

THE LEAGUE.

No. 15.]

SATURDAY, JANUARY 6, 1844.

[3d.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND, £100,000.

All subscribers of £1 and upwards to the ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUND FUND, will be entitled to, and receive a copy, weekly, of this publication for twelve months from the date of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have forwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their addresses as well as their names, to the Offices of THE LEAGUE, 67, Fleet-street, London; or to Newall's-buildings, Manchester.

The Council would respectfully suggest to those subscribers who may not wish to file their LEAGUE newspapers, the propriety of forwarding them to parties whom they know to be either indifferent, or hostile to, the principles of Free Trade.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND, or subscriptions for The League Newspaper, are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders, or by orders on houses in London.

CONTINUED PROGRESS.

The Anti-Corn-Law Agitation is, in the best and highest sense of the terms, a Democratic movement. It aims at asserting the rights and securing the interests of the great mass of society. Its object is the common good, and its means the purification of the electoral body, so as to bring the theory of representation as at present legally constituted, and its practical operation, into harmony. Further than this, which is not less undeniably just than popular, it meddles not with political creeds or parties. Hence the growing recognition of its safe, peaceful, and constitutional character. The League has been called the work of wealthy manufacturers. It certainly possesses their countenance and aid. But how does this comport with the charge of stimulating disorder and outrage? The Greggs, Philipsons, and Ashtons, with others whose names adorn our subscription list, are not people to profit by confusion, or to be secure in convulsion. They have most undeniably evinced their earnestness for the object, and their confidence in the conduct, of this agitation. The names of Marshall of Leeds, and Strutt of Derby, carry with them a well-earned moral influence, the full weight of which they confer upon the League by the munificence of their donations. On the other hand, as Mr. Cobden truly observed at the Bolton meeting, "The League has already the oldest and best families of the Aristocracy, the largest and wealthiest landowners with them; the Fitzwilliams, the Spencers, the Ducies, the Bedfords, the Radnors, and the Grosvenors." To the excellent letter of the Marquis of Westminster, accompanying a contribution of £500, we direct the reader's attention in another part of our paper. It is well calculated to allay the fears of alarmists; and to silence, if anything can silence, those who ascribe anti-property doctrines to a body which numbers in its ranks, under the names of Mr. Marshall, Mr. S. J. Loyd, and the Marquis of Westminster, three men who probably combine the characters of the wealthiest manufacturing capitalist, the wealthiest commoner, and the wealthiest peer of the realm.

It is worthy of remark that the great meetings at Nottingham, Leicester, and Derby, were all presided over by neighbouring landowners, unconnected with trade. The union of class is complete, whether we trace its descent from the richer to the poorer, or its extension over different forms of property or of industry. How futile, then, are the fears, whether of agriculture or of aristocracy. And how firm may be the hopes of the many, for whom such alliance of the different orders of society, in the pursuit of a common object, has always been the forerunner of legislative relief and improvement.

The meetings to which we have referred show the enthusiasm of the middle classes, and of the people generally to do their part. They continue the splendid series of gatherings, which we had previously recorded and noticed, in the large towns of Lancashire and Yorkshire; and have been already followed by others in that locality, as at Oldham, Bolton, Bury, Bacup, &c. Exertions like these deserve the gratitude of the country. They are a manful attempt to put down a great public wrong. The extent of the wrong is manifest by the occasion for such exertions. Legislation has been made subservient to a predominant class-interest. The people can only obtain due attention to their suffering, wants, and wishes, by an agitation backed by a large subscription. For a chance of redress, there must be an overwhelming "pressure from without." Thanks to those who furnish the materials for rendering it sufficiently cogent. In the northern and midland counties, the zeal is that of a crusade. It is rich in the noble qualities of liberality, sacrifice, energy, and union. Were hostility towards the Corn Laws confined to those counties, we might safely predict their downfall. No such spirit has ever been displayed, merely to be vanquished; and the interest with which the reports of these meetings are everywhere read evinces that they are secure of their just meed of admiration, and that they possess the additional worth of stimulating other districts to their duty. Through Southern England they are regarded with a sympathy that will soon aim at more tangible expression. And Scotland is ripe and ready for co-operation. "I mak sicker," said the Kirkpatrick, when he dealt the stroke that left the traitor no chance; and such will be the blow of Scotland at the Corn Laws.

The coming of the end is plain from the desperation and disgracefulness of the means resorted to for obtaining that procrastination which is now all that remains to be obtained. Neither repeated exposure nor hopeless failure, has yet convinced some parties that the League is not to be checked by the employment of hired bullies for the disturbance of public meetings. Something of this sort was attempted at Leicester; and that the attempt was premeditated and prepared, was very unwittingly put in evidence by the Leicester Journal in its anticipatory article. Mr. Ferrand's tongue seems to be considered a "chartered libertine." People treat his statements of events and character as Charles Lamb did Coleridge's theology: "Never mind what he says, he is so full of his fun." But the extravagance of calumny, while neutralising its power, does not exculpate its motive; nor does it leave those blameless for the support of whose sinister interests calumnies are invented and propagated. Personal slander is now systematically employed against the active enemies of monopoly. The Corn Laws are defended by a weapon which has hitherto been generally deemed too base for the purposes of partisan warfare. The taint of the agent is on the party that profits. Acquiescence is disgrace. Public opinion will, and rightfully, cry shame on those who, tacitly though it be, consent to have their cause supported even by a voluntary mission of mendacity.

Other movements are devoid of this degrading character, though not more hopeful for their promoters. Sussex is following the example of Essex in the attempt to form an Anti-League Confederacy. A requisition for a county meeting has been signed at Chichester, which is worth insertion as a curiosity. Apart from the report, it might be taken for a bill of indictment:—

"We, the undersigned owners and occupiers of land, tradesmen and others, whose welfare mainly depends on the prosperity of British agriculture, observing with regret the unchecked progress of certain dissatisfied self-interested persons, denominating themselves the Anti-Corn-Law League, chiefly headed by master-manufacturers of wealth and influence, subscribing large sums of money for the purpose of disseminating their views and opinions through the agency of the press, as well as by the exertions of paid itinerant orators, for the purpose of exciting public opinion in favour of their object—that of rendering null and void one of the laws of the land, originating in the wise views of our ancestors for the protection of British agriculture, feel it to be our duty, collectively and individually, to recommend a meeting of all persons holding these our opinions, at the White Horse Inn, Steyning, in the county of Sussex, at eleven for twelve o'clock, on the day of , there to confer upon and consider what steps may be peaceably and legally pursued to arrest and counteract the machinations and misrepresentations of the dissatisfied and calumnious parties for the purpose of depriving agriculture and agricultural labour of their due reward, by letting in at all times, free from duty, the fruits of foreign capital and labour. On these grounds we do not hesitate to affix our signatures to this requisition, with the full intention of proving our support, and, if possible, our personal attendance at Steyning, at the hour on the day herein appointed."

No farmer ever penned this sarrago. It smells of a different shop. The hand of some legal hanger-on of the Duke of Richmond is very visible. We scarcely know which to admire most, the history, the logic, or the language. The antiquity of importation duties on corn; the need of great exertion to oppose "certain dissatisfied self-interested persons;" and the professional verbosity, "rendering null and void one of the laws" of Lindley Murray, combine to liken it to the razors in Peter Pindar's well-known story, which were made to sell, and not to shave. This preamble was made, not to be understood, but to be signed. Signed it was, and the blanks, we hope, filled in with an early day, that we may soon see what comes of it.

In spite of their professions of hostility, we take the formation of such associations to be a step in the progress of our cause. Let the farmers get together, and talk, and compare notes, and sharpen one another's wits: it is the very thing we want. Let them see who are the Leaguers. Our victory only awaits their general perception of their own interests. Even at this Chichester meeting, as soon as the attorney-slang of the requisition had been read, and the usual commonplaces gone through in a mover's speech, we are informed by the report that "a desultory conversation ensued." Those are the things; those desultory conversations of the farmers. The cut-and-dry oratory of owners and agents—their hashed-up extracts from Post and Standard leaders—will be only the outer surface of the meeting. Its core and pith will be got at in the aside colloquies, the under-toned confidential grumbings, and the interjections fired at the platform from a distance. On this occasion we read of their "complaining greatly of the fall in prices, resulting from the new Corn Law and Tariff, and from the great uncertainty that hung over them as to its continuance." What, then, are they going to make a club for? and how is it that they sign their names to an angry manifesto against the League, which cares little for the Tariff, and is also "complaining greatly of the new Corn Law," and of "the great uncertainty?" Sir Robert Peel complained greatly of that same "great uncertainty" in his speech on the Corn Laws, in the House of Commons, five years ago. Very much, truly, have "farmers' friends" mended the matter since that time. How many more years will it take for tenant-farmers to discover that finality is neither bred by Birmingham hells at Tamworth, nor grown in the gardens of Goodwood? They will never find finality but in freedom. These clubs, with the "desultory conversations," will help on the discovery. All increase of information and excitement of the wits, helps it on. We regard them as an initiatory process of League membership. We reckon upon their future co-operation. If they last twelve months, they will be growing into branch societies of the League. Thanks to their founders, who will thus do good when they mean mischief, and add a new power to the cause of justice, while they only purposed to band their unbefitted retainers in defence of their own monopoly.

The intention, nevertheless, indicates a determination to resist to the last. In some respects, so much the better. There will be the less encouragement for politicians of any class to dream of compromises by which the food of the poor would be permanently taxed, and the interests of the industrious community permanently damaged. The infatuation that cries "no surrender" is a stimulus to the assault. Its continuance strengthens the spirit it has aroused. Hired ruffianism, systematic slander, and confederated Anti-Leagueism, are calling forth ampler contributions, stimulating the adhesion of the noble and the wealthy, and ministering to a zeal and determination that needed no such excitement. By no means that Monopoly possesses, but least of all by such means, are the people of this country to be put down in the pursuit of their just rights,—that of the merchant to the free exchange of his commodities, and that of the labourer to the food, untaxed, which he earns in the sweat of his brow.

COMPROMISE.

Hints are given in various quarters that the League is considered by some influential persons as too impracticable a body, and that it would be well if its leaders showed something like a conciliatory disposition towards the landed interest, so that a compromise might be effected by substituting a low fixed duty for the total and immediate repeal of the Corn Laws. Some of these hints go further, and take the shape of insinuations that the Council of the League would be disposed to open negotiations on the basis of compromise; and it has even been asserted that Lord John Russell was authorized to propose his eight-shilling fixed duty. We know not who the parties are that gave his lordship such authority, but we do know that no such measure was ever sanctioned by the Council of the League; and furthermore, that such a proposition never will be, and never can be entertained by that body. We are told that the mercantile interest will be satisfied with a fixed duty, which would remove all the uncertainties and impediments to trade arising from the sliding scale. Granting this for the sake of argument, we deny that the Corn Laws are a question merely between the landed interest and the mercantile interest; they are still more palpably in issue between the landed interest and the agricultural interest, using the latter phrase, in its true sense, to designate the farmers and farm-labourers; on them the system of protection—whether sliding or fixed—must continue to inflict the double injustice of uncertainty of tenure and exorbitancy of rent. Protection is not wanted, and never was wanted, for British capital, British industry or British skill; it was and is sought for land alone, "to pay mortgages," says my Lord Mountcashel; "to provide rent-charges for younger children," says Sir Edward Knatchbull; "to prevent the unprotected and unprivileged classes from treading too closely on the heels of the protected and the privileged," means, and sometimes says, his Grace of Wellington,— "Their good, ill, health, wealth, joy, or discontent, Being, end, aim, religion—rent! rent! rent!"

This national injustice must continue so long as there are any discriminating duties imposed on the national food, whether they be fixed or variable; and if there be any of the mercantile class willing to consent to its perpetuation, provided that they obtain for themselves facilities of interchange, they may be assured that the League will consent to no such compromise, but will continue to maintain the claims of the agricultural interest, as well as those of the mercantile interest, against the unjust privileges conceded to, or demanded by, what is called the landed interest.

We are not ignorant of the charms which compromise would have for many of the mercantile classes, who now complain bitterly of the Corn Laws solely or chiefly on account of their operation in preventing the interchange of commodities, and thus limiting and fettering the commercial transactions of England with the principal exporting countries of the world. The Corn Laws are not the only monopoly under which the nation suffers; and hence we have many ready to offer a fixed duty to the landlords, not so much as a compromise, but rather as a bribe for their supporting a discriminating duty on sugar, coffee, timber, and other colonial produce. A discriminating duty on corn means a discriminating duty on a multitude of other things besides; and hence Free Traders should be prepared for a more arduous struggle than any in which they have yet engaged, when the sliding scale, now all but universally condemned, will be abandoned to its certain and unhonoured fate; for then will come the crisis when the interested and the timid and the careless, and the men bound by trammels of party, and the men having hopes from the success of party, will all join in raising the cry of "compromise," and endeavour to change a national victory into a party triumph. Appeals will be made to the hopes of one, the fears of another, and the compassion of a third; it will be said that the League can form no Ministry of its own; that the dictation of such a body, though asserting a right principle, is an evil precedent; that it is not wise to press advantages too far, nor humane to triumph too completely; and that a more gradual rather than immediate abolition would afford means for reconciling many opponents to the proposed alteration. This is the danger which we have most reason to dread, and it may be nearer than many of us imagine.

It requires no gift of prophecy to foresee what will be the consequence if this plan of compromise meets anything like general acceptance. The fixed-duty Minister will gravely declare his adhesion to the principles of Free Trade, expose some evils of the sliding scale, allude to conciliation as a great element of policy, and propose the admission of foreign corn at a duty of five shillings per quarter. Should this pass by a majority of fifty or upwards, the matter is settled so far as the House of Commons is concerned; but should the majority be less, the Minister will hint to the Free Traders the folly of endangering the settlement of such a great question for a few shillings one way or the other, and the fixed duty goes up to eight or ten shillings at the instant. When the bill goes to the Lords there will be a smart debate on the second reading;—if the bill be thrown out (which is pretty certain), the compromisers will have to raise the figure of fixed duty for the next year. The Minister again seeks the compromisers: he tells them that something must be sacrificed to ensure the tranquillity of the country and preserve the balance of the constitution; they are forced to acquiesce, and the country is saddled with a fixed duty of a pound a quarter, while those who have been duped into consent have the further satisfaction of knowing that they have forfeited for ever all claim to the confidence of their country. Now, does any one of those who hint at the propriety of compromise imagine that the League will ever stultify itself so far as to take a part in such a farce as that which we have described? If any one entertains such a notion he is most egregiously mistaken: we are not disposed to act the part of knaves to our own manifest injury, and be laughed at as fools into the bargain. We know, not only that a fixed duty is a fixed injustice, but that it includes in its scope a whole legion of fixed injustices; and it is because the tax on food is the great strength and bond of all the rest that we shall never abate one jot from our original demand, THE TOTAL AND IMMEDIATE REPEAL OF THE CORN LAWS.

IRELAND.

We have received several letters commenting on the condition of the Irish peasantry as described in Reuben's letters, and directing attention to the confirmation of his statements by the conduct of the magistrates in the West Riding of the county of Cork, particularly Alexander O'Driscoll, Esq. All our English correspondents seem to regard these statements with a kind of sceptical surprise, while our Irish friends are not less astonished that any one should express wonder about the matter. The truth is, that oppression of tenantry is the rule in Ireland, and justice to the peasantry so rare an exception, that we have known a challenge to be sent to a magistrate for daring to grant a labourer a summons against "a gentleman." Alexander O'Driscoll is very undeservedly regarded as "the black sheep" among the Irish landlords; on the contrary, he is

"Knight of the shire, and represents them all."

Aristotle mentions an ancient oligarchy, the members of which bound themselves by oath to do all the mischief which they possibly could to the commonalty; the Irish landlords, placed by a combination of circumstances in the position of an irresponsible oligarchy, take no oath to injure the peasantry, but perform that duty as faithfully as if they had been bound by the most solemn of sacraments.

The present relations between landlord and tenant in Ireland are precisely the same as those between the Norman baron and Saxon serf in England under the Plantagenets. Both sets of landowners acquired their estates by conquest, and were supported by foreign aid in secure possession. So long as the Plantagenets retained their conquests in France, the Norman barons had a support for their tyranny in foreign aid, which rendered all the efforts of the Saxon peasantry to obtain any amelioration of their condition utterly hopeless. The loss of French dominions to the English sovereigns was the gain of their just rights to the English people. Joan of Arc was the emancipator of the English peasantry.

The Irish proprietary generally date the tenure of their lands from the grants made by Oliver Cromwell, subsequently confirmed by the Act of Settlement. In Cromwell's time it was held that Irish papists, being idolaters, stood in the same relation to the Puritans that the Canaanites of old did to the Israelites, and were, therefore, justly driven out to make room for the "people of the Lord." The tale that these forfeitures were a punishment for the alleged massacre of 1641 was an afterthought, and was an exceedingly clumsy contrivance, though it has proved wondrously successful; for the murders of 1641, whether few or many, were confined to Ulster, and the forfeited estates were for the most part in Leinster and Munster. It is sufficient to glance at the rules of forfeiture passed by the English Parliament, to see that the real crime of which the Irish proprietors were guilty was their steady adherence to the cause of Charles I. It may be asked, then, how it happened that these forfeitures were so readily confirmed by Charles II.? The answer is, that, from the middle of the reign of Elizabeth, it had been the great object of English policy to establish what was called an English interest in Ireland; Cromwell accomplished this object; and the Stuarts, proverbial for their perfidy and ingratitude, regularly bargained with the intruders to keep the lands which had been wrested from loyalty to reward treason. It is not generally known that James, Duke of York, afterwards James II., though himself a Romanist, obtained a large share of what might be called the Protestant plunder under the Act of Settlement.

The Cromwellian proprietors felt that they owed the acquisition of their lands to military force, and they looked upon the Irish as enemies eager to seize the first opportunity of recovering these estates. Hence the Irish landlords look for their security not to the esteem of their tenantry, or the confidence of their dependents, but to the support of British bayonets, and the protection of British cannon. They are an alien oligarchy supported by a foreign power, and hence they have no sympathies with the soil or with the native inhabitants. English law arms them with power, and English protection exonerates them from responsibility. From the beginning of the world power without responsibility has been invariably abused, and it will continue to be so until human nature is regenerated by some moral miracle.

It is neither consistent with the honour or the interests of England to support the predial tyranny of the Irish landlords; but to withdraw such support is, at the present moment, one of the greatest difficulties that could be placed before a wise and beneficent statesman. The landlords of Ireland have almost exclusive possession of all the agency by which the English Government can be brought to act on the Irish people; and their protracted resistance to municipal reform—mischievous as the scanty amount of it granted to Ireland was—proves how highly they appreciate such an advantage. The Ministers of the Crown cannot even make an inquiry except through persons interested in hiding the truth from them. Even the present commission for investigating the state of the law respecting landlord and tenant in Ireland is essentially a court of landlords, and the tenants in vain exclaim—

"A fox should not be of the jury Upon a goose's trial."

It is through the power of England that Irish landlords play those fantastic tricks before high heaven of which Mr. Alexander O'Driscoll has just given the world an edifying example; and it must be confessed that we, the good people of England, are not wholly without blame in the matter. More than thirty years ago the Rev. Sidney Smith declared that "so soon as the name of Ireland is mentioned, the people of England seem to bid adieu to common decency and common sense, and to act at once with the barbarity of tyrants and the fatuity of idiots."

Never was there greater fatuity than to assign the insurrectionary spirit of the Irish as a reason for refusing redress of grievances. The great Sully long ago declared that masses of the people are never driven to commotion and revolt by fickleness or passion, but only by intense suffering. The discontented and insurrectionary spirit of the Irish is decisive evidence against the administration of the laws under which they live. The laws themselves may be the perfection of wisdom; but the best laws are utterly worthless when the power of dispensing them is intrusted to the corrupt and the selfish. The legislation which God himself gave from Sinai remained unaltered during all the vicissitudes of the Hebrew commonwealth; but it made all the difference in the world whether it was administered by a David or a Jezebel.

The history of the world has been written in vain, if it has not taught us that far greater tyranny can be practised with impunity under the forms of constitutional law than under the most absolute despotism. The Irish have to pay the expenses of the forms of British liberty, and to endure all the severities of Turkish servitude.

Circumstances have freed Irish landlords from the moral responsibility to which the landed proprietors of England are subject; and to restore the balance between them and their tenantry, the Irish occupants of land ought to have greater security of tenure than is found to be necessary in England. We do not, however, anticipate any great remedial measure being propounded until the English Government and English people are thoroughly aware of the vast amount of the evil with which they have to grapple. The Times has done good service by its manly exposure of the iniquitous system pursued by the majority of the Irish landlords; whatever causes of complaint on other points the Irish people may have against the "monster-journal," this is a national service the amount of which cannot easily be exaggerated. Since the Times has opened the case on behalf of the people, local journals have begun to drag the dark doings of magistrates in petty sessions into the light of day, and to follow the honourable example of the Tipperary Free Press—one of the few provincial journals in Ireland which has merited the character of fearless integrity in exposing magisterial delinquency, and legal talent in maintaining popular right. The Irish landlords require to be taught that the English people will not countenance the systematic infliction of wrong, and will not support expensive military establishments for the purpose of protecting Irish squires in the full enjoyment of the luxury of tyranny. Already the people of England are beginning to ask what are the causes of Irish insurrections and predial revolts; and the exposures of every intelligent traveller who has visited the land, and has been unblinded by the influence of its multitudinous parties, have gone far to convince them that these causes are the wrongdoings of the landed oligarchy. Such was the testimony of the patriotic Lord Gosford, and every day brings fresh confirmation to the truth of his memorable words:—"THE CAUSES OF IRISH INSURGENCY ARE, MISERY! OPPRESSION! AND FAMINE!" The sooner three such agitators are prosecuted to conviction, and deprived of political power, the better will it be for the peace of Ireland and the prosperity of England.

PUTTING ON THE SCRIBW.

Everywhere the landlords are resorting to intimidation and analogous methods of persuasion, to induce the tenant-farmers to take up a position of active hostility to the League. They know that doubts of the policy of the Corn Laws have been widely spreading amongst the farmers during the past year; they begin to apprehend a wholesale conversion of the industrious agriculturists to Free-Trade opinions; and they are endeavouring to get up the appearance, if not the reality, of that ardour for "protection," that sinking of all political opinion to uphold the Corn Laws, which carried the monopoly elections in 1841.

Hence proceeded the desperate speech of the Marquis of Salisbury to his tenants at Hatfield; though the effects of that speech have been directly the reverse of what was intended, for the most determined supporters of monopoly amongst the Hatfield tenantry are disgusted and offended by such an insolent act of dictation.

From the same source proceeds the transparent juggle of the land-valuers and lawyers of the Essex "squires" to get up a tenant-farmers' "Protection Society" in that county. And lastly, we have a declaration or protest, signed by 160 East Lothian farmers, that the resolutions passed at the Anti-Corn-Law meeting at Haddington, on the 27th of October last, against the Corn Laws, were "calculated to give a false impression of the feelings of the tenantry of the county of East Lothian on the subject of the Corn Laws."

This declaration is perhaps one of the strongest proofs we have yet had of the prevalence of Free-trade notions—for they are scarcely matured into opinions—having made way amongst the East Lothian farmers, as the following brief history of that protest will show. That the farmers should have dared to act for themselves in relation to the Corn Laws was deemed an overt act of treason against landlord supremacy, and the tenant-farmers of East Lothian were, soon after the Anti-Corn Law meeting, required to declare that, though apparently concurring in the resolutions at the meeting, they really dissented from them; but only eighteen of more than a hundred farmers who had been present could be induced to stultify themselves by signing that most humiliating statement. This move was therefore a failure, and the East Lothian lairds went upon another tack. Copies of the protest we have first mentioned were forwarded by the factors of the proprietors to one or more farmers in every parish, with instructions to carry it round and get as many farmers' signatures to the document as possible. Now, the result of this effort, in which every means of influence were exerted, furnishes the most satisfactory evidence of the progress of Free Trade in East Lothian. It must not be supposed that the delusions cherished for thirty years by the Legislature and the landlords can be entirely dislodged from the tenants' minds in a few months, or that even the mass of Scotch farmers can at once be brought to abandon that most fascinating delusion, the expectation of permanently high prices by act of Parliament. The state of the agriculturists' minds is, therefore, essentially one of doubt and uncertainty. They doubt now, what was previously in their imagination an incontrovertible axiom, whether Parliament really can perform its promises, whether it can, in fact, secure permanently high prices; they are beginning to question whether, if prices could be kept permanently high, they, the tenants, would profit thereby; or whether the landlords might not sack as rent all beyond the very lowest farming returns. Moreover, they are uncertain how long the present Corn Laws can be maintained; whether they will weather the next session, or whether the delusion of a fixed duty may not then be attempted. But, beyond all, they feel that the future existence of any restriction on the Corn Trade must be dated by months, or possibly weeks only. Then they have lost all faith in their political leaders, for classes of men do not readily forget such wholesale tergiversation as occurred amongst the political landlords in 1841-42; and with a very large, perhaps the largest, certainly an increasing portion of the tenant-farmers, an earnest desire for a complete and final settlement of the question is taking the place of their recently entertained doubts and uncertainties. That such changes should have been effected by the simple but persevering efforts of the League to create inquiry and discussion amongst the farmers as to the operation of the Corn Laws, is a matter of triumphant congratulation to the advocates of national industry. But let not the sanguine Free-Trader jump to too hasty a conclusion, that his work is done; we have scotched the monster Monopoly, not killed him; and it is not improbable that, in the writhings of his expiring agonies, he may exhibit a convulsive energy which will delude some superficial observers into the belief that what is really a death throes may be the recovery of vital power.

We must remember that the changes of opinion amongst farmers to which we have alluded are only complete with the most intelligent: the mass, the average farmers, are only in a state of transition; they instinctively recur with a lingering fondness to the delusion of act-of-Parliament high prices, to profit without the labour of thought, or the necessity for intelligent exertion. They do not readily forget their old associations. Then, although they have lost all confidence in their landlords as public men, there are local and personal influences, the habit of exacting and guidance on the one part and of blind deference on the other, which render it difficult for a farmer—especially one who has not committed himself publicly—to refuse to sign such a declaration as that got up by the East Lothian lairds, when peremptorily presented by the landlord's factor.

Again: notwithstanding the standard of farming is higher in the Lothians than in most parts of England, it would be quite a mistake to suppose that all the land in East Lothian is well farmed. Thus, Mr. Pusey, M.P., in an excellent paper on "the Agricultural Improvements of Lincolnshire," in the just published number of the English Agricultural Society's Journal, tells us: "along the seacoast are some of the famous farms of East Lothian. It is an extraordinary soil, for which the tenants, farming admirably, pay the well-known rents of £4 and £5 the acre, which some suppose to be the common rents of East Lothian. But ride two or three miles only inland, and you find some land very well farmed at £2 an acre; then land at £1 per acre—some of it very ill farmed, foul, and out of condition."

Now, in these few sentences, we have notice of various circumstances which would be likely to render the East Lothian farmers fearful of a change. The best farmers, on the best lands, are bound to pay extraordinary rents. They are chiefly wheat growers, and, like most wheat-growing farmers, probably rely too exclusively on that crop; and there is much land in East Lothian, as elsewhere, badly farmed, the occupiers of which of course dread a change. If, therefore, nine-tenths of the tenant-farmers of East Lothian had signed the protest thus forced upon them by the landlords, we should have been neither disappointed nor surprised. But, what is the fact? Why, that with all the pressure, and all the influence of the East Lothian proprietors, and the intimidation, cajolery, and persuasion of their factors, they have only succeeded in obtaining the signatures of 160 farmers out of the 430 tenants who occupy the land of that county. Truly may we say, in the words of a local contemporary (the Scotsman), that "the efforts made by the landholders to bolster up the Corn Laws by a fictitious show of support, only afford fresh triumphs to the League;" triumphs which are only valuable because they indicate the progress of true and just economical opinions, which have a most important influence on national prosperity and human happiness.

MEETINGS.

ANTI-CORN-LAW MEETING AT OLDHAM.

(From the Manchester Guardian.)

On Tuesday evening, pursuant to placards and advertisement, a public meeting was held in the Town-hall, at Oldham, in aid of the great Anti-Corn-Law League fund of £100,000. Mr. Joseph Gillham, senior head-constable, presided. Though admittance was only had by tickets, price 6d., the large room, which is capable of holding upwards of 1100 persons (having an area of 242 square yards) was well filled with a respectable assemblage, including a number of ladies. The room, which was tastefully decorated, was brilliantly lighted by three handsome candelabra, of bright and burnished gold, each containing eight argand gas burners. These candelabra have just been fixed in the hall, and greatly improve its appearance. They cost £150.

Owing to a delay in the starting from the Manchester station of the railway, of the principal speakers of the evening, caused by the immense number of Oldham persons returning from Manchester (so that the train which should have started at five o'clock was three-quarters of an hour later), the chair was not taken until seven o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN, in opening the proceedings, read letters from Mr. Alderman Brooks, Mr. Brotherton, M.P., and Mr. James Lees, of Delph Lodge, expressing their regret at being unable to attend.

The meeting was then addressed by Colonel THOMPSON, in his usual quaint and pithy style; by Mr. COBDEN, in a powerful and argumentative speech, addressed chiefly to the working classes, and considering the Corn Laws as a wage- and labour question; and by Mr. R. R. MOORE, who showed by details, respecting the hat trade of Oldham, and the exports of hats, that, with high prices of wheat, our exports fell off, but increased when wheat fell. He also explained the progress of the League, and how it had employed the large sums previously contributed, and concluded by calling on the meeting to begin the new year well.

The CHAIRMAN said he was not able this year (as his losses had been severe,) to double his subscription. He would give £100. (Applause.)

Mr. MOORE then announced other subscriptions:—Messrs. Lees and Mills, Waterhead Mill, £40 (double last year's subscription); Messrs. Gartside and Mayall, £40; Messrs. J. and H. Nelson, £30 (double); Mr. G. Barlow, £20 (double); Mr. Jas. Cheetham, £20; Mr. James Butterworth, Greenacres Moor, £20 (quadruple); Messrs. Seville and Wolstenholme, Lower Moor, £20; Messrs. Marsden and Collings, of Hollins Mill, £20 (double); Mr. John Bentley, head constable, £10; Mr. Eli Lees, Soho, £10; Messrs. Whitaker, of Royton, £10 (double); Messrs. John Holden and Brothers, Holden Fold, £10; Messrs. George Holden and Son, Royton Lane, £20 (double); Messrs. Lees and Barnes, Soho, £20; Mr. John Peatt, Hartford Iron Works, £10 (double); Mr. James Greaves, Dircar, £30 (double); Mr. John Chadwick, Rhodes Mill, £10; Mr. William Wilde, Bel-field, £10; Mr. James Wilde, Mumps, £10; Messrs. James Cheetham and Sons, Clough Mill, Crompton, £10 (new); Mr. Thomas West, Union-street, £5 (last year £2); Mr. Joseph Baxter, Hollinwood, £5 (new); Mr. Thomas Mellor, Royton, £5 (five-fold); Mr. Samuel Riley, Market Place, £5 (last year £2); Messrs. Dyson and Brother, Greenacres, £10 (double); Miss Chadwick, Rhodes, £1 (paid); Miss Susanah Brierley, 5s. (paid); Mr. William Hull, Manchester-street, £1; Miss Ann Walton, 5s. (paid); Miss Mary Mellor, 5s. (paid); Miss Elizabeth Walton, 5s. (paid);

Mr. Thos. Holden, Royton, £4 (double); Mr. John Chadwick, Royton-street, £2; Mr. Daniel Mago, Church-street, £1 (paid, new); Mr. Jas. Fletcher, King-street, £1 (paid, new); Jos. Taylor, Primrose Bank, a working man, 1s. (paid); a working man, £1; Mr. Joseph Ogden, Fallsworth, £1 (new); Messrs. Brierley, Brothers, Union-street, £15 (last year £10); Mr. David Walton, cotton-dealer, £10 (double); Mr. Henry Radcliffe, Bank, £5; Mr. James Radcliffe, Hollinwood, £5 (five-fold); Mr. H. Hodson, Shaw-street, £1 (new); Mr. Benjamin Wilson, tailor and draper, Yorkshire-street, Oldham, £5 (new); Mr. George Green, Werneth Iron Works, £5 (new); Messrs. John Wainwright and Sons, King-street, £20; Messrs. Horwood and Monkman, £10 (double); "Anti-Monopoly," £1 (new); Mr. Thomas Melladew, Moorside, £5 (five-fold); a friend, per H. Nelson, £5 (new); Mr. Joseph Byrom, Priory-street, £2 (double); Mr. James Platt, Hartford Iron Works (15 years of age), £1 (new); Mr. John Hall, Mumps, £2 (double); Mr. John Hanson, leather-cutter, £1 (new); Mr. James Wilde, Turf Lane Mill, Royton, £20 ("new, and double what he intended to have given last year"); Rev. William Cooper, Oldham, £2; James Lees, New Earth, £1 (double); Mr. James Scholesfield, Bank Side Mill, £2 (new); Mr. James Stott, Edge Lane, £2 (new); Mr. Abraham Evans, Manchester-street, £2 (new); a friend from Royton (new, paid), £2; James Mellor, 5s. (new); Thomas Hanson, a friend, Chat Moss, 5s.; John Buckley, Greenacres Moor, £1 5s. (new); Joseph Wainwright, King-street, £5; John Frith, High-street, £1 (new); Peter Roscoe, Mumps, £1 (new); William Wrigley, Mumps, 2s. 6d. (new); David Heyes, Phoenix Place, £1 (new); a friend, £1 (double); Alexander Taylor, Mumps, £5 (five-fold); James Taylor, £1 1s. (new); a friend, £2 2s. (new); James Riley, Market Place, £1 (new); James Potter, Cheapside, £10 (double); a friend, £1 (new, paid); Samuel Mason, a new landlord, Albion Inn, £1 (new); George Collis and James Wilde, Church-street, £1 (new, paid); James Brooks, Broadway Lane, £1; Richard Fitton, Shaw, £1 1s. (new, paid); George Travis, Manchester-street, £1 (new); William Richardson, Side-o'-th'-Moor, £1 (new); James Newton, Scout Head, £1 (new); Abraham Milne, Primrose Mill, £1; Emanuel Whittaker, North Moor, £1 (new); Samuel Grindrod, Side-o'-th'-Moor, 10s. (double); John Taylor, Glodwick Lane, 5s. (new); John Dronfield, New King-street, 5s. (new); Henry Hopkins, Croft Bank, 5s. (new); John Mills, Lord-street, 2s. 6d. (new); Thomas Bardley, 2s. 6d. (new); John Ashton, Fow Leach, 2s. 6d. (new); Philip Bury, Yorkshire-street, 2s. 6d. (new); R. Thatcher, sen., Hope-street, 2s. 6d. (new); Edward Wright, Yorkshire-street, £2 (double); James Wrigley, 2s. (paid, new); a friend, 1s. (paid); J. Grindrod, 1s.; James Dixon, Beckett Meadow, 2s.; John Ashton, Fow Leach, 2s. 6d. (new); John Harper, Hollinwood, 1s.

The CHAIRMAN having challenged the ladies, on behalf of Mrs. Gillham, to give £5 if any other lady would give £1, the challenge was accepted by Mrs. John Bentley, £1, and Mrs. Clegg, £1; Mrs. Gillham, in answer to these ladies, £10.

Mr. MOORE then announced—John Clegg, Manchester-street, £1; Mrs. Wainwright, King-street, £1; Mr. Henry Radcliffe, solicitor, £5; Mrs. Brierley, Market Place, £1 (new); Mrs. Jos. Mellor, High-street, £1 (new); John Stansfield, Austerlands, £1 (new); Robt. Yates, Grosvenor-street, £5 (double); Jos. Whitehead, Greenacres Moor, £1 1s. (new); J. H. Mellor, High-street, £1; a friend, £1 (new). Mr. MOORE then, about a quarter past ten o'clock, announced that the total amount subscribed in the room, during the evening, was £716—(great applause);—last year not £500. Messrs. Sam. and Jas. Mago, Union Mill, £5; Frederick Blensby, Bath Bank, millwright, £1; Thomas Kershaw, High-street, £1; John Ascroft, solicitor (the secretary to the Oldham Anti-Corn-Law Association), £5; Thos. Armstrong, joiner, Waterhead Mill, £1 1s. (new); J. Schofield, Broadway Lane, £1 (new); Miss Gillham (as a challenge), £5; Mr. Nelson, as the reply, £10; John Taylor, Glodwick, 1s. (new); Isaac Taylor, Greenacres Moor, £1 (new); a friend, 5s. (new); W. J. 5s.; a friend, 2s. 6d. (new); James Nelson, Manchester-street, £1 (new); a friend, £1; Isaac Wilde, Mumps, £2 (double); Adam Whitworth, Royton, £1; Samuel Grindrod, a second 5s.; a friend, a working man, 2s. 6d. (new); Josh. Clegg, Ferney Bank, 5s. (new); Thomas Pollitt, Ferney Bank, 1s.; Kinder Smith, Side-o'-th'-Moor, 5s.; Isaac Dunkerley, 1s.; James Dunkerley, 1s. (both working men); James Lees, 1s. 6d. (new); a friend, 1s. (new); John Earnshaw, Mumps, £1 (new); Edmund Clegg, Mumps, £1 (new); "A Lady near Royton will give £5 if any gentleman will give £10;" Mrs. Edwin Jackson, Manchester-street, responded £10; John Hall, Mumps, second subscription this evening, £1; "A bolus for Peel," £20; "Totu" and immediate repeal, and no compromise," £20; a friend, £10; a few friends from Waterhead Mill, £30; making a total of eight hundred and sixty pounds. (Immense cheering.) A friend, 2s. (new); John Dronfield, 1s. (new). This was at eleven o'clock,—when Mr. MOORE concluded by proposing "Three cheers for repeal," which were given with hearty good will.

The CHAIRMAN proposed a vote of thanks to the gentlemen who had addressed the meeting, which passed by acclamation, and was acknowledged by Mr. COBDEN, who said he felt grateful pleasure and some astonishment. For the size of the meeting, he had never attended one with more spirit than the present one. He moved a vote of thanks to the chairman, which passed with three cheers.

The CHAIRMAN called for "three cheers for the Queen," which were given with spirit.

Mr. ALEXANDER TAYLOR moved a resolution of sympathy with Mr. Alderman Brooks, whose absence was caused by the serious illness of his only daughter.

Mr. MOORE moved a vote of thanks to the ladies, which being passed by acclamation, the proceedings terminated a few minutes after eleven o'clock.

FREE-TRADE SOIREE AND MEETING AT BOLTON.

A splendid soirée and meeting in aid of the great League fund took place at the Temperance Hall, Bolton, on Wednesday night. Mr. Cobden, M.P.; Colonel Thompson, Mr. R. R. Moore, and Mr. W. Evans attended as a deputation from the League, and, on making their appearance on the platform, were greeted with loud and long-continued plaudits. Mr. Henry Ashworth and

Mr. Edmund Ashworth, members of the Council of the League, were also present. The meeting was crowded, and we should think there were at least a thousand persons present.

THOMAS GRUNDY, Esq., mayor of Bolton, presided, and said he believed that the minds of people in the manufacturing districts had long been made up that the Corn Laws were unjust, and, thanks to the exertions of the leading members of the League now present, another large portion of the community—the farmers and farm labourers—had begun to see that these laws were not good for their interests. (Hear.) Now, seeing that this was the case—seeing that one portion of the community had come to the conclusion that the Corn Laws ought to be repealed, and that another portion of the community—the farmers, the very class for whose advantage the laws were professedly passed, had begun, at least, to doubt the policy of retaining these laws, he thought the day could not be far distant when they should triumph in the overthrow of this monstrous injustice—at least it ought not. (Applause.)

Colonel THOMPSON was then called upon, and was received with loud cheers. He said, to show the enormity of the Corn Laws, to show their monstrous injustice, they might be compared to a law which should be passed to put an end to the wine trade with Portugal, in order that wine might be made from grapes grown in our hothouses at home. He said the thing was perfectly practicable, and would, no doubt, for a time work well for gardeners, joiners, and glaziers; but would the community stand it? (Hear, hear.) Yet the law for the protection of British industry, as it was called (laughter), was just such a law in effect. Such a law could not long stand; the agriculturists themselves began to see that, and were preparing to give up the game.

Mr. COBDEN next came forward, and was received with loud cheers. After passing a high eulogium upon Colonel Thompson in this cause, whose efforts he said had been directed to the subject long before either he or his friends were alive to its importance, he said he did not come there to-night to argue the question. He thought the people of Bolton, after the suffering, destitution, and misery to which they had been so recently subjected, did not want to be convinced of the impolicy of the Corn Laws. The people of Bolton had suffered most severely from the effects of monopoly; few towns, scarcely excepting Stockport, had suffered more; and if the experience of the past did not read them a sufficient lesson, it would be in vain that he should talk to them, for they would not be convinced, even "though one should come from the dead" to tell it them. (Applause.) But they were convinced both of the injustice and the impolicy of monopoly. The respectable and numerous attendance he saw around him spoke to that too plainly for any mistake. (Applause.) There were those who were ready to tell them that trade had somewhat recovered; but let there be no mistake. It was a gleam of prosperity, which could not last if these laws were suffered to continue. (Hear, hear.) The very first bad harvest would put an end to it, and down would come the trade and prosperity of Bolton again. (Hear, hear.) There could be no avoiding it; they were but now undergoing what might be called the fattening process, with a certain prospect of a speedy sacrifice. What, then, ought they to do? Seeing that they could not have anything like permanent prosperity with such laws as these, was it rational for human beings to sit with folded arms, and await the return of these vicissitudes without any effort to save themselves? (Applause.) Having remarked on a class of men who still held aloof from the agitation, although they had long ceased to believe that the Corn Laws were good for trade, Mr. Cobden said:—The League had already the oldest and best families of the aristocracy, the largest and most wealthy landowners with them—the Fitzwilliams, the Spencers, the Ducies, the Bedfords, the Radnors, the Westminsters, and the Grosvenors. (Cheers.) Yes, they had, and would have, the best of all classes with them; they were fast flocking round their standard—every day brought with it an accession of strength; and having obtained the assistance of such men as these, what need they care about the rest? Mr. Cobden went on to speak of other topics, and addressed the meeting for nearly an hour, frequently interrupted by loud and long-continued bursts of cheering.

Mr. R. R. MOORE made a powerful and fervently eloquent appeal to the meeting. He then announced the following subscriptions as already received in Bolton, and as intended to head the subscriptions in the room:—

Messrs. Callender, Bickham, and Cross (double their subscription of last year), 200l.; Messrs. H. and E. Ashworth, 200l.; Messrs. J. R. Barnes and Son, 100l.; Messrs. Robert and Joseph Lord, 50l.; Mr. Thomas Thomason, 100l.; Messrs. Arrowsmith and Sons, 50l.; total 700l. Subscriptions immediately began to flow in from the body of the room, and Mr. Moore announced the following:—Messrs. J. Crook and Son, 50l.; John Cutler (or Cotterill), Market-street, 2l.; collected by ditto, 12s. 6d.; Joseph Haddock, 1l.; John Barnes, 1l.; — Baxter, Blackburn-street, 1l.; Hervey and Southwark, 5l.; Wm. Barlow, 5s.; Jos. Arrowsmith, 10l.; J. and J. Brierley, 10l.; Thomas Kirkham, 5s.; James Shuttleworth, 10s.; Geo. Mee, 5s.; John Mitchell, 5s.; James Taylor, 3l.; Thor. Ormrod, 1l. 1s.; John Brown, 1l.; Jos. Brown, 1l. 1s.; Jonathan Settle, 5l. (double his last subscription); William Settle, 1l.; a Friend, 1l.; another Friend, 1l.; Rev. Mr. Fyfe, 1l.; Rev. J. Whitehead, 10l.; H. Levy, 1l.; R. Edwards, 10s.; J. Crossland, 10l.; a Lady, 10s.; A. R. Brierley, 2s. 6d.; Mary Greenwood, 1l.; J. B. Rawthorne, 1l.; a Friend, 1s.; John Harwood, 2l.; W. W. Cook, 1l.; R. R. Holt, 2l.; Workmen of Messrs. H. and E. Ashworth, at the new mill, 14l.; John Manchester, 2l.; John White, 1l.; a Widow, 1s. 6d.; A. Fletcher, 5s.; J. Hindley, 5s.; a Lady, 5s.; a Friend, 2s.; Henry Hollins, 25l.; J. Monk, 10s.; Mr. Little, 1l.; J. Yates, 2l.; R. Harwood, 1l.; Isaac Wright, 2l.; John Haslam and Co., 10l.; R. A. Hibbert, 2l.; R. Cunliffe, 3l.; George Biggs (double), 10l.; John Robinson, 1l. 1s.; C. J. Darbishire, 10l.; A Friend, 2s. 6d.; A Chartist and Repealer, 2s. 6d.; William Blinkhorn, 10l.; D. W. (treble), 3l.; D. Taylor, 6s.; Jos. Higgin, 1l.; John Entwistle, 1l.; James Nelson (double), 10s.; T. Woodcaton, 2l.; A Friend, 1l.; James Hazeldine, 5l.; A Corn Advocate, 18s. 1d.; Roger Haslowe, 1l.; Peter Haywood, 2l.; An Enemy to any Act-of-Parliament-ised Loaf, 1s.; J. C. Bramwell, 5s.; John Thurwell, 5s.; A Female Teetotaler, 5s.; A. Dyson, 10s.; John Gordon, 1l.; George Gannon, 1l.; D. Cordingley, 5s.; Robert Green, 5s.; H. Farhurst, 5s.;

W. Yates, 5s.; N. Ebrington, 1s.; George Bell, 1l.; C. Wiggins, 1l.; Moses Scott, 1l.; A Friend, 2l. 2s. 6d.; Anthony Thistlewaite, 1l.; A Lady, 1s.; A Widow's mite, 1s.; A Friend, 2s.; James Crooks, 2l. 2s. 6d.; Alexander Pettigrew, 1l.; A Lady, 5s.; John Gerrard (double), 6s.; Andrew Knowles and Sons, 10l.; John Mosley, 5s.; L. Witton, 5s.; Jos. Shuttleworth, 5s.; John Marsden, 5s.; James Nathan, a Friend, 2s. 6d.; D., 1s.; A New Subscriber, 1l.; An Apprentice, 1s. 6d.; W. Vickers, 1l.; S. Walmsley (new), 5l.; Henry Bate, 2l. 10s.; A Farmers' Friend, 2s. 6d.; Dr. Rawthorne, 2l. 2s.; R. Danderdale, 2l. 2s.; John Knowles, 1l.; James Knowles, 1l.; D. Haddock, 1l.; George Orrall, 5s.; R. H., 1l.; A Friend, 2s. 6d.; Thomas Birley, 5s.; Thomas Wild, 5s.; John Wilts, 10s.; R. Tonge, 5s.; John Crane, 5s.; William Blackburne, 5s.; James Knowles, 5s.; J. Stone, 5s.; Wm. Walmsley, 5s.; J. Loder, 1l.; A. Haigh and Son, 20l.; C. Heaton, 1l. 1s. 1d.; Poor Man, 2s. 6d.; Robert Haslam, 1l.; S. Haslam, 1l.; S. Howarth, 5s.; A Friend, 1l.; W. Ackroyd, 10l.; W. Taylor, 2l. 2s.; John Brown, 5l.; Henry Wilkinson, 1l.; Hugh Mackinson, 2l.; John Openshaw, 10s.; Samuel Hancer, 1l.; John Hoyle, 10s.; O. Smith, 2l.; H. Forbes, 5s.; Ralph Alman, 10s.; a hand-loom weaver's day's work, 1s. 6d.; James Morris, 1l., and 10s. each for his children—5l.; a Friend to the large porridge dish, 1l.; a Chartist, 2s. 6d.; a Lady, 5s.; a Friend, 5s.; Robert Heywood, 52l. 10s.; John Dean, 25l.; R. Lomax, 1l.; Mrs. G. Wynn, 10s.; A Farmer's Daughter, from Yorkshire, 10s.; E. H. King, 5s.; a Factory Girl, 1s.; O. Earnshaw, 2s. 6d.; a Friend, 2s.; William Hesketh, 1l.; William Darbishire, Hugh Horrox, 2s. 6d.; — Sewell, 2s. 6d.; — Morris, 2s. 6d.; Joseph Sewell, 2s. 6d.; John Sefton, 2s. 6d.; T. and J. Gregson, 26l.; M. Mather, 1l.; a Family of Ten, 10s.; a Farmer's Son, 2s. 6d.; a Lady, 10s.; a Cold Water Drinker, 2s. 6d.; a Friend, 1l.; George Banks, 2s. 6d.; John Sewell, R. Ainsworth, John Hebdon, John Heath, John Entwistle, Charles Mayo, John Harrison, and John Dean, 2s. 6d. each; a young Tradesman, 1l.; Thomas Nuttall, 1l. 1s.; a Friend, 1l.; an Englishman and a Scotchman, 1l.; Joseph Baron, 10s.; a Servant Girl, 2s. 6d.; I. O. U., paid, 1l. (laughter); a Friend, 1l.; Joseph Metcalfe, 1l.; John Mosley, 2s. 6d.; William Hudson (double), 1l.; Mary Emmett, 10s.; Richard Walworth (double), 1l.; Come Freely, 2s. 6d.; Peter Martin, 20l.; a Lady's table, 8s.; Robert Roberts, 5s.; James Manker, 1s.; a Friend from the Backbone of England, 1l.; Thomas Cullen, 10l.; a Well-wisher to the Working Man, 1l.; a Lady, 2s. 6d.; Henry Hall, 1l.; James Crompton, 1l.; William Morrison, 1l.; W. Morrow, 1l.; a Friend, 2s. 6d.; Henry Rothwell, 5s.; a Table Subscription, 1s. 10d. We did not catch the names of several small subscribers.

Mr. MOORE announced, at half-past ten o'clock, that the subscription in the room had reached 505l. 4s. 9d., making, with the 700l. to head the list, a total of 1205l. 4s. 9d.

The announcement was received with loud cheers; and, after votes of thanks to the chairman and to the deputation, the meeting separated.

THE LEAGUE AT BURY.

A meeting of the friends of Free Trade at Bury, in aid of the Great League Fund, was held on Thursday evening, in the school-room of Brunswick Chapel. About 500 persons sat down to tea previous to the meeting, and the company comprised nearly all the families of consideration in or about the town. Amongst the heads of these families we recognised—Mr. Richard Walker, M.P. for the borough; Mr. Edmund Grundy, of the Wild; Mr. Edmund Grundy, of Park Hills; Mr. John Walker, of Belle Vue; Mr. St. Grundy, of Lark Hill; Mr. John Grundy, of Belle Vue; Mr. Edmund Grundy, of Bridge Hall; Mr. Richard Ashton, of Limefield; Messrs. R. and T. Grundy; Mr. Robert Heaps, Rochdale; Rev. Franklin Howarth; Mr. James Wrigley, Ash Meadow; and Mr. Richard Walker, jun. (son of the member). The deputation from the Council of the League comprised—Mr. John Bright, M.P., and Colonel Thompson. Mr. W. J. Fox was expected, but was unable to attend. The chair was taken, after tea, by Mr. RICHARD ASHTON, who congratulated them on the progress which Free-Trade principles had made since they last met together. The sliding scale was now completely down, at all events—it had now no friends, and they might kick it as they liked. (Laughter.) The agriculturists themselves, for whose benefit the sliding scale was granted, were repudiating it: its failure there was announced in the suffering and degradation of the farm labourers; and the incendiary fires which nightly blazed over the stack-yards of their employers told that endurance had reached its boundaries. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. RICHARD WALKER, the member for the borough, then came forward, and was received with loud cheers. The hon. member has been suffering from bad health; and his presence had hardly been expected. He said:—Once more to the breach, my friends. (Loud cheers.) Once more. (Renewed cheering.) The outworks of monopoly are giving way: the citadel will soon surrender. The friends of truth, through the untiring energies of the Anti-Corn-Law League, have reached an eminence from which they will soon batter down all the power that can be brought against them; and a glorious victory will be the result. (Applause.) How can we repay the distinguished leaders of this mighty movement? (Applause.) We can best repay them by granting them the means to carry on the war with vigour. (Hear, hear.) They ask for £100,000. The call must be answered. You know how they laid out the £50,000 in the past year; and their application of that money is a sufficient guarantee of a more ample fund, which I sincerely hope they will be able to raise. (Applause.) The result which may be expected to follow is easily calculated by the result of last year; it is but a rule-of-three question. We want to educate some of the constituencies. (Hear, hear.) You know how large a sum it takes to educate your families—at least, those who have large families know that it is a great expense; how much more may it not be expected to cost to educate a family of some four or five hundred thousand electors? (Applause.) They are in great ignorance on the merits of this question, and must and ought to be educated. When they have learned their lessons, not only the Corn Laws, but all other selfish interests will vanish like the rainbow before the storm. (Applause.) I ask, then, that every manufacturer, that every merchant, that every artisan, that every farm-labourer, and more particularly every tenant-farmer, should co-operate with us in our mighty project; I ask them all to give money if they can, and, if they have not money, their co-operation and good wishes for the removal of these laws from the statute book of the land. (Loud cheers.) I am not in health, ladies and gentlemen, to speak to you at any great length, but I can assure you that the Corn Law has not a greater enemy in England than I am. (Cheers.) I opposed its passing with all my might, in 1815. A friend of mine on my right, however we may have disagreed in other questions, co-operated strongly with me on that occasion; and I have the singular felicity of being able to tell you that I drew up a string of resolutions on that day against the passing of the bill, and I have been ever since that time a consistent and determined opponent of it. (Applause.) Co-operate with us, then, in this one more effort, and depend upon it that victory will crown our efforts. I have had a resolution put in my hand, which I beg leave to move for your adoption. It is—

"That this meeting most emphatically denounces the Corn Law, which increases the price of food and cripples trade, as unjust and odious, and therefore is a law which ought to be abolished." (Loud cheers.)

Mr. EDMUND GRUNDY, of the Wild, seconded the resolution. He said they had been told by a statesman, standing high in her Majesty's councils, that the doctrine of Free Trade was the doctrine of common sense, and if so, then was the object of this meeting valid. (Hear, hear.) They were assembled to subscribe to a fund for diffusing common sense by means of pamphlets and lectures to those who had not the means of informing themselves on this question; and he seconded the resolution in the hope that this appeal would be liberally responded to. The resolution was put, and carried with applause.

Mr. EDMUND GRUNDY, Park Hills, moved the second resolution—

"That this meeting, impressed with the importance of Free-Trade principles, pledges itself to follow the noble example of Manchester and other towns, in their attempt to repeal the Corn and Provision Laws, and thereby advance the commercial prosperity of the empire." (Applause.)

He said there was no other question before the country of half the importance of the present question. He held it to be the first duty of a Government to provide sustenance for its people; and that for any Government to set up a barrier to the free exchange of labour for the necessities of life, was a wicked and cruel attempt to exterminate the people. (Applause.) His language might be strong, but eight and twenty years' experience of the evils arising from the working of the law had increased his dislike of it to a most perfect hatred (loud cheers); and he felt that it was beyond the reach of language to speak too harshly of it. If they agreed with him to exert themselves for the repeal of these laws, let them provide themselves with ammunition then. It was of no use firing blank cartridge. Let every man be prepared to furnish his quota of powder and ball to the League, and they might then hope to make a successful impression. (Applause.)

JNO. WALKER, Esq., brother of the hon. representative of the borough, seconded the resolution, and said that a great debt of gratitude was due to such men as Cobden, Bright, Col. Thompson, and other members of the League, to whom their present certain prospect of success on this question was mainly owing.

The resolution was carried with great applause.

Col. THOMPSON then came forward and addressed the meeting in a humorous but argumentative speech.

Mr. JNO. GRUNDY, Belle Vue, proposed the next resolution, one of thanks to Mr. Cobden, Mr. Bright, Col. Thompson, and other members of the League, which was seconded by the Rev. FRANKLIN HOWARTH, and adopted with applause.

Mr. BRIGHT then came forward, and spoke for upwards of an hour. His speech was one of the most brilliant and effective ones we have heard him deliver. When he had concluded, the Chairman headed the subscription with a contribution of £200.

The subscription was then proceeded with, but the lateness of the hour at which the report reached us precludes us from giving the items as they were handed in: the total announced was £1120, to which it is expected there will be considerable additions. The names and contributions of the subscribers shall appear next week.

ANTI-CORN-LAW DEMONSTRATION AT PUDSEY.

A public demonstration in favour of the total abolition of the Corn Laws, and in aid of the great League Fund of £100,000, was held on Wednesday evening in the Methodist Chapel, Pudsey. The attendance of the operatives was large, and the enthusiasm displayed throughout the proceedings of the meeting showed the hearty zeal with which the working classes of the town were willing to aid the League in the accomplishment of its great object.

On the platform we observed the following gentlemen:—Archibald Prentice, Esq., a member of the League, the deputation from Manchester; Thomas Plint and H. H. Stansfeld, Esqrs., the deputation from Leeds; John Varley, Esq., manufacturer, of Stanningley; Samuel Field, Esq., of Bank House, Pudsey (in politics a Conservative); Samuel Musgrave, Esq., of Pudsey Town-end; Charles Lofthouse, Esq., of Bank House; and William Hinings, Esq., of Pudsey.

JOHN VARLEY, Esq., was called to the chair, and opened the business of the meeting.

SAMUEL FIELD, Esq., proposed the first resolution, approving of the object of the Anti-Corn-Law League, the means by which it proposes to effect it, and especially its vast efforts to enlighten the population on the principles of Free Trade; and resolving to aid it by contributing to the great Fund of £100,000.

SAMUEL MUSGRAVE, Esq., seconded the resolution, which was carried with great cheering.

A Committee was then appointed to receive and collect subscriptions, after which the CHAIRMAN called upon H. H. STANSFELD, Esq., and Mr. A. PRENTICE, of Manchester, who severally addressed the meeting.

SAMUEL MUSGRAVE, Esq., then read, amidst great applause, the subscription list, which was headed by the following donations:—50l., John Varley, Esq.; 10l. 10s., Wm. Musgrave and Sons; 10l., Richard Elward, Esq., Rooker-lane; 5l., Mr. Charles Moss, clothier.

Mr. PLINT next addressed the meeting, and, during a long and effective speech, was much applauded. Mr. MUSGRAVE again announced the donations received, which, before the close of the meeting, amounted to upwards of 112l.; we understand that a great effort will be made to raise this sum to 200l.

FREE-TRADE DEMONSTRATION IN SHROPSHIRE.—On Friday morning last, the inhabitants of the village of Coalbrookdale, in Shropshire, and the immediate vicinity, were astonished by the announcement, by placard, that a meeting would take place that evening, in the New Lecture Room, for the purpose of commencing subscriptions in aid of the great League Fund of £100,000. Notwithstanding the very short notice, and the smallness of the population, the room was comfortably filled. Abraham Darby, Esq., ably filled the chair, and conducted the proceedings of the meeting. The audience was addressed very forcibly by Wm. Henry Darby, Esq., of Liverpool, who was attentively listened to throughout, and loudly cheered. He was followed, in a capital speech of some length, by Samuel Naleh, Esq. Joseph Robinson, Esq., of Liverpool, proposed the resolution calling upon the meeting for subscriptions, and was seconded by William F. Sim, Esq., of Liverpool, who particularly called upon the working-classes to show their adhesion to the League by even the smallest contribution. Eloquent addresses were also delivered by Mr. Hill Evans, and Mr. Randall, during the latter of which the subscription cards were handed in, and the amount and names were afterwards read out by Mr. Sim. The first was the ladies' subscription of Coalbrookdale (anonymous), £150; then came Abr. Darby, Esq., £50; Alfred Darby, Esq., £50 (these gentlemen having already given £200 this year at the Liverpool meeting); Henry Dickinson, Esq., £50; Richard Darby, Esq., £50; W. H. Darby, Esq., £5 (in addition to his donation at Liverpool); Joseph Robinson, Esq., £2 (besides a subscription at Liverpool); William F. Sim, Esq., £5; Edward Edwards, £2 2s.; ten of £1, besides various smaller sums, making in all 148 subscribers; the total amount being about £350. The whole amount of last year's subscriptions, in this part, was under £90; and when we consider that this year nearly four times that sum was subscribed in about twenty minutes, at a meeting called at about ten hours' notice, in a district famed for monopoly; that the whole population of the parish is only about 7000;—that there was none of the apostles of the League present; but that it was, emphatically, a speaking out of the people;—it is not too much to say, that it was one of the most, if not the most remarkable demonstration of the kind that has yet taken place.—Liverpool Albion.

