spread of machinery which was very injurious to the people,—displacing labour, and causing manufacturing distress. But that charge cannot be brought forward with reference to the farm-labourers; it cannot be proved that agricultural distress arises from machinery, and therefore we are spared from that pretext. But now we have got on another scent, and they tell us that if the people would work a great deal less they would be much better off; that is, if the manufacturers of the north of England and their workmen would produce a much smaller quantity than they do, there is no doubt but that they would be very much better off. (Laughter.) What gross absurdity is this! Only look at the cotton trade, for instance; the whole world is its market, excepting such parts as are now shut against us by the operation of these laws. Five-sixths of the cotton imported is sent abroad. I should like to know how, by a law passed in this country, high prices are to be given for cottons by the various countries in the world, which owe no allegiance to the laws passed by landowners in this country. A gentleman, whose authority will ever be of the utmost weight, and which has been acknowledged to be of the very highest importance by Sir Robert Peel and Lord John Russell,—I allude to the late James Deacon Hume, so long secretary to the Board of Trade,—in writing in the year 1834, he says—“The distress of the manufacturing classes consists in their being compelled, by natural causes, to seek a foreign market as sellers of the goods they produce, while they are prevented, by artificial means, from going into that market as buyers of the goods which they want.” He shows that the agriculturists have, under any circumstances, the enviable advantage of selling their produce at home, in a market insufficiently supplied, while manufacturers are compelled constantly to sell their goods in a home market, which is always glutted. Mr. Hume goes into a statement on this part of the subject; and, from all he has written, it appears to have been clearly his opinion, that at least two or three hours a day of the toil of the working men of this country was a tax imposed on them by the monopoly which the landowners had created, and to sustain burdens which the Legislature of this country, if it were honest, would immediately remove. (Hear.) Working long hours is good for nobody; no man labours long for pleasure, I should think. I am quite sure that in the manufacturing districts of the north of England there is a disposition to work fewer hours; and shorter time will be worked, if not from the operation of law, at least from the influence of public opinion, so soon as it is possible to live with this shorter number of hours of toil. (Loud cheers.) Why, are not the young men in the shops insisting on the closing of their establishments at an earlier hour? (Hear.) Have not those engaged in the warehouses at Manchester compelled—I say compelled, for many of their employers were very reluctant to do it—their masters to close their warehouses one afternoon in the week? Is it possible that such alterations as those can be going on in the midst of all the factory population, and that they should not think whether it is not possible for them to have some relaxation from the protracted hours of toil to which they are now subjected? But the statements which have been made with respect to that population are false: there is not in this country a people to whom the landowners owe more, or who deserve more perfect justice at the hands of a landowning Government; there is not a class of men who have done more towards paying the revenue of this country, or increasing the rent of all these landowners, than the working men of Lancashire and the West Riding of Yorkshire. (Cheers.) I believe it to be a principle which no man will dispute, that interference with men's labour is that which ought to be attempted with the greatest possible caution, and which may lead into inextricable embarrassment. Now, there can be no law in this country, I take it, for the purpose of fixing the maximum or minimum of wages. Nothing could be worse for the working man than that the Legislature should settle the rate of wages; if they fix it in Dorchester at 7s. or 8s. a week, I should not like the Parliament to have the settlement of the wages in the county from which I come. What we ought to do, first, is to try the strength, virtue, and efficacy of every known good principle, before we have recourse to any tinkering and tampering with principles that are acknowledged to be bad. (Loud cheers.) We have, then, this principle set forth, as I have stated, throughout the world: the earth, with its various productions, its various inhabitants, with their various powers and differing wants—all this leads me to believe that we are intended to be useful to each other, to succour and provide each other with everything that the world produces at the best and the cheapest rate. (Cheers.) But let us try that principle first. Labour has never had a fair chance here (hear); manufacturing industry has never had a chance in this country. (Hear.) The intelligence, industry, and virtue of the operatives in the north of England, and the enterprising skill and spirit of the manufacturers generally, all have been crippled under laws passed by men who neither understood these principles, nor knew much about the particular class for which they would legislate. I am one of those who are persuaded that Free Trade would do almost everything for the working classes of England which the most benevolent and humane man wishes for them. (Hear.) I believe it would throw down the barrier which is now upreared between a benevolent humanity and the objects upon which it would exercise itself. I am persuaded that, from the condition of the population amongst whom I live, and the temper and disposition of the manufacturers—there would be in that county, and in those districts, a state of harmony, good feeling, prosperity, and general comfort, under a system of perfect Free Trade, such as has never yet existed in the United Kingdom. (Cheers.) We ask the Legislature no longer presumptuously to interfere between the laws of nature and Providence and the industry of the people over whom they rule. We are persuaded that these principles are gaining ground throughout the population of this country; that, whether in the metropolis or the remotest town or village, every day added to our ranks many intelligent, energetic, hard-working individuals, who will perseveringly carry on this struggle to its final issue. (Cheers.) I have reason to believe that there are now present, in this theatre, distinguished individuals from foreign countries; at least I have heard that such personages would be here to-night. If such be the case, I acknowledge, in their presence, that this Corn Law is a measure whose injurious working has been found out long ago in every country but this; that there is not an intelligent foreigner in existence who does not point it out as the worst stain on the legislation of our country. (Hear.) With all that they know of the intelligence, enterprise, and virtue of the people of this country, it is a matter of the utmost astonishment to them that, for thirty years, we have permitted such a law as this to remain upon the statute-book. (Hear, hear.) But we tell them that the Corn Law is tottering to its fall. (Cheers.) We need not any great public demonstration to prove this; there is confirmation enough of the fact in the House of Commons itself; those men who have so loudly talked about protection in the field, are wholly motionless and voiceless in the senate; they leave it to the only clever men of their party, the members of the administration, to answer the speech of my friend the member for Stockport when he moved for his committee; and what answer did the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Gladstone) make? I know not whether the speech in moving for the committee, or that made in refusing the motion, was the most powerful in advancing our cause. (Cheers.) If there be no man among the landowners who can defend the Corn Laws, not one in the Ministry who dare say a word in favour of this measure; if they must all use evasive language, and retreat into all sorts of pretences rather than come fairly forward and defend their position; and if throughout the whole country opinion be gathering in favour of the abolition of all protection, then, I say, let them make, in the country, what opposition they like; let those miserable newspapers in the monopolist interest write what they please of us, still there is no power on earth that can maintain this unjust system; and we, many of us, I doubt not, shall live to see the industry of the people of this great country entirely free, bringing them everything which the wide world offers in return for their honest labour. (The honourable member sat down amidst enthusiastic cheering.)

The CHAIRMAN came forward and said:—Ladies and gentlemen, Mr. Fox will next address the meeting.

W. J. Fox, Esq., on coming forward was received with the most enthusiastic and long-continued cheering, which having subsided, he addressed the meeting as follows:—Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen—Some very just observations were made by the honourable member who spoke first this evening upon the undesirableness of taking a one-sided view of a question, and of associating exclusively with those with whom our opinions are identical and our sympathies are strong. But this evil, be it little or much, is almost unavoidable upon the question of the Corn Laws, because, so far as logic is concerned, it is a question which has but one side to it. The Pro-Corn-Law Associations will not admit us at their assemblies, and they will not come to our meetings; we must bear the evil whatever it be, endeavouring to gain a remote point for the contemplation of the subject. I think that an intelligent foreigner, especially if not intimately acquainted with the mechanism of society in this country, who should attend several of these meetings in succession, would be strongly impressed with the conviction that our most sanguine expectations are sure of being realized. (Cheers.) In the unprecedented number that have been gathered together week after week in this metropolis, to the great assemblage here of persons of all ranks and classes of society—in the voluntary order and harmony of your proceedings—in the interest excited by topics sometimes leading to remote considerations, and strange ones, as they would generally have been deemed, for great public meetings to have addressed to them—in the concurrence of the views which are put forth here with those of the soundest philosophers upon the production and distribution of national wealth; and the response which there is to your opinions and feelings throughout the country manifested, from time to time, in the most distant counties and towns—and in the determination which is by you and by them evinced, never to shrink from the assertion of the principle we hold, nor to abandon or relax in the demand for its practical application,—in all these circumstances, I apprehend that such an observer would see evidence that the repeal of the Corn Laws, and of all other monopolies, are marked down as the inevitable result. (Cheers.) The same honourable gentleman referred to a time when the country shall be visited by a bad harvest as that which probably would be the date of the abolition of the Corn Laws. It is melancholy to look at the question only in that association. But I would suggest, on the other hand, that some additional element is necessary. Though we have had bad harvests, we find that they have inflicted tremendous suffering on the people, and have led to no reform in our Ministerial policy. If there be a cause why, in future, such a dispensation should wear a different aspect from what it has in times gone by—why that which has only been evil shall at some future period become a good and a blessing—I find that modifying clause in another result of the same Providential superintendence, which, whilst it orders the clouds and the winds, and regulates the fertility of the soil, or visits it with barrenness, also stimulates in human hearts a love of justice, an impatience of wrong, and a determination by peaceful but unconquerable perseverance to win from the hands of power the rights and interests of the many. (Loud cheers.) While the intelligent foreigner whom I am supposing would behold in your assemblages only reasons for expecting the abolition of the food monopoly, he might be induced per chance to visit another place, and breathe a different atmosphere, where no such impression would be conveyed to his mind, but where every symptom which he contemplated would be one of stubborn and dogged resistance to this wise, just, and beneficent measure. And what are the symptoms by which that resistance would manifest itself? As far as we see, on the one hand, the prospect of this repeal shows itself in the frank communication of expression of sentiment—in the heartening one another up for the conflict on behalf of the helpless against the powerful—in the endeavour to carry out to the world, in human institutions, that great provision of nature by which the diversities of all regions are framed to minister to the wellbeing of every nation. As such are the symptoms by which he would be led to expect this result here, what would he find as existing in the forms and demonstrations of the opposition—the dead and seemingly impassible resistance—by which that result is opposed? Why, he would find in that place an affected silence upon the subject. He would see a number of persons met together, professedly to consult for the welfare of the nation, where the one topic that occupied the mind and heart of the nation was continually passed over—where, on that momentous question which you have heard here discussed, all voices are mute, none countenancing its being brought forward. No measure tending to relieve the people from the pressure laid upon them in relation to the necessities of life has as yet found its way, still less been adopted there; and we are reminded of the old story of Queen Elizabeth, who, when the Parliament had been very sluggish indeed, applied to its Speaker—afterwards Chief Justice Popham, and said—“Well, Mr. Speaker, what has passed in the House of Commons?” The Speaker, with a low bow to her Majesty, could only reply, “If it please your Majesty, seven weeks have passed.” (Cheers and laughter.) Even inquiry is forbidden there! They tell us we do not understand the subject; but assuredly they offer no assistance towards its better comprehension. They complain of the burthens that weigh down the agricultural interest, and render protection necessary; but it is from others that the desire and proposition comes to ascertain what those burthens really are. Still the inquiry is refused; we are not to be allowed to know what the peculiar pressure is; we must take it all upon trust. They seem to think that examination into these matters would be as perilous to the cause which they wish to uphold as an inquisition with lighted torches would be into the state of a gunpowder manufactory. (Hear.) Yet, meanwhile, assertions are reiterated by their retainers out of doors, and great license is given to their tongues. Statements are made of the conduct, motives, and proceedings of manufacturers and others, which, if they have in them a particle of truth, ought to be put in the most distinct form, and be supported by the clearest evidence. They go on, taking a latitude of speech of which there is no parallel in the proceedings of any other body. They put forth, as you have heard in some quotations to-night, declarations of attempts by manufacturers to excite, to oppress, and enrage the people of this country, which are so unsubstantial and devoid of all verisimilitude, that if this work goes on much longer their speeches will pass into a proverb: we shall talk of the mendacity of monopoly, and it will become a familiar saying of any one grossly regardless of truth,—“He lies like a Pro-Corn-Law lord.” (Loud cheers and laughter.) Connected with this affected silence there is a pretended bustle on trivial and unimportant matters. Resolutions are passed, going in one direction one night, and in another direction another night. There is great talk of humanity, with little appearance of solid advantages to be bestowed on the community. They march up the hill, then down again, and remind us of Dr. Young's description of the impenitent sinner, who, after suspecting himself a fool, “Resolves and re-resolves, then dies the same.”

In the course of these proceedings the great sensation of the session appears to have been an allusion to that memorable character in history, Jack Cade. This has acted so strongly that I think it would be well worth while if a select committee of country gentlemen were appointed to inquire into the history and principles of “Mr. Cade,” as he is now more respectfully termed. They would find very much in them that might be instructive, with this impartiality, that it would have a bearing on both sides of the question. In the authentic chronicles of Shakspeare we find a leading principle of Cade's followers to have been, that “the members of the royal council were no good workmen.” That, perhaps, may be thought not applicable to some recent displays of the statesmanship of the present Cabinet. Cade was a great regulator; he meddled with business which he did not understand; and yet in that interference, perhaps, his disposition was not the worst, most vicious, this country has witnessed. He declared that seven half-penny loaves should be sold in London for a penny; and this would not have been a worse law than others, which enact that only six halfpenny loaves shall be sold for fourpence. (Hear, hear.) Cade was met by an embassy, in which the Duke of Buckingham of the day was the ambassador. That nobleman said he found him in his answers a very discreet person; but, notwithstanding this recommendation, the duke abandoned him to treachery, which resulted in his execution; and thus ended the first alliance between Dukes of Buckingham and those who attempt to disturb the country and excite riot and confusion. (Loud cheers.) Cade is said to have built a chimney; but we are not told that it was a tall one. He was evidently no factory man. (Laughter.) He came from that county which, in our own day, has been rendered famous by the eloquence of a Bradshaw; adorned by the divinity of a Molesworth, the divine mission of a Thom; blessed with the refined gentleness of a Winchilsea, and honoured with the legislative impartiality and frankness of a Knatchbull. (Renewed laughter.) There are many historical doubts about this same Cade. Upon the authority of contemporary chroniclers, it has been said that this was only an assumed name; that he was, in reality, a doctor, and that, like some other state empirics, he would not prescribe until he was “called in.” By such tricks he got himself prematurely called in, and then found himself in such an awkward scrape by the dissatisfaction of the different parties with whom he was in collision, that he would have been very glad indeed to get out of it with a whole skin if he could have done so. (Laughter.) But no wonder that matters even of this incidental kind can attract attention and excite interest in the House of Commons, when, as we were informed by what is professed to be a report of a speech of Lord Stanley last night, the great question of all—the Corn Laws—is deemed by him one of “infinite importance and infinite delicacy,” so much so that it is scarcely safe to whisper about it, lest the great agricultural interest should become alarmed, and betake itself to the extravagancy of a panic! It seems there are two reasons against legislating upon the importation of foreign corn, both of them alike conclusive. It is not to be legislated for in some countries, because they can send corn, and not to be legislated for in others because they have none whatever to send. (Laughter.) These are held to be sufficient reasons for maintaining the law in its present state, and for saving the landlords from a panic. But are they really so tender upon the point as all this? May it not be that there is yet a further reason for this sensitiveness than any mere apprehension that an influx of Indian corn (for there are no Tamboffs in India,) could possibly create in their minds? (Hear, hear, hear.) Is it not rather from the circumstance that the power which made the Government will not allow them to tamper with even the show of alteration in these laws? (Hear, hear, hear.) Is it not more likely that the Ministers are held strictly to their allegiance,—that it is not a panic of the landowners, but of the Cabinet,—a fear on the part of the Government lest those who brought it into being, and who boast that they could, with equal ease, destroy it, should take offence at any relaxation of their policy. If this be so, the Ministry are in a state of most unhappy subjugation and degrading dependency for an administration in a country like this, where so much sympathy has been shown for slavery of all kinds,—for the negroes under the lash, and even for those who work by their free consent in factories,—where there is so much sympathy with all kinds of subjugation. Why, surely it would be desirable, looking at this state of things, to make some exertions, and to have voluntary associations for the emancipation of her Majesty's Ministers. (Loud cheers and laughter.) In these various indications, an attentive looker-on would see the different forms and phases of the obstinate resistance to our principles which we have still to encounter. He might ask, how is this opposition to truth and justice to be maintained? Where are its powers, and what its strength? One house would meet his eye, composed of landowners,—not with all their estates free, and their receipts in full (hear),—but still, the class to which they belong being hereditary legislators, some of whom have won battles; others, of whose grandfathers, by worse tricks even than by winning battles, gained their places there, and formed a legislative body whose capacity for lawmaking is presumed to descend from generation to generation. Then he would look at the other assembly, over which he would find the former exercising considerable influence. We look with full earnestness of purpose, to the constituencies of the country in reference to this elective body. But there have been some recent returns as to what those constituencies are, illustrative of the relation they bear to the possessors of landed property. We find that in England four-sevenths of the entire constituency are county voters; of this number one-fourth of the whole vote as £50 tenants-at-will. In Wales the county voters are differently divided, and the tenants-at-will form an actual majority. Of the 320,000—to speak in round numbers—borough voters in England, upwards of 130,000 belong to the classes of freemen, livermen, scot and lot voters, and potwallopers. (Laughter.) There is throughout the whole electoral body a large mass of individuals capable of being acted upon by the most corrupt influences, and of the exercise of which there is so frequently positive proof. (Hear, hear, hear.) Then the direct power of command is enforced by the indirect. It spreads through the whole of society: the screw is turned upon one man, who is obliged to pursue the same process with his neighbour. Men in the loftiest station are not ashamed of being parties to proceedings of this kind. Only a few days ago a fact was reported in the Morning Chronicle, which is only one of a thousand of an analogous description which are continually occurring, but which, to an observant foreigner, would throw some light upon the strength of monopoly and the landed aristocracy in this country. The circumstance to which I allude is thus stated—it relates to a Cabinet Minister:—“In a county which has acquired much reputation for the agricultural skill of its farmers, there was lately advertised one of the Minister's farms to be let by proposal. There were various officers; but one higher than the others was admitted to a special interview with the landlord's agent, who, being satisfied with the means of the offerer, and the respectability of character, seemed upon the point of deciding in his favour, until the following and concluding conversation occurred:—

"Agent. Of what politics are you?"

"Offerer. A Liberal."

"Agent. Of what religious persuasion?"

"Offerer. A Dissenter."

"Agent. But the tenant of this farm must both go to church and poll with his landlord." (Hisses, and cries of "Shame, shame.")

"Offerer. Then, Sir, I am not prepared to bid a higher rent than any one else, and have to sacrifice my religious and political principles, merely to gratify your master's lust for power. Good morning, Sir."

It is more than probable that such occurrences as the above are not uncommon, and if the persons to whom they happen would only publish them through the medium of the press, Englishmen would be made to blush for suffering this great country to be ruled by such tyrants as these." (Loud cheers.) But so it is: the parties with whom we have to deal appear to think that a species of omniscience is communicated by the possession of landed property: that the landowners have a right to determine how a man shall act, politically and religiously. They are continually exercising this interference over those who have the misfortune to be their dependents. They say to all other parties, in the words of Campbell:—

"We know all about God Almighty,
A thousand times better than you."

They even lay down the law as to the course which is to be taken by their tenants in sending children to school. A few days before this paragraph appeared, the same paper had a report of a Dissenting school being entirely put down, after it had been carried on in a most meritorious manner by a man in humble circumstances for many years. (Hear, hear.) In fact, they seem disposed to realize the dictum of one of the Scotch judges who presided at the trial of Muir and Palmer, who declared from the bench that "no man had a right even to speak of the constitution unless he possessed landed property." (Hisses and laughter.) Here, then, is a power which may long resist the force of public opinion. But what will be the consequence of that obstinacy? Is it possible for such a feeling to exist as has been evinced in the many meetings held here, and which prevails to so large an extent throughout the country—which is seen in the strong conviction and determination which millions and millions of our countrymen entertain on this subject—and that no effects should result from such a collision? Is it at all likely that the consequence—the unhappy influence of the Corn Laws on the condition of multitudes—should not produce its results also in the limitation of manufacturing industry, in the failure of one market after another—in the alternation, as the seasons vary, of commercial and agricultural distress? We see suffering more deep than charitable societies or mitigated poor laws will ever be able to reach; we behold a gigantic, and yet growing, evil, which sooner or later must be grappled with, and that, too, by a statesmanship which is equal to the achievement of the largest commercial reform that any country perhaps has ever yet experienced. (Loud cheers.) For what else can or is to be done? There is a talk of emigration—of exporting a portion of the people of this country to other lands. We do not send our horses away; or, if we do it, it is at a high price, showing the esteem which is set upon their worth. That useful animal does not go about neighing by way of petition for work to any human being who will oblige him in that way; he is too valuable for that. But let the animal only walk on two legs instead of four,—let him but have what has been called the "human face divine," and be capable of looking up with high aspirations,—let him have a brain where thought works with its mighty energies, and possess a heart beating with affections,—let him be the possessor of a strong arm, and still all those may not avail him;—he must go about seeking for work, and perhaps after all be told, that though the horse is valuable man is worthless, and the best thing to be done with him is to send him out of the country. (Vehement cheering.) There was a time when human beings were told by the Highest Authority, that they were "of more value than many sparrows." But even this can scarcely be said now. Sparrows are worth something in country parts—they put them into puddings; but we have not yet got to pauper pies (laughter); and those of our population who are neither wanted for their work, nor are good for eating, why, it seems to be thought but one thing is to be done with them, and that is, to cast them overboard out of the vessel of the community. (Cheers.) Were this hopeful idea capable of being carried out—to do which there has been a disposition evinced—those who might enrich our land by their toil—who might, in earning their own means of subsistence, provide for the support and the gratification of others, even though those others should dwell in distant regions—they would, if such a policy were wrought out, be driven, as it were, in shoals to our coasts, there to be shipped off, bound—some for the Cape, not of "Good Hope," but of hope most forlorn—some for Canada, others Australia; and some—looking at the manner in which emigration and transport ships are too frequently sent forth—some, perhaps, for eternity, starting the depths of the ocean by the unexpected invasion of a colony of emaciated corpses. (Loud cheers.) It is said that the country is making strides in demoralization. What hold can spiritual teachers have of a people who are obliged to battle earnestly for the right of being allowed to earn the means of subsistence? (Hear, hear.) What favourable hearing can they expect, against whom the laws preach another gospel—the gospel of starvation—as opposed to theirs of freedom and plenty, denying them the daily bread which it is inculcated in their Bible that they should ask of Heaven? Less and less must be the influence of Christian teachers as this erroneous and degrading policy manifests its full depravity; and smaller and smaller the power of instructors of every kind. (Hear.) Eating is the condition of learning; under all circumstances it must precede that work. The people must be fed and clothed before you can expect the mind will be exercised, the taste cultivated, and the character formed. One of the worst features of this worn-out feudal policy—and it is even a compliment to call them feudal, for they are much more sordid than anything in ancient feudalism—is, that they not only war against man's physical support and comfort, but also against the morale of the country, exercising a deadly influence against education and the enlightenment of civilization itself. If their whole results be accomplished, it will tend to turn back the future ages into periods of barbarism; to overspread the land with an untutored banditti, repaying the vindictive and selfish lessons which they have learned from example. They will open before us, as the result of oppression continued and reform denied—as through a long vista perhaps, but yet distinct in its remoteness, at the end of that perspective—the blazing and roaring volcano of revolution. (Loud cheers.) Foolish people are the aristocracy of this country to abuse and sneer at the Anti-Corn-Law League! Why, that body stands between them and ruin. (Cheers.) The League interposes and shields them from such hatred and execration as no class of men, one would think, would willingly abide the pelting of. It excites hope in minds that would otherwise be driven to desperation. There is a prospect in its peaceful, firm, and decided advance—there is a means provided for the re-adjustment of society, the restoration of harmony between class and class, the healing of wounds that have festered into bitterness, and the reconciliation of interests that for the present are put into the utmost extremes of animosity and incongruity. (Cheers.) For all this they should thank the League, rely upon it, and make speedy terms with it—the only terms which are to be made being, that the aristocracy would serve us and in the end serve themselves by the total abolition of their infamous monopoly. (Enthusiastic cheers.) I say the Corn-Law is a warfare against civilization, a wanton abuse by the landowners of their legislative power; for when and where in the world's history has civilization ever advanced but in connexion with the humanizing and harmonizing influences of commercial intercourse. To whom do we, to whom does the world owe its first alphabet, but to those adventurous merchants, the Phœnicians. There is a sort of cant about the instability of commerce; why, Tyre lasted in its glory 700 years. It was their free intercourse that gave the polished Athenians all their superiority over the rough and rude Spartans. In the middle ages, the republics of Italy, while they kept alive some notion of political freedom, did it in connexion with the extensiveness of their commercial intercourse. Their princely merchants founded at once civilization and the wealth of succeeding periods. In the great start which Europe took at the time of the Reformation, we behold the same alliance. Everywhere the merchant, the burgess, or the tradesman is seen making good his position in society, raising the whole community, and, as he did so, elevating those very feudal lords themselves. For what were they then, or what would they have been now, but for the benignant influence of commerce. (Hear, hear.) But for that, these very persons who deny the labourer the food he has earned of the foreigner, whilst they surround themselves with all the luxuries which they can accumulate from the most distant regions, instead of being seated in their richly-carpeted rooms, they would have been walking upon their rush-strewn floors, immured in their cold, stony residences, more like dungeons than anything else, with their unglazed windows letting in the rain and sleet as well as the breath and air of heaven. They would have been to this day still sanctioning the charters of some mercantile guild, by affixing their marks to the documents instead of writing their names; and have been about as well informed of the distant countries over whose destinies they now exercise so large an influence, as those same feudal barons were when they set out upon their Christian expedition to Palestine, expecting to find in that country that they should have to encounter giants riding on unicorns, black magicians who breakfasted by sucking phoenix eggs; and griffins and dragons as plentiful as barn-door fowls. (Cheers, and laughter.) Why, it is commerce which has made men of the aristocracy. (Hear, hear.) Poor and beggarly is the boon which is asked of them in return—to allow even the humblest of those who labour in what is really the work that Providence has given to men to do for each other—to allow them the free interchange of the results of their toil, from whatever region the payment may come by which that toil is to be recompensed. And if laws for the restriction of commerce are absurdity under any circumstances, and a wickedness as well as an absurdity, much more are they both in such a country as this. Why, this island was made for commerce: it is marked out for it by the hand of Heaven itself! Creative power has stamped that destiny for it by our long lines of coast, our beautiful rivers, safe harbours, and all those circumstances which indicate Britain as the central point from which every wind that blows should waft some freight of wealth, knowledge, or charity to the remotest regions of the globe. (Loud cheers.) It has been marked out for commerce by its coal beds and mineral treasures—by the materials which nature puts into the hands of man, which seem of themselves to invite the application of his power, and say, "Come and use us! elicit the virtue that we possess, and our gigantic power to minister to the luxuries of millions, and to feed and clothe millions and millions more." (Cheers.) The industry and unwearying toil, the accumulated capital, the surpassing skill and science of this land, the eminence it has already attained,—all show that these are the conquests which we have to make. This is our mission from Heaven for the universal benefit of mankind upon God's earth; and who or what are the landed class that they should stand up and interpose, saying,—"This shall not be done; for it will deteriorate our property, and lower our rents." Why, suppose it should; is there anything in a class which has had for ages immense advantages over all the rest of society, suffering a little inconvenience? Is there anything in the result of a rightful change subjecting them (were it so) to temporary privation that should in honesty allow them to stand in the way of the accomplishment of that which humanity has a right to claim, to which charity and justice alike award their sacred sanction? Could they permanently divert this land from its proper work, and succeed in upholding for ever laws which would cripple the manufactures and commerce by which we have been enriched, which have made the strength and greatness of the nation,—could they go on successfully repressing these, keeping down the ebullition of misery, and suppressing all indications of discontent,—could they, through coming years, uphold their present policy to its full extent, and realize (which they are far from being able to do,) the purposes for which their monopoly laws are enacted, what disastrous results would take place from end to end of this country! With a growing population and a declining trade—the ports barred against the foreigner by duties—disease and famine would stalk abroad; frightful demoralization would ensue; the iron arm of power must then be put forth to keep down the millions; they must make a solitude and call it peace—such peace as there would be thus obtained would be the peace of the churchyard, where every arm is nerveless, every heart cold, and all are mouldering fast into one mass of corruption. (Cheers.) The land would be partitioned into squirearchies, and each rural tyrant would stalk in the solitary majesty of self-assumption over his petty domain; the peasant would think it a great prize when he got a sound potato; and intellect and the arts, and everything which refines and softens life, would leave a country thus degraded and abandoned; it would become so fearful a spectacle that we should cry, "O, God of Heaven! sooner than this, let Britain be whelmed again in the ocean from which it first arose—let it find a worthier grave there than that the long annals of its glories should end in a state of things so infamous and disgusting!" (Enthusiastic cheers.) We are not, then, fighting a manufacturers' question, or pleading only for charity to the poor: we are asserting the common, the great right of humanity, and advocating an interest which is not merely a pecuniary question of a passing day, but the interest of human nature in all countries and ages. Our cause is the advance of civilization itself: it is for that we strive. We are struggling that the world's progress may not be turned back through our indifference under the infliction of these mischievous wrongs. It is a sacred cause, and one which will call forth the most enthusiastic feelings of our hearts, and the intensest devotion of our souls. It is a matter which ought to be before us day and night—from month to month and year to year—until the result which we contemplate is obtained. Oh, that it were regarded in all its importance by those whose station gives them ampler means of leading on that result; for should the Sovereign of these realms have moments of perplexity and anxiousness, and be distracted by conflicting councils—looking wistfully on the battles of warring statesmen—should she at such moments desire to know what it is that would make her reign blessed, as wiping away the tears of the distressed, clothing the naked, feeding the hungry, and raising those that are trampled down—should she desire to know what it is that would render her reign illustrious, not only by averting misery and rectifying wrong; but which would give it a yet higher splendour, before which the glories of conquest, legislative institutions, and reformations in former times would all wax pale in comparison—should she desire to know what the magic is that would render her reign an era in the world's history, and the best and brightest in the annals of Great Britain,—Oh that some good angel would whisper in her ear that the talismanic words to do all this are—Commercial Freedom! (The honourable gentleman concluded his eloquent address amidst vehement and prolonged cheering.)