ANTI-CORN-LAW MEETING AT LEIGH.—An Anti-Corn-Law meeting was held at Leigh, on Monday last (New Year's Day), at two o'clock, which was addressed by Col. Thompson, Mr. R. R. R. Moore, and the Rev. Dr. Harrison of Chowbent; and a subscription was then commenced, which, before the meeting closed, amounted to £82, a great proportion of which consisted of very small sums, many of them from working-men. This amount, it is expected, will ultimately reach £140 or £150. Most of the subscriptions from parties who have given before, were doubled, and there were many new ones. Indeed, last year the amount ultimately raised was only £45.—Manchester Guardian.

ANTI-CORN-LAW MEETING AT OSSETT.—A meeting, in aid of the League fund of £100,000, was held in this spirited little town on Monday evening last. The place of assembly was the Wesleyan school-room, and the audience was numerous and enthusiastic. The chair was taken by Mr. Thos. Phillips, who, after some appropriate observations, marked by strong sense, kind feeling, and enlarged benevolence, introduced, in succession, to the meeting Mr. Shaen and Mr. Plint, as a deputation from the Leeds Anti-Corn-Law Association. These gentlemen addressed the meeting at considerable length, and were listened to with deep interest, and the most marked and intelligent attention. At the conclusion of their addresses, a subscription in aid of the League fund was commenced, which amounted to £26 11s. before the meeting terminated. The committee appointed to canvass the township are sanguine that they shall double the last year's contributions to the League, of £35, and, from what we saw of their energy and zeal on a former occasion, we have no doubt they will succeed.—Leeds Mercury.

THE FREE-TRADE BANQUET AT GLASGOW.—We learn that the following distinguished individuals are expected to be present and take part in the proceedings on this interesting and important occasion:—The Hon. Charles Pelham Villiers, M.P.; the Hon. Fox Maule, M.P.; the Hon. E. J. Stanley, late M.P. for North Cheshire; Richard Cobden, Esq., M.P.; John Bright, Esq., M.P.; Andrew Rutherford, Esq., M.P.; Patrick Maxwell Stuart, Esq., M.P.; Colonel Thompson, late M.P. for Hull; Robert Wallace, Esq., M.P.; George Duncan, Esq., M.P.; James Oswald, Esq., M.P.; John Dennistoun, Esq., M.P. Invitations have, we also understand, been sent to several others, from whom replies have not yet been received; but it is evident from this list of names, that an intellectual feast will be presented in the City-hall, on the 10th, such as has rarely been witnessed in Glasgow.—Glasgow Argus.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE. — ANTI-CORN-LAW TEA PARTY.—The committee for making arrangements for the great Anti-Corn-Law meeting in this town have determined upon holding a grand tea party in the New Town-hall, on Monday, the 8th of January. Mr. Villiers, Mr. Cobden, Mr. Bright, and Colonel Thompson are expected to attend.

FREE-TRADE LECTURE AT THE TOXTETH-HALL.—On Wednesday evening, a meeting of the electors of North Toxteth Ward was summoned by the Anti-Monopoly Association, principally for the purpose of hearing Mr. Murray, of Manchester, on the advantages of Free Trade and the evils of Monopoly. The notes to the electors, inviting them to the meeting, were distributed indiscriminately, without reference to their political sentiments, and about one hundred and eighty persons attended. A deputation from the Anti-Monopoly Association accompanied Mr. Murray, and on opening the proceedings explained to the audience the anxious desire of the association to secure a calm and full discussion of the merits of the question, and requested them to appoint a chairman in whom they could have confidence, to preserve order during the discussion, and whose sentiments might be either opposed to, or in accordance with, those of the deputation. Dr. Harbord was immediately nominated to the office, and was warmly urged by the deputation to accept it, but determinately declined. Mr. Frankland was then called to the chair, and Mr. Murray commenced his lecture, but had not proceeded far before he was assailed by whistling and other interruptions, proceeding chiefly from a group of individuals apparently organised and led on by Dr. Harbord. This gentleman persisted in putting questions to Mr. Murray having no bearing upon the subject of discussion, but evidently with a design of attacking the character of several members of the League. The questions were answered satisfactorily, but interruption again arose from other quarters, and at length reached such a pitch that it became impossible for the lecturer to proceed. The chairman appealed to the meeting whether Mr. Murray should continue, and it was decided in the affirmative by a large majority. Every attempt, however, to resume was frustrated by a renewal of the disturbances, in which Dr. Harbord rendered himself very conspicuous, and the meeting broke up, after resolving, by a large majority, that the Corn Laws were unjust, and ought to be immediately repealed. Poor Dr. Harbord! Why do not his friends take care of him?—Liverpool Mercury.

"The work goes bravely on." Every day adds to the power and the influence of the Anti-Corn-Law League. Even Hull, hitherto so apathetic, has caught a spark of the patriotic fire which burns so brightly in Manchester, in Leeds, in Liverpool, in London, in Bradford, in Edinburgh, and in Glasgow; and it now requires but a stir on the part of our leading Free-Trade advocates to set this borough in a blaze. The preparations now on foot for holding a public meeting in the town, to be attended by a deputation from the Council of the League, consisting of Messrs. Cobden, Bright, and Col. Thompson, are exciting the liveliest interest.—Hull Advertiser.

BRIGHTON ANTI-CORN-LAW AND FREE-TRADE ASSOCIATION.—We are glad to be enabled to state that this Association has been reorganised, and that it is preparing to open the campaign for 1844 with renewed vigour. We have no doubt that a large proportion of the voters in this borough are Free-Traders, and that the association has but to make itself and its objects known to induce them to join its ranks.—Brighton Guardian.

FREE-TRADE MEETING AT NEWARK.—On Friday evening a meeting was held in the Methodist New Connexion Chapel, Barnby-gate, Newark, to hear an address from Col. Perronet Thompson, on the benefits that will arise from free intercourse with all the world, to every town in England, and more especially to the borough of Newark. Mr. T. H. Massey, a maltster and a highly-respectable inhabitant of the borough, was called to the chair. The chapel was crowded by an audience composed, for the most part of the middle and working classes, including a large number of the electors of Newark. The veteran champion of Free Trade addressed the meeting in a speech of an hour's duration, in the course of which he was frequently and warmly cheered. Several other persons briefly addressed the meeting; after which a vote of thanks to the gallant colonel was moved, and carried unanimously. One of the results of this meeting was the announcement of the formation of an Anti-Corn-Law Association for the borough of Newark.—Nottingham Review.

The Young Men's Anti-Corn-Law Association, Gatehead, were busily engaged on Monday last in distributing Anti-Corn-Law pamphlets in Tanfield and the surrounding districts.

INCREASE OF THE DUTIES ON BRITISH GOODS IN BRAZIL.—Advices have just been received from Rio to the 31st October, from which we learn that the Brazilian Government has adopted a course with regard to several kinds of British goods imported into that country which will have the effect of raising the amount of duties to which they are liable immediately, and that, as it believes, without any breach of the terms of the treaty, and, consequently, without creating any right of complaint on the part of this country. According to the treaty between England and Brazil, as originally agreed upon, British goods were to be admitted into the Brazilian empire at an ad valorem duty of 15 per cent., which rate of duty was afterwards raised by mutual agreement to 20 per cent. These terms the Brazilians were very anxious to have changed in November, 1842, but to this the English Government would not consent; and they therefore agreed, though with very bad grace, that the present rate of duty should remain unchanged until November, 1844. They have since, however, discovered that an ad valorem duty may be as effectually raised by increasing the valuation of the goods taxed, as by increasing the per centage raised upon them, and have therefore greatly increased the valuation of British goods of several kinds. In some cases the increase is 10 per cent. on the old valuation, in others 20, in others 30, in some 50, and in one or two 75 per cent. This is exactly the same thing, in effect, as if the rate of duty had been increased from 20 per cent. ad valorem to 22, 24, 26, 30, and 35 per cent. Whether this is or is not a breach of the treaty, we do not pretend to say, but it is evident that it is precisely the same thing, so far as the commerce of this country is concerned. Amongst the articles thus subjected to new and increased valuation are flannels, barragons, boots and shoes, several descriptions of cottons and silks, cassimeres, varnished hats, cutlery, steel, Irish linens, gunpowder, and several kinds of woollen goods. We shall next week give a list of the articles whose valuation is charged, showing the extent of the increase on each article.—Liverpool Times.

FOREIGN SUGAR FROM THE BRITISH COLONIES.—It is generally known that our enlightened and consistent Government, although it will not allow the sugars of Brazil and Cuba to be consumed in the three kingdoms, allows them to be refined in this country in bond, and to be sent to the West Indies to be eaten there by the free negroes and their employers. In consequence of this permission, foreign sugars refined in this country are sent out to the West Indies and the Mauritius almost every day, and along with the refined sugars there go out also considerable quantities of bastards, that is, of the inferior kinds of sugar, separated from the better parts in refining. This bastard sugar is in appearance very like unrefined sugar, and as the bastards can be bought in Liverpool for 14s., whilst the raw West India and Mauritius sugar is worth 80s. per cwt. in this country, there is a great temptation to mix them in the colonies, and to send the mixture to this country as plantation sugar. We have reason to believe that this kind of fraud has been practised more than once of late, especially in a case of which we heard last week, and we do not doubt that if the law continues in its present state it will become more common every year. In some descriptions of sugar it is scarcely possible to tell the difference between bastard and raw sugar by the eye, so that it is not detected if the sugar is sold in an unrefined state, though it becomes quite evident if the attempt is made to refine the mixture, when the residuum of the previously refined sugar is easily detected, as it was in the case which we have mentioned above.—Liverpool Times.

THE NEW TARIFF.—At the Leicestershire agricultural dinner the other day, the Earl Howe, who took the chair, made the following statement:—"The importation of stock, according to a document he had received from the Customs, throughout the whole of the United Kingdom, between the 5th of January and the 5th of September, was 873 oxen, 32 calves, 164 sheep, and 241 swine. During the year before the new tariff 42,980 cwt. of beef, and 45,310 cwt. of pork, had been imported; while, during 1842, after the new tariff, it was 29,921 cwt. of beef (about half the quantity), and 54,163 cwt. of pork." We leave our readers to calculate (which they must do on some infinitesimal theory) what a microscopic effect upon prices in this kingdom such an importation must have had. 873 oxen, 32 calves, 164 sheep, and 241 pigs, in the space of eight months! Why, the whole lot would not have sufficed for two days' consumption of the metropolis, while there is actually less pickled meat imported under the new tariff than before its enactment. The reduction of prices caused by the tariff was to enable the hard-wrung consumers to pay Sir Robert Peel's income-tax. All we have to say is, get your income-tax out of that gentleman—if you can!—Worcester Chron.

ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY OF ENGLAND.—It is the intention of the Council of the Royal Agricultural Society to give premiums of 50 guineas each for the best prize essays (during the present year, on the agriculture of Norfolk, Cheshire, Essex, and Wiltshire).

EXETER.—At a late agricultural meeting at Kington Sir Robert W. Newman is reported to have said (Western Times, Nov. 4, 1843):—

"As an agriculturist he wanted no protection at the expense of any other portion of the community." "They were at least entitled to demand an investigation into the burdens which fell exclusively upon the land, and from which the other portions of the community were exempt; their parochial burdens and local taxation ought duly to be ascertained, and a balance struck between them, before any further alteration should take place."

The candid position which the honourable baronet here assumes is exactly that on which the advocates of Free Trade desire to meet a fair and unprejudiced opponent. We therefore hear with pleasure that Mr. Brown, on behalf of the Anti-Corn-Law League, has announced his intention to deliver a lecture in this city on "The Burdens on Land;" in the course of which we confidently expect that he will prove that, so far from land being subject to any peculiar and exclusive burden, it is really the subject of privileged exemption, or bonus to the amount of nearly, if not more than, three millions per annum.

INDISPOSITION OF MR. BRIGHT, M.P.—We regret to say that the honourable member for Durham has been obliged to suspend his labours for a time, and to place himself under medical treatment, arising from over-exertion and exposure to the weather. We are happy, however, to be able to announce that he is at present much better, and we hope will be sufficiently recovered to accompany the deputation of the League in their tour into Scotland.

Mr. Cobden, we are happy to say, notwithstanding his incessant exertions, continues in good health and spirits.

SCOTLAND.—The first route, as announced last week, of the League deputation to Scotland, has been changed. The following arrangement was subsequently fixed upon:—Glasgow, 10th; Edinburgh, 11th; Perth, 12th; Aberdeen, 15th; Dundee, 16th; Cupar, 18th (day meeting); Leith, 19th; Jedburgh, 20th. The deputation going west will be at Greenock on the 15th (a day meeting); Paisley, 16th (evening meeting); Ayr, 18th (a day meeting); Kilmarnock, 19th (evening meeting); and Dumfries, 17th (day meeting).

LIVERPOOL LEAGUE FUND.—Total subscriptions up to Saturday night last, £6003 4s.

ANOTHER "GREAT FACT."—A landowner in South Derbyshire has sent a contribution of £100 to the Derby subscription to the League fund, from "an opponent to the sliding-scale." The Derby subscription, which last year amounted to £400 only, has already reached to between £1100 and £1200! Before the books are closed, it will reach from £1200 to £1300. Derby has hitherto been rather apathetic, but the spirit is moving. The speech of Mr. Cobden has produced a prodigious effect.

THE LEAGUE FUND.—To the Editor of the Liverpool Albion.—Sir,—Perusing a letter, addressed to you, in the last Albion, on the subject of the League Fund, allow me to pen a few lines to you in reply. I can most feelingly and truly testify to that part of it relative to man's amiability of disposition being visited by no very pleasant feelings for not contributing his share to the great League Fund, when experiencing great benefit from a freedom of trade. Now, Sir, I must candidly confess to you, that, when the last subscription for £50,000 was closed, I was guilty of great neglect in not subscribing to it; and the impression on my mind was, that I had committed a great sin, and it was a considerable time before I could remove the unpleasant feelings that both my heart and mind were visited with. I now, therefore, wish to indelibly impress on every man's mind, who feels interested in this great Free-Trade question, to make it one of the most essential purposes of his life to subscribe, before it is too late, to the best of his abilities, and to consider it as the very best transaction he ever made or entered in his day-book or ledger. I remain, dear Sir, your obedient servant, A CONSERVATIVE FREE-TRADER AND NO MISTAKE. Dec. 21, 1843.

MORE CORN WILFULLY DESTROYED.—On Saturday last, an additional quantity of corn was taken out of bonded-warehouses in this town and destroyed, having by being kept too long become unfit for human food! Had the Corn Laws been repealed, this corn would have been brought into the market, and purchased by some of our fellow-townsmen who are now probably on the borders of starvation. And yet there are men who profess and call themselves Christians and friends of the poor who advocate a law which permits—nay, compels—the wilful destruction of food in a country where tens of thousands are lacking bread!—Sunderland Herald.

A Kendal letter-carrier has been turned out of his place, merely from being recommended to it by two gentlemen who voted at the late election for the Free-Trade candidate. The Kendal Mercury ably exposes these disgraceful transactions.

MR. RAND'S SPEECH on the Corn Laws has been reprinted, from the Leeds Mercury, at Wakefield, for distribution by the Anti-Corn-Law Committee there.

PREFERENCE.—It is said of Mr. Wm. Rand, the chairman of the late Anti-Corn-Law meeting at Bradford, that at the time of the last Parliamentary election for the West Riding of the county of York, he preferred his politics to his trade, but that now he prefers his trade to his politics. This proof of wisdom is, we hope, taking place very extensively amongst the conscientious Conservatives; and the only wonder of all reflecting men is that it did not occur long since. We could mention many lamentable instances where merchants and manufacturers in Yorkshire have adhered to a political party, while they have seen their trade gradually slip out of their hands, and their affairs reduced to ruin by the anti-commercial policy of that party, and while, as Mr. Henry Hall very justly observed, at the Leeds Anti-Corn-Law meeting in 1815, their foreign customers retired from them in disgust at the higher prices asked for their merchandise, to give their orders for the rival manufactures of the Continent, produced by the labour of workmen who are fed on untaxed bread.—Leeds Mercury.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the LEAGUE.

SIR, I have no wish to see my name in print; but I am actuated by the ambition, which the humblest may gratify, of adding a stone to the cairn. I wish to give a fact, a fraction of a fact, or, if you please, a particle of fact to the "great fact"; and if the information I send be available in your forthcoming observations upon the Essex Protection meeting, I will feel gratified.

Mr. Oliver Copland at that meeting remarked—"Mr. Hope came from Scotland; and did they know what economising labour meant in Scotland? It meant, discharge your labourers, and let them starve."

Now, Sir, I know something both of the English and Scotch labourer. I have been brought in contact with the latter, in this and adjoining counties, for the last five or six years; and if I were to form an estimate of his condition during that period, I would say that it never admitted so great an amount of comfort as it does at the present moment. Of late years his moral and physical condition has greatly improved, and is decidedly superior to that of the English labourer. Labourers here are at present fully employed, and that by farmers who are as much alike to the perils which the political horizon threatens as the English farmer is. But Scotch farmers know that they are exposed to keen competition; they are fully aware that they enjoy no monopoly, and they seem to be actuated by the noble ambition of writing to their landlords upon the broad fields of their farms, and in characters which may be read by all, "That change their tenants they may, but they shall not improve the cultivation of their land by doing so." Within the last few years improvements in cultivation have rapidly increased, while the profits of cultivation have greatly decreased. I need not say that the result has been increased rents to the landlord, and increase of comfort to the labourer, effected mainly by a sacrifice of capital on the part of the tenant.

I hear of no largesses of beef being distributed in any of the parishes of this county, and would be sorry to hear of it. We do not pay our labourers with gratuities, but with justice.

I have had good opportunities of forming an opinion of English cultivation and English labourers. The good lands are well cultivated. And there also, I believe, the poor may enjoy an abundance of physical comforts. But farming upon the bad lands, which offer no inducements to men of capital or spirit to sacrifice their independence, is wretched. In the western counties the sorrowful and dejected look of the peasant, combined with the wretched cultivation which allowed the permanent grass to be overrun with thorns, reminded me of the melancholy description given by travellers of that portion of Syria which is said to be under the ban of the Almighty. I am aware, however, that these remarks are not applicable to Essex. I know that the labourer there is an active and comparatively intelligent man; and as he is so, I would like very much to know the feelings of his mind as to the 200 stones of beef which he and his co-parishioners share once a year. Is not the parson the distributor of it? and does he not take it upon him occasionally to remind him of his ingratitude? If the parson enjoys the sunshine of aristocratic favour, does it not sometimes happen that through his means the mischievous propensities of the urchins of the village in robbing a partridge or pheasant's nest are visited with a penalty due only to a graver offence? When the labourer reflects upon these things, it is not improbable that he may arrive at the conclusion that his Christmas beef costs more than that which he eats at other periods of the year—the purchase of his daily toil—an opinion which is shared by, Your very obedient servant,

East Lothian, Dec. 2, 1843. JOHN RUSSELL.

To the Editor of the LEAGUE.

SIR,—If you have room, and think it worth while, do me the favour to insert in your paper the underneath part of a letter, addressed to me from Berlin, with my answer to it. You will thereby, I think, serve your cause, and oblige

DIODORUS.

Berlin, Dec. 26, 1843.

"It is likely that a duty of 10 silver groshen per cwt. will, after all, be imposed on pig iron, and an additional half-dollar on bars. It is also not unlikely that the Belgians may have an exemption from this advance, on the ground that some return is due to them for their concession in regard to German wines. To England will be held out the promise of being put on the same footing, as soon as a corresponding relief is given to some sort of German industry. This, I hope, will spur on your Anti-Corn-Law folks, but it should at the same time teach Mr. Cobden and his friends to give up their very strange and impracticable principle of being uninfluenced in their proceedings by any regard for the actions of foreign states. You may depend on this, that, nowadays, nothing will be granted here without an equivalent, and that the Ministry must be allowed by Parliament to restrict their concessions as to corn and other things to those countries which are inclined to act on the good Scotch rule of giff-gaff."

London, January 4, 1841.

"For Prussia's sake, I regret to learn that new prohibitory measures are in contemplation. The duty on iron will, no doubt, please, and may, perhaps, benefit the producers, but, of course, at the expense of the consumers of that commodity. The latter, the most numerous of his Majesty's subjects, will derive but little comfort from the fact of the Belgians drinking Rhenish wines. If it could be so arranged that they might have themselves an additional bottle, there would be something in it; but they will now have less to spare for that enjoyment, by more than the full additional cost of the iron which they consume. I can conceive that measures, remotely injurious to England, may be devised; but I am inclined to think that they would be always infinitely more, and much more immediately injurious to Prussia."

"Pardon me for altogether differing from you in the opinion which you entertain of the Anti-Corn-Law League and its fundamental principles. If I wanted the League to commit suicide, I would advise them the abandonment of truth, pure and undefiled, which is their tower of strength, and alone ought to be so; and recommend the adoption of antiquated notions never supported by any better reasoning than empty sounds, such as you facetiously advance. 'Thrice is he armed who has his quarrel just.' The total unconditional repeal is the breastplate of righteousness, which makes us strong as clad in steel. It is exactly, because concessions were made to expediency and prejudice, that so few great enterprises have had great issues; it is exactly because the Anti-Corn-Law League adheres to great principles, that it has great power. I see no advantages that England could derive from what are called liberal measures of other countries, beyond the satisfaction that the latter would then keep pace with her in the race of greatness or common sense. Knowing that you have bestowed but little time on the consideration of such matters, sufficiently simple in themselves, but mystified by self-interest and bureaucratic sagacity, I shall venture to lay before you, as briefly as possible, my manner of reasoning, and my plea on behalf of the League, if that were wanted."

"If England, or if the League must wait till all the world will agree respecting commercial laws and practice, there would be a long waiting;—but is it necessary to wait so long, to wait for a while, or to wait at all? You say, 'nothing will be granted without an equivalent.' Now, I go further, and say, 'nothing ought to be granted without an equivalent.' only show me what you grant, and the equivalent shall not be wanting. By relieving your own people from heavy duties, I do not think that you grant anything to others. The error lies in this, then, that by charging your imports with low duties, you fancy you grant something to the countries from whence those imports come. If that were true, then, by putting on high duties, you would obtain something from those countries; by putting on higher duties, you might obtain more; by putting on the highest duties conceivable, you might obtain all. You might thus, in fact, tax foreign countries. England, for instance, might tax Prussia or China and, might thus raise sufficient to pay off her national debt. Then, in fact, such duties would not fall on your own, but on other nations; then such duties would be no hardships at home; then such duties, high as they might be, would be no burthens; all complaints against them would be foolish; and the pretence that you must have sliding scales and protections and prohibitions on account of the high duties so jocosely enumerated by Sir Robert Peel, and therefore the Corn Law itself, would fall evidently to the ground."

"The Anti-Corn-Law League is not established for the injury or benefit of other countries, but for the salvation of its own. If it does not adhere to truth, it will and ought to fall. Its open enemies, and its silent, and therefore perhaps more dangerous, opponents only watch for its departure from abstract principles, first to emasculate, and then to extinguish it. Treaties of commerce and commercial laws profess a repugnance to imports, as disadvantages to national prosperity. But the only national end and object of foreign commerce can be imports, i. e., the returns—not exports—which are the outgoings, the means for obtaining that end. Governments, prompted by local interests, may think differently; the philosopher, whose mind embraces the whole circle of national transactions, can come but to that conclusion. Of what avail then can commercial treaties be, which are framed to exclude what alone is worth having, and make difficulties about that only which is not desirable?"

"The commodities that might be imported can be conveniently ranged under two heads, viz., those that are, and those that are not, wanted. Of this there is no better test than saleableness. What cannot be sold, is not wanted, and need not be prohibited. What finds buyers, is wanted. This is partially acknowledged in practice. There is no law against sending coals to Newcastle; and to prohibit the importation of sand into Pomerania would be simply ridiculous. But by putting a duty on butter in England, and on iron in Prussia, you deprive some people of buying what they want; and if you benefit the home producer, you do it at the expense of the consumer: you advantage, in fact, a few to the injury of a great many. If this be the duty of Government, then prohibitory measures are right; if not, they are wrong. I doubt whether the Prussian people were ever so generous that they paid more for English iron than the English themselves. I therefore do not see how your duty will hurt us, though I clearly see that it will hurt the Prussians. But, supposing even that your new duty on iron were a hardship on our ironmasters, that would be no reason why we should inflict an additional hardship on all our people, the bread-eaters, by impeding the supply of food, whereby neither the latter nor the former could be benefited."

"Again: if the Prussians wanted our iron, will they not now be obliged to exchange their wheat, flax, wool, or timber for things less useful to them than that commodity? For if, without this new law, they would have exchanged them exactly for the same things as with this law—that means, if they would have taken no iron—then the law is nominal, as much as a law against carrying coals to Newcastle. To such conclusions you must come at last, turn it as you will. Prohibitory laws, if they are effective, are a hardship on the many to favour a few; and as they force your people to exchange their exports for other commodities than would in preference be imported, they reduce the value of your exports, that is, of your exportable industry; they lessen the quantity, and limit the variety of commodities—force you to import what you don't want, make you carry sand into Prussia instead of iron, and, if comprehensive in extent and lasting in duration, they end in general poverty, wretchedness, and confusion, such as is now, thanks to the Corn Laws, the portion of Great Britain."

"The Anti-Corn-Law League knows well what it is about. It has taken its stand, wisely and honourably, on a broad principle. Its subscribers and supporters, the people of England, want food; and they shall have it. They cannot wait till Prussia thinks fit to supply its subjects with iron, or till the French shall be permitted by Louis Philippe to wear cheap stockings. Both are willing to sell us corn, and we care not for their concerns, as long as they will sell us what we want to buy. If, for the sake of repose, expediency, or favour, the League would swerve from this principle, they would become slaves of others, as the Prussian Government are sure to become slaves of the Zoll-Verein, because they have swerved from the original principle of simplifying their custom-house intricacies, and have gradually substituted for that laudable project the blighting system of the so-called protective policy."

"Pardon this long and tiresome epistle. Had we not all grown up with prohibitory notions—had not habit made your notions second nature to almost every one now arrived at the age of fifty—such discussions would be quite unnecessary. Were any one now to attempt, for the first time, to establish the prohibitive or protective system, he would find it very difficult to make out a case. But old abuse, fenced in by that many-headed hydra, error, is strong, and requires repeated and untired assaults. Truth, however, will prevail at last. They say Government contemplates once more to put down our League by law or force. I don't believe it; Government is strong to defend error, but to attack truth it has ever been proved weak."

A PICTURE OF THE MONOPOLISTS, DRAWN BY THEMSELVES.

"Mr. Ferrand is a man after our own hearts!"—Farmer's Journal.

We simply reprint a letter from Mr. Cobden to the Times newspaper, which explains itself, as a comment upon the above monopolist text.

To the Editor of the Times.

SIR,—My attention has been drawn to a letter from Mr. Ferrand in your paper, in which the following passage appears:—

"When I exposed in the House of Commons the fraud practised upon the operatives, I stated that some of the manufacturers kept cows, and compelled their workpeople to buy the milk; that the member for Stockport kept cows and sold the milk to his men. A few nights afterwards Mr. Cobden stood up in his place, and, amidst the loud cheers of his friends, solemnly denied my assertion. I then, giving up the name of my nationality, and though such communications are always considered private amongst members of Parliament, he nevertheless forwarded that note, by the same night's post, to the Manchester Guardian. The House appointed a committee to inquire into the truth of my allegations, of which both Mr. Cobden and myself were members, and in his presence Lord Ashley (the chairman) asked Mr. Oldfield (who was a witness from Chorley, where Mr. Cobden's printworks are) whether any of the manufacturers kept cows? He replied, 'Yes, Mr. Cobden does.' I steadily fixed my eye on the hon. member for Stockport whilst the witness gave the name of one of his work-people who bought milk from him, as well as the price which Mr. Cobden charged. I shall not soon forget the confusion of his countenance. To this moment Mr. Cobden has not retracted his denial.

"It is a pity that the Times, and not the Satirist, contains the above choice bit of statesmanship, as I am thereby compelled to trouble you with the following extracts from the evidence of Mr. Ferrand's own witness, Mr. Oldfield, who was brought from Chorley to substantiate his (Mr. Ferrand's) charge against me of being implicated in the truck system. I quote from the printed minutes of the committee on payment of wages:—

"1732.—Mr. Crawford.—You stated something with regard to letting out cows; what was the nature of that transaction?—With regard to the letting out cows I do not think that it is any injury to the workpeople, but it is done in Chorley.

"1733.—What is the nature of it?—I can tell you from information I got; I took a note of it; I made inquiry chiefly at Mr. Cobden's print works. There are certain individuals who take cows; it is the interest of the printers to have cows kept upon certain land they have.

"1734.—Chairman.—The cow-dung is of some use in the process?—Yes, they take the cow-dung from the cows to dye in the madder department, and they let out the cows to their workmen. There is one man of the name of Fox Crabtree; he takes a cow; he is a drawer in the works, and he pays £12 for what we call the 'note' in our country; it is 40 weeks' milk; he pays for the first 20 weeks 2s. a week; and then 4s. for the next 20 weeks afterwards, which makes £12. But I do not consider that that is any injury to the workmen at Mr. Cobden's, for I believe, in the way that milk is sold in our neighbourhood, that it is a benefit to the man, or he would not take it. I do not know that the Mr. Cobden's compel them to take it, but it is a benefit to them too. Mr. Cobden has to have a certain quantity of land, and they wish to have the dung to be used in madder dyeing.

"1735.—Mr. Crawford.—Do you think that it is a benefit to the employers and the men?—Yes.

"1736.—Have you heard any complaint upon the subject?—No.

"1737.—How many cows has Mr. Cobden?—There are four.

"1738.—Is there a great demand for milk?—Yes; but it is very cheap—it is nothing out of the way.

"1739.—Mr. Crawford.—Does Mr. Cobden buy the dung?—No; the cows are kept upon Mr. Cobden's land, and he sends his men to take the manure off; it is used chiefly in madder-dyeing.

"1740.—The master keeps them on his own land, and lets them out?—Yes; and they pay £12 for 40 weeks.

"1741.—Mr. Cobden.—Are you aware of the quantity of dung that would be used in a work like the Crosse Hall works?—No.

"1742.—Are you aware that it would require 100 cows in the spring of the year, at least, to supply the works with dung?—When they were in full work I should say it would require a great deal more.

"1743.—And only four, you say, are kept there?—I do not know of any more; I have known the individuals who have taken them.

"Not content with the above evidence in refutation of his charge, before his witness left the room, Mr. Ferrand himself put the two following questions:—

"1775.—Mr. Ferrand.—Is not Mr. Cobden considered one of the best masters in that part of the country?—Yes, he is.

"1776.—And he pays his workpeople in money?—Yes, he does. The only thing I have heard against Mr. Cobden is, that he employs too many Scotchmen; that is the chief complaint in our neighbourhood; but I am certain of one thing, that Mr. Cobden is greatly praised, for he does not keep a truck-shop, nor does he tie his men to anything, from what I have understood. They certainly keep cows, but it is a benefit to the man that has the cows.

"To hear all this against one's character from a neighbour in the presence of a Parliamentary committee, and to have such an eye as that of the hon. member for Knaresborough 'steadily fixed' upon one all the while, ought surely to excuse my not-soon-to-be-forgotten 'confusion of countenance.'

"If, as it seems, Sir, a new line of tactics in political controversy is to be adopted by our opponents, and that private character, and not public measures, is to be the topic of discussion, I think the plan adopted by Mr. Ferrand of calling a witness to my character from my own neighbourhood was a wise one. He, and those who act with him as accusers, will, of course, concur with me in the advice which I beg to offer to the public, that before their testimony be taken against the members of the League, their characters, and trustworthiness as witnesses, may be inquired into in their own neighbourhoods, and from amongst their neighbours.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
"Manchester, Dec. 30, 1843." RICHARD COBDEN.

Let any reader say what he thinks of the man who could concoct the charges Mr. Ferrand made out of the evidence actually given, and then recollect that he is "a man after the Monopolist's own heart"!!

THE CORN LAWS.

To the Editor of the Nottingham Mercury.

SIR,—A few days ago, being out upon a Christmas visit, I accidentally met with an old Shropshire farmer, and, being much pleased with his views upon the unproductiveness of the present Corn Law, I requested him to give me his sentiments in writing, and have the pleasure of placing before your readers the experience of an uneducated but practical farmer, of fully sixty years' standing.

Yours obediently,
J. G. JOHNSON.

"Sir,—I send you, according to promise, my views of the Corn Law; but, as I never went to school to learn grammar, or did it ever cost my father three guineas for my schooling, be pleased to excuse errors, and correct them.

"In 1807 or 1808 a Corn Law was made, fixing a standard duty on imported wheat of 8s. per quarter; but this did not long satisfy the experimentalists—those cultivators of the soil who had been buying estates, and borrowing one half the money to pay for them. These gentlemen when they had land to let wanted to double their rents, which they did in many instances; and in 1816, when peace was made, and wheat lowered in price, taking a ten years' average, from 18s. 14d. per quarter of 48 lbs. to 2s., then these experimentalists petitioned Parliament until they obtained an act that no foreign wheat should be sold for home consumption at less than 18s. per quarter. Still these experimentalists were dissatisfied, although the act contained, as was said at the time, all the protection sound policy required.

"When in May, 1819, about three millions of quarters of foreign wheat was let out of bond free of duty, by order of the King in Council, O, my God! how did these experimentalists complain! Petitioning Parliament every year, until they obtained a sliding-scale law, which has been, and is, the greatest curse to the honest, labouring, industrious farmer ever invented; and still, notwithstanding, these everlasting grumbling experimentalists cannot keep up the price of wheat and bread.

"Of this fact I am certain, that many hundreds of farmers have ruined themselves, and brought their children to be day labourers, in order to oblige their landlords, and those restless experimentalists, by supporting measures which have brought this great industrious nation to all the troubles, panics, and distress that have been seen and felt from 1815 to this day, December 25, 1843.

"The cultivators of the soil are divided into three classes:—
"1st. The experimentalists—men of some education, and ambitious to become agents to landed proprietors, &c.
"2nd. The agriculturists, who are the yeomen of the country, who farm their land well, are the staple of the country, and an honour to their neighbours.

"3rd. The farmer, who is an industrious, hard-working, careful man; who has seen little of the world; goes on as his father did before him; saves all he can in his plain honest way, and keeps very little company; thus he lives, and, when he dies, one son on the farm marries his neighbour's daughter; all the rest of the family are obliged to turn out, and, knowing nothing of the world, marry servants as ignorant as themselves. Thus they soon become day labourers, or engage themselves as carters in some neighbouring town. This has been the way with the farmers in Shropshire the last sixty years, to my knowledge.

"These evils I principally attribute to the trickery of the experimentalists and the landlords. For myself, I am favourable to a small fixed duty, say 4s., on imported wheat, which would answer all the purposes required, and be better than without any duty, as then both farmers and tradesmen, and the people of other nations, would know what they were doing. Not so now.

Yours,
AN OLD SHROPSHIRE FARMER.

BLUNDERS OF THE "STANDARD."

We are frequently amused by the gross blundering of the Standard on matters connected with the manufacturing districts. Whether its mis-statements proceed from gross ignorance or grosser dishonesty, is a point not easily to be determined by any previous knowledge of that journal; our experience of which would prevent even the slightest emotions of surprise on account of any deficiency of knowledge or of honesty in which it may be detected. In the number of Saturday last we have some striking instances of this habitual blundering, upon matters with which persons moderately acquainted with public affairs are generally familiar. In commenting upon a speech made by Mr. Cobden, at Leicester, the Standard says:—

"What would Mr. Cobden think of such a relaxation of the new poor-law as should prevent a drab-coloured man writing to a new poor-law commissioner for a consignment of agricultural paupers, to keep down the excessive wages of hand-loom weavers (4s. 6d. a week, as we remember)?"!!!

Now we will undertake to say, that no man, either "drab-coloured" or habited in black or blue, ever sent for or received a single pauper from the agricultural districts, to be employed as a hand-loom weaver. It is quite notorious, having been explained hundreds of times, and in all possible ways—in reports by the poor-law commissioners and factory inspectors—in letters, speeches, and newspapers—that the labour of the parties who migrated from the agricultural districts was required, not in hand-loom weaving, but in the factories—where many families who were starving in Buckinghamshire or Bedfordshire, on pittance of 7s. or 8s. per week, have been and are now earning 30s., 40s., or 50s. per week. Of the entire number who so migrated, we do not believe there is one who is or has been employed in hand-loom weaving. The assertion that they were brought here to keep down wages in that employment is, therefore, a ridiculous absurdity.

In other parts of the same article, the Standard says—"We have it, pro confesso, that the millowners do not give such good wages as the farmers; and that, when the landlords have the power, they give higher wages than the mill-owners, and what is more, give them all the year round"!!!!

We should very much like to know where the confession is to be found, which is here alluded to. The Standard has asserted, in the face of a mass of evidence that would have deterred a more scrupulous writer, that agricultural labourers receive better wages than persons employed in factories; but that anybody has admitted such a monstrous falsehood will be believed when the admission is produced, and not before. But the most ridiculous part of the Standard's blundering is that in which he boasts of the constancy of agricultural employment, as contradistinguished from employment in factories. This indicates an extent either of ignorance or of disregard for truth which is truly remarkable. Every man at all acquainted with rural affairs is perfectly aware that, from frost, from rain, and from many other causes, the employment (and the earnings) of agricultural labourers are liable to many interruptions; whilst the employment in factories is, from very obvious causes, extremely regular and constant. As Mr. Horner, the factory inspector, very clearly showed, in a report made to the Secretary of State in the early part of the year 1842, no millowner can stop his mill, or even materially diminish his hours of labour, without incurring very serious loss; and hence the state of trade must be wretched indeed, when the amount of factory labour is seriously diminished.

Perhaps we owe our readers an apology for alluding to these gross and palpable blunders; but it must not be forgotten, that statements of the kind to which we have referred form the very data on which the Standard and some other newspapers found their arguments in favour of the Corn Law; and this fact invests them with a degree of importance which, viewed merely as isolated misrepresentations, they would certainly not possess.—Manchester Guardian.

IRELAND AS SHE IS IN 1843.

WRITTEN FROM PERSONAL OBSERVATION.

CHAPTER X.

The criminal charge against J—R— for conspiring to shoot the landlord.

We come now to the criminal charge on which J—R— was tried and acquitted. It might be passed over, having been already mentioned so frequently in previous chapters, but it leads to other matters demanding our special attention, and must, therefore, be re-opened. We shall quote from the statements of counsel and from the evidence of witnesses, and make a few comments as we go along.

"COUNTY OF KILKENNY ASSIZES, Wednesday, July 26, 1843. (Before the Hon. Justice Crampton.)

"J—C— was indicted for having at Dombell, on the 10th of March, discharged a blunderbuss at R—S— with intent to kill, and J—R— was indicted as an accessory before the fact. The indictment was joint."

"The Solicitor-General stated the case. * * * It occurred on the 10th of March last, which was Sunday; and Mr. S— was attacked on his way from his residence to Kilkenny, where he intended to attend divine worship. The residence of Mr. S— is, or rather was, at B—, for he has since gone to reside in another county. That residence is near B—B—, and when on a particular part of the M— road between B— and Kilkenny, he was fired at. The shot would have been fatal had it taken effect. It was necessary to explain some circumstances. Three days before the Sunday on which the firing took place Mr. S— had gone to the house of the prisoner R— to complain of some ash trees which his steward had complained were cut down on his land. R— replied in very offensive language, and desired him to be off, or that he would be even with him, or murder him, he (the Solicitor-General) could not say which! Mr. S— took out a summons for R—, who was convicted for the ash trees at the petty sessions, and confined till the rising of the court. This was Saturday, and on the following day Mr. S— was proceeding on his jaunting-car on the road already described. At a particular part of it called Forrestole-lane, in which there is a turn, he observed a man standing at the pier of the gate. Mr. S— became alarmed, and desired his servant to drive on." [The learned gentleman goes on to describe the occurrence as detailed in the evidence.] After adverting to several points of the evidence, he added, that "the jury would have the evidence of Mr. S— himself, who was an unimpeachable witness, and concluded by observing, that the state of things in this country was deplorable. There were several other cases of a similar description to be tried, and it was the more necessary, therefore, that the jury should be firm; and though they ought not to convict upon light evidence, it was their duty on the other hand not to hesitate, through any mistaken notions of humanity, to return such a verdict, if justified by the evidence, as would be calculated to restore tranquillity and obedience to the laws of this country."

It is necessary to remark that the Solicitor-General (Greene) is by all parties allowed to be the most candid and impartial lawyer connected with the Irish Government; yet he labours here by a mis-statement of fact to create a prejudice against the prisoner R—. He asserts there were some ash trees cut down by R—, which were the landlord's property. Whereas his own witnesses speak of only one tree; and, in fact, they say too much, for it was only a portion of a tree, which had decayed and fallen over on the public road, from which R— was bound to remove it or suffer the consequence of allowing a nuisance, or stoppage to a public thoroughfare. This mis-statement is, however, not of very great importance taken by itself; it is only one of the straws which show the way the wind blows. But when we hear the most candid of the Crown lawyers, who cannot by any possibility be ignorant of the atrocious outrages committed on the tenantry by this landlord, over a period of several years—and that in defiance of the law—what are we to say when he speaks of the landlord as the "unimpeachable witness," and invokes a sentence on a man who at most is only presumed to have conspired against the landlord, because it is natural to believe that he would do so? But more especially knowing the fearful sufferings inflicted on the tenantry—or, if not knowing, being in an office where he should know them—what are we to think when he speaks such honeyed words of the landlord, and labours so unsparringly to prejudice the jury against the prisoner, and speaks of the necessity of a conviction to restore tranquillity and obedience to the laws? No doubt it was his duty to press for a conviction if the evidence justified him; his duty, as a Crown officer, being the vindication of the law and the maintenance of social order; but would any prosecutor, who had so outrageously set the law at defiance, and had so recklessly driven a district of country into a state of despair, have escaped censure and received praise, had he not been a landlord?

To say anything of the blunderbuss mentioned in the indictment being transformed to a pistol in the evidence, would be to waste time on a merely technical point. But the question of blunderbuss or pistol, taken in connection with the evidence of the landlord, will present us with a singular case. In reading his evidence, and questioning ourselves whether it is possible that he could have been fired at by any one who intended to hurt him, we must not forget the use which he made of this shooting case; the throwing of men into gaol who were to be witnesses against him in courts of law, and who were all parties to numerous lawsuits in which he was defendant. There is more to say on this delicate subject; but it may be as well to give the landlord's evidence first.

After detailing where he lives, he relates his visit to R—'s farm, and says:—"The first man I saw was R— himself. He said to me 'Be off! how dare you come on my lands? be off or I'll murder you. Let me never find you come on my lands again.' I said to him I was extremely sorry that he was going on as he was, and if he had been an industrious man, and had come to me, I would give him the timber with great pleasure."

If nothing occurred in this gentleman's evidence subsequently to prove that he neither knew what was true, nor could adhere to one version of a story after he had told it, we might believe that R— did so threaten him on his appearance at the farm. If he had not been known to us in connexion with R— and the other tenants previously to this visit, we might have believed that he did say—was really capable of saying, to him, "I am am extremely sorry that you are going on as you are; if you had been an industrious man, and come to me, I would have given you the timber with great pleasure." But we know that R— was an industrious man; and up to the time that he, the landlord, thought fit to try to "break him out of the land;" thought fit to falsely imprison, and fraudulently prosecute him, and by all the means in his power, legal and illegal, honest and dishonest, to prevent him from getting the use of the slates and timber which were given to him by Mr. J— S—; up to that time we have the mother and brother of the landlord saying that R— had been "a trustworthy man in the family all his life." It was a mere pretence made for the witness-box, that it might tell for him in the newspapers. When cruelty constitutes a large portion of any creature's disposition, man or brute, it has generally cunning for a companion. Mr. S— knows the value of a liberal sentiment as well as most persons of his calibre of mind, and he struggles, as well as such a mind will enable him, to propagate one of himself. But we have other means of knowing that he did not go so softly to R—'s farm. We need not depend on R—'s own statement, but we have that in addition to the statement of others that he went there to bully R—; and did bully him; and swore, by God, that he would transport him; that he would put fifteen keepers on his farm!

And what does the reader think fifteen keepers mean? It is this: that he would distrain R—'s property (no matter about debt—he had distrained him and others whether debt was owing or not); and, as he had done before, he would make the distraint as expensive as possible. For trifling seizures, several of them made for one small debt, he had put a greater number of men in possession than necessary, that he might augment costs; and, on this occasion, he threatened R— with fifteen! "By G—d," said he, "I'll put fifteen keepers on you by the 25th of March!" That is, he would send the fifteen to distrain and live at R—'s expense on the day the next rent fell due!

In continuation of his evidence he said:—"I left home on Sunday morning about ten o'clock, and it was about twenty minutes past ten o'clock when I went to L— Hill. I was on my way to Kilkenny to church, where I get my letters after church. There are two roads from Kilkenny to B— B—. I always went by the M— Town road to church. I was on an outside jaunting-car; my man-servant, R— C—, driving it. He was on the off side. I know L—'s gate. I was next the piers as we passed. The moment we got over the stream-bridge, I saw the leaf of a man's hat hiding behind the wall. I was then about seven yards from the piers. I told him to drive on the horse as hard as he could, because he was hard-mouthed. The hill we had to ascend was one of the deepest I ever went up; my horse was proceeding at the rate of a hunt; before that, very slowly. When I came opposite the piers the gate was half open, and the man came round to the front, and right in the centre levelled and fired at me. The gate was open at the side he stood. C— then leaped off the car. I did not leap off. The man who fired was but two-and-a-half yards from me. Could not swear what he presented at me. Oh! he took right good aim at me (laughter in the court.) C— said, 'You villain, I'll identify you.' I then said, 'C—, have you him?' I said before he fired, 'You assassin, I'll identify you!' I put up my two hands to my face. He had a red handkerchief over his face; I looked well at him, for I was not afraid of him. I could not tell what sort of coat he wore. He had a hat on his head; the shot hit me; a slug was taken out at the wrist and another from my finger." [When? Where? Who by? Why was not the operator produced? or the finger? or the wrist? or the slugs?] "The breast of my top coat was also hit, and my hat." [The hat was produced, says the report in the Kilkenny Journal, amid some laughter. There were apparent perforations of large grains of shot through the rim. The coat was also produced, with small apertures in the breast, seeming to have been made by a gunshot.] "When the man fired he ran down to the stream; I did not know him, nor could I identify him if I saw him again. At the time I was talking to R— about the timber I saw the other prisoner, and another very tall man I never saw before."

[One of the most important things to have produced showing the shots, would have been the jaunting-car. It was perforated with holes down as low as the foot-board, on which his feet rested. But its production would have probably given rise to the awkward speculation of how a blunderbuss or pistol (the indictment says it was a blunderbuss, and the witnesses swore it was a pistol) could have thrown the shot so widely at the distance of two-and-a-half yards.]

Mr. S— was now cross-examined by Mr. Walsh, counsel for the prisoners. He answered—"I am a landholder in this county since the 11th of September, 1830. I succeeded to my brother John's property. At that time I found R— a tenant on the establishment. He has two or three children and a wife. He had been living since my father's death under my brother John. He was, in fact, bred on the land. He owed me a debt; he had not paid all his rent. I have got the rent to the last quarter-day.

"Mr. Walsh: Hold up your head, and don't be looking down in that manner. You would not like a man who owed you money?"

"Witness (hesitating): Certainly I would wish to be paid."

"Mr. Walsh: Would you have a friendly feeling towards him?"

"Witness: Certainly I would wish to be paid."

"Mr. Walsh: And that is your answer to my question?"

"Witness: R— has a record in the other court against me; it is for false imprisonment; it is a year at all events since he commenced the action. I will be able to meet him; and meet you too. You will not frighten me. By my word I was not frightened at the shot at L—'s-hill, but you would. (Roars of laughter.)

"The Judge: Witness, just answer the questions, and don't make any remarks about Mr. Walsh."

"Witness: I shall, my lord, adhere to your assertions. (Laughter.) I think the hat was not a bad one; I never wore it since; I gave it to Mr. G—. He was two-and-a-half yards distant from me when he fired the shot. I had a front view of him. By my word he did not speak to me. I don't know what instrument he fired at me with, though I was as calm as you are now. I think nothing of a gun being pointed at me. I stood fire once before. It was not gentlemanly exercise in the morning; it was an attempt to murder me on the 16th of December, 1840. The man who fired at me at L—'s gate had a reddish handkerchief on him. The reason why I know the colour of the handkerchief, and don't know what was in his hand, was, that I wished to get a view of his face. He took right good aim at me. He was a minute or two taking aim." [To the Solicitor-General the witness had said that he first observed the man at the distance of seven yards, and that the horse was proceeding at the rate of a hunt!] "He took right good aim at me; he was a minute or two taking aim; all that time I was coolly surveying him. I could not identify him. I can give no reason why I told him I could identify him. I cannot tell the colour of his coat. R— is still a tenant on the land. I cannot say whether it was before or after I said I could identify him that the man fired the shot. By my word, C— ran at him—ay!"

"Mr. Walsh: You have a very elegant way of expressing yourself."

"Witness: My name is Richard Shee, esquire: no esquire, if you like. I left my man C— behind me. I went on half-a-quarter of a mile before he overtook me. I cannot tell why C— did not reach the assassin. I was a minute and a half in view of him. I cannot tell how long before that day I went to speak to R— about the ash-tree. I went on his land. I dare say I was not on it for six months before. We were only a very few minutes talking together. I have not often quarrelled before, except when wronged. There is no man would have a quarrel faster than I would. I think I have shown you that I was cool with you. (Laughter.)"

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Mr. Feargus O'Connor has sent us a printed circular, accompanied by his letter to Mr. Cobden. The day when anything coming from this gentleman would require an answer has passed away, and we are not inclined, by any notice of his attempts to push himself once more into notoriety, to raise his name from the unhonoured oblivion into which it has fallen."

"One who can distinguish between Free-trading and Free-booting," sends us the first number of a serial, entitled "Lover's Lives of Eminent Females;" and points out, with natural indignation, the attempt to mislead purchasers by misusing the name of a popular author. We are not surprised that Mr. Lover's friends should be annoyed at the circumstance; but they may be assured that the deception will not extend beyond the title-page. No one will confound the author of "Lover's Legends" with the author of "Lover's Lives," who has patience to wade through a page of the unmitigated nonsense given as the biography of "Eminent Females."

"A Friend to the League, Ongar."—The corrections shall be introduced at an early opportunity.

"Q."—Facetious verses are an example proving the rule.

"A Subscriber from Whitehaven."—The subject has been already touched upon in the LEAGUE, and will come under consideration again.

"A Friend at Lewes."—The subscription to the League Fund amounts now to about £60,000; the paragraph in the Brighton Gazette, to which he refers, is an example of what St. Pierre used to call "the blind denying the existence of the sun."

"E. R."—The history of Railroad jobbing is a portion of our annals which will be more carefully scrutinized than monopolists suspect. The power of the landed interest was never more scandalously manifested; it could well be said, "Their senates still the poisonous hane imbibe, And every hand grows callous with a bribe."

"An Irish Friend" calls our attention to an article on the late Dr. Maginn in the January number of the "Dublin University Magazine," which he says "is an equal mixture of Italian malignity and Greek panegyric." On sending for the number, we find it impossible to contradict or confirm this statement; for such was the narcotic influence of the introductory matter that we fell, while reading it, into a lethargic sleep, from which we could only be roused by a Mesmeric operation.

The Circular sent by our friend from Nantwich arrived too late for notice this week.

We are much gratified by the zeal of our Kirkburton friends, but think that their purpose would be better served by adhering to present machinery than constructing a new engine.

"S. D.," under consideration.

"A Leaguer" will see by this day's paper that his suggestion has been anticipated.

"Q. of Harley-street," under consideration.

"W. D. Bow-lane."—His feelings are more honourable to himself than the form of their expression would be gratifying to others.

"R. D."—Jersey and Guernsey could not supply iron, coal, or sites for large manufactories.

"R. P." will receive best instruction in Scotland.

"J. D.," sends the following:—

"BEWARE OF THE LEAGUE."—Morning Herald.

"Beware of the League!—yes, let all that's unfair, Ye Landed Aristocrats, timely beware; For the gauntlet is thrown, and the challenge is given, And monopoly's strength to the centre is riven."

"Beware of the League!—'tis the hope of the poor, And, founded in truth, its success must be sure; Although bloated corruption looks on with a frown, And oligarchs, ruthless, would trample it down."

"Yes, 'Beware of the League!' ye who live on the spoil Of the peasant and craftsman, the children of toll, Who labour's just rights seize for your caste alone, Who farm out God's bounties, and deem them your own."

"Beware of the League! ye who frame for your cause Those base moral crimes which ye designate laws, To destroy freemen's rights, and to crush all who aid In upholding their cause and the freedom of trade."

"Beware of the League! ye ruthless, but blind To the warnings portentous, ye foes to your kind. Come all—Cambria, Scotia—come, heartbroken Teague, And bid ev'ry oppressor—'Beware of the League!'"

"Z."—The subject is not forgotten.

"J. F."—The instances to which he refers are not the only ones in which the Duke of Newcastle has shown that, by "doing what he likes with his own," he means "doing what he likes with the property of the Crown, the country, and those whom he can coerce or intimidate."

"J. K. L."—We cannot enter into any discussion of ecclesiastical affairs. The Bishop of Exeter's conduct, in the matter to which he alludes, is perhaps to be lamented; but this is not the paper for a satisfactory examination of the question. To Correspondents generally we take leave to say, that there is more labour in keeping this department of the paper regular than in all the rest put together. We therefore crave their indulgence for involuntary omissions, and, at the same time, would hint that "brevity is the soul of wit."

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any person forwarding 3s. 3d. by Post-office order, to the Publisher, 67, Fleet-street, London, will have one quarter's copies of the LEAGUE forwarded by post on the days of publication. Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with J. Gadsby, Newall's-buildings, Manchester; and the LEAGUE may be had by order of any news-agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, January 6, 1844.

This week has been remarkable for the demolition of more falsehoods and fallacies, carefully devised by the Monopolists, than we can spare space to record. Alderman Brooks has branded his original calumniator, and compelled the Times to record its own shame; Mr. Hobson, of Leeds, has stood a sad penance for his slander before his fellow-townsmen; and Mr. Cobden has extracted eulogy from what was designed to be a vial of wrath. The League has met and triumphed over all the strength of scandal, all the insidious arts of slander, all the resources of interested vituperation, and all the false charges which ingenious malice could devise, or unblushing effrontery venture to assert. It has now reached the point where it may defy all the powers of calumny; the Monopolists have cried "wolf" so often that no one pays them the least attention.

The very last device of the Monopolists, set forth in their favourite organ, "Blackwood," was to say that the League was the enemy of the landed proprietors, and that no one of recognised station had given adhesion to its principles. On the very day that this falsehood was issued to the public, the subjoined letter was written by one of the largest landholders in England, and one of the most consistent politicians in the English Legislature. The Marquis of Westminster needs but be named to satisfy the most timid that the League has the sanction of those who are the most deeply interested in maintaining the just rights of landed property. With those who wish to overstrain such rights, in order to find means for redeeming former extravagance or pursuing new schemes of corruption, he has no sympathy; for he justly believes that reverence for the rights of the community is the best protection to the rights of a privileged order, and that an aristocracy is only perilled when it abandons its proper principles to assume the perilous responsibilities of an oppressive and monopolizing oligarchy.

The following is the Marquis's letter to the Chairman of the Council of the League, which needs no comment:—

"Eaton Hall, Jan. 1, 1844.

"SIR,—Having, on a former occasion, expressed to you my anxious wishes for your success in the arduous contest with Monopoly in which you are engaged, I cannot refuse myself the pleasure of congratulating you upon the rapid progress you have since made in the struggle with that formidable adversary."

"As you have found your foe to be daring and resolute, so have your energies increased in a wonderful manner; and, in spite of opposition, you have carried the war most effectually into the enemy's strongholds. With such vigorous and sustained efforts the victory must be yours; and my hopes of ultimate triumph, and that at no very distant date, therefore, much exceed my fears of failure. As to the duty—that it is said would be lost to the country, if not insisted on, I am satisfied that such would be the prosperity of all classes from the abolition of this impost, such the advantage that would accrue to all the moneyed concerns of the community, that, in a very short time, the general wealth would be so far augmented that the national revenue would outrun the amount of any duty that has been proposed, whether 3s., 5s. or 8s.

"It may be all very well, at agricultural meetings, to talk of the advantages of long leases, of tile-draining, &c., and to drink the health of the labourers; but to what good effect? Long leases are, in certain districts, and under certain well-known circumstances, desirable enough; good draining has long been understood and practised, where there have been sufficient means, sufficient enterprise, and a soil requiring it; praise has no doubt been deservedly lavished upon the farm-labourers; but there is something still to be done much more important to them, which is, to give them the means of obtaining an honest and independent livelihood—solid pudding being preferable to empty praise—and this cannot be effected without the abrogation of these mischievous enactments.

"I have much pleasure in sending a contribution of £500 to your Fund; and I venture to express a hope that you will not relax your endeavours until you have obtained from Government, in whatever hands it may happen to be, the fullest measure of Free Trade compatible with what is due to the maintenance of public credit.

"I remain, Sir,

"Your most obedient servant,

"George Wilson, Esq.,

"WESTMINSTER.

Chairman of the Council of the National Anti-Corn-Law League."

AGRICULTURE.

NOT CHARITY, BUT JUSTICE!

We remember to have attended a public meeting of working men, at which some one attempted to divert them from the business of the day by declaiming against the New Poor Law, when the attempt was promptly put down by this indignant shout from the audience—"We do not want charity, but justice."

Now this is particularly applicable to the relations between the agricultural labourers and the landowners; and it is nowhere more completely illustrated than in Dorsetshire. The report of the speeches at the Blandford Agricultural Society, which will be found in another column—delivered in the presence of Mr. George Banks, whose unblushing denial of the depressed state of the labourers will be in every reader's recollection—proves what the state of the Dorsetshire peasantry is, and that the opprobrium of it justly rests upon the landlords. Having read that report, having noticed the damning facts with regard to the Dorsetshire landowners which are there recorded, having seen the utter neglect with which the lords of the soil in that aristocratic county have hitherto treated the peasantry, one might for a moment imagine the inferences thence derived are contradicted by divers acts of munificence to the poor which we find stated in the local journal. For instance, we are told that Mrs. Rose Drewe, of Wootton House, gave "Christmas entertainments to her tenants, labourers, and other persons;" that, on the Friday preceding Christmas-day, "this kind-hearted lady distributed amongst the poor families of the village of Wootton Fitzpaine, sixty-five stone weight of beef;" that, on Christmas-eve, "upwards of eighty persons sat down to a sumptuous supper;" and that on Christmas-day "very nearly one hundred and fifty children were regaled with old English fare." Again, under the head of LYME, we are told that "John Hussey, Esq., father of our highly-esteemed representative in Parliament, Thomas Hussey, Esq., has again this year distributed among his more humble neighbours and townspeople three fine fat bullocks." This, however, smacks of "our highly-esteemed representative," and has a character of political rather than charitable "benevolence." But in the same paragraph it is recorded that "General Sir Dudley Hill, K.C.B., of Highcliff, has also given to more than one hundred poor families articles of clothing suitable to the season of the year;" and that "Mr. Hill of Fairfield, Mrs. Raven, and many other ladies and gentlemen, have, as usual, distributed their bounty, in meat, bread, coals, &c., to great numbers." Then the Hon. Colonel and Mrs. Dawson Damer have a paragraph all to themselves, to tell the admiring world that their "usual Christmas benefactions have been distributed this year, with a liberal hand, to the poor of Came and the neighbourhood." And probably such "benefactions" have been "distributed" to the poor by most of the landed grandees of Dorsetshire. Doubtless Mr. George Banks, turning his saintly eyes to heaven, will exclaim, "See what we do for our poor: there is an answer to the calumnies of the League." Doubtless these things are sometimes kindly intended, but they are far more frequently the result of ostentation and feudal pride.

And how does this paraded benevolence contrast with the fact stated by the Hon. and Rev. Mr. Osborne at Blandford, "that every seventh man in the county of Dorset is a pauper"? What sort of benevolence is that which gorges the poor with beef and beer one day in the three hundred and sixty-five, and permits "seven people to sleep, including boys and girls, in a room six feet ten inches by twelve feet" for years and years together? Has not Mr. Austin told us that in one room, ten feet square and seven feet high, at Stourpaine, three beds were habitually occupied by a man, his wife, and nine children, of whom two were grown-up young women, and three were lads aged from fourteen to seventeen years? And who is to blame for this fearful degradation of the peasantry? Lord Ashley and Mr. Sturt, two of the county members, admitted at Blandford that "the great landholders are responsible for the state of the cottages," and that "it is the duty of the landlord to provide every proper accommodation for the labourers on his estate." Hitherto the great object of the landowners has been to prevent the erection of new cottages, and to pull down the old ones, whenever opportunities of so doing offered.

It is thus plain, that though the landlords of Dorsetshire may be abounding in benevolence, they are fearfully negligent of their most obvious duties; they may distribute meat and drink once a year, and yet take no heed of physical destitution and moral contamination which exists around them as abiding plague spots; their charities—their brief, evanescent charities—may be abundant, may be generous, but their justice is miserably scant.

Indeed we are by no means certain that these ostentatious charities do not mark and indicate the very depth of the peasants' depression. The Helots of Sparta were allowed by their oppressive masters, one day of unlimited license in each year; the Roman slaves had their saturnalia, when, for a few brief hours, the masters ostentatiously ministered to the sensual enjoyments of their slaves, and when the apparent positions of the two classes were for an instant reversed; in western Europe, the iron rule of feudal lords—the predecessors of our own landlords—was at Christmas suspended for a fleeting period of roaring festivity, after which the oppressed serf relapsed into his ordinary state of miserable drudgery; and this last case is a correct parallel to that of the Christmas bounties of the Dorsetshire landlords. They permit the labourers on their estates to pine in penury, because they choose to maintain a system of restriction which prevents farmers from properly cultivating their farms; because they seek to maintain high rents by the most dishonest monopoly—by which, in truth, they grasp at the shadow and often lose the substance of wealth; because they refuse to render their tenants secure of enjoying the benefits of their industry by granting leases; and because they overrun their farms with game, and require as the condition of occupying their land the complete surrender of political independence; and then they meet and give petty 20s. prizes for the "encouragement of industrious labourers," and parade their insignificant Christmas "benefactions" as mighty efforts for the benefit of the poor! Why, one enterprising and intelligent farmer—secured by a rational lease—simply seeking his own advantage, would do more in one year to improve the condition of the rural population of Dorsetshire, than all the landlords in the county could effect in a generation by their eleemosynary "distributions" of beef, or beer, or blankets. This the squires are loth to understand. They like to be perpetually intermeddling with, and poking and prying into, the affairs of their tenants and labourers; and this, amongst others, is one of the causes which makes them cling so tenaciously to the Corn Laws. The Dorset County Chronicle, tells us that, "Now it has happily become fashionable to entertain a sympathy for the poor; and a desire to alleviate the condition of the labourer." That it has become "fashionable," amongst the landed gentry, to talk about their "desire to alleviate the condition of the labourer," is true; but the way in which Mr. Osborne's honest and unpalatable truths were received by the landowning grandees at Blandford proves the sincerity of that desire to be, to say the least, very questionable. But, admitting that newborn desire to be as ardent as the squires and their organs would assert, whence does it arise? How is it that the manifestation of this sympathy has been coincident with the systematic demand for the abolition of the monopoly of corn? How does it happen that, as the monopoly is more sorely pressed, and its evils are more thoroughly exposed, this sympathy has expanded so rapidly? Is it an accident? Has it no connexion with rent? Are there no visions of improved husbandry and a contented peasantry, as the means of sustaining rents, now monopoly is falling? We shall rejoice if it be so; but the landowners must make no more mistakes: they must not suppose they can have a tenantry at once dependent and enterprising, or that a contented and intelligent peasantry can be raised out of the depths of Dorsetshire poverty and abasement by any such means as the landowners have hitherto attempted. Above all, let them remember, that it is not charity but justice which the agricultural labourers require, and, as Mr. Osborne most truly said at Blandford, "THE RELIEF MUST FLOW THROUGH THE TENANT, AND ON TO THE LABOURER."

BLANDFORD AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The proceedings at the late meeting of the Blandford (Dorsetshire) Agricultural Society have such an important bearing on the question of the Corn Laws as they affect the condition of the agricultural labourer, that we have given them comment much more at length than is our wont. The "special object of this influential society," as we are told by the Dorset County Chronicle, is "now the encouragement of industrious labourers and servants;" that the meeting excited considerable interest; and that there was a great influx of the landed gentry and yeomanry from the neighbourhood and from various parts of the county into the room. Sixty labourers, men and women, "were entertained with a capital old English dinner and a liberal supply of good strong beer," at which the Rev. R. V. Pryor, rector of Spettisbury, said grace, and "Mr. Banks acted as croupier, his kindness and condescension being duly estimated by the delighted guests." At the farmer's dinner,—

"George Banks, Esq., took the chair, and presided with his known ability, eloquence, and cordial good feeling. The hon. member, on entering the room, was enthusiastically cheered; he was supported, on his right, by J. J. Farquharson, Esq., Sir Edward Baker, Bart., and the Rev. V. Pryor; and on his left by Lord Ashley, M.P., H. C. Sturt, Esq., M.P., and T. H. Bastard, jun., Esq. Among the company were also Major Portman, Captain Baker, G. Thomson Jacob, Esq., G. Repton, Esq., M.P., J. Floyer, Esq., C. Parke, Esq., W. Harris, Esq., Hon. and Rev. S. G. Osborne, Rev. John Watts, Rev. F. Smith, H. Bastard, Esq., W. C. Lambert, Esq., P. N. Bastard, Esq., Dr. Lees, B. Spurrier, Esq., — Smith, Esq., Edwin Andrews, Esq., James Alnworth, Esq., Rev. G. Abbott, T. Andrews, Esq., J. May, Esq., George Evans, Esq., W. Robson, Esq., J. Hector, Esq., T. Bennett, Esq. (Mayor of Blandford), George Easton, Esq., F. Smith, Esq., W. Smith, Esq., — Garland, Esq., H. Moore, Esq.; Messrs. Fowler, Fowler, jun., Burgess, R. Burgess, H. Fookes, W. Fookes, J. C. Fookes, J. Hill, G. Hill, R. Hill, Symonds, Saunders, Dibden, Small, Rickman, H. V. Stroud, E. Simonds, S. Groves, S. Groves, jun., House, G. Jesty, Jesty, jun., Symes, Lindsey, Bartlett, J. Keynes, Cox, Williams, Elliott, Tapper, Bound, W. Burt, Ford, Mitchell, Godwin, Brine, Moody, Rosalter, J. Shittler, M. Groves, G. Bowles, G. Good, B. Self, Carey Richards, Fisher, Porter, Young, Dibben, Webster, J. Keynes, jun., Blanchard, Billows, Forester, Rogers, J. Blanchard, S. Burt, C. Mayo, Bertie, Bertie, jun., Steele, Humby, Watts, Randall, Randall, jun., Bartlett, Humby, Symonds, W. Brine, H. Davis, Roper, Willis, Saunders, Hayward, Ingram, R. Porter, Lewis, J. Applin, Barnes, Godwin, Symonds, G. Burt, J. Burt, Saunders, Wellington, Bryant, Symes, Bertie, Foot, Ford, jun., R. Godwin, S. Pond, &c. &c.

The routine toasts having been disposed of, the Hon. and Rev. S. G. Osborne, in returning thanks for the "bishop and clergy of the diocese," spoke with truth and power on the depressed state of the Dorsetshire peasantry. He said:—

"Although this was the county of his adoption, it was probably the one in which he should end his days; and he would say that there was not a heart within it which beat more warmly or truly in a desire for its best interests and welfare. (Cheers.) As to the representations that had been made about the labourers, he would say that every one of them were deeply interested in the question. It had been publicly stated that every seventh man in the county was a pauper. ('No,' and disapprobation.) Would that he could sling back that imputation, and say it was untrue, but he deeply regretted to say that he could not do so; he regretted that the assertions made about the condition of the poor were but too true. By a comparison of the amount of cases during the last three quarters in that (the Blandford) Union with the population returns, it appeared that relief was given to something more than one in every seven of the population. It was known to the majority of those now in that room that the present rate of wages was not sufficient to keep a man with a family from the necessity of receiving parish relief when himself or any member of his family became subject to the common casualties of life—sickness, accident, or the death of any member."

These facts are not now to be denied; and it was worthy of a Christian teacher thus plainly to state them in a company where it was obvious nothing would be so unpalatable as the truth, and the whole truth. And Mr. Osborne's moral courage was yet more decisively shown in the following fearless exposure of the cause of the labourers' wrongs:—

"Now, whence came this state of the labourers? On whom should be cast the burthen or reproach? He would accuse no one. He would not say anything to set class against class, for these were times when every one of them should work together for the public good. (Hear, hear.) These were not the times when they should seek to rend asunder those bands which united, and should unite, all classes, labourer and master, tenant and landlord. Where, then, was the reproach to be thrown? If it was true, and he had it from the best authorities, from upright and intelligent farmers,—that the labourers could not, under present circumstances, keep themselves from seeking relief under any temporary pressure, was he to turn round upon them, the tenantry, and say it was their fault? He would not say this, but he would say what he believed to be correct, that the tenantry, under present circumstances, could not afford to give more wages than they did. (Loud cheers.) The tenantry had to contend against a burthen, in the shape of poor rates, as well as with rent, which forced them either to employ few labourers, or to pay those they did employ wages that kept them thus ever bordering on pauperism. The farmers had also been told by those above them to look with dread at coming times; they had been warned of the probable depreciation of the produce of their farms, and then had been told—more of advice than assistance—to 'plough deeper,' to try the new manures, to travel abroad for information, and even to destroy the rabbits. (A laugh and 'hear,') Now, knowing, as they did, that wages were too low, and that they could not afford to pay more, why did they not speak out and boldly say,—LET LANDHOLDERS HELP US TO RAISE THEM! (Hear.) Let the burden of this evil, he would say, be put upon the right shoulders."

Here we see the effect upon the condition of the labourers, of monopoly rents, insecure tenures, and bad farming, which the landlords would move heaven and earth to "conserve." On the recent practice of advice-giving, Mr. Osborne said:—

"Much advice had been given, but nothing had been done, and he did not wonder, when so much kind advice was given to the tenants to try this and that, at finding them very cautious in laying out their money in experiments. (Hear.) He had heard much advice given to make the best of the land, but seldom was any advice given them to cultivate the moral waste they had about their doors and in their neighbourhoods, to improve those who were living around them, and who were destined to labour for existence. Let them look at the habitations of the poor. Were they not, in some parishes, so crowded as to defy decency? Were not some houses to be found in so dilapidated a state as hardly to be fit to harbour a valued beast of the farm? Why, he could tell them that in one parish he had seen, in a room 6 feet 10 inches by 12 feet, seven people sleeping, including boys and girls. (Interuption.) Nay, still worse, he knew that the dead had been kept in contact with the sick, with the living, because there was not more than one room in the cottage. He asserted that there were houses to be met with in that nation which he believed not one of them, if they saw their condition, would put a fellow-creature in. Whatever had been said of the state of the cottages in another part of the county, he would say that there were far worse places in that union." (Loud expressions of dissent.)

Here one of the great landowners of the immediate neighbourhood, Mr. T. T. Farquharson winged, and asked that the names of the places should be given.

"Mr. Osborne said, (I called upon to name he would do so. The room he had referred to was in Milton parish. But he would appeal to the chairman, if he thought it right to give the names of absent persons? (The chairman intimated his dissent from giving such names.) He thought Mr. Bankes would not desire that the names of absent persons should be given. But he would give the names to the chairman, or take another mode of making them public. He was ready to give the name of every place, and of any owner—to state which of the cottages were leasehold or freehold, which were parish property, which the property of private individuals; as, however, this seemed to be objected to on that occasion, he would, if he wished it, place his notes in the hands of Mr. Bankes, and, if he desired it, go with him and prove their truth."

Now, as we shall see presently, this was the very last thing the ultra-monopolist member for Dorsetshire did desire. Mr. Farquharson also "considered it a most unfair thing to bring forward these charges at such a meeting; for how could he or any other gentleman know whether he or they might not be the accused party?" and blustered a good deal about having the names and places given to the public. We should like to know when it would be "a fair thing to bring forward these charges?" Was not the alleged "special object" of this society to encourage the labourers? And is not an accurate knowledge of their actual condition indispensable to any effective effort for their encouragement? But Mr. Farquharson says the statement of such home truths is "unfair"! Mr. Osborne, however, was not to be put down, for he said:—

"He would not shrink from making the cases public. He would again repeat before them, that the dwellings in many parishes were in a state most deeply to be deplored. It was the duty of them all, but especially of the great landowners, to see to their amendment. (Hear, hear.) He had spoken of the habitations and wages, but he would again say he considered the cottage question to be a proprietors' question; and there were proprietors present who, as he knew, had spent thousands of pounds in endeavouring to do what he wished he could do in every parish, to render the cottages such as they ought to be. He made this observation because, whilst it might be thought the question of wages touched upon by him belonged more to the farmer, it should not be said that he was afraid to speak of a question affecting those whose friendship he might be supposed more to value." (Cheers.)

Now, the state of the agricultural labourer as described by Mr. Osborne forms a complete answer to the pretence of the monopolists that high prices of corn give high wages to the peasants; for, if there be any county in which the beneficial effects ascribed to the Corn Laws by their supporters could operate, it would be Dorsetshire. If the Corn Laws keep up the station and incomes—pay the settlements and the mortgages—of the landed gentry, and through them benefit the labourers, then Dorsetshire should be the paradise of peasants, for it is especially the county of squires: it is exclusively agricultural, and its farmers are more entirely controlled by their landlords than in any other county in England. There is no manufacturing industry in the county. In a word, it is the monopolists' pattern county. All the circumstances which they allege to be good are present, while all they reprobate are absent. And observe the result!!!

Even Mr. Farquharson in substance admitted the charges made when he said:—

"He knew that in almost all parishes some such cases as those mentioned by Mr. Osborne might be found, but it would be difficult, he believed, to find a remedy. He regretted that statements had been made as to the condition of other parts of the county, and that the gentleman of the county had been unjustly charged with hardness of heart. (Hear, hear.) He wished to do all he could to better the condition of the labourers, but he could say that if he was to expend half his income in providing cottages on his estates for the labouring classes, in such a way as some wished them to be provided, he could not do it. But, whatever might be the case, he wished to see the tenantry relieved from the stigma that had been attached to them. (Loud cheers.) As to wages, he had been a farmer a great many years since, and he could say that when he sold wheat at £40 a load wages were not more than they were now. Ten shillings a week was the highest rate of wages then given."

And he attributed the ill condition of the labourers to the new poor law!!

Mr. Farquharson frankly declares his determination not to provide cottages on his estates, because the pretence that, for that purpose, it would be necessary to "expend half his income," is a mere subterfuge. We believe Mr. Farquharson draws an income of some £40,000 a year from his Dorsetshire estates, on which the agricultural labourers are in so depre- sed and degraded a condition. Why, if half his income were necessary to avert the evils the continuance of the present state must lead to, such men as he may some day find it could not have been a useless sacrifice. But nothing can be more absurd than the assumption that any very great outlay is necessary on the part of the landlords to provide decent accommodation for their peasantry. Double cottages may be built with four rooms in each, at from £60 to £80 each; and for such a cottage, with a bit of garden-ground, the labourer would cheerfully pay 1s. 6d. a week. But the truth is, the landowners of Dorsetshire, and other south-western counties, have for years past waged war against cottages; they have bought them up and pulled them down wherever they could do so, for the purpose of preventing the increase of paupers upon their estates; and the consequence is such as has now been brought to light. And the crime of the west-country landlord in this matter has not been merely that of culpable negligence: it is of a more active character, for he has been an exterminator of cottages, and has left the poor no other resource but to herd together like swine, or to slither under a hedge, and incur the penalties of the Vagrant Laws.

An intelligent farmer, who knows the Dorsetshire landlords well, said to us, with reference to this subject, "They would have nobody live upon their estates but themselves; they care nothing for farmers or labourers so long as they can obtain a large income for their extravagance and amusements."

Mr. Farquharson's speech, above quoted, contains also a remarkable refutation of the pretence that high prices benefit the labourer, when he said, "THAT WHEN HE SOLD WHEAT AT £40 A LOAD, WAGES WERE NOT MORE THAN THEY ARE NOW." This fact was stated by him for another purpose; but it is a fact nevertheless, and one completely conclusive against the Corn Laws.

Lord Ashley also exculpated the farmers when he said:—

"He entirely agreed with what had fallen from his friend Mr. Farquharson, that the tenants were not to be charged with the existing state of things as to the cottages. (Cheers.) He had always maintained that the tenants were not answerable for the cottages, the charge of which belonged to the landlords. (Long-continued cheering.) And he would say that no proprietor, be he great or small, had a right to look upon the cottages as a source of income. (Hear, hear.) The yeomanry were not responsible for the cottages, but the great landholder was responsible, and ought to be held responsible, for them. (Cheers.) The landholder ought not to take a rent for the cottages beyond what was necessary to keep them up; he ought not to look to them as a source of income." (Hear.)

And Mr. Sturt, the third Dorsetshire county member, said:—

"He had learnt from experience that it would take £100 to erect a proper cottage for a labourer and his family, so that a rent of at least 25s a year would be required to pay for this outlay, if it was looked at in that way. Such a rent was, however, much more than a labourer could afford to pay, and he would not take it as a matter of gain or property, although he knew that a farmer would give more rent for an estate if the cottages on it were good, so that the labourers might be well housed. (Hear.) He thought the duty of the landlord was to find every proper accommodation for his tenant, and to provide every proper accommodation for the labourers on his estate." (Cheers.)

Thus it is clear that the landlord would be no loser by having proper cottages built, for, though the labourer might not be able, under the actual low state of Dorsetshire husbandry, to pay him a high rent, yet the farmer would gladly pay a higher rent in proportion to the goodness and convenience of the cottages.

Mr. Bankes then, with characteristic flippancy, attacked Mr. Austin's report, and tried to establish several small special-pleading objections to the letter of Mr. Osborne which appears in that report. He also made a petulant attack on Mr. Osborne himself, in which the spite was more apparent than the point. And he endeavoured, by the following shallow artifice, to show that crime was lessening in Dorsetshire, and therefore that the statements as to the condition of the poor must be untrue. He said:—

"Mr. Justice Erskine, at the last assizes at Dorchester, in his charge to the Grand Jury, said, that Dorsetshire was the only county, so far as he was aware, in which it appeared from a Parliamentary return that crime had been progressively decreasing for the last five years; and he congratulated the county upon that circumstance, urging upon those who might have the power to promote yet further this favourable result. (Cheers.) I had myself occasion to make remarks to the same effect at the next ensuing quarter sessions; and, in order to bring down the statement of crime, with reference to this county, to the latest period, I have here in my hand a return made in pursuance of my request by the officer of the gaol, being a comparative statement made on the 7th of December in the present year, compared with the state of the gaol on the same day of the month in the past year. And from this return it appears, that there were in custody for trial on the 7th of December, 1842, in gaol 25, on bail 1, total, 26; for trial up to December 7, 1843, in gaol 12, on bail 2, total 14; and of this number 1 may add that four do not belong to this county. The total number of prisoners in custody 7th December, 1842, were, criminals 148, debtors 8, total 156. Total number of prisoners in custody 7th December, 1843, are, criminals, 101; debtors, 8; total, 112. These last returns may lead us to cherish the hope that crime is here still on the decrease."

And then, in the way monopolists usually try to parry a home-thrust, he attempted a diversion by some mis-statements as to wages in the manufacturing districts.

Mr. Osborne, however, nothing daunted, stuck to his text, and met Mr. Bankes's fallacies about the diminution of crime, by this short and simple reply:—

"The hon. member said crime was decreasing. Was he really in earnest in expecting him to draw an opinion of the state of crime from quarter sessions and assize returns alone? Those were no criterions. There were also summary convictions; and, let the hon. gentleman say what he would, there were numerous cases in which persons would not prosecute, particularly those petty pilferings from which farmers suffered so much."

This is very true. With the exception of incendiarism and poaching, the distress of the peasantry seldom leads them into aught but petty thefts, which are either overlooked by farmers, or dealt with summarily at petty sessions. After adverting to the poor law, Mr. Osborne said:—

"He must say that he thought the hon. member in the chair would have acted more fairly towards him if he had given him notice of his intention to make this attack. In attacking him, however, the hon. member had left his facts unanswered: he could not deny that a proportion, equal to one-seventh of the whole population, were receiving parish relief; he dared not deny the low state of the wages, the pressure upon the tenant, the state of the habitations. And as to the disinclination to prosecute, there were many present, although they might not like to own it publicly, who knew that what he had stated was correct."

And he left Mr. Bankes no room for shuffling from the main question, saying:—

"The hon. chairman had also said something about the improvement commencing with the labourer; but he would tell him that the means to meet the present state of things must come chiefly from the landlord. (Cheers.) Let the hon. gentleman see that it passed from the landlord through the sieve of the tenant, to benefit the labourers. (Hear.) If they wished to do substantial good, let them begin at the head, let the landlord's conscience, and let the relief flow through the tenant and on to the labourers. (Cheers.) He would tell them that, let this controversy end as it might, he would not shrink from the free expression of his opinion. He would not intentionally misrepresent anything, nor would he do anything to personally attack any one. He had endeavoured to do justice, to act fairly by all. He had experienced much kindness from the farmers; and among the landlords he had many friends, but he did not expect he should have met with the rebuke he had received."

Mr. Osborne seems not to completely understand the domineering character of the landlords, when he imagined he could really speak the whole truth on questions connected with the condition of the labourers and the state of agriculture without drawing down upon himself the vengeance of the aristocrats. They allow such aristocratic philanthropists as Lord Ashley to have an occasional fling at them, for they know well enough that such speakers are not sufficiently in earnest to seriously hurt their prejudices or interfere with their interests; but they have no tolerance for such downright utterance of unwelcome truths as those spoken by Mr. Osborne, and of course he was punished accordingly. If we may judge from his speeches, however, he is not a man to be put down. At all events the eyes of all England are now turned upon Dorsetshire and her landed proprietors; but let it be remembered that what has been, as it were, accidentally disclosed there is taking place elsewhere, and that all these crying evils are mainly dependent for their continuance upon the existence of the Corn Laws, and the maintenance of a system of landlord domination.

LANDLORD LOGIC.

Suspicious of their own chosen minister, Sir Robert Peel, the landlords are getting up a series of demonstrations in favour of monopoly for the purpose of coarding him into an abandonment of his declared Free-Trade principles. But the most amusing part of these minor movements is the attempt to represent them as the spontaneous efforts of the tenant-farmers. Nothing can be more absurd. Take Essex for instance, where the character of the movers and the tone of their speeches are completely demonstrative of landlord influence. Desirous of testing the opinion we had formed as to this, we said to a gentleman thoroughly acquainted with Essex, its interests and its prejudices, its landlords and its tenants, "What is this Protection Society, and who are the two active movers?" And the following was in substance his reply: "Oh, it is a scheme of the Essex landowners to keep up their rents; Mr. Baker is a second-rate land-agent, who gets a good deal of employment in valuing tenants in and out of their farms; he is a shallow, conceited person, who seeks and affects to stand well with the county gentry. Mr. Copland is the son, or the brother, of the Chelmsford lawyers, who are strictly identified in interest with the landowners of Essex." Here we have the secret of the move: rent is the object, but that is the only part of the question of which we shall hear nothing from the monopolists' agents.

We will give a few specimens of their reasons for asking the tenant-farmers to subscribe for the maintenance of that system of delusion by which, for thirty years past, they have some six or seven times been depressed to the verge of ruin! Mr. Baker said—

"They were prepared to show to the world that this was a tenants' question."

Now, assuming the landlord Legislature could succeed in maintaining permanently high prices by means of Corn Laws, which it cannot do and never has done, what would the tenants benefit by it? Would not the intense competition which exists amongst farmers for farms enable the landlord to obtain as rent all the surplus beyond the very lowest return any farmer would consent to receive for his labour and his outlay in cultivation? And in this race is not the most reckless and least responsible bidder of rent usually the successful candidate? The law of distress enables the landlord to secure his rent from the most insolvent tenant, who may have borrowed every shilling of the capital to stock his farm, and perchance may not have paid for the very seed of which the landlord sweeps away the fruits. Did not Mr. Baker himself afterwards tell his gulls, that "so long as the competition for land existed, so long would rents be upheld; when a landlord was offered a much higher price by one bidder than by another, they could not expect him to take the lowest?"

Though tenants would gain nothing by high prices could such be secured by the Corn Laws, still rents and all other burthens being fixed according to act of Parliament, not real prices, farmers are occasionally reduced to distress by a fall in prices by home competition. That is the case now; for the present distress amongst farmers is entirely caused by an expectation of always receiving a high price, which they can only get occasionally. Yet this land-valuer has the assurance to say, the maintenance of the Corn Laws is a tenants' question. Then Mr. Baker ventures, in defiance of the evidence which every paper, provincial and metropolitan, affords, in spite of what is passing around him, to utter this impudent falsehood; he said:—

"Throughout the rural districts of England at least, he was satisfied that nearly all got a sufficient quantity of bread."

Did Mr. Baker ever hear of Dorsetshire, Wiltshire, Devonshire, or Somersetshire, where the labourers are starving, when they can get work, on 6s. and 7s. a week?

Are not the labourers of Essex and the home counties now in a state of grievous destitution, from want of employment?—and does not that want of employment proceed from the present recurrence of one of those periodical depressions of agriculture which have been coexistent with the Corn Laws? And then he refers to his intended distribution of 200 stone of meat in charity!

Mr. Baker, a word in your ear,—it is not charity the labourers require, but justice. That they cannot have until the farmers' business has been placed upon a stable footing. So of all the rest of Mr. Baker's positions which, indeed, are nothing but naked assertions, directly opposed to facts and the experience of the last thirty years.

Mr. Copland's speech was a more elaborate affair: he had evidently been reading about his subject, and the effect was to produce something like the cross reading of a newspaper. He brought forward a heterogeneous mass of garbled statements and misapplied figures, which had no sort of coherence and consistency. His reliance was plainly on the ignorance of his audience. So far as his arguments applied to the question, they made against the existence of the Corn Laws. For instance, he said, "To rob the farmer of his capital and his profits, and then tell him to lay out more capital in the improvement of the land, was one of the most impudent things he ever heard of,"—a sentiment which was duly cheered.

But who has robbed the farmer of his capital? And who, having so done, exhorts him to lay out more capital in improvement? Why, is not this strictly applicable to the landlord? He it is who promised by his Corn Law a state of things which has not been realized, the failure of which has "robbed" the farmer of his capital. And the honesty of this gentleman's speech may be shown by the fact that he cited Mr. Alderman Copeland as a Free Trader!

HINTS FOR AGRICULTURISTS.

A WISE MAN KEPT HIS OWN COUNSEL.—It appears that the Earl of Hardwicke has written the some newspapers to repel the charge of having made the somewhat sensible remarks at his rent feast, which, upon the authority of a local journal, we last week imputed to him. Be it so; though we question very much whether his lordship knows precisely what he did say. Peers, though born legislators, are not often born orators, and we rather doubt whether his lordship is one of the small minority of the House of Lords who can string together half-a-dozen coherent sentences. Possibly, some admiring adherent of his lordship's interpreted his real speech on the Corn Law into the rational observations attributed to him by the local press; but Lord Hardwicke repudiates the imputation of common sense and political sagacity as an unfair one, and only goes to having said, "That, in common with the Duke of Buckingham and Sir Robert Peel, he was opposed to Free Trade." Let us see whether his lordship's explanation tion has mended the matter? The Duke of Buckingham declares that he will die in the last ditch in defence of monopoly, artificial scarcity of corn, and high prices; he advocates the exclusion of foreign corn until the price rises to famine point; and he left Sir Robert Peel's Cabinet because Sir Robert proposed a nominal abatement in the stringency of the Corn Monopoly. Had Lord Hardwicke said that with the Duke of Buckingham he was opposed to Free Trade, his statement would have been perfectly intelligible. But Sir Robert Peel has distinctly avowed the principles of Free Trade; he has declared that the industrious people of this country have an "abstract" right to "buy in the cheapest market and sell in the dearest;" and he follows in his recent alterations of the tariff and corn duties—though at a slow and halting pace—in the direction of his Free-Trade professions. Moreover, there is no speech of Sir Robert Peel's inconsistent with a total and immediate repeal of the Corn Laws, should he, in February next, deem that the time for such a measure has arrived; while all his general statements of the principles of commercial legislation lead directly towards practical Free Trade. How then does Lord Hardwicke square his opposition to Free Trade with that of Sir Robert Peel? Now, if his lordship had said what his too partial admirer reported him to have said, it would have been in substance: "In common with the Duke of Buckingham, who says he will oppose Free Trade as long as he can, and with Sir Robert Peel, who says he would have opposed Free Trade if he could, I, the Earl of Hardwicke, am opposed to Free Trade; but I must, like the Prime Minister, submit to circumstances, and seeing Free Trade to be now inevitable, I don't think it will be so disastrous, as has been by some supposed." This would have been common sense, and quite consistent with what he owns to have said. But, taking his coy confession alone, what does it mean? His lordship opposes Free Trade with Buckingham AND Peel? But with which? For they are the antipodes of each other on this question. With the one it is a question of principle—or pence; with the other, only one of time. Which of the two will his lordship take? 'Tis plain he can't go with both. Will he throw up his lord-in-waitership with Buckingham, or stick to the court spoon-and-napkin and Peel? It is not for us to say how his lordship will escape from the dilemma. But, giving him full credit for his repudiation of political common sense, we can only say, Oh, that each monopolist would pen a paragraph!

COST OF FOOD AND LABOUR IN INDIA.

To the Editor of the Gateshead Observer.

RESPECTED FRIEND,—I observe in thy columns, East India sugar only 7s. 6d. per cwt. (i.e. £7 10s. per ton), delivered in bond, in London, free of all expense. May I request the favour of thy stating all the particulars of the expense, placing it in bond, with the cost price in India? These, and any other particulars, especially the authorities from which thou derives thy information, will much oblige,

Thy assured Friend,

JOSEPH PEARCE, Sen.

Feethams, near Darlington, 12 mo. 25, 1843.

N.B.—The reason for my making these inquiries is, that I am engaged in drawing up a very short document, to publish, in order to prove that had England taken only 9 to 12 articles of her consumption from India, there would have been the immense annual saving of upwards of 20 millions sterling to the country. This saving of course arises from labour being only 2d. a day in India, whilst Mr. Gladstone, in his own evidence, in my possession, states that the Coolie labourers, whom he takes from India to his sugar-estates in Demerara, cost him £34 per annum each. Now, in his large sugar-plantations on the Ganges, he pays these same Coolie labourers only 2d. per day—the same price which Alexander Rogers, Esq., the late Sheriff of London, pays for his picked Coolie labourers also, on the Ganges or on the Bhurranpooteer.

The usual wages appear, by evidence before the Committee of Parliament, to be from 1½d. to 1½d. per day, for the common run of labouring men.

Thou wilt see, by reverting to the statement as at foot, how the saving more clearly arises.

The religious scruples of the Hindoo lead him to feed on rice. Rice has 5 parts in 85 more nutriment than wheat. (See Buckingham's account of rice.) The testimony to me of three of the largest East India planters, who employ these men, is, that 2½d. per week in rice will feed a stout labouring Hindoo. By the evidence before the House of Commons, it appears 1½d. to 1½d. is sufficient.

And what is still of greater importance to England is, our importing these articles from India would give a demand in return for our manufactures at least three to four times the amount which we now pay to the countries from which we import them.

Amongst these articles are the following imports, viz., sugar, cotton, silk, rum, coffee, tobacco, linsed, flax, tallow, oils, rice, drugs, dye-stuffs, &c. &c.

By the returns of 1841, it appeared that the whole territories under the East India Company employed only 352 ships, of 104,408 tons burthen, employing 5572 seamen; whilst we see, by the estimates given, our fisheries alone give employment to nearly 220,000 men and boys on the sea, there can be no doubt. (See Spackman's Statistics of Great Britain for the present year, page 45 for East India Shipping, and page 85 for Fisheries.)

History will undoubtedly record this as an age of wonders; and, not amongst the least, that Newcastle, Shields, and Sunderland—indeed, the whole of the ports in the United Kingdom—remained, for year after year, in a state of mourning for the ruin of the shipping interest, but that it did not appear they did almost anything to help themselves!

J. P.

WEST INDIES.—DEMERARA. Mr. Gladstone states that his Coolie labourers cost him, in Demerara, £37 per annum each.

EAST INDIES.—BENGAL. Mr. Symms, and other large planters, state they pay 2d. a day to those very Coolie labourers in India; which is £2 12s. 6d. per annum.

1000 Coolie labourers in Demerara, at £37 each per an. £37,000 India, say at £3 per annum. 3,000

Balance in favour of India £34,000

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE £100,000 FUND.

Subscriptions for the week ending Wednesday, Jan. 8, 1843.

N.B.—As the subscription list is made up from Wednesday to Wednesday, contributions received on Thursdays and Fridays are not published in the LEAGUE of the Saturday immediately succeeding, but are included in the list of the week following.

| | | |
|--|------------|----------|
| Marquis of Westminster | Manchester | £500 0 0 |
| Josiah Bradwell, 161, Oxford-road, | do. | 0 8 6 |
| Thos. Lees, 129, do., | do. | 1 0 0 |
| J. R. Heyward, 178, do., | do. | 0 5 0 |
| W. N. & Cooper, 73, Grosvenor-st., C-on-M., | do. | 1 1 0 |
| W. Hodgson, Booth-street, | do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Jones, 17, Rosamond-place, | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Dorothy Thornhill, 1, Oxford-road, | do. | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend, Oxford-road, per A. Nodal | do. | 0 2 6 |
| J. O. Day, 75, do., | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Francis Norbury, 89, do., | do. | 0 2 6 |
| J. H., per A. Nodal, Downing-street, | do. | 0 10 0 |
| Thos. Wood, 3, Grosvenor-street, C-on-M., | do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thos. Jackson, 1, do., | do. | 0 10 0 |
| Geo. Perkins, Robinson-street, Ardwick, | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Thyer, 10, Downing-street, | do. | 0 2 6 |
| J. R. Wood, Fallowfield Lodge, Fallowfield, | do. | 1 1 0 |
| Jas. Scholes, Hulme Hall-lane, Newton, | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Kenyon, do., | do. | 1 0 0 |
| J. and D. Paton, Tillicoultry, N.B., | do. | 10 10 0 |
| J. and R. Archibald, do., | do. | 6 6 0 |
| Andrew Walker & Co., do., | do. | 8 3 0 |
| Robt. Archibald & Sons, do., | do. | 2 2 0 |
| T. Monteith & Son, Devonside, do., | do. | 2 2 0 |
| Alex. Isat and Co., do., | do. | 1 2 0 |
| David Moir, do., | do. | 1 2 0 |
| James Henderson, do., | do. | 1 2 0 |
| James Thomson, do., | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Robt. Walker, do., | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Mrs. Geo. Walker, Tillicoultry, do., | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Rev. Archd. Browning, do., | do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Cargill, do., | do. | 1 1 0 |
| James Gibson, Dollar, do., | do. | 1 0 0 |
| W. and P. Morrison, Devonside, do., | do. | 0 10 0 |
| David Calder, do., | do. | 0 5 0 |
| Alex. Dugdale, Tillicoultry, do., | do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Ure, do., | do. | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend, do., | do. | 0 5 0 |
| Peter Smith, do., | do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thos. Monteith, do., | do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Donaldson, do., | do. | 0 2 0 |
| Andrew Thomson, do., | do. | 0 2 0 |
| Alex. Johnstone, do., | do. | 0 2 0 |
| Robt. Philip, do., | do. | 0 2 0 |
| Robt. Hall & Co., do., | do. | 0 10 0 |
| Wm. Greig, do., | do. | 0 8 0 |
| Jas. Moir, do., | do. | 0 2 0 |
| Jas. Watson, do., | do. | 0 2 0 |
| Andrew Ure, Devonside, do., | do. | 0 2 0 |
| Workmen employed by J. & D. Paton, Tillicoultry, N.B., | do. | 5 0 0 |
| Do. by Andrew Walker & Co., do., | do. | 2 10 0 |
| Do. by J. & K. Archibald, do., | do. | 2 1 0 |
| Do. by R. Archibald & Son, do., | do. | 1 10 0 |
| Do. by Thos. Monteith & Son, Devonside, N.B., | do. | 1 2 0 |
| Workmen employed by Robt. Walker, Devonside, N.B., | do. | 0 8 0 |
| Do. by W. & P. Morrison, do., | do. | 0 5 0 |
| Nathaniel Morgan, Bank, Ross, Herefordshire | do. | 2 2 0 |
| Captain Palmer, do., | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Samuel Wall, do., | do. | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend to the Poor | do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Smith, accountant, Ross, Herefordshire | do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Powell, druggist, do., | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Henry T. Russell, corn dealer, do., | do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Hill, brewer, do., | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Barrett, jun., farmer, Glenstone, near Ross, Herefordshire | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Davis, Linton, near Lea, Gloucestershire | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Henry Driver, Holden, near Clitheroe | do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Mather, Bethesda, Shrewton, Wiltshire | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Samuel Haley, 42, Hanging-ditch, Manchester | do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Wilson, George Inn, St. George's-rd., do. | do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Mills, Coach and Horses, do. | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Hugh Cryer, 6, Miller-street, do. | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Christ. Kenyon, Brewers' Arms, Kenyon-st., do. | do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Cull, 69, Angel-street, do. | do. | 0 5 0 |
| Wm. Chapman, 29, St. George's-road, do. | do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Dummerley, 27, do., do. | do. | 0 5 0 |
| Wm. Bannister, do., do. | do. | 0 5 0 |
| Wm. Ellison, 20, do., do. | do. | 0 5 0 |
| Richard Gatenby, Simpson-street, do. | do. | 0 5 0 |
| Abraham Bauer and Co., bankers, 42, Altensteinweg, Hamburg | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas and Son, Oswestry, Salop | do. | 2 10 0 |
| A Friend | do. | 2 0 0 |
| Robert Barlow, Wallgate, Wigau | do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Midgley, Spring-hill, Rochdale | do. | 50 0 0 |
| Mrs. E. G. Kay, Hall-fold, do. | do. | 10 0 0 |
| William Littlewood, Townhead, do. | do. | 10 0 0 |
| William Holland, Roe Back Inn, do. | do. | 1 1 0 |
| — Barker, surgeon, do. | do. | 2 0 0 |
| J. Ashworth, sizer, Bridge Mill, Whitworth, near do. | do. | 1 1 0 |
| Robt. Law, publican, Facit, near do. | do. | 1 1 0 |
| Henry Maden, Levensgreave, near Facit, near do. | do. | 1 1 0 |
| Thos. Sutcliffe, shopkeeper, Oldham-road, do. | do. | 1 1 0 |
| A Friend, per James Whitworth, Mill-row, near do. | do. | 1 1 0 |
| Wm. Round, 38, Fan-lane-street, Manchester | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Baker, Jenkinson-street C-on-M., do. | do. | 2 2 0 |
| Wm. Casworth, 159, Oxford-street, do. | do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Craig, 139, do., do. | do. | 0 5 0 |
| Edw. Hooper, Brook street, C-on-M., do. | do. | 1 1 0 |
| Benj. Goodwin, Ardwick-street, Ardwick, do. | do. | 0 5 0 |
| Samuel Fox, 187, Deansgate, do. | do. | 0 5 0 |
| Joseph Handley, 289, do., do. | do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Kirkham, 8, Livesey-street, do. | do. | 5 0 0 |
| H. Boardman, St. Andrew's-sq., Travia-st., do. | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Hartley, 43, Noel-street, Islington, London | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums, Manchester | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Paul Cooke, at Goodier, Krauss, and Co.'s, do. | do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Parrott, do., do. | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Edward Davis, do., do. | do. | 1 0 0 |
| S. Sutton, do., do. | do. | 0 7 0 |
| R. W. Webster, do., do. | do. | 0 6 0 |
| James Sellers, do., do. | do. | 0 10 0 |
| Thomas York, do., do. | do. | 0 5 0 |
| Samuel Kay, do., do. | do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Williamson, do., do. | do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Davis, do., do. | do. | 1 0 0 |
| David Cooke, do., do. | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums, do. | do. | 1 1 0 |
| Edward Procter, 6, Back Irwell-street, Manchester | do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Rawsthorne, 4, Greenwood-street, do. | do. | 10 10 0 |
| J. H. Currie, Barnes, Surrey | do. | 5 5 0 |
| Newcastle-on-Tyne, per Daniel Liddell | do. | 2 8 0 |
| Manuel Webb, Hill-gate, Gloucester | do. | 1 0 0 |
| L. Barnett, Princess-street, do. | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Smith, Barbacon-hill, do. | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Coke, Westgate-street, do. | do. | 0 5 0 |
| Small sums, do. | do. | 0 5 0 |
| Robt. Marshall, Chapel-en-le-Frith, Derbyshire | do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Ingham, do., do. | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Robt. Bardeley, do., do. | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Carrington, do., do. | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Ed. Bradshaw, Appleton Academy, near Warrington | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Josh. Blinnton, Ackers Mill, Latchford, near do. | do. | 1 0 0 |
| George Badeson, Silver-street, do. | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Peter Ego, Fennel-street, do. | do. | 1 1 0 |
| Jas. Hodgson, Widdowes, do. | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Charles Holmes, Soakley-street, do. | do. | 1 1 0 |

| | | |
|--|------------------|---------|
| Edmd. Robinson, Spring-terrace, | do. | £3 9 0 |
| Thomas Davis, Lyme-street, | do. | 0 5 0 |
| William Howard, Church-place, | do. | 0 5 0 |
| Robt. Munn, Heath Hill, near Boobdale | do. | 500 0 0 |
| John Lawson, King-street, Manchester | do. | 1 2 0 |
| T. A. | do. | 1 1 0 |
| Thomas Powell, Horse-market, | Warrington | 3 0 0 |
| Robt. Winstanley, Sankey-street, | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Richd. Woolfall, Butter-market, | do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Hobson, Bridge-street, | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Ann Crossfield, | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Sarah Crossfield, | do. | 1 0 0 |
| George Crossfield, | do. | 25 0 0 |
| John Chorley, Butter-market, | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Jas. McGowan, Bridge-street, | do. | 1 0 0 |
| George Fell, Sankey-street, | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Fell, do., | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Fownall and Co., 14, Fennell-street, do. | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Amelia Kins, Platten, | Rochdale | 1 0 0 |
| Edward Lord, Well-ill-Land | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Lord and Ashworth, | do. | 5 0 0 |
| A Friend | do. | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Abraham Sutcliffe, Bueraili, | Rochdale | 0 2 6 |
| Robert Whitehead, do., | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Benj. Dawson, Bueraili-grove, | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Betty Dickens, Lower-place, | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Metsey Chadwick, do., | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Ann Chadwick, do., | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Hannah Chadwick, do., | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Workmen employed by James King, | do. | 1 15 1 |
| Small sums, | do. | 0 2 0 |
| Rev. J. J. Tayler, York-place, C-on-M., Manchester, | | 8 0 0 |
| (2nd donation) | | 2 2 0 |
| Samuel Lowcock, London-road, Manchester | | 1 0 0 |
| W. Froggatt, Cressbrook, near Bakewell, Derbyshire | | 5 0 0 |
| Alex. Cairns, 28, Dover-street, C-on-M., Manchester | | 10 0 0 |
| John Leadbeater, Peel-street, | do. | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend at Layland | | 1 0 0 |
| John Daniell, High-street, Warminster | | 0 3 6 |
| James Young, George-street | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Nathl. Lewis Brett, | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Young, Close | do. | 0 2 6 |
| George Wansley, Church-street, | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Edward Ford, | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Hardick, High-street, | do. | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend to the Cause, | do. | 0 5 0 |
| A do., | do. | 0 2 6 |
| A do., | do. | 0 2 6 |
| A do., | do. | 0 2 6 |
| A do., | do. | 0 2 6 |
| A do., | do. | 0 2 6 |
| F. H., | do. | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend to the Cause, | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Ashman, Samborne, | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Small sums, | do. | 0 11 0 |
| Jno. Butterworth, 35, Piccadilly, Manchester | | 20 0 0 |
| Garnie and Deas, Perth, N.B. | | 2 0 0 |
| E. Thomson, Chester | | 10 0 0 |
| Godfrey Woodhead, Victoria-street, Manchester | | 1 0 0 |
| Edward Groome, 115, London-road, | do. | 1 1 0 |
| Wm. White, Railway Inn, Deansgate, | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Chapman, Green-street, Ardwick, | do. | 2 0 0 |
| Joseph Wilde, Weavers' Arms, Fallowfield, | do. | 1 0 0 |
| Chas. Ramsay and Co., Ancoats Vale Works, | do. | 5 0 0 |
| A real Friend to the Objects of the League | | 0 10 0 |
| J. K. | Berkeley, | 0 5 0 |
| Miss Emma Warner | Warner. | 0 2 6 |
| Master George Warner | | 0 2 6 |
| Mrs. Drummond, 16, Shandwich-place, Edinburgh | | 1 0 0 |
| James Christie Wright, Shanford, by Brechin, N. B. | | 1 0 0 |
| J. Payne, Sevenoaks, Kent | | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend, per R. G. Rose | | 1 1 0 |
| Thomas Prest, Chigwell-road, Essex | | 1 0 0 |
| David Shaw, Mould-green, near Huddersfield | | 1 1 0 |
| J. B. Harvey, Colchester | | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade | | 0 5 0 |
| James Doherty, Walworth | | 1 0 0 |
| G. Rowney, jun., 51, Rathbone-place | | 1 1 0 |
| — Gregory, 11, Glasshouse-street, Regent-street | | 1 1 0 |
| N. Atherton, Kingstone | | 1 0 0 |
| John Wraye | Calne, per R. W. | 1 0 0 |
| Robert Bowman | Gibbons, | 1 0 0 |
| John Baily | | 0 10 0 |
| John Robson, New North-road | | 1 0 0 |
| Edward Day, 5, Silver-street | Durham, per N. | 1 0 0 |
| Richard Rummington, Claypath | Oliver. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums | | 0 8 0 |
| A Friend to Freedom of Commerce | | 1 0 0 |
| J. S. | | 1 0 0 |
| J. S. Smith | | 0 10 0 |
| Anti-monopoly | Colchester, per | 0 10 0 |
| Henry Downes | Jas. Hurnard, | 0 10 0 |
| A Friend | | 0 10 0 |
| Anti-bread Tax | | 0 10 0 |
| Alfred Payne | | 0 10 0 |
| William Hall, Rose and Crown, Chippenham | | 1 0 0 |
| Edward Willis, 26, Salisbury-place, Locksfield | | 0 2 6 |
| Perfect Freedom | | 10 10 0 |
| D. P. | | 2 0 0 |
| George Withall, Beconsfield | | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Beasley, 137, High-street, Whitechapel | | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Freeman, 15, Lower Agnes-st., Waterloo-road | | 1 0 0 |
| Lavington Evans, Ashburton, Devon | | 1 0 0 |
| S. Beale, Rutland-st., Bedford-sq., Comm. rd. East | | 1 0 0 |
| Henry Lewis, Bures, Suffolk | | 0 2 6 |
| John Woolley, 15, Hastings-st., Brunswick-square | | 1 1 0 |
| Edward Dignum, Northwich | | 1 0 0 |
| John Buckland, Newton Abbott, Devonshire | | 1 0 0 |
| James H. Webb, Imendraper, 16, Upper Bridge-st., Dublin | | 1 0 0 |
| Edward Wilson, Exmouth | | 1 0 0 |
| James Barnard, Spaldwick, Huntingdonshire | | 1 0 0 |
| Richard Costar, and a few friends, Benson, Oxfordsh. | | 2 0 0 |
| W. H. Stephenson, High-street, Eton, Bucks | | 1 1 0 |
| Pence collected at the Coach and Horses, Water-lane, Fleet street, per E. Seaman | | 0 12 0 |
| Joseph Hardman, Upper Phillimore-pl., Kensington | | 0 2 0 |
| Henry Dye, 2, Hare court, Temple | | 2 2 0 |
| George Miller, 32, Westmoreland-place, City-road | | 1 0 0 |
| Sim and Son, manufacturers, Braithwaite | | 1 1 0 |
| T. Banks, tanner | | 1 1 0 |
| Jonathan Scott, manufacturer | | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Jagger, Greta Mill | | 1 7 1 |
| Joseph Todd, farmer | | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Bowe, farmer and publican | | 1 0 0 |
| Geo. Elliott and friends, Braithwaite | Kaswick, and | 1 1 0 |
| Wm. Robinson, High Hill | neighbourhood | 0 5 0 |
| Bundries, per Jonathan Scott | | 0 2 0 |
| A Friend | | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Bowe, Braithwaite | | 0 2 6 |
| Isabel Twaine, farmer, Newlands | | 0 2 6 |
| Bundries, per Joseph Sun | | 0 15 0 |
| Thomas Dickie, 26, Broomfield-street, Deptford | | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Day, labourer, 2, Taylor's-ct, Bow-lane (3rd sub.) | | 1 0 0 |
| H. | | 1 1 0 |
| Miss Harriet Martineau, Tynemouth, Northumber-land, per C. Fox | | 1 1 0 |
| Benjamin Mauley, 13, Old Ford-lane, Bethnal-green | | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Huxley, 13, Whitechapel-road | | 10 0 0 |
| Thomas Haslam, and other workmen employed at Messrs. Huxley's | | 1 0 0 |
| Isabel Burt, 65, York street, Westminster | | 5 0 0 |
| George Stevens and the other workmen at Burt and | | 1 0 0 |
| Porters | | 1 0 0 |
| Port Parsons, 98, York-street, Westminster | | 1 0 0 |
| Alexander Russell, 2, Newman-street, Oxford-street | | 1 0 0 |