The CHAIRMAN then came forward and said:—Before we separate, I am requested to announce to you that these meetings will be continued after Easter, and that due notice will be given of their recommencement.

LEEDS.

On Wednesday evening, the 20th instant, a very influential and spirited demonstration in favour of Free Trade took place in the Music Hall, Leeds. The spacious hall was filled in every part on the occasion; J. G. Marshall, Esq., occupied the chair.

During the proceedings, a number of Chartists, who had purchased for themselves, or had had purchased for them, about two hundred tickets, created considerable disturbance, with the obvious intention of frustrating the object of the meeting; but in this attempt their efforts were unsuccessful. The whole number of persons present at the meeting could not be less than 1300 or 1400, so that the Chartists were but a small, though, as usual, a very noisy and turbulent minority.

The proceedings commenced about half-past six o'clock in the evening; when Mr. Marshall, according to previous announcement, took the chair.

On the platform we observed W. J. Fox, Esq. (of London), Hutton Stansfeld, Esq., John Wilkinson, Esq., E. Baines, jun., Esq., Wm. Brown, Esq., George Wise, Esq., Alderman Maclean, Alderman Lupton, Alderman Luccock, E. Birchall, Esq., S. J. Birchall, Esq., Arthur Lupton, Esq., Dr. Smiles, W. S. Fennell, Esq., John Sykes, Esq., Thomas Nunneley, Esq., Peter Fairbairn, Esq., John Jackson, Esq., Rev. Mr. Wicksteed, Rev. Josh. Fox (of Leeds), W. B. Holdsworth, Esq., Joshua Bower, Esq., Samuel Hammond, Esq., H. J. Marcus, Esq., Emil Liebreich, Esq., Thomas Pint, Esq., William Beverley, Esq., E. Birchall, jun., Esq., Councillor Barrett, Councillor J. W. Smith, Councillor Heaps, Councillor Carbutt, Councillor Broadhead, Councillor Yewdall, Councillor Sellers, Councillor Dickinson, and several delegates from Halifax, Huddersfield, Bradford, Sheffield, and Wakefield. On the platform were also a number of ladies.

The CHAIRMAN rose amidst cheers to open the proceedings. He said he would commence the business of the meeting by reading the advertisement by which it had been convened. Having read the placard, he said he would shortly commence the proceedings by a few remarks on the object of the meeting, and on their mode of proceeding. They would have heard from the advertisement that this was a meeting of the friends of Free Trade, and of a total and immediate abolition of the Corn Laws, and their object was to help forward, as far as they could, that great movement which was carried on in such an admirable manner in the House of Commons, and in Covent Garden Theatre, and, by means of the press, throughout the country. (Hear, hear.) He was sure, to the men of Leeds and of Yorkshire,—now present, and who so lately, either in this room or at the great gathering at Wakefield, had listened to the admirable and home-thrust arguments of Cobden and Bright, and been electrified by their enthusiasm and their energy,—he need say little to show that it was necessary for those present, and everywhere throughout the country, to beatir themselves and take their share of the heat and burden of the day. (Hear, hear.) He was rejoiced to see that the great meeting at Wakefield had had its good effects amongst them. They had had this morning a very numerous meeting of delegates from most of the large towns in the West Riding, in order to concert together the means of carrying on the agitation in favour of the great cause which they were commencing here that night; he trusted they would set a good example, as they ought to do, of that temperate, and reasonable, and orderly advocacy of this great question, which it so well deserved. (Hear, hear.) They would, he was sure, have every inducement given them to carry out their meeting in that manner, from the high treat they had every right to expect from the eloquent gentleman who would address them this evening. (Applause.) After some further observations, explanatory of the object of the meeting, the Chairman called on

Mr. THOMAS PLINT, who was received with some disapprobation by the Chartists, but with loud applause from the great body of the meeting. Seeing Mr. Plint's determination to address the meeting, the Chartists, after some uproar, relinquished their opposition for a time. He proceeded at some length to show the progress which the cause of Free Trade had made since he last addressed an audience of his townsmen on the subject two years ago. He also remarked upon the progress of the cause generally throughout the country, as completely proved by the growing public confidence in the wisdom, energy, and judgment of the League, and by the still increasing and more splendid contributions to that great fund which it had so well used, and would use, as a means of enlightening and instructing the people of this country in the doctrines of Free Trade, and awakening them to a due sense of the evils and mischiefs which result to them from restrictions upon commerce. Alluding to the formation of the Pro-Corn-Law societies, he denied to them the right to be called "Protective," inasmuch as the agriculturists were more injured by the Corn-Law monopoly than any other class in the community. After touching upon various other branches of the subject, Mr. Plint concluded amidst much applause.

W. J. Fox, Esq., came forward amidst loud and prolonged cheering, and delivered, to use the language of the Leeds Mercury, "a glowing oration," to which no mere abstract or summary could render justice. Mr. Fox resumed his seat amidst enthusiastic and often-repeated cheering and waving of hats, having occupied the meeting for about an hour in the delivery of his address.

At the delivery of Mr. Fox's speech a scene of extraordinary confusion arose, in which the Chartists uttered vociferous cries for Leach to address the meeting; Mr. Leach not presenting himself, a cry was got up for Kydd, a Chartist, from Bradford. The confusion after some time partly subsided.

The CHAIRMAN called upon Mr. Smith, of Sheffield, to address the meeting.

Mr. SMITH, on presenting himself in front of the platform, was unable to proceed for some time, being alternately met by the groans and hisses of the small party of Chartists, and deafening bursts of applause from the Corn-Law repealers. During this period Kydd mounted a form in the midst of the Chartist party, and for a short time harangued them in an inaudible voice; after which

The CHAIRMAN remonstrated with the Chartists, and pointed out the results to which their conduct would lead: he admonished Mr. Kydd that, if he persisted in disturbing the meeting, he must request his removal from the hall.

Mr. KYDD still persisting (notwithstanding the Chairman's admonition) in having what he denominated a free discussion, he was politely patted on the back by a policeman, and removed from the meeting amidst the most hideous yells that the Chartists could raise.

Mr. SMITH, during all this time, had retained his post, and was still in possession of the chair. Before he was enabled to proceed with any prospect of being audible, several other of the more disorderly Chartists had been also ejected, and the Chairman had several times unsuccessfully interposed to obtain order. The Chartists at length being nearly exhausted in lungs, number, and courage, Mr. Smith was enabled to proceed. He said that it was not by such a course of conduct the popular cause (to which his previous life proved him to be attached) was to be advanced. To talk of the franchise for men pursuing such conduct as had been manifested this night was perfectly ridiculous, for they would not, as they had shown by their hostility to their friends, even hear their own side of the question. ("Hear, hear," and slight hisses.) Men pursuing the course of the Chartists this night were those who might have liberty upon their lips, but at heart they were the veriest tyrants upon earth. (Loud applause and confusion.) Now, he held that there was no class of the community that was interested in this question more than working men. The working men could not live from day to day without wages; indeed, they were more interested in Free Trade than any other class of the community; and they and the middle classes especially ought to be bound together in one common tie of interest. (Hear, hear.) He believed that those who took these steps to set classes at variance with each other were not the friends of any class. (Applause.) He admitted that the other classes depended upon the working classes, but the dependence was equal in the opposite direction. (Hear.) What could the working men do without capital? Capital set their labour to work, and those who possessed that capital held the produce of the labour of the working men until they could dispose of it; they were, in fact, the parties who went between the working men and the buyer. With the Anti-Corn-Law movement all classes should be united. The philanthropist could find sufficient reason why he should unite with this movement. Those who desired to see the productive classes of the community better educated, fed and clothed, and enjoying better houses, were all aiding the movement. (Hear.) Then, why should those who were seeking a particular species of privilege, or political right, say,—"Until we can get our political rights as well as a sufficient supply of food, we will continue only to receive a restricted supply of food?" Now, he said, if they could not get two things, let them take one. ("Hear, hear," and applause.) Let them have a supply of food, and let the extension of their political rights, in so far as it would prove beneficial, be the subject of separate effort and separate labour. (Hear, hear.) Was it not a good thing to have cheap food and plenty of employment? The supply of the comforts of life to the working man depended upon the sale of his labour. The ability to buy depended upon the ability to sell; and what working men had to sell was their skill and their labour. Now, that skill and labour were to be employed chiefly on something that was to pass into foreign countries; and how could they suppose that there could be a market for their skill and labour, if they did not join their efforts with those who would get rid of all restrictions. The Lyonsese weavers, in their address to the French Legislature, said, "We are poor and ignorant men, but we are acquainted with this truth,—that those who want to sell must be content to buy." (Applause.) Commerce depended upon barter, which would create a demand for the labour of those who are not now employed, and by which they could succeed in establishing markets abroad. Markets abroad depended upon our taking what foreigners had to give us in exchange, from which we were excluded by what we called protective duties (hear, hear, hear), and if we were prohibited from the importation of the only material which the foreigner could give us for our labour, as surely as could be, the evil would fall on the poorer classes of the community; and never let it be forgotten that if there were a scarcity of food grown in this country, it was not the rich that suffered. There were very few men above the middle ranks of life who would suffer a great deal from hunger. (Hear, hear.) If there were a short supply of food, it was upon the working classes that the burden must fall. (Applause.) Why, then, did they not join with them in carrying out the repeal of the Corn Laws? ("Hear, hear," and groans.) Having said thus much, he should now propose, in conclusion, under a very lively sense of the excellent address they had heard, "That the best thanks of this meeting be given to W. J. Fox, Esq., for his admirable address this evening." (Applause.)

Mr. Councillor CARBUTT having seconded the motion, it was put from the chair, and responded to with three most hearty cheers, intermingled with a few faint groans from the remaining small section of Chartists.

The meeting then separated, with three cheers for the Chairman, and three cheers for the League.—Leeds Mercury.

MEETING OF ANTI-CORN-LAW DEPUTIES.—A large and influential meeting of deputies from the several parliamentary boroughs of the West Riding was held at the Commercial Buildings, Leeds, on Wednesday, the 20th instant. About 40 gentlemen were present. J. G. Marshall, Esq., presided. A long discussion took place as to the best means of promoting the agitation of the question of Free Trade. A slight difference of opinion existed as to the propriety of memorializing those members who had already voted for Mr. Villiers's motion; but the prevailing feeling was in favour of the plan being carried out in all the parliamentary boroughs of the kingdom, with the view of ascertaining the entire strength of the Free-Trade party throughout the whole constituencies of the country. At the close of the discussion on this subject, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—

Resolved—"That this meeting highly approves of the important recommendation made by the Council of the Anti-Corn-Law League, to present memorials from the electors of all parliamentary boroughs to their members, requesting them to vote for the motion intended to be made by the Hon. C. P. Villiers, in favour of the entire abolition of the Corn Laws; and it strongly and earnestly urges all the boroughs of the West Riding to undertake immediately a complete canvass of their respective constituencies for this purpose, with a view, by the memorials, to produce the greatest influence on the representatives, and also to ascertain and record the full strength of the Free-Trade party in the boroughs of the kingdom."

Several other topics engaged the attention of the deputies, who were occupied in the consideration of them for three or four hours.—Leeds Times.

The following is the Memorial which has been prepared in Leeds, addressed (with a change of the name) to the two borough members, and which will, we hope, receive the signature of every friend of Free Trade in this important constituency:—

"To William Beckett, Esq., one of the Representatives in Parliament of the Borough of Leeds, in the County of York:—

"Sir,—We, the undersigned, registered electors of the Borough of Leeds, beg to express to you our decided opinion, that all restrictions on the supply of human food are injurious to the community at large, and ought to be totally and immediately repealed."

"We, therefore, most respectfully, but earnestly, request that you will support, by your vote, the motion to be brought forward by the Hon. C. P. Villiers, during the present session, for the abolition of the Corn Laws."

GREAT YARMOUTH, March 26.—(From a Correspondent.)—The memorial to the members for this borough, requesting them to vote for the total repeal of the Corn Laws, decides the question in Yarmouth. We know not what effect it will have on our members, but we do know that it is a triumphant demonstration of the electors in favour of Free Trade. Last year a memorial to the like effect was signed by 534 electors; the one this year is signed by 808. In addition to that number 98 electors, who have declined signing the memorial in consequence of that last year having had no effect, have expressed their determination not to vote for any future candidate unless he be favourable to the total repeal of the Corn Laws. The strength of the Free-Trade voters, therefore, may be very safely taken as upwards of 900, our constituency being 1929; and, as more than 150 who have not signed the memorial could not vote (in consequence of removals, deaths, duplicates, &c.), were an election to take place on the present register, 900 constitute a majority. Since the passing of the Reform Bill we have never at any election polled 1500 voters; 800 always carrying the election. We have not made the question of Free Trade here certain without difficulty; but, seeing what we have done, we cannot too strongly impress on the minds of the Free-Traders in every borough, however small their number may be, that by system, perseverance, and energy—and, above all, by the formation of an Anti-Corn-Law League—they must, and will in the end, succeed in rousing the electors to a sense of the justice of this holy cause.

Mr. Daniel Liddell delivered a lecture on the Corn Laws, in Morpeth Townhall, on Thursday evening; Mr. Ephraim Nicholson in the chair. On the motion of the Rev. Mr. Froggatt, seconded by Mr. Robert Burn, a Free-Trade resolution was adopted by the crowded meeting, only five hands being held up for monopoly. The Chairman put down his name as a subscriber of £5 to the League Fund; and the meeting concluded with three cheers for Corn-Law repeal. We have received two or three notices of the proceedings, all of which speak highly of the lecture. The lecturer has published a well-timed address to farmers.—Newcastle Courant.

PRICES OF FARM PRODUCE UNDER "PROTECTION."—A farmer in Low Furness, who bred, fed, and sold a large quantity of cattle last year, obtained this year, for similar quantity and quality, also bred, fed, and sold by him, no less than four hundred guineas less. Another farmer, son to the other, sold stock of the same quality this year for two hundred guineas less than the quantity realized last year.—Kendal Mercury.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE £100,000 FUND.

Subscriptions received during the week ending Wednesday, March 27, 1844.

N.B. As the subscription list is made up from Wednesday to Wednesday, contributions received on Thursdays and Fridays are not published in the LEAGUE of the Saturday immediately succeeding, but are included in the list of the week following.

| | |
|---|---------|
| J. Henderson, Gutter-lane | £1 1 0 |
| Graham, Coombes, and Murray, 11, Goldsmith-street, Wood-street | 5 5 0 |
| Mr. Porter, 124, Wood-street | 10 0 0 |
| Richard Burridge, Newgate-street | 10 10 0 |
| Ward, Start, Sharp, and Ward, 89, Wood-street | 100 0 0 |
| Thomas Ridgway, Highgate | 100 0 0 |
| Courtald, Taylors, 42, Courtald, 42 & 43, Gutter-lane | 100 0 0 |
| Leaf, Coles, and Co., 39, Old Change | 100 0 0 |
| William Leaf, Park-hill, Streatham | 100 0 0 |
| Roger Cunliffe, 24, Bucklersbury | 50 0 0 |
| George Gillett, 94, Watling-street | 50 0 0 |
| Stone and Kemp, 85, Spital-square, £200; Edinburgh £150, London | 50 0 0 |
| Joseph Procter, Cheapside | 20 0 0 |
| Fisher, Son, and Co., 38, Newgate-street | 20 0 0 |
| William Thomas, Cheapside | 20 0 0 |
| George Graham and Co., do. | 10 10 0 |
| Lycette and Davies, 39, Gutter-lane | 10 10 0 |
| J. and W. Rutter, 122, Cheapside | 10 0 0 |
| Slater and Coates, 5, Wood-street | 10 0 0 |
| Wild and Margeson, Cheapside | 5 0 0 |
| Carr and Robertson, 130, Wood-street | 1 1 0 |
| Henderson and Co., Cheapside | 1 1 0 |
| Mr. Thompson, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Mr. Paul, 15, do. | 1 0 0 |
| C. J. Fox, Paternoster-row | 1 1 0 |
| Hoyle and Hanson, 88, Wood-street | 5 0 0 |
| G. Perks, Addle-street | 25 0 0 |
| W. Alfrey, 31, Aldermanbury | 1 0 0 |
| B. E. Brown, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Wm. Davies, 15, Fell-street, Wood-street | 1 0 0 |
| John Morley and Son, 18, do. | 50 0 0 |
| Edward Brettle, 119, do. | 100 0 0 |
| Brettle and Co., do. | 100 0 0 |
| Wm. Newton, King's Arms-buildings, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Dewar and Son, do. | 10 0 0 |
| John Frost, 11, do. | 10 0 0 |
| John Bassett, 34, do. | 5 0 0 |
| Henry Hewatson, 55, do. | 5 0 0 |
| Saddington and Co., 63, do. | 1 0 0 |
| J. W. Liggins, 68, do. | 20 0 0 |
| Bennoch and Co., 78, do. | 3 3 0 |
| Thos. Horwill, Silver-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| W. C. Johnson, 110, do. | 0 10 0 |
| T. Millgate, Lad-lane | 1 0 0 |
| W. Alnger, Mumford-court, Milk-street | 1 0 0 |
| W. H. and A. Scott, 37, Old Broad-street | 10 0 0 |
| Henry James Prescott, 55, do. | 10 0 0 |
| Henry Walthman and Co., 52, do. | 2 2 0 |
| Stiebel, Brothers, 51, do. | 2 2 0 |
| Balfour, Brothers, 74, Great Winchester-street | 10 10 0 |
| Henry Read, 27, Austin-friars | 1 0 0 |
| Z. Z. | 1 0 0 |
| William Cox, 16, Pinners' Hall | 1 1 0 |
| H. Marley, 34, Great Winchester-street | 1 1 0 |
| R. B. | 0 10 0 |
| J. B. Phelps, Paternoster-row | 1 1 0 |
| Charles Vyse, Ludgate-street | 1 1 0 |
| Peter Golding, do. | 2 0 0 |
| W. H. Lewis, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Joseph Coulburn, 37, do. | 1 0 0 |
| J. and A. Macfarlane, Old Bailey | 1 1 0 |
| Wm. Smith, 3, Ludgate-street | 1 1 0 |
| Joseph Clow, 7, do. | 1 1 0 |
| John Hassall, 64, St. Paul's Churchyard | 1 0 0 |
| William Bullock, Paternoster-row | 1 0 0 |
| G. R. and J. Hilditch, Ludgate-hill | 3 0 0 |
| Mr. Ives | 0 2 6 |
| B. Steel | 0 5 0 |
| L. Smith | 0 2 6 |
| J. Pedler, 38, Ludgate-street | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Palmer, 61, St. Paul's Churchyard | 0 5 0 |
| J. H. Jones, 61, St. Paul's Churchyard | 0 10 0 |
| F. H. Ridley, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Mr. Piper | 0 10 0 |
| William King, 3, Fore-street-terrace, Edmonton | 1 0 0 |
| Mr. Groombridge, Panyer-alley | 0 10 0 |
| George Virtue, Ivy-lane | 10 0 0 |
| Admiral Sir Edward Codrington, G.C.B., 92, Eaton-square | 1 1 0 |
| John White, grocer, Hounslow | 1 0 0 |
| I. O. U. | 0 6 0 |
| Robt. J. Bagshaw, Sunny-bank, Abergavenny | 2 0 0 |
| Mr. Bridgland, 7, Cheapside | 0 2 6 |
| Master T. Passfield, 18, Cloudeley-street, Islington | 0 2 6 |
| C. J. Hubbard, brewer, Stockwell | 1 1 0 |
| John Pollitt, 11, Penlington-place, Lambeth | 1 0 0 |
| W. C. Fish, 76, St. John-street-road, per J. P. Bur-nard | 1 1 0 |
| G. Sutton, 1, Broad-court, Long-acre | 1 0 0 |
| John Allen, 3, North-crescent, Alfred-place | 1 0 0 |
| P. T. | 0 10 0 |
| Mr. Munro, 25, Little Queen-street | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Taylor Kilway, 24, Barnsbury-row, Islington | 1 0 0 |
| C. C. Black, Marlborough-road, St. John's-wood | 1 0 0 |
| "No man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God" | 1 0 0 |
| A. B., Brighton | 1 0 0 |
| Mrs. Georgiana Poole, 124, Wardour-street | 0 2 6 |
| Pence collected at the Coach and Horses, Water-lane, Fleet-street, per K. Seaman | 0 2 6 |
| R. A. Mould, 9, Lambeth-road | 0 2 6 |
| A. Bauer and Co., Cophall-court | 10 0 0 |
| S. H. Goldsmith, do. | 2 0 0 |
| James Ball, King Edward-street | 5 0 0 |
| A. Friend, not a Leaguer | 5 0 0 |
| Henry Pritchard, 15, Newgate-street | 1 1 0 |
| James Jennings, 25, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Henry Pybus, 23, do. | 0 10 0 |
| George Penson, 43, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Robert Wood, 78, do. | 2 0 0 |
| Miss Sarah Jones, 78, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Edward Hind, 78, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Richard Carter, 3, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Henry Hook, 7, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Charles Grier, 7, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Samuel Cobham, 95, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Chapman, 121, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Francis Edwards, 122, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Stephen Jessup, 23, Bull-and-Mouth-lane | 0 2 6 |
| Small sum | 0 1 0 |
| William Bailey, Abwell, near Berkeley, Gloucestersh. | 1 0 0 |
| John Magrath, 5, Ebenezer-place, Wyndham-road, Camberwell | 0 2 6 |
| Mrs. John Magrath, do. | 0 2 6 |
| H. Jerard, 46, Eastcheap | 0 2 6 |
| T. Smith, jun., 49, do. | 0 2 6 |
| R. Smith, do. | 0 2 6 |
| F. Fisher, 8, Talbot-court, Gracechurch-street | 0 2 6 |
| W. Wesson, sen., 85, Upper Thames-street | 0 2 6 |
| W. Wesson, jun., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Ellery, Kewick, per Mr. Banks | 1 0 0 |
| Charles Day, Hirst, Batley, near Dewsbury, per C. R. Greenwood | 1 0 0 |

| | | | | | |
|--|--------|---|---------|--|---------|
| Robert Wilson, jun., do., do. by, do. | 10 0 0 | Salis Schwabe, 25, Maseley-street, Manchester | 250 0 0 | Chas. and Amos Swaisland, London-road | 100 0 0 |
| J. Pamphilon, 37, Brydgos-street, Covent-garden | 10 0 0 | Thompson and Brothers, do. | 250 0 0 | Jas. Saxton | 2 0 0 |
| Matthew Willis, 14, Royal-street, Lambeth | 0 2 6 | Robert Glass, Beeston-street, Kilmarnock | 0 5 0 | Wm. Clapham | 1 1 0 |
| Oliver Freeman, Stowmarket | 1 0 0 | Thomas Mack, Titchfield-street, do. | 1 1 0 | Thos. Middleton | 0 10 0 |
| R. Pocock, Northcurrie, Edinburgh | 0 5 0 | H. Stevenson, do. | 0 10 0 | John Wood, London-road | 0 10 0 |
| "Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin" | 0 2 6 | Baile Geo. Young, East Shaw-street, do. | 2 2 0 | Henry Gould, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Barnard { Samuel Brooks, Thorngate | 1 0 0 | Provoost J. Brown, Bellebrae Cottage, do. | 1 1 0 | Wm. Newnam, sen., do. | 0 5 0 |
| Castle { John Gascoyne, do. | 1 0 0 | Baile Hugh Wilson, Nelson-street, do. | 1 0 0 | Wm. Newnam, jun., Grove-place | 0 5 0 |
| { John Clark, Bank | 1 0 0 | Baile Jas. Blackwood, Brougham-place, do. | 1 1 0 | Thos. Phillips, sen. | 0 10 0 |
| { Robert Walker, Bridgegate | 1 0 0 | Robt. Blackwood, Wellington-street, do. | 1 1 0 | Thos. Phillips, jun. | 0 10 0 |
| Henry Hunt, York | 0 3 6 | D. R. Andrews, Portland-street, do. | 1 1 0 | Wm. Aldridge | 0 5 0 |
| Cheshire-street { George Murray, chemist | 1 1 0 | Henry Brown, linen draper, High-street, Lawes | 1 0 0 | Mark Clement, sen. | 0 5 0 |
| { Thomas Murray, ironfounder | 1 1 0 | A Friend, do. | 0 5 0 | Mark Clement, jun. | 0 5 0 |
| { John Cawthorne, builder, Lumley, near | 1 1 0 | Do., do. | 0 2 6 | Robt. Shindler | 0 5 0 |
| { Wm. Morrison, surgeon, Pelaw House, near | 1 1 0 | Do., do. | 0 2 6 | Wm. Hubbard | 0 5 0 |
| { R. H. Yea, Whitehall, near | 1 1 0 | Do., do. | 0 2 6 | H. C. Harris | 0 5 0 |
| { James Rutherford, Lambton, near | 2 2 0 | Do., do. | 0 2 6 | John Nash | 0 5 0 |
| Alloa { John Dixon, Foundry | 1 0 0 | Arthur Morris, High-street, Cliffe, do. | 0 5 0 | J. R. Carter | 0 5 0 |
| { D. F. Lambert, Gauberton Mill | 1 10 0 | A. W. Lower, do. | 0 5 0 | Wm. Hato, sen. | 0 5 0 |
| { Gauberton Mill Workmen | 1 1 0 | J. Smith, do. | 0 5 0 | Henry Stevens | 0 5 0 |
| { Kellersbrae Mechanics | 1 0 0 | A Friend, do. | 0 5 0 | Chas. Benton | 0 5 0 |
| { A Farmer's Son | 1 0 0 | J. Evershed, do. | 0 5 0 | John Wasley | 0 5 0 |
| { A Friend | 0 0 6 | Anonymous, do. | 0 2 6 | Matthew Audsley | 0 5 0 |
| Kilmarnock { John Brown, clerk, Young, Glassford, | 1 0 0 | Rev. E. Davies, High-street, do. | 0 5 0 | Thomas Audsley, Grove-place | 0 5 0 |
| { Archibald Bain, cutter, do. | 1 4 0 | A Friend, do. | 0 5 0 | George Woodmansee | 0 5 0 |
| { John Rankin, printer, do. | 1 5 0 | Thomas Davy, 180, High-street, do. | 0 2 6 | James Aldridge, London-road | 0 5 0 |
| { John M'Millan, printer, do. | 2 6 0 | A Friend, do. | 0 2 6 | James Trowbridge | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Graham and Son, High street | 1 1 0 | Wm. Bridger, Brewers' Arms, High-st., do. | 1 0 0 | J. A. Wykes | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend, per H. Macfarlane, jun. | 1 1 0 | Small sums | 0 18 6 | Francis Rolfe | 0 2 6 |
| Dani. Richmond, surgeon, High-street | 1 1 0 | Jas. Wrigley, Bury, Lancashire | 50 0 0 | Wm. Higgs | 0 2 6 |
| William Gibson, of Gibson and Craig | 1 1 0 | Fredk. Curwen, Oxford Cottage, Chippenham | 0 10 0 | Wm. Hill, Bell Inn | 0 2 6 |
| Per George Mitchel, dyer | 1 0 0 | A. Tidman, do. | 0 5 0 | James Robinson | 0 2 6 |
| Thos. Harvey, at Brown & Sharp's, George-st. | 1 0 0 | Wm. Wallis, Bagatelle Cottage, do. | 0 2 6 | Henry Yexley | 0 5 0 |
| John Muir, yarn merchant, Causeyside-street | 1 0 0 | Workpeople, Waterford Factory, do. | 0 13 4 | Charles Clement | 0 5 0 |
| Peter Hay, dyer | 1 0 0 | James Beard, West Mead-lane, do. | 0 2 6 | William Willott | 0 5 0 |
| William Masson, 61, High-street | 1 0 0 | Samuel Robinson, 38, Ancoats-street, Manchester | 1 0 0 | Samuel Willott | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend, per H. Macfarlane, jun. | 1 1 0 | J. Greaves, Ludlow, Shropshire | 1 0 0 | William A. Middleton | 0 5 0 |
| W. A. | 1 0 0 | Abel T. Tillet, King-street, Great Yarmouth | 1 0 0 | Alexander Rattray | 0 5 0 |
| David Hutchison, dyer | 1 0 0 | Walter Reid, Denes, do. | 1 0 0 | William Gould | 0 5 0 |
| Wm. Urie, confectioner, High-street | 1 0 0 | J. W. Shelly, Quay, do. | 1 0 0 | William Skinner | 0 5 0 |
| Robert Langmuir, fisher, Causeyside-street | 1 0 0 | Henry Boulter, North-end, do. | 1 0 0 | James Rattray | 0 5 0 |
| James Vallance, cabinetmaker, Wellmeadow | 0 10 6 | Joseph Bayly, King-street, do. | 1 0 0 | Miss Sarah Buck | 0 5 0 |
| John Spence, Storie-street | 0 10 6 | Jas. Douglas, Market-place, do. | 1 0 0 | Abraham Watson | 0 2 6 |
| Rev. James Banks | 0 10 6 | John Fish, Denes, do. | 1 0 0 | William Sedgwick | 0 5 0 |
| Campbell and Gilmour, plumbers, High-street | 0 10 6 | Wm. Barnes, King-street, do. | 0 2 6 | Robert Thompson | 0 5 0 |
| Cochran and Cross, gliders, do. | 0 10 6 | Wm. N. Burroughs, Market-place, do. | 1 0 0 | Robert Monk | 0 5 0 |
| James Cochran, 69, do. | 0 5 0 | Peter White, North Entrance, do. | 0 10 0 | Thomas Marshall | 0 5 0 |
| M'Farlane and Young, George's-place | 0 5 0 | John Wragg, Row, 128, do. | 0 2 6 | J. J. Bartlett, New Town, Bexley | 0 5 0 |
| Alexander Paterson, grocer, Causeyside-street | 0 5 0 | Dav. Abm. Gourlay, Market-row, do. | 1 0 0 | Alexander Rollings, Bexley-heath | 0 2 6 |
| David Dunbar, shoemaker, High-street | 0 5 0 | Nevill F. Woodrow, do. | 0 1 0 | John Buck | 0 2 6 |
| "A crown to knock them down" | 0 5 0 | Charles May, North Quay, do. | 1 0 0 | William Francis, New Town, Bexley | 0 5 0 |
| Andrew Cross, High-street | 0 5 0 | Francis Robertson, Dundee, per E. Baxter | 1 0 0 | Phillip Purcell, do. | 0 5 0 |
| H. Forrester, shoemaker, High-street | 0 5 0 | "The Labourer is worthy of his Hire," C.-on-M., Manchester | 1 0 0 | Jonathan Carter, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Jas. Reid, at R. M'Arthur and Co.'s | 0 5 0 | Thos. Thomasson, Bolton, 2nd subscription | 107 0 0 | William Clark, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Daniel Mitchell, pawnbroker, High-street | 0 5 0 | Peter Molr, Glendronach, by Huntley, N. B. | 1 0 0 | Wm. Wooldridge, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Robert Adam, fletcher, do. | 0 5 0 | An Enemy to Monopoly | 0 2 0 | Jonathan Monk, Erith | 0 2 6 |
| R. Alexander, Maitland and Alexander's, Wellmeadow | 0 5 0 | J. Rhodes, Tintwistle-in-Mottram, Cheshire | 1 1 0 | Thomas Shearley, Bexley | 0 2 6 |
| John Brown, hosier, High-street | 0 3 6 | Sir Thomas Potter, George-street, Manchester | 200 0 0 | Charles Crockford, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Blair, grocer, Wellmeadow | 0 2 6 | S. T. Harding, Tellow-fold, near Manchester | 1 1 0 | James White, jun., Bexley-lane, Crayford | 0 2 6 |
| John Krakine, grocer, George-street | 0 2 6 | Thos. Barker, Hudson Mill, near Hebdon Bridge | 2 0 0 | W. F. Ellis, Orange-grove, Dartford | 0 10 0 |
| A Friend, per A. Gordon | 0 2 6 | T. Bury, 6, Melbourn-terrace, Salford, Manchester | 1 0 0 | Thos. Newnam, sen., do. | 0 5 0 |
| Archibald M'Fadgen, grocer, George-street | 0 2 6 | J. Barnes and Sons, 60, Cannon-street, do. | 100 0 0 | Henry Powell, do. | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend, per George Mitchell | 0 2 6 | Workmen of Messrs. Manor and Son's, Spink-street Mill, Arbroath | 1 1 6 | Joseph Fitchett, do. | 0 2 6 |
| James Muir, grocer, Charleston | 0 2 6 | John Harrison, Ship-lane, Sadding, Lancashire | 1 0 0 | Alfred Dunkin, High-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| William Pollock, Water Company's office | 0 2 6 | Thomas N. Foster, High-street, Evesham | 1 0 0 | Wm. Aldridge, jun., White-hill, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Alexander Marshall, Gilmour-street | 0 2 6 | George May, Bridge-street, do. | 1 0 0 | Mark Ashdown, White-hill, Dartford | 0 2 6 |
| Robert Douglas, ironmonger, Johnstone, near | 1 0 0 | J. M. Check, do. | 1 0 0 | Wm. Hall, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Cuthbert Nairn, grocer, do. | 1 0 0 | Thomas White, Milk-street, do. | 0 10 0 | J. Huntingdon, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Jas. Sloan, Buck's Head Inn, do. | 1 1 0 | A. New, Vine-street, do. | 1 0 0 | John Audsley, Gartley-place, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Robert Hendrie, 20, Collier's-street, do. | 1 1 0 | A. P. Wright, do. | 0 10 0 | W. J. Audsley, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Robert Lang, do. | 0 2 6 | Working Men and Women, Ebley Mills, Stroud, Gloucestershire | 10 0 0 | S. Giles, sen., Hampden-place, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Archd. Crawford, merchant, Kilbarchan, near | 1 0 0 | John Platt, 98, Great Ancoats-street, Manchester | 0 10 0 | Caleb Hall, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John M'Gregor, agent, do. | 1 0 0 | Wm. Needham, 46, do. | 0 2 6 | Wm. Barton, Malden-lane, do. | 0 5 0 |
| William Love, agent, do. | 1 0 0 | John Boden, Hilton-street, do. | 1 0 0 | Charles Giles, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Peter Barr, merchant, do. | 1 0 0 | David Curtis, Port-street, do. | 1 0 0 | C. Hudson, near the Rising Sun, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Wm. Campbell, surgeon, do. | 1 0 0 | Thomas Read, Down-street, Epworth, Lincolnshire | 1 0 0 | Thomas Phillips, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Robert Kirkland, Townfoot, do. | 1 0 0 | Small subscriptions, Manchester | 0 4 0 | Edward Hancock, the Terrace, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums | 6 10 0 | Saml. Fletcher, 160, Great Ancoats-street, Manchester | 0 2 6 | Charles Merritt, Bexley Heath, Crayford | 0 2 6 |
| Major-General Briggs | 10 0 0 | Wm. Cook, 10, do. | 0 2 6 | Alfred Boulden, Marl-place, Dartford | 0 2 6 |
| Jane Wheatley, One Ash, Rochdale | 0 2 0 | G. W. Kesselmeier, 113, Cannon-street, do. | 1 0 0 | W. C. Pope, No. 9, Bells-row, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Hugh Scott, agent, Larkhall, N.B. | 1 0 0 | Dani. McIntyre, 24, Minshull-street, do. | 1 0 0 | David Dekins, Zinc-mills, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Robt. Boyd, weaver, do. | 1 0 0 | J. Raiton, 57, Piccadilly, do. | 1 0 0 | Leonard Eastland, Wilmington | 0 2 6 |
| Robt. Paterson, do. | 1 0 0 | J. and P. Thornton, Poland-st., Oldham-rd., do. | 1 0 0 | James Eastland, do. | 0 2 6 |
| R. J. Shearer, do. | 1 0 0 | Miles Craston, 105, Market-street, do. | 1 0 0 | Edward Peatley, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums, do. | 1 0 0 | John Evans, 99, do. | 0 5 0 | Thos. Clark, St. Mary Cray | 2 0 0 |
| Gideon Buck, Grape-lane, Whitby | 1 0 0 | Wm. Campin, 224, Great Ancoats-street, do. | 0 5 0 | Rev. P. Broad, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Anderson, Haggergate, do. | 0 10 0 | Henry Ward, 90, Rutland-street, Hulme, do. | 0 2 6 | John Lovelace, New Town, Bexley | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend, per Joseph Anderson, do. | 0 10 0 | Workpeople at T. Barton's Mill, Ardwick, do. | 1 7 1 | Small sums | 2 17 6 |
| Do., per do. | 0 10 0 | Thos. Barton, jun., Ardwick, do. | 0 10 0 | A Friend, by J. Park, 18, Cross-street | 5 10 0 |
| Thomas Turnbull, Church-street, do. | 1 0 0 | Hugh Jones, Bank, Meadow-street, do. | 0 2 6 | Henry Cotton, 133, Church-street | 1 0 0 |
| Richard Hilton, Baxtergate, do. | 0 2 6 | A. Edmeston, 18, Arlington-st., Salford, do. | 1 11 6 | J. Armstead, Old Shambles | 0 5 0 |
| H. Kirke, do. | 0 2 6 | Moses Price, 2, Great George-street, do. | 1 1 6 | John Wilson, Market-place | 0 2 6 |
| W. Weatherall, Church-street, do. | 0 2 6 | Peter Grant, Devise-street, do. | 1 1 6 | Isaac Fearon, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Younghusband, do. | 1 0 0 | Workpeople at Mr. Dovestone's, Tara-st., do. | 1 0 0 | J. Thornley, Cheapside | 0 2 6 |
| Joseph Brown, do. | 0 2 6 | James Duck, Olland-street, Bungay | 0 5 0 | W. Whittam, Legs-of-Man Inn | 1 0 0 |
| Francis Banks, do. | 0 2 6 | Wm. Cuddon, do. | 1 0 0 | H. Booth, Sythes Works | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Wright, Skinner-street, do. | 0 10 0 | C. J. Thomas, do. | 0 2 6 | Martha Harrison, Cross-street | 1 0 0 |
| Jas. Mitter, Haggergate, do. | 0 2 6 | Small sums | 0 8 0 | Mr. Cowell, Old Shambles | 0 10 0 |
| Alex. Robinson, Mount, do. | 0 2 6 | Thos. S. Foxwell, ironmonger, Shepton Mallet | 1 1 0 | Thomas Naylor, Fishergate-hill | 5 0 0 |
| John Rickinson, Bridge-end, do. | 0 5 0 | Copley and Reid, Guildford-street, Leeds | 1 0 0 | Mr. Makin, pawnbroker, Edward-street | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Kinnerley, Bridge-street, do. | 0 2 6 | Thomas Pullen, Bolton, Lancashire | 10 0 0 | J. Thornton, 11, Fryergate | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. D. Morley, Church-street, do. | 0 2 6 | Thomas Hutton | 0 10 0 | Mrs. Haworth, pawnbroker, do. | 0 10 0 |
| A Free-Trader, do. | 0 5 0 | James Wilson | 0 2 6 | Thomas Braver, Market-place | 1 0 0 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 19 0 | A Friend | 0 2 6 | W. Boys, Golden-square | 1 0 0 |
| From a few Lace Makers at Broadland's lace factory, | 1 1 0 | John Rawson | 1 0 0 | John Noble, at Mrs. Grimmeson's, Snow-hill | 1 0 0 |
| Newport, Isle of Wight | 1 1 0 | Benjamin Yeadon | 0 2 6 | R. A. Hogg, Cannon-street | 2 0 0 |
| A. Reid, manufacturer, Langholm, N.B. | 1 0 0 | Mrs. Benjamin Yeadon | 0 2 6 | Richard Dixon, Church-street | 10 0 0 |
| Thos. Grieve and others, do. | 1 0 6 | W. Lee | 0 2 6 | William Sutton | 1 0 0 |
| John Collin and others, do. | 1 0 6 | Isaac Bland | 0 2 6 | W. Threlfall | 1 1 0 |
| John Hope and others, do. | 1 0 0 | George Stansfield, sen. | 0 5 0 | A Friend | 2 0 0 |
| Richard Lattimer and others, do. | 1 0 0 | John Briggs | 0 2 6 | R. and J. Bryning, Fryergate | 5 0 0 |
| Mr. Renwick, manufacturer, do. | 1 0 0 | Wm. Ackroyd | 0 2 6 | James Lawson | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Little, draper, do. | 1 0 0 | James Padgett | 0 2 6 | A Leyland Farmer | 2 0 0 |
| D. Hope and Co., do. | 1 0 0 | John Vint | 0 2 6 | A Friend | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend, do. | 1 0 0 | George Law | 0 2 6 | Robert Arrowsmith, Market-place | 5 0 0 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 2 6 | Samuel Hardaker, Wrose | 0 5 0 | George Stones, Fryergate | 1 0 0 |
| Miss Hilditch, King-street, Wrexham | 1 0 0 | Joseph White, Esboit, (2nd subscription of) | 1 0 0 | T. Haslam | 1 0 0 |
| T. C. Jones, Church-street, do. | 1 0 0 | Small subscriptions | 2 2 6 | A Friend, by J. Linsey | 0 5 0 |
| Mr. Rawson, do. | 1 0 0 | Edward Davy | 1 1 0 | G. T. Almond | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend, do. | 1 0 0 | Wm. Maccall | 1 0 0 | A Friend | 0 2 6 |
| Mrs. Rudlow, Hope-street, do. | 0 2 6 | Wm. Burdge | 0 5 0 | Small sum | 0 1 0 |
| Miss Jobbins, do. | 0 2 6 | John Coudridge | 0 5 0 | Wm. Douglas, 80, Fryergate | 0 5 0 |
| Miss M. A. Jobbins, do. | 0 2 6 | A. Edwards | 0 2 6 | John Walker, 18, Fryergate | 0 5 0 |
| J. Griffiths, Wynnastay-place, do. | 0 2 6 | Giles Edwards | 0 5 0 | Wm. Turner, Shambles | 0 5 0 |
| Robert Ankers, High-street, do. | 0 2 6 | A Friend | 0 10 0 | W. Nelson, 16, Spring-gardens | 0 5 0 |
| M. Jones, Queen-street, do. | 0 2 6 | Small sums | 0 19 10 | Mr. Makin, 40, Oxford-street | 0 2 6 |
| Mrs. T. Davies, Swanwick-street, do. | 0 2 6 | George Croeland and Sons, Crosland-moor | 100 0 0 | John Bright, 80, Church-street | 1 0 0 |
| Arthur Jones, Holt-street, do. | 0 2 6 | J. Hawksworth, Hoyland-swaine, nr. | 1 0 0 | Wm. Dobson, Market-place | 0 5 0 |
| Jas. Lindop, do. | 0 2 6 | Joseph Turner and Co. | 20 0 0 | Richard Hearden, 106, Barton-terrace | 1 0 0 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 8 0 | Aquila Houghton | 20 0 0 | A Friend, Church-street | 0 5 0 |
| Miss M'Farlane, Castle-park, Lanark, N.B., per J. | 1 0 0 | Hallifax, 11th Remit. { Messrs. Stott, Nichol, and Porter | 10 0 0 | A Friend, do. | 0 10 0 |
| W. Borland | 1 0 0 | { J. Ratcliffe, Sowerby-bridge, near | 5 0 0 | A Friend, Taylor's-court | 0 5 0 |
| Joseph Brierley, Crompton-court, Manchester | 1 0 0 | { J. Womersley, Halifax | 2 2 0 | John Blackburn, 4, Fryergate | 0 5 0 |
| Joseph Riley, High-street, Oldham | 1 0 0 | Liverpool, 10th Remit. { Augustus Mongredien, 15, Water-street | 100 0 0 | Wm. Haworth, Temperance Hotel | 2 0 0 |
| R. P. Livingston, Islington-square, Salford, Man- | 5 0 0 | { Thomas Barrow, Barrow-street, St. Helen's, Lancashire | 1 0 0 | Monopoly's Epitaph | 1 1 0 |
| Cheshire { J. Fielding, Derby Arms, Derby-street, Cheetham, do. | 1 0 0 | { J. Nicholson, Mersey Chambers, Old Church-yard | 5 0 0 | A Friend, Cross-street | 0 5 0 |
| { Samuel Bennett, Travis-street, Manchester | 1 0 0 | { Joseph Fletcher, 5, Sir Thomas's-buildings | 10 0 0 | Several small sums | 0 2 6 |
| { Mr. Fisk, St. Alban's, per Charles Gutteridge | 1 0 0 | { John Sutton, 109, Hill-street, Toxteth Park | 0 5 0 | Daniel Atley | 1 0 0 |
| | | | | | |

| | | |
|---------------------------------|---|---------|
| Tewkesbury, Wiltshire. | George Foster, worsted and woollen manu- facturer | 5 0 0 |
| | Foster and Burrows, manufacturers | 5 0 0 |
| | Thomas Haines | 1 0 0 |
| | Thomas Haigh, solicitor, Morbury-bridge | 1 0 0 |
| | Charles Robinson, surgeon | 1 0 0 |
| | Dews and Philipson, at George Foster's ma- nufactory | 5 0 0 |
| | James Killa, manufacturer | 1 0 0 |
| | J. B. Rayner, solicitor | 1 0 0 |
| | John Kere | 1 0 0 |
| | Joshua Williamson, cloth manufacturer | 1 0 0 |
| | William Holt, solicitor | 1 0 0 |
| | John Scholefield, solicitor | 1 0 0 |
| | Edward Craven | 0 10 0 |
| | Wm. Rhodes, of the Fleece Inn | 0 10 0 |
| | John Foster | 0 10 0 |
| | Amicus | 0 10 0 |
| | Joseph Haines, manufacturer | 0 5 0 |
| | James Rayner, do. | 0 5 0 |
| | Bundries | 0 4 6 |
| | A. M'Whannell and Co., 8, North Allion-st. | 1 0 0 |
| Oxford, Fifth Remittance. | Anonymous | 0 2 6 |
| | D. M'Phail and Co., Greenhead | 50 0 0 |
| | Donald M'Phail, do. | 10 0 0 |
| | Wm. Smith, 120, Brunswick-street | 1 0 0 |
| | John M'Cubbin, Cannon-street | 0 5 0 |
| | Workers of W. and A. Taylor, Mile-end | 1 4 6 |
| | Patrick Dawson, Bishop-street | 1 1 0 |
| | James Kay, Greenhill-street | 0 5 0 |
| | Workers of J. W. M'Gregor, Jamaica street | 1 0 0 |
| | Ditto W. Craig and Co., Govan-street, Hutche- son-town | 1 0 0 |
| | J. Campbell, M'Kwan's Sugar-house, Oswald-st. | 0 10 0 |
| | Bundries, per ditto | 0 2 2 |
| | Dickson, Russell, and Co., 21, Wellington-street | 1 1 0 |
| | George Park, 14, Govan-street, Hutchesontown | 1 0 0 |
| | J. B. Finlay, 8, Stevenson-street, Calton | 0 10 0 |
| | Workers of Hill-street Factory, Gallowgate | 0 10 0 |
| | V. H. | 1 0 0 |
| | Harvie and M'Gavin, Washington-street | 1 1 0 |
| | Workers of ditto | 1 8 6 |
| Tunbridge. | Ditto, Bishop Garden Factory, Bishop-street | 2 15 0 |
| | John M'Naughton, Milltown of Campsie, N.B. | 1 0 0 |
| | John Baird, 359 Argyle-street | 1 1 0 |
| | Thomas H. Hunter, 33, St. Andrew-street | 1 1 0 |
| | A Friend to Free Trade | 1 1 0 |
| | Forty Workmen at Milton Foundry | 1 7 0 |
| | Workers of John Smith and Co., Burnbank Factory | 0 12 3 |
| | "Aran Shaw" | 10 10 0 |
| | Wm. Hogle, 62, Hutcheson-street | 1 0 0 |
| | John Geddes, jun., Little Govan | 1 0 0 |
| | Workers of John Geddes and Son, do. | 0 7 3 |
| | Workers of A. Harvey, Govanhaugh | 1 0 0 |
| | Ditto J. and H. M'Adam, Muirhead-street | 1 0 0 |
| | Ditto Henry Knox and Co., Mile-end, per Wm. Kyle | 1 2 6 |
| | Charles D. Stewart, Cross, Renfrew (col. by) | 1 0 0 |
| | Thos. Stewart, Black-row, do. | 1 0 0 |
| | Thos. Buchanan, Main-st., do. | 1 0 0 |
| | J. McIntyre, High-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| | Small sums | 0 1 0 |
| Saddleworth, near Huddersfield. | H. Baker | 0 2 6 |
| | A. B. | 0 2 6 |
| | Rev. J. V. Mummery | 0 5 0 |
| | John Schofield, Shaws, near Up- permill | 1 0 0 |
| | W. S. Broadbent, Uppermill | 1 0 0 |
| | J. Clifton, Carrgate, nr. Delph | 1 0 0 |
| | James Broadbent, Upper Carr, near Dolersoss | 1 0 0 |
| | John Gouldthorpe and Co., Wellington-road | 5 5 0 |
| | William Nixon, Market-place | 1 1 0 |
| | David Howlas, Bankfield Mill | 2 2 0 |
| | James Rawstron, New Zealand-road | 2 2 0 |
| | Thomas Smith, Heston-lane | 0 3 0 |
| | Joseph Rayner, Underbank | 1 1 0 |
| | John Moorcroft, Brinkmay | 0 10 0 |
| | William Moorcroft, do. | 0 10 0 |
| | Three Friends, Chestergate | 1 1 0 |
| | J. D. Fernley, Gaskell-street | 10 0 0 |
| | Wm. Carrington and Friends, Adawood-lane | 1 0 0 |
| | Moorhouse and Pollitt | 1 1 0 |
| Rochdale, 9th Remittance. | Charles Haigh, Broadley, near | 50 0 0 |
| | Robert Tweedale, do. | 20 0 0 |
| | James Dyson, tea dealer | 10 0 0 |
| | John Mason, machine maker | 10 0 0 |
| | John Whitworth, manufacturer, Facit | 10 0 0 |
| | Richard Simpson, roper | 1 0 0 |
| | Edward Tweedale, Broadley | 1 0 0 |

ERRATA.

In LEAGUE, No. 26, for "Carlisle, second remittance," read "Carlisle, third remittance;" and for "John Lonsdale, Journal office, Carlisle," read "Henry Lonsdale, Eterby-street, Stanwix."

WARRINGTON. — FREE-TRADE ASSOCIATION. — A meeting of the general committee of this association was held at the Nag's Head Hotel, on Tuesday evening last: John Rylands, Esq., president, in the chair. It was stated at the meeting that the amount of subscriptions already promised in Warrington to the League Fund was about £160, which it was expected would be made up to £500. Of this sum, £390 had been collected, and paid over to the League. — Manchester Guardian.

KENDAL SUBSCRIPTION TO THE LEAGUE FUND. — The Westmoreland Gazette, with its customary accuracy whenever figures are concerned, has been putting forth some strong statements as to the Kendal subscription to the Anti-Corn-Law League Fund. It denies our assertion, made some time since, that the amount forwarded from Kendal, added to Mr. Warburton's subscription, was upwards of £100, and the evidence it adduces to bear out its own statement is a single copy of the League newspaper. The Kendal subscriptions have been noticed in the League from time to time, as they were transmitted; and not limited to a single publication. The Gazette, consequently, has discovered, as usual, a mare's nest, and nothing more. For the satisfaction of the public, we give below the several amounts forwarded to the League, upon which our statement of the aggregate sum was founded:—

| | |
|--------------------------|----------|
| First subscription | £284 0 6 |
| Second | 20 0 0 |
| Third | 19 1 0 |
| H. Warburton, Esq., M.P. | 100 0 0 |

£423 1 6

And these items are wholly independent of several sums transmitted by the Rev. Edward Hawkes, subscribed by gentlemen in the neighbourhood, amounting, in the whole, to £21, whose last year's contributions were included in the Kendal list. The subscription for this district, consequently, is more than four times greater than it was for the year 1875. These signs of the progress of Free-Trade principles may be very unpalatable to the patrons of the Gazette; but they cannot, nevertheless, be mistaken or gainsaid. — Kendal Mercury.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE OVERWROUGHT NEEDLEWOMEN.

To the Editor of the LEAGUE.

SIR,—In the sad catalogue of diseases to which these poor creatures are liable from sedentary habits, unremitting application, close and crowded apartments, with the want of sufficient and nutritious food, failure or loss of vision is the one most to be apprehended, for with that is lost all prospect even of the scanty subsistence which they are able to procure. It is a terrible calamity even to those who, enjoying home, love to look upon troops of friends, to have "wisdom at one entrance quite shut out." How, then, must they feel to whom the first intimation of decaying vision is the announcement of dark beggary! It is true that nature has furnished the organ of sight with numerous and fine defences. It is the one in which, perhaps, above all others, we most clearly trace the presence of a supreme Artificer; but what defences could provide against the excessive demands which a struggle for mere existence makes upon the sight of a five-farthling shirt sewer? What eyes can stand eighteen hours of continual stitching through the deep gloom of winter, in an apartment where, even in the brightest day, the faint and struggling sunbeam finds nothing to irradiate, and where at night a rushlight, purchased by some pinching privation, only serves to make darkness visible. The consequence is that the failure, and in too many instances the total loss, of vision has sadly increased amongst this unhappy class. In the report of the committee of the North London Ophthalmic Institution for the past year it is stated that the total number of patients in that institution alone during the twelve months was 669, of whom 524 were cured and 38 relieved; 18 were incurable, and 89 remain in attendance. "A large majority of the sufferers," says the report, "were poor women who earn a meagre subsistence by making shirts and clothes for the cheap warehouses; and in these last cases, if timely relief had not been afforded by this institution, blindness would have been added to the miseries of pinching poverty." There is an additional cause for the increase of impaired vision amongst the poorer class of needlewomen which has not been noticed in the report, viz., that in the competition which they are compelled to enter into with the journeymen tailors they sew up coarser and darker fabrics than women were wont to work on. Mantua-makers and milliners, though they suffer much from the exactions of fashion and the cupidity of their employers, generally work on bright-coloured materials, in large, airy, and well-lighted apartments, and, therefore, can form no notion of the greater sufferings endured by her who, for from 4d. to 6d. a day, works up the cheap and dingy dresses of the poor by a light which scarcely enables her to distinguish the thread from the needle, whilst her eyes are blinded with tears, thinking how her five children (fatherless, perhaps,) are to get their morning meal. How much the colour of the work affects the organ of vision will be seen from the following interesting passage taken from "Tyrrill's Treatise on the Eye," vol. 2, page 85:—"My opinions respecting the affections of the choroid tunic have not been formed hastily, but have resulted from careful and close observation of a very large number of cases. They were first established just subsequent to the universally-lamented death of her Royal Highness the Princess Charlotte of Wales, when I had ample opportunity of witnessing and tracing the effects of congestion and inflammation in the choroid. At the period above alluded to, all persons were anxious to evince their sorrow and respect by assuming as early as possible the conventional garb of grief, and, consequently, an unusual quantity of work devolved upon those engaged in dressmaking. It would answer no good purpose to detail here the excessive cruelty which mercenary considerations induced many of the dressmakers to exercise upon their dependents and apprentices, and which led to disturbance, diminution, or destruction of vision in many of these poor and delicate beings. Of the great number of such patients who came under my observation at the London Ophthalmic Hospital and elsewhere, in consequence of disturbance or loss of sight from the cause above mentioned, the majority were affected with musca in various degrees, or impaired vision; in others symptoms of incipient organic change were manifested. Some had inflammation of the choroid and iris, with much obscurity of vision; and in a few the eyes were destroyed as visual organs by the disorganization of the more delicate tunics and humours." Such being the result of a merely occasional excess of labour in extending one of the most fearful of the ills which flesh is heir to, what must be the consequence of the present terrible competition for food, which renders that state permanent. An eminent surgeon, writing on the subject to a humane magistrate, who takes a deep interest in all that relates to the poor, says:—"It appears to me both interesting and important, and has not had sufficient notice bestowed upon it. I am in hopes that something may be done for the poor creatures, for I am keenly alive to their miserable situation; and I shall be truly happy if I can be of any service in attracting public attention to such an important point as the preservation of their eyesight." Now, there is but one way of permanently serving not only this unhappy class, but several others which come within the same category. Open the markets—allow a free interchange of labour and food—let the professional classes throw their important weight into the scale now, whilst the balance vibrates between Free Trade and Monopoly, and the working classes would be able to procure a comfortable subsistence, without that terrible strain upon their physical powers which nature never fitted them to endure.