| | | | | | |
|---|---------|---|----------|---|---------|
| Prosser's Barley Mow Brewery, King's-place, Commercial-road East | 20 10 0 | Henry Leah | £100 0 0 | A Well-wisher to the present and rising gene- ration | £1 0 0 |
| Wm. Oaler, 16, Bury-street, Bloomsbury | 0 2 6 | Mrs. Bacon, Horton-road | 50 0 0 | Wm. Tordoff, Black Dog Inn, Wibsey | 1 0 0 |
| Benjamin Lock, 21, Little Trinity-lane | 0 2 6 | Samuel Field, Pudsey | 50 0 0 | Abd. Kellott, Prince of Orange Inn, Shelf | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Timothy, carpet-warehouse, 12, High-street, Shoreditch | 1 0 0 | Miles Illingworth | 50 0 0 | Edward Wilson, North Bierly | 1 0 0 |
| T. A. | 0 2 6 | James Wade, Son, and Co. | 25 0 0 | Henry Milnes, Odd Fellows' Arms, Manches- ter-road | 0 15 0 |
| Master George Prince, Chartham, near Canterbury | 0 10 0 | James Bateman, Low Moor | 20 0 0 | Rev. P. Scott, Shipley | 0 10 0 |
| John Prince, 27, Broad-street | 0 10 0 | Isaac Wright, woolstapler | 10 0 0 | John Spencer, Parkgate | 0 10 0 |
| H. H. Murdoch, 2, Rodney-terrace West, Mile-end | 1 0 0 | James Cochrane, Westbrook-place | 10 0 0 | George Samson, Bowling | 1 0 0 |
| H. H. Murdoch, jun., do. | 0 10 0 | Benjamin Berry and Sons, Bowling | 10 0 0 | A Journeyman Painter | 0 5 0 |
| W. Althans, 7, George-street, Tower-hill | 0 10 0 | Benjamin Harrison, Leeds-road | 10 0 0 | Jos. Kitchen, Clarence-street, Manchester-rd. | 0 5 0 |
| John Scarborough, Newington Butts | 1 0 0 | Samuel Laycock, Kirkgate | 10 0 0 | Thomas Crossley, Thornton | 0 5 0 |
| W. M., per S. Harrison, jun. | 1 0 0 | Bernard Liebert, Hwains-street | 5 5 0 | Wm. Robertshaw, School-street | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Wallis | 1 0 0 | M. and S. Smith, Little Horton | 5 5 0 | Solomon Robertshaw, do. | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend | 1 0 0 | Samuel Bottomley, Croft-st., Manchester-rd. | 5 0 0 | Samuel Holroyd, Portland-street, Manchester-road | 1 0 0 |
| John Peck | 1 0 0 | William Wilkinson, Bowling | 5 0 0 | Wm. Riley, do., do. | 0 10 0 |
| John Slee | 2 0 0 | Bolland Buck | 5 0 0 | John Rycroft, Croft-street, do. | 0 2 6 |
| W. B. Tibbitts | 1 0 0 | W. and J. Cockshott, Shipley | 5 0 0 | Rli Bottomley, do., do. | 0 7 6 |
| T. Lake, Canal Office | 0 5 0 | John Rawson, solicitor | 5 0 0 | Samuel Priestley, do., do. | 0 1 0 |
| W. Morris, Harrow Inn | 0 5 0 | William Denby, Shipley | 5 0 0 | David Holgate, Clarence-street, Man- chester-road | 0 5 0 |
| H. Edwards | 0 2 6 | W. Greenwood, Portland-st., Manchester-rd. | 5 0 0 | Collected amongst the workmen to have a LEAGUE | 0 7 6 |
| J. Stubbs, maltster and miller | 0 2 6 | John Brogden, Eldon-place | 5 0 0 | "I would give more if I could" | 0 1 0 |
| T. Harrison, corn-dealer | 0 2 6 | A Wand for Sir Robert Peel | 5 0 0 | Enoch Haley, Thornton-road | 0 5 0 |
| Small sums | 0 19 0 | John Ramsden, jun., Leeds-road | 4 4 0 | John Wilkinson, Springfield-terrace | 2 2 0 |
| Subscriptions by Ch. Sutcliffe, George Inn, Kirkbur- ton | 1 0 0 | Friends of Free Trade | 4 0 0 | Nicholas Tilney, West-street | 1 0 0 |
| Rt. Green, druggist, Woolwich | 0 10 0 | A Friend | 3 3 0 | J. Armistead, Bishopgate-street | 1 1 0 |
| Thomas Brook, Northwich | 0 5 0 | William Harrop, Cullingworth | 3 3 0 | Wm. Holroyd, St. Peter's Mill, Park-lane | 2 0 0 |
| Joseph Hardley, do. | 0 5 0 | Clapham and Whittaker, Eaholt, near Leeds | 3 0 0 | Hoyle, Gill, and Co., Meadow-lane | 5 0 0 |
| Thomas Dobell, do. | 0 2 6 | Illingworth and Kenion | 3 0 0 | Taylor, Wordsworth, and Co., Holbeck | 25 0 0 |
| Half-a-crown, to knock 'em down | 0 2 6 | Rev. Walter Scott, President of Airedale College | 3 0 0 | Jacob Naylor, 6 St. George's-terrace Morlema, Kenwigs, jun., and Co., Rich- mond-hill | 1 1 0 |
| Another | 0 2 6 | John Milner | 3 0 0 | H. J. | 0 1 6 |
| At 'em again | 0 2 6 | William Harker, Manchester-road | 3 0 0 | A Friend in Frogland | 0 2 6 |
| W. F. | 0 2 6 | J. A. Cooper, solicitor, collected by him amongst a number of farmers and farm- labourers | 3 0 0 | Two Friends | 5 0 0 |
| T. M. | 0 2 6 | A. Oppenheimer | 2 10 0 | A Friend, 9 Bank-street | 1 1 0 |
| R. W. L. | 0 2 6 | Thomas Spawforth, Cheapside | 2 2 0 | A Friend | 2 0 0 |
| F. C. Jewsbury, 30, Oxford-street, Gloucester | 1 0 0 | S. E. Sichel | 2 2 0 | B. Bradshaw, Bramley, near George G. Cummings, Craven Cottage, near Bow, London | 1 1 0 |
| John Gondar, Southgate-street, do. | 1 0 0 | Edward Allen, Leeds-road | 2 2 0 | An American, New York | 1 0 0 |
| Hemblays and T., Preston | 20 0 0 | Robert Allen, do. | 2 2 0 | A Friend | 0 10 0 |
| Wm. and Thomas Haines | 15 0 0 | Isaac Halstead, Thornton-road | 2 2 0 | A. H. | 0 5 0 |
| John Earp, maltster | 3 0 0 | William George, solicitor | 2 2 0 | J. Hughes, St. John-street | 0 6 0 |
| John Earp, grocer | 2 0 0 | Daniel Firth, Stirling-street, Manchester-rd. | 2 0 0 | John Dunning | 0 2 6 |
| John Gutteridge | 1 10 0 | John Carter, Exchange-street | 2 0 0 | T. W. Spice, Reuben-terrace | 0 2 6 |
| John Heap | 1 0 0 | A Tory Friend | 2 0 0 | A Free Trader, T. S. | 0 2 6 |
| Joseph Tagg | 1 0 0 | S. Baines, Horton | 2 0 0 | An Enemy to Monopoly | 0 2 6 |
| William Hemaley, chandler | 1 0 0 | Henry Mason, Cliff-mill, Horton | 2 0 0 | Thomas Harrison, Bell-street | 0 2 6 |
| Stephen Adcock, jun. | 1 0 0 | Wray and Crabtree, Thornton-road | 2 0 0 | J. J. | 1 0 0 |
| Matthias Scott | 1 0 0 | T. D. | 1 1 0 | A Friend | 0 2 0 |
| Thomas Pass | 1 0 0 | Samuel Wilson, 28, Kirkgate | 1 1 0 | George Haigh, Chatam-street | 0 2 0 |
| William Duncliffe | 1 0 0 | M. Cronau | 1 1 0 | John Robinson, 19, Back Portland-crescent | 0 1 0 |
| Rev. Wm. Mason | 1 0 0 | John Slater Tetley, 82, Bridge-street | 1 1 0 | John Jowitt, 2, Sussex-street | 0 1 0 |
| Rev. Richard Stanion | 1 0 0 | Joseph Wright, do., do. | 1 1 0 | J. S. | 0 1 0 |
| Thomas Draper | 1 0 0 | John Thistlethwaite, Cheapside | 1 1 0 | James Andrews, Meanwood-road | 0 1 0 |
| John Clemons | 1 0 0 | G. O. Greenwood | 1 1 0 | George Mitchell, 27, St. Mark's-row | 1 1 0 |
| Henry Ward | 1 0 0 | Benjamin Tankard, Bowling | 1 1 0 | A. H. C., per Wilkinson and Co., Hunslet | 2 0 0 |
| George Kinney | 1 0 0 | A Cabinet-maker | 1 1 0 | William Boyne, 15, Queen's-square | 20 0 0 |
| William Pitt | 1 0 0 | W. H. Woodhead, 117, Westgate | 1 1 0 | Joseph Buckton and Son, Meadow-lane | 5 0 0 |
| H. Robinson | 1 0 0 | James Shackleton, Victoria-street | 1 1 0 | "Railways must progress," per R. B. Watson, Bond-street | 0 2 6 |
| Edmund Salisbury | 1 0 0 | J. Philipp, Box 60, Post-office | 1 1 0 | William Lucas, Mill-street, Meadow-lane | 25 0 0 |
| Henry Warren | 1 0 0 | Christopher Wilkinson, Tyrral-street | 1 1 0 | Robert Jowitt and Sons, Albion-street | 5 0 0 |
| Elizabeth Baldry | 1 0 0 | Samuel Wilkinson, Thornton-road | 1 1 0 | John Holmes, St. George's-terrace | 5 0 0 |
| Thomas Earp | 0 10 0 | John Rawnsley, Market-street | 1 1 0 | Joseph Bates, Albion-street | 1 1 0 |
| T. W. Wood | 0 10 0 | Wm. Hutton and James Abbs | 1 1 0 | R. Pollock, Bishopgate-street | 0 5 0 |
| Miss Carr | 0 7 6 | John Sharp, Manchester-road | 1 1 0 | Thomas Pollock, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Timms | 0 5 0 | Jonathan Coultera, Chapel-street, Eastbrook | 1 1 0 | Henry Slater, Wortley | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Sutton | 0 5 0 | Misses Holgate and Crossley, Snow-hill | 1 1 0 | Abraham Sladen, 65, Chatham-street | 5 0 0 |
| Thomas Widdowson | 0 3 0 | Robert Clark, Kirkgate | 1 1 0 | Thomas Nunnely, East Parade | 30 0 0 |
| W. Bailey, hairdresser | 0 2 6 | David Abercrombie | 1 1 0 | Francis Carbutt, Bond-street | 30 0 0 |
| John Walker | 0 2 6 | John Denby | 1 1 0 | George Goodman, Hunslet-lane | 10 0 0 |
| Thomas Smith, draper | 0 2 6 | Edward Jowett, North-parade | 1 1 0 | James Hopwood, 7, Bond-street | 0 10 0 |
| John Tagg | 0 2 6 | David Ramsden | 1 1 0 | R. Machell, Newsome's-yard, Briggate | 0 2 6 |
| Joseph Scott | 0 2 6 | Clarks and Ingham, Broad-stones | 1 1 0 | S. Shoen, solicitor, Benson's-buildings | 0 10 0 |
| John Elliott, jun. | 0 2 6 | J. R. Wagstaff, Union street | 1 1 0 | A Friend, 8, Victoria-road | 0 1 0 |
| Samuel Sheppard | 0 2 6 | Benjamin Wild, Fountain-street | 1 0 0 | Free Trade and no Surrender, Armley | 0 1 0 |
| Rev. William Kluit | 0 2 6 | S. Hutchinson, Market-street | 1 0 0 | A Sufferer from Monopoly, do. | 0 1 0 |
| Mrs. Thomas Haines | 0 2 6 | John Cooper, Manchester-road | 1 0 0 | A Reformed Drunkard, do. | 5 0 0 |
| — Rhodes, Swarkestone | 0 2 6 | Samuel Harrison, Bermondsey | 1 0 0 | William Walker and Sons, Blenheim-square | 1 0 0 |
| Small Sums, under 2s. 6d. | 1 10 1 | Richard Pollard, do. | 1 0 0 | Jonathan Waite, jun., Yeadon, near | 1 0 0 |
| John Turner and Son, drysalers | 5 0 0 | George Bottomley, Market-street | 1 0 0 | Matthew Lawton, Wortley | 10 10 0 |
| W. Vickers, Market-walk | 0 1 0 | John Simonett, Chapel-street, Leeds-road | 1 0 0 | J. and J. Refitt, dyers, Kirkstall-road | 1 1 0 |
| A Friend to the Cause | 0 2 6 | William Freeman, do. do. | 1 0 0 | Edward Oatler, leather-merchant | 5 0 0 |
| J. Liddell | 0 2 6 | James Richardby, Horton-road | 1 0 0 | Joseph Shackleton, Wortley | 1 1 0 |
| Two Friends | 0 1 0 | Edward Prince, Kirkgate | 1 0 0 | Joseph Shackleton, do. | 5 0 0 |
| Two ditto | 0 2 0 | Thomas Stead, Ivegate | 1 0 0 | James Craddock, Richmond-street | 3 3 0 |
| W. Watkinson | 0 2 0 | Richard Wigley, Fountain-street | 1 0 0 | L. F. Blackett, Knostrop | 1 1 0 |
| Mrs. B. Thornton | 0 2 6 | Samuel Sutcliffe, Thornton-road | 1 0 0 | T. W. Lord, East-street | 1 1 0 |
| Thomas Robson, King-street | 0 5 0 | Peter Watson, Snow-hill | 1 0 0 | Joseph Broadbent, Knostrop | 1 1 0 |
| Henry Revell, do. | 0 1 0 | A Well-wisher | 1 0 0 | Joseph Brook, 75, East-street | 1 1 0 |
| Henry Borget, do. | 0 1 0 | Jonathan Greenwood, Baildon | 1 0 0 | Henry Oxley, 9, Elmwood-grove | 1 0 0 |
| George Gill, do. | 0 1 0 | William Leach, Wakefield-road | 1 0 0 | Subscriptions, per J. S. Spencer, Ivy Cottage, Little Woodhouse | 0 11 6 |
| J. W. Atkinson, do. | 0 1 0 | Christopher Stowell, Little Horton | 1 0 0 | Joseph Rowling, School-close | 10 0 0 |
| Dempsey | 0 1 0 | Joseph Corrie, Thornton | 1 0 0 | Jonathan Dickinson and Son, Water-lane | 10 10 0 |
| William Trumbler, Bradford-road | 0 2 6 | Edward Kay, do. | 1 0 0 | Matthew Glew, Foundry Inn, Holbeck | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend | 0 5 0 | George Ridley, 9, Westgate | 1 0 0 | William Storey, Hunslet | 2 0 0 |
| Benjamin Sykes, Holm Slathwaite, near | 1 0 0 | Jude Yates, Croft-street, Manchester-road | 1 0 0 | Samuel North, Bank-street | 2 0 0 |
| J. Robson, King-street | 0 2 6 | James Procter, Leeds-road | 1 0 0 | Benjamin North, do. | 10 0 0 |
| R. Woodhead, do. | 0 1 0 | Joseph Webster, Frederick-street | 1 0 0 | George Wise, Park-lane | 1 1 0 |
| Thomas Dibb, do. | 0 2 6 | John Wright, Wibsey | 1 0 0 | William Wade, Pudsey, near | 30 0 0 |
| J. K. | 0 1 0 | Miss Holdsworth, Fountain-street | 1 0 0 | Robert Walker, York-place | 25 0 0 |
| T. K. | 0 1 0 | Jonas Ackroyd, Thornton | 1 0 0 | Joseph and William Walker, do. | 5 0 0 |
| A Friend | 0 1 0 | Joseph Craven, do. | 1 0 0 | E. and J. Taylor | 5 0 0 |
| J. Young | 0 1 0 | Jonathan Hardy, Low Moor | 1 0 0 | Wm. Bent | 2 0 0 |
| Joseph Schofield, New-street | 0 2 6 | Thos. Robertshaw, Apple Hall, Bunker's-hill | 1 0 0 | Samuel Dowse | 2 0 0 |
| Mrs. Holroyd, Bull and Mouth Inn | 0 2 6 | Wm. Watson, 74, Kirkgate | 1 0 0 | Joshua Farrar | 1 1 0 |
| Benjamin Haigh, Temperance Hotel | 0 10 0 | A. W. Thomson, Melbourne-place, Manning- ham-lane | 1 0 0 | Wm. Johnstone | 1 1 0 |
| Richard Wormall, Moldgreen, near | 1 1 0 | Wm. Marshall, tinner, Kirkgate | 1 0 0 | James Robinson | 1 1 0 |
| Thomas Jeasop, Lascelle's Hall, near | 1 1 0 | Joseph Greenhough, Westgate | 1 0 0 | Wm. Kinder | 1 0 0 |
| John Bowker, Temperance Hotel | 1 0 0 | Benj. Poplewell, Croft-st., Manchester-road | 1 0 0 | Joseph Armitage | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Bowker, 100, Northgate | 0 2 6 | Samuel Armitage, Market-street | 1 0 0 | Humphrey Davenport | 1 0 0 |
| John Eccles, Temperance Hotel | 1 0 0 | Rev. James Edgar, Frederick-street | 0 10 6 | Joseph Battye | 1 0 0 |
| Isaac Robson, King-street | 0 2 0 | Thomas Watkins, Bridge-street | 0 10 6 | John Holroyd | 0 10 0 |
| Abraham Mitchell | 0 2 0 | Rev. Thomas Pottenger | 0 10 6 | Francis Goodhall | 0 10 0 |
| H. Jowett | 1 1 0 | — Brookbank, Market-street | 0 10 6 | George Haigh | 0 10 0 |
| J. Tempest | 1 1 0 | George Dawson, Stone-street | 0 8 0 | Saml. Whitehead | 0 10 0 |
| Thomas Faules, Buxton-road | 1 1 0 | John Read | 0 5 0 | James Lumb | 1 0 0 |
| J. Dyson, draper, New-street | 1 1 0 | Thomas Beaumont | 0 5 0 | E. Hellowell and Co. | 1 0 0 |
| John Roebuck, plumber, do. | 0 5 0 | Wm. Ripley | 0 2 0 | Firth and Co. | 1 0 0 |
| H. M. C. Scott | 0 5 0 | Wm. Pickard | 0 2 0 | E. and J. Taylor's men | 55 0 0 |
| Joshua Binns, Chapel-hill | 1 0 0 | James Hutton | 0 2 0 | John Armstrong | 10 0 0 |
| John String, at Frederick Schwann's | 1 0 0 | A Friend | 0 5 0 | William Jackson | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Batho, fancy manufacturer | 1 0 0 | Thos. Wickett, Bridge-street | 0 5 0 | William Marsland, New-road | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade | 5 0 0 | John Robertshaw, John-street, Stott-hill | 0 2 6 | John Moss, innkeeper | 0 10 0 |
| George Lumb | 1 0 0 | J. Turner | 0 2 6 | — Moss, surgeon | 5 0 0 |
| Wm. Hirst, at Mr. Fr. Schwann's | 3 0 0 | James Waldie, Liverpool | 0 5 0 | C. Barrow, draper | 1 0 0 |
| Frederick Modera, do. | 0 10 0 | A Journeyman Painter | 0 5 0 | James Bathgate | 0 10 0 |
| Geo. Beaumont, do. | 0 2 6 | Three Young Ladies | 0 1 6 | H. M. Raith | 0 10 0 |
| David Lumb, do. | 0 5 0 | Anonymous | 0 2 0 | Robt. Mansergh | 0 5 0 |
| H. Toy, Thomas-street | 0 5 0 | C. H. Dawson, Royds Hall, near | 200 0 0 | Thomas Albright | 0 2 6 |
| Hy. Northrop Bradlev, New-street | 1 1 0 | Milligan, Forbes, and Co. | 200 0 0 | John Jackson | 0 2 6 |
| David Beaumont, Netherton, near | 1 0 0 | Titus Salt | 100 0 0 | John Fell, carrier | 1 0 0 |
| Benjamin Burdon, draper, Westgate | 2 2 0 | R. and J. Garnett | 100 0 0 | Richard Dunn | 3 2 0 |
| Liddell, Brothers, Market place | 5 0 0 | George Townsend and Brothers, Cullingworth | 50 0 0 | James Johnson, M.D. | 1 10 0 |
| Edward Henshall, do. | 5 0 0 | D. Bateman and Sons, Wibsey, near | 50 0 0 | John Neald | 0 5 0 |
| William Moore, jun. | 5 0 0 | T. G. Clayton, Bierly Hall, near | 50 0 0 | George Eleden | 0 5 0 |
| Joseph Tetley, King-street | 1 1 0 | Young Men in Milligan, Forbes, and Co.'s employ | 30 0 0 | Thomas Satterthwaite | 0 5 0 |
| Edward Tetley, do. | 1 1 0 | James Hepper, Shipley, near | 7 7 0 | Henry Varity | 0 5 0 |
| Joseph Shaw, New-street | 5 5 0 | John Smith and Co., Marshall's Mill | 5 0 0 | John Murray, Hornby | 1 0 0 |
| From sundries on a Card, collected by Mr. Dewhurst | 0 5 0 | T. and J. Mirfield, Westgate Hill, near | 5 0 0 | Dr. Lingard, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Sharp, Lockwood | 1 0 0 | William Wood, Tyrral-street | 1 1 0 | | |
| Ephraim Taylor, Almondsbury, near | 1 0 0 | Rev. Henry Dowson | 1 1 0 | | |
| Wm. Parkin, Castle-hill, near | 5 0 0 | John Dale, Ivegate | 1 1 0 | | |
| Joseph Norton, Clayton West, near | 20 0 0 | Wilson Sutcliffe, Bowling | 1 1 0 | | |
| Hy. Fryer, New-street | 0 2 6 | William Shepherd, Well-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| James Redfearn, Leeds-road | 1 10 0 | David Yewdall, Ecclehill | 1 0 0 | | |
| Wm. Brook, Messrs. Starkey, Brothers, Long- royd Bridge, near | 1 0 0 | Jos. Oxley, at Messrs. Thos. Willett and Co.'s Abraham Priestley, Hope and Anchor Inn | 1 0 0 | | |

“ And, when our gallant-hearted band
Down life's calm noontide run,
We'll smile upon that happy land
Our youthful vigour won;
And when our heads are old and grey,
If, haply, we survive,
He was, our sons shall proudly say,
A man of twenty-five.”

All lady housekeepers ought to know that slave-grown sugar is regularly brought into this country in large quantities, duty free ; it is here refined into lump sugar, and sent abroad so cheap as to be sold at the other side of the world at 4d. per lb. ; while we are obliged to pay that price for brown sugar (besides duty)—a price paid to favoured monopolist planters and merchants. We are denied the cheap sugar, lest its use should encourage the continuance of slavery ; and yet we actually buy that sugar and sell it abroad to favour class interests !—Manchester Times.

Let us not be misunderstood: we are directly at issue with the Irish Tyrtaeus on the remedy which he would suggest; but we hold that the very fact of such a remedy being proposed by a man of such talent as the writer of this ode manifestly possesses, is decisive evidence of the existence of a mass of social evil which cannot long be neglected with impunity. Other remedies, indeed, have been proposed, and the following clever parody is a description of one of them:—

"PAAN.

"The Assyrian came down," &c.—Byron.

"De Bray gallop'd down, like an ass on the fold,
And Lord Black-bottle followed, in scarlet and gold;
Their teeth, when they grin'd, were terrific to see,
And their whiskers were black as the blackest black tea."

"Now cannon are planted by Bray in his ire,
And gunners, prepared in a twinkling to fire;
And three rotten hulks and the Pigeon-house fort Prepares to assist in the Viceregal sport."

"And there gaped the oysters, with wonderment wide,
And cockles roll'd in to the fun with the tide,
And many a lobster that day from the strand
Telegraph'd with his claw to his brothers on land."

"Fresh Dublin bay herrings, and flat-fish galore,
Came to gaze at a still flatter flounder ashore;
And envying oysters beheld that De Bray
Had a far greater beard in proportion than they."

"Present arms! sound trumpets! belabour the drums!
Lo! Mars in moustachios to Ballybough comes!
The infantry grunt, and the cavalry neigh,
For in wrath and tight breeches approaches De Bray."

"Still desp'rate Repellers, in range of his guns,
Fire volleys of laughter and batteries of puns:
In vain—for like reeds on a harness of brass
Fall the arrows of wit on the scull of an ass."

"At length, giving up all his hopes of a lark
(Despite proclamations stuck up in the dark)
Withdraw you my legions, quoth valiant De Bray, Alas! there's no mill* for Don Quixote to-day."

"And Sugden and fellows were loud in their wall,
And the Lords of the Privy looked bothered and pale;
And the troops, so long harass'd and wantonly bor'd,
Marched back to their barracks blaspheming the Lord†."

Displays such as that described by the parodist may secure the military occupation of Ireland; but how much of the country is then possessed by its Government? Just the range of a musket-shot round every sentry-box, and not an inch besides. In the very same paper which contains this playful caricature of the Lord-Lieutenant's display of the "pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war," we find more than one allusion to the patience with which the Germans endured the military bondage of the French until the disastrous Russian campaign afforded them a chance of liberation; and in almost every Irish paper we find proofs that this military array only increases the alienation of the people from the Government, being regarded as evidence of a determination to refuse a redress of grievances. In the very same paper that contains the parody is the following spirited lyric of an Irish Körner:—

"GERMAN WAR SONG.

Translated from Körner.

"Why knit ye thus darkly the brow of your might?
Why frown ye, and wildly stare out in the night,
Ye spirits who fear not the stranger?
The storm of oppression howls on, and the roar
Of his ocean assaulting is loud on our shore—
We shall meet, but despise not our danger."

"His hell-flood now rages more dismal and dread;
Much blood of our noblest has vainly been shed;
Still our struggles the stranger is scorning.
Yet vengeance, despair not, shall come from on high,
Already its dawn breaks blood-red in our sky—
Sure red is the tint of the morning."

"And if courage and strength have avail'd us before,
We will call on our strength and our courage once more—
Let the ship not be wreck'd in the haven.
Arise, then, oh, youth! see the foe-man is near—
Arise! in a tempest of heroes appear!
Who would now be a slumbering craven?"

"And we shall not waver, who, resolute here,
Stand looking grim Death in the face without fear,
The rights of our country protecting;
But freedom regain, and our bless'd Fatherland,
Or die, as the patriot dies, sword in hand,
The life of the bondman rejecting."

"With freedom denied, what could tempt us to live?
Or what has the world all around us to give?
For the soil of the country that bore us?
Yes: freed from the foe let our Fatherland be,
Or let us depart to our sires who are free,
And happy in heaven before us."

"Then howl on, thou tempest! then roar on thou sea!
Then tremble thou Earth! but no terrors have ye
For spirits that never will falter:
All nature may fly into atoms around,
But, devoted to Freedom, we still shall be found,
Thus offering our blood at her altar."

"J. B."

We are tempted to quote a very beautiful lyric in a different strain, to afford some respite from the melancholy thoughts which the songs of war suggest:—

"THE TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT.

"My country! on thy famished brow
A faint sweet smile appears;
Oh! where are they who mock'd thee now?
I do not hear their cheers!"

* One of the most brilliant feats of the Knight of La Mancha was an attack on a wind-mill.
† De Bray.

"Thou hast achieved a mighty thing—
A nation hath combined,
To break the thousand links that cling,
From habit, round the mind."

"From habit, and from choice, and some
Will own almost from fate,
They sought a Lethé 'midst their gloom,
And wildly felt elate!"

"Yet, with a giant's strength, they burst
Those fetters at a bound;
And stood, amidst the nations, first,
With moral grandeur crown'd."

"Thou wert too long a scorn to those Who, like the Spartan, smiled,
To see thee fall, and to expose
The slave to his free child!"

"But let that pass: like winter wind,
It cannot mar thy spring—
Would thou hadst nothing more unkind
From Memory's store to bring!"

"For, like the Patriarch of old,
Amidst thy sons were those,
Accurs'd, like Cham, who could behold
Thy shame but to expose."

"Servants of servants they shall be,
When, through thy valleys fair,
Their brothers' tents are spreading free
Beneath God's special care." "C. J. D."

Reviews of troops, prosecutions for sedition, proclamations and prohibitions, all the resources of the armoury of power, are but expedients for the day, and when they have served their temporary purpose, will sink into unhonoured oblivion; but verses such as those we have quoted will live, and every hour that passes over the unredressed grievances in which they had their birth will give new energies to their vitality. He was a wise statesman who said that he would rather have the making of a people's ballads than of a people's laws; and we certainly feel more dread of the little collection of songs in the "Spirit of the Nation" than we do of the most cumbersome volume of the "Statutes at large." We doubt whether any Coercion Bill could compete in power with the following stanzas, entitled

"A DREAM.

"I dreamt a dream, a dazzling dream, of a green isle far away,
Where the glowing west to the ocean's breast calleth the dying day;
And that island green was as fair a scene as ever man's eye did see,
With its chieftains bold, and its temples old, and its homes and its altars free!
No foreign foe did that green isle know—no stranger band it bore,
Save the merchant train from sunny Spain, and from Africa's golden shore!
And the young man's heart would fondly start, and the old man's eye would smile,
As their thoughts would roam o'er the ocean foam to that lone and 'holy isle!"

"Years passed by, and the orient sky blazed with a new-born light,
And Bethlehem's star shone bright afar o'er the lost world's darksome night;
And the diamond shines from plundered mines, and the golden fanes of Jove, Melted away in the blaze of day at the simple spell-word—Love!
The light serene o'er that island green played with its saving beams,
And the fires of Baal waxed dim and pale, like the stars in the morning streams!
And 'twas joy to hear, in the bright air clear, from out each sunny glade,
The tinkling bell, from the quiet cell, or the cloister's tranquil shade!"

"A cloud of night o'er that dream so bright soon with its dark wing came,
And the happy scene of that island green was lost in blood and shame;
For its kings unjust betrayed their trust, and its queens, though fair, were frail;
And a robber band, from a stranger land, with their war-whoops filled the gale:—
A fatal spell on that green isle fell—a shadow of death and gloom
Passed withering o'er, from shore to shore, like the breath of the foul simoom;
And each green hill's side was crimson dyed, and each stream rolled red and wild,
With the mingled blood of the brave and good—of mother, and maid, and child!"

"Dark was my dream, though many a gleam of hope through that black night broke,
Like a star's bright form through a whistling storm, or the moon through a midnight oak!
And many a time, with its wings sublime, and its robes of saffron light,
Would the morning rise on the eastern skies, but to vanish again in night!
For, in abject prayer, the people there still raised their fettered hands,
When the sense of right, and the power to smite, are the spirit that commands;
For those who would sneer at the mourner's tear, and heed not the suppliant's sigh,
Would bow in awe to that first great law—a banded nation's cry!"

"At length arose o'er that isle of woes a dawn with a steadier smile,
And, in happy hour, a voice of power awoke the slumbering isle!"

And the people all obeyed the call of their chief's unsceptred hand,
Vowing to raise, as in ancient days, the name of their own dear land!
My dream grew bright as the sunbeam's light, as I watched that isle's career
Through the varied scene and the joys sore of many a future year;
And oh! what thrill did my bosom fill, as I gazed on a pillared pile,
Where a senate once more in power watched o'er the rights of that lone green isle!"

"DESMOND."

We believe that the realization of the picture with which this dream concludes would be one of the greatest calamities which could befall Ireland. The real grievance of that country is not that it is subject to English government—would to Heaven it were!—but that it is subject to an ascendancy, a minority banded into faction, which has thwarted all the remedial measures of the Government, and turned all its measures of restraint into engines of party-persecution. Our error in England has been the unhesitating and uninquiring support given to the ascendancy in Ireland; we have been the allies of the oppressors, and, not unnaturally, the wrath of the oppressed has been directed against us instead of against the principals. Our duty is to show the Irish that the oligarchy which crushes them down is not a recognised English agency, as the Orange party is accustomed to represent itself. The English people must disavow its responsibility for such deeds of oppression as those described in Reuben's Letters, and in the reports from the Irish courts of petty session. There is no middle course for us between such disavowal and direct participation, for well was it said by Darwin,— "Hear, O ye nations, hear this truth sublime!
He who allows oppression shares the crime."

Blackwood's Magazine, January 1, 1844.

An article on "The Position and Prospects of the Government," in the last number of this once-popular periodical, affords such gratifying evidence of the progress of the League, that we cannot allow it to pass without notice. Nothing more clearly proves the advance of a cause than the perplexity of its adversaries, and the inconsistency of the attempts made to explain phenomena which can neither be denied nor evaded; and on two memorable occasions "Blackwood's Magazine" heralded the approaching triumph of two great principles of justice—Catholic Emancipation and Parliamentary Reform—by the absurdity of the assurances it gave to show that the defeat of both was inevitable. It is only when the cause of Monopoly becomes desperate that recourse is had to the assistance of "the double-faced Janus, who lies with both his tongues;" inconsistency, self-contradiction, glaring falsehood, and sheer absurdity are adopted in the extremity of fear, and set forth with a trembling eagerness, such as always marks the utterer of forgeries. Justice requires us to state that those who supported the cause of Monopoly in Blackwood when Mr. Huskisson first assailed the protective system, exhibited literary powers which tended to conceal their utter ignorance of economic science; but, in the present instance, the advocate of Monopoly offends equally against good taste and common sense, and wars with Lindley Murray as fiercely as with Adam Smith.

In spite of all its political delinquencies, we have an affectionate remembrance of the literary merits of Blackwood—"stat magni nominis umbra;" it is far from pleasant to find such a respectable adversary dwindled down to a mere driveller, and to see that in his senility he has lost "the good memory" which proverbially ought to belong to that class of advocates in which Blackwood has long held a leading place. The writer of the article on "The Position and Prospects of the Government" is probably not one of the regular staff, but a volunteer advocate of Monopoly, with strong hopes of future pay; he certainly has not as yet benefited much by his drill, for he handles the weapons of literary warfare so awkwardly as to inflict several blows on himself, and threaten imminent danger to his associates.

He commences his assault on the League with the following assertions:—

"The Anti-Corn-Law League has in view a twofold object—the overthrow of the present Ministry, whom they abhor for their steadfast and powerful support of the agricultural interest; and the depression of the wages of labour, to enable our manufacturers (of whom the League almost exclusively consists) to compete with the manufacturers on the Continent. Their engine for effecting their purposes is the repeal of the Corn Laws; and they are working it with such a desperate energy as satisfies any disinterested observer that they themselves perceive the task to be all but utterly hopeless. They were confounded by the result of the general election, and dismayed at the accession to power of men whom they knew to be thoroughly acquainted with their true objects and intentions, and resolved to frustrate them, and able to carry their resolutions into effect."

The Anti-Corn-Law League, as everybody knows, was organised before Sir Robert Peel formed his Ministry, and therefore could not have been intended to overthrow a non-existing Cabinet; as a League, it has never set itself against the men of the present Ministry, and it has only opposed such of their measure as were demonstrably ruinous to the commerce of the country. There are no members of the Council of the League who have taken up politics as a profession, and arrayed themselves under the banners of a purely parliamentary party; and no one knows better than Sir Robert Peel that the Leaguers are indifferent to the mere strife between Whig and Tory, for it is this very circumstance which prevents him from conquering the League by the strength of his parliamentary majority.

The Leaguers are not actuated by a desire to perform impossibilities; they know that the rate of wages can neither be fixed by them nor by their workmen, but must depend solely on the relations between demand and supply in the labour-market. After the fallacy respecting wages had been so often and so decisively exposed, we scarcely expected to find such stupidity or such hardihood as would set it forward again; but, when folly and self-interest are combined, we must be prepared to encounter repetitions of absurdity, and sometimes to weary our readers by repeating its refutation. We deny that a repeal of the Corn Laws would lower wages, and we further deny it to be the interest of the manufacturers that wages should be lowered. In the great staple productions of the north of England, wages form but a small proportion of the cost of production, the greater part of the labour being performed by machinery; if the restrictive system continues for a few years longer to work out its pernicious consequences, it is easy to foresee a time when all our mill-owners and manufacturers will be unable to meet foreign competition, even if all the operatives worked for nothing. The complaint against the Corn Laws is not that they increase the cost of production, but that they prevent the sale of the goods, when produced, by prohibiting our manufacturers from taking the only payment which our best customers have to offer. Instead of making one intelligible exchange with his customer, the English manufacturer must go through a roundabout series of exchanges before he can get back the value of his goods; and he must, therefore, charge such a price for his articles as will cover the risk and expense of the several complicated transactions which legislative interference has placed between the actual sale of his goods and the final reception of payment.

Manufacturers know that the lowering of the price of food, so far from lowering the rate of wages, has the very contrary tendency; and for this simple reason:—the less that the families in England spend on food, the more have they to spare for clothing and articles of luxury; consequently, in a cheap year there is a greater demand for manufactured goods, and for the labour engaged in their production; and hence the rate of wages is greater now than it was at this period last year.

But the Blackwood Janus, having just declared that the League is a conspiracy to reduce wages, tells us, in the same breath, that the League organized a plot to raise the rate of wages. He declares it to be his firm belief that the League organized the late outbreak in Lancashire. Now, this outbreak was notoriously a turn-out to raise the rate of wages; while it lasted, the manufacturers whose mills were stopped were losing all the interest of their invested capital; and here is a man who professes to believe that they submitted to all this loss in order to enable the operatives to get more wages out of their own pockets! After such a flagrant profession of credulity it is scarcely worth while to turn to minor blunders. We may, however, add that the reduction of wages did not commence in Stockport; that Mr. Cobden, though a representative of that borough, has no establishment in that town, his print-works being at Chorley; and that the Chartist leaders of the outbreak, so far from being favourable to the League, rivalled Janus himself in their unscrupulous calumnies against that body generally, and its members individually.

Janus asserts, in the passage we have quoted, that the leaders of the League "perceive their task to be all but utterly hopeless;" he declares "the whole thing a failure;" he avers that "not a person of the least political or personal importance could be prevailed upon to join its ranks."—Earle Spencer and Fitzwilliam, Messrs. Jones Loyd, and Rand, &c., being, in the opinion of Janus, mere nobodies; but anon comes the refutation from the second tongue of Janus in the following cry of alarm:—

"It is impossible to assign limits to the mischief which may be effected by the indefatigable and systematic exertions of the League to diffuse pernicious misrepresentations, and artful and popular fallacies, among all classes of society. That they entertain a fearfully envenomed hatred of the agricultural interest, is clear; and their evident object is to render the landed proprietors of this country objects of fierce hatred to the inferior orders of the community. 'If a man tells me his story every morning of my life, by the year's end he will be my master,' said Burke, 'and I shall believe him, however untrue and improbable his story may be;' and if, whilst the Anti-Corn Law League can display such perseverance, determination, and system, its opponents obstinately remain supine and silent, can any one wonder if such progress be not made by the League, in their demoralizing and revolutionary enterprise, that it will soon be too late to attempt even to arrest it?"

With similar inconsistency he denounces the League as an unconstitutional and illegal confederacy, while in the next breath he invites what he is pleased to call "the agricultural interest" to form similar associations, declaring, if they do not,

"Why, then will be verified the observation of Burke, that 'if, when bad men combine, the good do not associate, they will fall, one by one—an unplied sacrifice in a contemptible struggle.' Vast as are our forces, they can effect comparatively nothing without union, energy, and system: with these, their power is tremendous and irresistible. What we would say, therefore, is—ORGANISE! ORGANISE! ORGANISE!"

Our readers are aware that the experiment has been made by some monopolists in Essex, but the progress of the proposed association since the subscription of the first fifty pounds has not been recorded. In fact, the farmers and agricultural labourers of England have found out the monstrous fallacy implied in the ordinary use of the phrase, "agricultural interest;" they have learned that landowners are no more agriculturists than ship-owners are sailors. The trick of representing the "landed interest" as identical with the "agricultural interest" is too palpable to serve longer. Byron's description of the "landed interest" is received as authentic, from Caithness to Cornwall:—

"The landed interest (you may understand)
The phrase much better, leaving out the land;
The land self-interest grows from shore to shore,
For fear that plenty should attain the poor."

Passing from the self-contradictions of the Blackwood Janus to his excursions in romantic episode, we find him asserting that the deputies of the League did not visit the agriculturists until they had failed to make an impression on the mercantile community. The progress of the subscription to the League Fund is a sufficient evidence of the nature of this failure. On this subscription he makes a remark which deserves a passing notice:—

"Many thousands were subscribed at an hour's notice by a mere handful of manufacturers; the news came up to London—and the editor of the Times, in a transient fit of excitement, pronounced 'the existence of the League' to be a GREAT FACT. Upon this phrase they have lived ever since—till somewhat roughly reminded the other day, by Mr. Baring, that 'great facts' are very 'great follies'."

So far is it from being true that the League has lived on the announcement of the "great fact" in the Times, that the present wrath of that journal against the leaders of the Free-Trade movement is chiefly attributable to the perfect indifference with which its recognition of "the great fact" was received by the League. To men of Mr. Baring's mental and moral calibre we doubt not that "great facts" may appear "great follies;" he may possibly prefer great falsehoods, as being better calculated to advance the cause of Monopoly; but he is to be pitied when he finds his friends rescuing his most stupid phrases from oblivion, and aiding that demotion of himself in which he indulges whenever he is so incautious as to appear before the public.

We are sometimes surprised to see how small a stock of fallacies and falsehoods serves for the whole array of scribbles in the Monopolist press. No sooner does the Times or Standard set forth some of Mr. Ferrand's ingenious devices, than the stories go the regular round of the Monopolist journals, whether daily, weekly, monthly, or quarterly, and no regard is paid to the decisive refutation which each tale is sure to receive the day that it appears. This disgusting repetition of disgusting falsehood, more common now than it was in the days of Pope, cannot be better portrayed than in the coarse imagery employed by the poet:—

"One to the other still affords supply,
As hog to hog in huts of Westphaly;
If one, through Nature's bounty or his lord's,
Has what the frugal dirty soil affords,
From him the next receives it thick or thin,
As pure a mess almost as it came in;
The blessed benefit, not there confin'd,
Drops to the next, who nuzzles close behind;
From tail to mouth, they feed and they carouse,
The last full, fairly gives it to the house."

ROMANCE AND REALITY.

The following imaginative picture—imaginary as regards the majority—of an English yeoman, from the pen of Wm. Howitt, contrasts most painfully with the real state of too many of our "specially protected" agriculturists:—

"THE ENGLISH YEOMAN.—There is no class of men, if times are but tolerably good, that enjoy themselves so highly as farmers. They are little kings, their concerns are not huddled into a corner, as those of the town tradesmen are. In town, many a man who turns thousands of pounds per week, is hemmed in close by buildings, and cuts no figure at all. A narrow shop, a contracted warehouse, without a yard of room besides to turn in, on any hand, without a yard, stable, or outhouse of any description, perhaps hoisted aloft up three or four dirty pair of stairs, is all the room the wealthy tradesman often can bless himself with; and there, day after day, month after month, year after year, he is to be found, like a rat in the hole of a wall, or a bad in the heart of a stone or of an oak tree. Spring and summer and autumn go round, sunshine and flowers spread over the world, the sweet breezes blow, the sweetest waters murmur along the valleys; but they are all lost upon him; he is the doleful prisoner of Mammon, and so he lives and dies. The farmer would not take the wealth of the world on such terms: his concerns, however small, spread themselves out in a pleasant amplitude, both to his eye and heart; his house stands in its own stately solitude; his office and outhouses stand round extensively, without any stabilizing and limiting contraction; his acres stretch over hill and vale; there his flocks and herds are feeding, there his labourers are toiling; he is the king and sole commander there; he lives among the purest air and most delicious quiet. Often when I see those healthy, hardy, full-grown sons of toll going out of town, I envy them the freshness and repose of the spots where they are going to. A simple old-fashioned kitchen, with their chimney-overs of true projecting-beamed and seated construction still remaining; blazing free in winter, shining on suspended hams and ditches. Guns supported on hooks above, dogs basking on the earth below. Cool shady parlours in summer, with open windows, and odours from garden and shrubbery blowing in. Gardens wet with purest dews, and humming at noon with bees; and the green fields and verdurous trees, or deep woodlands, lying all around, where a hundred rejoicing voices of birds or other creatures are heard, and winds blowing to and fro, full of health and life and enjoyment. How enviable do such places seem to the fretted spirits of the towns, who are compelled not only to bear their burdens of cares, but to enter daily into the public strife against selfish, evil, and ever-spreading corruption!"—Howitt's Book of the Seasons.

Such is the romance of an agricultural life; but what is in too many instances the reality?

The English yeoman, the tenant-farmer, has taken his farm upon the expectation of obtaining the prices for his grain which the landlord, his agent, and the statute law of the land, conjointly, promise him; he has entered into strict engagements to cultivate upon a plan, good fifty years ago, perhaps, but now ridiculous; and he holds only from year to year. He has a quantity of land, somewhat larger than his capital would warrant, because he relies upon growing a large breadth of corn, which he has been led to believe will sell at a high—an artificially high—price, and therefore he does not keep much stock; cattle consume too much of his produce, which he wants to sell quickly to meet his rent, besides, they are troublesome, and are several years before they can be profitably turned into money; ploughing and sowing are simple processes, and do not occasion much outlay; and though he has, perhaps, obtained prices approaching to those on which he calculated, yet he finds that, somehow or other, the rent takes a very great share of the proceeds.

Then his landlord "he too fond of a game; those varmint, hares and rabbits, do eat a terrible sight of wheat every year." He dare not complain, for his rent is in arrear, and all the capital he had in the world is sunk in the land. His landlord may sell him up, any day. He has hard work to find enough money to keep his tradesmen quiet, whose accounts are year by year getting heavier and heavier. He is in constant dread lest any creditor should proceed against him, for then his landlord would distraint for rent, and the workhouse or a goal is before him. His fields are wet, and want draining; his ditches are unsecured; his land but imperfectly tilled; he employs as few labourers as possible. He would gladly remedy all this, for he knows what it must come to; but the rent! the rent sweeps away everything. Then, as if in mockery, his landlord goes to the Agricultural Society, and tells him and his fellow-farmers they must be enterprising; they must drain, they must expend more capital, buy more manures, implements, stock; but where is the money to come from? And echo answers, where? As the Somersetshire farmer said, "Farmers had been too much drained themselves to allow of their laying out money in draining." Then comes a fall in prices. Monopoly cannot "protect" him therefrom, and the unhappy farmer becomes a victim on the altar of landlord prejudice and cupidity. This is the reality of the "freshness and repose" of too many of the homes of English farmers. This is a picture of the English yeoman, far more true than our friend Howitt's. Would it were otherwise. We would gladly emancipate husbandry and the husbandman from the thralldom he now endures, and this can never be effected until the Corn Laws are repealed. Oh, how often do we look over some of the smiling vales of this country, and sigh over the happiness which might exist there but for the selfishness of aristocratic legislation! Why is not rural industry allowed fair play?

THE FUNDS.

| | Mar. Dec. 30 | Mon. Jan. 1 | Tues. Jan. 2 | Wed. Jan. 3 | Thurs. Jan. 4 | Fri. Jan. 5 |
|-------------------------|--------------|-------------|--------------|-------------|---------------|-------------|
| Bank Stock | 165 | 165 | 165 | 165 | 165 | 165 |
| 3 per Ct. Red. Ann. | 97 | 97 | 97 | 97 | 97 | 97 |
| 3 per Ct. Ann. 1848 | 103 | 103 | 103 | 103 | 103 | 103 |
| J. An. Ex. Jn. 1860 | 12 11 16 | 12 11 16 | 12 11 16 | 12 11 16 | 12 11 16 | 12 11 16 |
| Cons. for Op. 1860 | 96 | 96 | 96 | 96 | 96 | 96 |
| Exchequer Billa. | 60 pm. | 60 pm. | 60 pm. | 60 pm. | 60 pm. | 60 pm. |
| U. Sea Ann. | 79 pm. | 78 80 pm. | — | 78 pm. | 78 80 pm. | 81 pm. |
| India Bonds | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| India Stock | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| Belgian 5 per Ct. | 103 4 | 103 4 | 103 4 | 103 4 | 103 4 | — |
| Brazilian 5 per Ct. | 71 | 71 | 71 | 71 | 71 | — |
| Chilian 5 p. Ct. | 101 | 101 | 101 | 101 | 100 1/2 | — |
| Columb. 5 p. Cent. | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| Danish | 86 1/2 | 87 | 87 | 87 | 87 | — |
| Dutch 5 per Cent. | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 1/2 | 100 | 100 1/2 |
| Dutch 2 1/2 per Ct. | 80 | 81 1/2 | 81 1/2 | 81 1/2 | 81 1/2 | 81 1/2 |
| Mexican | 3 1/2 | 3 1/2 | 3 1/2 | 3 1/2 | 3 1/2 | 3 1/2 |
| Portuguese, ex. d. | 40 | 41 | 43 1/2 | 44 | 44 1/2 | — |
| Russian 5 per Ct. | — | 117 | — | 116 1/2 | — | — |
| Spanish 3 p. Ct. ex. d. | 31 1/2 | 31 | 30 1/2 | 30 | 30 | 30 1/2 |
| Austrian | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| Piedmont | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| French 3 p. Cent. | — | — | — | — | — | — |

MARKETS.

CORN MARKET.

MARK LANE, Monday, Jan. 1.—The supply of English Wheat this morning was smaller than we have had for some weeks, and the condition being also improved, the best samples were soon taken off at an advance of 1s. from last week, and prices were firmly maintained for all other descriptions. There was a better demand for fine Foreign at fully late prices. Fine Malting Barley was 1s. dearer; in other sorts there was no alteration. Grey Peas were rather more valuable; White Peas and Old and New Beans the same as last week. There were very few Oats fresh up since Friday, and last week's prices were fully supported. S. H. LUGG and Son.

Account of CORN, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 25th to the 30th of Dec. 1843, both days inclusive.

| | Wheat. | Barley. | Oats. | Beans. | Peas. |
|----------|--------|---------|-------|--------|-------|
| English | 8382 | 8336 | 1838 | 1439 | 1305 |
| Scottish | 60 | 2609 | 1696 | — | — |
| Irish | — | 424 | 10481 | — | — |
| Foreign | 920 | 660 | 190 | 117 | 26 |

Flour, 6771 sacks. Malt, 6228 qrs.

Currency per imperial measure.

| | Wheat, English, White | Peas, Grey | 30 to 22 1/2 |
|------------------|-----------------------|-------------------------|--------------|
| —, New | 46s to 60s | —, Maple | 38s — 38s |
| —, Do., Old | 60s — 64s | —, Malt, Pale Suffolk | — |
| —, Do. Red, New | 42s — 55s | —, Norfolk | 54s — 57s |
| —, Do. do., Old | 50s — 61s | —, Ch. Valley | 60s — 68s |
| —, Dantzic | 57s — 63s | —, Oats, English Feed | 20s — 22s |
| —, Stettin | 50s — 57s | —, Do. Short | 21s — 23s |
| Barley, Malting | 32s — 34s | —, Scotch Feed | 21s — 23s |
| —, Distilling | 30s — 32s | —, Do. Potatoes | 22s — 26s |
| —, Grinding | 28s — 30s | —, Irish Feed | 17s — 18s |
| Beans, Tick, New | 26s — 28s | —, Do. Short | 19s — 20s |
| —, Do., Old | 28s — 30s | —, Do. do., New | 19s — 21s |
| —, Harrow, New | 28s — 30s | —, Do. Black | 17s — 18s |
| —, Do., Old | 30s — 32s | —, Do. Galway | 16s — 17s |
| —, Pigeon, New | 30s — 32s | —, Flour, town made and | — |
| —, Do., Old | 30s — 32s | —, best country marks | 45s — 50s |
| Peas, White | 31s — 32s | —, Norfolk and Suff. | — |
| —, Do., Boliers | 34s — 36s | —, folk | 40s — 42s |

MARK-LANE, Friday, Jan. 5.—There is a small quantity of English Wheat fresh up since Monday, and the prices of that day are readily obtained. Foreign Wheat is held firmly at former rates, but there is scarcely so much doing in it as on Wednesday and Monday. Barley of all kinds is fully as dear. Malt is 1s. to 2s. higher. There is a pretty good supply of English and Scotch Oats, with a very short one of Irish. The trade is not brisk, but an advance of 6s. per qr. is easily obtained on all descriptions. No alteration in Beans and Peas.

S. H. LUCAS and SON.

Account of Corn, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 30th of Dec. 1843, to the 5th of Jan. 1844, both inclusive.

| | English. | Irish. | Foreign. |
|-------------|----------|--------|----------|
| Wheat..... | 2680 | — | 410 |
| Barley..... | 10830 | — | — |
| Oats..... | 5080 | 2130 | — |

Flour 4580 sacks.

A WEEKLY REPORT of the NUMBER of QUARTERS, and the AVERAGE PRICE of CORN and GRAIN, sold in the several Counties of England and Wales (comprising the Two Hundred and Ninety Towns named in the Act of the 5th Vic., cap. 14), which governs Duty.

WEEK ENDED DECEMBER 30, 1843.

| | WHEAT. | BARLEY. | OATS. | BEANS. |
|----------------------|------------|--------------|-------------|------------|
| | Qrs. sold. | Qrs. sold. | Qrs. sold. | Qrs. sold. |
| Weekly Averages.. | 99,643 49 | 9,120,044 32 | 3,39,209 18 | 9,620 30 |
| Aggregate Averages.. | 50 8 | 32 0 | 18 8 | 31 5 |
| Duty..... | 20 0 | 6 0 | 8 0 | 10 6 |

LONDON AVERAGES for the Week ending Jan. 2, 1844.

| | Qrs. | Price. | Qrs. | Price. |
|----------|-------|----------|----------|---------------|
| Wheat.. | 4190 | 51s. 1d. | Rye .. | 5 30s. 0d. |
| Barley.. | 8202 | 34s. 2d. | Beans .. | 1493 28s. 6d. |
| Oats .. | 18601 | 19s. 4d. | Peas .. | 1376 30s. 7d. |

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 2.

BANKRUPTS.

J. WHEATLEY, Kennington-cross, Lambeth, livery stable keeper. [Harper, Kennington-cross.
R. STEVENS, New-cut, Lambeth, dealer in china. [Turner and Hensman, Basing-lane.
H. F. TURNER, Myddelton-street, Clerkenwell, painted baize manufacturer. [Taylor and Co., Great James-street.
D. NICHOLSON, Liverpool, hatter. [Hime, Liverpool.
W. WOOD and H. PORT, Burton-upon-Trent, Staffordshire, screw manufacturers. [Richardson, Burton-upon-Trent.
J. BAYLIS, Deritend, Warwickshire, victualler. [Chilton and Co., Chancery-lane; Benson, Birmingham.
B. SMITH, Tipton, Staffordshire, grocer. [Motteram and Giddy, Birmingham.
G. HOLDSWORTH, Northwram, Yorkshire, worsted spinner. [Emmett and Allen, Bloomsbury-square; Alexander, Halifax; Courtenay, Leeds.

DIVIDENDS.

Jan. 23. J. B. Ricketts, Leadenhall street, merchant.—Jan. 31. J. Warburton, Liverpool, tailor.—Jan. 26. R. S. Colpitts, New-castle-upon-Tyne, grocer.—Jan. 26. J. B. Pow, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, ship and insurance broker.—Jan. 23. W. Thompson, Monkwearmouth Shore, Durham, shipbuilder.—Jan. 24. G. Allison, Darlington, Durham, scrivener.—Jan. 24. W. Looney, Whitehaven, Cumberland, cooper.

CERTIFICATES.

Jan. 24. W. Dickinson, Bexley, Kent, merchant.—Jan. 23. J. Nutter, Cambridge, miller.—Jan. 25. T. Coleman, St. Alban's, licensed victualler.—Jan. 25. T. Baker, Camberwell, carpenter.—Jan. 23. D. Ammonier, Wigmore-street, Cavendish-square, jeweller.—Jan. 27. J. Ward.—Jan. 23. A. Gordon and Co., Manchester, machine makers.—Jan. 23. T. W. Horder, Penchurch-street, chemist.—Jan. 23. R. Hodgson, Sunderland, tea dealer.

SCOTCH SEQUESTERATIONS.

R. EWING, Large, Ayrshire, wright and joiner.—T. FINLAYSON, Tain, maltster and brewer.—W. PATERSON and CO., Kelly Bleachfield, Arbroath, bleachers.—F. ROBERTSON, Dundee, merchant.—W. D. LAPRAIK, Glasgow, wright and builder.—R. and D. FERGUSON, Dundee, sail makers.

FRIDAY, JAN. 5.

DECLARATION OF INSOLVENCY.

W. BEARUP, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, builder.
BANKRUPTS.
W. FULLER, Cotton-street, Poplar, coal merchant. [Turner, Mount-place, Whitechapel-road.
J. M. E. STOKES, St. Alban's, Hertfordshire, coal merchant. [Stevens, Wilkinson, and Satchell, Queen-street, Cheapside.
T. SANDERS, Kent, shoemaker. [Venning, Naylor, and Robbins, Tokenhouse-yard.
W. P. M. CROFT, Great Windmill-street, Middlesex, victualler. [Helder, Clements-lane.
J. WALKER, Wheaton Aston, Staffordshire, machine maker. [Turner or Smith, Birmingham.
F. PETERS, Manchester, wine merchant. [Bennett, Manchester.
G. NEWTON, Seaham-harbour, Durham, hosiery. [Chater, Newcastle-upon-Tyne; Forster, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.
M. COOKE, Evesham, Worcester-shire, hotel keeper. [Cheek, Evesham.

VICTORIA LIFE ASSURANCE and LOAN COMPANY, No. 18, King William-street, City.

Mr. James Duke, Alderman, M.P.; Benj. Hawes, Esq., Deputy Chairman.
Benj. Bernard, Esq., Charles Baldwin, Esq.
Particular advantages are offered by this Company. Thus—Parties assuring the lives of others may make their policies secure, notwithstanding the life assured may go out of the limits of Europe, without the necessary permission of the Directors having been previously obtained. Credit of half the premiums for the first five years allowed on policies effected for the whole term of life. Assurances may be effected with or without profits—on an ascending or descending scale, or for short periods. Advances made to Assurers on real or undoubted personal security, for terms of years, repayable by instalments. Attention is particularly requested to the detailed prospectuses of the Company, which may be obtained at the Office, 18, King William-street, City, or by letter, addressed to the Secretary.

WILLIAM RATNAV, Actuary and Secretary.

WORTHY OF REMARK.—The fact that many of the principal Hospitals in the kingdom—among which it is sufficient to name Guy's, St. George's, and the Westminster, in the metropolis, and the Manchester, Bristol, and Brighton Infirmaries—have adopted BOTT'S PATENT BRANDY, in preference to Foreign, affords a sufficient guarantee to the consumers of Brandy of the extreme purity of the article; the connoisseur being, at the same time, baffled in his attempt to distinguish between its flavour and that of fine Cognac.—Price, pale or coloured, in quantities not less than Two Gallons, Eighteen Shillings per Gallon, at the Distillery, No. 7, Smithfield-barr, leading to St. John-street.

BIOKRENE, or FOUNTAIN of LIFE.—This invaluable Medicine proves efficacious in removing all Scrofulous and Acrochutic Diseases. It attacks the cause of all eruptions on the skin; it purifies and nourishes the blood, invigorates the digestive organs, and effects an entire cure of Scrofula and Scary in all the forms which these diseases assume.

This medicine is free from those mineral preparations which cannot be taken without injury to the constitution. Its action on the system is remarkably mild and gentle, and will not interfere with the patient's ordinary pursuits. See a pamphlet entitled "Health and Comfort to the afflicted," which may be had gratis, of Mr. William Bailey, North-street, Wolverhampton, and also by all other vendors of Biokrene; which is sold by Sutton and Co., Bow Church-yard; Edwards, St. Paul's Church-yard; Hauney and Co., Oxford-street; and by all Druggists and Medicine Vendors. Bottles, 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s.

MEMBERS of the NATIONAL ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE, residing in the Country, can be supplied with the MORNING CHRONICLE, clean and regular, for 14s. per quarter; "Evening Star" or "Globe," 12s. 6d. per quarter; sent by post to any part of the kingdom free of extra charge. Orders, pre-paid, to E. HALL, News Agent, 225, Strand. Agent for THE LEAGUE, &c.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN REVIEW, No. XXXII.

Contents:—
1. Criticism and Criticism in France.
2. Arnold's Lectures.—The Church and State.
3. Musical Antiquarian Society.—English Madrigals.
4. The Principles of Tariffs applied.
5. The French in Spain.—Secret Policy of Louis XIV.
6. The Oxford Controversy.—Anglo-Catholicism.
7. The Oregon Territory.
8. Laing's Notes of a Traveller.
9. Ireland.—Repeal of the Union.
10. Note on the Law of Debtor and Creditor.
11. Postscript on the Oregon Territory Question.—The President's Message.
London: E. and J. E. Taylor, Red Lion-court, Fleet-street.

CRIMES of the FACTORY MASTERS

Investigated, as charged by the "Standard" and "Times."
History and Mystery of Assassination—Firing of Factories—The Practice of Shooting behind the Back—The Practice of Lying before the Face—The Factory Strikes—The Instructions of Mill-burners—"Great Facts" of Great Men: John Walter, Joseph Rayner Stephens, Doctor Gifford, Joshua Hobson, Busfield Ferrand, and Daniel McNaughten.
Published this day by William Allen, No. 1, Catherine-street, Strand; and all booksellers.—Price Two-pence.

Now publishing by J. Livesey, Preston, and sold by Strange, London; Gadsby, Manchester; and all booksellers.

THE STRUGGLE, in Weekly Numbers, each embellished with splendid Woodcuts, price One Halfpenny. The Anti Corn-Law Associates that want a suitable paper for circulating among the working classes, would do well to purchase the STRUGGLE.

THE ANTI-CORN-LAW PICTORIAL ALMANAC, price 1d.—The usual allowance to the trade. All kinds of Wood Engraving done at the Braueren office, on reasonable terms and at the shortest notice.

Now ready. Second Edition, price 4s. 6d.

THE PAPAL and HIERARCHICAL SYSTEM

compared with the RELIGION of the NEW TESTAMENT.
"A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land; the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means, and my people love to have it so, and what will ye do in the end thereof?"—Jer. v. 30, 31.
"So clear and scriptural are the views put forth, and so truly Protestant, that the Author in writing and publishing the work has conferred an inestimable benefit, and at a most seasonable time, upon the Christian church."—Evangelical Magazine, Aug. 1843.
"A reasonable and able discussion of a subject which will, ere long, command the rapt attention of the civilized world."—Nonconformist, Sept. 1843.
Just published, price One Shilling.

HYDROPATHY DEFENDED BY FACTS; or, the COLD WATER CURE shown to be as safe in Practice as it is rational in Theory. By A. COVATREY, surgeon, R.N., Ramsgate.

CHAP. EDITIONS OF DYMOND'S ESSAYS.
Complete in 1 vol. at 3s. 6d., originally published in 2 vols. at 21s. The Seventh Thousand of this Edition.

ESSAYS on the PRINCIPLES of MORALITY, and on the Private and Political Rights and Obligations of Mankind. By JONATHAN DYMOND, Author of "An Enquiry into the Accordancy of War with the Principles of Christianity," &c.
In this work will be found some clear views on the popular questions of the day—the Education of the People, and the Connexion between Church and State.
Price 1s.

ESSAY on the ACCORDANCY of WAR with the PRINCIPLES of CHRISTIANITY. By JONATHAN DYMOND.
"No one can hope to overthrow the reasoning of Dymond without denying the truth of the book (the Bible) from which he deduces his arguments."
Second Edition, with Additions and Corrections, price 4s. 6d.

THE WATER CURE. By E. S. ABBY, A.M., Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge, and Author of "A Journal, &c., in the United States."

"Mr. Abby is already favourably known to the public as an author, and his present able work may be safely recommended as containing the best exposition of the principles of Hydrotherapy, as well as an interesting and convincing statement of facts."
London: Charles Gilpin, 5, Bishopsgate Without.

IN A SELECT ESTABLISHMENT for YOUNG

LADIES a Vacancy occurs for Two or Three Pupils on advantageous terms. The situation is healthy, and the morals and general improvement of the Pupils are attended to with every care. An articled pupil is required. Letters, free, to M. M., 2, Elizabeth-place, Hall's Pond-road, Islington.

CABINET FURNITURE, CARPETS, and

UPHOLSTERY.—THOMAS PAUL and CO. inform the nobility and gentlemen furnishing, that their CABINET STOCK comprises every kind of furniture, calculated for any description of residence, from the cottage to the mansion, and will be found 50 per cent. cheaper than at any other house in London. Independently of the great saving, every article is manufactured of the most accurate and sound materials, so that parties furnishing (even for a foreign climate) are secure either from complaint or defective wear. A large number of interesting articles, together with the most ample warranty given where required. Their stock of Brussels carpets consists of a splendid variety, commencing at the extraordinarily low price of 2s. 6d. per yard, and those of new and elegant designs from 3s. per yard. THOMAS PAUL and CO., cabinetmakers, upholsterers, and carpet manufacturers, opposite the Mansion House, City.

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED WITHOUT

SPRINGS, CLASPS, or WIRES, LOOSE TEETH FASTENED, and FILLING DECAYED TEETH with MINERAL MARMORATUM.
MONS. LE DRAY and SON, Surgeon Dentists, 42, BERNERS-STREET, OXFORD STREET, continue to restore DECAYED TEETH with their celebrated MINERAL MARMORATUM, applied without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing and curing the toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary. Incurable, artificial, or natural teeth fixed, from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, at the following Paris charges:—
A Single Tooth £0 10 0
A Set 5 5 0

Arranged on the most approved principles, and restoring perfect articulation and mastication. At home from 10 till 6.—N.B. Removed from 60, NEWMAN-STREET, to 42, BERNERS-STREET, OXFORD-STREET.

A BRONZE SCROLL FENDER for 15s.—

RIPPON and BURTON are now offering the most extensive assortment of FENDERS in London, embracing every possible variety, at prices 30 per cent. under any other house. Iron fenders, 3 feet long, from 4s. 6d.; 3 feet 6, 5s. 3d.; 4 feet, 6s.; ditto, 3 feet, from 6s.; 3 feet 6, 7s.; 4 feet, 8s.; rich scroll fenders, from 15s.; or with steel rod and moulding, from 21s.; polished steel and ornate mounted fenders at proportionate prices. Fire-irons for chambers, 1s. 9d. per set; ditto steel ditto from 3s. 6d.; handsome ditto, with cut heads, 6s. 6d.; newest patterns, with elegant bronzed heads, 11s. 6d.—Detailed catalogues, with engravings, sent (per post) free.

THE ONLY SAFE and HEALTHY STOVES.

THE PATENT CHUNK and VESTA STOVES are the only ones recommended by the faculty for the bedrooms of invalids, and other places where a genial warmth is requisite. They are without doors, from which, in Arnold's (whether improved or not) and all others, the impure gases escape; consequently, the evils attendant upon such escapes, as headache, dizziness, &c., as well as fatal explosions, cannot occur in the use of them. These stoves having stood the test of five years, during which time upwards of five thousand have been fixed in chapels, shops, halls, forcing pits, nurseries, &c., they are most confidently offered to the public. They have been found to combine, in an extraordinary degree, great simplicity of use and certainty of action, with perfect safety, at an almost incredible small cost for fuel (coke or cluders). Chunk, 60s. each; Vesta, 80s. each.
THE PYRAGON STOVE (also a patent) has most of the advantages of the Chunk and Vesta, with the extremely novel one of showing the fire (as in a register stove) in one moment; it is eminently a ventilating stove, and will be found invaluable where any prejudice exists against a close stove; price 60s. Full particulars, with engravings and testimonials, post free.

THE PERFECT SUBSTITUTE for SILVER.

The material RIPPON and BURTON offer to the public has for the last eight years been found equal to silver in appearance and sweetness, and superior to it in durability. Of the prices of tea-sets, waiters, candlesticks, and all articles hitherto made in silver, a detailed catalogue, with engravings, will be sent (gratis) post-free.

| | Fiddle | Threaded | VICTORIA |
|--|----------|----------|----------|
| Table Spoons and Forks, full size, per dozen | 12s. 0d. | 28s. 0d. | 30s. 0d. |
| Desert ditto and ditto, ditto | 10s. 0d. | 21s. 0d. | 23s. 0d. |
| Tea ditto and ditto, ditto | 6s. 0d. | 11s. 0d. | 12s. 0d. |
| Gravy ditto | 3s. 0d. | 6s. 0d. | 7s. 0d. |

RIPPON and BURTON, 12, Wells-street, Oxford-street. Established 1829.—Catalogues gratis.