J. O'LEARY.

SHAP PRO-CORN-LAW PETITION.—The signatures to this petition are but slowly affixed, we understand; and some of those which are procured are got under pretexts not exactly conformable with fact. At Kirkby Lonsdale it has been represented as a petition to Parliament to prevent the farmers and labourers from being ruined; and where any curiosity has been expressed to hear the contents of the document, the answer has been that it was too long to read, but that it would be for the benefit of the party applied to, to sign it. We have the name of one party who signed, on the requisition of Mr. Gregg, that did not even know the nature of the paper handed to him; and who says he would have done anything rather than sign a petition for "dear bread." — Kendal Mercury.

A WEEK IN WINDSOR FOREST.

BY ADAM BROWN.

No. III.—Prince Albert's Farm continued.—Causes of Poor Agriculture; Suggestions for its Reformation.

No complaint is more frequently uttered amid the many complainings of the farmers than that of the soil being capricious and unmanageable. It is either too dry or too wet; too light or too heavy; composed of too much sand or too much clay. Nor is this complaint unfounded. It is hardly possible for farmers to exaggerate their troubles arising from the intractability of the soil. What can be more perplexing to a farmer than the result of that seeming freak in which Nature has indulged in Windsor Forest? There is Flemish Farm, of 350 acres, whose soil is a tenacious, wet, ill-tempered clay, so unmanageable as to be a complete heart-break to the man who is answerable for its cultivation. And there is Norfolk Farm, two miles distant, consisting of 400 acres or upwards, whose soil is a dry sand, which in every season but a wet one is not less a heart-break to its cultivator.

Neither of these two men, the Prince's bailiffs, have rents to pay; but the absence of rent does not make the load which lies upon a bailiff's shoulders the lighter. The bailiff of any gentleman will aspire at doing something more than another farmer, not only for his own professional credit, but because it is expected of him; at all events he will not be content with doing less. But we must not look at the personal troubles of the bailiffs of Flemish and Norfolk Farms only. The cheery clay of the one and the arid sand of the other are vexatious enough; but they are only typical of the whole of England. The farmers of England, of Scotland, and of Ireland, are, as a body, troubled with the same troubles. Look at Cheshire, its banks of sand, its valleys of clay. Look at Staffordshire; rushy, wet, unmanageable Staffordshire. And look at Lincolnshire. Arthur Young says in his account of it, "In attempting to give a general idea of the soil of this very extensive county, I must premise that no one can be named that contains a greater variety; for it may truly be said to include all the sorts of land that are to be found in the whole kingdom."

And go to which counties we may, we shall see the same varieties of soil vexing the farmers of every parish with contrarieties, until they have no relief but to fill their glasses and light their pipes, and forget their troubles if they can. Are we to be surprised, then, that the farmers, hearing Lord Stanley pleading for protection to them from competition by urging that they are not on a level with the manufacturer, because he can make his workshop and the commodity in which he works suitable to each other, while the farmer has no control over soils and seasons (Speech at Liverpool July, 1841)—are we to be surprised at farmers believing Lord Stanley? Lord Worsley too, in Lincolnshire, that county of many soils, takes up the echo of Lord Stanley's voice and repeats it in Parliament, that the English farmer cannot compete with the foreigner, because he cannot overcome the difficulties of soils and seasons in this variable climate which sits upon so variable a soil.

And those sentiments are again and again repeated by men of every capacity of mind and amount of influence, until the tenant-farmers are filled and covered with fear and trembling. The cry is, day after day, year after year, Protection. That unmanly and unnatural word, which is a satire upon the boasted and justly boasted success of Englishmen when left to the freedom of their own energies, is repeated until the poor farmers, like children in the dark, are afraid to move a foot, or whisper, or breathe. If left to themselves, they might dare to venture beyond the door-step, and see that there is no ghost; round the corner, and see that there is no robber with a bludgeon and a dark lantern; into the road, and see that there are no resurrection-men to put plasters on their mouths, to carry and sell them to the doctors; but not only are they frightened by the everlasting cry of ghosts, fairies, witches, robbers, resurrectionists, burkers, and "boomen behind the bed that carry away little children that won't be good and hold their tongue and lie still and sleep;" they are held in strings by the foolish nurse that frightens them, and not permitted the use of their own faculties. For political purposes their dependence on landlords and agents is so complete by the uncertainty of tenures, that they cannot help themselves if they knew how.

It is not surprising that they do not move in the field of science and general improvement; it would be a wonder that the world has never seen if they did. If they followed their professional avocations otherwise than with the feebleness of the protected step, the feebleness of infancy and decrepitude, they would belie the laws of nature. They do not. As a limb bandaged compared with a limb that is free is feeble and imperfect in its service to the body, so are they. The agriculture of England is a Chinese foot compared with every other branch of industry. Those men who make its bandages—whose petted playing thing it is—who would alter its natural form at the expense of the general health—those men who, if they treated a forest oak physically as they treat agriculture morally, would put it in a glasshouse to give it health and hardness; those men who would foster their own trade of corn-growing, cattle-feeding, and butter and cheese-making, by a tax on the trade of iron and coal-mining, spinning and weaving, shipping, and every other element of commerce, are themselves in respect of enterprise, professional knowledge, and personal industry, like the hopeful son who has pocketfuls of money from his mother, which he goes forth to spend instead of earning an income for himself. Those men are like this hopeful son, not overburdened with money even though it is got easily. It comes easily and it goes the same. If all the youths of the country who have been accustomed to have their pockets filled by indulgent mothers and fathers and uncles, instead of being taught the value of preparing to depend on their own resources—had the legislative power been in their hands, they would doubtless pass a law for their own protection against the virtuous and economical scruples of those relatives who saw they neglected their own interests by depending on the aid of others.

The Flemish and Norfolk Farms in Windsor Forest exemplify the general character of agriculture. It would be unjust to reflect on any individuals connected with those farms, because those with power have not been long enough connected with them to make much alterations, supposing them to have the requisite knowledge and inclination; and those who have been long enough connected with them, as respects time, have not had the power to do more than they have done. Still we must make those two farms the subject of particular as well as general remark.

In the one, clay predominates; in the other, sand: the clay is wet; the sand is dry. The season that would be sufficiently dry for the clay would scorch the crops of the sand; the season that would be wet enough for the sand would make a puddle of the clay: the consequence is, that a season of medium weather suits both of them best, though it is hurtful to both. An extreme season, whether wet or dry, would answer one of them best. But we have no power over seasons; Lord Stanley proclaims that, and he speaks truth. We cannot bid rain come nor wind blow—clouds disperse nor sun shine. We cannot command the dry weather that would make Flemish Farm fruitful and Norfolk Farm a desert; nor can we command the moisture that would make the latter a garden and the former a bog. Is it not a blessing that we cannot? What strife, and war, and desolation there would be if the dispensation of showers and sunshine were in mortal hands instead of the hands of the All-wise and All-mighty!

But, if we have not the power of adapting the seasons to ourselves, have we not the power of adapting ourselves to the seasons? Have we no help but to stand on the clayey soil and lament the wet summer which our fellow-creature on the sandy soil rejoices in? Shall we stand on Flemish Farm and say, "Last year, 1843, the turnips could not be sown because the months of May and June were so wet; that, consequently, this winter there have been no turnips for the sheep and cattle, which there would have been had May and June been dry?" Shall we say this, and, pointing to Norfolk Farm, say, "How favoured that was, at less than two miles distance! How uncertain is the weather!—how capricious the soil! Even that hill rising on the very border of clayey Flemish Farm—that hill crowned with the tower and keeper's house, distant less than half a mile from the farm homestead—that hill is dry sand! See how that tells against the farmer! Clay here and sand there, while the weather comes he never knows how—never suitable to both soils!" Shall we say this of the soils of Windsor Forest, or of any other, like them, so different? Shall we say so and be sinless?

Should we not rather exclaim, "How bountiful and full of goodness and wisdom is God! There, at our very hand, is the sandy hill piled aloft, offering itself to us to mingle with our clay to form a new soil, of a quality suited to any season?" Should we not say, "The wisdom of God kept from us the power of administering the weather, because no particular kind of weather would answer our neighbour's different soil and different interest, though it might answer our own. But the goodness of God gave us a variety of soils, that we might each adapt them to his own local interest, receiving the weather from the Ruler of all as best suited to all?"

If soils can be amalgamated, so as to make the seasons neither hurtful to the clay nor the sand, we gain the same end that we would gain by a command over the weather, without the danger that would attend our human administration of it. If soils can be amalgamated and modified, seasons will be no longer adverse, and Lord Stanley's plea for a monopoly to the British cultivator will be groundless, supposing it to have been well grounded, which it was not. But if soils can be so amalgamated and adapted to seasons, that will not be the least of the evils of exclusive legislation in favour of the land monopoly, which has rendered the farmers incapable of using the elements of nature as placed within their reach.

We have complained of crippled commerce, because we cannot exchange those commodities which we have to dispose of for those which we want, and which they have to give who would take ours. We have complained that millions of our population are compelled to endure dearth and scarcity, whereby they are not only unable to buy those clothes and furniture, their not buying which makes bad trade, little employment, and low wages; and that by this dearth and scarcity, bad trade and low wages, they have been unable to purchase more than one-fourth, probably less, of the bread, butter, and cheese, and meat and vegetables, which they would purchase if they were in full employment, with provisions at a moderate price and regularly supplied. And, further, we have complained that when an abundant English harvest has supplied our markets, after several years of dearth and poverty, the population has been too poor to buy and supply their wants, and thus farmers have been obliged to sell at lower prices than they would have done, even with far greater abundance, had the people been in a condition to buy.

But while enduring those evils, and complaining of them, we have endured another not so much complained of, because not so well understood. By the operation of the Corn Law, together with the political influence which obtained its enactment, all agricultural energy has been prostrated. Those who do not know what undeveloped wealth lies in the soil of which they are owners, have been by that protection made content never to know. Those who know, as occupiers, have been prevented from trying by the want of capital and security of tenure. And such uncertainty of tenure prevails, because, to maintain sufficient parliamentary power, the farming tenants have been placed in a position where they cannot disobey the landlord's will, or that of his agent and political connexions. Thus it has been that moneyed capital, inventions, science, enterprise, and perseverance, have allied themselves with manufactures and commerce, and left agriculture standing where it was in the days of our great grandfathers. Though the rent of land and the prices of its products have greatly increased, the increase has been entirely owing to the greater number of people who now exist and derive their ability to buy food from manufacturing and commercial employment, over those who lived in the days of our great-grandfathers. Though more corn grows now than grew then, it is because more acres are ploughed and sown, not that more corn is produced upon an acre.

To this there may be some few exceptions, both as respects the production of corn and cattle; but those exceptions prove the case. The fact that some few cultivators can produce larger quantities of corn and cattle than have ever before been produced on the same space of ground, while the great body of agriculturists cannot, because they never try; never trying, because they have not the knowledge; not having the knowledge, because they have not the means of obtaining it, nor the power of putting it to exercise, proves that agriculture stands still, and is without an impulse and a power to advance.

It is not so with manufactures and commerce. Any discovery for spinning finer yarn, weaving more cloth, dying faster colours, extracting more iron from the ore, pumping more water from the mine, moving ships against wind and tide, or reducing the time of travelling 100 miles to the time of travelling 20: any discovery of such power is at once sought for and eagerly adopted by all who spin, weave, dye, melt iron-stone, sink mines, send ships to sea, or deal in inland traffic. To produce a piece of the cotton print which the wife of a farm-labourer buys at 6d. a yard from a shopkeeper who bought it at 4d. from a merchant who had it from the printworks at 4d., not only has the most complicated and expensive machinery been in action, the making and keeping in repair of which, and the getting of the materials to make it and keep it going, employs more human labour than was employed at the loom when such machinery was unknown, and the labourer's wife could not wear cotton print because she could not buy it; but there are not less than a hundred pair of human hands through which that piece of print and the materials of which it is made have come before it goes out of the printworks at 4d. a yard! But more: to obtain the materials of which it is made the four quarters of the globe have been ransacked. Going and returning, forty thousand miles of ocean have been traversed, and all the storms and contrarities of seasons and weather encountered and overcome, besides inland transit on rivers, roads, canals, and railways. America supplies the cotton, India the indigo, Africa the gum, and France the madder. Incessant perseverance in commercial enterprise, and deep study in chemistry and mechanics, have led to those great results—those moral invasions and conquests of time, space, prejudice, ignorance, national poverty, and individual nakedness.

And all this has been done because there was no "protection" to commercial enterprise, nothing on which the adventurer could rely but his own success. Had the merchant been promised his price and his profit by some act of Parliament, in return for some vote by some agent of a superior who had the power of compelling him to vote or relinquish his ship and warehouse; had he been compelled to believe that the act of Parliament could give him a price and find him customers on penalty of losing his ship and warehouse, while in reality the act of Parliament, could do no such thing; had he been compelled to surrender the largest share of his profits to the owner of the ship or warehouse before he was repaid the expenses of his voyage; had he been compelled to surrender the cargo, for which he had paid to the shipowner, because he could not pay the exorbitant freightage of one-third or one-half of the whole value of the cargo, he would never have gone nor sent a ship to sea at all. He would have sat down and smoked his pipe of home-grown tobacco; and cotton, and madder, and gum, and indigo would, like the product of which they are the raw materials, have been unknown.

The manufacturer, under the same circumstances, would have been equally enfeebled and reduced to nothing. Had he been prevented from expending capital by the uncertainty of whether he or another would reap the profit, at the same time that he was taught not to depend on his own exertions but on some illusory act of Parliament which year after year cheated him, and never fulfilled the promise of those who bade him depend on it, he would have been in the same predicament as the farmer is, and would have been equally unable to help himself out of poverty and dependence.

It is objected by those who would befriend the farmer by keeping him as poor and dependent as he now is; who would make farming a profession requiring the very lowest amount of capital and intellectual ability; who would, in short, protect the farmer, that to go and hurl sand and hills down upon the clayey valleys, or to raise clay from below the sand to put on the light soil, or to make any other mixture in any other way, might do great mischief, as the sand, or gravel, or clay of one district might be different in quality from the same earths in another district. Now, this objection is most fully granted. A farmer might ruin a soil by trying to change its nature without fully ascertaining the component parts of the earths he was transposing. But he would, at the worst, be on a footing with the manufacturer, who must study practical chemistry and use his knowledge every day, and seek to obtain more knowledge for to-morrow.

There are, however, other objections which the farmer cannot overcome of himself, neither by moneyed capital, talent, practice of chemistry, nor any amount of personal enterprise and perseverance. He must first be emancipated from the feudalism of tenancy-at-will. He must know that he has a lease long enough to be repaid the profit of his expended capital; and he must have security to that effect as clear and undoubted as is the merchant's freightage of a ship.

For this end, it is necessary to address the landowners, and not the occupiers at present. The owners can emancipate the occupiers if they will, and put them on a tenure sufficiently secure and comprehensive to enable them to do what the land requires. They must not be prevented by a bond and penalties, as now, from digging sand and gravel and clay; they must be directed to do so. They must not be prevented from breaking up old grass meadows, from lopping hedgerow trees, stubbing up old hedges, and clearing away the one half of all hedges where the enclosures are so small as a very few acres; they must be taught to do so.

It is with great satisfaction that I see his Royal Highness Prince Albert occupying land as a farmer; and particularly so, that he occupies that which is so well suited for a great demonstration of what can be done by the formation of new soils. Anything that may be executed under the sanction of the Prince will be sure to attract attention. It is often said, but I hope from thoughtlessness only, that gentlemen holding eminent positions in society might be better employed than in dabbling in farming matters. In this spirit of thoughtlessness in some, perhaps from an unhappy party spirit in others, we have seen the Prime Minister ridiculed and caricatured for his speech at Tamworth in his tenantry, which, in my opinion, was one of the most valuable addresses, the importance of the subject and the position of the speaker considered, which was ever delivered on the subject of agriculture. There is so much to be done, so little has been done, and we are a people so ready to follow leaders of eminence, and to pay respect to rank and power and wealth, that any disposition on the part of the exalted and wealthy to lead us in a right direction should be hailed with satisfaction rather than ridiculed and deprecated.

The Prince gives proof of his desire to be distinguished in farming through the feeding of cattle to compete for a public prize; but I take leave to say that there is little room for distinction in this line; it is already overdone. Excessive feeding can do nothing more than show what amount of beef certain breeds of cattle and certain kinds of food are capable of producing. This is so far good, because it shows farmers what kinds of cattle are the most profitable; but it is not a profitable speculation for tenant-farmers generally. Therefore distinguished leaders in agriculture should aim at doing something which combines public usefulness with private and personal profit.

I do not think, if all England had been examined and selected from, a better locality for a great trial of a transposition of soils could have been found than that of Flemish Farm. It is a cold, wet, obstinate clay, and earth of the opposite quality is in great abundance on its very border. Success on such a soil will prove much more than it would prove on a richer soil. It was remarked to me that the Prince had made a mistake in choosing those two farms—the one extreme in sand, the other extreme in clay—instead of another which he might have had in the neighbourhood, the soil of which is a rich medium loam.

This last would have doubtless made the high feeding of cattle more easy—the attainment of prizes more frequent; but the very utmost that the Prince could do in those respects would be nothing more than to rival Lords Spencer, Hatherton, and other eminent feeders. To do this would be no small success; but, in my humble opinion, to do what an agriculturist has yet done—to make a poor soil rich—an obstinate clayey soil an easy friable loam; and to do this on a scale large enough to be a public example, and at an expense moderate enough to be within the compass of a tenant-farmer's means, would be a great triumph—a high personal honour—a vast, an unspeakable public benefit.

In the first place there must be a chemical analysis of the soils to ascertain if they would be friendly and fruitful, if united. This ascertained,—and there are ninety-nine chances to a hundred that the chemical inquiry would be answered in the affirmative,—there must be people employed to survey, plan, and execute the work, not as jobbers upon royal property, running up a coat which no other farmer would dare to encounter, as has before now been the case on this very farm. The expense must be the current wages of the neighbourhood; and every penny paid, every load of earth carried, and every yard of space travelled over with the load, must be carefully noted, together with the fruits and profits of the farm in succeeding years; else it will be no example for the imitation of other farmers. If it cannot be executed at an expense within the certainty of profit, it should not be tried; at least not with the view of being held up to public imitation. Hitherto, most landowners and experimental agriculturists who have bred and fed cattle for shows have done so at an expense that deterred tenant-farmers from following them; but most of those projects have been unsuited to tenant-farmers under any circumstances, and particularly so under an insecure tenure—the common tenure of England. It may therefore be at once stated that such a reformation and enrichment of the soil—such a revolution in agriculture as that suggested for Flemish Farm—can never be effected on the property of any landowner who prefers parliamentary influence through the Chandon clause of the Reform Act—through the enthrallment and subjugation of his tenants—to good cultivation, well-paid rents, and an enterprising, independent tenantry.

It may be urged that the success of this scheme on Flemish Farm would not prove its practicability elsewhere, because the adverse substances to be united are nearer to each other there than in most other parts of England. This is true. But on Flemish Farm there are no roads; neither are there stones or gravel to make them. There are also declivities to be overcome. And without roads the work cannot be executed.

I inquired about the roads, and was told that an estimate of the expense of making good roads to and through the farm had been drawn up and laid before the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, who, frightened at its amount, declined to undertake the task. The sum was £1600. Now, the truth is, that if this sum, or a sum double or treble the amount were expended on roads on that farm, no lines of communication could be made at all suitable to the project of amalgamating the old soils and forming a new one. Common roads will not do; the labour of horses would be too expensive. But there is a great abundance of timber on and around the farm; there is too much of it in some parts, and it would be a benefit to cut it up even to burn it. But, supposing it to be valuable, it belongs to the commissioners, who stand in the position of landlord to the royal occupier of the farm; and it is for the landlord's benefit that the farm is improved in value. This timber may be got on easy terms. It may be sawn into planks and blocks, and wooden railways formed of it. The trunk lines permanent; the branch lines moveable; so that the great expense of horse labour, and much of the mischief done to the wet soil by loaded wagons, would be saved. One horse would draw as much on those tramways as six horses on common farm roads; especially roads made of the loose gravel, which is alone obtainable in that part of the country. Moreover, the moveable branches would carry the wagons into the fields over the soft soil. And when the work was completed they would be preserved for the conveyance of manure at a future time, which would cause a permanent saving of horses.

The full benefit of increased employment to agricultural labourers; the full benefit of new soils and great crops to the country; the full benefit of revised and reformed tenures, which would be rendered imperative on the part of the landlords to the tenantry,—none of these can be told at the present time. But that the benefit will be great; that the profit to the owners and occupiers of land will be great; that such a change in agriculture will be undertaken and accomplished, I am as sure of as of my existence. Everything is tending to it. The introduction of new capital into the cultivation of the soil; the arousing of dormant energies; the independency of tenure; and the infusement of that enterprise into agriculture which has distinguished commerce and manufactures, are all in rapid preparation. If his Royal Highness takes a lead in showing what can be done for agriculture in this respect, he will command esteem and gratitude for his enterprise, in addition to the respect which he already enjoys for his amiable and virtuous character.

P.S.—I, as a mere agricultural man, owe some apology to the usual readers of this paper for going into the arguments for Free Trade, which I have gone into in this letter, as those have been so frequently and so much more ably stated by others. But in introducing my statement of those means of improvement which I consider indispossible to the future welfare and greatness and glory of agriculture, I could not refrain from putting forth the opinions which I have here done somewhat diffusely. Those opinions in brief are, that agriculture has lingered in poverty and feebleness behind all other English enterprises, because of the insecurity and enthrallment of the tenantry; that this has enabled the landowners to enact the Corn Law, thereby deluding themselves and the farmers with the promise of high prices that cannot be kept up; depending on other resources for profit than on their own capital, skill, and energy. And lastly, that the general reformation of agriculture must and will be dated from the time of its being emancipated from "protection." At which time, and not sooner, the great body of the people will be enabled to buy and consume a sufficient quantity of agricultural produce; thus creating a steady market for our farmers, which they have never had, and cannot have under the fluctuating Corn Law, which is the parent of poverty and all the evils that attend poverty in a commercial country.

AGRICULTURE.

THE QUESTION OF RENT.

At a meeting of monopolists held in the Town-hall of Dunmow, in Essex, at which "300 persons, principally farmers," are said to have been present—though by what process of compression it was contrived to pack 300 living persons into the Town-hall of Dunmow we leave to those who have seen that modest structure to imagine—a Rev. Mr. Shepherd is reported to have "expressed his warm approbation of the course pursued by the Central [Anti-League] Society, which was calculated to counteract the arts of the League." Now, Mr. Shepherd, good easy man, may be satisfied; but he must be a simple person, and he must have relied with no small confidence on the simplicity of his audience, to have asserted that the "course pursued by the Central Society" in any degree counteracted the efforts of the Free-Traders. That the Central Society is actually yet in being, a curt report which appeared one day last week in the Morning Post furnishes the only evidence. From that report alone the public learned that "the general committee of the 'Agricultural Protection Society' was held at the Duke of Richmond's house in Portland-place," which was attended by certain lords, gentlemen, and farmers as per list. That list was a curiously-tessellated collection of landlords and land-agents, members of Parliament, and half-bred farmers, who arranged to take rooms in Bond-street; appointed a secretary, and fixed his office hours at the genteel limit of "from ten to four daily;" reports were received; letters from the country read, and so forth. But the most remarkable circumstance communicated to the committee was, "that in addition to the favourable opinion already given by Mr. Platt, a case had been submitted to Mr. F. Kelly and Mr. Talbot, and their joint opinion has been given decidedly that the society is perfectly legal in itself, and its rules in conformity with the act of Parliament." So that it seems the monopolists have not yet recovered from their fright at the desperate energy of their own resolves, and therefore fortify their courage with two more lawyers' opinions. This is literally childish. But did not the learned gentlemen who have given these opinions somewhat mistake the wishes of their sensitive clients? Did not the leaders rather wish for an unfavourable opinion, to escape from their present ludicrous position? This, however, we learn, that the Central Society of Monopolists is still in being, and that it is doing all it can to stem the current in favour of Free-Trade opinions, which is—nothing. And if the Central Society is doing nothing, its progenitor in Essex seems to be helping it most vigorously.

Will it be believed, that at the meeting at Dunmow, on Tuesday last, all the stale silliness about it being the object of the League, in advocating free trade in corn, to lower wages and ruin the agriculturists, was gravely reiterated; while not a syllable was uttered upon the subject of Lord Radnor's speech at the Covent-garden League meeting on the previous Wednesday? Here was a landlord, ay, and a good landlord, presiding over a Free-Trade meeting; delivering one of the most clear and convincing speeches of the day in refutation of monopolist fallacies; maintaining, by the most conclusive reasoning, that free trade in corn is indispensable to the prosperity of agriculture and the safety of landed property; and yet these fire-eating monopolists of Essex have nothing to say in reply! Then, at the same meeting, Mr. Lattimore's and Mr. Hunt's speeches, in which the tenant-farmers' case against the Corn Laws were so ably stated, are passed over as if such things had not been. Mr. Lattimore is an occupier in an adjoining county, is probably known, by repute at all events, to most of those present, certainly to the chairman, Mr. Baker, yet no attempt was made to refute his arguments. It was not by evading all argument that the League succeeded in spreading Free-Trade opinions. But the Monopolists dare not really enter the arena of public discussion in defence of artificial scarcity, bad farming, low wages, and high rents—all which evils are implied in the Corn Laws. Their counter-agitation, so far as it affects to act upon opinion, is all a sham. As a screw upon the tenants it is more real and effectual.

But there was one most characteristic trait elicited at the Dunmow Monopolist meeting. Mr. Baker, stung by the inquiry and discussion just commenced on the Rent question, threw off the mask he has affected to wear, and came out in his true character of land-agent,—the ardent, if not very discreet, defender of monopoly rents, that is, high rents from low produce. After alluding to Mr. Cobden's statement of the proportion of the saleable produce of a farm which goes to the landlord as rent,—though, forgetting to mention Messrs. Paget's reassertion of the facts,—and after criticising Lord Worsley's calculation as little less objectionable to Monopolists than Mr. Cobden's, Mr. Baker made the following statement of the incomes and outgoings of an Essex farm. He said:—

"He had taken some pains and trouble to dissect these accounts, and to produce one strictly founded on the truth, which he was sure was better than any exaggeration. His calculation was made upon a farm of 100 acres held upon the tenure and conditions usual in that county. There would then be 25 acres in wheat, 25 in barley and oats, 25 beans, peas, &c., and 25 fallow. He would estimate the 25 acres under wheat would produce three and a half quarters per acre, which would amount to 87 quarters and a half at 52s. per quarter, which would give £227 10s.; 25 acres under oats and barley, he would estimate the barley at four quarters to the acre, and the oats at five, he would average them at 4½, which, at 32s. and 22s. respectively, would produce £151 17s. 6d.; 12½ acres with peas and beans would produce 50 quarters at 28s., amounting to £70.; 12½ acres in clover, at £2 10s. per acre, would amount to £31 5s., and the remaining 25 in fallow, half of which might be in turnips at £2 10s. per acre, would yield £31 5s., making a total of receipts from one hundred acres of arable land of £511 17s. 6d.

Let us remark, that, if such be the only produce of one hundred acres of arable land in Essex—and we believe it not far from the truth—it bespeaks a very low state of husbandry. But, passing that, let us see at what he estimates the expenditure. He said:—

"They all knew, for he was addressing practical men, that one hundred acres of land required four men and a boy, besides the farmer's own labour. A farm of that extent also would require four horses. The account would stand thus:—

| | |
|---|-------------|
| Labour | £120 |
| Keep of four horses | 80 |
| Seed | 50 |
| Tithes, 6s. per acre, poor-rates, 5s. ditto, taxes, &c. | 55 |
| Mechanics and incidentals | 20 |
| Tenant's profit and interest of capital | 100 |
| Rent | 100 |
| Total | £525 |

Now, taking this estimate, the oats, the beans, the peas, the turnips, and the clover must be necessarily consumed on the farm to keep up even that degree of fertility on which the above estimate is framed, and therefore cannot properly form any portion of the saleable produce of the farm. So, also, must seed corn be deducted from that produce, which would be, according to the Essex system, at least three bushels of wheat, and three and a half bushels of barley and oats per acre. The tithe, on the other hand, must be added to the rent. According to this corrected statement of Mr. Baker's own figures, the result will stand thus:—

| | |
|---|------------------|
| Wheat, 25 acres, 28 bushels per acre, at 52s. | £227 10 0 |
| Deduct 3 bushels seed per acre | 24 4 0 |
| Barley | 75 13 4 |
| Deduct seed, 3½ bushels per acre, at 32s. | 17 0 0 |
| Total, saleable produce | £261 19 4 |

Rent, according to Mr. Baker's estimate, is 20s. per acre, or, for one hundred acres, £100, to which add the tithe, at 6s. per acre, £30, will make the total of the landlord's and parson's rent just £130, or, as nearly as possible, one half the saleable produce of the farm. But we know that in Essex, land, on which 28 bushels of wheat per acre are grown under such a rotation of crops as that assumed in Mr. Baker's calculation is commonly let at full 25s. per acre, so that the rent and tithe-rent would really be £25 more than his estimate. Thus—

| | |
|---|------------------|
| Saleable produce | £261 19 4 |
| Rent at 25s. per acre, tithe 6s. per acre | 155 0 0 |
| Balance | £106 19 4 |

or something less than the sum said to be required in payments for labour. But suppose the farmer, instead of consuming all his oats, beans, peas, and clover, should sell so much of those articles as would give him, say, £60 more of saleable produce; and that will only bring him up to the point of having a sum for all other purposes than rent, equal to that paid as rent. This is the way in which Mr. Baker, in his zeal for his employers the landlords, shows that:

"The rent [in Mr. Cobden's estimate] was put at that large sum in the endeavour to prove that the landlord was a cormorant, who devoured all. It was done with a view of separating the tenants and labourers from the landowner, that they might fall an easier prey to the selfish designs of that grasping and selfish body the Anti-Corn Law League."

Said we not well, that the ached-monopolists had in Mr. Baker a defender more zealous than discreet?

MR. COBDEN AND THE RENT QUESTION.

We have observed in the speech of Mr. Fullerton, at the late Rotherham Protection meeting, the following clumsy attempt to mystify Mr. Cobden's very plain statement respecting the quantity of produce which is sold off a farm:—

"The third and last event to which he should allude was the speech of Mr. Cobden in the House of Commons, on Monday night last, in which he stated that the man who reaped 400 acres of land at 40s. per acre would only have 10 bushels per acre to sell. ('Absurd.') He (Mr. Fullerton) was addressing farmers, and the way in which they would express it would be three loads and a half per acre; but he wished to ask them, would it be credited that any man who professed to know anything of farming, should have the folly to declare that the man who paid 40s. an acre could grow no more than 10 bushels per acre?" (Cries of "Absurd.")

The shortest way of proving how completely the speaker perverted Mr. Cobden's language and meaning is to give the words from his speech as published by Ridgway:—

"I calculate that an arable farm, on an average, does not yield for sale, of every kind of produce, more than equivalent to 10 bushels of wheat per acre; so that a farm of 500 acres would not dispose of more than what is equivalent to 5000 bushels." It requires a great stretch of charity to believe that Mr. Fullerton did not intentionally misrepresent Mr. Cobden when he declared him to have said that, "a man paying 40s. an acre could grow no more than 10 bushels per acre," for the latter gentleman, in the very same breath, explains his mode of calculation in the following words:—

"It must be borne in mind that every acre of a farm pays rent, although, probably, not more than one acre in three, and in the best farming not more than one in four, is in the same year devoted to the growth of wheat; whilst a part of the farm is generally in permanent pasture. My mode of calculation, then, is this: ascertain the money value of the whole produce of every kind sold in a year; find how many quarters of wheat it is equal to at the price of the year; and next divide the total number of quarters by the number of acres in the farm, and the result will give you the quantity of wheat sold off each acre in the year."

Whilst upon this subject we may notice an objection raised by a correspondent, who draws our attention to the fact that Mr. Paget's farm of 400 acres (the case quoted by Mr. Cobden in his speech) is stated to yield a disposable produce to the amount of £1590, "which is more than ten bushels to the acre at the present price of wheat." True; but Mr. Paget's farm pays 40s. an acre rent, and sends produce to market equal to 12½ bushels of wheat per acre at 52s. per quarter: it is above the average quality, and raises corresponding crops. What will be the disposable yield off farms paying 12s., 15s., or 20s. an acre? Mr. Cobden spoke of the average of farms; and in saying that they send to market produce equal to ten bushels of wheat for every acre, we think he exceeded the amount. Let the tenant-farmers reckon for themselves, and beware of land-valuers and protection-preaching landlords.

"A STRONG PARTY MAN."

We all remember the indignant denial of the low state of the Dorsetshire peasantry which Mr. George Banks, one of the members for that county, made when Mr. Cobden, now more than a year ago, first alluded to that subject in the House of Commons; and the reader will not have forgotten the unblushing effrontery with which Mr. Banks, so lately as the debate on Mr. Cobden's last motion to inquire into the condition of tenant-farmers and farm-labourers, affirmed that the average wages of Dorsetshire farming men were 11s. a week, with other advantages!! The sharp rebuke and prompt contradiction which that false statement called forth from the Rev. Mr. Osborne, and which we gave last week, has been followed up by a letter from "A DORSETSHIRE LANDLORD," which appeared during the current week in the Times newspaper. The writer, who seems to be friendly to the present Ministry, says:—

"I have seen with considerable regret that in the face of the communications forwarded to you by myself and others, representing the sad state of the Dorsetshire agricultural population, declaring that, after an earnest inquiry in the neighbourhood of our residences as to the receipts of the labourers, we do not find the average rate of wages received during the year by them amounts to 7s. a week, Mr. Banks, the member for the county, sets forth a statement representing there are numerous instances of men having 11s. a week, with cottages, fuel, and other advantages."

Such is the general result of an inquiry by the landlords into the rate of payment to the Dorsetshire labourer; but he does not leave the honourable member the shelter of saying that his own inquiries have been in this or that particular place only, for the "Dorsetshire Landlord" follows him upon his own selected ground, when he says:—

"Last year Mr. Banks alluded to the village of Holt. I instantly sent word to that spot that I wanted a labourer. One came from there and told me he would be most thankful for constant work at 7s. a week; that this was the average price of wages there, and not constant work either. In the autumn I tested another village, and had numerous solicitations for a cottage residence and 7s. a week. To another labourer I gave a cottage, with garden ground, and 8s. a week. This is, however, much above the average price of labourers' wages. A person holding a large farm at Longham told me she believed that she was the only one who gave 8s. a week to the labourers. In West Purley the wages are 8s. a week, without a cottage, and without the security of constant employment."

So much for Mr. Banks's veracity. Do the farmers believe that he, and such as he, will stick at a trifle in their statements with reference to the foreign corn trade, while speaking amongst farmers, on a question comparatively unknown, when they thus dare to lie upon a subject though contradiction exists at their own doors? The writer says:—

"Let the House of Commons inquire to what extent the Poor-law guardians of Wimbome have reduced the labourers' wages. I wish not to mention names, but I ask Mr. Banks whether he is ignorant that the magistrates and clergy who attend that board are out-voted by the tenant-farmers in most questions for extending a more liberal consideration of the poor man's sufferings. I ask Mr. Banks whether he does not allow more than 2s. 6d. a week for the keeping of his dogs; and whether, in a Christian land, it is possible that an allowance for the keep of a pauper being less than that of a beast shall be tolerated?"

Nor are these things hidden in a corner. They cannot escape the attention of a landlord and a magistrate of the county, let him be ever so careless of the welfare of his neighbours, or ever so indifferent to the sufferings of the poor; for poverty, such unmerited poverty, produces its usual consequences—violence and crime. This is shown by the landlord writer, who says:—

"Frightful are the consequences—petty thefts are being committed by organized gangs. The honest labourer is obliged to join them for the protection of his own little grounds. Last week one of my cottagers was attacked by a party of four men. Firearms were used, and it was only by accident something fatal did not occur."

Here we see the demoralization spreading through the class of labourers, until sober-minded men of Mr. Banks's own party are induced thus to speak of the possible end of this state of things:—

"Entertaining as I do a profound respect for Sir James Graham and Sir Robert Peel, I regret that they are exposed to channels of information which, if relied upon, must endanger the safety of the country, and produce a revolution not less frightful than that which France has been subjected to."

And why, let us ask, is Mr. Banks, a gentleman probably not below the average of his class in credibility, thus subjected week after week to the humiliation of having his deliberate statements as to the condition of the labouring population of his own county demonstrated to be false? It is only to be accounted for by the facts that he is anxious to preserve a monopoly intended to protect the rents of the landlords, even if it be at the expense of the profits of the farmer and the subsistence of the poor; and that he is, as Mr. Osborne so justly said, "A STRONG PARTY MAN."

THE PAST AND THE FUTURE.

Nothing is more remarkable than the different way in which the Free Traders and the Monopolists argue the question of the Corn Laws. The advocates of freedom proceed in a business-like way to show what have been the consequences of the restrictions on the corn trade for nearly thirty years past, and they point to the experience of that period as conclusive evidence against the Corn Laws. On the other hand the Monopolists, disdaining anything so prosaic and commonplace as a reference to facts and experience in support of their theories, boldly plunge into prophecies and predictions of what will happen when the Corn Laws shall be abolished, and having got on such safe ground, they challenge refutation. Thus, in the last number of the Mark-lane Express, a correspondent, whose back-handed blows at his brother Monopolists we have occasionally quoted, "solemnly and openly challenges" us to meet him on two issues:—

"First—What would be the effect of unconditional and immediate Free Trade upon the farmers?"

"Secondly—What would be the effect of unconditional and immediate Free Trade upon the farm-labourers?"

Now, we have, and the leading speakers of the League have, on divers occasions, shown what, having reference to the past effects of Monopoly, will probably be the future effects of Free Trade, viz., improved cultivation of the soil and increased employment to the agricultural labourer; and we apprehend the Free-Trade arguments have proved tolerably conclusive, for there has been no attempt to reply to them, unless the cuckoo cry, "that it is sowing dissension between the landlords and the farmers and farm-labourers," be intended as a reply. But the monopolist, feeling that his castle in the air is impregnable, breaks forth into the following mock-heroic strain:—

"We have stated our two points—we are ready for the battle on the behalf of the farmer and the labourer. We have no object but one—the greatest happiness of all. Our glove is in the arena, take it up who dare!"

This is rich. Can any farmer read this without thinking of his little bantam cock, whose boasting is in an inverse proportion to his power? We must, however, extract an admission which this writer makes in order to arrive at what he calls his "two issues." He says:—

"We cheerfully concede the clap-net point, that the Corn Laws have been made a groundwork and pretence for raising rents. The real cause, however, of raising rents, is the competition for the farms, without which no pretext or pretence would have been successful for a series of years; but we admit that many landlords have disingenuously and unfairly deluded their tenants (until they believed it themselves) with the notion that the Corn Laws would command prices which no laws could either command, create, or control; we grant this—we grant still more—that the tendency of an act of Parliament operating upon supply, when demand is most likely to increase and supply to decrease, would be to give the lion's share of the benefit to those who had foreign corn ready to be poured in just at the time when domestic corn became scarce—these things we grant."

Here the writer draws upon his knowledge, not upon his imagination; and the result is that he becomes a decisive witness against the Corn Laws. We really hope this writer is an amateur, and that he is not one of those by whose aid the Anti-Leaguers intend to expose the "fallacies" of the Free-Traders; for really if he is a paid advocate of the Corn Laws he is morally guilty of receiving money under false pretences.

GAME AND CRIME.

At the petty sessions recently held at Devizes, in Wiltshire, where the extraordinary effects of monopolist dealings with the labourers, which we last week recorded, were exhibited, we find the following cases, which illustrate the more everyday operation of monopolist influence. After two other game cases had been heard, in one of which the accused had been sent to prison for 21 days,

"Matthew Munday, of Urchfont, was also summoned for setting a wire to catch hares."

"The witness who appeared against Alexander was the evidence in this case; he swore he saw Munday set the wire, and that, having taken it up, he showed it to him and charged him with the offence."

"In his defence, Munday said it was impossible for the witness to see any one set a wire at the place where it was found from the spot where he lay concealed—there were two rough hedges and a wide lane between them. Convicted, and fined 5s. (double the fine indicated on Alexander, because it was not his first offence, costs 9s. 6d. Not being able to pay, and being about to be sent to prison, he pleaded in bar of being sent there having a sickly wife and a family."

"Mr. Rogers: That being the case, what a cruel thing it was of you to bring yourself into this situation."

"Munday: I did not do it from mischief, but to get a loaf of bread. We have only 7s. a week to live on, and how can it be expected that we are to do else in such distress? I do it for a loaf of bread, and to keep us from starving. Having raised 5s. towards the amount, a fellow-labourer, named John Smith, offered to be security for the remainder, and was interrogated by Mr. Rogers as to his means of seeing it paid; he said his wages were 7s. a week when he could get anything to do; but that he had only earned 16s. since Christmas! The 5s. having been paid down, poor Munday and his friend Smith were allowed six weeks to pay the remainder."

We know this parish of Urchfont well, and a worse cultivated tract of land naturally good we do not know. There might be enough draining done, with great profit to landlords and occupiers, to give every spare labourer in the parish full employment for ten years; yet half the labourers are unemployed, and the parish is over-burdened with pauperism. Nothing flourishes but game and gamekeepers, and the above case is one of the ordinary consequences. In the same paper from which we have taken the above we find three prosecutions at the Wilts assizes for serious offences arising out of game-preserving. The one was William Watts, indicted "for drawing the trigger of a gun and attempting to discharge it at Ambrose Ashcombe," and the following extract from the evidence will prove the ferocity which is fostered by the game laws:—

"Ambrose Ashcombe deposed: At six o'clock on the evening of the 11th of December I was at the Masons' Arms. Saw Watts there. I asked him how he did. He said very well. He then said I was one of Mr. Calley's look-out men (Mr. Calley preserves game). I said I was not, but had been a regular gamekeeper. He said I was a d—d liar, and I was one of the keeper's cads. Further conversation ensued, and he said they had had some of the birds the week before, and would have every one in the wood by Friday night. I left the Arms about half-past seven. Between nine and ten on that night I was going up Swindon-street with James and John Kimber. When at the top of the street, near 'Shortedge,' I saw Watts. Another man was with him. They were standing still, and when they saw us, one of them said, 'Here's the ——— coming.' Both carried guns. When I came close, Watts said, 'This is the son of a ———,' and immediately levelled the gun, pointing it directly at my breast, and pulled the trigger. I was about three or four yards off. I heard the hammer fall on the nipple, but I saw no flash."

The second case was that of

"James Alexander, indicted for having, in company with one Robert Talmage (who has not been apprehended) and another person, armed with a gun, entered certain woods in the parishes of Little Bedwyn and Ramsbury, for the purpose of destroying game."

"Arthur Watts, gamekeeper to Mr. Smith, of Ramsbury, deposed that he was watching the covers at Henwood with John Maizen on the night in question. Heard the report of a gun in an adjoining wood, but could find no one there. Hearing another report in the direction of 'Little Frith,' they went there and saw three men in a field near. On coming near witness was struck with a stick. Some scuffle ensued, in which witness's head was broken, but ultimately prisoner was given into custody of a policeman. The others escaped. Talmage had a gun in his pocket which appeared to have been recently discharged."

And in the third case:—

"Rdgar Walker and John Vizard were charged with being by night in a plantation belonging to the Earl of Suffolk and Berkshire, for the purpose of taking and destroying game, being armed with guns; and also with threatening to shoot Richard Clark and Abraham Hughes."

Let it never be forgotten that it is to keep up this horrible system of game-preserving that landlords are, amongst other motives, so anxious to preserve the Corn Laws, for if the business of farming were in its natural state, landlords must choose whether they would have rent or game. By means of high prices, they contrive at present, at all events, occasionally to have both.

JEDBURGH ANTI-LEAGUE MEETING.—On Tuesday, the 19th inst., a meeting was held here for the purpose of taking steps to withstand the efforts of the Anti-Corn-Law League. Sir John Pringle, Bart., and vice-lieutenant of the county, occupied the chair. There was a considerable attendance of squires and farmers, but not a fourth part of the names that had been appended to the requisition calling the meeting; thus showing that many tenant-farmers, with the obsequiousness of the class, will sign their names when they will not trouble themselves with going to a meeting. The meeting was addressed by Mr. Dudgeon, of Spylaw, a farmer, who asserted the total inability of the home-grower to compete with the cheap foreign produce. Lord Polwarth descended on the fortunes and dangerous wealth of the manufacturing classes. He made an effort to apply a series of statistics in proof of his statements, but the confusion and incoherency of his language rendered it a difficult process to gain anything like a comprehension of his reasoning. He was followed by Lord John Scott, who rapped away briskly on the old string. A few fragmentary expressions will convey the nature of his speech:—Enormous burdens of land; Dorsetshire labourers not so bad as said by Cobden to be; machinery; immorality of manufacturing towns; happy condition of Scottish labourer; all ruined if protection taken off; cruel taskmasters the manufacturers, &c. He made an attempt to rebut the reply of the Economist to his former speech. There might be about one hundred farmers present, and these gathered from the four corners of the county. The Free-Traders of the town forbore to meddle with them, thinking that it was a pity but to encourage the holding of county meetings, such meetings being open to reporters.—A Correspondent.

The Anti-Leaguers held a meeting at Tarporley, Cheshire, on the 14th inst. It was convened by circular. Sir Philip Egerton, M.P., presided, and deprecated "agitation" on every trifling occasion, lest it should embarrass the Government. The principal speaker was Mr. Brindley, the anti-socialist! At the close of the proceedings the Anti-Leaguers exhibited an effigy from the inn window, stuffed with Anti-Corn-Law tracts, and made a bonfire of the figure!

France is augmenting her import duties on linen yarns. The New Farmers' Journal adds the great agricultural county of Northumberland to the list of those which have spoken out upon the Corn Laws. Our contemporary doubles the number of persons present, and conceals the important fact that the meeting was confined by the requisition to protectionists.

Lord Chancellor Eldon, in 1804, took part in a Corn-Law debate, and affirmed, "that whatever taxes were taken off the farmer, would be imposed by the landlord on rent."

CHRISTCHURCH ELECTION.

THURSDAY.—The polling commenced this day at eight o'clock. The friends of Captain Harris have been employing every means during the night to bring up as many electors as possible early this morning. We regret that Mr. Tice, of Sopley, came so late into the field; he has declared himself to be a Free-Trader in the abstract, therefore Mr. Harvey, of Lancashire, retired from the contest previously to the nomination yesterday. The following is the state of the poll:—

TEN O'CLOCK.

Harris 105
Tice 34

ELEVEN O'CLOCK.

Harris 136
Tice 51

TWELVE O'CLOCK.

Harris 155
Tice 59

ONE O'CLOCK.

Harris 170
Tice 69

TWO O'CLOCK.

Harris 175
Tice 80

In the whole there are but 333 votes; hence Captain Harris was safe at one o'clock, but Mr. Tice's friends were determined to keep open the poll. The official declaration will be made at five, p.m.—Morning Chronicle.

HASTINGS ELECTION.

The nomination took place on Thursday. Mr. Moore, the Free-Trade candidate, was attended to the hustings in the Priory Courts, by B. Smith, Esq., M.P., H. Elphinstone, Esq., M.P., and a large number of friends. After the usual preliminaries, Major Jeffries proposed Mr. Briscoe; Mr. F. Smith seconded the nomination. Benjamin Smith, Esq., M.P. for Norwich, proposed Mr. Moore, whose nomination was seconded by Mr. J. Thwaites. The respective candidates addressed the electors.

On the show of hands being taken, the Mayor, to the surprise of all, as we believe, declared it to be in favour of Mr. Briscoe; but our honest conviction is, and in that we are supported by every representative of the press present, that Mr. Moore had it three to one.

A poll was then demanded on the part of Mr. Moore.

Dr. Sleigh, who had been proposed as a candidate for the sake of doing what we suppose Mr. Briscoe could not do—make a speech on the hustings—declined going to the poll, and the proceedings closed with a vote of thanks to the Mayor, at a quarter past four o'clock.

The polling commenced at eight o'clock yesterday, but from the early hour at which we are obliged to go to press, we cannot give the result.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Constant Reader" will excuse us for not meddling with a nest of hornets.

"J. D. D.," the communication shall meet attention.

"A Subscriber" inquires about the rent of the premises occupied by the League, and the nature of the dinners provided for the officers of the establishment; by enlarging his subscription to £50 he can become a member of the Council, and examine all the details of expenditure for himself.

"G. H. L.," the verses are very spirited in parts, but the metres and rhymes are too often deficient.

We gladly comply with "X. Y. Z.'s" request in inserting the following verses, written by Mr. W. Thom of Inverary:—

Stanzas suggested by reading the account of a woman found dead in a garret in the Overgate of Dundee, with her child, a boy of seven years of age, sleeping beside her.

"Tis the lone wall of woman, a mother's last wo,
And tearless the eye when the soul weeps so;
Nor fuel nor food in yon windowless lair,
The sleeping is watch'd by the dying one there."

"O wauken na, wauken na, my dowie dear,
My dead look would wither your wee heart wi' fear;
Sleep on till yon could moon is set in the sea,
Gin mornin' hoo could will your waukenin' be."

"Ye creep to a breast, Jamie, could as the snaw,
Ye hing roun' a heart, Jamie, sinking awa;
I'm laith, laith to leave ye, tho' faul would I dee,
Gin Heaven would let my lost laddie with me."

"Awaken, lone trembler, the moon has no light,
And the gray glint of morning drives back the foll night;
The last look is fixing in yon frozen tear,
Awaken, lone trembler, thy home is not here."

"The death-cling awoke him, the struggle is o'er,
He moans to the ear that will listen no more;
Ye'r cauldier than me, mither, could tho' I be,
And that look is nae like y'er ain look to me."

"I dreamt hoo my father came back frae the deid,
A' weasome and eerie the looks that he gied;
He wyled ye awa till ye sindered frae me;
O hap me, my mither, I'm cauld like to dee."

"A Leaguer" has sent us some extracts from a paper called the Cornwall Gazette as specimens of the falsehoods of the Monopolist press; if our correspondent were acquainted with the history of newspapers, he would have known that falsehood is the usual means adopted by a sinking journal to puff itself into notoriety; and that, as in the case of the Herald, the John Bull, and the Age, mendacity is the last desperate resource of mendacity.

"J. F." sends the following as a bond fide extract of a letter received from a friend in Ross-shire, a farmer's son: "I am glad to say that, in this landlord-ridden county, the people are thinking for themselves. Sir C. McKenzie, of Kilcoy, had the impudence to call a meeting of the tenantry last week, for the purpose of signing an Anti-League petition, and subscribing money to help him and his brother heritors to pay the paupers. The meeting was held in his own parlour, and only two out of fifty would do either the one or the other. This is wonderful independence for the poor tenants of the Viscount of Ross-shire, and is a strong sign of the progress of the question."

"C. A. R."—The reduction of masters and labourers' wages by the Duke of Northumberland, and his strict attention to the preservation of his game, are proofs that he values his pheasantry rather than his peasantry.

"A. H."—The verses are not quite up to the mark.

"Non-Resistor's" irregular ballad has too much merit to be omitted, though it has many imperfections which will rather tax the indulgence of our readers:—

"FAMINE AND MONOPOLY, A CORN-LAW RHYME.

"By a Non-Resistor.

"Said Famine to Monopoly,
'Since wedded we have been,
We ne'er, as in this dreadful year,
Such perils dire have seen.'

"Her eyes were sunk, her lank jaws grinn'd;
She stood on the churchyard stones;
And her voice was like the shrill east wind
When it shrieks through a dead man's bones.

"Said her spouse, 'My dear, you've nothing to fear,
However you be shorr'd,
For I have friends, both far and near,
And am a wealthy lord.'

"'Protect me!' cries the trembling poor,
You are strong enough for that.
And why? For while you starve the poor,
I feed the rich man fat.'

"'A leader we hail, who will never quail,
But be true as Death to Sin;
With his sliding scale, or a tub to the whale,
We are sure to keep him in.

"'His income-tax he will ne'er relax,
His words 'twere a sin to doubt;
Let assets be free to cross the sea;
But corn!—oh keep it out!

"'As the waters blue which the pig* swims through
Are radden'd with his gore,
So O'Connor can Jew the fools anew
That O'Connor has Jew'd before;

"'For well he knows from the poor man's woes
He can fill his cup to the brim;
But whoever may thrive, should trade revive,
Cheap bread would poison him.

"'And the Corn-Law League will soon fatigue
The League that has toiled so sore.
Oh we'll work quite keen—we'll make you Queen!
And trade shall rejoice no more.

"'Plain truths we teach,' says the Corn-Law nob;
'Don't you see, you senseless block!
That, if each man could rob his neighbour's fob,
We should double the common stock?

"'So, if Cobden's trade in the dust were laid
(From Liebig's book we learn),
The people would eat more cabbage and wheat,
And meat on the table discern.

"'When corn is low, then wages go
Down, down; and 'tis all the same,
Though workmen be few, and much to do,
They never get up again.'

"'The Free-Trade League's a conspiracy,'
Say the lawyers, one and all;
'But ye that unite for the landlord's right,
You don't conspire at all.

"'That hotheaded school in which Cobden bears rule
Would bring produce to every man's hand;
But Gladstone,† more cool, thinks mere man is a fool,
Abstracted from fortune and land.'

The Moral

"'So, if all be intent to keep up rent,
And feed the landlord's game,
You've nothing to fear; for we'll wisely steer,
And protect great England's fame.

[Responsive chorus of bread-lavers accompanied the tunings of Knatchbull and the Tamworth Bull.]

"'We'll willingly pay our money away,
For famine, fire, and slaughter,
'Till our breath be spent. Hurrah for rent!
And hurrah for the landlord's daughter!'

"Hull, March 19, 1844."

"J. L."—His lines are all but up to the mark.

"R. V. H." will see that his hints have not been thrown away.
"Veritas" must have intended his communication for the Northern Star; his passion has sadly interfered with his orthography; we can only pray Heaven to send him more sense and fewer consonants.

"J. H."—The hypocrisy of those who advocate a discriminating duty on slave-grown sugar is sufficiently proved by their allowing that sugar to be imported and refined in this country, and then to be exported for consumption, not only to the European continent, but to the very negroes in the West Indies whom they affect to protect.

"A Leaguer of Warrington."—We doubt the justice and more than doubt the prudence of his communication.