THE NEW LIGHT—A GREAT NOVELTY.

The patent CAMPHINE LAMP gives a light of surpassing purity, softness, and purity, without any kind of grease or dirt, smoke, or smell. The lamp is simply and beautifully constructed, and can be fitted to any description of lamp, pedestal, or gas fitting. It is not easily put out of condition. The Camphine (also a patent) is 4s. per gallon, and is as pure as if split on any article of dress or furniture will not leave either mark or stain, while it consumes so slowly that, at the cost of three farthings per hour, it gives a light equal to twelve mould candles, without any attention. It will be found far less expensive than any, and incomparably superior to all existing lights. To be seen burning at Rippon and Burton's (sold wholesale and retail agents for English's Patent Camphine), 12, Wells-street, Oxford-street.

LAMP OIL—EXTRAORDINARY and CHEAP

LAMPS.—SMITH and CO. invite the public inspection of the brilliant light produced by their highly RECTIFIED OIL, 4s. 6d. per gallon. This Oil is the only real substitute for sperm in every kind of lamp without alteration; and, as it burns much longer, it reduces the cost of light half one-half. No attempt will be made to solicit orders. The stock of Table Lamps, Candle Lamps, &c., will be sold off at about half the usual price. Central Depot, opposite Norfolk-street, Strand. Note the address, as Smith and Co.'s Oil cannot be obtained elsewhere.—N.B. Special agency for the celebrated PARISIAN DETERGENTS, the instant restorer of the original splendour of soiled or faded GILDING, ORMOLOU, and LAQUEUR. Price, per gold 2s. 6d., laquer 1s. 6d. per bottle. Letters have immediate attention.

HENRY PENNY'S PATENT METALLIC

MEMORANDUM BOOKS, ruled or plain, in great variety of sizes and bindings. The advantages of this invention are, that, with pencil and paper prepared in a peculiar manner, the writer obtains all the effect of ink. The paper presents a beautiful glossy surface, over which the pencil glides without any difficulty, and the marks made by it are indelible. To be had at the Manufactory, 8, and 9, OLD BAILEY, LONDON, and of all the principal Stationers in town and country. The trade supplied direct, or through any wholesale stationer.

CAUTION.—In order to protect the public from imitations, the name, "H. Penny's Improved Patent," with the number of the book, is marked on the back of each.

THE AMERICAN ROCKING-CHAIR, so much admired by all who have visited America, for the remarkable ease, pleasure, and comfort which it affords, is just imported, and for Sale at the extensive Carpet and Upholstery Establishments of LUCK, KENT, and CUMMING, No. 4, Regent-street; Carpenters' Hall, 68, London-wall; and WM. CUMMING and Co., 98, Hatton-garden. It is asserted with confidence that there is no piece of furniture in use in civilized society more universally sought after and approved of when known, by all ranks, ages, and conditions of people, than the "American Rocking Chair." The price is £1 5s., the purchaser to be at liberty to return it if not approved within a week. When their excellence becomes known, few families will be without one, as they are suitable for all, and particularly stout persons and invalids.—A liberal discount to the trade.

COMFORT FOR TENDER FEET, &c.

Wellington-street, Strand, London.

HALL and CO., SOLE PATENTEES of the PANNUS CORIUM, or Leather-Cloth Boots and Shoes for Ladies and Gentlemen. These articles have borne the test and received the approbation of all who have worn them. Such as are troubled with Corns, Bunions, Gout, Chilblains, or Tenderness of Feet from any other cause, will find them the softest and most comfortable ever invented. Hall and Co. particularly invite attention to their Elastic Boots, which are much approved by the superstitious lazar, or buttoning, are drawn on in an instant, and are a great support to the ankle.

The Patent India-rubber Goloshes are light, durable, elastic, and waterproof; they thoroughly protect the feet from damp or cold.

Hall and Co.'s Portable Waterproof Dresses, Ladies' Cardinal Cloaks with Hoods, 18s. Gentlemen's Dresses, comprising Caps, Overalls, and Hood, 21s. The whole can be carried with convenience in the pocket.

PATRONIZED and SANCTIONED by HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN, H.R.H. PRINCE ALBERT, THE ROYAL FAMILY, and THE SEVERAL COURTS of EUROPE.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the Growth and for Preserving and Beautifying the Human Hair. Price 3s. 6d.—7s. Family Bottles (equal to 4 small) 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s.

CAUTION.—SPURIOUS IMITATIONS are frequently offered for sale under a FICTITIOUS name, or the word "GENINE." It is therefore imperative on purchasers to see that the words "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" are on the Wrapper of each bottle, and on the back of the wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 39,028 letters. All others are FALSE DULCET COUNTERFEITS. The principle on which "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" is prepared, is confined solely to the knowledge and practice of A. ROWLAND and SON, who are still at an immense expense in completing its preparation, and the amalgamation of its PURELY VEGETABLE MATERIALS renders abortive any attempt to discover its component parts.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for Improving and Beautifying the Skin and Complexion. Price 4s. 6d. and 6s. 6d. per bottle, duty included.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, renders the Teeth beautifully White and preserves the Gums. Price 2s. 9d. per box, duty included.

CAUTION.—It is imperative on purchasers to see that the word "ROWLAND'S" is on the Wrapper of each article. For the protection of the Public from fraud and imposition, the Honourable Commissioners of Her Majesty's Stamps have authorized the Proprietors' Signature to be engraved on the Government Stamp, thus, A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden, which is affixed to the Kalydor and Odonto. Sold by them and by Chemists and Perfumers.

* * All others are SPURIOUS IMITATIONS!!!

LOWDEN'S CELEBRATED COUGH PILLS,

a safe and effectual cure for Coughs, Colds, Shortness of Breath, Asthma, &c. &c. They promote free expectoration, and hence prevent that accumulation of phlegm which causes a sense of choking; allay irritability, tickling in the throat, and relieve that sense of oppression, fullness, and difficulty of breathing, which nightly deprives the patient of rest.

In Asthma and Coughs of long standing they are invaluable, and universally admitted to be the best known Medicine; in any case where they do not effect a perfect cure they afford such relief to the sufferer during the paroxysms or fits as to induce him henceforth never to be without them.

Sold by Mr. Lowden, Chemist, 206, Fleet-street, London, in boxes of 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; also by one or more respectable Medicine Vendors in each town in the United Kingdom.

BLAIR'S GOUT and RHEUMATIC PILLS.—

Further testimonials of the efficacy of this medicine.

TO MR. FROST, 229, STRAND, LONDON.

SIR,—I enclose three cases, in which the parties therein named have received great benefit from using BLAIR'S PILLS, and the truth of what I am at any time ready to make affidavit of if required. You are at perfect liberty to publish them if you think proper. Hoping this may induce the credulous to make a trial of the Pills, which will speedily convince them of their value,
I am, Sir, yours truly,
JOHN J. GILES.

DEAR SIR,—Upon your recommendation I sent for a box of BLAIR'S RHEUMATIC PILLS, and to my astonishment a few doses entirely removed the tormenting pains my wife had suffered so long, but having caught a severe cold the rheumatism again returned, when, having recourse to a few more Pills, it again fled, and has not since returned. The public are not generally aware of the efficacy of this truly valuable medicine, or how would suffer from rheumatism.

In consequence of witnessing the effects of the above medicine in my own family, I recommended Edward Bridger, now sixty-seven years of age, a labouring and jobbing gardener, to apply to you, he being much afflicted with rheumatism for twenty years; he could scarcely get any sleep, being always worse when in bed, and unable to walk without the assistance of a stick. You gave him some Pills. I saw him yesterday; he told me he could now get rest, which he had been unable to do for a very long time; he is still lame from the length of time he has been afflicted, but can now walk, without much inconvenience, ten or twelve miles in the day, and can, as he says, do any light work; he has applied to me for a job at home. It is distressing to see a fellow creature suffering such excruciating pain, and relief may be obtained by taking BLAIR'S GOUT and RHEUMATIC PILLS. I shall, for the benefit of those who may suffer, continue to recommend them.
I am, dear Sir, yours truly,
JOHN J. GILES.

To John J. Giles, Esq., Finsbury, Surrey.

DEAR GILES.—The effect of BLAIR'S PILLS has been verified; I could wish for, I had symptoms of the gout during Wednesday night; I took two Pills during the night, and two in the morning, when the pain moved the pain; and I was enabled to give a lecture at Harley-street on Thursday evening, although I was in fear that morning I should not have been enabled to leave home.
I am, dear Sir, yours truly,
Edw. J. LANE.

To J. J. Giles, Esq.
To the above gratifying communication the proprietor of BLAIR'S GOUT and RHEUMATIC PILLS considers any comment would be superfluous.
Sold by Thomas Frost, 229, Strand, London; and by the vendors of medicines throughout the United Kingdom.

London: Printed (at the office of Palmer and Clayton, Crane-street) by A. W. FAYE, of Barton-on-Irwell, Lancashire, and published by him at Ten Lincoln's-Inn, W.C., on Saturday, January 6, 1844.

THE LEAGUE.

No. 16.]

[SATURDAY, JANUARY 13, 1844.

[3d.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND, £100,000.

All subscribers of £1 and upwards to the ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUND FUND, will be entitled to, and receive a copy, weekly, of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have forwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the Office of THE LEAGUE, Newall's-buildings, Manchester, or 67, Fleet-street, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND, are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council respectfully request that their friends, in all places where committees for raising subscriptions to the £100,000 Fund have not been already formed, will proceed to their formation as soon as possible, and transmit their names to the LEAGUE OFFICES, Manchester.

FARMERS' ANTI-LEAGUE CLUBS.

The Farmers' Clubs, now formed or forming, in avowed hostility to the League, are much less calculated to excite alarm than to afford encouragement. If our facts be correct, and our inferences sound, Free Trade is the real interest of the farmer as well as of the tradesman and manufacturer. The meetings and discussions of the projected associations are not unlikely to bring that truth into light, and render its evidence clear to those who are now blindly banding themselves in opposition to its progress. A fair field and no favour is all the members of the League can possibly desire; seeing that, if the principle of Free Trade be indeed a pernicious fallacy, they are simply subscribing and exerting themselves both for their neighbours' injury and their own. This would be an extraordinary event in the history of commerce. Nor would the wonder be diminished by the circumstance that some of the largest landowners in the country are participants in the delusion. We invite the Anti-League Corresponding Societies (as it seems they are intended to be) to prove to the public that such is the fact. Their arguments shall be right heedfully canvassed, although, from the specimens produced, we think we have met with some of them before. Only let the farmers hear both sides; only let them bring the assertions of their spokesmen to the test of observation and experience; only let them not allow themselves to be made tools of, nor be done into an outcry now, as they were done out of their votes at the last general election, and we have no qualms whatever as to the result. They will be with us eventually: we know they will, for the sake of their rising families; for the sake of what remains to them of their wasted capital; and for the sake of an honest occupation, the profits of which are better guaranteed to them by thriving customers than they ever can be by the almsgiving of rent-abatement or the interference of parliamentary enactments.

But do not let them be angry. It will do them no good whatever. It is idle to talk of our wanting to "upset and ruin" British agriculture. The farmers should have rebuked such stuff by a horselaugh of derision, as they will when they have looked a little further into our principles. We are not the fools to kick our own loaves into the kennels. British bread must remain the meat and best of our food. We know that well enough, and to keep it so, we also know that its production must be a paying employment. The true question is, whether it can be made so by acts of Parliament. That is the controversy between us and the Anti-League orators. If it be possible, the right act of Parliament has never yet been discovered, for under every Corn Law there has been abundance of agricultural distress. But that is the point; and they had better stick to it than abuse a body with whose views such men as Earl Spencer, Marquis Westminster, and Earl Ducie, have identified themselves, for plotting the "upset and ruin of agriculture." Nor is it wise to scold us for being "un-Christian." What has Free Trade to do with infidelity? Or who can show a mission for preaching a gospel of Monopoly? This is professional scurrility, and travels out of the record. We read our Bibles; and are very sure that the advocates for artificially raising the price of food will not save their cause by making free with the contents of the sacred volume. The silliest thing of all is to talk of putting Mr. Cobden into the river. The Roman Catholics of the fifteenth century tried that plan with Wickliffe; but it did not succeed. He was dead first, but that makes little difference, except in the humanity of the suggestion. His principles and his ashes flowed together to every coast of Europe. Not all the water in Lincolnshire will drown Free Trade; and very cleansing must its quality be if it white-wash Mr. Chaplin, the "gentleman of high character and large fortune," as the Morning Post certifies, who seems, when he allowed his tongue so large a license, to have forgotten Sir Robert Peel's intense horror of provocatives to assassination. We really do not wish the farmers of England to make themselves ridiculous by applauding or listening to such sottises. Let them grapple with the subject in debate; let them show, if they can, their own interest in upholding the Corn Laws. We do not ask them to be benevolent or patriotic. We discharge them of all concern for our good, if they will but thoroughly sift the question as to its bearing on themselves. How many times has their capital doubled since 1815? What fortunes have been made by farming since 1827? To what extent have they profited by the two-year-old bill of Sir Robert Peel? "We pause for a reply." But, while we wait, let us have no more nonsense about pelting and ducking; it is not creditable to their taste, their spirit, or their intellects.

The Essex farmers are probably amongst the most thriving in the kingdom. And what say they of their occupation, such as it has been under the Corn Laws? According to the Rev. Mr. Smythers, at the Colchester meeting, Mr. Cobden has realized larger profits, in twelve years, with a capital of less than £5000 than have all the farmers of the county during the same period, with an aggregate capital of five millions. Now we know no more of Mr. Cobden's capital and profits than we presume the Rev. Mr. Smythers does; but his overcharged and random talk is something, as evidence, in relation to his hearers and neighbours. It shows what the Corn Law has been worth to them. The laws which keep down the twelve years' profit of five millions below £400,000 cannot be laws favourable to industry. There is no earthly reason why any set of people should cling to them, and deprecate their abolition as if it would bring heaven and earth to an end. If there be the shadow of fact in the rev. gentleman's assertions, for what a paltry result has all this mass of odium been incurred, and all this mass of wretchedness been inflicted. The wages of iniquity have not been paid; or, if they have, they have not gone into the farmers' pockets. They "need fear no fall." Free Trade could never have done worse than this for them. Their fancied risk in the experiment is reduced below the possibility of calculation.

To the statistics and arguments of Mr. Baker, the president of the Sussex Agricultural Society, we have attended in a separate article. Our present concern has been simply with the tone and spirit in which an Anti-League movement has been attempted. The hostility it professes, we do not reciprocate. Such outrageous imputations as those ascribed in the report of the Buckinghamshire meeting to a clergyman, we leave to the recoil of their own infamy. If these associations turn out to be mere tricks and jobs, we shall expose their false pretences. But if the farmers are in good faith laying their heads together, to ascertain how they may best secure their own interests, without injuring the rest of the community, why then we heartily wish them god-speed.

The members of the Gloucester Farmers' Club, at their late meeting, strangely blended a note of preparation for warfare against the League with a strong and general expression of the necessity of reduced rents, and also of a revision of the relations between landlord and tenant. Why, then, should they quarrel with us? We are not moving at right angles, but on parallel lines. If rents and leases can be adjusted so as to suit a new Corn Law, why not adjust them so as to accord with the abrogation of the Corn Law? They say, the present system will not work; and we say the same. They say, that prices are now too low; we reply that the fact shows that Corn Laws cannot keep up prices. They want greater security; no Corn Laws can give them any security against fluctuation. They are half-way on the road to Free-Trade principles, these Gloucester farmers. Flutter about in other directions, they may for awhile; seeking rest but finding none. The lasting adjustment of rent can only be to the natural and steady prices of a Free Trade. Taking leases will then be reduced to a reasonable calculation, which a prudent man can make beforehand. Till then, it is all a speculation: prices will run up and down, without respect to Parliamentary parchments or Premiers' promises. And, for the farmer, the only thing certain will be the total uncertainty of his condition and prospects.

We shall recur to these clubs as soon as they develop more distinctly the spirit and aims with which they are likely to be conducted.

MONOPOLIST TRAPS—RECIPROCITY.

Traps are set in every direction to catch unwary Free Traders, and it becomes as necessary to warn them of the dangers to which they are exposed as it is to warn unlawful trespassers to "beware of steel traps and spring guns."

The principles of Free Trade are so simple that he who runs may read; Sir James Graham has truly described them as "the principles of common sense," and it may be uniformly suspected, whenever it be attempted to mystify and render them puzzling to common minds, by dressing up impossible cases in high-sounding and unintelligible language, that it is intended by such means to conceal some fallacy, in the same way as the unmeaning gibberish of a juggler is intended to withdraw attention from his dexterous deceptions.

Sir Robert Peel sees the right although he practices the wrong; he tells us "it is our interest to buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest markets;" but when we claim the right to buy corn, provisions, timber, sugar, and coffee in the cheapest markets, we are told of the direful calamities which might befall the country were we allowed freely to trade in these articles, unless "upon an equitable system of reciprocity." Is it not strange that we never before heard from monopolist lips the necessity of this system? There was a time when the United States of America were very desirous of reciprocal trade; they wished to buy our manufactures and to sell us their corn. If reciprocity be good now, why was it not equally good then? Doubtless both countries would have benefited by this natural exchange of their respective productions. Who prevented reciprocity then? Hear what the British Minister at Washington in his despatch to Mr. Canning says on this subject. "I have only to add (says Mr. Addington), that, had no restrictions on the importation of foreign corn existed in Great Britain, the tariff would never have passed through either House of Congress, since the agricultural states, and especially Pennsylvania, would have been opposed to its enactment." Prussia, from the moment that peace was restored in 1815, urged us, like America, to take her produce in exchange for our manufactures; and even so late as 1823 the Prussian Minister, in his able note to the British Minister (which deserves to be written in letters of gold), urging a reciprocity treaty, says, "that reciprocal commercial restrictions were reciprocal nuisances, prejudicial to all nations having reciprocal interests, and particularly to those engaged in extensive commerce, and that the policy of Prussia was to substitute in the place of reciprocal prohibitions reciprocal facilities." At the very moment when this note was written the corn, timber, and wool* of Prussia were prohibited. We refused to make any change, and Prussia was forced to retaliate by prohibitory duties on our manufactures. Mark the result in the export of cotton manufactured goods alone. In 1820 the value was £2,969,493. In 1841, £945,290. Doubtless, reciprocity treaties, founded on the enlightened views expressed by the Prussian Minister, would have been mutually beneficial, but our corn and timber monopolists would not listen to them; nor should we hear a word about reciprocity now, but that barefaced monopoly can be no longer maintained, and some plan must be hit upon to disguise it by frightening merchants and manufacturers with the bugbear that monopoly will be a less evil than Free Trade without reciprocity. This is one of the monopolist traps set for unwary Free Traders, and we therefore hail the appearance of a pamphlet on "Reciprocity, by a Manufacturer," a Yorkshireman wide awake.

The writer undertakes to show:—

- I. The utter hopelessness of obtaining reciprocal tariffs from other countries, and the dangerous delay of waiting for them.
- II. The folly of placing our sole dependence upon the colonies.

* No foreign corn in 1823 could be imported until the average price reached 80s. per quarter. The duty on foreign wool was 6d. per lb.

III. That the aim of our commercial policy, viz., to force exports and exclude imports, is founded in error.

IV. The unwise prejudice against foreigners draining us of gold, and the false alarm of foreign rivals driving our manufactures out of our markets.

V. The unfavourable effect of customs upon commerce.

VI. The application of the reciprocity system to the home trade.

Twenty or thirty years ago we might have succeeded in obtaining reciprocal facilities of commercial intercourse; but to attempt it after having, by our perseverance in monopoly, provoked the hostility of foreign tariffs, is something like "shutting the stable door after the steed is stolen." "A manufacturer" justly observes:—

"Probably the British Government might have succeeded, immediately after the war, in obtaining modifications of foreign tariffs, on condition that concessions were mutual, and protection abandoned by both parties. At present our chance has gone by. The world at large attributes the wealth and power of England to her manufactures, and are attempting to follow her example. Regardless of the natural superiority which Great Britain possesses, in her insular position and her vast coal beds,—the growth of centuries, now the source of power,—foreigners imagine that they have only to acquire our machinery, to spy out our improvements, and to foster their own infant manufactures by legislative protection, in order to supply themselves with woven fabrics, if not to rival us in neutral markets. This mania for manufacturing pervades North Europe, France, Spain, and Portugal, and the United States. But their hotbed manufactures could not possibly compete with ours on equal terms, excepting certain branches which afford peculiar local advantages. It is in vain to expect that these kingdoms will expose their infant, pet fabrics to our full-grown competition on equal terms; but a treaty of reciprocity with a manufacturing country like ours could not exist on other terms—hence it is idle to think of negotiating with any would-be manufacturing nation. When all are wishing to sell the same description of goods, and none want to buy, what possibility is there of coming to an agreement?"

"Great Britain, to consult her proper dignity, should at once assume an independent position, and cease from that posture of commercial begging into which she has lately sunk. Nay, she is compelled to do so, for she finds herself unable to influence materially the tariffs of those nations she is most ambitious to deal with. It remains, therefore, for her to consider what is the course to pursue under the discouraging aspect of foreign rivalry, foreign protection, and foreign prohibition!"

He adds:—

"What shall we say to the miserable attempts at negotiating commercial treaties, which have lately exercised the diplomatic skill of our Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and his corps of ambassadors, consuls, attachés, &c.? Nothing can exceed their ludicrousness, but the humiliation they bring upon this country. Our very anxiety to negotiate treaties and obtain modifications of foreign tariffs causes jealous suspicions in the breast of the Government we want to deal with, that we are a set of sharpers, trying to overreach and arrogate to ourselves some peculiar advantages. The contracting party is led to infer that, by taking our manufactured goods, he confers a benefit only half requited by our churlish acceptance of his raw produce. Look at our present position with commercial nations. We have earnestly and deprecatingly begged of Prussia not to raise her duties upon certain descriptions of our goods, and to give the most favourable interpretation to the new tariff of the Zoll Verein. Repulsed in this quarter, we make an application to our favourite child, Portugal, whom we have nourished with our treasure, and protected with our blood,—for whom we have vitiated our palate, and cherished an exclusive taste for the medicated port and sherry, to the neglect of the more genuine wines of France or the Rhine. We allude to our ancient treaties of alliance, the Methuen treaty of commerce, and argue that we have a claim upon her for a market for our woollens in return for our imports of her wines. After months spent in making offers and refusing absurd proposals, whilst the hopes and fears of merchants and manufacturers are kept in a state of feverish suspense, all negotiations are abruptly broken off, in order to create a semi-monopoly for some half-dozen rude Portuguese fabrics, wherein a member of the Government is interested."

Our monopolist Ministry have, indeed, placed the country in a humiliating position. They have been trying their hand, also, with Brazil; and why have they not carried out their reciprocity notions with that country? Our treaty with Brazil expires this year. A more overreaching and disgraceful treaty never existed (some statesmen would call it a specimen of diplomatic skill); we took advantage of Brazil in a period of her distress, and stipulated that she should receive our manufactures at 15 per cent. duty, whilst we imposed on her sugar and coffee prohibitory duties amounting to upwards of 150 per cent. more than the duties upon the same articles from our West India colonies!! Brazil now says, "Take our sugar and coffee on the same terms as your own, and we will continue to take your manufactures on the same low terms as at present." Is not this an "equitable principle of reciprocity"? Why, then, are such terms not accepted? What are we to think of the sincerity and honesty of those who profess to be Free Traders, provided it be founded on "an equitable system of reciprocity," but who refuse a treaty on these terms when offered?

The opportunity for negotiating reciprocal treaties of commerce was suffered to pass away, the corn and timber monopolists would not abate one jot of their monopoly, and now it is utterly hopeless to obtain reciprocal tariffs:—

"Now (says 'a manufacturer') it becomes important to ascertain what means we have at our disposal to induce other countries to trade with us. The ancient mode of coercing nations into customers by war has been found expensive, and is out of fashion; unless with an empire like that of China, semi-barbarous, which places itself out of the code of civilized warfare. The only inducement remaining is that of interest, either by favourable offers, or by threats of retaliation. We find, however, that when we attempt to persuade contracting powers, such as Brazil, Portugal, &c., that it is for their benefit to take our goods, they are apt to constitute themselves the judges of their own interests, and tell us to mind our own business. And if we retaliate prohibition by prohibition, the result is that we diminish our exports and imports,—thereby injuring ourselves more than the parties whom we wish to bring to terms."

"A manufacturer" proceeds to combat the opinion of Colonel Torrens as condensed in the following quotations in his letter to Mr. Cobden in May last:—

"Explain to me the terms upon which, while America retains her tariff, England could pay to that country an additional £4,000,000 per annum for imported corn? Would you effect this payment by exporting to the United States increased quantities of the staples of Yorkshire and Lancashire? If you did you would have to encounter 'ad valorem' duties of from 30 to 40 per cent., and would be compelled, in order to compete with the similar fabrics of America, to sell your goods at prices lower by 30 and 40 per cent. than those which the American manufacturer might realize."

"Were you to increase the demand for foreign production by repealing our import duties, while the retention of hostile tariffs prevented a corresponding increase in the foreign demand for British goods, you would reduce the value of the produce of British labour in relation to the produce of foreign labour; or, in other words, you would raise the value of foreign commodities as compared with domestic commodities. Now gold is a foreign commodity, and consequently you would raise the value of gold in relation to British labour and its products."

"If this argument (replies 'a manufacturer') be valid, we must, at present, sell the goods we export to America at 30 to 40 per cent. loss, or otherwise reduce the wages to that amount below American wages: and if our import duties on American produce were levied to the same percentage (on cotton, as on tobacco and corn), the English labourer would first have to sell his labour at 30 to 40 per cent. less than the American, and with his diminished earnings, would have to pay 30 to 40 per cent. more than the American labourer for articles of consumption. A converse conclusion may fairly be drawn, viz., that the English labourer, being now compelled to compete with the American and continental labourer at a disadvantage of 30 to 40 per cent., should not have the additional burden of a higher price to pay for subsistence. As to the £4,000,000 additional imports, it is clear that they must be paid; and if our English merchant have a difficulty in meeting his engagements, or the American seller find his payments made very tardily, the adjustment may safely be left to the parties interested, without the clumsy interference of any legislative enactment. The Americans would eventually trust us no more than we could pay for, and the English merchant would in future avoid placing himself in a situation of difficulty. Hitherto the state of affairs has been the reverse. The English merchant and manufacturer have poured into the States their surplus goods, and the depressed condition of the home trade has unnaturally forced our exports through this tempting outlet. But our own tariff has stepped in and prevented the returns of a most important part of American produce,—I mean articles of subsistence. Britain, being the wealthier country, has, like a rich banker, been tempted to lend her money out at interest. America gave us her cotton and tobacco against our millions sterling of exported goods, state stocks, bank shares, &c.; she further offered us her corn, which we were so foolish as not to accept,—hence the loss has fallen upon our own shoulders, and hence the paralysis of our manufacturing industry, with a decline in wages. Colonel Torrens's caution amounts to this, that we should not buy of a poorer nation more than we can repay—a nation, moreover, which owes us a heavy balance of an old account. Surely a needle's caution, and a very questionable evil! But how are we to pay for the £4,000,000 increased imports, which create such alarm in the colonel's breast? It must be in manufactured produce, colonial or foreign produce, or gold? If paid for in produce, there must be a greater demand, and consequently a tendency to advance the price, as also those portions of it which may be resolved into labour and profit. If in gold, the value of the precious metals would be slightly raised at home; and, when higher than the continental price, an influx would inevitably occur (as it always has done on similar occasions), and the balance after all be paid in produce."

Colonel Torrens is one of that class of thinkers whose reasonings have no practical bearing; he loves to deal in subtle suppositions rather than in common-sense realities. He seems mightily puzzled to discover if we imported £4,000,000 worth of corn from America how we should be able to pay for it, and yet, strange to say, he has himself met the difficulty which his fancy has conjured up. In his letter to Mr. Cobden in May last he lays down the following positions "as self-evident truths":—

"That it is by the amount of our imports, and not by that of our exports, that the wealth of the country is increased; that if we take care of the imports, the exports will take care of themselves; that America will not give us her corn for nothing; that she will demand payment in goods or in money; that if her tariff should render it impracticable for us to pay in goods, we should send goods to other markets in order to enable us to pay in money; and that as surely as we purchase foreign produce to an increased amount, we must, either by a direct or by a circuitous trade, sell British goods to an equally increased amount, in order to pay for it."

Then, again, he sees great danger in increasing our foreign imports while foreign hostile tariffs are retained. Has it never occurred to him that our exports of manufactures, in spite of hostile tariffs, amount to £50,000,000 per annum, and that our foreign trade is not, and never has been, regulated by any such principles? Russia, for instance, prohibits our manufactured goods, whilst we take her flax, hemp, and tallow at nominal rates of duty. Is it proposed by the reciprocity doctors that we should prohibit them? America imposes 30 to 40 per cent. on our manufactures: are we to impose similar duties on her cotton? Germany imposes heavy duties on our manufactures: must we impose like duties on her wool? Are we, in short, totally to change our existing system of intercourse with every foreign country and to substitute reciprocal duties unless they reduce their duties on our manufactures? What else is implied in these reciprocity arguments? Is Colonel Torrens or anybody else wild enough to propose anything so absurd? If not, where, we ask, in the name of common sense, is the difficulty or danger of increasing our imports by £3,000,000 or £4,000,000 worth of corn, or any other common duty, on the same terms and in the same manner that we already exchange £50,000,000 per annum of our manufactures for the produce of other countries?

We do not undervalue the advantages we should derive, as well as America, France, and all other countries, were they to adopt liberal instead of exclusive principles of commercial dealing. But if they will not do so, is that any reason why we should punish ourselves by refusing to buy their cheap products? Suppose America, or Germany, impose high duties on our manufactures, and thus inflict injury upon their own people by forcing them to buy dear goods. Is that a valid reason why we should follow their example by laying high duties on their cotton, corn, and wool, and thus force our home consumers to buy dear goods, and, at the same time, assist foreign manufacturers the better to compete with us by giving them a bounty by so much as we raised the amount of the duty on raw material?

Foreign tariffs are beyond our power to regulate, but our own, which oppresses us still more heavily, is within our reach. It is on this Free Traders should concentrate their attention; but it is the purpose of the monopolists to divert them from it by all sorts of stratagems, alarms, and ingenious fallacies, which are nothing less than cunning devices to maintain monopoly under other forms, viz., reciprocity and fixed duty on corn, and, to beware of these monopolist traps, we shall from time to time raise our warning voice. We must reserve for the future further notice of the pamphlet of the Yorkshire manufacturer, which we recommend to our readers as a most useful, timely, and able work, heartily joining in its concluding appeal:—

"Let us give up the idea of moderating foreign tariffs,—a task beyond our control,—and, directing our energies to that which is practicable, let us use every legitimate influence for the total abolition of protecting duties, and the reduction of all import duties to the lowest possible point. Let us earnestly endeavour to give a steady, permanent character to our commerce, by rendering it free in the fullest sense of the word,—free from the political changes of our own party administrations,—free from the vacillations produced by futile attempts at commercial negotiations,—free from parental bias to those spoiled children, our colonies,—FREE TO THE WHOLE WORLD."

THE "TIMES" AND MR. BROOKS.

The Times has discovered a mode of turning to profit the slanders of the honourable member for Knaresborough, by the very creditable device of first publishing his libels upon a leading member of the League, next founding thereon a criminatory leading article, and afterwards refusing to insert a letter in refutation of the attack, unless paid for as an advertisement! A more injurious scheme for gratifying a personal dislike at the expense of its victim could not have been devised by even Mr. Gregory, of Satirist notoriety. The venom from the lips of Mr. Ferrand has thus been transmuted into twenty-five pounds (a column) of sterling gold, transferred from the pockets of Mr. Brooks into those of the proprietors of the Times, the chief of whom, Mr. Walter, was candid enough when in Parliament to declare that his hostility to the League was founded on personal dislike to its leading members. May not Mr. James Gordon Bennett learn from the Times how to turn the columns of the New York Herald to better account?

The formation of Agricultural Protection Societies is now rapidly progressing. We think we may save the farmers some labour, by submitting to them for their adoption the following form of Petition to both Houses of Parliament. It states their case fairly and fully.

"To the Honourables and Right Honourables, &c.;

"The PETITION of the Farmers of, &c.,

"Humbly sheweth,

"That your petitioners are alarmed at the proceedings of a body of people calling themselves the Anti-Corn-Law League, who profess a desire to deprive your petitioners of the protection against foreign competition in the supply of food to the British nation, enjoyed by your petitioners for the last thirty years under the Corn Law, and to which your petitioners consider themselves fully entitled, because of the following reasons, viz.:—

"Because it is notorious that Englishmen, and more particularly English farmers, are an inferior race of men, altogether incapable of competing with foreigners; and
"Because foreign farmers have more capital, industry, and intelligence than your petitioners; and
"Because foreigners have better soils, a better climate, better roads, better tools, more manure, cheaper fuel, and nearer markets for their produce than English farmers; and
"Because foreign labourers have stiffer limbs, more muscular power, more perseverance, more willingness, and more good sense than Englishmen; and
"Because the duties charged on foreign corn are not paid by the English consumer, but by the foreign producer; and
"Because English farmers are more taxed than other British subjects; and "Because English farmers pay duties on French wheat, which tea, and other commodities requisite for the growth of wheat;

and
Because (according to Sir Robert Peel's speech in March, 1839,) the foreign grower is free from public and local taxation;

and
Because free trade in corn would put an end to annual tenure and short leases, so advantageous to your petitioners;

and
Because political dependence upon, and forced voting for, landlords, so well calculated to create an honest tenantry and efficient agriculturists, would cease with the repeal of the Corn Law;

and
Because landlords have marriage settlements and mortgages, for which, as in duty bound, your petitioners provide by charging the expense thereof to the people; and

Because the Marquis of Westminster, Lord Dacre, Mr. Cobden, and Mr. Bright, have no stake in the country, and aim at the subversion of our venerable constitution in Church and State.

"For every one and all these reasons your petitioners pray that their accustomed protection, the Corn Law, be continued and the Anti-Corn-Law League be forthwith annihilated; and "Your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray."

MEETINGS.

GREAT FREE-TRADE DEMONSTRATION AT ASHTON.

[From the Manchester Times of this day.]

MANCHESTER, Tuesday.

A great meeting of the friends of Free Trade was convened in the spacious room of the Town-hall, Ashton-under-Lyne, last night, in aid of the League Fund. It had been announced, for some time previously, that the Hon. Charles Pelham Villiers would address the meeting then assembled, and great anxiety was consequently manifested by the population of Ashton to have an opportunity of hearing this great champion of Free Trade. Arrangement had been made for a tea-party, and the large room was provided with from thirty to forty tables, each accommodating from twenty to thirty persons. The set-out altogether was one of the most brilliant that we remember to have seen. There could not be far short of a thousand persons present. About six o'clock R. Cobden, Esq., M.P., in company with Thomas Ashton, Esq., and Oldham Whittaker, Esq., entered the room, and was received with loud and continued applause. Col. P. Thompson entered soon afterwards, and was also loudly cheered. Shortly before the meeting proceeded with the business of the evening, the Hon. C. P. Villiers, in company with Chas. Hindley, Esq., M.P. for the borough, entered the room, and was received with most rapturous applause, the whole company rising, waving their handkerchiefs, cheering, and clapping their hands for a considerable time. Among others of the deputation from the League who attended the meeting we observed Henry Ashworth, Esq., of Turton, and Mr. R. R. Moore, barrister; the following gentlemen of Ashton and the neighbourhood were also present:—Henry Bailey, Esq., Staleybridge; John Whitaker, Esq., of Hurst; Mark Andrew, Esq., Mossley; Watkin Lees, Esq., Dukinfield; Nathan Lees, Esq., Dukinfield; John Cheetham, Esq., Staleybridge; Thomas Ashton, Esq., Hyde; Edmund Ashworth, Esq., Bolton; James Smith Buckley, Esq., Ashton; Robert Buckley, Esq., Mossley; Abel B. Wimpenny, Esq., Dukinfield; William Peacock, Esq., Denton; George Horsfield, Esq., Manchester; John Hyde, Esq., Dukinfield; Frederick Rayner, Esq., Ashton; William Rawson, Esq., Manchester; Samuel Ashton, Esq., Hyde; Abel Buckley, Esq., Ashton; William Shuttleworth, Esq., Manchester; George Higginbottom, Esq., Ashton; Ralph Kershaw and Alfred Rayner, Esqrs., Ashton; Thomas Mayson, Esq., Ashton; Richard Christie, Esq., Droylsden; Richard Matley, Esq.; Rev. John Brooks, Hyde; Charles Bayley, Esq., Staleybridge.

After tea, Mr. HUGH MASON read the following letters, which had been received in answer to invitations to attend the meeting:—

"The Park, Dec. 28, 1843.

"Sir,—I regret that I cannot attend the Free-Trade tea party at Ashton-under-Lyne, on the 8th of January. I have been much out of health lately, and have such a pressure of engagements during next month, that I really am unable to attend any meetings beyond those held in my own borough. Pray, present my respects to your committee, and assure them how cordially I unite with them in the support of the great principle of Free Trade, the carrying out of which can alone, in my opinion, restore prosperity to the country, and comfort to the over-worked and under-fed population of England. Let no one be deceived by the present improvement in the trade of this district. The same causes which have heretofore operated against our prosperity are still at work against us; and no real friend of his country should relax for one moment his efforts to carry the great question of Free Trade.—I remain, Sir, yours, faithfully,
"HUGH MASON, Esq."

"Bradford, Dec. 31, 1843.

"DEAR SIR,—In reply to your favour of the 27th, I beg to thank your committee for the handsome manner in which they have invited me to their 'Free-Trade tea party,' on the 8th of January; but, as I am not desirous of taking any prominent part in this question beyond my own immediate neighbourhood, I must (though very sensible of their kindness) respectfully beg to decline it. I hope the Conservative gentlemen in your neighbourhood—many of whom, I understand, are in favour of a fixed duty—will give that subject their serious consideration; there are many worthy and respectable men who will not take the trouble of long thinking upon controverted questions, and who are desirous of getting rid of them in the easiest way possible, that is, by compromise; but men who entertain decided opinions on any question, and who consider their satisfactory settlement a matter of principle, will never settle questions in that way. A fixed duty on corn is only a compromise between certain parties, between a sliding scale, or no duty at all: there are, doubtless, many arguments in favour of a fixed duty over a sliding scale; but that is not the real question. The real question is:—Is protection extended to certain classes right or wrong? Now, there cannot possibly be a more important question than the supply of food to a nation; and there can be no doubt that whatever tends to make that supply deficient is an act of injustice, and one from which any truly Christian mind will turn with abhorrence; and it is no justification, or even extenuation, of such an attempt, that the interests of any other parties may be promoted by it. Abundance of food is the interest of all, for all are consumers. It may serve the producers to make the article scarce, so as to secure a higher price, through every enactment which they can obtain; but that would obviously be an injustice to the whole body of consumers, whose united interest alone ought to be the object of legislation: anything else is class-legislation—a puffing up of particular interests at public cost. But as every particular interest cannot be thus suppressed—for instance, the most important interest of all, namely, the working classes, as regards the price of labour—so no case ought to enjoy a protection injurious to the whole community. There is a great principle involved in this question. I think it a just principle, and it ought strictly to be contended for. It is manifestly unjust to attempt, through any enactment, to make an article scarce so essential to human life as bread, with the view of raising the price for the advantage of the producer, unless means are especially taken to enable the consumer to give that higher price; but no man in his senses believes that possible, and Parliament has recently declared such an object utterly beyond its power. Now, a fixed duty will just have this effect, raising the price of food, and not at the same time enabling any poor labourer more readily to give that price. It cannot be defended; the honest object of a protecting duty in corn was to encourage the best cultivation of our own soils, to make food plentiful—not to make it scarce and dear; but it has been turned to the latter purpose, and not to the former, and has proved to be a great national curse. If our lands were cultivated as they ought to have been, no foreign corn could have found its way here; at least, that is my decided conviction. I wish with all my heart, that, if we are to have two great political parties in the country, they would divide upon some great intelligible principle, such as Free Trade and Monopoly. Instead of the no-meaning terms, Whig and Tory. There are Conservatives who are Free-Trade; there are Whigs who are not so. Why should this question of supplying a country with food be any more a party question of Whig and Tory than the supply of a town with water? It is really full time to sink these foolish distinctions; and I really do hope, that your Conservative friends will not imagine there is anything politically binding upon them to oppose the principles of freedom of trade. I have already spun this letter to an unreasonable length, and will only add one remark more. Let the Anti-Corn-Law League condemn the Corn Law as they please, and show its injustice in the most forcible colours; but let them not, while condemning the law, condemn the law-makers. Many of them, I dare say, think such a law really necessary, and may be very sincere. I am sure they are mistaken. I am not fond of being denounced as a mill-owner, and I am not willing to denounce an aristocrat as such.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant, "WM. RAND."

Letters had also been received from Joseph Brotherton, Esq., M.P., and Mr. Alderman Brooks, who could not attend in consequence of other arrangements.

CHARLES HINDLEY, Esq., M.P., took the chair, by previous arrangement, and in opening the proceedings said:—Ladies and Gentlemen, we are met together to show our attachment to the principles of Free Trade. It is now a year ago since I had the honour to preside at a similar assembly; and when I look around me at the increased crowd which meets in this room to-night, I am reminded of the assertion of the Times, "that the Anti-Corn-Law League is a great fact!" (Laughter and applause.) I wish the editor were here, and I would appeal to him as far as my constituency is concerned, to show him that we are a great fact. (Applause.) I shall not, on this occasion, enter into any argument whether Free Trade be better or whether it be worse; I shall not enter into any argument on the Corn Laws, because I believe the manly letter of Mr. Rand, which has already been read to you, is sufficiently full of argument for every candid mind; I hope that letter will be printed and circulated by the committee; and I would ask any of the working classes with whom I have any influence to consider well the bearing of those arguments, and the effect a repeal of the Corn Laws would be likely to have upon the value of labour. (Hear, hear.) Especially would I recommend to them to consider whether, if it be acknowledged impossible to protect the value of labour, it is, or can be, their interest, that the property of the rich landed proprietors should be protected. I congratulate you upon the improved prospects of the question we are met this night to support. We now hope, and I trust that we see land (hear, hear); or at least some of the tokens that land is not far distant. And to whom are we indebted for this improvement in our prospects? Certainly one great instrument in this change has been that great combination—the Anti-Corn-Law League. (Loud cheers.) For years had my honourable friend, who sits on my right, Mr. Villiers, maintained (loud cheers)—for years had my honourable friend supported that cause in Parliament (renewed applause); and often did he lament to me that he thought the people were lukewarm upon the subject, and that he had not the support out of doors which the importance of the question entitled him to expect, and which was calculated to make an impression upon the House of Commons. It was reserved for Mr. Cobden and the Anti-Corn-Law League (loud cheers) to produce that support which Mr. Villiers needed; and now, with the able and prudent conduct which Mr. Villiers has always shown in the House of Commons, backed as he has been and will be by my honourable friend on the left (Mr. Cobden), and as they both will be, I trust, by every earnest and zealous advocate of repeal in the House of Commons, and by the League and the people out of doors, I say success must be almost certain. (Cheers.) I only hope that the health and the constitution of both these gentlemen, and also of one to whom we are equally indebted, and whom we should have been very glad to have seen with us on this occasion—I mean the hon. member for Durham (loud cheers)—will be sufficient for the exertion requisite to carry through this cause to its final triumph. (Applause.) For with whom have we to cope? Against the strongest powers in the empire, the power of the aristocracy generally, and all those bulwarks within which the different species of monopolies have so long entrenched themselves. I congratulate the friends of this subject, and the Anti-Corn-Law League, upon the success which has attended their exertions during the past year; and I do this the more cheerfully at the present time, as I was understood at a former period to entertain views differing from theirs upon the course to be pursued. During the last year their course has given me the most decided satisfaction. (Applause.) Vituperation and personal abuse have been abandoned, and sound argument and the application of general principles have been substituted in their place. Persons... as, if introduced at all, have been brought forward by our opponents; and in no case that has come under my notice have the sound and weighty propositions laid down by the advocates of Free Trade been met even by a shred of an argument on the other side. (Hear, hear.) I think, therefore, that many who have hitherto hesitated to join the League on account of their doubt of the propriety of the spirit of the movement may now do so; and I enter fully into the observation of Mr. Cobden at the Manchester meeting, when he invited those who had kept aloof on this account to join their ranks, and add their caution and prudence to the zeal and spirit of the League. Our opponents thought that, with an improvement of trade, the agitation would have terminated. They anticipated the death of the League as soon as a loom or a spindle turned to profit. Their expectations have been disappointed. Fifty thousand pounds, raised in a period of calamity, have been doubled at the approach of prosperity; and this is wise. To have relaxed would have been folly. At the present moment the lower prices of produce produced by good harvests are beginning to make the farmers think and argue the question. Another good harvest, and the farmer will feel injured by the very abundance by which he is surrounded, and will inquire into the causes which produced his position. But we may be told we have wheat low enough in price, and therefore there is no necessity for a change of the law to allow a foreign importation. We reply, that the very best time for all classes to make the change is when wheat is at such a moderate price as not unduly to stimulate foreign production. To leave the change to a period of exorbitant prices would be to make it unjust to the farmer, as he would thereby be exposed to an unnecessary and ruinous excess of foreign competition. (Hear, hear.) An additional reason for not relaxing our exertions in this cause arises from the circumstance that the laws prohibiting the exportation of machinery were repealed in the last session of Parliament. On that occasion I thought it my duty to move that the subject be referred to a select committee. I did not wish to oppose the bill altogether, because I had no objection to it as one of the branches of Free Trade; but I did think that, to give away the advantage we possessed in the improvement of machinery without an equivalent and without altering the laws respecting the importation of corn, was beginning at the wrong end, and was extremely unjust to the capitalist and the labourer. On a division, all the agriculturists, with a very few exceptions, divided in favour of the removal of restrictions, objecting even to the appointment of a committee. I then told the House that I should certainly feel it an increased duty to do all I could for the repeal of the Corn Laws, as it would be manifestly unfair to leave the English factory operative and capitalist to carry on an unequal competition with their rivals in other countries, employing our own machinery, and having food about one-half or two-thirds the price. At the present moment English capital in England has to contend with English capital in Russia invested in mills, under this change of the law in machinery, of the newest construction here,—the Anglo-Russian spinner having a cheap loaf and a protective duty of about 100 per cent. (Hear, hear.) But there is another reason for increased exertion at the present moment. You have no doubt seen from the public prints that two Pro-Corn-Law associations have been established, which are likely, without great exertion, to extinguish yours. At one of them I perceive the magnificent sum of £50 was subscribed amidst the loudest cheers. (Laughter.) I am happy, however, to say that I neither saw nor heard of any further subscription, and therefore their cause does not seem likely immediately to progress. (Laughter and applause.) We are also encouraged this week to continued exertion by the appearance in the field of a new, a noble ally—the Marquis of Westminster (loud cheers),—who has sent in his name as a subscriber to the amount of £500. I know not which to admire most, the excellent sentiments of the letter accompanying this subscription, or the noble patriotism by which it was dictated. (Cheers.) From the conduct of the Marquis, of Lord Spencer, and many others of the leaders of the Whig party, I am led to anticipate that the Whigs have made up their minds to adopt principles of entire freedom of trade. ("Hear, hear," and applause.) I hope they will not think of returning to power on the principle of a fixed duty. (Hear, hear.) The time for that is gone by. A few years ago I myself thought it would be the best as a state of transition from the sliding-scale to the natural course of trade. But even Sir Robert Peel has repudiated any such medium course, having declared, with loss of the potential mood that he usually employs in the House of Commons, that the arguments in favour of total repeal were stronger than those for a fixed duty. (Applause and laughter.) Will he then come forward with a total repeal? I fear not. The party of which he is the leader he cannot lead no more than the Whigs could drive. ("Hear," and laughter.) Rely then upon yourselves; continue your exertions; go steadily, prudently, zealously forward, with a moderation inspired by confidence in your principles, and an assurance of ultimate if not speedy success. (Applause.) Should, however, Sir Robert Peel think proper to embrace the golden opportunity of carrying into effect the principles of Free Trade, as this is no party movement, we should cheerfully rejoice in this great boon from such an unexpected quarter. At the same time I may be permitted to say, that, more connected by feeling with the Whig party, I should feel more grateful to them for the bestowal of a similar advantage. (Hear.) The sinews of war are money. Our object in meeting to-night, I believe, is money. And as far as I can help you, I am ready to do so; and if I regret anything it is that I cannot give so much as I should wish. (Applause.) There is one cause I have at heart, and should like to refer to, because I feel that its advocacy at the present moment may be considered to be injurious to the one we are now supporting. We were, however, forced to take up the question of education at the time we did, in consequence of the rejection of the Factories Education Bill during the last session of Parliament, and the probability that, unless means were immediately taken for the education of the people on the voluntary principle, a similarly illiberal measure would be again introduced. The two questions, however, need not, must not clash. ("Hear, hear," from Mr. Cobden.) With an educated people the Corn Laws could not exist. (Hear, hear.) You propose to supply food to the body; we to the mind. (Applause.) Happy should I be to see the youth of England educated, her people well fed, all her classes harmonious and happy, and a wise and patriotic Government ruling for the public good. (Loud and prolonged cheering.)

Colonel Thompson was next introduced, and addressed the meeting in his usual quaint and argumentative style. In speaking of the Essex meeting to counteract the League, where £50 was subscribed, he said their opponents reminded him of a certain insurrection which took place some years ago in the metropolis, where it was proved that a body sent against the Tower carried its ammunition in a stocking. (Great laughter.)

The Hon. C. P. VILLIERS then rose, and was received with several rounds of the most hearty cheering. After the applause had subsided the hon. gentleman said, that having the honour of being a guest of their respected member he had readily complied with a request that had been made to him to attend that meeting, and he had now to thank them for their very friendly and flattering reception on the occasion. When he saw the extreme respectability of that meeting, that was very gratifying to him personally; and, if he was not presuming too much, he would infer from it something satisfactory to the cause. (Hear, hear.) He had no title to their favour but from the course he had taken in the House of Commons upon this question. He had there invariably denounced the law as unjust in principle as well as injurious in operation (hear, hear); and he had never, either for personal or even for party considerations, wavered in the slightest degree in the advocacy of that view. (Cheers.) He ventured, therefore, to construe their courtesy on the present occasion as an approval of that course (applause); and consequently to conclude that there was among them an earnest and decided feeling upon the question. (Cheers.) He could assure them that to one who had known this cause in its adversity, and who believed that its success was nearer to the wellbeing of the whole community, and perhaps nearer to a remedy for those many ills from which the people were suffering than any other, these signs of progress were truly gratifying (hear, hear, hear); he thought that any person who was in the habit of watching what occurred in this country would conclude that a question which had been so long before the public, which had been resisted with so much influence and vehemence, and with such advantage, and yet each day was gathering strength from every quarter, must have some great merit of its own on which to rest. (Hear.) It had, indeed, stood the test of that which many a cause which had been agitated in this country had failed to do—he meant the scrutiny and cautious view of the men of business and practical character in this country. They were generally conservative in the right sense, and apt to be alarmed when the public mind was agitated; but it was precisely from that quarter that there was now an accession of strength, and it was openly admitted by them, not only that the cause itself was just, but that the agitation was necessary. (Cheers.) That great organ of public events and public opinion—the Times newspaper—had proclaimed the reason of their joining the agitation; it was, that every form of remonstrance to the Legislature had been attempted in vain; that the petitions of the people had been unheeded; that motions had been rejected; that applications of all kinds had been disregarded; and that their patience becoming exhausted, that they became parties to this other experiment. (Hear, hear, hear.) He was now glad to see that that spirit which once animated the commercial classes of this country, and which history tells us once rendered such service, yet existed, was about to be revived—nay, in this country, had blazed forth already. He was sure that this would always happen, for the people of this country were not servile—they did not submit to wrong when they knew it to be so. (Cheers.) They might be patient and prudent, and it was to their praise that they were so; but let them know what was right, let them feel that they had a duty to perform, and they would never turn until they triumphed. (Cheers.) He remembered some few years since, when he was on the Continent, conversing with a distinguished traveller who had recently returned from this country, and, discussing the subject of these Corn Laws, he expressed his opinion that the prospect of their repeal was distant; because he had observed that not only were the aristocracy in this country more united upon this matter than upon any other—not only did they derive all the influence which Parliament and station could give them, but such had been the habit of their domination, that they seemed to have subdued the spirit of every other class. (Hear, hear.) And he (Mr. Villiers) owned at that time he had not felt altogether prepared to dispute that view; for he felt that those parties in this country who, though not of the nobility, were yet connected with all that made England great, had not vindicated their own interests with that spirit which it would have been much to their honour to have done. If, however, then he had felt that as a reproach, he should like to draw that stranger's attention to what was at present passing in this country; and with pride he should point to the imposing attitude which the industrious and commercial classes were now assuming—to the spirit, intelligence, and determination they were bringing to this arduous struggle; and the time and the toil and the money they were sacrificing for its success. (Loud cheers.) He liked to see this as a man hating to see oppression unresisted; hating to see men trampled upon and not turn; and hating to see the idle, the selfish, and the ignorant in the ascendant, wasting the resources of art and industry. (Immense applause.) He did not mean by the expression of that sentiment to raise the question there of the principle of an aristocracy. He was aware that there were members of our aristocracy who were able and kind-hearted men, and useful members of society. He had no prejudice, certainly, against the order, but he knew of no tie which should bind a man to the errors and follies of a class; and these were as conspicuous in this system which they were maintaining as that which was the subject of a graver charge. (Hear, hear, hear.) But, if it were otherwise, he could not divest himself of the feeling which he believed belonged to every one, of wishing to see the community to which he belonged thrive rather than decay; and the people prosperous rather than withering, as they were now. (Cheers.) He was, therefore, happy to see this demonstration against a wrong which was admitted to be so wherever England's condition was discussed, and wherever England's name was known. (Cheers.) He was glad to see all party distinctions vanish before this great public object; and he turned with admiration, and almost with gratitude, to those distinguished men whom they had sent forth from this country, whose untiring energies and powers of mind were knitting together the different parts of this country by one common sense of wrong, and hatred of this injustice. (Cheers.) He had heard the senseless charge made against them, that they were, by their addresses, setting class against class; but the answer to that was, that the law itself had provoked the attack. (Hear, hear.) There was no more justice in that charge against them than there was against any man who sought redress because he was injured; and it reminded him of the story that was told of a criminal, in Newgate, who complained of the chaplain of that prison, who on one occasion had taken the eighth commandment for his text, and preached against stealing. The criminal remarked, that it was in the worst possible taste, and calculated to produce unpleasant feelings in his auditory. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) He had no doubt this agitation did produce unpleasant feelings, and, what was perhaps still more inconvenient to them, that it prevented a settlement and sales of their property. (Hear, hear.) But, if they did suffer this inconvenience, he thought the country would survive it if the Anti-Corn-Law League succeeded in their object; and he thought it would only be a just retribution upon those men who, possessing great power, had perverted the institutions of this country to serve their own selfish purposes. (Cheers.) He believed that they neither would, nor ought to have, any peace or quiet in this country who had maintained and passed this law until they could either vindicate their policy or would abandon it. (Cheers.) But their position at present was this, that they neither could do the one, nor would do the other. There was no one single position they had assumed that they had been able to maintain; and every plea, and every pretext, and every argument, had been torn to shreds by the withering speeches of the League. (Immense cheering.) There was hardly a Sunday-school boy that now was not able to cope with the "collective wisdom" on the grounds they gave for maintaining their policy. The argument on which they most depended—which was the danger of depending on foreign states for food—was used after all ground for it had ceased, for we were dependent, and must be so in spite of the law; and, as the evil has not happened yet, they expected us to believe that if foreign countries exported more, and their interest became greater, this danger was then more likely to be greater. But if they had difficulty in knowing what would be done in case the foreigners should cut off our supply, there were persons in this country whom they might consult who were about ten millions in number, and who, by their own showing, were without that food in peace of which they feared they might be deprived in war. (Hear, hear.) That was the benefit to them of not depending on foreign countries. But he believed that it was the want of reciprocity in other states towards this country on which they intended chiefly to rely this year. Now, mark the good faith with which this argument was used. It was implied, in the Monopolist organs, that their party was ready for repeal of the Corn Laws if other nations would lower their tariffs and admit our manufactures. Now, there was hardly a single state, of whose tariff they complained, that did not, some years since, offer to negotiate with us on the ground of admitting our manufactures if we would lower the duties on corn; and it was distinctly notified to them that such could never be admitted as the ground of negotiation. He (Mr. Villiers) on one occasion read in the House of Commons the answer that Mr. Canning was compelled to give to the Prussian minister who had made this application to our Government; and he there stated that domestic policy precluded the Corn Laws being the subject of negotiation. (A laugh.) Since that refusal to negotiate they had reaped up manufacturing interests, and followed our example in attempting to protect them; and, knowing that they were wedded to that system, the monopolies of this country were to be continued on the plea of their refusing reciprocity. They should doubtless also hear of the necessity of maintaining the Corn Laws for the sake of agriculture, in which such great improvements were promised to be made; but if the Corn Laws encouraged agricultural improvement, how came it that though the laws were passed in 1815, yet that in the year of our Lord 1843 we collect from the landlords themselves that agriculture had been greatly neglected; and that they were everywhere lecturing their tenants on the bad treatment of the land. The fact was that agriculture had been retarded, and never would permanently improve while the law continued. In short, amongst all the things that had been said, or that he expected would be said, there was but one that seemed to consist with fact or sense; and that was urged upon one occasion by a county member in opposition to his (Mr. Villiers's) motion, and which was, that, "according to the account of the Free-Traders, they (the landlords) must have a very good thing of it (hear, hear); and if they had, did the House suppose that the landlords would be so soft as to surrender it before the necessity for it existed." ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) Now, he liked that: it was plain, open, and intelligible; he preferred it much to the pultry plea, that it was for the sake of the poor that bread was to be made scarce in order that it might be made dear. It was not usual, perhaps, to make such avowals in public, but it was very common in private; though it might not be very generous policy, he believed it was very general practice—a practice about as common as human nature where man was unrestrained by any public or general influence. But this was the point he wished people to observe; for it proved the importance and necessity of this agitation, which sought to elicit such an expression of opinion as would make these parties see that a necessity did exist for surrendering that good thing which they had given themselves, and that bad thing which they had imposed upon everybody else. In fact the only question worth considering was, whether the League were pursuing a wise and judicious course. With respect to this, after mature consideration, he was bound to say he believed that the chief men of the League were acting as earnest and honest men under the circumstances would do, and that they adopted the course best suited to their end. In all these movements it was necessary that the object sought should be clear and definite, in order to be intelligible, and to unite as much strength in its support as possible. Now, the League denounced the Corn Law as unjust, and hoped to abolish it by producing that conviction on the public mind; and it sought the sympathy for this purpose of the wise and the just and benevolent of all classes. Could they expect assistance from these quarters in asking for anything short of the entire removal of the injustice? (Cheers.) And, after showing the evil bearing of the law upon all classes, to be satisfied by simply varying the form of the injustice,—and after proving that it tended to make food scarce, tended to make it dear, and also to deteriorate the value of labour in the market,—could they be satisfied by merely meeting the inconvenience complained of by the merchant, that he was deprived of a regular trade, and remedying the grievance of the farmer himself, that the grain was poured into the market at the time most injurious to himself? These were the effects, no doubt, of the sliding scale, and would be removed by a fixed duty; but the argument against the fixed duty remained unanswered, that its only merit was to keep out food from this country, which food would only be entered from its being wanted; and such a duty could be only imposed for the purpose of protecting the wealthy proprietor, but which protection, while it enhanced the price of food, did not extend to increasing the wages of the labouring classes. (Hear, hear.) This he contended was the fault of all protection,—unjustly to favour one class at the expense of the rest. (Cheers.) Protection could not be universal; Parliament had repeatedly refused to entertain the notion of regulating the income of the labourers, with the view of putting them on a footing with the protected interests. (Hear, hear.) Now, his hon. friend, Mr. Cobden, put the Government and the House to the test on that point. He had said, "You are raising the value of your own property by act of Parliament, in passing and maintaining these Corn Laws, and in keeping up a high price for agricultural produce; are you willing to give a value to labour by act of Parliament also?" (Cheers.) They smiled at this proposal, knowing full well that it was impossible; and, even had it been possible, it was not convenient for themselves to do it. (Hear, hear.) He (Mr. Villiers) remembered, that when he was first returned to Parliament for the district which he now had the honour to represent, he was rather under the impression that this law was more injurious to capitalists than it was to the working man; but he had since been strongly impressed with the contrary opinion from observing its operation in that borough. The working classes, when they expressed desire for improvement in their condition, did not express the idea by speaking of higher wages or employment, but they said they wanted more trade: thus showing distinctly the connexion in their minds between increased trade and better wages. (Hear, hear.) Many of them received their orders directly from the merchant, and they knew that if the merchant received no order from abroad they failed to obtain employment. (Hear, hear.) Restriction on trade was, therefore, ruin to them, while every extension improved their condition. They had, therefore, been convinced from the moment that the Corn Laws were passed, that, as a great obstruction to trade with Europe and America, they would deteriorate their condition, rear up competitors abroad, diminish the demand for their labour, enhance the price of food, while they should be pressed at home by a constant increase in their number. But the view which they take of the connexion between trade and their condition is equally applicable to the whole working class; for let the most intelligent of them think from morning to night in what way he could improve the material condition of his class, and he will come to no other just conclusion than that it must be by extending the demand for his labour. (Hear, hear.) And as that would be effected by increasing the trade in the products of his labour, so every extension of trade with the rest of the world must tend to improve his condition. (Applause.) The very purpose of foreign trade created a demand for British labour. The object for which we traded with foreign countries was to obtain something that we wanted and did not produce; but no such article could be imported into this country without an equivalent being exported; and no equivalent could be produced without the employment, in some shape, of British labour. Thus, every import into this country appeared as a customer for British labour (applause); every restriction on that import was the denial to British labour of a customer; and every restriction removed, for the same reason, gave employment. It was not consistent with the support of those restrictions to deny that the imports would increase; because restrictive laws were not imposed because they would not come in, but because they were expected. There was perhaps this peculiarity in the import of food when it was demanded, that it not only required to be paid for by British labour; but inasmuch as it would reduce the price of food, and as food was consumed by the whole community, whatever was saved in the payment of food, was expended on manufactures, thereby creating a fresh demand for manufacturing industry, while the artisan, with increased demand for his labour, would be compelled to spend less on food, and have more to expend upon comforts. Nothing, therefore, was now more likely to raise and improve the condition of the working class in this country than extending the trade in food with foreign countries, and rendering it more accessible to him at home. (Cheers.) Should any one doubt the justice of these views, he had only to reflect upon what occurred during the late years of distress, and what had been lately occurring. It was universally admitted that the prominent cause of the distress between 1838 and 1842 was owing to the high price of food, and the vast abstraction of the means of the community that would otherwise have been expended on manufactures to be employed in the payment for food. (Hear.) In this country a great difference in the price of food was the difference of many millions more or less expended upon it. Now, what was it that we heard of at present? Why that trade was reviving—that the home trade was improved, which is the precise confirmation of what he had said, since the price of food was very greatly fallen within these two years. More had been spent on manufactures, more employment was given to the people, and they had more to spend on articles taxed for revenue, which resulted in what they knew was the case, that trade was reviving, and that the revenue had improved. But precisely for the same reason was it to be expected that if food should again rise and these laws continue, and the supply from abroad should again be irregular, the same consequences would again follow. (Hear.) Of what immense importance then was this question to every class of the community; and if they considered the amount of misery yet existing in this country, the shocking details of distress and destitution that were reaching them from the metropolis, and how every business was overstocked, and farther, that all the businesses of this country depended upon the extent of the production, distribution, and consumption of the articles of human want, was it not insane on our part to choke up any channel of commerce that we could open, or not widen to the fullest extent the field of exchange which was the soul and spirit of commercial operations? Why then, he would ask, should they not at once claim the adoption of this better policy, and insist at once upon freedom of trade? Some said, that their opponents were so strong that it would be wise to moderate the demand. He said, too, that they were strong, but they were so in relation to the apathy and fears of others. They were not strong in number, they were not strong in justice (very loud cheers); they were not strong in the love and affections of the people; but they were bold because other men were cowards (loud cheers); ever fearing to go forth lest the lion should cross their path. (Great applause.) But it was said by others, that it was not on their account they feared, but on account of those who had been deluded by the promises of Monopoly, and who had embarked their capital upon its faith, and who had since been disappointed. But he said that rendered the case stronger for change. Had their expectations been realised, and had they been thriving, the change might be hazardous;