"W. H." has sent the following remarks on some statements attributed to the member for Roxburghshire, in his speech on Mr. Cobden's motion last Tuesday week. We have every reason to believe that our correspondent's statements are perfectly correct:—"Mr. Scott says that labourers' wages in the two counties with which he is connected are 12s. and 13s.
a week, and never less than 9s. In the district of Liddesdale, where Mr. Scott's kinman, the Duke of Buccleuch, owns above 90 per cent. of its acres, the maximum price paid to the duke's own labourers (who, wonderful to relate, are four in number, and engaged in the extensive plantations of the district where he draws above £10,000 annually) is 10s. a week in summer, and 9s. in winter. I understand if they work a quarter of a day, and the weather prove so boisterous as to prevent them from continuing, they receive no pay; should they continue for half a day they receive half a day's wages, whilst, from always having employment, they are considered as much the best paid labourers of any in the parish.
The district of Liddesdale is so exclusively pastoral in its character that it could not easily be more destitute of manufactures if the whole fraternity were interdicted from its soil.
What is the result? Why, Sir, if houses which offer little or no impediment to either rain or wind are improper habitations for human beings to dwell in, I venture to affirm that one-half of the houses in the village of Castleton are wholly unfit for human abode. The roofs of several have fallen in, and, owing to the inability of the labourers to pay their rents, the owners allow them to remain so. During the winter months there is so little employment of any description that the poor creatures cannot be said to live, but literally starve through the winter. If a farmer has a 20s. or 30s. job to let, such is the race in competition for employment, that the work is generally done for what will scarcely keep body and soul together. In last January, a job to build a dyke round a hill or common was to be let by contract.
Such was the desire for employment, and with each striving to be the lowest, that the duke's agents were understood to have expressed their surprise at men so anxious for work at such starvation wages. The deterioration of the value of houses is also so great that what was worth £20 four or five years ago, is not now worth more than £3; indeed, no one

"And he mark'd how the while
It cut its own throat;
'There,' said he with a smile,
'Goes England's commercial prosperity.'"
Caledonia.

† See Gladstone's speech in reply to R. Cobden in the House of Commons, March 13.

who knows anything of the locality would buy a house at any price. Twenty miles further north is the flourishing manufacturing town of Hawick. Wages are there more than double its neighbouring parish of Castleton. I believe, Sir, the two parishes of Hawick and Castleton are the most striking instances of the comparative affluence of a manufacturing and agricultural population to be met with in Scotland, and well worthy the attention of the League. I may also state that the electors of this favoured district of protection are in such a state of political bondage, that they form the greater portion of the body whom Mr. Scott alluded to as having lately swelled the ranks of monopoly in the county which he represents."

"Oromo" sends us the following parody;—we insert it though it contains some weak lines which detract from its general merits:—

"'Hear this, ye senators, hear this truth sublime,
He who allows oppression shares the crime.'"

"I am no orator, as Whiteside is,

But, as you may perceive, a plain blunt man
Who loves his countrymen; therefore I am
Thus bold and daring in my speech to you.
I cannot boast of wit, or words, or worth,
Action, or utterance; nor any power of mine
To move your hearts. I only speak right on,
Telling you that which ye yourselves do know.
Ye mighty men, ye do oppress the poor!
Your study is to aggrandize yourselves.
You crush the helpless to the very grave.
Your charity is—what?—The workhouse test—
The gaol—the gallows—or Van Dieman's Land?
Your cruel laws drive men to poverty,
To destitution desperate; and then
To misery, and crime, and shameful death.

"And what of that?" say you, "We landlords must Ensure our rents, although our tenants starve.
But stay, we'll pass protection laws for them,
In order to secure both rent and tithes.
'We will have our bond—the law allows it,
And the Court awards it.' Our mortgages
And daughters' settlements demand it too!
We must also provide for younger sons.
Up, up, then, noble lords, and stop Free Trade;
Put down the clamour of this noisy League.
The clergy of our church are on our side,
With few exceptions, and let these beware.
What would the people have? They want not food—
(So spake the Duke of W——, at least);
They want not bread, exclaims a Dr. M——;
Meal and potatoes satisfy their wants;
Billions rejoice thereon, and so they ought.
Bravo, Duke and Doctor. Yet hear me now;
I will say nought but truth, plain simple truth:
You may as well attempt to stop the tide,
Or catch, and keep the wind in your preserves,
As try to stop the onward march of mind.
I know your power is great;—but here it fails;
And fail it must. The Anti-Corn-Law League
Is but the mouth-piece of the multitude
Whom ye oppress with taxes on their food.
Ye (imitators of the Norman kings).
Whose game-preserved proclaim your tyranny—
Ye do oppress the poor. Protection laws!
What are they, but illegal robbery
Made legal by and for your own dear selves?
O Legislation! What! Art thou become
A pauper to Monopoly?—Shame! shame!
Remove such infamy—Let Free Trade reign.

"March, 1844." "OROMO."

A correspondent who writes from Stepney-green, states, in proof of the evil effects of monopoly on the shipping interest, that "the Thetis, late of Dundalk, a vessel of 250 tons, and provided with an entirely new set of sails, worth at least £100, was a few weeks since sold, or rather given away, in the port of London, to a London owner, who now employs her in the coal-trade, for the amazingly low sum of £260, although about eight years since, when trade, in consequence of food being cheap, was better, she would have been worth about £1200."

"C. S. C."—The lines are beautiful, but not appropriate.
There are several correspondents to whose letters we deem it unnecessary to give a specific answer, as the hints which they contain have either been anticipated, or are in the course of being realized. Among these are fourteen letters from various parts of the country, each bearing the signature "Tenant-farmer." We trust that the writers will be satisfied with this general acknowledgment, for separate replies to all the letters we receive would now be scarcely possible.

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any person forwarding 3s. 3d. by Post-office order, to the Publisher, 67, Fleet-street, London, will have one quarter's copies of the LEAGUE forwarded by post on the days of publication. Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with J. Gadsby, Newall's-buildings, Manchester; and the LEAGUE may be had by order of any news-agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

The Publisher of THE LEAGUE begs to inform Advertisers that, in future no advertisements will be inserted in that paper, as the space is required for more general purposes.

THE COUNCIL OF THE NATIONAL ANTI-
CORN-LAW LEAGUE beg to announce that their Weekly Meetings in the Theatre Royal, Covent-Garden, will be suspended during the Easter recess; after which, due notice will be given by advertisement of their recommencement.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, March 30, 1844.

The League has redeemed its pledge to the public, by contesting the elections at Christchurch and Hastings; and although the result, in each case, was foreseen as inevitable, there have been abundant indications of the judicious character and useful tendency of the proceeding. To win such elections, where the subject of Free Trade was comparatively new, and where a struggle had to be made with local property and influence, was out of the question. It was never expected that the brother of Lord Malmesbury at Christchurch, or the head of a family inhabiting so many "mansions, on the other side of the hill and in Wellington-square" at Hastings, were to give way and be defeated at the first onslaught. But in both instances the poll has become an electoral Free-Trade registry of the most decisive description. The minorities have recorded themselves as upholders of a principle in defiance of all opposing influences. They are booked for the boat which is sure, in due time, triumphantly to reach its haven.

We thank them heartily as voluntary co-operators, at the first call upon them, in our good cause. The question which has been set afloat in their localities will never sink into oblivion. The truths they have heard will be as seed sown, from which a future harvest will be reaped. They cannot unknow what they have learned on these occasions. For our being beaten now, we can well afford that, in the working out a great national question; and, as the old Scotch song says,

"If it be na weel bobbet, we'll bobbet again;"

and we care not how soon. When once they have taken root, and they have done that both at Christchurch and Hastings,—Free-Trade principles are of rapid growth.

We again exhort our friends to proceed vigorously everywhere with the memorials to their members to support Mr. Villiers's motion, and with the registration canvass to which those memorials are subservient. The strange collisions on the Factory Bill show on what unexpected points great parliamentary changes may turn. A general election may come when least of all expected. Let us stand to our arms and be ready. The Free-Trade portion of every constituency in the kingdom should be in fighting trim, and its utmost strength available on any emergency. It is only for the fool to say, "Who could have thought it?" Be ready, ready everywhere.

REVIEW.

Facts and Observations relative to the Influence of Manufactures upon Health and Life. By Daniel Noble, Esq. London: Churchill.

Factories and the Factory System. By W. Cooke
Taylor, LL.D. London: How.

It is not our purpose in examining these pamphlets to enter into any discussion of the question at issue between Sir James Graham and Lord Ashley respecting the limitation of factory labour to twelve or to ten hours, for we hold both to be wrong in principle. We hold all legislative interference with the labour market,—all attempts of a government to fix the wages of industry,—all intervention of a third party between employers and employed, to be unjustifiable in principle and mischievous in their results. We oppose all protection-duties on the plain and obvious grounds that they prevent buyers and sellers from meeting on fair terms in an open market, and we will not recognise any exception to this great truth, either on the ground of expediency or pretended humanity. But while a question affecting manufactures which supply thirty-five out of forty-four millions of our exports is under discussion, and while the debates on the subject, and the leading articles in many journals, display a lamentable ignorance of the nature of factories and of the practical working of the factory system, we deem it right to take advantage of the pamphlets before us to correct prevailing errors, and to set the public right on the bearing of the main questions that have been placed in issue.

Most of those who have undertaken the discussion of this question have spoken as if factories were modern creations; but in truth they are as old as civilization itself, and owe nothing to modern times but a great extension and development. Dr. Taylor says:—

"A factory, properly speaking, is an establishment where several workmen are collected together for the purpose of obtaining greater and cheaper conveniences for labour than they could procure individually at their homes; for producing results, by their combined efforts, which they could not accomplish separately; and for saving the loss of time which the carrying of an article from place to place during the several processes necessary to complete its manufacture would occasion. The principle of a factory is, that each labourer, working separately, is controlled by some associating principle, which directs his producing powers to effecting a common result, which it is the object of all collectively to attain. Factories are, therefore, a result of the universal tendency to association which is inherent in our nature, and by the development of which every advance in human improvement and human happiness has been gained. They began when the first step was made in civilization, and they must continue until society itself is dissolved in barbarism."

The central power which unites and pervades such an association, and by which all its parts are held together, is "capital," or, in other words, an "aggregate of the results of past industry," held as a fund for procuring such a collection of means and implements as the operatives could not purchase singly, and thus obtain the greatest amount of productive means with the greatest economy of expenditure.

"In principle there is no difference between the investment of capital in printing implements by the master printer, or in the apparatus of ship-carpentry by the shipbuilder, and the investment of capital in machinery by the spinner of wool, flax, or cotton. All the cases are examples of mechanical aid given to the workman, that he might execute certain processes which he could not accomplish without such assistance. But steam machinery gives the greater development to the principle of the factory system; for while on the one hand it facilitates the division of labour, on the other it more direct agency for uniting the separate processes in a common result. Mills, as spinning establishments are rather absurdly designated, exhibit the factory system in the greatest state of development to which it has yet attained."

Now, it is perfectly clear that in "mills" where the factory system is carried to the highest perfection, the central power, or "invested capital," must possess great strength, or else it would not hold so large an association together; and we have then to inquire whether this gives such a preponderance to capital as to produce unfair conditions of industry. We know, indeed, that many have contended that a preponderating power of capital renders the operative the serf and thrall of the capitalist.

"A very little consideration might have shown them that the capitalist becomes equally dependent on the operative, and that active industry is as necessary to give a profit to accumulated industry as accumulated industry is to set active industry in motion. Capital ceases to be profitable when it is not worked, just as an operative ceases to get wages when he is out of employment. Furthermore, the loss on invested capital when not worked is not merely the rate of interest which it has ceased to produce: a large addition must be made for the waste and deterioration of stock, and for the countless disadvantages which even the temporary suspension of business involves.

"Now, it is perfectly true that an operative, coming into the market, comes to sell an article which is destroyed every moment that it is unused; the day or hour of idleness once gone from him is gone for ever; he cannot earn yesterday's wages to-morrow in addition to the wages of that morning. To the operative without capital, employment is life itself; he must exchange his labour for aliment, or he must perish of inanition. He is bound to sell under the penalty of starvation. This would be a very unequal condition of things if the capitalist were not driven by a necessity scarcely less stringent to buy the article which is sold under such apparent disadvantages, for the destruction of unworked capital is not less certain than that of the unworking operative.

"Let us suppose that a capital of £36,000 has been invested in some active business, where the operatives are employed 300 days in the year at an average of twelve hours per day. Now, allowing 10 per cent. for the wear and tear of machinery, the interest of invested capital, the risk on stock, &c., it is evident that the capitalist is a loser unless he has a return of one pound every working hour. In other words, the suspension of his business for one hour inflicts on him a greater pecuniary loss than an entire week without employment would cause to the operative. This circumstance equalizes the conditions under which the bargain is made between the capitalist and the operative; for the one is as much under the necessity of being obliged to buy as the other is under the necessity of being compelled to sell."

Machinery is one of the most important forms under which capital is offered to the aid of the operative, and the steam-engine exhibits machinery in its most powerful and complete form. Now, some very strange mistakes are made respecting the nature and influence of steam-machinery.

"No popular error is more common than the belief that the operatives in a factory, which has its machinery set in motion by a water-wheel or a steam-engine, have no more repose than the wheels and shafts of the mill in which they are employed, and that they must, consequently, be worn down by incessant fatigue, unrelieved by a moment's relaxation. It is necessary only to go through a factory, and pay ordinary attention to its operations, in order to discover that this is an error. In the first place, the machines themselves are not in constant operation, to say nothing of the whole being suspended at meal times; the different parts of the machinery are not of necessity in motion together. Motion is communicated to the several frames of machinery by a driving-strap, which passes over a principal wheel attached to each frame, and connects it with a turning-shaft, set in motion by the water-wheel or the steam-engine. To stop the motion of any separate frame it is only necessary to take off the driving-strap; and this has to be done very frequently by the tenter, or operative, who superintends the frame in which the particular process for which it was constructed is carried on. In most of the processes employed in spinning wool, flax, or cotton, or in throwing silk, the chief occupations of the operatives are to feed the machine with a proper supply of material, to remove what has received so much finish as the process of manufacture under their charge confers, and to watch the machine so as to be sure that it performs its work aright. So long as the machine works on without error, its tenter, or the operative, who is its fellow-labourer, has absolutely nothing to do; it is only when the machine goes wrong that the operative compels his drudge to stop, by removing the driving-strap, corrects the error, and then sets his unwearied assistant to work again. Thus the motion of machinery is the rest of the operative, and what the ignorant spectator sets down as the source of endless fatigue is, in fact, the great source of his relaxation. Even the spinners and piecers, whose labours are the most incessant, have frequently-recurring intervals of relaxation: the latter, indeed, whose duty it is to piece or mend any yarns that may be broken while in the process of being elongated or twisted by the mule frame, effect this object at the moment that the mule carriage begins to be drawn out, and have a respite from labour during the remaining time of the carriage being drawn out and the whole period of its return."

It has been recently stated, on the authority of "an eminent mathematician," that some of these piecers travel backwards and forwards an aggregate of spaces amounting, as a maximum, to thirty-seven miles per day. Eminence in mathematics has nothing whatever to say to a subject which requires nothing more than a knowledge of the first rules of arithmetic. We have never heard of a mule which could make so many as 4000 stretches in a day; each stretch requires the spinner to traverse a space of ten feet six inches, and each piecer, when a thread breaks, an average of about fifteen feet. Now, taking the extreme case, that a thread is broken at every stretch, this will give a space of eight miles to be traversed by the spinner, and less than twelve by the piecer. We know not what were the data on which Lord Ashley's eminent mathematician based his calculations. We have derived our data from actual measurement and observation, and have had them verified by practical operatives and the proprietors of the largest mills in the country. But we wonder that it has never entered into Lord Ashley's head to inquire what would be the severity of this labour if it had not been aided by machinery. On this point Doctor Taylor quotes Mr. de Villermé's Report on the Condition of the Working Classes in France.

"I could never have formed an idea of the humane influence of machinery had I not seen, in Nov., 1835, at the central prison of Loos, near Lille, unfortunate men compelled to exert almost incredible efforts for the purpose of giving motion to the machinery used in the spinning of cotton. These wretched beings, absolutely naked from the waist upwards, panting, exhausted, and covered with sweat, had all the muscles of their body in a state of constant agitation; they were degraded to the level of beasts of burthen; the very sight of them was revolting. Luckily the introduction of the steam-engine has put an end to this barbarity, worthy only of the ages when the lords of the soil harnessed their peasants like beasts to the drags with which it was the custom to separate the grain from the ear before threshing-machines were invented."

It is the most common objection in the present discussion to state that machinery displaces adult labour, and supersedes it by the employment of women and children. Were this the case, the wages of adult labour would necessarily have fallen in the manufacturing districts; but so far is this from actual fact, that we find the wages of unskilled labour, as that of carters, porters, &c., much higher in the manufacturing than in the agricultural districts. Furthermore, it is a clear advantage to the operatives that men are not employed to execute tasks which can be performed by women or children. As this is a doctrine not generally received, we shall quote at length Dr. Taylor's reasoning on the subject:—

"Some of the operatives, and many people of higher pretensions, object to juvenile labour, because they believe that it diminishes the demand for the labour of full-grown people. They imagine, that if the boys and girls were withdrawn from the mills, there would necessarily be an increased demand for men and women, that employment would be more abundant, and that wages would consequently rise.

"It is no difficult matter to expose the fallacy of this expectation in the remarks already made on the condition of the hand-loom weavers,—the system of juvenile labour is actually beneficial to the operatives, taken as a class. The three elements for which an employer pays are time, skill, and strength; the labourer who exerts only the skill and the strength of a child will, in the long run, even leaving out of view the competition of foreign nations, obtain only the wages of a child, because he has nothing on which to rely for obtaining his value in the market. Were the manufacturers compelled to dismiss the children, they would not supply their places with trained and skilled workmen, because the training and skill would be worthless; but they would import an abundant supply of untrained labourers from Wales, from Scotland, and from Ireland, to whom the wages of the children, small as they are, would be a desirable object. Many of these would in time begin to compete with the superior operatives; they would draw them down faster than they would raise themselves up, and the rate of wages would sink rapidly below its present level. The example of the hand-loom weavers should teach the spinners the danger of a trade being inundated by operatives who require little or no preparatory training to make a commencement. It is their good fortune that the employments in the mill, which require but little skill, also demand but little strength, for it has saved them from being reduced to the level of agricultural labourers by the appearance of untrained hordes mingling in their ranks.

"In truth the Factory Act has, in this respect, injured the operatives, and they know it. When children under thirteen years of age were dismissed from the mills, young persons above that age came readily to supply their places from Wales, Scotland, Ireland, and the agricultural counties, because the wages of factory labour are far above those of farm labour. We have conversed with many of these persons, and we never found one of them that regretted abandoning agricultural labour, or had the slightest intention of returning to farming pursuits. The operatives who had been deluded into raising a clamour for the Factory Bill found, to their great mortification, that they had deprived their own children of employment to give it to strangers, and that they had besides brought in a new generation of operatives, who would soon compete with themselves in the labour-market.

"Juvenile labour, then, is demonstrably beneficial to the parents of the children by contributing to their support, and by placing them in a position where they are safer from the allurements of vice; it is advantageous to the children, by training them to those habits of industry by which they are to gain support in future life; and it is beneficial to the class of operatives, by preventing the influx of imperfect adult labour, which would be the inevitable result of throwing the children out of employment. We have, as far as possible, confined ourselves to generalities, and viewed the question of the employment of children without any special reference to factories. Before, however, we enter upon the special conditions of factory labour, it is proper to mention a fact which is generally neglected in all the discussions on the subject, and that is, that the children of the poor in every part of England are compelled to work, if they can get employment, so soon as they are able to turn their hands to anything. It seems, for a time, to have been assumed that children worked no where but in factories; a very little inquiry would have shown that there is no place where they work less, and that the tolls of a cotton-mill are nothing when compared to the extremes in which gripping poverty in most instances, and grasping avarice in some, may drive their parents."

Mr. Noble's pamphlet is far the best and most careful publication on the sanitary condition of the factory population. Dr. Taylor has made large use of it in his pamphlet, and has sent us a note expressing his regret for having inadvertently omitted an acknowledgment of his obligations. Mr. Noble has very ably shown the great imperfection of the medical statistics which have been hitherto brought forward in the discussion of this question, and we particularly request attention to his remarks on the alleged prevalence of consumption and scrofula in the manufacturing districts.

"In reflecting upon the precise value to be attached to the records of consumption obtained by our national system of registration, it occurred to me that probably they might furnish some clue to the relative prevalence of scrofula in various localities, seeing that consumption is not only a scrofulous disease (according to preponderance of authority) in itself, but the mode in which other scrofulous affections often terminate fatally; thus, scrofula, affecting the spinal column or any of the joints, generally ends in pulmonary consumption in the event of a fatal issue. Moreover, some little acquaintance with popular modes of dealing with these matters satisfies myself that the cases of death, in many instances, reported to the registrar as decline or consumption, are representative of general scrofulous disease rather than of phthisis exclusively. A consumption or decline, with the mass of the lower orders, is expressive of most diseases unaccompanied by acute symptoms, and marked by progressive emaciation; and I very much think that, where the scrofulous taint prevails extensively, the cases of death registered as decline and consumption will on this account be in excess. Hence, I apprehend it to be somewhat presumable that in those places where, of the whole number of deaths registered, the proportion of consumption cases is great, the existence of much scrofula may be inferred. Of course, I only propose this scheme as one furnishing, probably, an approximation to the actual fact.

"To apply this scheme, I will take the several towns, analysed with respect to these matters, as they occur in the report of the Registrar-general, of which I have made such ample use in the foregoing pages. Thus, in the exceedingly mixed population of the metropolis, out of 45,441 deaths, 7104 were registered as from consumption, being in the proportion of 1 in 6½; in the cotton districts of Manchester and Salford, 9223 deaths furnished 1454 cases of consumption, being in the same proportion as in the metropolis; in commercial Liverpool, all but exempt from manufactures of any kind, 9181 deaths gave 1762 instances of consumption, or 1 in 5.15th; in the case of Leeds, the seat of the woollen manufacture, a total of 4388 yielded 804 of consumption, or 1 in 5½; and in Birmingham, where there are no cotton-mills, 3639 deaths included 668 cases of consumption, or 1 in every 5½. So it would appear that Manchester, with its factories, exhibits in its fatal cases of disease a somewhat moderate proportion of those here presumed to be of a scrofulous character. Just then to the extent that the text here applied may be considered to possess any value, it tends to disprove the notion regarding the extraordinary prevalence of scrofula in the districts of the cotton manufacture."

Under present circumstances we do not think it necessary to pursue this subject further. We have sufficiently shown that no special case has been made out for exceptional interference with factory labour, and we have now to repeat our strong protest against any interference whatever with the market of British industry. Every such interference hitherto has been either directly intended to lower the rate of wages, or has produced such a result in its immediate consequences. The several "Statutes of Labourers" were open and avowed enactments to lower wages; the Spitalfields Acts destroyed the trade of the entire district. We have had some reason to suspect that the supporters of Lord Ashley's motion were well disposed to diminish the disproportion between the wages of labour in the agricultural and manufacturing districts; but, whether this be the case or not, we are fully persuaded that the true way of serving industry is to open for its products the demand of the world's markets; and under these circumstances we shall not discuss the greater or less amount of restriction, seeing that we are at war with restriction altogether.

Free Trade is the only sure means of obtaining "a fair day's wages for a fair day's work;" it will alone supply means for safely shortening the hours of labour without diminishing the wages of the operative, which we should be very sorry to reduce below their present amount. Enlarge trade; increase the demand for labour; interfere not with the markets which are anxious to receive our manufactures, by preventing us from receiving the only payment which our manufacturers have to offer; and then the increased comforts and emoluments of the operatives will enable them to settle for themselves that duration of labour which will best suit the circumstances of their situation. When masters and men are fairly placed in circumstances of perfect freedom, without being subject to any extrinsic restrictions which may fetter their operations, then these parties will be able to come to an equitable adjustment, based on mutual advantage. Parliamentary interference we always have deprecated; all experience shows that it never has been exercised without producing mischief; and the Corn Laws are themselves a sufficient example of a government having injured those whom it pretended to serve by interfering under the pretence of protection.

THE LEAGUE.

No. 28.]

SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1844.

[3d.]

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND, £100,000.

All subscribers of £1 and upwards to the ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUND FUND, will be entitled to, and receive a copy, weekly, of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have forwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the Offices of THE LEAGUE, Newall's-buildings, Manchester, or 67, Fleet-street, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND, are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council respectfully request that their friends, in all places where committees for raising subscriptions to the £100,000 Fund have not been already formed, will proceed to their formation as soon as possible, and transmit their names to the LEAGUE Offices, Manchester.

The Council of the League would also suggest to their friends in the country, the importance of transmitting their copies of the LEAGUE newspaper, after perusal, to such parties (more especially farmers) as may be either hostile or indifferent to the question of Free Trade.

SIR JAMES GRAHAM ON THE FACTORY BILL.

In one of the debates on the Factory Bill, Sir James Graham emphatically declared, "I cannot conceive that it can be conducive to human happiness to impose limits upon human industry;" and in the other debate he expressed his earnest desire, "above all, to impress upon the minds of the committee that, if they increased the stringency of certain restrictions, they must infallibly relax others of a countervailing nature." In the first of these dicta we have the broad principle of Free Trade; and in the second, by a very intelligible innuendo, the application of that principle to the specific case of the Corn Laws. If a ten hours' bill be carried, we shall endeavour to hold Sir James Graham to the one; and should it not be carried, we shall yet take the liberty of not allowing him to forget the other.

It is a principle with the League, hitherto kept sacred, to interfere with no political questions, unless when they come into immediate relation with the one great question for the settlement of which the League was instituted. We meddle not with the embryo Ten Hours' Bill, any more than with the Suffrage Question, or with Irish Policy. Like them, it is out of our sphere, save in so far as it bears upon the Corn Laws. As Leaguers, we are neither the guardians of factory children, nor the advocates of millowners. Not that we affect any degree of indifference to the rights and interests of any class, or should regard such indifference as other than very discreditable to whomsoever may affect it; but our confederation is specific and exclusive; and in that consists no small portion of the confidence we possess, and the strength we exercise.

But Sir James Graham on one side, and Lord John Russell on the other, have intimated a connexion between the proposed limitation of labour and an alteration of the Corn Laws. On this point we feel at full liberty to comment.

The adoption by Parliament of a Ten Hours' Bill would undoubtedly furnish a fresh and cogent argument against the Corn Laws. It would be an act to deprive the manufacturers, by law, of the use of the machinery which they have erected, and of the labour for which they are willing to pay. They would be mulcted of one-sixth of the productive power which they have fairly purchased. It would be like a law providing that one-sixth of every farm should be uncultivated. The relative position of the agricultural and the manufacturing interest would be immediately changed. To inflict this injury, and yet retain the law-created price of the produce of the land, would be perfectly monstrous. There must be compensation; and what compensation so easy and obvious as that which a repeal of the Corn Laws would afford?

Such is the train of thought which Sir James Graham's hint seems intended to excite in the minds of Parliamentary landlords. It may be a clinching argument; but what of that? Who is green enough to imagine that a new argument would forthwith render our cause triumphant? Could it have prevailed simply by argument, we should not now have been in the sixth year of continuous agitation. Those who were not ashamed to lay the bread-tax on, will never be shamed into taking it off. Lord Ashley himself, the very pink and pattern of landlord humanity, upholds the Corn Laws by his votes. Besides, we question the wisdom of indulging landlord legislators with the regulation of factory labour, in the hope of their seeing the propriety of making atonement for the wrong they perpetrate.