but, as it was, their condition rendered obnoxious. But were it otherwise—were those for whom they pleaded, either manufacturers or others of the working-class, not equally entitled to protection by the law, and were they to droop and die because others had been deceived? But who said, for instance, that the cultivator of the land required this injustice to the community for his protection? Was it he who from his extensive experience in agriculture, from his great possessions as a landowner, and his high character as a nobleman, was placed at the head of that society which professed to exist for the improvement of agriculture—he meant Lord Spencer? (Great cheering.) No; they had lately heard his opinions, and he had avowed them in public and in private for ten years before; and declared them to be useless for agriculture, delusive to the farmer, and prejudicial to the people. (Cheers.) Was it he whose vast possessions gave great authority to his well-timed letter and magnificent gift to the fund of the League? No; for his letter contained the denial. (Cheers.) Was it he whom Professor Buckland, in the presence of Sir Robert Peel, at the dinner at Tamworth, said, was an example to the landlord and the farmer, for his intelligent treatment of his property—he meant Lord Ducie? (Cheers.) No; he was a member of, and a contributor to, the Anti-Corn Law League. There was another nobleman, said to be a practical farmer and of princely possessions—he meant the Duke of Bedford—he was friendly to the repeal of these laws. (Cheers.) In short, wherever they found a clear head and a clear estate combined, there they usually found a friend; but wherever both were muddled these laws were relied on. (Hear, hear.) What was it that they heard of the farmer himself? North, south, east, and west, there was nothing but complaint of the depressed condition of the British farmer. He was in the predicament of a man who had made an improvident bargain, and was unable to extricate himself. (Hear, hear.) Judging from his own account, it would be difficult to suppose that any change could injure his condition. It was, however, the labourer's lot on which they delighted to dwell. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) Oh, if they were in the House of Commons when the Corn Laws were discussed, how good and kind and benevolent to the poor would they think the majority of that House who maintained these laws! ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) From the beginning to the end, the poor were the subjects of their care; the simple purpose, as it was alleged, of supporting these laws was for their good; and they remembered this time last year the touching description given at the dinner of the Dorsetshire squire of their condition in that county—how happy and contented they were, and how they loved the poor, and how the poor loved them, and the poetic description given by Mr. Banks; and they remembered how, a few short months afterwards, this paradise was described by the Queen's commissioners sent to investigate the matter, and how much more like another place they represented it. (Laughter.) But, with all this professed interest in his fate, what was his own story? The condition of the agricultural districts told it. It was the old sad argument of ignorance and despair—a hideous crime against society—the destruction of property by fire. (Hear, hear, hear.) Were these, then, the existing interests that afforded the sufficient excuse for the continuance of this injustice? (Hear, hear.) But if it were still thought by some that there would be use in offering some compromise of their claim, his answer was that the experiment had already been made. It had been made by Lord John Russell under circumstances which, if ever justifiable, were justified at that time. There was much less knowledge and much less feeling on the subject then than there was now, and the landlords were strong in consequence of that ignorance. And how was that proposition, so favourable as regarded them, received? It was scouted, derided, and the most daring things said in favour of the law and about his motives; and he (Mr. Villiers) trusted he would never repeat the proposition, for he must now see that the aristocracy would not accept his fixed duty, that the people at large were in favour of the trade being free, and that he could not get rid of the present scale without popular support. (Cheers.) It was, therefore, his (Mr. Villiers's) firm conviction, that the honest and the just course was the most attainable. (Cheers.) He had no interest in expressing this opinion if he did not believe it. He had never served an interest by advocating repeal; and could he believe that the condition of the country could be equally improved by maintaining the law, and that its repeal was unattainable, he would be silent in future. (Hear, hear.) As far, however, as he could judge, there was nothing to favour this idea. From every quarter the League appeared to receive encouragement. They were now most judiciously visiting the constituencies, and they had gone nowhere among them without producing a deep impression of the truth and justice of their cause. (Cheers.) And, when it was considered that they were the sources of the power by which the law might be repealed, the prospect was cheering of ultimate success. (Cheers.) The electors of this kingdom were in fact comparatively few—they did not exceed four or five hundred thousand—and, judging by the conversions they had already effected, there was little reason for despair. (Cheers.) There was no power in the country more likely to achieve the object than a permanent, persevering, untiring body, such as the leading men of the League had proved themselves to be. Their objects were defined, and their characters established, and they had little reason to diverge from their purpose; nor would they do justice to the cause if they gave any head to the silly slanders or the foul calumnies that were propagated by their opponents. (Cheers.) He would only add, that if that meeting were satisfied that the League had done much, and were capable of doing more, and that by extending the agitation they would finally succeed, it was clear that they must do more than express their approval, and that, to use the words of Lord Westminster, they "must contribute aid more in the shape of solid pudding than in words of praise." They must now trust for success to the continuance of the efforts of the League; and they must not suffer the League to linger for want of means. (Hear, hear.) Their expenditure was great, and their funds should be adequate to the objects. (Cheers.) Had their powers been more extended hitherto, the agitation would be nearer to its close at present. Had twenty Cobdens and twenty Brights been in the field at once, the impression which they had produced, wherever they had been, would now have been general throughout the country. He believed that a contribution to the League was seed set upon the rock, which would bring fruit in their own day; and, if not, might console those who had given, that they had promoted that best deed of charity not only to relieve distress as it existed, but to prevent its recurrence. For his own part he would say, that whatever small service he could render to the cause should ever be at its command; and that, had he the same health, leisure and power, as his distinguished friend whom he hoped was now about to address them, he should be quite ready to pursue the same course as he was doing. The honourable member resumed his seat amid the long-continued applause of the meeting.

Mr. COBDEN, M.P., was next called upon, and was received with loud cheers and waving of handkerchiefs. He congratulated the meeting on the speech they had just heard, and said, having their leader in this question amongst them, he thought it was only due to him to offer him all the encouragement in their power. Considering the position in society which he held, there were few men, unless made of very stern stuff indeed, who could have pursued the straightforward, undeviating, and consistent course which had marked his conduct on this question. Let them hope that in these times, when his political virtue would be put to a harder trial still, to resist compromises and offers of all kinds, to stave off full justice,—let them hope that in these times he would find support and encouragement to carry him through. (Loud applause.) He would state most sincerely, that so long as the conducting of this question in the House of Commons remained in the hands of Mr. Villiers, he should have the most implicit confidence in its safety (hear, hear); and he might add of any future Government which undertook the settlement of this question,—that the confidence with which they treated Mr. Villiers would be no bad test of the confidence which it deserved at the hands of the country. (Loud cheers.) After entering at some length into the question of repeal, the hon. member concluded as follows:—My hon. friend (the Chairman) has said something of which I would say a word. I am not much of a casuist, and I must bear in mind that he will have the opportunity of replying immediately after I sit down; but he said he would be more thankful for repeal to Whigs than Tories. (Laughter.) I do not pretend to say how much we should be thankful to this or that party for that which we claim as a right; but, if I might express an opinion, I think we generally give the greatest amount of gratitude for favours when they come from quarters least expected. (Laughter and applause.) Now, I must confess that I am one who don't expect Sir Robert Peel to repeal the Corn Law. I am not quite sure that Lord John will do that either; but perhaps my friend Mr. Cheetham will do this kindness for us, as he is the conscience-keeper of that party. (Laughter.) But, though we will not put in the scales to try the exact amount of gratitude we should give to either party, this I will say, that the League don't care a rush from what party they have it. (Applause.) Therefore don't let any man suppose his political opinions will be outraged by joining the League. (Hear, hear.) I have frequently thought it over, and I do not think there is a single question we could incorporate with the Corn Law agitation but would scatter us to the winds. (Hear, hear.) It would make us a rope of sand. (Hear, hear.) Mr. Cobden referred to the letter of the Marquis of Westminster and the effect it was producing. He congratulated the member for Ashton on the support given him to-night by his constituents, and said he had no doubt it would be to the people of Ashton themselves a triumph that they had contributed so largely to the settlement of this great world's question. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. R. R. MOORE then announced the following subscriptions:—

| | Last Year. | This Year. |
|---|------------|------------|
| Robert Ashton, Dukinfield-hall .. | £100 | £500 |
| Thomas Ashton, Flowery-field .. | 200 | 400 |
| Robert Lees and Sons, Dukinfield .. | 200 | 400 |
| J. B. Rayner, Esq., Ashton .. | 100 | 300 |
| J. Whitaker and Sons, Hurst .. | 100 | 300 |
| Wm. Bayley and Brothers, Stalybridge .. | 100 | 300 |
| Samuel Ashton, Pole-bank .. | 100 | 300 |
| Geo. Cheetham and Sons, Stalybridge .. | 100 | 300 |
| Nathan Buckley and Sons, Carr-hill .. | — | 200 |
| Robert Platt, Stalybridge .. | 50 | 150 |
| Abel Buckley, Ryecroft .. | 50 | 100 |
| J. S. Buckley, ditto .. | 50 | 100 |
| Charles Howard, Hyde .. | 100 | 100 |
| Richard Matley .. | 100 | 100 |
| Hyde, Sons, and Sowerby, Dukinfield .. | 50 | 100 |
| Randall Hibbert, Godley .. | 20 | 60 |
| Thomas Mayson, Ashton .. | 25 | 50 |
| J. Knott and Son, Ashton .. | 20 | 25 |
| Binns, Deane, and Co., Dukinfield .. | 25 | 25 |
| J. Marler and Brothers, Newton .. | 10 | 20 |
| Geo. Higginbottom, Ashton .. | 10 | 20 |

The following amounts were subsequently added:—D. and E. Seville, Lees, 50*l.*; a few of Mr. Muson's workpeople, 3*l.* 12*s.*; Wm. Batty, Andershaw, 10*l.*; Wm. Denby, Dukinfield, 1*l.*; Henry Newton, Ashton, 1*l.* 5*s.*; J. and M. Bateman, 2*l.*; James Cartwright, Hooley-hill, 1*l.* 1*s.*; Wright Cartwright, ditto, 1*l.*; Abel Wimpenny, 10*l.*; Mr. Sutcliffe, 1*l.* 1*s.*; Mrs. Sutcliffe, 1*l.* 1*s.*; W. H., and J. Waterhouse (double), 2*l.* 2*s.*; Ely Hollingworth (new), 1*l.* 1*s.*; J. D. Gee, 1*l.*; E. Lee, 10*l.* (double); John Hyam, 10*s.* (new); Hindley and Sutcliffe, 20*l.* (new); Thomas Shaw, 2*l.*; Orlando Oldham, Gee-cross, 5*l.*; Dukinfield Coal Company, 25*l.*; Robert Jamieson, 1*l.*; James Cartwright, Dukinfield-hall, 5*l.* (new); James Ogden and Sons, 10*l.* (double); J. Davis, 1*l.* 1*s.*; Cryer and Lees, 10*l.*; E. Moorhouse, 5*l.* 5*s.*; John Brooks, sen., 1*l.* 1*s.*; J. W. Goodall, 5*l.* (paid); John Brooks, 2*l.* (double); J. J., 10*l.*; Robert Whitaker, 1*l.*; Wm. Shaw, 1*l.*; John Woolley, 10*l.*; Wm. Clewley, 2*l.*; a Lady, 1*l.*; Ditto, 1*l.*; Mrs. Reynier, Park-view, 10*l.* (new); John Gartside, 10*l.*; a Lady (new sub.), 1*l.* 1*s.*; A. Andrew, 1*l.* 1*s.*; S. Andrew, 1*l.* 1*s.*; O. Worrall, 1*l.*; Edw. Whitehead, 10*s.*; R. Hunter (new), 2*s.* 6*d.*; Miss Andrew, 1*l.*; H. Lees and Sons, 20*l.*; H. Howarth, 1*l.* 1*s.*; a Portrait of her Majesty in Gold—a sovereign (laughter); B. Goodfellow, 10*l.* (new sub.); a Friend, 4*s.*; Ditto, 2*s.* 6*d.*; Ditto, 2*s.* 6*d.*; William Outhwaite, 1*l.* 1*s.*; John Johnson, 1*l.* 1*s.*; Peter Shaw and Son, 20*l.*; Ralph Ashton, 1*l.*; a Friend, 5*s.*; Wm. Tweedale, 1*l.*; John Lowe, 1*l.*; William Ingham, 1*l.*; Stanley and Chadwick, 15*l.* (threefold last subscription); Charles Andrew, 5*l.*; a Friend, 5*s.*; R. N., 1*l.*; his Wife, 5*s.*; John Garlick, 3*s.* 6*d.*; Matley Newall and J. Platt, 1*l.*; B. Gallahop, 1*l.* 1*s.*; the hon. member for Knaresborough, the amount he feels for the poor, 6*d.* (loud laughter); John Clegg, 2*s.* 6*d.*; G. Jos. Hyde, 10*l.*; Wm. Peacock, Denton Lodge, 5*l.*; James Brooks, jun., 1*l.*; a Chartist from Droylsden, 2*s.* 6*d.*; Thos. Hurst, 1*l.*; a Handloom Weaver (new sub.),

2*s.* 6*d.*; a Friend, 2*s.* 6*d.*; G. S., 5*s.*; Jas. Schofield, jun., 1*l.*; Mrs. P. Saville's challenge, 1*l.*; the challenge accepted by Miss Kenworthy, 1*l.*; and Miss M. Kenworthy, 1*l.*; ditto, by Mrs. J. S. Buckley, 1*l.* 1*s.*; Taylor and Rockliffe, Horton, 10*l.* 10*s.*; Thomas Collier, 1*l.*; Isaiah Crowther, 1*l.*; John Wright, 1*s.*; James Glossop, 1*l.* 1*s.*; Alfred Bennett, 1*l.*; John Howarth, 2*s.* 6*d.*; William Andrews, 2*s.* 6*d.*; John Linney, 2*s.* 6*d.*; John Ogden, 5*s.*; an Old Woman, 5*s.*; William Buckley, 2*l.*; Thomas Thornley, 1*l.*; Fred. Tinker, surgeon, 1*l.*; a Chartist, 1*s.*; George Shaw, 10*s.*; Dr. Campbell, 1*l.*; Samuel Cowley, 3*l.* 3*s.*; Joseph Tinker, 5*s.*; Jos. Ryder, 2*s.* 6*d.*; Jos. Taylor, 4*d.*; Wm. Lilly, 2*s.* 6*d.*; more Bread and fewer Potatoes, 4*s.*; H. Gartside, solicitor, 4*l.* 4*s.*; John Olliver, draper, 1*l.*; collected by a Lady, 1*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.*; Mrs. G. Muirhouse, 1*l.*; the Chairman, 100*l.* (loud cheers); Edward Stokes, 1*l.*; Irish Repealer, 4*s.*; a Working Man, 2*s.*; Frederick Cooper, surgeon, 2*l.* 2*s.*; Mr. Cooke, 1*l.* 1*s.*; George Andrew, 1*l.*; a Lady, 1*l.*; a Friend, 1*l.*; a Friend 5*s.*; Alfred Andrew, 2*l.* 2*s.* (quadruple sub.); John Brooks, jun., solicitor, 1*l.* 10*s.*; John Crompton, 2*s.* 6*d.* (new sub.); E. S., 5*s.*; Timothy Broadbent, 1*l.*; John Andrew, 10*s.*; John Lilly, 5*s.*; John Graves, 5*s.*; Dent and Tinker, 1*l.*; Ralph Ogden, 1*l.*; Thomas Rowland, 5*s.*; Robert Platt, 1*l.*; Charles Ashton, 5*s.*; Knivett, a shopkeeper, 1*s.*; Thomas Mills, 1*l.*; Benj. Wainwright, 1*l.*; Jervis Lee, 2*s.* 6*d.*; Wm. Knowles, 5*s.*; Thos. Adshead, 2*s.* 6*d.*; John Sangars, 2*s.* 6*d.*; a Friend, 2*s.*; Uriah Chadwick (new sub.), 1*l.*; a Friend, 1*l.* 1*s.*; a Challenge for a Sweetheart, 2*s.* 6*d.*; My Intended, 10*s.*; Wm. Tinker, 2*l.* 2*s.*; Wm. Sidebottom, 5*l.*; John Siddall, 5*s.*; My Sweetheart, 5*s.*; T. Warhurst and Son, 1*l.*; Edward Winstanly, 1*l.*; Big Fiddle, Hyde, 2*s.* 6*d.*; Thomas Bentley, 5*s.*; Samuel Peacock, Denton, 5*l.*; John Hallsworth, 5*s.* more. Mr. Moore now announced that the amount collected in the room was 492*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.*. Zechariah Peacock, 10*l.*; a Closer, 12*s.*; the Misses Kershaw, 1*l.*; Orlando Oldham's workpeople, 10*l.*; Mr. Hudson, 10*s.*; Robert Bardsley and his wife, 10*s.*

The total subscription was ultimately announced to be 4338*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.*. The announcement was received with tremendous applause.

Mr. J. CHEETHAM moved a vote of thanks to the Hon. C. P. Villiers, the Deputation, and the League.

Mr. THOMAS ASHTON seconded the motion, which was carried by acclamation.

Col. THOMPSON acknowledged the compliment: and after a vote of thanks, moved by Mr. COBDEN, to the Chairman, the meeting separated.

BACUP.

JANUARY 4, 1844.

A meeting in aid of the Great League Fund has been this evening held in the Ebenezer Baptist Chapel, Edmund Dawson, Esq., of Mount Pleasant, in the chair. The chapel was filled in every part, and on the platform we observed Robert Munn, Esq., John Lord, Esq.; Thomas, David, and Peter Whitehead, Esqrs., Holymount; John Howarth, Esq.; John Earnshaw, Esq.; H. R. Ford, Esq., of Thistlemount; John Dawson, Esq.; John Aitken, Esq.; George Hamilton, Esq., the Rev. Thomas Dawson, and Simpson Todd, &c. &c.

The CHAIRMAN opened the proceedings with some brief and forcible remarks. It could not, he said, be expected that he should take up any of their time by attempting to make a speech, seeing he was surrounded with gentlemen on the platform so much better qualified to do so, who, by their zeal and indefatigable exertions, were known throughout the length and breadth of the land as the able advocates of Free Trade, and who had been instrumental in diffusing much light on that momentous question: he wished, however, to express his hearty concurrence in the views they took on the subject. He believed that to tax corn at all was to contravene the manifest intention of the wise Creator, who designed that the superabundance of one country should supply the deficiency of another. He believed that the Corn Laws were unjust because they benefited the rich at the expense of the industrious poor, because they existed for the advantage of a minority to the detriment of a majority, for the benefit of 30,000 landowners to the injury of 26,000,000 of our fellow-countrymen. On these grounds, and many others which might be assigned, he felt desirous that these laws should be abrogated; and he hoped that the time was not far distant when they would be totally repealed.

Rev. THOMAS DAWSON, Baptist minister, said:—It would be unpardonable in me to trespass upon your time this evening; having, however, attended every public meeting of the Anti-Corn Law League which has been held in Bacup since the commencement of the mighty, increasing, and hitherto successful struggle for a total repeal of the Corn Laws, I may be allowed one moment for the purpose of giving expression to a few articles of my creed regarding them. 1st, I believe they are decidedly opposed to the word of God: "He that withholdeth corn, the people shall curse him; but blessing shall be upon the head of him that selleth it." (Prov. xi., 26.) As a minister of this word I am in faithfulness bound to oppose them, and warn all that support them of the curse of the people. 2ndly, I believe them to be unjust, immoral, and inhuman. He that professeth to be a poor man's friend, and yet upholds or supports the Corn Laws, whose direct tendency is to raise the price of his bread, diminish his employment, and reduce his wages, must be either notoriously ignorant, inconsistent, or hypocritical. 3rdly, I believe them to be directly opposed to the Providence of God. It is evident, from the different productions of the earth, the facilities of communication by the vast ocean, inland seas, and mighty rivers, that our gracious Creator, who has made of one blood all the nations of the world, intends that the superabundance of one place shall supply the destitution of another, and thus unite by the ties of mutual dependence and support all the members of His great family together. 4thly, I believe they impede the progress of Christian missions. I will suppose a nation awfully destitute of a spiritual provision for their eternal welfare. As Christian ministers and churches, we send them the Gospel; but as we seek an intercourse with them, they may justly object, and say, "Since you British people have enacted laws to exclude an intercourse with you, by exchanging the produce of our soil for the fruits of your labour, how can we believe that you are sincere in attempting to promote our spiritual welfare? First prove the soundness of your humanity, then we will consider the divinity of your religion." It is time that Christian ministers and churches—if they would be consistent, if they would not waste their time, money, and energy—should cleanse their hands of the sin

Cookcroft, 20l.; Messrs. J. and T. Gankroger, 20l.; Messrs. G. and W. Hinchcliffe, 15l.; Messrs. Horsfall, Slater, and Robinson, 20l.; Messrs. D. Oliver and Sons, 15l.; Mr. James Hodgson, 10l.; Messrs. B. Platt and Sons, 10l.; Messrs. J. and J. Hodgson, 10l.; Mr. John Sutcliffe, 10l.; Mr. G. Ashworth, 10l.; "Two Determined Leaguers, 5l.; Mr. Richard Gill, 5l.; Lady and Daughter, 5l.; "a Friend for himself, his wife, and eleven children, 5s. each," 3l. 5s.; Messrs. Slater and Gankroger, 5l.; Six Ladies, 3l.; Two Sisters from the Valley of Caldene, 2l. 2s.; Mrs. S. Cousin and Daughter, 2l. 2s.; Mrs. Barker, 2l.; a Conservative Voter, 1l.; Miss Mary, Jane, and Martha Oliver, 1l. 10s.; Mr. John Moorhouse, 1l. 1s.; Mr. Jas. Ashworth, 1l. 1s.; Mr. Samuel Oliver, 1l. 1s.; a Friend, 1l. 1s.; Mr. John Helliwell, 1l. 1s.; Mr. Robert Howard (surgeon), 1l. 1s.; Mrs. R. Oliver, 1l. 1s.; Mr. Samuel Chambers, 1l. 1s.; three Workingmen, 1l.; Rev. John Wright, 1l.; Free Trader, 1l.; Mr. James Greaves, 1l.; Mrs. Holmes, 1l.; No Fixed Duty, 1l.; Total Repealer, 1l.; True Leaguer, 1l.; a Repealer (quadruple), 1l.; Mrs. Hannah Slater, 1l.; Miss Horsfall, 1l.; Two Sisters, 1l.; No Fixed Duty, 1l.; Mr. Hugh Sugden, 1l.; Mr. John Sutcliffe, 1l.; Mrs. James Gankroger, 1l.; Miss Ada Oliver, 10s. 6d.; Miss Jane Oliver, 10s. 6d.; Miss Ellen Oliver, 10s. 6d.; Miss Ellen Holmes, 10s.; "No Sliding Scale" (new), 10s.; Mr. E. Greaves (new), 10s.; Mr. Thompson, 10s.; a Friend, 10s.; Mr. R. Crossley, 10s.; Miss E. J. Horsfall, 10s.; Mr. H. Horsfall, 10s.; Mr. Milton Horsfall, 5s.; Mr. Constantine, 5s.; Miss Anna, Ada, Fanny, Georgiana, and Wm. H. Hinchcliffe, 5s. each, 1l. 5s.; Mr. G. Greenwood, 5s.; Mr. T. Parkinson, 5s.; Mr. Richard Thomas, 5s.; Mrs. Sunderland, 5s.; Y. Z., 5s.; Sally and Mary Gankroger, 5s.; Mr. J. Longbottom, 5s.; "Free Trade," 5s.; Miss M. Slater, 5s.; Mr. John Slater, 5s.; Mrs. Ellen Sugden, 5s.; Miss Elizabeth Sugden, 5s.; Miss Martha Sugden, 5s.; Miss Sarah Jane Sugden, 5s.; Mr. Alfred Sugden, 5s.; a Repealer, 5s.; Z., 5s.; Mrs. Farrar, 4s.; Mr. Thomas Sanderson, 5s.; Mrs. Gankroger (additional), 5s.; Miss Fanny, Amanda, Grace, Hannah, and Susannah Hinchcliffe, 5s. each, 1l. 5s.; Miss Jane Gankroger, 5s.; Mr. Edwin Gankroger, 3s. 6d.; a Friend to Free Trade, 3s.; a Friend, 2s. 6d.; School-boy Prize, 2s. 6d.; Free Trader, 2s. 6d.; Teetotaler, 2s. 6d.; Mr. Thomas Crossley, 2s. 6d.; Mrs. Clegg, 2s. 6d.; a Repealer, 2s. 6d.; Mr. William Stansfield, 2s. 6d.; Mr. Morpeth Shackleton, 2s. 6d.; a Friend, 2s. 6d.; a Well-wisher, 2s. 6d.; Double last Year, 2s.; Mr. Joseph Sutcliffe, 1s.; Free Trade, 1s.; Working Man, 1s.; Snuttaker, 1s.

Mr. Moore then announced that the amount subscribed was 382l. 13s. (Applause.)

Mr. J. RILEY moved, and Mr. OLIVER seconded, a vote of thanks to the Chairman, which was carried unanimously.

The following has been received since the meeting:—John Hodgson, 20l., making a total of four hundred and two pounds. It is expected that the subscription will ultimately reach 500l.

FARSLEY ANTI-CORN-LAW MEETING.

A numerous and spirited meeting was held in this village on Wednesday evening, the 10th inst., for the purpose of originating a subscription in aid of the great League Fund of £100,000. On the motion of the Rev. FOSTER, seconded by Mr. DUFFELL, the chair was taken by Mr. DAVID HAINSWORTH, who opened the proceedings by explaining the objects of the League, and detailing its operations since its first formation, and more especially during the year just closed.

The Rev. Mr. FOSTER moved the first resolution:—"That in the opinion of this meeting the Corn Laws are a great evil."

And, in so doing, very pithily described the various evils, physical, moral, and social, which the Corn Laws produce.

The resolution was seconded by R. HOLDSWORTH, an operative, in a speech full of energy and strong sense, and carried amidst great applause.

Mr. Peter Hainsworth, Mr. T. Plint of Leeds, and other gentlemen addressed the meeting. We regret that a press of matter prevents us giving details of the proceedings, which were of an interesting character.

Subscriptions were handed in to the treasurer, amounting to £40 3s., viz., Messrs. P. and D. Hainsworth, £10; George Andrews, £5; John Hainsworth, son, £5; Richard Varley, £5; William Varley, £5; John Harrison, £2; R. Hainsworth, £1 10s.; Sam. Hollins, £1 1s.; Nathan Overend, £1; James Roberts, £1; David Marshall, £1; A. Hainsworth, £1. The subscriptions already amount to nearly double that of last year.

Thanks were voted to the chairman, and the meeting separated.

BURY.—From the lateness of the hour at which the report of the Bury meeting reached us last week, we were obliged to omit the list of subscriptions, which is as follows:—

Richard Ashton, Esq., Limefield, 200l.; John and Edmund Grundy, Heap Bridge, 100l.; Thomas and James Wrigley, Bridge Hall, 100l.; Edmund Grundy, Esq., Park Hills, near Bury, 50l.; Richard Walker, Esq., M.P., Woodhill, near Bury, 50l.; John Grundy, Esq., Belle Vue, near Bury, 50l.; Walker, Smith, and Co., Bury, 200l.; James Wrigley, Esq., Ashmeadow, 50l.; T. A. and J. Grundy, solicitors, Bury, 30l.; James Farrar, manufacturer, Chapelfield, 25l.; John Openshaw, Bolton-street, Bury, 20l.; J. and J. Porritt, Dearden-clough, Edenfield, near Bury, 20l.; Thomas Aitken, Chatterhouse, near Edenfield, 10l.; John Aitken, Chatterhouse, near Edenfield, 5l.; Deeply Vale Workmen, 10l. 2s.; Robinson Jackson, Tithe Barn-street, Bury, 5l. 5s.; Mrs. Jackson, Tithe Barn-street, Bury, 2l. 2s.; Jas. Jackson, Tithe Barn-street, Bury, 2s. 6d.; Gavin Peacock, Hollins Vale, near Bury, 5l. 5s.; Bartholomew Hamer, New-road, Bury, 5l. 5s.; Joseph Wood, New-road, Bury, 5l. 5s.; John Parkinson, Manchester-street, Bury, 6l.; Mrs. Parkinson and Family, Manchester-street, Bury, 1l.; John Holt and Brothers, Barlow-street, Bury, 5l.; R. T. Grundy, Stanley-street, Bury, 5l.; Wm. M'Lean, draper, Bolton-street, Bury, 5l.; James Henderson, Garden-street, Bury, 5l.; Samuel Mason, at Walker, Smith, and Co.'s, Bury, 5l.; J. Park, Stanley-street, Bury, 5l.; Rev. F. Howorth, Silver-street, Bury, 5l.; Messrs. Porritt's Workmen, 4l.; J. Kay, Forth-street, Bury, 4l.; M. Mansbottom, Woodmannufactor, Shuttleworth, near Bury, 4l.; James Liney, Heap Bridge, near Bury, 3l.; John Lord, Union-square, near Bury, 3l.; Peter Valentine, Rock-street, 3l. 5s.; E. Ackroyd, Fleet-street, 2l.; Robert Holt, Woodroad, near Bury, 2l.; John Mansell, Bolton-street, Bury, 2l.; David Smith, Roobdale-road, Bury, 2l.; John Pickering, Bolton-street, Bury, 2l. 10s.; Peter Sharples, Bolton-street, Bury, 1l.; Mrs. John Walker, Belle Vue, 2l. 2s.; John Russell Walker, Charles Walker, Samuel Walker, Belle Vue, 3l. 3s.; Robert Wood, New-road, Bury, 2l.; Jas. Hacking, Stanley-street, Bury, 2l. 2s.; Joseph Kay, ironmonger, Fleet-street, 1l.; Geo. Barnes, Stanley-street, Bury, 1l. 1s.; John Halstead, Eden-street, Bury, 1l. 1s.; Chrstr. Clemshaw, Bolton-street, 1l.; John Barritt, druggist, Rock-street, 1l. 1s.; Arthur Bentley, John-street, Bury, 1l.; Isaac Whitworth, Water Mill, near Bury, 1l. 1s.; John Cornall, Bolton-street, 1l.; Alice Haworth, Mr. Ashton's, Limefield, 5s.; Two Young Ladies, Wellishers, 5s.; Frank Grundy, Stanley-street, 5s.; James Eccles, 2s. 6d.; Ed. Whitehead, Bolton-street, 2s. 6d.; John Towers, Cross-street, 2s. 6d.; James Webster, Whitehead Bridge, 3s.; Henry Rostron, Radcliffe (Roughstone), 2s.; Henry Fell, Overfields, 2s. 6d.; a Widow with a large family, 2s.; a Young Man, 2s. 6d.; Sidney Smith, 1s.; James Sharples, Bolton-street, 1s.; a Sincere Friend, J. W., 6d.; Robert Parks, surgeon, Bury, 2l. 2s.; Harry Grundy, Stanley-street, 5s.; One Hat (collected in the room), 5s.; One Hat (collected in the room), 1l. 14s.; a Friend, 2s.; James Buckley, Rock-street, 1l.; A Friend, per Robert Jackson, 2s. 6d.; John Allanson, surgeon, Bury, 2l. 2s.; Thomas Openshaw, Red Lion Inn, Bury, 2l.; Richard Lord, Fleet-street, Bury, 1l. 1s.; Wm. Carnes, Union-street, 1l.; Wm. Wapburton, Bury Bridge, 1l.; Ed. Herbert Grundy, Bridge Hall, 1l.; Fred. Leigh Grundy, Bridge Hall, 1l.; Robert Turner, Derby-street, Bury, 1l.; Thomas Openshaw, Eden-street, Bury, 1l.; Jas. Wood, at Messrs. Walker's, Bury, 1l.; Miss Butcher, Rock-street, Bury, 1l.; William Ashton, Limefield, 1l.; Edward Ashton, Limefield, 1l.; Thomas Ashton, Limefield, 1l.; George Ashton, Limefield, 1l.; Henry Ashton, Limefield, 1l.; Arthur Ashton, Limefield, 1l.; John Daniel Ashton, Limefield, 1l.; Squire Diggle and J. Rudman, at Messrs. Walker's, Bury, 1l.; John Bird, hairdresser, Stanley-street, 1l.; W. Mellowdew, Ramsbottom, 1l.; Adam Kay, Fleet-street, 1l. 1s.; Wm. Robinson, machine-maker, Bury, 1l. 1s.; Joseph Burgoyne, Whitehead Bridge, Bury, 1l.; Richard Greenhalgh, Frederick-street, Bury, 1l.; W. Johnson, Garden-street, Bury, 1l.; John Horrox, Daisey Field, near Bury, 1l.; Henry Smith, Georgiana-street, Bury, 1l.; John Collins, manager, Gigg-mills, near Bury, 1l.; John Mitchell, Bridge Hall Paper-mills, near Bury, 1l. 1s.; Robt. Bleasdale, Derby-street, Bury, 1l.; Benj. Crapper, Whitehead Bridge, 1l.; R. Mason, Agur-street, Bury, 1l.; George Walker, Bolton-street, Bury, 1l.; Edward Mucklow, Bolton New-road, Bury, 1l.; Thomas Holt, Agur-street, Bury, 1l.; Henry Peel, ironmonger, Bury, 1l.; Anti-monopolist, 1l.; William Bowman, Bolton-street, Bury, 1l.; Robt. Hall, Walker-terrace, Bury, 1l.; Jacob Farrow, Bridge-hall, near Bury, 1l. 1s.; Adam Parkinson, dyer, Hollins-vale, 1l.; Robt. Shaw, butcher, Bury, 1l.; J. Lethwaite, Bolton-street, Bury, 1l.; Chas. Wood, carver and gilder, Fleet-street, 1l.; John Arthur Grundy, Belle Vue, 1l.; Robert Ellis Grundy, Belle Vue, 1l.; Abraham Wood, Thomas-row, beer-seller, 1l.; Henry Raine, Rock-street, 10s.; Mrs. Park, Stanley-street, 10s.; Dennis Barker, Union-square, 10s.; Mrs. John Kay, Rock-street, 10s. 6d.; John Healey, Paradise-street, 10s.; Wm. Kay, ditto, 10s.; Jas. Turner, Derby-street, 7s. 6d.; Robt. Sandiford, Bolholt, 5s.; Jas. Clayton, Free-town, 5s.; a Young Lady, 5s.; Wm. Bings, Bolton-street, 5s.; a Lady (Martha Cowell, Woodhill), 5s.; a Young Lady (Silence Roscoe, ditto), 5s.; a Power-loom Weaver (James Kay, Paradise-street), 5s.; Jas. Henderson, jun., Garden-street, 5s.; Ellen Hardcastle, (Mr. Aston's, Limefield), 5s.

A great meeting in aid of the League Fund took place at Glasgow on Wednesday night, but, up to the time of going to press, we had received no report of the proceedings. We are also obliged to omit the report, which only reached us when we were going to press, of the great Anti-Corn-Law Tea-party, held on Monday evening at Carlisle. Mr. Bright, M.P., attended from the League. Upwards of £400 was subscribed to the League Fund. Particulars of the proceedings in our next.

ANTI-CORN-LAW MEETING AT LEAK, STAFFORDSHIRE.—A spirited meeting was held at Leak, on Wednesday evening, in aid of the great League fund. It was addressed by Messrs. Falvey and Acland, as a deputation from the League, and the subscription during the evening amounted to £37, which it is expected will eventually be augmented to £50. These sums are small when contrasted with some of the subscriptions in Yorkshire and Lancashire; but it should be remembered that Leak has a population of not more than 19,000 or 13,000, and that its contribution to the League last year did not exceed £18; so that now it has more than doubled its total subscription of last year, and it is expected will eventually treble it.

LEAGUE MEETING AT SHEFFIELD.—We are glad to be at length enabled to announce that the League deputation will visit Sheffield on Wednesday the 24th of January. We cannot at present name the deputation, but we have great hopes that it will include Mr. Cobden himself. Our borough members will be invited, and we indulge the confident hope that we shall have the pleasure to see them both.—Sheffield Independent.

HULL.—The Free-Trade Committee, of which Mr. William Lowthrop is chairman, appointed for regulating the great Anti-Corn-Law meeting, to be held in Hull on the 29th inst., is actively at work, preparing for such a demonstration as has not been witnessed in this borough since the passing of the Municipal Reform Act. The members of the committee are, for the most part, men of influence and men of business; and it may only exert himself within his own sphere, the ultimate result will exceed their most sanguine expectations.—Hull Advertiser.

ANTI-CORN-LAW TEA PARTY.—On Monday evening week a tea party was held at Mr. Croft's, the Red

Lion Hotel, in this town, which was attended by some of the more active members of the Preston Anti-Corn-Law Association, to receive a deputation from the Council of the League, and to take steps for commencing a subscription in this town in aid of the £100,000 fund. After tea Mr. George Smith was called to the chair, when A. Prentice, Esq., who attended as a delegate from the League, stated the various expenses which the League were incurring—the meetings in Covent-garden Theatre, county meetings, deputations at elections, circulation of tracts, &c., for the defraying of which the League fund is now being collected. A committee, to carry into effect the object of the meeting, was then appointed.—Preston Chronicle.

SUNDERLAND ANTI-CORN-LAW ASSOCIATION.—On Wednesday evening a meeting of this association was held at the Bridge Hotel, Mr. Thos. Thompson in the chair. It was resolved, on the motion of Mr. G. Hardcastle, seconded by Mr. Joshua Wilson, "That the executive committee of this association be requested to take immediate steps for completing all requisite arrangements for the reception of Col. Thompson, Messrs. Cobden, Bright, &c., and that they also be requested to report the same to the next meeting of the association, to be held on Wednesday the 10th inst." [Those gentlemen are expected to visit this town on the 24th inst.]—Sunderland Herald.

LIVERPOOL ANTI-MONOPOLY ASSOCIATION.—A meeting of the electors of Everton and St. Anne's wards, convened by circular, was held in Lussell's Rooms, Great Richmond-street, on Friday evening the 5th inst., when a very excellent address was delivered by Mr. Murray, of Manchester, to about 110 electors. A deputation from the Anti-Monopoly Association attended, and invited from their opponents an expression of their opinions. This invitation called forth an interesting discussion, in which several gentlemen took part, and at the close the following resolution was carried with but one dissentient:—"That this meeting, convinced that all protection is robbery in disguise, and that the corn and provision laws have signally failed to benefit the farmer and farm-labourer, while they have been the fruitful source of misery and famine, pledge themselves to renewed exertions for their total, immediate, and unconditional repeal."—Liverpool Mercury.

GATESHEAD.—Mr. Crawshaw, the secretary of the Gateshead Free-Trade Society, delivered an address on the Corn Laws, on Wednesday evening the 4th inst., to a numerous audience, in the long room of the Grey Horse Inn, in this borough, including both the middle and working classes, and many Chartists. The lecturer, from beginning to end, was listened to with great attention, and was frequently applauded.—Gateshead Observer.

Mr. Cobden, in his speech at Bradford, said—"I say the Corn Law is unjust, and ought to be immediately repealed: where is the man that will meet me and oppose this proposition? Let any man meet me, I care not where, in the West Riding or elsewhere, only it shall be in public, in the open air, and maintain that the Corn Law is a just law, and ought to be maintained." Mr. Feargus O'Connor has addressed a letter to Mr. Cobden, accepting the challenge, and offering to discuss the proposition in public meetings, in the centre of the West Riding, on Kersall Moor, Manchester, and in the Market-place, Nottingham. Thus Feargus takes up his ground as an out-and-out stickler for the landlords' monopoly. He, in his letter, indignantly denies that he had ever received a farthing, or the promise of a farthing, for his public conduct; which is an allusion to Mr. Cobden's declaration, that "their (the Chartists) leaders are paid for it, and I know it." We believe Mr. Cobden is at present rather too well engaged to meet a man like Mr. O'Connor, who can argue on both sides of the same question—witness his speech at the Leeds Anti-Corn-Law meeting, on the 15th January, 1839, when Mr. O'Connor said, "I am wishful for a more extensive repeal of the Corn Laws than even the resolution would effect, for I am in favour of a total REPEAL OF THE CORN LAWS!" and he moved an amendment as follows:—"That we consider ALL restriction upon the importation of foreign grain as UNJUST in principle and INJURIOUS in its effects; nevertheless we are of opinion that no salutary alteration can be made in the present system until those for whose benefit the change is contemplated shall have a voice in the choice of those representatives to whom shall be intrusted the power of preventing the recurrence of so GREAT AN EVIL as the present Corn Laws!"—Leeds Mercury.

Mr. Cobden, M.P., Mr. Bright, M.P., and Colonel Thompson, having so many demands upon their time during the remainder of the Parliamentary recess, it is now doubtful whether they will be able to attend a public meeting in Gateshead as well as in Newcastle. It is more probable that an aggregate meeting of the inhabitants of the two boroughs will be held in Newcastle.

The total sum now subscribed in Gateshead, in aid of the League Fund, is about £23; in Newcastle, £200.

The Anti-Monopoly religious and political, neatly printed by Messrs. Bellkirk, of Grey-street, Newcastle, has made its first appearance, and answers consistently to its title.

A FACT FOR FREE-TRADERS.—Nearly the whole of the forty-five millions of Asiatics go without stockings. Most of them would become our customers if our ports were open.

PRICE OF SUGAR AND RICE IN INDIA.—By the last overland mail there are advices from Bengal to October 11. At that time the market price of sugar, at Calcutta, was 10s. 6d. per ton of 20 cwt. Allowing 10s. for the cost of freight and expenses to Europe, it appears that the Indian sugar may be delivered in a ton at 10s. 6d. per 112lb., or about THREE PENCE less than the price of rice at Calcutta.

REVIEW.

Chronicles of Froissart and Monstrelet. Translated by W. Johnes. (See League, No. 10, p. 152.) London: W. Smith.

THIRD NOTICE.

The connexion between agricultural and manufacturing prosperity was no where more clearly manifested than in the Netherlands, during the palmy days of the commercial prosperity of the Flemish cities. The foreign ecclesiastics and nobles, who visited the courts of the Earls of Flanders and their successors the Dukes of Burgundy, were astounded at the high degree of cultivation to which the fields were brought, and the great extent of comfort possessed by the peasants. It was in consequence of the demand created by manufactures for agricultural produce that the dykes of Holland were first created, and land thus rescued from the dominion of the sea. During the wars between the feudal nobility and the commercial aristocracy these dykes were frequently attacked by the several parties; but in no instance did the armies of the

When the sovereignty was transferred by marriage to the Dukes of Burgundy, the citizens of Ghent received their new ruler with a magnificence which excited the admiration of all Europe, and placed the Dukes of Burgundy in the highest rank of political influence though not of nominal title.

The Dukes of Burgundy, wiser than the Earls of Flanders, soon saw that the prosperity of the agricultural provinces subject to their sway was greatly advanced by the demand for their produce, which the vicinity of a large and wealthy manufacturing population created, and they therefore respected the rights of trade and the freedom of commerce.

But the connexion between the prosperity of the manufacturing and agricultural communities had been perceived and understood at an earlier period by the Belgian farmers themselves. They knew the advantage of a near and convenient market for their produce; they saw that lands were brought into cultivation which would have lain quite barren had not such demand stimulated the outlay of capital necessary to render the land available for the purposes of the farmer. This is a point of vast importance, which has been too much neglected in the various discussions that have arisen on the subject of the Corn Laws. The advocates for this monopoly tacitly assume that the consumption of corn and other provisions is a fixed, or very nearly a fixed, quantity; but it is easily demonstrable that one-fourth of the population is at this moment miserably underfed; and if that proportion of the underfed, by increased employment and consequently by an increased receipt of wages, was raised to such a condition as would allow of the purchase of adequate and full consumption, there would be such an increased demand for agricultural produce as would far more than outbalance any loss from competition with foreign supply.

We know an instance of a farm in Lancashire which was rented at fifty pounds a-year before factories were established in its vicinity; the tenant who held it was unable to raise the rent, and a debt accumulated which threatened him with utter ruin. His lease expired just at the time that some extensive mills and print-works were established in his neighbourhood; his landlord refused to renew the lease unless he consented to pay double his former rent; hope was strong within him, and he agreed to the terms, not, however, without some desperate misgivings and anxious doubts. But such prosperity did the establishment of manufactures bring to his agriculture, that in less than five years, with a double rent, he paid off the heavy debts which he had incurred at a low rent. Many similar examples of the increase of agricultural prosperity consequent on the increase of trade and commerce are displayed in the history of the states of Burgundy; but, unfortunately, the continuation of the same annals furnish the converse of the scene, and exhibit a rapid decline of the profits and prosperity of the farmers consequent on the decay of trade.

Let any practical agriculturist ask himself whether a poor or a rich population is likely to furnish the better class of customers? A child can answer the question, and thus refute the atrocious absurdity and absurd atrocity of the editor of the Standard, who declared that England's condition would not be deteriorated if all the manufactories of the north of England were swept from the face of the earth. Every man who has anything to sell is interested in enabling others to buy; like every other class of traders, farmers must be benefited by every measure which increases the means and consequent power of consumption of their customers. Is not every Essex farmer deeply and obviously concerned in supporting the London power of consumption? It is in the London market that he finds sale for his produce; and if by some perverse legislation the metropolis should be changed into a vast workhouse of paupers, the ruin of the London houses would spread desolation over the fields of Essex. Let the farmers, then, understand that it is foreign commerce which enables London to consume their produce, and let them, therefore, wage war on the monopolies which threaten the ruin of their consumers.

In the long contests between the feudal lords and the commercial aristocracy, the operatives, contrary to general belief, proved better soldiers than the followers of the nobles, and frequently routed the chosen of their chivalry. This was particularly manifested at Dendermonde, the scene of some of the most interesting operations of the war.—See cut on top of next page.

It is remarkable that all the able statesmen and aged counsellors of the Burgundian courts uniformly supported the rights of the mercantile and commercial classes, while monopoly and even direct plunder were patronised by the young and hot-headed sons of nobility, particularly when they were joined by Charles the Bold, when, as Count of Charolois, he prepared to levy war against his indulgent father. In the height of their indignation against his final impiety, the citizens of Durant hanged him in effigy. See second cut on next page.

ATTACK ON A SEA-DYKE. Monstrelet, II., 205.

merchants allow any injury to be done to the fences which secured the land from the encroachments of the waves.

Fiercely as the Flemings resisted the usurpations of their feudal lords, they never infringed their just rights; on the contrary, they exhibited towards them personally an affectionate and almost passionate loyalty, which no repetition of injury seemed to diminish. The elder Artavelde was murdered by the multitude, notwithstanding his many years of patriotic service, for proposing to transfer the sovereignty of Flanders to the English monarch; and the funeral of Earl Louis, the most virulent enemy of the trading community, was celebrated with a magnificence such as had not in that age been displayed at the obsequies of any king or emperor.

FUNERAL OF THE EARL OF FLANDERS. Froissart, II., 16.

ENTRY OF THE DUKE OF BURGUNDY INTO GHENT. Monstrelet, II., 256.

ATTACK ON DENDERMONDE. Froissart, I., 589.

THE COUNT DE CHAROLOIS HANGED IN EFFIGY. Monstrelet, II., 328.

In the course of the long struggle in Flanders, the Church for the most part supported the cause of the feudal monopoly, and excommunications by bell, book, and candle were frequently employed to terrify the ignorant and the credulous.

EXCOMMUNICATION. Monstrelet, I., 196.

The career of Charles the Bold will probably come again under our consideration, and we shall then trace the ruin which his violence, and still more the monopolies which he sanctioned, brought on the once flourishing cities of Flanders.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE $100,000 FUND.

Subscriptions received during the week ending Wednesday, Jan. 10, 1844.