It is easy to foresee that the consequences of a Ten Hours' Bill would be very fearful. Not an operative clamours for it but under the delusion, gross as it is, that for his ten hours' work he shall retain his twelve hours' wages. Such a law would, in fact, be a bill for the reduction of factory wages. Its supporters contemplate a considerable reduction. What says the landlords' newspaper, the Morning Herald, in its advocacy of Lord Ashley?—"To prove that the factory people are not ill used, Mr. Bright produces a table of the wages paid by his firm, and declares that the average weekly earnings of certain families employed by him are £1 15s. 9d. Let us accept this statement then, and let us suppose that the reduction of the hours from twelve to ten will reduce wages one-sixth. Will not Mr. Bright's workmen be able to live upon £1 9s. 9d. per week?" Let the operatives note that question, and see the sort of friends into whose hands some of them have committed their interests. Cannot they live upon something less than they have, for the glory of humanity and Lord Ashley? This lickspittle of landlords takes a reduction of 6s. a week from the workman's wages very coolly; it may abate an offensive contrast between the earnings of factory people and farm people; but we doubt whether that be exactly what is meant by the ten-hour folks out of doors. It is, however, what their bill would bring them to, and much worse than that, or we are greatly mistaken. Sir James Graham is probably not far from the truth when he calculates the inevitable reduction of wages at from 20 to 25 per cent. Now, let any sober-minded man realize in his imagination the effect of such a change upon deluded men, flushed with their victory, and believing that Lord Ashley had led them to the verge of the millennium. They would be perfectly infuriate. Strikes—bankruptcies—confusion—who can see the end of it? As to the Corn Laws going, that would be a trifle to what would go in the disorganization of society that would follow. This will not happen, because no Ten Hours' Bill will be carried. Those who are courting popularity by prating about it do not mean to carry it. Even Lord Ashley began to talk of eleven hours the moment he found himself in a majority for ten hours. Those who are most disposed recklessly to annoy, or vindictively to injure, the manufacturers of the country, dare not carry it. They will not stop short of that. We have not Jack Cade to deal with; only Pecksniff.

We cannot, therefore, sympathize with those who have seemed to contemplate a Ten Hours' Bill as a step towards Corn-Law repeal. If it be so at all, it is by a crooked and most perilous path. The League seeks a beneficent object, by honourable means. We tamper not with evil for the sake of good. Our way is straight on. We will neither cant with the hypocrites, nor strive to entangle the mischief-makers by co-operation. The League has attracted support by the purity of its means, as well as by the wisdom of its aim, and such be its character to the end.

Let no one pervert what we have said into hostility towards anything which is really humane and just in the professions of Lord Ashley and his supporters. We are not opposed to the guardianship of the helpless by the Legislature. If poor parents have really been so demoralized and denaturalized by the hard pressure, for which landlord legislation is mainly responsible, that it is necessary to protect their offspring, by all means let such protection be afforded. Give it at once; and do not, at the same time, refuse all inquiry into the system by which it has been rendered necessary. On your own showing of the consequences, there is something diabolical in its nature. But why offer this protection in a mode which invades at once the rights of capital and of labour? Of all people in the world, what business have the bread-taxers to say to the poor man that he shall not take more than ten hours' toil into the labour market? If he be willing to offer more, and others be willing to purchase more, with what face can they interpose, even were they to forego their tax upon his food? It is enough that they have limited the foreign market for the produce of his toil; why go further, and limit the home market for the toil itself? Their humanity must be desperate indeed, when it can find no other way to vent itself save in the violation of justice. Most untrue should we be to the Free-Trade principle did we not claim for every working man the right of selling as much of his time and toil as he is able and willing to exchange for the money of his employers.

Ten hours a day is quite enough work in our opinion. But for class legislation we question whether any man need work more than that to provide the necessaries of life and a moderate share of its comforts. If the humanity-mongers would all help us heartily to put down legalized monopoly, they would take the nearest way to the accomplishment of their professed object. Direct enactment will never do it. They will only aggravate distress. Nor would their clamorous clients be satisfied were a Ten Hours' Bill carried. The symptoms of an eight hours' agitation are already apparent. The Morning Herald of Wednesday last inserts an address from "the workers of Messrs. Macleary, Hamilton, and Co., Blackfauld's Mill, Calton, Glasgow," in which it is declared to be proved that "the manual labour necessary to keep up the whole community do (does) not need eight hours' labour daily; consequently, every hour that a human being labours beyond this, especially in this country, he usurps exactly as much of the time of some other person, and consequently must injure, by the laws of nature, that man whom he keeps idle to that extent." The concocters of the farrago of Chartism and Socialism combined in this address seem more tender of the labour-rights of the idle than their patrons would find quite pleasant in practice. But Chartism or Socialism, or anything else, there are those who would countenance it all, rather than render justice to an industrious people whom they have despoiled of their due, and in whom they will foster any delusion which may postpone the day of account and prolong their iniquitous advantage. Let them untax our food, and we shall then see how much toil is needful. If it be but six hours, all the better. But till then,—till labour has fair play, and till there is danger of people's overworking themselves from sheer wantonness,—we cannot (to revert to Sir James Graham's words) "conceive that it can be conducive to human happiness to impose limits upon human industry."

OUR ELECTORAL AGITATION.

If we could boast of no other electioneering triumph than that which is described in the following extract from the Brighton Herald, in reference to the late contest for Hastings, it would be alone sufficient to entitle the League to the support of every patriotic and honest man in the country:—

"Hastings, Wednesday Evening.

"There is much mental excitement here in consequence of the election (the nomination day being to-morrow), but no kind of mobbish excitement whatever. It is at once the most interesting and the most quiet election that was ever known in the borough. In fact, a complete revolution has been effected. Instead of drunken riotous mobs, open houses, scenes of revelry and low debauchery, violent wranglings, fights and execrable noises, all is peace. But the electors and others meet, notwithstanding, and far more numerously than ever before known; but, instead of listening to belching orators, with blood-inflamed eyes and maniacal gestures, they are addressed by sensible men, in an earnest, sober, business-like manner, and taught to think—not on mere party squabbles—not on mere local interests—not on mean, petty, and unworthy topics, but on the great principles of government, which not only affect the men of the day, but of all posterity.

"Elections generally heretofore resembled bacchanalian orgies rather than a plain and simple discharge of public business, in which, like a juryman, each elector has a sacred duty to perform. John Barleycorn, on such occasions, was a very busy and important personage. In this election he is of no consequence whatever; and many of his most ardent worshippers, who are famous for shouting, bawling, and fighting, find themselves completely at fault. They can hold no drunken assemblies; and where the electors do meet—under the arcade—no refreshments of any kind are allowed, no more than at any other public meetings. This is a great and most desirable reform."

The League is at once the teacher, purifier, and emancipator of the constituencies. Wherever it goes to take part in an election, it raises the people up from the ignorance and prejudice in which they have grovelled; it terrifies the corrupt by threats of exposure and punishment; and it encourages the Free Traders (always the majority, if not the wealthiest, of the population) to unite in defence of a just and popular principle.

to resist those rich monopolists who would deprive them, by intimidation, of the free exercise of their elective franchise. These are the objects which the League had in view in entering upon the contests at Hastings, Christchurch, and Devizes, where it was well known the monopolists were certain of a victory at the poll. Indeed the seats would not have been vacated if the majority had been doubtful; for Mr. Planta, Sir George Rose, and Mr. Sotherton, all voluntarily accepted the Chiltern Hundreds. In those three purely rural boroughs a determined band of Free Traders was found ready to rally round the banner of repeal, and they form the nucleus of a party which, sooner or later, will vanquish monopoly even in those its strongholds.

Our enemies have affected to exult over our defeat in these battle-fields of their own choosing, forgetting, that in contests where the chances were more equal, arising, as they did, out of vacancies caused, not by voluntary resignation, but by deaths, —as in the case of London, Kendal, and Salisbury,—the League was victorious in two of the three struggles. They forget, too, that the Free-Traders have a knack of winning at return matches. The three most important battles which the Leaguers fought were in Stockport, Durham, and Walsall; they were all lost in the first contest to be all won at the next opportunity. Our victorious opponents will be allowed to repose under their laurels only until such time as we shall have the chance of meeting them again at the polling-booth.

To our friends who may feel for a moment discouraged by these defeats, we would merely add that in no other way could agitation be so effectually carried into a borough as by a contested election. The greatest difficulty in the way of those who wish to instruct and rouse the public mind is the apathy of the people, and especially the electoral body. But during a contest all men give themselves up, more or less, to politics; they attend meetings, read squibs, placards, and pamphlets, and take a part in the discussions of the club or the committee-room. It is of course at such a time, whilst the metal is hot, that the readiest and most lasting impression may be made upon the opinions of a constituency; and not merely the borough, but a wide district, sometimes an entire county, will be operated upon at the same time through the newspaper reports of the speeches made during the canvass.

Again, if you would secure for ever a Free-Trade party in a borough, let them undergo, for once, a defeat for the cause at the hustings. It is as true in politics as in love, that we are never thoroughly devoted to an object until we have suffered for its sake. The 170 men who polled for Mr. Moore at Hastings, and the 270 Free-Traders of Salisbury, will never rest from their labours in the good cause till they place the League in a majority. And a spirit has been kindled at Christchurch which will make it a rather hot borough for the pocket of Lord Malmesbury in future.

Let not our friends be misled by the outcries of cliques and clubs (whose craft is in danger from our purifying besom,) against our electoral movement. There is no mode of educating a constituency like that of contesting it in favour of the principle you wish to teach; contesting it not by the expenditure of thousands, in bribery, treating, or corruption; not by appealing to vulgar prejudice or brutal passions, but by our strictly moral and inexpensive plan of addressing the judgments of the electors, and invoking their sympathies as reasonable and Christian men. By such a course we may not, perhaps, carry conviction to the minds of a majority during the first contest (and certainly not if it be a borough voluntarily vacated by a Monopolist), but we shall prepare the way for eventual and certain victory.

THE CHURCH MILITANT.

We have heard of three instances in which the following argument in support of the Corn Law has been used by clergymen of the establishment in different parts of the kingdom:—

"This reminded him forcibly of a passage in Scripture where it was stated that King Herod was very much displeased with the inhabitants of Tyre and Sidon, who made Blautus, the King's chamberlain, their friend, and induced him to intercede with the King on their behalf for a supply of corn: 'They desired peace because their country was nourished by the King's country.' Now, suppose Sir Robert Peel going to the Emperor of Russia to ask for corn through his chamberlain—a pretty figure we should cut. ('Hear, hear, hear,' and laughter.) Instead of 'Britannia rules the waves,' it would be 'Britons' sons are slaves.'" (Hear, hear, hear.)—Speech of the Rev. Richard Paver, vicar of Brayton, at the Selby protection meeting.

We could have scarcely hoped to find a stronger argument in favour of a dependence upon foreigners for food than is contained in this scriptural incident (Acts xii. 20), where the Tyrians, being threatened by Herod, "came with one accord to him, and, having made Blautus, the King's chamberlain, their friend, desired peace; because their country was nourished by the King's country." It is scarcely credible that any Christian minister could have drawn an argument in favour of commercial restrictions from one of the happiest illustrations of the peaceful tendencies of Free Trade. There happened to be no Corn

Law in Tyre, and the Tyrians were therefore importers of grain from Judea; this state of things led to the preservation of peace at a critical moment, and a minister of the gospel of peace urges this historical fact as a reason why Christian nations should not be dependent on each other for food! If this be orthodoxy, it is not Christianity.

THE SHIPPING INTEREST.

An esteemed correspondent has forwarded us the following remarks on "The Shipping Interest," as opposed to monopoly:—

"And this may help to thicken other proofs That do demonstrate thinly."

"The shipowner has much need in his business of block-makers; and these appear to fit him with wooden heads instead of the handiwork nature intended to set upon him. The shipping interest furnishes a splendid illustration of the beauties of protection. Enormous duties were laid on foreign timber; of course, timber of English growth advanced in price to the full extent of the impost, and the difference was so much profit to our Jack Grasp-all—the landowner. As in the case of the Corn Law, so here the cry was Protection and Revenue. Protection—that is, protection to the landowner—we admit it was. Concerning revenue we say, however, that, if one-fourth of the duties charged on foreign timber had been put on all, British as well as foreign, a much larger revenue would have been raised, the cost of our shipping would not have been artificially enhanced, and our shipping interest would not have been in its present deplorable condition. In due time the force of circumstances, steam, iron, and the unavoidable competition of foreigners, have uplifted the veil of protection, and the money value of British shipping is now only one-third of its former amount. A ship of the same quality and dimensions is equally useful, whether it sells in money for £6000 or only for £2000. The people of England are none the worse for the deterioration; there is as much ship room to be had as they want, and on lower terms than ever before. It is the shipowners who are damaged,—enormously damaged,—deprived of two-thirds of their possessions, if estimated in cash. Now, what has become of this two-thirds? It has not been actually destroyed. Where is it gone? We ask, where is it? Who has got it? Why, it was long since paid over to the growers of English timber. It was conjured by the hocus pocus of protection, under the plea of revenue, into the landowner's pocket. The Government did not get it; they did not receive the extra price caused by the duty; the landowners sacked it,—they plundered the shipowners as they plunder the farmer. Had the entire duty, not only one-fourth as above mentioned, been taken on all timber, British and foreign, then the State—not the landlords—would have got the shipowners' money; the revenue would have had the difference, not the growers of oak, though the shipowners would have been in the same disastrous predicament, and from which nothing could have saved them. Acts of Parliament cannot keep up money prices of either ships or commodities. What Sir Robert Peel said, in a fit of honesty, of the Corn Law, "that the Legislature could not secure any price for wheat," is equally applicable to ships. Protection may make the cost of building ships as dear as you like, but it cannot secure the money laid out; it cannot keep up the price of shipping. Protection caused bad building, wretched outfitting, and slovenly navigation. To this pass it has wellnigh come, that no one will take a British vessel if he can get another; no one will intrust his property to an English captain if he can get a foreigner. There are, of course, exceptions, but the general rule is as we say. We have lost the carrying trade, the corn trade, and the fisheries; and all this because of our accursed protections.

The shipowners, as we said, are on an average not worth more than one-third, as far as the money value of their ships is concerned, of what they were estimated twenty years ago; the landowners in the meantime have doubled their wealth, to which the shipowners' losses have largely contributed. If the landowners are satisfied in having plundered the shipowners, as no doubt they are; and if the shipowners are satisfied to have been, and to be, plundered, we need not concern ourselves about the matter. We have little to thank the latter gentry for; and for their losses they have only to thank themselves. Offers were made to them by Mr. Huskisson to reduce the duty on foreign timber, and to allow the building in bond, free of duty, for sale or foreign traffic; but they turned a deaf ear to all reasonable proposals, and would adhere, with suicidal infatuation, to the old system, lest by taking one rotten timber out of the crazy vessel of protection—lest by yielding in this case to common sense and sound principles—they should endanger the entire edifice, turn the tide of reform from forests to fields, from oaks to wheat, from shipbuilders to landowners, and perhaps, we may add, from captains to the Trinity-house.

We know that we write for blind eyes, and preach to deaf ears. Monopoly haunts the aristocracy of Wapping as much as that of Belgrave-square, and dwells no less in South Shields than in Alnwick Castle. Had the shipowners one grain of common sense, they would call for an immediate and total repeal of all protection, and grant for revenue's sake a small ad valorem duty on all timber, British and foreign, to be taken at the time of using it at the building,—if we may express ourselves figuratively, at the mill,—the only place where, according to Sir Robert Peel's authority, a duty on corn for revenue, and on all corn, British and foreign, ought to be taken. A very small duty, so taken, would yield a large income. And as the first step towards their salvation, the stepping-stone to such a duty on all timber, our timber-headed ship-owners ought lustily to shout for Free Trade, and, above all, for free trade in corn and sugar, the rest then being sure to follow. But they drop the substance for the shadow—sit contented under the loss of two-thirds of their property—and, in the faint hope of restoring the good olden times of protection (for ever fled from them), they stand aloof from the great movement, and support the men who have already conjured so large a part of their money out of their own into the landlords' pockets! D.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

THE FREE-TRADE MIRROR OF PARLIAMENT FOR THE SESSION 1844.

Ninth Week, ending Saturday, April 6.

Ah, I am glad to see you. Has the fine weather induced you to visit town?

Yes, partly that, and business. But I am anxious, on this occasion, to see both Houses of Parliament, for on all my previous visits I have either missed, or could not get an opportunity to do so.

Well, you had better come with me at once. This is Tuesday; both Houses adjourn this afternoon for the Easter recess, and it is not supposed that either will sit late.

Is there no business in the House of Commons?

Plenty; there are two motions on the notice paper, either of which would afford ample materials for an interesting evening's discussion. But I understand that they will both be postponed, as there is a general wish, on both sides, that members should be allowed to get away into the country, to enjoy their holidays.

How provoking! This being my first visit, I should have liked the chance of a debate. On what subject were these motions which you say are postponed?

Oh, they are not yet postponed, but they probably will be, as we shall hear when we get down to the House. Here is the notice paper; you observe the first one:—

"Mr. Elphinstone.—That it is just and expedient, with the view of distributing the burthen of taxation more equally and fairly among all classes of her Majesty's subjects than it now is, to alter and amend the laws relating to Probate Duties, and to make real estate (whether such real estate be in trust or not) liable to the same duties as personal property."

That is a singular motion, but I dare say would raise a very important discussion.

It would, for it is one of the manifold forms of the great controversy which has raged in this country during these eight or nine years, and which can never cease until Monopoly lies prostrate, and Free Trade is triumphant. Here is the other motion:—

"Mr. Milner Gibson.—That an humble address be presented to her Majesty, representing, that, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable to obtain authentic information upon all matters connected with the agriculture of the United Kingdom; that this information is altogether deficient, so that, at this time, even the extent of land under cultivation, and the amount of its produce, are subjects only of vague conjecture; that the total absence of all accurate statistical knowledge in reference to this important subject, has at various times proved detrimental to the public interests; and praying her Majesty to devise measures for supplying to Parliament, from time to time, accurate statements of the breadth of land under cultivation for each species of produce respectively, and the amount of produce derived from the same; together with such other information as will exhibit, as far as practicable, a perfect view of the agricultural capability and production of the United Kingdom."

Another singular motion! Really, you Free-Trade people are most ingenious, after all, in your inventions for keeping up the controversy.

It is truly an important subject, and I have no doubt that Milner Gibson will do it justice. In this country we are profoundly ignorant of matters which affect every banker, every merchant, every tradesman, every labourer in the community. In a restricted field, the influence of even a small deficiency in the produce of a harvest is very great on price, and, consequently, on all commercial operations. Suppose we consume annually 20,000,000 quarters of wheat, look at the enormous difference between getting it, one year, at an average of 40s. or 45s., and another year being compelled to pay 60s. or 70s.

I see it now; and certainly, if a small unexpected deficiency has so great an influence on price, we are all, for the time being, very much at the mercy of millers, factors, and others, whose interest in a rising market is, of course, to exaggerate the deficiency, and thus force up prices as high as they will go.

Ay, very true; but it is not individuals who are to be blamed; it is the system. Now, they manage these things better in Japan. In these snug islands—the very model of "independence of foreigners"—the Government causes the approaching harvest to be watched with the greatest care; people are employed regularly to go through the country, and make as accurate approximations as can be obtained of the probable yield; while the breadth of land under cultivation and other matters are registered with scrupulous exactness.

Indeed! I did not think that the Japanese were so much in advance of us. But, tell me, was Mr. Cobden's speech on the effects of protective duties on the interests of tenant-farmers and labourers as remarkable as it was said to be?

Did you read it?

Indeed I did, very carefully, and was exceedingly struck with it. The perusal of it seemed to have the effect of advancing my mind on the subject.

Precisely; and, in your own case, you have exhibited what is the state of the public mind on the question of the Corn Laws.

But do you really think that the public mind is advanced on the question?

Think! Why, look back but a few years. Had Demosthenes, as Mr. Cobden once happily said in the House of Commons, got up to enlighten JOHN BULL in 1835, on the subject of the Corn Laws, he would have got nothing but a vacant stare, or a look of bewilderment. Adam Smith had written—Lord Horner had spoken—Lord Grenville had protested—Cardo and Mill had promulgated—and even the of 1815 understood the question, and with insane fury vented their rage against Monopoly, by sacking the houses of some members of the Administration of the day. Yet onwards we went—commercial panics—insurrections of the working classes—Huskisson trying to introduce Free Trade, bit by bit—the Legislature patching, tinkering, tampering, on and with Corn Laws—and yet the good seasons of 1832-1836 had so clouded the intelligence of John Bull, that he looked upon "Corn and Currency" as being as abstruse as "The Differential Calculus." Now, there is not an intelligent schoolboy that cannot demonstrate to you that the principles of Free Trade are the principles of common sense.

True, I remember when I used to be puzzled about the sliding scale, averages, and so on; and was long trying to comprehend how it was that a sudden importation of corn crippled our commerce. Now I see it all very clearly.

Yes; and thank the ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE therefore.

But won't John Bull forget all the instruction he has received, if we should have two or three good harvests?

Never! This is the great good which the League has done, that it has brought up the whole NATIONAL MIND to a given point, from which there can be now no recession. Why, the very landholders themselves are beginning to get rid of the wild hobgoblin fears which used to haunt them whenever the repeal of the Corn Laws was mentioned.

But do you think that no injury would arise to the agricultural interest from the repeal of the Corn Laws?

Why, if nobody is really benefited by artificial prices but the landlords, then a fall in RENT must be a consequence of the repeal. But I firmly believe that any fall would be like the apparent retirement of the incoming tide, every wave retreating, to rush up higher than before. Under a natural and healthy state of things, with a prosperous commerce and an industrious community, there is not an inch of land in the country which would not increase in value.

Well, if this be the result of Free Trade, the landlords—after Free Trade has been won—will be constrained to acknowledge their obligations to the manufacturers.

They are already under great obligations to them. Who taught tile-draining? The manager of a cotton-mill, Mr. Smith, formerly of Deanston. Who has been foremost in enlightened practical illustrations of agricultural improvement? Mr. Greg, of Manchester. Who have roused the agricultural mind from its torpor of centuries, whispered THOUGHT into the ear of the clodhopper, and taught the farmer and the farm-labourer to feel that there is a life and a world beyond their own immediate fields? Messrs. Cobden and Bright. Nor will it be the least of the obligations which the Anti-Corn-Law League shall have conferred on the country, not merely that it has educated the nation, and lifted up the NATIONAL INTELLIGENCE to a higher and a surer platform, but that it shall have saved this great country from bankruptcy—say from suicide—and enabled it once more to start on a career of commercial prosperity, by which, for centuries to come, it may keep its place at the head of the commerce, and in the front of the civilization, of the world.

Yes, that is all very fine, no doubt, and, I am disposed to admit, very true; but you have made no progress this session.

No progress! Why, our whole career has been one continued triumph! Sir Robert Peel and Mr. Gladstone never open their mouths in reply to Free-Trade arguments without irretrievably damaging the Corn Laws, and the whole system of monopoly; and look at the manner in which the Ministry have advanced the question, by staking their existence against Lord Ashley's proposition, because the Corn Laws preclude all attempts to restrict the toil of the labourer to less than twelve hours. If that is not progress, the earth is standing still. Oh, here we are at the House; I'll take you into the "Speaker's gallery." There, you can see Sir Robert Peel in his accustomed place; depend upon it the time is not remote when either he or some other Minister of the Crown will stand up at that table, and formally propose that the Corn Laws shall be utterly and for ever abolished.

Then why does he not do it now? The "why" and "because" he best can explain. Yet he rarely misses an opportunity of hinting, in no very obscure terms, that he has the "will" if he had but the "power" to repeal the Corn Laws. And some credit is due to him for advancing the question. He has reduced the whole defence of the Corn Laws to a simple NEGATION—a mere "No." Justice, reason, truth, decency, are all discarded; the only argument used is the one by which a procrastinating debtor meets his creditor—"Not quite convenient to-day; if you will call to-morrow I'll see what can be done." Mr. Gladstone's "revolution of ages and circumstances" constitute "To-morrow;" and it is nearer at hand than the Duke of Richmond imagines.

How soon after Easter will Mr. Villiers bring on his motion for the total repeal of the Corn Laws?

I believe no day is yet definitely fixed; but when it comes on, the numbers on the division will mark a material advance, even within this House.

Does Mr. Cobden bring on any other discussion soon? Oh, yes; last night he gave notice of a most important motion, a counterpart to the one on which he made his great speech the other week. It is that, after the Easter recess, he will move for a Select Committee to inquire into the effect of Protective Duties on the National Revenue.

What will the Chancellor of the Exchequer say to that?

What ought he to say? Why, to confess that the whole system of taxation in this country is based either on blind and blundering principles, or on no principles at all; that of the money extracted by indirect taxation from the pockets of the people, an enormous amount is lost on its way to the Exchequer, being either abstracted by monopolists, or squandered in the very act of gathering it; and that the time is now come when, like beings possessed of ordinary common sense, we should commence to act on the principle enunciated by Adam Smith, that it is the business of a wise government to ascertain the best modes of raising the largest amount of revenue with the least cost to the community. But Mr. Cobden will do the subject justice.

The House is getting very thin. Yes; while we have been talking, most of the motions that stood for discussion have been postponed; the business will soon be over; and in a few minutes you will hear the SPEAKER, in a cheery tone (looking forward to his Easter holidays), putting the question, "That this House do now adjourn."

MEETINGS.

HALIFAX ANTI-CORN-LAW ASSOCIATION.—The annual meeting of the Halifax Anti-Corn-Law Association was held on Friday, the 22nd ult., in the Trustees' office, Cheapside. In the absence of the president, John Akroyd, Esq., the chair was taken by Mr. Joseph Thorpe, vice-president, who commenced the business of the meeting with some excellent remarks on the progress which the good cause had made since they last met in that room, not only in the manufacturing, but also in the agricultural districts. He was glad to see that a spirit of inquiry had arisen both amongst the farmers and farm-labourers into this question, which involved the mutual interests of both and all classes of the community; and he felt confident the day was not far distant when this monster monopoly would be swept away.—Mr. Morris, honorary secretary, read the report of the association's transactions during the past year, in which some well-merited compliments were passed on the LEAGUE paper.—Mr. John Baldwin next read the treasurer's report, from which it appeared the total amount subscribed in the town and neighbourhood to the League Fund was £1863 3s. 7d., leaving a balance of £12 13s. 5d. in the hands of the treasurer.—On the motion of Mr. Bates, seconded by Mr. Dennison, the report was adopted, and ordered to be printed for circulation.—Mr. John Crossley moved, and Mr. Dunbar seconded, that the cordial thanks of the meeting be given to the officers for their services during the past year; and the same gentlemen were unanimously re-elected, with some additions to the committee.—A motion was submitted by Mr. Moorhouse, and seconded by Mr. W. Denton, that the committee would pay particular attention to the registration, as that would be found the most powerful engine against monopoly.—The chairman next called on Mr. Plint, of Leeds, the powerful advocate of Free-Trade principles, who had just entered the room.—Mr. Plint delivered a long and most admirable address, in which he took a general and comprehensive view of the subject, and completely exposed the fallacy of these anti-commercial laws. In the course of his address, he recommended that the electors of Halifax be canvassed, and that a memorial, signed by them, be presented to Charles Wood, Esq., M.P., and Edward Protheroe, Esq., M.P., members for the borough, requesting them to vote for Mr. Villiers's motion for a complete abolition of the Corn Laws.—A vote of thanks was, on the motion of Mr. Morris, passed to Mr. Plint for his attendance, and the services he had rendered to the cause; and the meeting separated.—Leeds Mercury.

SUNDERLAND ANTI-CORN-LAW ASSOCIATION.—A meeting of this association was held on Wednesday evening, the 27th ult., when it was considered that, as the electors of this borough had so fully expressed to their representatives last year their opinions on the subject of the Corn Laws, it was needless to memorialize the hon. members again; the memorial of last year having been signed by 877 out of 1681 registered electors, while only 219 refused to sign it. Great satisfaction was expressed by several speakers at the continued progress of the principles of Free Trade in this borough.—Sunderland Herald.

PROPOSED COUNTY MEETING.—In order to give the people of Roxburghshire a fair opportunity of declaring their sentiments on the Corn Laws, it is intended, we are informed, to hold a county meeting at Jedburgh on an early day, which shall not be confined to persons holding particular views, thereby making public meetings a mere farce, but shall be open to all without restriction. Will any of the labourers' friends, who took a prominent part at the meeting at Jedburgh on the 19th March, embrace, by being present, the favourable opportunity about to be offered, of taking the free opinion of the county on the important question of Free Trade? In the meantime, would it not be honest in them to erase the word county from the petition adopted at that meeting, until the county really and truly declares in favour of protective duties? The following is a copy of a document in course of signature:—"To his Grace the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry, lord-lieutenant of Roxburghshire.—We, the undersigned, most respectfully request that your grace will be pleased to call a meeting of the justices of the peace, commissioners of supply, landowners, heritors, farmers, farm-labourers, and others, in the upper district of the county, comprising the parishes of Ashkirk, Minto, Castleton, Hobkirk, Hawick, Kirkton, Cavers, and Lilliesleaf, to be held at Hawick on an early market-day, to consider the effects of the protective duties on corn and other provisions, upon the interests of tenant-farmers and farm-labourers of this district of the county."—Kelso Chronicle.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—FREE-TRADE MEETING.—On Monday next a large Free-Trade meeting will be held at Wolverhampton, for the purpose of receiving a deputation from the National Anti-Corn-Law League, consisting of R. Cobden, M.P., J. Bright, M.P., R. R. R. Moore, Esq.; and the meeting will be attended by the borough members, the Hon. C. P. Villiers, M.P., and Thomas Thorndy, M.P. As there is no building capable of holding one-half of the people that will attend the meeting, an immense pavilion is now being erected on purpose for the occasion.

LECTURES UPON FREE TRADE.—On Monday and Wednesday se'night, Mr. Falvey, of the Anti-Corn-Law League, delivered two lectures upon the subject of Free Trade, at the Lion-walk Room, Colchester.

FREE TRADE IN CORN.—Letters from Naples announce that, on the 11th of March, a decree was given out, permitting the introduction of foreign corn into that kingdom, without exacting the duty of importation, which amounted almost to a prohibition. This measure has been adopted by the Government in consequence of the urgent wants of the people, the last crop having proved very deficient both there and in Sicily.

The Council of the Hull Free-Trade Association has at length made up its mind to do something. Its first public meeting is announced for Tuesday evening; and we understand that, if it receive that generous encouragement which it has a right to expect from all who desire the success of Free-Trade principles in this borough, a grand movement will shortly be made by the Council to carry out the most important of the great objects of the League. We do not know enough of the political spirit of Hull to be able to tell how public meetings could be rendered most agreeable and advantageous to those attending them, but, from all that we have seen elsewhere, we should strongly advise a preparatory selection of speakers to address such meetings; and the avoidance as much as possible of discussions which tend only to rattle the temper and provoke disunion. Let those who intend to speak come prepared to speak; and let those who have not speeches to make, listen, compare, and arrive at conclusions. We would further recommend, that only a certain number of speakers should be introduced at each meeting, in order to create variety; and that some pains should be taken to induce as many practical ship-owners and merchants as possible to take an active and prominent part in all the proceedings. We have not the least doubt that there is an abundance of undeveloped talent in the town, which only requires to be known and appreciated to reflect great credit upon the East Riding of Yorkshire. An opportunity is now offered for calling forth the exercise of the highest mental talent which can be made available in public life; and we sincerely trust that it will not be thrown away. Why should not Hull produce as distinguished members of the League as Leeds, Liverpool, Glasgow, Edinburgh, or even as Manchester itself? Our local Parliament, our Chamber of Commerce, and our Faculties of Divinity, Law, and Medicine teem with clever and able men, who require only to be sufficiently stimulated to achieve eminence in the good work of breaking the shackles of England's monopoly.—Hull Advertiser.

GREENLAW AND MORPETH "PROTECTION" MEETINGS.

To the Editor of the Berwick Advertiser.

SIR,—On reading the speeches and resolutions passed at the meeting of the agriculturists at Greenlaw and Morpeth, I was not a little amused to find some of the speakers asserting that "Agriculture is the main and leading interest of the country." Now, sir, I, a humble farmer, hold quite a different opinion; in support of which I remark that we are indebted to the manufacturing and commercial communities for nearly all the great improvements that have taken place in our country for nearly the last fifty years. Who is it that advances the money to make railroads, to form steam navigation companies, to light our towns with gas, and effect every other great improvement? Certainly not the landed interest. No! Everything, from a spade to a plough, is brought to the highest perfection to cultivate the land, but the great bulk of landlords allow it to remain the same as it was a hundred years ago, and had there not been an interest in the country equal if not superior to the agricultural, we might have been walking the streets of our towns in darkness. Did the farmers look fairly at both sides of the question, they would find that the trading portion of this country are their best customers. Who eat the fine bullocks that are reared in our own neighbourhood? Not the hard-working ploughman that prepares the land for growing the food to feed them. So far from it, I may state, without fear of contradiction, that from one year to another the husbandman rarely partakes of that which he is the principal cause of producing. The same reasoning applies to the consumption of our wheat. Is it the husbandman that consumes it? No! Take the whole rural population and you will find they partake of it seldom, being a luxury beyond their reach. This is no varnished picture of the mode of living followed by those cultivating our soil. I appeal to all candid farmers for its truth. And who, I would ask, consume our wool? I think every honest inquirer must answer, "our mechanics!" One of the speakers alluded to our increasing population, the wants of which, he states, can be supplied by the recent improvements introduced into agriculture. Any person taking the trouble to refer to M'Culloch, or any other writer on the corn question, will find that we cannot supply the wants of this great nation without two millions of quarters of wheat annually, which clearly proves that we cannot do without foreign grain. Assuming, then, that the commercial and manufacturing interests are equal, if not superior, in importance to that of agriculture in upholding this mighty empire, it is certainly right that they should be encouraged, and the only way to encourage them is, by leaving trade free and unfettered. It is folly to speak of the commercial prosperity of this country for hundreds of years. Our Arkwrights and our Peels lived in a country blessed with domestic peace, and were allowed to follow up their inventions with safety and success, while other civilized countries were deluged with war. But, now that peace prevails over Europe, are the nations of it to stand still and look tamely on at Britain supplying the whole world with goods? No! After nearly thirty years of peace, our continental neighbours will turn their attention to manufactures, because they have security to their persons and property, which they had not when these countries were the scene of war. By giving these remarks a place in your paper you will oblige Tweedmouth, March 21, 1844.

A FARMER.

DIALOGUE BETWEEN A GENTLEMAN AND A SCOTCH FARMER.

Gentleman.—Are you going to sow any oats soon?
Farmer.—I'm na going to feed the crows this spring as I did last by sowing before my neighbours; but we've waur enemies than the crows, and that's the game! Of some Swedish turnips I sowed there is not one left that is not eaten hollow by the hares and pheasants.

Gentleman.—But you claim a deduction for this at rent time?

Farmer.—That wud na' do for us; it's as weel if we can get on without other complaints, let alone grumbling about the game; it does na' do to say anything about them.

Gentleman.—But the gamekeepers kill some of them from time to time?

Farmer.—Not a head—binna when there's gentlemen staying at the castle at the back-end (i. e., late in autumn).

Gentleman.—Well, they send you some game then?

Farmer.—Oh yes! they send us the half the game killed on our farm; but what's a few hares, when £10 will not pay the damage done, and I'm na' so much hurt as the lave; but it'll no do to be saying anything!

Gentleman.—Were they round to you with a petition lately?

Farmer.—Oh ay! Ane o' his lordship's men was round with aye, and I just signed it. I kent weel enough, that if we did na' do what we were asked, we need na' be stopping there, and it wud be waur for us if I did na', to be just pit my name till't.

Gentleman.—But you are not wishing for the protest Corn Laws being continued?

Farmer.—Deed, I believe we'd be better wanting the

As far as I can see, a fixed duty would be better than the way they are; but may be we'd be a' the better without these laws at all; but then it would na' do for me to be refusing to do what I was bidden, so I just pit my name down, and asked no questions.

DUTIES ON RAW MATERIALS.

An import duty on raw materials, as far as regards our export trade with foreign countries (inasmuch as it tends to raise the price of our goods), acts as an impediment to such trade as much as if such foreign countries were to impose a hostile import duty against us to that extent. For example, we charge an import duty on wool of 1d. per lb., or 9s. 4d. per cwt.; while the German Customs League charges only an import duty of 1s. 6d. per cwt. on our woollen yarn. Our import duty, therefore, on the raw material is a much greater impediment to our trade with Germany than their import duty on our yarn. Again, we impose a duty of 2s. 11d. per cwt. on cotton wool, equal to 50 per cent. of the duty which the Germans charge on the import of our cotton twist. Then, again, in some kinds of heavy cotton goods the Americans compete successfully with us in neutral markets. In this they must be assisted first by the additional freight of the cotton which we pay, and next by an import duty of about 1d. per lb., or nearly 10 per cent. on the present price.

It appears a great absurdity that we should complain of the hostile tariffs of other countries which we cannot control, while we impose duties on our raw materials which we can control. To the manufacturer of this country these duties act in a most prejudicial way in many respects: first, they not only increase the price of foreign wool from five to ten per cent., but practically they operate in raising the price, not only of colonial wool, but also of all home-grown wools, to the same extent. The charge to the woollen trade may be thus stated:—In 1841 we imported,—

| | |
|--|----------|
| 41,753,325 lbs. foreign wool, which was charged with duty | £129,852 |
| 15,417,649 lbs. colonial, which, though yielding no revenue, was equally raised in price to the manufacturer | 64,240 |
| 334,593 packs, or 92,302,080 lbs., the amount of home-grown wool, by evidence before the House of Lords, which, though yielding no revenue, is raised in price, in consequence of the duty on foreign wool, to the amount of | 384,592 |
| | £578,684 |

Thus showing a charge of £578,684 on the woollen manufactures of this country to obtain the trifling revenue of £129,852. Our exports of woollen goods amounted last year to £5,772,764; so that the import duty on wool is practically equal to an export duty of at least ten per cent. on the amount of our exports: and in the face of this fact we complain of foreign competition in the foreign markets. We have much of the cure in our own hands.

In Germany, though their home production of wool is greater than that of any other country, the import of foreign wool is free. In Belgium it is free; in Holland it is free; in France it is subject to a duty, but there is a drawback or bounty on the export of goods to counter-balance the duty. How, then, can England hope to maintain a successful rivalry with these countries? The woollen manufacturers on the Rhine, in Aix-la-Chapelle, and Verviers, not only receive their raw material at a trifling cost of carriage, but free of all duty; while we pay a heavy carriage and freight, besides a large import duty on arrival. We can speak from personal knowledge and observation, that the manufacturers in those localities have of late ceased to consider that they have any competition to fear from this country. Every vessel from Antwerp to the United States, for a long time past, has carried out large and increasing quantities of their goods; they have the command of the markets of Turkey, the Levant, and the Italian States; and while we have heard constant complaints of late of the decline of the woollen trade in Leeds, we have heard and observed equally of the increase of the trade of the Boleys and Simmonses, and others of Verviers and Aix-la-Chapelle, &c. The large trade which of late years has sprung up in working very low foreign wools, Zegai, Smyrna, Barbary, Buenos Ayres, &c., is much impeded by the import duty. These wools are now going in large quantities, duty free, to Antwerp, for the greatly increasing carpet manufactures of Tournay, Ghent, Courtray, &c., which are in consequence obtaining great advantage over this country. Our woollen trade is in the greatest danger from this suicidal policy, and no exertion should be spared to rescue it from its perilous position.—Economist.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE LEEDS MERCURY.

EARL FITZWILLIAM AND THE CORN LAWS.—Extract from a letter from Earl Fitzwilliam to one of his tenants:—"I understand that a meeting of farmers is to be held next Monday at Rotherham, for the purpose of helping to put down the Anti-Corn-Law League. I very much lament the existence of the League, but I have long foreseen that the character of our modern Corn Laws must produce something of the kind; though I do not pretend to have had so much foresight as to have foreseen the precise form which the discontent which they were sure to occasion would assume. The only way to put down the League is to do away with the cause of it. The League is only the counterpart of many similar combinations. Twenty years ago you had the Roman Catholic Association in Ireland; a shorter time ago you had the Political Unions in England. The Roman Catholic Relief Bill put an end to the former; Parliamentary reform put an end to the latter. Repeal of the Corn Laws would put down the Anti-Corn-Law League; but if you think you can accomplish this by subscribing, some £5, some £1, some £10, some £100, you will only spend your money very foolishly, and fail in your object. Laws which are felt to be a grievance cannot endure long, and the sooner they are done away with the better. The struggle which may be carried on by persons who fancy they profit by them is mischievous to all parties, but most so to the class for whose benefit they are intended. The struggle which the landowners and others, who assembled at York on the 22nd of February, are encouraging, can only end like similar contests for unjustifiable objects. Defeat must be the result, and such a defeat is a triumph over the landed interest. I deprecate such a triumph, because I wish the landed interest to be powerful; but to be powerful it must be just; it cannot be (because it ought not to be) powerful and unjust at the same time. The only true protection to the farmer and the landlord is to be found in the prosperity of the consumers, in the activity of trade, and the demands of the manufacturing customers; and if my tenants are not aware of this, they have not availed themselves of the very peculiar opportunities of observing it which they enjoy.—Milton, March 9, 1844."

GENTLEMEN.—I take the liberty of communicating, through the medium of your paper, the above "Extract from a letter from Earl Fitzwilliam to one of his tenants," and of expressing the cordial concurrence of myself and many others of his lordship's tenantry with the statements and opinions which that letter contains.

Much has been said from time to time on the prosperity which has attended agriculture under the so-called protection of the existing Corn Laws; and how steady and equable the yearly average prices of corn has been for the last twenty years, with the exception, perhaps, of the years 1834, 1835, and 1839; but I will venture to affirm that, although there may have been, during the existence of the present Corn Laws, periods of agricultural prosperity, yet there have been much more frequent and more lengthened periods of deep depression.

I will also venture to affirm, that while the yearly average prices of corn may (with the exceptions before adverted to) have been in some degree steady and equable, yet that in the different months in the same year, and frequently in the different weeks in the same month, the prices have been most unsteady and most unequal.

That when, in the same year, the price of corn has been the lowest, the exigencies of the great mass of tenant-farmers have compelled them to take their corn to the market; and when the price has been the highest, they have had none to sell.

That the fluctuations in prices, at different periods in the same year, produce and encourage the worst of all speculations—speculations in corn, in which the rise and fall in the price of the "staff of life" is brought about by every unfair artifice which the cupidity of the speculators can suggest.

That the existing Corn Laws, while they materially cramp the commercial, give no impulse to the agricultural interests of the country; that for the above, amongst many other strong reasons, they are bad in themselves; that in their operation they are daily becoming more injurious, and, consequently, that they ought to be repealed.

I beg to subjoin the following table, showing the fluctuations in the price of wheat in each year from 1815 to 1844:—

| Years. | Highest. | Lowest. | Variation per Cent. |
|--------|----------|---------|---------------------|
| 1815 | 70 3 | 54 8 | 28½ |
| 1816 | 103 11 | 53 1 | 95½ |
| 1817 | 112 7 | 74 0 | 52 |
| 1818 | 91 3 | 78 1 | 16½ |
| 1819 | 78 11 | 64 2 | 23 |
| 1820 | 37 9 | 53 11 | 30½ |
| 1821 | 70 7 | 46 2 | 53 |
| 1822 | 50 7 | 38 1 | 32½ |
| 1823 | 62 5 | 39 11 | 56½ |
| 1824 | 67 7 | 53 11 | 25½ |
| 1825 | 69 8 | 61 5 | 13½ |
| 1826 | 61 4 | 54 1 | 13½ |
| 1827 | | | |
| 1828 | 75 3 | 51 6 | 46 |
| 1829 | 75 3 | 56 3 | 33½ |
| 1830 | 72 11 | 56 1 | 30 |
| 1831 | 73 5 | 60 5 | 21½ |
| 1832 | 63 5 | 52 5 | 11½ |
| 1833 | 55 5 | 49 10 | 19½ |
| 1834 | 49 6 | 41 5 | 17 |
| 1835 | 42 10 | 36 8 | 16½ |
| 1836 | 61 2 | 36 0 | 71½ |
| 1837 | 60 1 | 52 6 | 14½ |
| 1838 | 77 0 | 52 5 | 47½ |
| 1839 | 81 6 | 63 6 | 24 |
| 1840 | 72 10 | 58 10 | 23½ |
| 1841 | 76 1 | 60 7 | 25½ |
| 1842 | 65 8 | 46 10 | 40 |
| 1843 | 58 4 | 46 3 | 26 |

I am, gentlemen,

Your very obedient servant,
JAMES RUSSELL.

High Royd-hill, near Barnsley, March 20, 1844.

WEEKLY COST OF PROTECTION TO SUGAR AND WHEAT.

(From the Economist of the 30th ult.)

SUGAR.—Since last week the relative prices of Porto Rico and Jamaica Muscovado sugars have continued exactly the same; and therefore the difference of the cost of our weekly consumption of 77,792 cwt., above what the same would be on the Continent, and paying the same amount of duty to the State that our colonial sugar does, amounts to £70,003 for the whole country, and to £5833 for the Metropolis alone, to be added to the respective balances of last week.

WHEAT.—The price of English wheat is a shade lower this week; but that of foreign wheat is also somewhat cheaper, and the difference is not changed.

It follows, therefore, that the difference of the cost of bread consumed during the last week, compared with what the same would cost on the Continent, has been £288,460 more for the whole country, and £24,038 for the Metropolis, to be added to the respective balances of last week. The account will now stand thus:—

| FOR THE WHOLE KINGDOM. | | |
|---|------------|--|
| Balance from last week | £4,301,537 | |
| Extra cost of sugar this week | 70,003 | |
| Ditto of bread | 288,460 | |
| Total extra cost from January 1st to this day | £4,660,030 | |
| FOR THE METROPOLIS ALONE. | | |
| Balance from last week | £858,461 | |
| Extra cost of sugar this week | 5,833 | |
| Ditto of bread | 24,038 | |
| Total extra cost from January 1st to this day | £888,332 | |

PROVINCIAL PRESS.

THE SECURITY OF THE SLIDING SCALE.—We have received through our London correspondent an early copy of the "private and confidential Report of the Publication Committee of the Agricultural Protection Society." The report, for a private and confidential document is rather a dull one. It has been printed in great numbers, to be circulated among all the private and confidential committees of all the local societies, and out of the very abundance of the supply of these private documents we have been supplied, unasked, with a copy. The committee seem to have come to the conclusion that there is no chance of keeping up the Corn Laws without bribing the press. They set forth certain schemes which they have for the publication and dissemination of tracts, and then proceed to make the following announcement of their views with respect to the newspaper press, the bribing of which, they say with much innocence, is a subject obviously of a confidential nature. They do not think it very desirable that they should start a newspaper of their own, but more desirable to start the older ones out of the path of indifference or hostility into the Pro-Corn-Law track. They seem to have assured themselves of the Morning Post and Morning Herald, and hope by strong and active measures to overcome the fastidiousness of a large portion of the country press. They are not nice as to politics, provided the papers support the sliding scale. We give the subjoined extract from this private and confidential circular, and beg to assure our friends that, though considerably fascinated by the glittering bait which dances before our eyes, we have not yet received that consideration from the committee which we desire to receive, even though we may be unable properly to earn it:—"They do not think it desirable that a newspaper of our own should be established, being deterred as well by the known difficulty of obtaining circulation for a new journal as by the ruinous losses incurred by many who have made the attempt. They propose, therefore, that the efforts of the society should be confined to London and country newspapers already established. With regard to the country newspapers, no one can doubt that these should be a chief means of diffusing the views of the society, but the selection of them the sub-committee are of opinion should, for many reasons, be left to the country societies. They wish at the same time to throw out some suggestions as to the mode in which, as it appears to them, this matter should be conducted. It appears clear, in the first place, that the editors of those country papers which (whatever their general politics may be,) support the agricultural interest are entitled, being men often of considerable talent, yet of limited incomes, to call upon the farmers for support; and it is plainly in the power of country societies—both as societies and individuals—to encourage friendly newspapers rather than those which assist our opponents either openly in leading articles, or covertly in letters from correspondents, or reports of adverse meetings. It appears further desirable that such statements as are likely to be useful should be communicated from time to time to friendly newspapers, as the most easy and certain mode of bringing them before the public, and that copies of those papers should be purchased by the country societies for local circulation. It would be the business of this sub-committee to furnish such information when occasion arises, with a view to its diffusion in this advantageous manner. With regard to the London newspaper press, the sub-committee have not as yet decided upon the arrangements to be made, but they ought to mention the readiness of the Morning Herald and Morning Post, as well as of the agricultural papers, to support the efforts of the society."—Western Times.

WHAT HAVE THE CORN LAWS DONE FOR TENANT-FARMERS?—Whatever advantage the landlords may derive from the Corn Laws, it may be truly said that the tenantry have got no benefit from them, as I shall proceed to show from an examination of the result of farming on the estates of two large landowners in this county, the rental of which may be from £8000 to £10,000 per annum. The first estate to which I shall allude is Gilmerton, belonging to Sir David Kinloch, and consisting of six farms, besides home farm, with grass parks, &c. Within the last 30 or 35 years, three tenants have left this property without being ruined, viz., Mr. Brown, Markle; Mr. Broke, Crauchie; and Mr. A. Somerville, Athelstanford; the last-named gentleman being the only person who had a lease renewed during this period on the estate. Ruined and left their farms—one tenant of the farm of Athelstanford, a second tenant of Athelstanford, a third tenant of the same farm, a tenant of the joint farms of Markle, Markle Mains, and Crauchie; a tenant of the farm of Kilduff; a second tenant of Markle Mains, and a second tenant of Crauchie; making in all seven tenants ruined within 35 years. The other estate belongs to Mr. Hope, of Luffness, now Under Secretary for the Colonies, and consists of five farms, with grass parks, &c. There have left this property during the same time, without being ruined, two tenants, viz., Mr. Yule, Aberlady Mains; and Mr. Reid, Brownrigg. Leases were renewed to three old tenants—Mr. Reid, Mr. B. Rennie, and Mr. Darling. Ruined and left their farms during the same period—a tenant of Luffness Muir, a second tenant of Luffness Muir, a tenant of Westfortune, a tenant of Aberlady Mains, and a tenant of Waughton. Now, of the five tenants on both estates who have left their farms without being ruined, it is well known that four of them succeeded to large sums of money by the death of relations, which rendered them quite independent of their farms—Mr. Brown, Mr. Yule, Mr. Reid, and Mr. Somerville; and hence, only one tenant of those depending entirely on farming has left these estates for upwards of thirty years without being ruined! Such, then, has been the working of the Corn Laws—such the effects of the boasted protection to the tenantry! Had a foreign enemy ravaged the country, the consequences could not have been more disastrous to the tenantry, nor could they have suffered more than they have done by the Corn Laws; for trusting to parliamentary prices, which never have been realized, they have been induced to enter into large engagements, and to sink their capital in improving their farms; and when rent day came, being unable to satisfy the factors, their stock and all their means were sequestered, and they were thus turned adrift penniless upon the world. The entire rental drawn from these estates during the period stated may probably amount to £300,000. The tenants should have received as their fair share of this, according to landlord logic, £100,000; but, instead of this, I believe the capital lost by them during the same time is equal to the whole amount at present invested in the cultivation of these lands; for on the twelve farms which constitute these estates, the capital of thirteen tenants has totally disappeared, having been seized on by the landlords! Such, then, has been the result of farming extensively, under the present protective system, in a county situated in the best climate of Scotland, and where agriculture has been brought to the greatest perfection by the enterprise of farmers of intelligence, education, and large capital, by whose exertions and industry their landlords have been enriched and enabled to live in a state of luxury and splendour which their ancestors could never anticipate, while their tenants have at the same time been reduced to poverty and want.—Correspondent of the Scotsman.

THE ANTI-LEAGUERS AT LANARK.—As will be seen from our report of the proceedings of the Anti-Leaguers at Lanark, their stultification was complete. They first issued a requisition determinedly opposed to any alteration in the present system, and after procuring signatures, they altered the terms of the requisition so as to admit any species of protection; and in their desperation they had the affrontery to publish the vitiated document as a bond fide requisition. Sir Wyndham Carmichael, with the true spirit of a gentleman, denounced this base proceeding, and on an attempt to propitiate his favour by alteration, after the resolutions were passed, declared that approving at one moment what they altered the next would plainly show to the world that this meeting of noblemen and gentlemen were non compos mentis. Notwithstanding this honest and most sensible declaration, what did this meeting in support of their desperate cause do? Why, they changed the whole tenor of their proceedings by rejecting the terms—general protection—and pledging themselves to the support of the present sliding scale! Was ever aught like this? Why, the Miners' Association, at the present moment in Glasgow, would blush to stultify themselves in such a manner. But we hail the abject weakness of the procedure, as we view the entire arguments of the day, as a decided symptom of weakness which will speedily end in the total overthrow and confusion of the monopolists. This is a triumph which even a declared victory in more popular districts could not have achieved.—Scotch Reformers' Gazette.

THE ANTI-LEAGUE.—The Anti-League makes but little noise at present. The origination of such a League was quite a work of supererogation; for a more powerful and compact League "for the Protection of British Agriculture" than the two Houses of Parliament, including the bishops, can scarcely be imagined. And then, to think of the farce of a monopolist landlord going down to his tenants and commanding them to petition him as a "born legislator" to support a law which is his own legislative child, and which he cherishes with as much care and affection as he does his foxhounds and hunters! But the secret lies in this—the monopolists have at last comprehended the great fact, that public opinion is a power in our modern society, and that the fiat of even a born legislator is a thing to be laughed at when unsupported by this power. Accordingly, as the Corn Law is maintained ostensibly for the good of the working agriculturists, it is meet that these agriculturists should petition against the repeal of a law which ensures their comfort and happiness. But murder will out. In looking over our English news our readers will find that Lord Abinger has sentenced a young man to imprisonment for life for having written an incendiary letter to a farmer. The young man was willing to work, but could not find employment. He was haunted by the twin furies, hunger and despair, and goaded by them he wrote the letter for which he has been doomed, justly or unjustly, to spend his life in the company of hopeless felons. This young man is a type of thousands in the Corn-Law blessed or cursed agricultural districts. That he is so is established upon the authority of Sir Augustus Henniker, chairman of the Suffolk quarter sessions, who told his brother magistrates on the 19th inst. that it was vain for them to hope to extinguish the torch of the incendiary so long as the agricultural labourers were in receipt of their present miserable wages. This is strong language; but it is supported by facts; for within the last ten days seven other incendiary fires have blazed in the counties of Essex and Suffolk! The Anti-Leaguers should endeavour to crush "Swing" before they attempt the Quixotic task of annihilating the National Anti-Corn-Law League.—Bradford Observer.

FRAUDULENT MANNER OF GETTING UP CORN-LAW PETITIONS NEAR BRADFORD.—We observe that it is attempted, in the last week's Intelligencer, to deny the statement made in this journal a fortnight ago, with respect to the fraudulent means employed to get up petitions in favour of the Corn Laws in the village of Holme-lane, near Bradford. We stated that one James Carter, who resides near Tong-lane bar, a shopkeeper and farmer, under Colonel Tempest, had been going about with two petitions,—one for the Leeds and Bradford Railway by the valley line, and the other in support of the present Corn Laws; and that, after having obtained the signature of one James Simpson to the former petition, he also obtained it to the latter, assuring him that it was against the Corn Laws instead of in favour of them; he next proceeded to a person named Joseph Day, whose name he also obtained to both petitions, assuring him that they were both for the same object. This statement is flatly contradicted in the Intelligencer, which it is, no doubt, exceedingly easy to do. But this much we shall only say in justification of our original statement, that the following persons are ready to come forward—together with many more who might be named—and prove that they were imposed upon by not having the real nature of the petition divulged to them; and that Mr. Carter did not present a preamble or any form of petition, except that in reference to the railway:—James Simpson, Joseph Day, William Hopkinson, Jonathan Edmondson, Richard Stead, Matthew Stead, J. Wray, John Newby, &c. &c. These persons, we have been assured, are all ready to come forward and testify, on oath if required, to the truth of our statement. We believe the fact of the matter to be, that the committee of the Tong Conservative Association offered the person who went round with the petitions a certain sum of money, to gain a sufficient number of signatures to their petition in favour of the Bread-tax, and, to save time and trouble, the petition was hawked about under false colours, and names were obtained to it by the fraudulent means we have above described.—Leeds Times.

HULL AND FREE TRADE.—Our readers will probably recollect that our paper of last week contained the following paragraph:—"HULL IN FUTURUM.—The declared intention of the Dock Company to purchase Mr. Broadley's ground, and to construct a canal or accommodation dock thereon for the use of the railway, has given a great impetus to the value of ground in that neighbourhood. That which a short time ago might have been had at 8s. per square yard, cannot now be bought under 12s.; and we are informed that all the land east of Great Thornton-street has been eagerly purchased by speculators." And upon this we remarked—"Decidedly the prospects of the operatives of Hull are good, provided the existing division of opinion and party interests on the Dock Bill be