N.B.—As the subscription list is made up from Wednesday to Wednesday, contributions received on Thursdays and Fridays are not published in the LEAGUE of the Saturday immediately succeeding, but are included in the list of the week following.

| | | | | |
|---|------------|------|----|----|
| S. P. Robinson, 57, Spring-gardens, | Manchester | $10 | 0 | 0 |
| G. C., do. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Cornelius Nichols, dyer, Hodge-lane, Salford, | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thos. Wood, 42, St. Stephen's street, | do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Thomas Thomson, 52, Shudehill, | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Joel Casper, 72, do., | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Daniel Croxford, 81, do., | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend, 61, do., | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. Hatherage, 59, do., | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mathew Thackaray, 51, do., | do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Wm. Darling, 41, do., | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thos. Rushworth, 53, do., | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Sheldon, 23, do., | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Jackson, 15, do., | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Jas. Perkins, Swan-street, | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Rothergill and Hall, 50, Swan-street, | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Tasker, 11, Thomas-street, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Wilkinson, 41, do., | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Walker, 63, do., | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Joseph Holland, 52, do., | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| J. King, jun., St. Ann's-square, | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Do., profits on a Queen Anne guinea, | do. | 1 | 4 | 0 |
| Small Sum, | do. | 0 | 7 | 10 |
| John Hastie, Doncaster | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Marsden, Magdalen, do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Illingworth, Fishergate, do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robt. Wood, New-street, do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Higham, Spring-gardens, do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thos. Bell, Nagg's Head, St. Sepulchre's Gate, | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Do., | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Dent Dale, Balby, near do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Small Sum from a little Boy at Shrewsbury .. | do. | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| Ralph Baily, Rusholme, Manchester | do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Abel Almond, 33, Rodney-street, Salford, Manchester | do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| J. and J. S. Tribe, Chatham, per John Gladby | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Thornton, Hyde, near Manchester, per S. Lees | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Johnson, Congleton, Cheshire .. | do. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. Johnson, do., do. .. | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Chas. Johnson, do., do. .. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Reade Johnson, do., do. .. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Johnson, do., do. .. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Edwin Johnson, do., do. .. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Johnson, do., do. .. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Rev. J. Ragland, Hindley, Lancashire .. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Benson, 2, Cross-street, Manchester | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Richard Smith Benson, 2, do., do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thos. and Robt. Barnes, Jackson-street, do. | do. | 100 | 0 | 0 |
| C. Hindley, Esq., M.P., Dukensfield Lodge, near do. | do. | 50 | 0 | 0 |
| The Workpeople of Messrs. Baxter, Brothers, and Co's Mill, Glamis, Forfarshire .. | do. | 7 | 0 | 0 |
| Stourbridge, per Wm. Ackroyd .. | do. | 15 | 19 | 0 |
| James Howarth, 17, Oxford-street, Manchester | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Robert Foulkes, 28, do., do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Marshall, 38, London-road, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John and Nathaniel Phillips and Co., do. | do. | 500 | 0 | 0 |
| Samuel Whiteley, 17, Oldfield-road, do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Conservative, per George Horsfield .. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Jas. and Josh. Higson, 34, Suckville-st., Manchester | do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Arrowsmith and Son, Bolton .. | do. | 50 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Briggs, 7, Mount-street, Salford | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Robt. Jones, 29, Lever-street, Manchester | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Henry Spencer Harrison, 10, King-street, do. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thos. Satherthwaite, Chapel-st., Salford, do. | do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Jas. Hardy, 79, Union-street, Ardwick, do. | do. | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| William Wilkinson, Cheetham Hill, do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Free Trader, per W. Evans, do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Jas. Caldwell, 42, Clifford street, C.-on-M., do. | do. | 2 | 10 | 0 |
| Geo. Binks, jun., Bolton (2nd donation) | do. | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| D. Hordern, Walton-bridges, Cannon-st., Manchester | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| A Mother for her Infant Daughter, per J. B. Smith, Manchester .. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Glover, Baker-street, Enfield .. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| R. M. Munro, Bury Farm, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Chas. David Harper, Chase-side, do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Small Sum, do. | do. | 0 | 6 | 6 |
| Wilson Perry, Whitehaven .. | do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| George Pelle, do. .. | do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Ralph Forster, do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Samuel K. Gomme, St. Austle, Cornwall | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Miller and Mitchell, Allum-street, Manchester | do. | 30 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Hopps, Quebec-street, Wakefield .. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Gloyne, Westgate, do. .. | do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Wm. Naylor, tailor, do. .. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Henry Hewitt, 51, Market-street, Manchester | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| John Andrews, Church Gates, do. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thos. Greaves, Tipping-street, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Whittaker, Great Ancoats-street, do. | do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Hugh Roberts, Hilton-street, do. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Edwd. Birkett, Zara-street, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thos. Briggs, jun., Sharp-street, do. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Mark Carter, Oldham-road, Newton, do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Samuel Yarwood, Cow-lane, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Joseph Smith, 15, New Brown-street, do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Naylor, 113, Piccadilly, do. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Naylor, Smithy-door, do. | do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Peter Smith & Friend, Francis-st., Strangeways, do. | do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| T. P. Bond, 90, London-road, do. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Robt. Naylor, 113, Piccadilly, do. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| G. H. N., per Jas. Aspell, do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| S. K., per Jas. Aspell, do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend, per do., do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| M. Duffield, Princess-street, do. | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Cull, baker, Clarendon .. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Walter Westmacott do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Alex. Bealey, Three Horse Shoes Inn, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George Bevin, solicitor, do. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Smith, surgeon, do. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Rev. F. Bewley, do. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Rev. F. Horsfield, do. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Richard Budd, do. | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Chas. and David Gamble, St. Helen's, per George Robinson, Warrington .. | do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| T. B., per Frederick Hilton .. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend, per Mr. Harbottle .. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robt. Blackburn, Granby-row, Manchester | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| — Smith, Broughton-street, Salford, do. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Webster, 181, Every-street, do. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Robt. Edwards, Beswick Potteries, near do. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Joseph Gornall, Newton Heath, do. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend, per Joseph Barratt, do. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Barnes, do., do. | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Charles Barnes, do., do. | do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Barnes, do., do. | do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| James Barnes, do., do. | do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| George Barnes, do., do. | do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| P. H. and Son, per John Brindle | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Riley, sen., Bake-lane, Edge-hill, Liverpool | do. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Edward W. Blake Brayley, Russell Institution, Great Coram-street .. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Wild, 45, Moonditch .. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| R. H. Brackstone, 124, Wood-street .. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Rev. Daniel Trotman, Chippenham, Wilts .. | do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Wallen, Commercial-road East .. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| George Tripp, Tavistock-place, Tavistock-square .. | do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| W. Snow, 6, Lane's-buildings, Edward-street, Kingsland-road .. | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Gregory, 1, Twickenham-terrace, London-field, Hackney .. | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| E. Kent, 19, Surrey-street .. | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |

| | | | | | | | | | | | |
|--|----|----|---|---|-----|----|---|---|----|---|---|
| Thomas Hartley, 44, London-road, Preston | 41 | 0 | 0 | A Chartist | 41 | 0 | 0 | Harvey and Co. | 41 | 0 | 0 |
| P. K. Reynolds, Lynn | 1 | 0 | 0 | John Venn, 12, Wapping | 0 | 0 | 0 | James Russell, Nether Hoylands, near | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Gibson, 98, Briggate | 1 | 0 | 0 | Wm. Rockliff, 84, Vauxhall-road | 1 | 1 | 0 | John Clarke, Kearsforth Hall, near | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Anthony Wrenn, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | H. Mansfield, Che-ter-st., Birkenhead, near | 0 | 0 | 0 | William Taylor, Redbrook, near | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| George Fawcett, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | J. Robinson and Son, 8, Exchange buildings | 2 | 0 | 0 | J. H. Twissell | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Small Sumo | 0 | 4 | 0 | J. T. | 1 | 0 | 0 | Jonathan Carnley | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Rev. James Trowbridge, Cerne, Dorsetshire | 1 | 0 | 0 | R. H. Bowman, 45, Edge-lane | 0 | 0 | 0 | T. Mark Carter, Woolgreaves, near Wakefield | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Barling, Fisherton-street, Salisbury .. | 1 | 0 | 0 | John Riggs, 50, Dale-street | 0 | 10 | 0 | Edward Parker, Stairfoot, near | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Edward Potts, Southampton | 1 | 0 | 0 | Henry A. Tams, Much Woolton | 0 | 10 | 0 | Thomas Richardson, Longcar House | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Alfred Parman, Wallingford | 1 | 0 | 0 | Daniel Bough, 30, Wood-street | 2 | 2 | 0 | Joseph S. Parkinson | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A. Cheshire Farmer | 1 | 0 | 0 | 15 Cigar Makers in the employ of D. Bough | 1 | 0 | 0 | George Allotson | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Doling, jun. | 0 | 5 | 0 | R. G. | 1 | 0 | 0 | A. Laidlaw, per Harvey and Co. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| K. Andrews | 0 | 2 | 6 | Lloyd Rayner, 31, Bobo-street | 10 | 0 | 0 | O. P. Q., per do. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A. Free Trader | 0 | 5 | 0 | John Miller, 31, Renshaw-street | 1 | 1 | 0 | Joseph Carter | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Ferrabee | 0 | 2 | 6 | Edward Graham, 25, Whitechapel | 1 | 0 | 0 | Young and Shaw | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend to the Cause | 0 | 2 | 6 | William M. Millan, 2, Surrey-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | Russell, Ward, and Co. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Alderman N. Wby, 85, Regent street | 1 | 0 | 0 | Richard Miller, 16, Upper Hill-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | John Gelder | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| — Aelby, Trumpington street | 1 | 0 | 0 | William Durling, 6, India-buildings | 1 | 1 | 0 | W. S. Y. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| — Bond, Bridge street | 1 | 0 | 0 | H. W. L. | 3 | 0 | 0 | A For to the Biding Scale | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| — Lusher, builder, Wilton-place | 0 | 10 | 0 | J. Rimmer, 82, Dootle-lane, Kirkdale, near | 1 | 1 | 0 | John Matthewman | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Per Mr. Johnson, Market-hill | 0 | 2 | 6 | Chas. Geo. Cowie, 2, India-buildings | 3 | 0 | 0 | Pigott and Newton | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| William Shanks, Johnstone, near Paisley .. | 1 | 0 | 0 | Thomas Blackburn, jun., 6, Camden-street | 50 | 0 | 0 | Edward Bromley | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Murray Farmer, afraid of Landlord Tyranny | 1 | 0 | 0 | C. A. Tate, 17, Great George-place | 1 | 1 | 0 | George Smith | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| J. R. Wild, Northampton-street, Camberwell | 0 | 2 | 6 | Richard Jackson, 15, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | George Allotson, jun. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Fordatt, 614, Threadneedle-street, (2nd sub.) | 5 | 0 | 0 | Thomas Sagar, 34, Castle street | 1 | 0 | 0 | Robert Cralk | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend, per George Crawshaw | 0 | 5 | 0 | Francis Hollins, 11, Oldball-street | 10 | 0 | 0 | Beth Cross | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| R. C. Wilson | 0 | 5 | 0 | R. W. | 3 | 0 | 0 | John Neill, jun. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| H. Walker | 0 | 5 | 0 | Justice | 1 | 0 | 0 | Edward Brady | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend, per John Skelton | 1 | 0 | 0 | J. Abrahams, 94, Whitechapel | 0 | 5 | 0 | H. J. Spencer | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend, per Mr. Walker | 0 | 10 | 0 | Samuel Ellis, 92, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | George Jackson | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Skelton | 0 | 2 | 6 | J. W. Holme, 69, Paradise-street | 0 | 1 | 0 | E. and D., per Harvey and Co. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Haigh, dyer, Newlay, near Leeds .. | 10 | 0 | 0 | Robert Myers, 69, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 | James Fridd | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| William Hater, Winscomb, near Cross, Somerset | 1 | 0 | 0 | Thomas Mills, 8, Union-street | 2 | 2 | 0 | John Richardson | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Mc Lellan, Banhead, near Glasgow .. | 1 | 0 | 0 | Peter Stuart, 36, Slater-street | 2 | 0 | 0 | A For to the Biding Scale | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas S. Lewis, St. Austle, Cornwall .. | 1 | 0 | 0 | Lawrence Hayworth, Yew Tree, near | 300 | 0 | 0 | M. N. O. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Procter, jun., Long Preston, near Skipton | 1 | 0 | 0 | Isaac Worthington, 1, Oldball-street | 5 | 0 | 0 | A Friend | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Merritt, George-street, Stroud, Gloucestershire | 1 | 0 | 0 | James Cunningham, 1, do. | 5 | 0 | 0 | Mrs. Drak for her three Sons | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Heming, 25, Cardington-street, Hampstead-road | 0 | 2 | 6 | Edward Fisher, Longroyd-bridge, near | 5 | 0 | 0 | A. B. C., per Harvey and Co. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Benjamin Blackley, 47, Friday-street, City .. | 1 | 0 | 0 | J. and J. Broadbent, Longwood, near | 2 | 2 | 0 | William James Hindle | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Chandler, 7, Holborn-mews, Marylebone | 0 | 2 | 6 | James Hanson, woolstapler | 2 | 0 | 0 | Edward Dale | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Chandler, do., do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | A Tea Drinker | 0 | 1 | 0 | George Seagwick, Railway Tavern | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| George James, Hutton-bridge, near King's Langley, | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mrs. Hollinshead, Westgate | 0 | 2 | 6 | A Friend to Free Trade | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Herts | 1 | 0 | 0 | Butcher, Cross Church-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | An Enemy to Monopoly | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Colonel Young, 50, York-street, Portman-square | 1 | 1 | 0 | Eliza Hodgson, Cumberland-street | 0 | 0 | 1 | William Park | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| William Mills, 1, Cleveland-place, Camberwell | 1 | 0 | 0 | A Friend, do. | 0 | 2 | 0 | W. R. Parkinson | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Samuel Lewis, Bury street, St. George's East | 1 | 0 | 0 | Fr. Bernin, butcher, Cross Church-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | Harrison, Fletcher, and Co. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| George Lambert, Lambeth-place, Clapham-road | 0 | 10 | 0 | Mrs. Priestley, do. | 0 | 1 | 0 | Joseph Dennis | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| G. C. Stewart, 17, Dean-street, Commercial-road East | 0 | 5 | 0 | Mrs. Tet ey, do. | 0 | 1 | 0 | Thomas Guest | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Un Inconnu | 0 | 10 | 0 | A Friend | 0 | 1 | 0 | A Friend | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Huxley Stoke Newington-green | 1 | 0 | 0 | Paul Ganter, Cross Church-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | Thomas Tee | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Few Friends at No. 9, Hol's-row, Hampstead-road | 1 | 1 | 0 | William Brook | 1 | 0 | 0 | Robert Cock, jun. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Airey, sen., Keawick, Cumberland, per Miss Bow | 1 | 0 | 0 | Charles Hirst, Chancery-lane | 2 | 0 | 0 | I. O. U. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Edwards, late of Seilly | 1 | 0 | 0 | Henry Hirst, do. | 5 | 5 | 0 | William Myers, Park-square | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| — Wicheil, 26, Upper Oak-street, Foley-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | James Sheard, Westgate | 1 | 1 | 0 | Sykes Bickers | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| W. J. Clarke, 7, Beaufort West, Bath .. | 1 | 0 | 0 | Benjamin Sheard, Manchester-road | 1 | 1 | 0 | E. B. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| H. N. | 1 | 1 | 0 | George Baydon, Cross Church-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mark Walker and Son | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| — Tann, at R. Keene's, Hay-lane, Coventry .. | 1 | 0 | 0 | Edward Woodhead, do. | 5 | 0 | 0 | John Oden and Friends | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| From 82 Persons in small weekly sub- | 6 | 2 | 7 | Solomon Pitchforth, Chancery-lane | 1 | 1 | 0 | William Goodworth and Brothers | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| scriptions | 1 | 0 | 0 | G. H. Kimer, Carr-house | 1 | 1 | 0 | John Ostcliffe | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| M. R. Welch | 1 | 0 | 0 | B. Bentley, Buxton-road | 2 | 2 | 0 | John Wood, Worsbro' Dale | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| George Norman | 1 | 0 | 0 | William Shaw, woolstapler, Westgate | 2 | 2 | 0 | James Buckley | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Charles Ribby | 1 | 0 | 0 | Isaac Thompson, at G. Millin and Sons' | 1 | 1 | 0 | George Shaw, Dodworth, near | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| George Balston | 1 | 0 | 0 | John Maraden, at G. Millin and Sons' | 1 | 1 | 0 | John Rycroft | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Notting | 1 | 0 | 0 | John Robinson, Market-place | 1 | 1 | 0 | William Lewis | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Free Trader | 1 | 0 | 0 | John Kaye, Woolpack | 1 | 1 | 0 | X. Y. Z. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| J. B. | 0 | 2 | 6 | Young Men at John Dixon and Sons' | 1 | 1 | 0 | Live and Let Live | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A. B. | 1 | 0 | 0 | Richard Porritt, Clarendon | 2 | 2 | 0 | John Battman | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Stephen Brown, Crouch-street | 0 | 10 | 0 | Thos. A. Heaps, Westgate | 5 | 5 | 0 | Saville and Son | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Anti Bread Tax | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mrs. Thos. A. Heaps, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 | Benjamin Bailey and Friends | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| David Morris | 0 | 10 | 0 | Workmen at T. A. Heaps's, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 | Joseph Ray, Odd Fellows' Arms | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Free Trade | 0 | 10 | 0 | A Friend | 5 | 0 | 0 | James Wood, Worsbro' Dale, near | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Well Wisher | 0 | 2 | 6 | Jos. Boothroyd | 1 | 1 | 0 | A Friend, per Harvey and Co. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Isaac Choppin, Middle Mill | 0 | 2 | 6 | Mrs. Jos. Boothroyd | 1 | 1 | 0 | James Sykes | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| J. H. | 0 | 2 | 6 | Geo. Senior and Son, Dalton, near | 70 | 0 | 0 | James Steel | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Edward Cowper, 24, Peterborough-place, Baywater .. | 1 | 0 | 0 | Jos. Dransfield and Sons, Moldgreen | 5 | 0 | 0 | Thomas Wilson and Friend | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Richard Surridge, Newgate-street | 10 | 10 | 0 | James Beacock | 0 | 2 | 6 | Andrew Brown, reed-maker | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Holste, 5, North-buildings, Finsbury-circus .. | 1 | 1 | 0 | Jos. Arthington, Albion-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | John Carter, St. George's-place | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Dr. Kppa, 89, Great Russell-st., Bloomsbury (2nd sub.) | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mrs. Crowther | 0 | 1 | 0 | A Friend | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Lett Wyatt, 5, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars | 2 | 2 | 0 | A Friend | 0 | 1 | 0 | Benjamin Hill | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Alfred Wyatt, Temple | 1 | 1 | 0 | Mrs. Dyson, Albion-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | John Parker | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| George Haworth, Rochdale | 50 | 0 | 0 | Mrs. Bannister, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | William Hyde | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| T. R. Burdon, Leatherhead | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mrs. Mills, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | A Friend | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| C. Cobb, Strood, Kent | 1 | 0 | 0 | C. Orrell, New-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | George Stringer | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Pudney, 85, West Smithfield | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mrs. Holroyd, Moldgreen, near | 0 | 2 | 6 | E. and J. Sutcliffe, St. Mary's-place | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Colvin, 71, Old Broad-street | 10 | 0 | 0 | Mrs. Bedford, do. | 0 | 1 | 0 | — Hawcroft and Friend | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| R., per Prescott and Co. | 1 | 0 | 0 | Samuel Firth, do. | 0 | 0 | 6 | Wm. Tee, Birch Laiths, Bretton, nr. Wakefield | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Cobbett, Deptford-bridge | 1 | 0 | 0 | T. Sumner, do. | 0 | 1 | 0 | Thomas Dale | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| George Bartholomew, 5, Bedford-terrace, Upper Hol- | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mrs. Crowther, Colne-terrace | 0 | 0 | 3 | Thomas Dale, jun. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| loway | 1 | 0 | 0 | C. S. | 0 | 1 | 0 | William Gurney | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Cockin, 5, Milk-street, City | 5 | 0 | 0 | Mrs. Rd. Mitchell, Colne-terrace | 0 | 4 | 6 | John Armitage and Friends | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Baldwin, Clay House, near | 40 | 0 | 0 | A Gentleman | 0 | 2 | 6 | John Elliott | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Whitworth | 30 | 0 | 0 | T. W., Buxton-road | 0 | 2 | 6 | R. R. Raywood | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| William Thompson, Old-lane | 20 | 0 | 0 | Mrs. Hellawell, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | A Craft man | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Moses Morley, Howerby bridge, near | 15 | 0 | 0 | A Friend | 0 | 0 | 6 | Frederick Crowe, Waggon and Horses | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Aked and Co., Wheatley, near | 10 | 0 | 0 | M. Bradley | 0 | 1 | 0 | Rowlin and Warbis | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Fawcett, Greenroyd, near | 5 | 0 | 0 | Richard Willis, Buxton-road | 0 | 2 | 6 | A. B. C. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Three Ladies | 3 | 3 | 0 | Mrs. Wm. S. Thornton, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | George Rogerson | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend | 3 | 3 | 0 | John Kaye | 0 | 1 | 0 | W. Wilkinson | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Louis John Crossley, Wade-street | 2 | 2 | 0 | Mrs. Bayless | 0 | 1 | 0 | William Roystone | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Hutchinson, Rhoads street | 2 | 2 | 0 | Mrs. Walker | 0 | 2 | 6 | James Brown | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| William Hutchinson, do. | 2 | 2 | 0 | Mrs. Edith Hayley, Market-place | 0 | 2 | 6 | A Friend | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| T. Waterhouse, at Akroyd and Sons' | 2 | 2 | 0 | M. Smith, Kirkgate | 0 | 2 | 6 | Richard Ellison | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Mother for her Little Girl | 1 | 1 | 0 | C. Whately, do. | 0 | 1 | 0 | A Friend | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend, Green hill | 1 | 0 | 0 | T. Haigh, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 | Thomas Harrison and Sons | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| "Let us have it off then" | 1 | 0 | 0 | Wm. Woodhouse, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | Joseph Rogerson | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| T. Fleming, Northgate | 1 | 0 | 0 | Abt. Turner, do. | 0 | 1 | 0 | John Burland | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mrs. E. Thornton, New North-road | 0 | 2 | 6 | An Enemy to Monopoly | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Kidd | 1 | 1 | 0 | Godfrey Sykes | 0 | 1 | 0 | John Berry | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| For my Good Wife | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mrs. Helen Purser, 7, West Parade | 1 | 0 | 0 | A Friend | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Flather, King Cross-lane | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mrs. Blunkhorn, Aspley | 0 | 2 | 6 | A Friend | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mrs. Darley, do. | 0 | 0 | 6 | A Death stroke to Monopoly | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Two Ladies | 1 | 1 | 0 | Mrs. Bowker, do. | 0 | 0 | 6 | Ready Money | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| H. Martin | 1 | 1 | 0 | Mrs. Machan | 0 | 2 | 6 | William Sedgwick | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Crooke | 1 | 1 | 0 | Wm. H. Shepherd, King-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | John Smith | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. Martin | 0 | 10 | 0 | E. Bainforth, John-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | Robert Carr | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| R. Ives | 0 | 10 | 0 | Mrs. W. Shaw, Low Westwood, Golcar | 0 | 5 | 0 | — Coward | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Moore | 1 | 0 | 0 | Mrs. Thos. Cille, New-street | 5 | 0 | 0 | A. B. C. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Michael Stocks | 1 | 0 | 0 | A. B. | 1 | 10 | 0 | A Friend | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| John Holroyd | 0 | 10 | 0 | Hy. Roebuck, King-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | Joshua Shaw, jun. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Kenworthy | 0 | 10 | 0 | — Bradbury, surgeon, Mirfield | 5 | 0 | 0 | John Travis | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Rev. R. Hardy | 0 | 5 | 0 | Wm. Mills, Aspley | 5 | 0 | 0 | Samuel Wood | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Briggs | 0 | 5 | 0 | Luke Maraden, do. | 2 | 2 | 0 | A Friend | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A. P., per M. Stocks | 0 | 5 | 0 | Jas. North, Buxton-road | 5 | 0 | 0 | — Topham | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| James Stocks | 0 | 5 | 0 | Thos. Edwards, Bay Hall | 1 | 0 | 0 | — Baily | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Moore | 0 | 5 | 0 | Geo. Johnson, Westgate | 0 | 2 | 6 | — Bower | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 5 | 0 | Henry Long | 30 | 0 | 0 | Isaac Fox | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| George Elmley | 0 | 2 | 6 | Rev. Henry Green | 1 | 0 | 0 | James Clarkson | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Wilkinson | 0 | 2 | 6 | Joseph Swinburn | | | | | | | |

| | | | | | |
|---|---------|---|---------|---|---------|
| Chas. Harris, the Grange, York | 250 0 0 | Joshua Hoyle, cotton manufacturer | 250 0 0 | John Howarth, Roach House | 250 0 0 |
| Wm. Rand | 20 0 0 | "A second Shot this Year to increase the | 20 0 0 | J. Lawton, surgeon | 20 0 0 |
| Geo. Rogers | 20 0 0 | "Leakage" | 20 0 0 | John Whitley, rosemaker | 20 0 0 |
| John Smith, Field House, Horton | 20 0 0 | Miss Mary Shepherd, Waterbarn | 20 0 0 | John Whitley, shopkeeper, St. James's-st. | 20 0 0 |
| Craven and Harrop, Thornton | 20 0 0 | Henry Whittles, jun., Stacksteads | 20 0 0 | James Butterworth and Sons, woolstaplers | 20 0 0 |
| Hill & Smith, Marshall's Mill, Manchester-rd. | 20 0 0 | Richard Horrocks, do. | 20 0 0 | Thomas Hodgson, Richard-street | 20 0 0 |
| Billingsley, Tankard, and Co. | 20 0 0 | Charles Stansfield, do. | 20 0 0 | M. Fisher | 20 0 0 |
| John Leeming and Son, North Holm Mill | 20 0 0 | Joseph Moss, do. | 20 0 0 | John Hargreaves, Tongue-end, near | 20 0 0 |
| Wm. Broad, Market-street | 20 0 0 | Henry Whittles, sen., do. | 20 0 0 | Ramuel Hill, Long-acres, near | 20 0 0 |
| G. B. Ropley, Bowling | 20 0 0 | Richard Howorth, Waterfoot, Newchurch | 20 0 0 | | |
| Smith, Tetley, and Co. | 20 0 0 | Emanuel Smith, Stacksteads | 20 0 0 | | |
| P. K. Holden | 20 0 0 | John Pickup, cotton manufacturer, Dean | 20 0 0 | | |
| Dr. Caton | 20 0 0 | Engine, Newchurch, near | 20 0 0 | | |
| Joshua Bates, Well-street | 20 0 0 | Richard Ashworth, Stacksteads | 20 0 0 | | |
| H. W. Topham, engraver | 20 0 0 | Benjamin Ashworth, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Rev. J. Laycock, Here-wood, near Leeds | 20 0 0 | Elijah Spencer, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| John Townsend, Bank-street | 20 0 0 | John Whitehead, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| L. W. Dawson, Baildon green, near | 20 0 0 | William Smith, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| J. Halliday, do. | 20 0 0 | James Shepherd, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Nicholas Walker, Shipley | 20 0 0 | William Hopwood, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Joseph Forster, Well-street | 20 0 0 | John Ormerod, St. James's-street | 20 0 0 | | |
| James Gilling, Ivegate | 20 0 0 | A Friend, per Mr. John Earnshaw | 20 0 0 | | |
| Leopold Fulda, Leeds-road | 20 0 0 | A Man whose conscience would not rest until | 20 0 0 | | |
| Robert Horsley, Wibsey | 20 0 0 | he had given something | 20 0 0 | | |
| John Pearson, do. | 20 0 0 | A Female Friend | 20 0 0 | | |
| Christopher Brook, do. | 20 0 0 | James Howorth, grocer, Stacksteads | 20 0 0 | | |
| Wm. Baxter, North Wing | 20 0 0 | James Ashworth, Stacksteads | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thomas Wickett (additional) | 20 0 0 | James Riley, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Benjamin Harracough, Wibsey | 20 0 0 | Henry Taylor, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Joseph Pearson, Wibsey | 20 0 0 | John Cryer, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Wm. Kershaw, do. | 20 0 0 | George Nuttall, innkeeper, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Mark Hardaker, Baildon | 20 0 0 | John Holt, Greens | 20 0 0 | | |
| John Mitchell, sen., manufacturer | 20 0 0 | "Nothing last Year" | 20 0 0 | | |
| Joseph Gartside, dyer | 20 0 0 | Two Female Power loom Weavers, Stacksteads | 20 0 0 | | |
| William Gartside, do. | 20 0 0 | A Friend to the Cause | 20 0 0 | | |
| Samuel Ellis, sen., manufacturer | 20 0 0 | A Friend | 20 0 0 | | |
| Abraham Archer, sen., do. | 20 0 0 | Down with all Monopoly | 20 0 0 | | |
| Joshua Phillips, grocer | 20 0 0 | A Juvenile Subscriber | 20 0 0 | | |
| John Mitchell, younger, manufacturer | 20 0 0 | A Friend | 20 0 0 | | |
| Anthony Milner, do. | 20 0 0 | A Friend | 20 0 0 | | |
| George Mitchell, do. | 20 0 0 | A Friend | 20 0 0 | | |
| Benjamin Gunson, do. | 20 0 0 | Wishing the League may Triumph | 20 0 0 | | |
| Jonathan Peace, clothier | 20 0 0 | A Friend | 20 0 0 | | |
| Frank Fearnside, manufacturer | 20 0 0 | A Friend | 20 0 0 | | |
| Abraham Archer, jun., do. | 20 0 0 | A Friend | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thomas Phillips, sen. | 20 0 0 | A Friend | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thomas Mitchell, sen., ditto | 20 0 0 | Something | 20 0 0 | | |
| George Wilby, do., Ossett Common | 20 0 0 | A Well-wisher | 20 0 0 | | |
| Joshua Ellis, sen., do., Giggall-hill | 20 0 0 | George Howorth, Fold | 20 0 0 | | |
| Benjamin Oakes, do., Stonsbill | 20 0 0 | John Howorth, Lane-head | 20 0 0 | | |
| David Ellis, sen., do. | 20 0 0 | Chas. Stewart, draper | 20 0 0 | | |
| George Radley, do. | 20 0 0 | Henry Hale, druggist | 20 0 0 | | |
| George Harrap, do. | 20 0 0 | — Ackroyd, grocer | 20 0 0 | | |
| David Ellis, jun., do. | 20 0 0 | John Parkinson, sizer | 20 0 0 | | |
| Samuel Ellis, jun., do. | 20 0 0 | Baron and Co., manufacturers | 20 0 0 | | |
| David Dewa, do. | 20 0 0 | R. Woffenden, Paris Chapel, near | 20 0 0 | | |
| John Lawrence, do. | 20 0 0 | Henry Greenwood, Black Swan | 20 0 0 | | |
| Joseph Wilby, do., Ossett Low Common | 20 0 0 | Edward Blomley, iron founder | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thomas Rayner, do. | 20 0 0 | John Veevers, Kilmhurst | 20 0 0 | | |
| Benjamin Saxton, do. | 20 0 0 | James Veevers, jun., do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Joseph Ellis, druggist | 20 0 0 | Miss Veevers, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| George Pickard, grocer | 20 0 0 | Jery. Oliver, York-street | 20 0 0 | | |
| Joseph Audsley, shoemaker | 20 0 0 | Jos. King, Manchester and Leeds Railway | 20 0 0 | | |
| Frank Mitchell, manufacturer | 20 0 0 | Station, Leeds | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thomas Mitchell, tinner | 20 0 0 | John Pilling and Wife, 4s., and Seven Chil- | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thomas Mitchell, jun., manufacturer | 20 0 0 | dren 6d. each, 3s. 6d. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thomas Harrop | 20 0 0 | A Friend | 20 0 0 | | |
| Jacob Clay | 20 0 0 | James Jackson, Roomfield-lane, near | 20 0 0 | | |
| Solomon Riley | 20 0 0 | Wm. Taylor | 20 0 0 | | |
| Philemon Ellis, Healey | 20 0 0 | Butcliffe Halstead, Roomfield-lane | 20 0 0 | | |
| James Ellis, do. | 20 0 0 | Thomas Law Oldroyd | 20 0 0 | | |
| Jeremiah Ellis, do. | 20 0 0 | Sarah Kershaw, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| John Ellis, do. | 20 0 0 | Abraham Crossley, Fith's Wood-bottom | 20 0 0 | | |
| James Thurmand, Batley Carr | 20 0 0 | James Farrow, York-street | 20 0 0 | | |
| Matthew Kaye, Staincliffe | 20 0 0 | Small Suma | 20 0 0 | | |
| Abraham Clarkson, Healey | 20 0 0 | J. Howorth, Royal George Inn | 20 0 0 | | |
| John Clegg, Staincliffe | 20 0 0 | John Wade, druggist | 20 0 0 | | |
| W. Crowther and Sons | 20 0 0 | R. Haigh and Friends, Bridge-end | 20 0 0 | | |
| Benjamin Thornton | 20 0 0 | A Friend | 20 0 0 | | |
| Wm. Rhodes | 20 0 0 | Mrs. Law, Ramsdenwood | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thomas Burnley | 20 0 0 | J. B. | 20 0 0 | | |
| John Taylor | 20 0 0 | A Journeyman | 20 0 0 | | |
| Joseph Johnston | 20 0 0 | John Butcliffe, Knowlwood | 20 0 0 | | |
| J. and E. Swaine and Co. | 20 0 0 | J. F. and J. S. | 20 0 0 | | |
| C. and W. Carr | 20 0 0 | Robert Wright, Briggate | 20 0 0 | | |
| Wm. Hammond | 20 0 0 | Richardson, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thomas Ross | 20 0 0 | William Brown | 20 0 0 | | |
| Wm. Walker | 20 0 0 | John Noddings, Commercial-row, Holbeck | 20 0 0 | | |
| Knowles, Houghton, and Co. | 20 0 0 | Geology, Commercial Inn, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Josh. Smith | 20 0 0 | James Vickers, Tuton-hill, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Chas. Whewall | 20 0 0 | John Brownridge, Mann's-field, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Wm. Kershaw, Birstall | 20 0 0 | Taylor, Wordsworth, and Co.'s Workmen, per | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thos. Clapham, do. | 20 0 0 | Wm. Nicholls, jun., Holbeck | 20 0 0 | | |
| James Preston, do. | 20 0 0 | Fidea | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thos. Rayner, do. | 20 0 0 | Matthew Pemberton, Knostrop | 20 0 0 | | |
| T. Gomersall, Rawfolds, near Cleckheaton | 20 0 0 | Ralph Goldsbro, Barton, near Darlington | 20 0 0 | | |
| F. and J. Ellison, Birkenshaw | 20 0 0 | J. B. Robinson, 173, Briggate | 20 0 0 | | |
| Abel Tinker, Hepworth, near | 20 0 0 | Thomas Fotherby 58, Camp-road | 20 0 0 | | |
| Zaccheus Hinchliff, clothier, Barnside, near | 20 0 0 | S. H. Spence, Calls | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thomas Moorhouse, Choppards-mill, near | 20 0 0 | James Wales, Boar-lane | 20 0 0 | | |
| John Bower, Arrundon, near | 20 0 0 | Jeremiah Sowrey, Commercial-street | 20 0 0 | | |
| Ell Brook, Choppards, near | 20 0 0 | Richard Bayldon, Hunslet | 20 0 0 | | |
| Benjamin Bray, Choppards, and Thomas | 20 0 0 | John Forster, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Win-penny, Arrundon, near | 20 0 0 | Brown and Co.'s Workmen, flaxspinners, | 20 0 0 | | |
| John Brook, Choppards-mill, near | 20 0 0 | per Jas. Murphy, Marshall-street | 20 0 0 | | |
| Henry Brook, Longley, near | 20 0 0 | T. Brumfit, Leeds Arms Bank | 20 0 0 | | |
| Henry Bower, Arrundon, near | 20 0 0 | R. Wood and Sons, Hunslet | 20 0 0 | | |
| Matthew Lockwood, Arrundon-laith, near | 20 0 0 | Wm. Davy, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Joseph Hinchliff, Stand-bank, near | 20 0 0 | Thomas Walker, Wood street | 20 0 0 | | |
| Charles Finsley, Copt Hirst | 20 0 0 | Robert Clark, Joiner, Hunslet | 20 0 0 | | |
| Joseph Ellis, do. | 20 0 0 | Edward Atkinson, tailor, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| George Hinchliff, Flowery-field | 20 0 0 | Thomas Wood, saddler, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| John Hinchliff, do. | 20 0 0 | James Brown, butter-factor, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Jonathan Bower, Choppards | 20 0 0 | James Smith, White Horse, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thomas Butterworth, Kilmhouse-bank, near | 20 0 0 | K. Hardisty, jun., do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| James Brooke, Yew, near | 20 0 0 | George Oakes, Anchor Inn, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Jonathan Wood, Upper Waterside, near | 20 0 0 | Charles Gro-venor, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| John Kershaw, Dobb, near | 20 0 0 | John Simpson, Low-road, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Matthew Butterworth, Hillhouse, near | 20 0 0 | Henry Watkinson, Garden-gate Inn, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Edwin Barber, Kilmhouse-bank, near | 20 0 0 | Joshua Naylor, grocer, Hunslet | 20 0 0 | | |
| David Woodcock, Hinchliff mill, near | 20 0 0 | Samuel Walker, shopkeeper, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thomas Boothroyd, do. | 20 0 0 | Joseph Longley, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Charles Cromack, Dobb, near | 20 0 0 | William Saville, Chapel-street, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Jonathan Batty, jun., Brown-hill | 20 0 0 | Wm. Walton, Forge, Hunslet | 20 0 0 | | |
| John Robuck, Wooddale, Town-end, near | 20 0 0 | John Glover, Old-lane, ditto | 20 0 0 | | |
| Joseph Broadhead, Wooddale, near | 20 0 0 | John Glover, jun., do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| George Kaye, Holme; John Whiteley, Holme; | 20 0 0 | John Atkinson, Chapel street, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Arthur Headwell, Thomas Kaye, and Jo- | 20 0 0 | J. B., do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| nathan Woodhouse | 20 0 0 | M. T., do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Godfrey Mellor, Gully, near | 20 0 0 | T. W. P., do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thos. and Jos. Hinchliff, Upperthong, near | 20 0 0 | J. H., do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| A Friend, per Mr. David Brook, do., near | 20 0 0 | John Varley, Folly, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| James Armitage, Mytholm Bridge, near | 20 0 0 | Robert Hewley, St. Mark's Cottage, Wood- | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thongsbridge | 20 0 0 | house-lane | 20 0 0 | | |
| Samuel Mellor, Thongsbridge | 20 0 0 | Mrs. Hewley, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| and Hiram Barnshaw | 20 0 0 | Miss Hewley, do. | 20 0 0 | | |
| George Fieldend, Thongsbridge, near | 20 0 0 | C. G. Maces, Bienenheim-terrace | 20 0 0 | | |
| The Workmen of Messrs. Mellor, Thonga- | 20 0 0 | Benjamin Walker, School-close | 20 0 0 | | |
| bridge, per John Lodge, Thongsbridge, near | 20 0 0 | Arthur Lupton, jun., Headingley | 20 0 0 | | |
| Abraham Charlesworth, do. near | 20 0 0 | Henry Higgins, Albion-street | 20 0 0 | | |
| John Woodhead | 20 0 0 | Joseph Cuff, Wortley | 20 0 0 | | |
| Jonathan Roberts, Hinchliff Mill, near | 20 0 0 | George North Tatham, 55, Albion-street | 20 0 0 | | |
| John Taylor, Ward-place, near | 20 0 0 | Edwin Kildison, Albion-street | 20 0 0 | | |
| Workmen in the employ of Messrs. | 20 0 0 | Mrs. Anthony Titty, jun., York-place | 20 0 0 | | |
| James B. Ardell and Sons, per John | 20 0 0 | — Messrs. Headingley | 20 0 0 | | |
| Schofield, Holme, near | 20 0 0 | William Jagger, Wortley | 20 0 0 | | |
| James Holmes, Larches, near | 20 0 0 | W. W. Fenwick, South Parade | 20 0 0 | | |
| G. Robinson, Thongsbridge-house, nr.] | 20 0 0 | Wm. Braithwaite, Park-square | 20 0 0 | | |

AGRICULTURE.

WHO ARE THE "FARMERS' FRIENDS?"

Nothing can more distinctly mark the dishonesty of the movement in favour of "protection" which has been made in Essex, than the misrepresentations made by the landlords' puppets of the objects of the advocates of Free Trade. When men are seeking openly to attain a just object, they never resort to misrepresentation. Thus Mr. Baker, in his circular to the Essex farmers, says:—"The League has already declared its intention of destroying the agricultural interest." To which we might simply say, when and where? And Mr. Baker and his employers would be puzzled for a reply. Again he said, last Saturday, at Colchester, that the farmers "had to oppose a self-constituted body (the League) that were employing a variety of agencies, and using every means in their power to assail and ruin the interests of agriculture." Now let us see what title this Mr. Baker, who so virulently assails the League, has to be considered the friend to "agriculture?" He is a land-agent, eagerly seeking the countenance and employment of the Essex squires, and if he can cheaply—at the expense of the farmers—push himself into notoriety, it may "bring grist to the mill." Now, the fortunes of land-valuers—especially of that second-rate class who are employed to "put up" rents—have been built upon the misfortunes of farmers. They are selected by the landowners, paid by them, and their everything depends upon ministering to the greed or prejudices of their employers; and it has long been a common remark that a farmer-valuer—a half-farmer and half-land-agent, a wolf in sheep's clothing—is commonly more hard upon the tenant-farmer than the regular and more educated professional man. To this hermaphrodite class Mr. Baker belongs. Then who are his coadjutors? There is the Chelmsford lawyer, a man to whom mortgages bring profit; and a horde of agents and would-be agents of the landed proprietors. Next we find the Rev. Dr. Smithies, the master of Colchester Hospital, who professes such an exuberant anxiety for the poor, that he would retain for their benefit a law which enhances the price of food! We shall give those Essex farmers, who do not know the facts, an opportunity of judging of the reverend gentleman's sincerity, by extracting a portion of Lord Chancellor Lyndhurst's observations in giving judgment, in May last, on an application made to the Court of Chancery to compel the reverend master to reside on his benefice, as by law he was required to do. His lordship said, "The master has neglected his duty for fifteen years. At the time the charity was founded, there was a considerable part of the fund given to the poor objects of the charity. Dr. Smithies now not only takes all the rents, but goes away for thirty years. He gets £800 a year, and the poor objects only 50s. It is true that the law has settled that; but by residing he would perhaps be induced to consider the poor objects of the charity, who would be constantly before him, whose existence, when living at a distance, he has most likely altogether forgotten." This needs no comment. The reverend master's sympathy with the poor is probably as genuine as that of Mr. Robert Baker's with the tenant-farmers whom it may become his duty to sell up. In fact, it is sufficiently notorious in Essex, that this move is an ingenious device of the squires to operate upon Sir Robert Peel, and compel him to stand by his Corn Law of 1842. The title of the society, therefore, is a misnomer; it should have been a "Rent Protection Society;" for though Corn Laws may protect the landlord and his rent, they invariably injure and oppress the agricultural classes, the tenant-farmers, and the farm-labourers. We find this is so well understood in the county, that most of the best farmers keep aloof. In every direction we learn that the more intelligent farmers—those who look to farming and farming only for a livelihood—even where they they do not thoroughly see through the delusion which has been practised upon them by means of Corn Laws, are rapidly coming to the conclusion that "protection" is not worth "the repose which it costs." They desire a speedy and a final settlement. They want to know on what footing their business is henceforth to be conducted. They see there can be no final settlement but the total abolition of all restrictions. They clearly understand the distinction between the landed interest and the agricultural interest. They have been taught, somewhat feelingly, that rent-taking is quite consistent with the greatest ignorance of the interests of agriculture. It is true that, in some eminent instances, the possessors of land combine in their own persons the character of landowners and agriculturists, such as Earls Spencer, Ducie, Fitzwilliam, Lord Kinnaird, and others, and such agriculturists are usually favourable to a free trade in corn; but the majority of landed proprietors, as such, have nothing in common with the industrious agriculturists. With the great body of landholders, agriculturists are merely regarded as rent-paying machines. They are too much hampered with their own debts and obligations, too much absorbed in political intrigues, to sympathize with the honest industry of the renting farmer, or to surrender an iota of political power for the sake of the agricultural labourer.

How can the Duke of Buckingham, against whom judgments to the amount of a million sterling are registered—whose life is insured to the greatest amount possible in every assurance office in London as security for his debts, who has for years been paying forty per cent. per annum for loans of money,—how can others of our landholders—major and minor—who are in a similar condition, enter into the feelings of the steady, provident, thrifty tenant-farmer?

When it is remembered that the chief effect of Corn Laws is to keep up rents on imperfectly cultivated properties, without improvement and expenditure on the part of the landlord, or the resignation of feudal services and political influence, it becomes perfectly intelligible why these debt-burthened landowners, the Buckingham and Newcastles, the Gramams and the Knatchbulls, should be the rampant advocates of "protection." But we have shown below that the farmers and labourers are only "protected" by the Corn Laws against steady profits and adequate wages. What colour, then, is there for the assertion that the intelligent Free Traders, who constitute the Council of the League, wish to "ruin and destroy the agricultural interest?" On the contrary, they say, that though the monopoly of corn—and on which innumerable minor monopolies depend—has injured them as manufacturing and commercial men, its injurious consequences to the farmers and the farm-labourers have been twenty-fold. They have proved to demonstration, that the best, the only abiding hope of the farmer is in the general prosperity of the country, and that, if he appears to get an extraordinary benefit for one or two years from exorbitant prices and artificial scarcity, he loses all, and more than all, in periods of reaction and depression. The leaders of the League, therefore, say, that whatever may be the gain to the landlords from monopoly, tenants cannot prosper permanently except whilst the community is prosperous. But beyond the fact, that farmers, as industrious capitalists, cannot long escape the consequences of a law which cripples the resources of industry for the sake of increasing the rents of the unproductive class, the League have shown that the tenant-farmers, by the testimony of their own body, are cramped and shackled by the laws which restrict the trade in corn.

It is known to every one acquainted with agriculture—though landlords overlook or disregard it—that no farmer can hope for much profit, if he farms only for one year; that it requires a series of years to bring the ground into its most productive state, which can only be done by considerable present outlay in anticipation of future, and often distant, returns. This renders it certain that no great profit can be obtained in farming without a lease. Now, one of the most prominent consequences of the Corn Law is, that tenants are unwilling to take, and landlords to grant, leases. The tenant sees that in spite of protecting laws he seldom actually realizes the price promised by law, and according to which all his engagements have been made; while the landlord relies upon competition to obtain tenants at a rent calculated on the act-of-Parliament prices, and on his power of distress to compel payment of that rent out of the tenant's capital, whether he obtains the promised prices or not. Here, then, there is no reciprocity: the tenant has all the risk of the failure of the law when it fails to secure high prices, and the landlord has the full benefit of his law whether it succeeds or fails. We ask the Essex farmers whether this is not an accurate description of the working of the Corn Laws since 1815? Now, the Free-Traders of the League say, this is not just; that the Corn Law is a fraud upon the tenant-farmer, and upon that ground, amongst others, they seek to obtain its abolition. Does it show a "determination to destroy" the agricultural—that is, the tenant-farmer and farm-labourer—interest, to advocate a change in the law which will render it safe for the tenant to take a lease, and beneficial to the landlord to grant one?

Then, again, it has been shown, that the covenants and restrictions which are everywhere inserted in leases, and in yearly agreements, are so absurd and obsolete as to be utter bars to good husbandry; and the fact is not controverted. In fact, this has been chiefly brought prominently before the public by the speeches and writings of tenant-farmers. Now the League say, that when the Corn Laws are repealed, and landlords cannot get high rents out of their tenants' capital through the agency of a Corn Law, these agricultural absurdities, these traps for tenant-farmers, these lawyer and land-agent begotten monstrosities will be speedily abandoned.

Then, again, the game laws, by which the right to the game is reserved to the owner of the farm unless expressly granted to the tenant, and the game, form a great and obnoxious burthen to nine tenants out of every ten throughout the country.

It is admitted that good farming cannot coexist with the maintenance of a large stock of game; and the same rational view which the tenant-farmers everywhere take of the game nuisance, is that urged by the League. They say, when the farming business is in a natural state, when the delusions of the Corn Laws have ceased, the landlords will find they cannot have both rent and game. Farmers will say, as a friend of ours said to a noble game-preserver, who wanted to let a farm overrun with game, "I think you stock that farm yourself, my lord," and will decline to embark their capital unless they can obtain complete possession of the farm—for no man can be said to be in the possession of his farm whose landlord retains a right to keep game upon the tenant's farm, or to let that power to a stranger. The League say that it is neither just or fair that the landlord should grow for his own benefit enormous quantities of hedge-row timber to the detriment of the tenant's crops, and on land for every foot of which the tenant pays rent.

Now all this, and more to the like effect, has been said by the best agriculturists, whether landowners or tenant-farmers; Lord Spencer, Lord Ducie, Mr. Lattimore of Hertfordshire, and Mr. Huttley of Essex, with hundreds of others whose speeches at agricultural meetings we have recorded, have said the same things again and again. And, further, Sir Robert Peel and Lord Stanley, Mr. Pusey and others, who uphold the Corn Laws, have reiterated the same statements. All these eminent persons and intelligent agriculturists have said that a very large proportion of the land of this country is not half cultivated, that it does not produce by one-third or one-half what it might be made to produce by judicious applications of capital and industry; and they expressly declare that leases, or "mutual confidence" holdings, are necessary to induce such improvements. Here, then, the Corn Law lies at the root of the matter. That is the preliminary obstacle to the amendment of husbandry and the relief of husbandmen. This the League have proclaimed, but in so doing they have done no more than to give a definite and practical purpose and direction to the opinions of the agriculturists themselves. What, then, can be said of those who represent the League as adverse to agriculture and husbandmen?

Again, look at the labourers: are they not in many districts absolutely kept from the poor-rates, or half starved on 6s. a week, while hundreds and hundreds of acres are drowned with redundant moisture, or remain barren, which might by various means be profitably brought into cultivation? What is universally urged by the squires to their tenants as one principal inducement to the improvement of their farms, but the fact that such improvement will better the condition of the peasantry? But does any one seriously imagine that such improvements will become so general as to affect the condition of the labourers, until the business of a farmer has ceased to be a hazardous speculation, and leases—reasonable leases—shall have become ordinary transactions? This cannot be until the trade in corn is made free, absolutely free. Was there ever so false, so gratuitous an assertion as that in advocating Free Trade we are "assailing the interests of agriculture?" So long ago as 1836 Mr. Shaw Lefevre, the present Speaker of the House of Commons, told his constituents that agriculture had been injured by a delusive reliance on protection; and the Free-Traders of the League tell the farmers the same wholesome truth.

WHO HAVE GAINED BY THE CORN LAWS?

As a simultaneous effort is being made by the landowners and their agents, in various agricultural districts, to get up demonstrations in favour of the Corn Laws; and as it is sought to induce the farmers to take the labour and bear the cost of the struggle, it becomes the bounden duty of every tenant-farmer, before embarking in, what it requires no prophet to foretell must be a fruitless agitation, to ask himself what he has gained by the Corn Laws? We shall supply him with a few facts and data which will assist him in that inquiry. But first let us inquire what are the objects proposed to be attained by means of the Corn Laws; secondly, who are the classes of persons alleged to be interested in the maintenance of those laws; and, thirdly, whether the interests of all the classes, so alleged to be interested in the Corn Laws, are the same.

About the object of the Corn Laws there can be no mistake: it is to keep the price of all corn grown in this country at some given rate higher than what is supposed to be its natural price. From the great wealth and populousness of this country, arising from the enterprising character of its trading and commercial classes, it has been supposed by those who have mainly influenced our legislation, that a system of restriction on the trade in corn could be devised by which all the consumers of corn might be made to pay an artificial price for their daily food. Previously to 1813 a succession of indifferent crops combined with the difficulty of obtaining supplies of corn from abroad rendered the prices of grain most exorbitant for a series of years; and the owners and occupiers of land during that period obtained great profits at the expense of all the rest of the community. And both landowners and occupiers, but especially the former, acted under the mistaken notion that the accidental and temporary state of things which existed during the war was fixed and permanent. Hence landlords bought and mortgaged, then mortgaged and bought again, more and more land at higher and higher prices, until the market value had been increased far beyond that point to which the vast accessions of national wealth, during the forty years antecedent to 1813, would have legitimately carried it. So the farmers whose leases fell out—for in those days leases were granted and accepted—towards the latter end of the war were compelled, by the great competition for farms which then existed, to give rents in proportion to the extravagant prices of corn. These rents were as much beyond the amount at which land should have been properly let, as the market value of land had risen beyond its legitimate value. The sudden rise in all kinds of agricultural produce which had occurred between 1792 and 1813, a rise altogether unlooked for, had given to those farmers who were in the possession of leases in the earlier years of that period, profits so considerable that hundreds upon hundreds of persons left other businesses to become farmers; and in most instances these new comers were insufficiently provided with capital. They entered into farming with a recklessness before unknown in that business; they borrowed money enough, perhaps, to carry them round one year, and then the enormous price of their crops—though in most cases their land was but indifferently cultivated—not only enabled them to pay their way, but often, if careful men, to realize capital. This was solely owing to the continued rise in the price of corn, so that up to 1812 every speculation in land, either by way of purchase or of hiring, seemed to be successful. At this time, as Mr. Driver the extensively-employed land-agent, stated before the Agricultural Committee of 1821, 100s. to 105s. per quarter was the ordinary price at which valuers of land estimated the wheat crop; and thousands of farmers entered into engagements to pay rents calculated upon such estimates. Is it surprising that a return to natural prices brought ruin and distress to many who had entered into such ill-considered engagements? But the termination of the war brought all such speculations to a speedy end, simply by removing the obstacles to communication with the Continent which had before existed.

This was the time when the grand legislative error was committed by the landowners. They were not satisfied with the large increase of rent to which they would have been fairly entitled from the advances the nation had made during the preceding twenty years in riches and population; but they wanted also to retain that additional increase of rent which they had obtained from the obstacles to importation from abroad in seasons of deficient produce. In a word, they claimed a vested interest in the profit they had made of national misfortunes. The extent of this profit may be judged by the fact, that in the latter years of the war wheat was imported, subject to a charge for freight, insurance, French and English Government licenses, &c., of no less than 44s. per quarter! Such was the urgency of the public demand for corn. The way in which that profit was proposed to be secured to the landed interest was, by creating an artificial scarcity in this country. For several years the home produce of grain had been insufficient to supply the home consumption; and it was supposed that if foreign corn could be excluded until the price of wheat was 80s. a quarter, that such price could have maintained as our permanent rate. With such views Parliament passed the law of 1815, which absolutely prohibited any importation of foreign corn until the average price of wheat had been for six weeks 80s. per quarter. Now, let not our agricultural readers imagine that they can fully and fairly judge of the operation of the Corn Laws upon their business, unless they take up the question thus early. They must begin with the beginning, for it is upon such a consideration that the subject will finally be dealt with in Parliament and by the country. Let our Essex readers calmly judge for themselves, upon a quiet review of the events of the last twenty-eight years, and not on the ignorant fallacies of prating lawyers or the coarse vituperation and puerile calculations (?) of half-informed land-agents.

Having ascertained the objects of the Corn Laws, let us see what classes those laws have been alleged to protect; and whether they are all thereby in fact protected. The first class is that of the landowners; and their interest in monopoly, taking a narrow and immediate view of it, is sufficiently obvious: for the higher the price of corn the greater will be their rents. Rent is the residue of the produce of land which remains after the capital expended in cultivation has been replaced, with the lowest remuneration for his labour and capital which the cultivator will consent to accept. The competition which exists amongst farmers determines what that remuneration shall be; when there is great competition for farms the rate of remuneration will be low, because farmer will bid against farmer until the landlord obtains as rent everything which can be raised from the soil beyond a bare subsistence for the tenant. Oftentimes there is no living left for the tenant. Whether the price of wheat, therefore, be 80s. or 40s. a quarter will make no difference to the tenant, provided he shall actually obtain the price on which he founded his calculations; though it may make a material difference to the landlord. But a high price of corn will have the effect of limiting other business, and will induce more people to come into the business of farming; and thus in both ways it tends to increase the competition for farms, to the serious injury of tenant-farmers, but greatly to the benefit of the landowners. Then, if the price of corn be high, the same rent can be paid with a less produce, and, consequently, by a smaller outlay of capital, which again increases the competition for farms, by inducing farmers to undertake more land than they have capital to cultivate highly; while the landlord, having the power of distress, can always find enough on the land to pay his rent, though the farmer may be ruined and his other creditors "go whoop" for their demands. And the farmer is injured in a variety of ways by a high price of corn, for everything he uses in his business, all that he consumes in his family, by his cattle, or his servants, is greatly enhanced in price by the unnatural dearth of food. It is thus plain that, supposing the Corn Laws to have attained their object of constantly keeping the prices of grain artificially high, the interest of the landlord and the interest of the renting farmer are diametrically opposed to each other. But when, in addition, we find that in three years out of every five since the passing of the Corn Laws the farmer has not received the price for his grain upon which he based his calculations, and in the expectation of obtaining which he entered into his actual engagements with his landlord—to say nothing of all his other engagements which have been made with reference to the same range of prices—what will be the condition of the farmer under a Corn Law? The difference between the price he expected to obtain and that he actually receives may be so great that an abatement of all his rent might not place him in the situation he would have been in had he realized his estimated prices; for rent is not the only burden fixed with reference to prices. And this is completely borne out by the practical working of the Corn Law. Thus from 1815 to 1828 the farmer's rents were fixed upon the calculation of 80s. a quarter for wheat, and in the same proportion for other grain. And what were the prices he actually received during those thirteen years? Why, except in 1817, which was a year of dearth both here and on the Continent, the British farmer never obtained the prices promised him by act of Parliament. Home competition had reduced the price of wheat in December, 1820, to 54s.; in July, 1821, to 51s.; in August, 1822, to 42s.; and in December of the same year to 38s. a quarter! In 1825, 1826, and 1827, as soon as the price of wheat approached 65s. a quarter, or 15s. a quarter below the price promised by law to the farmer, the Governments of the day were compelled to admit foreign corn by orders in council and special laws.

In December, 1827, the price of wheat was again as low as 47s. a quarter. Then the sliding-scale law of 1828 was passed; and which was framed to secure to the tenant-farmer a price for wheat of about 70s. a quarter; and his rent and other obligations had become slowly adjusted towards that scale of prices. Now mark the result. The farmer obtained that price only for one year, when at the close of 1829 the average price of wheat was 55s.; the price got up again in 1831 to the act-of-Parliament rate, but fell by December, 1832, to 53s. 2d. The average price of the five years ending in 1832 was only 61s. 2d., or 8s. 10d. below the price promised by the Corn Law. In 1833 the average price of wheat varied from 51s. to 54s.; in 1834 the price was 40s. 6d.; and in December, 1835, the average was so low as 38s. a quarter. Since that time prices have been higher, but still scarcely reaching, except for one or two years, the promised rate. The alteration made in the Corn Law by Sir Robert Peel in 1842 was merely nominal, inasmuch as it retained all the operative part of the old sliding scale, yet for the last two years prices have been considerably below the rates promised by the Legislature and the landlords. The committee of the House of Commons on "agricultural distress" which sat in 1836 fully disclosed the impossibility of keeping prices permanently high by act of Parliament, and that, the only effect of the attempt to do so by the Corn Law, only aggravated the fluctuations incident to the seasons, and induced farmers to rely on extraneous aid rather than on their own skill and intelligence. Our limits do not permit us now to go more at large into this part of the subject; but if the farmer, after perusing the above details, will refer to his own experience, he will be soon convinced that, whoever may have gained by the Corn Laws, he has not been the fortunate person.

Then, what have the labourers, the agricultural labourers, gained by the Corn Laws? The direct effect of the Corn Laws, when they operate by enhancing prices, is to induce an undue growth of grain, to the neglect of stock keeping, and of green or fallow crops, and this causes the employment of fewer labourers than would be necessary to cultivate a farm, if steady and natural prices of grain were all the farmer expected. But when prices fall below the act-of-Parliament rate, and the farmer becomes a struggling and distressed man, his first resource is to employ fewer labourers: he knows that the rent must be paid or the landlord would sell him up, and therefore he throws overboard the unfortunate labourer, in the hope of wearing out the storm till the next bad harvest or series of bad harvests may bring a return of high prices. If prices had become steady, and the great element of uncertainty which at present affects the farmer's business were removed, by leaving the trade in corn free, a steady and progressive improvement would take place in the condition of the peasantry. It is a foolish and a fraudulent pretence to say that moderate prices of grain would diminish the price, either by throwing land out of cultivation or by causing it to be converted into permanent pasture. Nothing of the sort would occur; on the contrary, the breaking up of inferior pastures and the extension of convertible husbandry is the mode in which every man who deserves the name of a farmer proposes to meet low prices of grain. And it will be by means of improved husbandry, carried on under permanent holdings, assisted in many cases by the co-operation of the landlord, that the business of a farmer will again become one in which an industrious capitalist may fairly expect a fair remuneration for his outlay, his skill, and his labour.

PECULIAR BURDENS ON LAND.

The supporters of the Corn Laws have long been in the habit of defending their monopoly by vaguely asserting that there are in this country public burdens which are exclusively borne by the land, but we have seldom seen any serious attempt made to define them. The whole landlord power in Parliament has been invited, has been solicited, has been defied, to prove the existence of such burthens; motion for a committee to inquire as to those burdens was made last session by Mr. Ward, and resisted by the whole force of the landed interest. The more shrewd monopolists, indeed, say but little on this topic; but fools rush on where wise men fear to tread, and we were, therefore, not surprised to find the valiant Essex land-agent, Mr. Robert Baker, volunteering a calculation to prove the peculiar "burdens which pressed upon land in this country." This he attempts to do in the following manner:—He takes 100 acres of land, and assumes that five labourers are required to cultivate it, who, having families, in number 13 persons, dependent upon them, making together 18 people of the labouring class to be supported by the 100 acres. Then he assumes one person of the landlord's family, five of the tenant's, and four of the tradesmen's, dependent on agricultural employment, making altogether 27 persons "dependent in those agricultural districts on the cultivation of every 100 acres of land." Whether this be or be not the number of persons dependent for a living on the cultivation of 100 acres of land is not of much importance for the purpose of examining what Mr. Baker calls his carefully-prepared calculations; but in fact, except in a few particular districts, the proportion is far too high. That, however, does not materially affect the question. This is Mr. Baker's statement of the taxes which "bear directly and indirectly on land:—"

| INDIRECT TAXATION. | | |
|---|---|--------|
| Tax upon the 5 labourers and families, at £35 each | £ | 175 |
| (£165 at 10 per cent) | s | 16 0 |
| Tax upon tenant, domestics, and family | d | 15 0 |
| Tax upon landlord, assuming one landlord to each 100 acres, say | | 15 0 |
| Tax upon mechanics, as employed, and family, at £40 | | 6 0 |
| | £ | 211 10 |
| DIRECT TAXES. | | |
| Land-tax | £ | 5 0 |
| Malt-tax direct, as consumed on the farm | s | 5 0 |
| Property-tax, landlord and tenant | d | 4 0 |
| Poor-rate, surveyor's-rate, church-rate, &c. (6s.) | | 25 0 |
| Rent-charge, 6s. | | 30 0 |
| Assessed taxes | | 2 10 |
| | £ | 71 10 |

Making altogether £123 tax upon each 100 acres.

Deduct of the above for grass and fallow land, 1-4th .. 92 8
Deduct for other green crops 1-4th .. 69 0
Direct and indirect tax upon wheat produce, which, at 3 qrs. 4 bushels per acre, is 66 qrs. 4 bushels, or about 21s. per qr.

Now, here we have an elaborated statement of the peculiar burdens on which the landowners have "based their claims for protection." This, at all events, is tangible, and as such deserves examination.

First, take the £10 per cent. of indirect taxation stated to be charged upon the income of the agricultural labourer. This must consist of customs and excise duties. Of the 20 millions sterling per annum which are levied as customs duties on imported articles, about 17 millions are paid on eight or ten articles only, of which the chief are sugar, tea, coffee, tobacco, spirits, and wine. Now, whether the agricultural labourers pay 10 per cent. of their incomes to the Government in the shape of indirect taxes on the sugar, the tea, the coffee, the tobacco, and the spirits they consume, or any smaller or larger amount, it is plain to the dullest monopolist that they do not alone pay such taxes. The artisans, the workmen in towns, factories, and elsewhere, have to bear precisely the same burden. How the fact, that the peasant, who is so fortunate as to get any tea, sugar, or tobacco at all, pays a heavy tax on such articles, in common with all other classes who use the same articles, furnishes a ground for compelling such other classes to bear an extra burden for the purpose of increasing the income of the peasant, passes our comprehension. Not that the Bread-tax does increase the peasant's income, or any body else's except the landlord's, though it commonly diminishes the means of all other industrious classes; but that is the pretence on which the claim to protection is founded, and for the purpose of this argument as to exclusive burdens on land, and on the twenty-seven persons Mr. Baker assumes to be dependent on 100 acres of land, we will suppose that the Corn Law really does increase their incomes.

Next we have the excise duties, the principal of which are malt, soap, candles, and a few similar commodities. And what does the farming labourer, when he drinks a cup of beer, pay towards the excise duty, which is not paid by every other person who indulges in that luxury? Why, nothing, absolutely nothing. And precisely the same reasoning applies to the 10 per cent. assumed by Mr. Baker to be charged on the incomes of the tenant and his family, the landlord, and the agricultural mechanic and his family. The shopkeeper, the merchant, the annuitant, or the manufacturer, each pays exactly the same indirect taxes on all the imported or exciseable articles he consumes, as are paid by Mr. Baker's landed and agricultural twenty-seven! Why is the tax levied on the cigars and champagne punch of the young landed aristocrat a peculiar burden upon land, when precisely the same kind of tax is levied on the tea, coffee, sugar, and beer of the manufacturer, the tradesman, and the mechanic? This part of the "calculation," therefore, fails. Can any farmer believe that it was anything but an attempt to play upon his ignorance, or to pander to his prejudices?

So much for the indirect taxes.—Now for the direct. The land-tax, when imposed about 150 years ago, was certainly a tax on rent; but its rate has never been altered from that day to this, and its amount as a per centage on present rents is trifling in the extreme. A tax on rent, however, is the best tax which can possibly be imposed, for rent rises with every increase of a nation's wealth, through the toil of its industrious population, without any exertion on the part of the rent-receiver. If, therefore, a certain proportion, say one-fifth, of the actual rent was always levied upon the landlord, he would have no right to complain, for it would only be a small deduction for the benefit of the community, from that increase of wealth which he obtains without thought, care, or labour, by the industry of the rest of the community. He toils not, neither does he spin; he only legislates for those who do! A tax on rent would not raise the price of any commodity, it would not fall on any industrious consumer. The fund for keeping hounds, and race-horses, pheasants, grooms, and opera girls might be somewhat lessened by such a tax on rent; but the fund for the employment of useful and honest industry would be enlarged in precisely the same proportion, and it would not apply to persons now investing money in the purchase of land, for in such cases the tax would be calculated and the purchase-money reduced in proportion; but the newly-made landowner, the Barings of the commonwealth, would find their future increments of rent arising from the growth of national wealth and population taxed as it fairly should be. And even then the English landowner would pay a very much smaller proportion towards the taxation of the State than the landowner of the Continent. Next, the malt-tax on the malt consumed on the farm does not differ from that on malt consumed elsewhere: it is an indirect tax which we have before disposed of. Property-tax is paid by landlords and tenants in common with all other owners of property; so of the the church-rate. The poor-rate is only partially paid by the land, and, so far as it is paid by the land, forms ultimately a tax on rent, which is only reasonable, seeing that landlords are the chief makers of paupers. But pauperism would nearly cease out of the land if all the farms of the country were properly cultivated. That they are not so cultivated is the fault of the landlords, their laws, and their vicious system. The tithe rent-charge is only a portion of the rent, which is payable to the parson instead of the landlord: it is no more a burden on land than the rest of the rent is; it is a portion of the surplus which remains after the expenses of cultivation. If the parson had it not, it would go into the landlord's pocket. Lastly, we have the assessed taxes stated as a peculiar burden on land; and certainly that statement is the ne plus ultra of monopolist impudence. What is the fact? Why, that the land is specially exempted from all the assessed taxes; unless Mr. Baker means to say the taxes on the racers, the hunters, the carriages, and the servants of the landlords, are peculiar burdens on land, though every other person, deriving an income from any other source, is subject to the same taxes for keeping the like articles. But the agricultural classes are actually exempt from those taxes which are paid by other classes of tradesmen. The brewer, the butcher, or the baker pays a tax for every horse he uses in his business, while all the agricultural horses of the farmer are exempt; occupiers of farms under £200 a year may keep one riding-horse free of duty; horses ridden by bailiffs, shepherds, and herdsmen pay no duty; sheep and cattle dogs are exempt. The truth is, that if this subject is gone into we shall find that instead of peculiar burdens it will be proved that land has peculiar exemptions. We are glad Mr. Baker has fairly stirred the question, and we promise him our best assistance to investigate the subject, and set it in its true light. We suspect Mr. Baker's clients, the squires, won't thank him much for his "careful calculations," by the time they have been completely sifted. We shall return to the subject again and again.

A FALSEHOOD EXPOSED.

The following letter from one of the most independent-minded men in the county of Essex forms a practical comment on Mr. Baker's abominable assertion, that all the rural population have a sufficiency of bread:—

"To the Editor of the LEAGUE."

"I am quite satisfied that amongst the rural population they all have a sufficiency of bread; and whatever may have been said by Mr. Cobden and others on that point, is entirely groundless.—Extract from Mr. R. Baker's speech at the late Protection Society Meeting at Chelmsford."

"Sir,—The above extract I have copied from the Chelmsford Chronicle of last week, and being myself present, I believe it to be a correct version of what Mr. Baker said. Now, an assertion like this should be well considered before it is given to the public. Mr. Baker has an extensive acquaintance with agricultural matters, both as farmer and land-surveyor, agent, &c., and he has a fair claim to, and no doubt is considered, good authority. At the meeting I said 'No, no!' to the statement, and I could refer your readers to various districts, especially in the northern parts of this county, where the wages and earnings of the agricultural labourers are inadequate to find, for themselves and families, sufficiency of bread. But a fact is better than a long speech, and the following agreement, between a labourer and his master, is a startling one:—

"Oct. 11, 1842.—I, John Drury, do undertake the care of four horses and one riding horse to feed and clean, at four o'clock in the morning, and to do any sort of work, and plough my acre of land per day, for the sum of seven shillings per week, excepting the three weeks in harvest time, for which I am to have two shillings per week extra. I also hire the cottage and garden I now occupy, at four guineas per annum.—Witness my mark, JOHN DRURY."

"Great Maplestead."

"Earnest, part pay, 1s."

"This man serves his master at 1s. per week less this year. Drury is a married man, about 30 years of age, and a useful ploughman, with a wife and child, and being at some time since, he applied for relief to the Hated Board of Guardians, when the original document was shown to the board. It seems to me to be a mockery to talk of protection as necessary to the wellbeing of agricultural labourers; at all events John Drury must be an exception. Yours &c.,

"Witham, Jan. 3, 1844."

"HENRY DIXON."

So will all the fallacies and falsehoods of the squires' creatures be answered whenever they are sufficiently definite to be susceptible of affirmation or denial.

LINGERING FEUDALISM.

It is with no exaggerated or distempered fancy that we often refer to the system of English tenures, and the mode in which English land is managed, as distinctly referable to the sentiments of feudal times. The inconveniences and anomalies in our law of real property, as is well known to every conveyancer, are the immediate offspring of feudal tenures; and the strict scrutiny, which the necessity of exposing all the injurious effects of the Corn Laws has forced upon thinking men, shows day by day how much of the habits and sentiments of an uncivilized age lingers in the halls and castles of our landed grandees. Take, for instance, the following paragraph, relative to the Duke of Rutland, which has been going the round of the papers:—

"BELVOIR CASTLE.—The following statement will give some idea of the extent of the magnificent hospitality which on ordinary occasions prevails at the princely establishment of the Duke of Rutland:—During eighteen weeks in 1840, there dined at his grace's table 1997 persons; in the steward's room, 241; in the servants' hall, 11,312 persons; and in the kitchen department, including cooks and grooms, 11,312 persons. Of loaves of bread there were consumed 3333, and of meat 29,631lb., exclusive of game."

Now, when the avowed business of three-fourths of our nobles was rapine or civil war, and when the rest were compelled, in mere self-defence, to surround themselves with little armies, such profuse hospitality as that recorded in the above paragraph was, at all events, intelligible. But what good purpose can it serve now? If there be one class of persons whose influence upon a rural district is more mischievous than any other, it is the domestics of a great establishment. This is admitted to be so under the most favourable circumstances; it is distinctly and strongly stated by Mr. Senior, in one of his lectures as professor of political economy in the University of Oxford, and is felt to be so by all who have the misfortune to reside within the sphere of such evil influences. Now, what must have been the mischief caused upon the moral tone of a rural district in which 11,312 persons of the humbler classes were initiated into the coarse license of the servants' hall and kitchen of Belvoir Castle? This is an abuse of wealth. But then the Duke of Rutland is not wealthy; on the contrary, he is a poor man; so much so that in certain circles much compassion was expressed for him, on account of the late expensive honour of entertaining royalty which has been conferred upon him.

And it is wonderful that such absurd profusion should dilapidate the largest fortune?

Yet thus it is that the monopolist landowner of this country wastes his own substance—to say nothing of the waste he suffers in order to retain a dependent tenantry—while he grasps at a dishonest increase of rent by means of artificial scarcity and Corn Laws, and induces men unwillingly to apply to him the description formerly given of the Roman aristocrat—Attenti appetens sui proventus.

ARISTOCRATIC CHARITIES.

If there be one indication of the misuse of landlords' power and influence in any particular district more unfavourable than another, it is to be found in the fact, that periodical distributions in charity are there made to the labouring classes. Thus in Buckinghamshire we find many such as the following:—

"WOTTON.—On Sunday week, after the morning service, the Christmas gifts of the Duke of Buckingham were distributed at this place. The poor of Wotton, Westcott, and Ashendon, with the hamlets of Kingswood and Woodham, were certainly kindly remembered by his Grace, who, with the Duchess, the Marquis of Chandos, and Lady Anna Eliza Grenville, were in attendance at the distribution, having come from Stowe for that purpose. Each person above twelve years of age, had 2lbs. of beef, 2lbs. of bread, and two pints of beer; and those under twelve, half the above quantities. The aged and sick, in addition, had a change of flannel given them. Every male child who attends his Grace's free school has each a new suit of clothes given him."—Aylesbury News.

Again:—

"BOARSTALL.—About twenty tons of coal have been presented to the poor of Boarstall, and delivered at their doors free. Some families had upwards of half a ton as their share. Twelve pounds of the fund were received from the charity of—Leeds, Esq., and the remainder was raised by subscription."—Aylesbury News.

We last week drew attention to the remarkable coincidence of extreme destitution and degradation amongst the labourers, and extensive Christmas benefactions in Dorsetshire; and, with the exception of that county, and, perhaps, one or two others in the west of England, there are no agricultural labourers so badly paid, and so thoroughly pauperised, as those of Buckinghamshire. This is especially the case in those parts which are under the Duke of Buckingham's influence. He maintains and defends all that tends to degrade the peasant; he grants no leases, and, in consequence, has a poor and spiritless tenantry, who farm badly, with as few labourers as possible. He preserves game with the most scrupulous severity, so much so that, until Sir James Graham was compelled to interpose, a sort of private petty sessions used to be held before the open petty sessions, by two magistrates, creatures of the Duke, for the express purpose of hearing game offences committed on the Duke's property. Here we find a system of letting land, by which the rural labourers are reduced to the brink of starvation, and a stock of game, hateful and injurious to the farmer, kept, which, to the destitute peasant, offers an inducement to offend against the law—an unwise and unjust law, it is true, but still the law—which is almost irresistible. Does the Duke of Buckingham—do the thousands of other English landlords who, like him, uphold a system which is destructive of agricultural industry, and begets deep rural demoralization—so misinterpret the text, "charity covereth a multitude of sins," as to imagine that two pitiful pounds of beef and pints of beer, to a few selected poor, can be aught but a mockery of that class he and they have so cruelly wronged by the way in which their property is misused?

NON-POLITICAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES.

We have often said, most of the active members of agricultural societies are really more desirous to maintain Monopoly than to benefit agriculture; and that, in spite of their ostensible repudiation of political objects, they formed, in most cases, covert "protection societies." This has been shown in the Northampton Graziers' Association, from which several members have withdrawn themselves because the President, Earl Spencer, has declared his opinion that Free Trade will be best for farmers. With that directness of purpose for which his Lordship is so deservedly esteemed he immediately himself withdrew from the society, and announced his intention in the following letter on the subject to the honorary secretary, Mr. Whitworth:—

"ALTHORP, Jan. 6, 1844,

"Sir,—I have always been of opinion, and have frequently stated, that an agricultural society which had anything of a political character was an evil instead of a benefit to the country; and have invariably declined to connect myself with any such society unless one of the conditions of its formation was the total exclusion of all political discussions. The step which several gentlemen who are deservedly considered among the most respected and eminent farmers of this county, have taken of withdrawing their names from the Farming and Grazing Society, and the reason which they have given for so doing, must necessarily give a political character to this society. I continue one of its members. I therefore must beg you to withdraw my name from it. I am very sorry to feel it my duty to take this step. I have had great satisfaction in acting with the society, believing, as I do, that it has greatly improved the agriculture of this neighbourhood, but I am confident this has been mainly owing to the total exclusion of all political feeling from every part of its proceedings. If I remain a member this can no longer be the case; but when I am withdrawn, I hope the farmers will carry it on in the same spirit which has hitherto animated it. With respect to the prizes which I have been in the habit of giving as a member of the society, I shall of course give those which are announced for this year. After this year I shall continue to offer those for sheep-shearing, for mowing, and for hedge-cutting to the labourers; for none of them, at least, will think that they have a right to die to me what my political opinions shall be because I offer prizes for their competition. I shall be quite ready also to continue the other prizes, if the society will accept them; unless I find that it is imputed to me that I have any political or interested motive in so doing."

"I have the honour to be, &c.,

"H. B. Whitworth, Esq."

"SPENCER."

HINTS FOR AGRICULTURISTS.

THE CALLED JACK WINCES.—The savage attack made at Blandford by Mr. George Banks, M.P.—he of Dorsetshire notoriety—on the Rev. Mr. Osborne, by reason of that gentleman's share in exposing the real state of the labourers under a system of monopoly, sufficiently proved the soreness of the monopolists of Dorsetshire upon the subject. But the following passage from a half-apologetic letter on the occurrence, which Mr. Banks has published in the local newspaper, proves that he quite understands the conclusive character of the evidence recently afforded by Dorsetshire against the Corn Monopoly. He says:—

"Mr. Osborne will not be offended if I add, that it was from the circumstances of his elevated station in respect of rank, and character, and abilities, that I have felt the more acutely the use, so very different from what he intends, which may be made of the productions of a pen used by him on many occasions with intentions so benevolent and with so much talent."

There can be no doubt that Mr. Osborne's evidence, which is beyond suspicion, completely discredits the hardy and insolent statements of Mr. George Banks, with respect to the condition of the Dorsetshire peasantry.

THE LAW OF LANDLORD AND TENANT.—The following recital, which we have extracted from a letter of Mr.

James Dean, the eminent surveyor, in the Mark-lane Express, sets in a strong light the perils by which the tenant-farmers of England are beset in consequence of the unequal operation of the law of landlord and tenant. It also affords an instance of the folly a farmer commits who consents to become a "confidence"-bold tenant:—

"An action was brought by a landlord against his tenant for not leaving 70 acres of dead or naked fallow upon quitting his farm, for too a cropping, over-cropping, and taking away portions of the hay and straw from off the farm on quitting. The damages were laid at £300. The farm consisted of 275 acres—275 acres being arable, and 3 acres grass land. The tenancy was from year to year; the rent £220 clear, subject to great and small tithes, situated in the parish of Hambledon, midway between Great Marlow and Henley, Bucks. The defendant's father had rented the farm many years, under an agreement in writing, which applied in his lifetime; afterwards continued to hold the farm as tenant-at-will. The father dying, left his wife executrix, who continued the farm, and ultimately resigned it to her son, the present defendant. The farm-buildings having become dilapidated, and the land wanting improvement by chalking, the tenant applied to his then landlord to assist him to do the same; the landlord excused him, on the ground of poverty, but gave an assurance to the tenant that, if he would do them at his own expense, his rent should not be raised during his (the landlord's) life; with the further assurance that, as the estate was in strict settlement, it could not be sold for many years then to come. This was, however, nothing as to the letting of the farm, or the repairs and improvements, reduced into writing."

Here we have a case of mutual confidence between landlord and tenant as complete as Sir Robert Peel could desire; and what was the result?—

"The tenant repaired the buildings at an expense exceeding £300, and laid out upwards of £600 in chalking 185 acres of the land. The landlord had by this time discovered that he could sell the estate, and determined to do so; first offering it, together with 25 acres of woodland, to the tenant at 10,000 guineas; the tenant bid £8000. In the midst of the twenty, the plaintiff in the action offered £10,000 and was accepted. He then offered it to the defendant to rent, at £500 per annum, which was declined. On the 23rd of March, 1842, the plaintiff served the defendant with notice to quit at the Michaelmas next following, and then let it to Mr. Stowe, the present tenant, at £400 per annum."

The confidence was not transferred though the estate was; and the tenant who had thus been so foolish as to lay out his money without a lease, was therefore required by the new purchaser to pay a rent according to the increased value caused by his own outlay. This was a simple act of plunder by course of law.

"Mr. King, the defendant, being very popular in his neighbourhood, and esteemed one of the best farmers in the country, there was a universal feeling of disgust at the treatment he had received; and the new landlord, being probably aware of it, offered Stowe £100, before he entered, to give up the bargain, but Stowe said he would not give it up for £500. King, the away-going tenant, and Stowe, the incoming tenant, then came to an amicable arrangement about the usual terms of quitting. King set out the tiller of his crops to ascertain what straw he might remove; removed the surplus hay, and so left the farm; regretting, as may be supposed, the great mistake he had made in relying upon the honour of his former landlord, and asking consolation from the kind feeling so universally expressed in his behalf from all but one, that one his new landlord, the plaintiff: his expression of kind feeling came in the shape of an action at law, for damage done to his farm—none, too, in the strict sense of six months; the action was based upon an agreement made before the defendant was born, and with a landlord he never knew, and was justly repudiated by both judge and jury at the trial."

The matter was, by the direction of the judge, referred to arbitration, and after the examination of a host of witnesses on both sides, the arbitrator decided that the landlord was not entitled to any damages, and he was ordered to pay the costs. The tenant had, however, paid a sum of money into court to cover his technical error of omitting to leave the stipulated quantity of naked fallows, and the costs he would receive from his opponent by no means met his actual expenditure. Now this is only what happens every day, and we believe there is scarcely a farmer in England who might not be half ruined from being entrapped in the meshes of the usual farming agreements. It was once honestly said by a Lord Chancellor, on a remark being made upon the unfair rule of law which gave a widower a life-interest in his deceased wife's equitable estate in land, but refused a similar benefit to a widow, that the only way of accounting for it was, "that men alone were chancellors;" and it must be obvious to every one who knows anything of the practical working of the law of landlord and tenant, that no tenant-farmers have yet been legislators.

THE BENEFIT OF MONOPOLY!—In the agricultural monthly report from Bedfordshire we find these significant passages:—

"Draining, ditching, throwing down old irregular fences, and planting new ones, seem to be pretty generally the order of the day; in fact, where the tenant can do very well spare the necessary outlay, it is being done, in many instances, by the landlord, not forgetting (of course) to put on an additional rent. It is far better, we admit, that these improvements should be so made, than not made at all; it is more satisfactory, however, where we see the tenants able to make them, and with a security as to tenure that causes them to do it cheerfully—the landlord finding the materials."

This is the only way in which landlords and tenants can really "protect" themselves. What legislative promises unfulfilled have brought many farmers to, the following will show:—

"The last year, what with the low prices of all farm produce of the previous season, together with the very deficient crops of the late harvest on all the strong, tenacious soils of the county, has, we regret to say, placed the farmers of those soils in a very pitiable state; and it will only be by some extraordinary good luck, or rather from great consideration of their landlords, if they ever recover their former position in society."

Again:—

"Many [farmers] are already insolvent, and others following them close at their heels, and not one farmer in a score can place out his sons in anything like the same circumstances he had been placed himself."

And what does this writer, who of course eagerly desires to maintain "protection," say of the present prospects of the farmer?

"This, then, is our position, at the commencement of the new year; and, what is still worse, what by party strife among the landed gentry, and the bitter disappointment and dogged indifference of the tenantry, we are become a rope of sand, and completely powerless before the common enemy."

Such, then, is the actual state of the farmers under law which gives the British grower of corn an absolute monopoly of the British market. Farmers are, however, beginning to discover that the Monopolists, and not the Free Traders, are "the common enemy."

A SENSIBLE DOUBT.—A correspondent of the Mark-lane Express, who signs himself a "Young Farmer," doubts the benefit to be derived by tenant-farmers from the escape of the Essex land-agents. He says:—

"I learn one or two Protection Societies are about to be commenced in this county (Essex); a great deal is said about raising funds for this purpose; certainly tenant-farmers cannot well afford to refuse such in this way. You, Mr. Editor, are well aware that the present time is a difficult one to keep the vessel clear of running aground, with produce at a low rate, whilst our expenses are, as ever, high. I confess I am a little dull of comprehension; but it appears to me by such acts we are not protecting ourselves as tenant-farmers. Are we not taking the business out of the hands of those to whom we should look for protection—our landlords? If that equitable adjustment of rent could be accomplished, so ably advocated by Mr. Baker and others, I would ask, where is the tenant-farmer who would not cheerfully fall in with such a desirable object for the protection of the interests of landlord and tenant? To use a common expression, 'our course is couled,' when we read such statements as that contained in the Express of last week, which fell from the Marquis of Salisbury. It appears to me that such statements mean, in plain English, tenant-farmers are made the slaves to cause estates to produce a certain interest on capital, whether they can live on it or not."

The "Young Farmer" is right. Let the landlords fight their own battles, without making the farmers' interest their stalking-horse.

THE MARQUIS OF SALISBURY AND HIS TENANTS.—The account we gave of the speech of this real monopolist on his rent day, to such of his tenants as then made their appearance, having been copied into the Globe, his lordship's agent wrote to that journal with the following corrected report:—

"You appear to have been misinformed; and I beg, therefore, to state briefly the tenor of his lordship's address on that occasion. After alluding to the mischief he anticipated from the repeal of the Corn Laws, he said that the first persons who would suffer from the abolition of protection would be the leaseholders. They were bound by engagements which they had been called to fulfil as long as they had the means. The tenants at-will were in a better situation—they might demand a reduction, or leave their farms; but his lordship much doubted whether any reduction would meet the injuries of the case. Least of all the leaseholders would be affected, and it was impossible to foresee whether the effects of such a measure upon them would be permanent or temporary. His lordship inferred from this, that an active opposition to the efforts of the Corn-Law League ought to commence with the occupiers of land."

This, however, completely proves the accuracy of our information, for the quintessence report of the speaker's agent is substantially the same as ours. It is curious to observe that the agent has not denied that his lordship gave his tenants to understand—for, like most of his fellow-peers, he is a wretched speaker—that he had made up his mind to grant no reductions of rent. We know that the feeling left upon the minds of his hearers was one of excessive disgust. As to the fallacy upon which his lordship founded his attempt to incite his dependent tenants-at-will to an active defence of high rents, viz., that yearly tenants are less dependent upon their landlord when an unlooked for fall in prices occurs than leaseholders, the extract we gave from Mr. Shaw Lefevre's address disposes of that completely. And it must be remembered that Mr. Lefevre is an AGRICULTURIST, and a good one, while Lord Salisbury is as much an agriculturist because he is, by the accident of birth, a landowner as any old lady on whom a sixty-fourth share in a ship may have devolved as next of kin of her twentieth cousin would be a sailor.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Our correspondent "Mercator's" caution is needless. Mr. Cobden will not be caught by Feargus O'Connor's craft; challenges to public discussion by such men are a very stale device (Dr. Sligh and Mr. Ferrand to wit,) for diverting attention from the true scent. Mr. Cobden has attended 28 public open-air meetings, duly advertised, in all parts of England, where he challenged all comers. He held public meetings in Bucks, Yorkshire, and Lancashire, in which counties the learned doctor and the Irish patriot now pretend to be so anxious to discuss the question of the Corn Law. We know Feargus better than our correspondent; and if he wish to be better informed of his public character let him inquire in Ireland. This empty brag is probably the only native-born Irishman who dares not stand up before a public meeting of his own countrymen in Ireland. He has at last avowed himself the champion of the Bread-tax, and we wish the Monopolists joy of their worthy ally. A reply to most of the questions asked a week by our correspondents will be found in the Postscript. Want of space compels us to defer our answers to the next.

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any person forwarding 3s. 3d. by Post-office order, to the Publisher, 67, Fleet-street, London, will have one quarter's copies of the League forwarded by post on the days of publication. Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with J. Gadsby, Newall's-buildings, Manchester; and the League may be had by order of any news-agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, January 13, 1844.

Falsehood has always been the last desperate resource of monopoly; faction only wants one unblushing knave to invent a lie, and every member of its band is sure to aid in giving it circulation. There are papers that knowingly publish falsehoods, but refuse to insert the refutations except as advertisements, and thus carry on a profitable traffic in guilt. It is the morality of oligarchy, that those who circulate a proved lie are not bound to take any notice of its contradiction: calumny is deemed a legitimate weapon of war, and slanders on private character are circulated for the purpose of deterring men from the assertion of public principle. In 1829, it was currently reported throughout Ireland that Wellington and Peel had been bribed out of the Catholic rent to coerce George IV. into granting emancipation. Grossly absurd as such a story appears, it was studiously circulated by the Brunswick clubs, and it received credence in ranks of society where the existence of such gullibility could scarcely have been suspected. We all remember the atrocious tales of slander invented respecting the Queen, and the zeal with which those monstrous falsehoods were spread abroad by certain right noble gentlemen and right honourable ladies; and we know that the denial of these abominable calumnies exposed adherents of truth to direct insult, or exclusion from certain circles claiming to be fashionable.

We never expected that the League would escape from calumny, but we were not prepared to find such a journal as the Times adopting the dishonest arts of the lowest and most disreputable portion of the press, inserting the falsehood in its largest type and consigning the contradiction to small letter, or withholding it altogether. The example has been followed by all the monopolist papers throughout the country, and we are asked by our correspondents if silence on the subject is to be taken as admission of the facts? They are not aware that these pretended facts have been decisively refuted on the spot where they had birth. Were it not that such an infamous conspiracy to perpetuate lies and hide their refutations produces some uneasiness to our friends in remote districts, where few journals circulate, we should not bestow upon them the slightest notice: but to gratify those friends rather than ourselves, we shall just notice a few of the latest calumnies, and state what are the real facts.

LIE 1.

That Mr. John Brooks told Mr. Ferrand that he wished to prevent the reduction of the differential duties on coffee.

FACT.

That Mr. John Brooks came to London for the express purpose of obtaining a greater reduction than that which the Minister proposed.

LIE 2.

That a Leaguer in Manchester offered to join in a subscription to procure the assassination of Sir Robert Peel.

FACT.

That no such proposal was ever made, but a person in Manchester, not connected with the League, when asked to subscribe to the expenses of a deputation, said that he would rather give the money to shoot Sir Robert Peel.

LIE 3.

That a respectable witness could prove the complicity of a Leeds-manufacturer in the outbreak of last August.

FACT.

That a fraudulent bankrupt told such a tale respecting his creditor, who exposed its utter falsehood in the Town Council of Leeds, and that the monopolist papers which circulated the falsehood burked the report of the Council's proceedings.

These are the three latest lies which have come to our notice, and they may serve as specimens of the dishonourable arts to which the advocates of monopoly are compelled to have recourse. We really feel it to be a degradation to notice such monstrous and palpable absurdities.

IRISH LANDLORDS.

A CASE FOR LORD DEVON.—The Tralee Chronicle, a moderate Conservative paper, contains a full report of a case tried at the Killarney Quarter Sessions, before the assistant-barrister, on Friday, in which two poor men, Owen and John Sullivan, were plaintiffs, and Mr. Thomas M'Swiny, their landlord, the defendant. There were two actions for £20 for the trover of potatoes, alleged to have been seized by the defendant, in contravention of a written agreement between the parties. According to the statement of Mr. Downing, who acted for the tenants, "in defiance of every principle of humanity, justice, and the terms of the agreement, the defendant had distrained a quantity of potatoes, which was all that these poor people were worth in the world, after being the tenants of this gentleman for several years. They possessed him five times, and he distrained these poor miserable creatures on informalities and technicalities. At the last sessions the plaintiffs were dismissed because they had not the witness to prove the written agreement between the parties, and the receipt he gave them on quitting the land, by which they were entitled to get their crops upon giving up the farm; and, though this witness came to town then, in obedience to the summons of the court, he was taken out of the court before the trial to the defendant's house in this town, and there kept locked up until after the dismissals were obtained. He (Mr. Downing) never knew a case of greater hardship come before a court."

Mr. Supple.—But you don't say one word about the £23 rent that these people owe to Mr. M'Swiny. Mr. Supple then contended that the agreement required a stamp, and that the court had no power to try the action, inasmuch as that the subject-matter of the process was over £20.

Mr. Murphy contended that there was no specific sum in the agreement; it only stated that the defendants should get their crops free, without mentioning any sum as value for the crops, because no value could be set on them when they were only then setting.

At an early stage of the proceedings, His Worship said, that in this case a most improper attempt had been made to influence him in the discharge of his public duty. An anonymous letter had been written to him by some person, who sought to influence his decision in favour of the defendant. Nothing could be more improper—nothing could be more reprehensible—than for any person to write such a letter, for the purpose of preventing a public officer fairly and faithfully discharging his duty according to the evidence brought before him. Such an act—committed by any man would deserve punishment, and if his worship knew the writer of this letter, he would punish him severely.

The letter was handed to the gentleman concerned for the purpose of tracing the handwriting, but it was not made out.

For the defence witnesses were called to prove that the value of the potatoes seized had been greatly overrated, and that, however oppressive it might have appeared on Mr. M'Swiny's part, the fact was alleged to be, that he had been always very kind to the plaintiffs, who owed him rent to the amount of £58.

The Court in giving judgment said, that since he had the honour of first filling the office which he now holds, he never knew any man guilty of conduct more inhuman, more base, or more oppressive; and he trusted, for the sake of humanity, that it would be the last of such cases that ever would appear before him. If cases like this were allowed to proceed, hardship, harassing, and oppressing the labouring poor, it would not be matter of surprise that this county should be immersed in those crimes that have disgraced other counties in Ireland. It would, indeed, be no wonder if the peaceable people of this county were to take the law into their own hands, oppose the settled laws of property, if those ruthless tyrants, who in other countries are called land sharks, were not discouraged in every instance where the law could lay hold of them; but as long as he held that situation, he would let the poor, the indigent, and the needy see that justice should be administered to them as fairly and as impartially as to the proudest and greatest in the land. He would take care that the poor or the humble should not be injured more than the great or the rich; while at the same time, no man would go further than he would to punish the poor when they were violators of the public peace of the country. Not content with having broken his solemn and deliberate agreement—not content with appropriating to his own use all that these unfortunate people probably had in the world, this man—he did not deserve the name of a gentleman, nor was he entitled to call himself a Christian—not content with doing this, sought to poison the source of justice by writing or causing to be written a letter to predispose the Court in his favour, and further endeavoured to frustrate justice by getting others, if he did not do it himself, to commit forgery and deprive the people of the benefit of the testimony, such as it was, of the only witness which these wretched people had to sustain their case. His worship went on to reprobate these acts, and said he never in his life gave a decree with greater satisfaction than this, for £10 10s. each.

At the conclusion of his worship's address there was a general buzz in court.

HOMAGE TO NATIVE TALENT.—As an additional attraction to the performances of the Indians, Mr. Ferrand has been engaged by Mr. Catlin to "throw the hatchet." From the wonderful perfection Mr. Ferrand has attained in this art, it is expected he will throw the hatchet much further than any Indian has yet accomplished, by introducing at each performance a new anecdote about the Anti-Corn-Law League.—Punch.

THE FUNDS.

| | Sat. Jan. 6 | Mon. Jan. 8 | Tues. Jan. 9 | Wed. Jan. 10 | Thurs. Jan. 11 | Fri. Jan. 12 |
|----------------------|-------------|-------------|--------------|--------------|----------------|--------------|
| Bank Stock | 187 | — | 187½ | 187 | 186½ | — |
| 3 per Ct. Red. Ann | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ |
| 4½ per Ct. Red. Ann | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ | 102½ |
| L. An. Ex. Jan. 1860 | 12½ ex div | 12½ ex div | 12½ ex div | 12½ | 12½ | — |
| Cons. for Opp. | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ | 97½ |
| Exchequer Bills | 69 pm. | 69 pm. | 69 pm. | 69 pm. | 69 pm. | — |
| 3. 6m. Ann. | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| India Bonds | 79 81 pm | 81 pm | 80 pm | 81 80 pm | 80 pm. | — |
| India Stock | 27½ | 27½ | 27½ | 27½ | 27½ | — |
| Belgian | 104 | 104 | 104 | 104½ | 104 | — |
| Brazilian | 74 | 74½ | 75½ | 75½ | 75½ | — |
| Chilian | 101 | 101 | 101 | 101 | 101 | — |
| Colombian | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| Danish | 87 | 87 | 87 | 87 | 85 | — |
| Dutch 5 per Cent. | 100 | 100½ | 100½ | 100½ | 100½ | 100½ |
| Dutch 2½ per Ct. | 84½ ex div | 84½ | 84½ | 84½ | 84½ | 84½ |
| Mexican | 82½ | 82½ | 82½ | 82½ | 82½ | 82½ |
| Portuguese, conv. | 44½ | 44½ | 44½ | 44½ | 44½ | 44½ |
| Russian 5 per Ct. | 80½ ex div | 80½ | 80½ | 80½ | 80½ | 80½ |
| Spanish 3 per Ct. | 113 | — | — | 113½ | 8½ | 80½ |
| Austrian | 23 | 23 | 23 | 23 | 23 | — |
| Prussian | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| French 3 p. Cent. | — | — | — | — | — | — |

MARKETS.

CORN MARKET.

MARK-LANE, Monday, Jan. 8.—There was a short supply of English Wheat this morning, and much of it was in bad condition. The driest parcels were sold at an advance of 1s. to 2s., and ordinary qualities of 1s., from this day week. Foreign Wheat was rather in better demand, but factors held firmly for an advance of 1s., which was not very extensively accorded to. There was rather a large supply of Barley, for the best Malting samples last week's prices were obtained, but for other descriptions the trade was scarcely so good as last week. No alteration in Grey or White Peas, or Beans. We had a better supply of Irish Oats than for some time, in addition to a moderate arrival of English and Scotch; the trade was not brisk, but last week's prices were obtained for all descriptions.

S. H. Lucas and Son.

| Currency per Imperial measure. | | Currency per Imperial measure. | |
|--------------------------------|------------|--------------------------------|------------|
| Wheat, English, White | 30s to 32s | Peas, Grey | 30s to 32s |
| New | 46s to 60s | Maple | 33s — 35s |
| Do., do., Old | 60s — 64s | Malt, Pale Suffolk and | — |
| Do., Red, New | 42s — 55s | Norfolk | 54s — 57s |
| Do., do., Old | 50s — 61s | Chevalier | 60s — 61s |
| Dantsig | 57s — 63s | Oats, English Feed | 20s — 22s |
| Stettin | 50s — 57s | Do. Short | 21s — 23s |
| Barley, Malting | 32s — 34s | Scotch Feed | 31s — 32s |
| Do., Distilling | 30s — 32s | Do. Potato | 22s — 26s |
| Grinding | 24s — 30s | Irish Feed | 17s — 18s |
| Beans, Tick, New | 24s — 28s | Do. Short | 19s — 20s |
| Do., Old | 28s — 30s | Do. do., New | 19s — 21s |
| Harrow, New | 28s — 30s | Do. Black | 17s — 18s |
| Do., Old | 30s — 32s | Do. Galloway | 16s — 17s |
| Pigeon, New | 26s — 31s | Flour, town made and | — |
| Do., Old | 28s — 30s | best country marks | 45s — 50s |
| Peas, White | 31s — 32s | Norfolk and Sur- | — |
| Do., Bollers | 34s — 36s | folk | 40s — 42s |

Account of CORN, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 1st to the 6th of Jan. 1844, both days inclusive.

| | Wheat. | Barley. | Oats. | Beans. | Peas. |
|----------|--------|---------|-------|--------|-------|
| English | 5 45 | 13007 | 8090 | 1790 | 1092 |
| Scottish | 221 | 3208 | 4884 | 70 | — |
| Irish | — | 493 | 7662 | — | — |
| Foreign | 1098 | — | 682 | — | — |

Flour, 8021 sacks, 150 bbls. Malt, 10479 qrs.

MARK-LANS, Friday, Jan. 13.—The supply of English wheat since Monday is short, of English barley and of Irish oats large. There is no alteration in the value of English wheat. Free foreign is held firmly at Monday's prices, but there is very little business doing. Fine malting barley brings former rates; distilling and grinding qualities are rather lower. Notwithstanding a large supply of Irish oats, prices are well maintained; but the trade is not brisk. In other articles there is no alteration to notice.

S. H. LUCAS and SON.

Account of Corn, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 6th to the 12th of Jan., both inclusive.

| | English. | Irish. | Foreign. |
|--------|----------|--------|----------|
| Wheat | 4110 | — | 1220 |
| Barley | 11140 | 1270 | 1170 |
| Oats | 2980 | 25980 | — |

Flour 8020 sacks.

A WEEKLY REPORT OF THE NUMBER OF QUARTERS, and the AVERAGE PRICE OF CORN and GRAIN, sold in the several Counties of England and Wales (comprising the Two Hundred and Ninety Towns named in the Act of the 5th Vic., cap. 14), which governs Duty.

WEEK ENDED JANUARY 6, 1844.

| | WHEAT. | BARLEY. | OATS. | BEANS. |
|----------------------|--------------|--------------|-------------|------------|
| | Qrs. sold. | Qrs. sold. | Qrs. sold. | Qrs. sold. |
| Weekly Averages.. | 94,244 49 10 | 111,253 82 7 | 37,003 18 3 | 6258 29 5 |
| Aggregate Averages.. | 50 5 | 32 1 | 18 7 | 30 11 |
| Duty..... | 20 0 | 6 0 | 8 0 | 10 6 |

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 9.

DECLARATION OF INSOLVENCY.

F. B. COURTNEY, Great Marlborough-street, bookseller.

BANKRUPTCY SUPERSEDED.

W. GORTON, Gutter-lane, Chesapeake, fishmonger.

BANKRUPTS.

- C. CLARK, Banbury, Oxfordshire, linen-draper. [Sole and sole, Aldermanbury.]
 J. TURNER, Grange-place, Hoxton, cabinetmaker. [Wire and Child, St. Swinith's-lane.]
 A. SCOTT, Cambridge-street, Golden-square, auctioneer. [Davis and Son, Warwick-street.]
 A. BLAZDELL, Upper Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square, harp maker. [A. Beckett and Co., Golden-square.]
 C. B. ROE and T. J. BLACHFORD, Newport, Isle of Wight, bankers. [Foster and Evans, John-street, Bedford-row; Messrs. Bewell, Newport, Isle of Wight.]
 G. SMITH, Northampton, carpenter. [Wright, New Inn.]
 J. SHERWOOD, Wood-street, Cheapside, stationer. [Harriman, Earl-street, Blackfriars.]
 H. ORRILL, Romford, Essex, victualler. [Fowler, Romford; Gadsden and Flower, Furnival's-inn.]
 G. C. BRIDGE, Maldon, Essex, grocer. [Stevens and Co., Queen-street, Cheapside, London.]
 W. DUNNETT, Manchester, commission agent. [Gregory and Co., Bedford-row; Cooper, Manchester.]
 E. EVANS, Llangurdir, Carmarthenshire, draper. [Messrs. Clarke, Bristol.]
 W. KATHOPK, Shrewsbury, Shropshire, whitesmith. [Newman, Lincoln's-inn-fields, London; Garbutt, Wellington; Hodgson, Birmingham.]

DIVIDENDS.

- Feb. 2. T. Chappell, Swan Inn, Sudbury, Suffolk, licensed victualler. Feb. 2. S. P. Gladstone, Crisp-street, East India-road, Poplar, shipwright.—Feb. 2. J. K. Beerbohm and W. E. Haughton, Fenchurch-street, merchants.—Jan. 30. C. Holloway, Queen's Head Inn, Stockbridge, Hampshire victualler.—Jan. 30. H. Jones, Canterbury, victualler.—Feb. 2. H. M. Low, W. M. Westerman, and C. A. Cantor, Calcutta, merchants.—Feb. 1. A. T. Harwood, Streatham, Surrey, lodging house-keeper.—Jan. 30. R. Collier, Hythe, Kent, draper.—Jan. 30. A. L. Bensusan and J. Branton, Walbrook-buildings, merchants.—Jan. 30. R. Parker, Deptford-row, linen-draper.—Jan. 30. J. H. Arnold and W. H. Woollett, Clement's-lane, ship and insurance agents.—Feb. 1. J. Levett, Rowley Regis, Staffordshire, farmer.—Feb. 1. J. H. Williams, Bristol, wholesale and retail ironmonger.—Feb. 2. R. J. and J. Potter, Guburne-park, Yorkshire, cotton spinners.—Feb. 2. W. Scott, Earl's Heaton, Yorkshire, blanket manufacturer.—Feb. 3. J. Senior, Lascoll's Hall, Yorkshire, manufacturer of fancy cloths.—Feb. 2. B. Hargrave, Manchester, tailor.—Feb. 2. C. J. Williams and E. Nevill, Birmingham, factors.

CERTIFICATES.

- Feb. 1. G. J. Pouchie, Oxford-street, stationer.—Feb. 2. S. Peers, Old Jewry, wine merchant.—Feb. 1. J. B. L. Farrant, Maidstone, agricultural machine maker.—Feb. 1. W. H. Diamond, Frith-street, St. Ann's, Westminster, surgeon.—Jan. 30. W. B. McPherson, Rosemary Branch Tavern, Hoxton, victualler.—Jan. 30. W. B. Cockrell, Redham, Norfolk, butcher.—Feb. 1. P. A. Nuttall, Cheltenham, newspaper vendor.—J. M. Wintle, Drury-lane, silversmith.—W. Rolfe, Thelfield, Hertfordshire, farmer.—L. Mosely, High-street, Shadwell, Staffordshire warehouseman.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.

- J. HALKETT, Dundee, manufacturer.—C. KEENAN, North-bridge, Edinburgh, linen-draper.

IN A SELECT ESTABLISHMENT for YOUNG

LADIES A vacancy occurs for Two or Three Pupils on advantageous terms. The situation is healthy, and the moral and general improvement of the Pupils are attended to with every care. An article pupil is required. Letters, free, to M. N. J. Elizabeth place, Ball's Pond-road, Islington.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH. MR. THOMAS'S SUGCUDANUM, price 4s. 6d.—Patronised by her Majesty, the Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. This valuable SUGCUDANUM for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity, is far superior to anything ever before used, as it is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and in a short time becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary. It arrests all further progress of decay, and renders them again useful in mastication. All persons can use Mr. THOMAS'S SUGCUDANUM themselves with ease, without the aid of a dentist, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 68, Berners-street, Oxford-street, price 4s. 6d., and will be sent by post to any part of the kingdom.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. Thomas continues to supply the loss of teeth, and has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, which will be found very superior to all others, as they will never decay nor become discoloured, and their perfect resemblance to nature defies detection even by the closest observer. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. The charges will be found less than most dentists.—Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 68, Berners-street, Oxford-street. At home from Eleven till Four.

CHEAPEST PERIODICAL IN THE WORLD.

THE FAMILY HERALD; or, Useful Information and Amusement for the Million.—Part VIII. of this entertaining Publication was published with the Magazine for January, containing Facts and Philosophy for Gentlemen—Hints and Entertainment for Ladies—Questions and Divisions for Youth—Interesting to all, offensive to none—No Party Spirit—No Personalities—No Ribaldry. Published also in Weekly Numbers, at the low charge of One Penny. G. Begg, 42, Strand, London, and all Booksellers.

NEW ROUTE FOR GOODS TO GERMANY.
FOR ANTWERP (with leave to discharge at Ostend when the Scheldt is frozen). The regular BELGIAN TRADERS sail every week. Goods by these Vessels, for Germany, are forwarded by Railway from Antwerp to Cologne, free of Transit Duty, at low rates; and, by order of the Government, every possible Custom-house facility is granted. At these Traders will discharge at Ostend, if they cannot get to Antwerp, a direct, cheap, and expeditious communication is now open all the year, between our manufacturing districts and their customers in Germany. For further particulars apply to JOHN FOSTER, Belgien Consulate, Hall, 10th Jan., 1844.
 On sale, French Oak Bark, Madder, Linseed Oils, Magdeburg Chloro, Mustard Patent Sheathing and Bolts.

CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE.—If the direct written testimony in favour of the purity and perfection of BUTTER'S PATENT BRANDY, given, after analysis, by three of the most eminent Chemists of the day, needed any confirmation, it will be found in the fact, that it is employed, in preference to Foreign Brandy, under high medical directions, in many of the principal hospitals, infirmaries, and other public institutions in the kingdom, among which it may suffice to name Guy's, St. George's, and the Westminster Hospitals in the metropolis; and the Manchester, Bristol, and Brighton Infirmaries. Distillery, No. 7, Smith's-field Lane, leading to St. John-street. Price, pale or coloured, in quantities not less than Two Gallons, Eighteen Shillings per Gallon.

COMFORT FOR TENDER FEET, &c.

Wellington-street, Strand, London.

HALL and CO., SOLE PATENTEES of the PANNUS CORIUM, or Leather-Cloth Boots and Shoes for Ladies and Gentlemen. These articles have borne the test and received the approbation of all who have worn them. Such as are troubled with Corns, Bunions, Gout, Chilblains, or Tenderness of Feet from any other cause, will find them the softest and most comfortable ever invented. Hall and Co. particularly invite attention to their Elastic Boots, which are much approved; their superlative leath, or buttoning, are drawn on in an instant, and are a great support to the ankle.

The Patent India-rubber Goggles are light, durable, elastic, and waterproof; they thoroughly protect the feet from damp or cold. Hall and Co.'s Portable Waterproof Dresses, Ladies' Cardinal Cloaks with Hoods, 18s. Gentlemen's Dresses, comprising Cape, Overall, and Hood, 21s. The whole can be carried with convenience in the pocket.

A CUP OF COFFEE IN ONE MINUTE!

DUNN'S ESSENCE OF COFFEE, warranted to keep good in any climate.—This Essence of the finest Mocha Coffee, improved by a process the result of thirty years' experience, contains all the fragrant and exhilarating properties of the Coffee in the highest perfection. It is admirably adapted to persons travelling. Officers in the Army and Navy, and Families visiting watering-places.

Manufactured by D. DUNN, Pantonsville, London, Manufacturer of Chocolate Powder, Essence of Ginger, and other Spices, Herbs, &c.

Sold in Bottles from 1s. to 4s. each, and may be ordered of any respectable Grocer in the United Kingdom.

Directions.—Put about a teaspoonful of the Essence into a coffee-cup, add sugar and cream or milk, then fill it up with boiling water, and a cup of Coffee, of superior flavour, is instantly made.

PATRONIZED AND SANCTIONED BY HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN H.M. PRINCE ALBERT, THE ROYAL FAMILY, AND THE SEVERAL COURTS OF EUROPE.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the Growth and for Preserving and Beautifying the Human Hair. Price 3s. 6d.—7s. Family Bottles (equal to 4 small) 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s.

CAUTION.—SPURIOUS COMPOSITIONS are frequently offered for sale under a FICTITIOUS name or the word "GENUINE." It is therefore imperative on purchasers to see that the words "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" are on the Wrapper of each bottle, and on the back of the wrapper nearly 30,000 letters. All others are FRAUDS. DUNN'S COUNTERFEITS. The principle on which "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" is prepared, is confined solely to the knowledge and practice of A. ROWLAND and SON, who are still at an immense expense in completing its preparation, and the amalgamation of its PURELY VEGETABLE MATERIALS renders abortive any attempt to discover its component parts.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for Improving and Beautifying the Skin and Complexion. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, renders the Teeth beautifully White and preserves the Gums. Price 2s. 9d. per box, duty included.

CAUTION.—It is imperative on purchasers to see that the word "ROWLAND'S" is on the Wrapper of each article. For the protection of the Public from fraud and imposition, the Honourable Commissioners of Her Majesty's Stamps have authorized the Proprietors' Signature to be engraved on the Government Stamp, thus, A. ROWLAND and SON, 30, Hatton-garden, which is affixed to the Kalydor and Odonto. Sold by them and by Chemists and Perfumers.

All others are SPURIOUS IMITATIONS!!!

GOWLAND'S LOTION.—This elegant preparation, an original formula of the late Dr. Gowland, for all Impurities of the Skin, continues to maintain a repute commensurate with its specific properties of speedily eradicating every species of Eruptive Malady, Discoloration, &c., and of preserving and enhancing the beauty of the Complexion by a congenial action upon the skin as perfectly innocent as it is agreeable and efficacious. "Robert Shaw, London," is in white letters on the government stamp, without which it is not genuine. Prices 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d., quarts 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Medicine Vendors.

LOWDEN'S CELEBRATED COUGH PILLS,

A safe and effectual cure for Coughs, Colds, Shortness of Breath, Asthma, &c. &c. They promote free expiration, and hence prevent that accumulation of phlegm which causes a sense of choking; allay irritability, tickling in the throat, and relieve that sense of oppression, fulness, and difficulty of breathing, which nightly deprives the patient of rest.

In Asthma and Coughs of long standing they are invaluable, and universally admitted to be the best known Medicine; in any case where they do not effect a perfect cure they afford such relief to the sufferer during the paroxysms or fits as to induce him henceforth never to be without them.

Sold by Mr. Lowden, Chemist, 305, Fleet-street, London, in boxes at 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; also by one or more respectable Medicine Vendors in each town in the United Kingdom.

BLOKRENE, or FOUNTAIN of LIFE.

This invaluable Medicine proves efficacious in removing all Scrofulous and Scorbutic Diseases. It attacks the cause of all eruptions on the skin; it purifies and nourishes the blood, invigorates the digestive organs, and effects an entire cure of Scrofula and Bury in all the forms which these diseases assume.

This medicine is free from those mineral preparations which cannot be taken without injury to the constitution. Its action on the system is remarkably mild and gentle, and will not interfere with the patient's ordinary pursuits.

See a pamphlet entitled "Health and Comfort to the afflicted," which may be had, gratis, of Mr. William Bailey, North-street, Wolverhampton, and also by all other vendors of Blokrene; which is sold by Sutton and Co., Bow Church-yard; Edwards, St. Paul's Church-yard; Hannay and Co., Oxford-street; and by all Druggists and Medicine Vendors. Bottles, 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s.

CORROBORATION OF THE INNOCENT YET

RELIEVING PROPERTIES OF BLAIR'S GOUT AND RHEUMATIC PILLS.

TO MR. PROUT, 229, STRAND, LONDON.

Sir,—In recompense for the great benefit I have received from the use of Blair's Gout and Rheumatic Pills, I feel it a duty I have long owed to the afflicted with the excruciating torture of the Gout, to make your valuable remedy more extensively known.

I am upwards of seventy years of age, and have, when occasion required, used them for more than twelve years past. I have at all times found nothing to relieve me but them, and my firm belief is that they are not composed of anything injurious to the constitution, as I always find, after their use, my general bodily health renewed, and my appetite considerably sharpened.

Should you, Sir, think this statement worthy of insertion in your list of testimonials, I can with truth solemnly declare the above.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

April 18th, 1842. A. W. MOORE.

P.S.—I will with pleasure answer any application in proof of this testimony.

The never-failing effects of BLAIR'S GOUT AND RHEUMATIC PILLS in curing every description of Gout and Rheumatism, have secured to them a celebrity unequalled by any medicine of the present times. They not only give relief in a few hours, where the patient has been driven nearly to madness by the excruciating tortures of this disease, but restore to perfect health in an inconceivable short space of time. They are equally speedy and certain in rheumatism, either chronic or acute, lumbago, sciatica, pains in the head or face, and indeed for every rheumatic or gouty affection; in fact, such has been the rapidity, perfect ease, and complete safety of this medicine, that it has astonished all who have taken it, and there is not a city, town, or village in the kingdom, but contains many grateful evidences of its benign influence.

Sold by Thomas Prout, 229, Strand, London; and by his appointment by all respectable Medicine Vendors throughout the United Kingdom. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

Ask for Blair's Gout and Rheumatic Pills, and observe the name and address of "Thomas Prout, 229, Strand, London," impressed upon the Government Stamp affixed to each box of the genuine Medicine.

DEDICATED TO THE QUEEN.

New ready, to be continued on the 1st and 15th of every month, with (with Five Plates) of

THE PEOPLE'S GALLERY OF ENGRAVINGS.

To contain four beautiful Plates on Steel, quarto size, by the best Engravers, executed by the first-rate Engravers from Originals by Sir Joshua Reynolds, Turner, Constable, P. D. Roberts, Allan, Clarkson, Parry, Maclellan, Stephens, Cattermole, Bartlett, Lettice, &c. &c. the Rev. G. M. Watson, M.A. With selections from the works of L. E. L., Mrs. Ellis, Mary Howitt, Agnes Strickland, Bernard Barton, &c. Fisher, Son, and Co., 10, Abchurch-lane, London.

New publishing, by J. Lacey, Printer, at 67, Fleet-street, London, Gadsby, Manchester; and all booksellers.

THE STRUGGLE, in Weekly Numbers, each embellished with splendid Woodcuts, price One Halfpenny. The Anti-Corn-Law Association that want a suitable paper for circulating among the working classes, would do well to purchase the Struggle.

THE ANTI-CORN-LAW PICTORIAL ALMA.

NAO, price 1d.—The usual allowance to the trade. All kinds of Wood Engraving done at the Engravers' office, on reasonable terms and at the shortest notice.

SUPERIOR SCHOOL BOOKS.

BUTTER'S GRADATIONS IN READING AND SPELLING, upon an entirely new and original Plan, by which Dissyllables are rendered as easy as Monosyllables. With numerous interesting and instructive Reading Lessons in Prose and Verse. 18th Edition. Price 1s. 6d. 6d.

BUTTER'S GRADUAL PRIMER, 17th Edition. Price 6d. with Engravings.

BUTTER'S ETYMOLOGICAL SPELLING.

BOOK and EXPOSITOR. 70th Edition. 1s. 6d. bound.

Simplin, Marshall, and Co., Whitaker and Co., Longman and Co., London; Oliver and Boyd, Edinburgh.

NEWSPAPERS.—On credit, the Times, Morning

Chronicle, Advertiser, &c., £1 5s.; if paid for in advance, 4s. 6d. per quarter; these are sent from London on the day they are published. Sun, Globe, and Standard, on credit, 14s.; if paid for in advance, 12s. 6d. per quarter. The Times, Morning Chronicle, and Advertiser, on credit, 18s.; if paid for in advance, 14s. per quarter. Address, post-paid, to G. LAND, late G. Pollard and Son, Duke-street, West Smithfield, London. Established upwards of 30 years.

MR. BEARD'S DAGUERRETYPE, or PHOTOGRAPHIC PORTRAITS.

These inimitable and much admired Portraits, in which further improvements have lately been effected, are taken by the Patentee, at 85, King William-street, City; 84, Fenchurch-street; and at the Royal Polytechnic Institution, 209, Regent-street. By whom, also, Licenses are granted for exercising the invention in provincial towns and districts.

THE NEW PATENT INKSTAND by R. CLIFFE.

CLIFFE, is Superior in all respects to those recently patented. The Ink is drawn from the surface of the reservoir, the sediment remains below. No variation of temperature affects the Ink, and from its simplicity cannot be got out of order. Hyde and Co., agents, 61, Fleet-street, where may be had their Bank Stealing Wax, an article excelling all others in purity of quality and brilliancy of colour.

THE NEW LIGHT.—A GREAT NOVELTY.

The patent CAMPHINE LAMP gives a light of surpassing purity, softness, and purity, without any kind of grease or dirt, smoke, or smell. The Lamp is simply and beautifully constructed, and can be fitted to any description of lamp, pedestal, or gas fitting. It is not easily put out of condition. The Camphine (also a patent) is 4s. per gallon, and is so pure that if spilt on any article of dress or furniture will not leave either mark or stain, while it consumes so slowly that, at the cost of three farthings for two hours, it gives a light equal to twelve mould candles, without any smoking. It will be found far less expensive than any, and incomparably superior to all existing lights. To be seen burning at Mippon and Burton's (sole wholesale and retail agents for English Patent Camphine), 12, Wells-street, Oxford-street.

CABINET FURNITURE, CARPETS, and

UPHOLSTERY.—THOMAS PAUL and CO. inform the nobles and gentlemen furnishing, that their CABINET STOCK comprises every kind of furniture, calculated for any description of residence, from the cottage to the mansion, and will be found 50 per cent. cheaper than at any other house in London. Independently of the great saving, every article is manufactured of the most seasoned and sound materials, so that perfect furnishing (even for a foreign climate) are secure either from complaint or defective wear. References of many years' standing, together with the ample warranty given where required. Their stock of Brussels carpets consists of a splendid variety, commencing at the extraordinarily low price of 2s. 3d. per yard, and those of new and elegant designs from 10s. per yard. THOMAS PAUL and CO., cabinetmakers, upholsterers, and carpet manufacturers, opposite the Mansion House, City.

MACINTOSHES SUPERSEDED.—Important to all classes exposed to the vicissitudes of the weather.—The NEW BRITISH WATERPROOFING COMPANY render goods of every kind, either in the piece or made up garments, thoroughly impervious to the most drenching rains, and yet the escape of perspiration remains unimpaired. Books of Testimonials, with list of prices, may be had gratis, at the offices, 15, Skinner-street, Snow-hill (late 343, Strand).

TESTIMONIAL.

Metropolitan Police-office, Whitehall-place.

February 23, 1844.

"Gentlemen,—The Commissioners of Police beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th instant, and to acquaint you in reply that one suit has been in the use of a constable whose bed is situated on the beach. He reports, that frequently during the month of January he was in six hours' successive rain, and that, on the night of the 9th instant, it rained the whole nine hours he was on duty; and that when he took of his great coat, in the presence of the sergeant at the station, it was as dry inside as when he put it on.

"I have the honour to be, Gentlemen,

"Your most obedient servant,

"G. Howart."

N.B. Every garment, &c., bearing their stamp, is warranted thoroughly waterproof.

A BRONZE SCROLL FENDER for 18s.

RIPPON and BURTON are now offering the most extensive assortment of FENDERS in London, embracing every possible variety, at 30 per cent. under any other house. Iron fenders, 3 feet long, from 4s. 3 feet 6 in. 3d.; 4 feet, 6s.; ditto bronzed, 3 feet, from 6s.; 3 feet 6 in. 4 feet, 8s.; rich scroll fenders bronzed, from 15s.; or with steel and moulding, from 21s.; polished steel and ornate mounted fenders at proportionate prices. Fire-irons for chambers, 1s. 9d. per set; ditto steel from 2s. 6d.; handsome ditto, with cast heads, 6s. 6d.; narrow grate with elegant bronzed heads, 11s. 6d.—Detailed catalogue, with engraving sent (per post) free.

THE ONLY SAFE AND HEALTHY STOVE.

THE PATENT CHUNK and VESTA STOVES are the only ones commended by the faculty for the bedrooms of invalids, and even where a genial warmth is requisite. They are without doors, and in Arnott's (whether improved or not) and all others, the danger of escape; consequently, the evils attendant upon such escapes, as smoke, disfigurement, &c., as well as fatal explosions, cannot occur in the use of these stoves having stood the test of five years, during which time of five thousand have been fixed in churches, schools, halls, forcing houses, &c., they are most confidently offered to the public. They are found to combine, in an extraordinary degree, great simplicity of construction, with perfect safety, at an almost invariable cost for fuel (coke or kinders). Chunk, 60s. each; Vesta, 50s. each.

THE PYRIDON STOVE (also a patent) has most of the advantages of the Chunk and Vesta, with the extremely novel one of allowing the fire to be a register stove in one moment; it is eminently a ventilating stove, will be found invaluable where any poisonous exhalation is feared. Price 60s. Full particulars, with engravings and testimonials, sent (per post) free.

RIPPON and BURTON, Proprietors.

THE PERFECT SUBSTITUTE FOR SILVER.

The material RIPPON and BURTON offer to the public has for the last eight years been found equal to silver in appearance and superior to it in durability. Of the prices of tea-sets, waiter, and all articles hitherto made in silver, a detailed catalogue, with engravings, will be sent (gratis) post-free.

| | Fiddle. | Threading. | Victrola. |
|--|----------|------------|-----------|
| Table Spoons and Forks, full size, per dozen | 12s. 6d. | 25s. 6d. | 30s. 6d. |
| Desert ditto and ditto, ditto | 10s. 6d. | 21s. 6d. | 25s. 6d. |
| Tea ditto and ditto, ditto | 8s. 6d. | 17s. 6d. | 21s. 6d. |
| Gravy ditto | 5s. 6d. | 11s. 6d. | 14s. 6d. |

RIPPON and BURTON, 12, Wells-street, Oxford-street.

1843.—Catalogue gratis.

London: Printed (at the office of Palmer and Gurney, Cornhill, 107, Strand) by A. W. PATERSON, of Barrow-on-Island, Glasgow.

and published by him at THE LONDON OFFICE, 47, Strand, Saturday, January 13, 1844.

THE LEAGUE.

No. 17.]

[SATURDAY, JANUARY 20, 1844.

[3d.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND, £100,000.

All subscribers of £1 and upwards to the ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUND FUND, will be entitled to, and receive a copy, weekly, of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have forwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the Offices of THE LEAGUE, Newall's-buildings, Manchester, or 67, Fleet-street, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND, are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council respectfully request that their friends, in all places where committees for raising subscriptions to the £100,000 Fund have not been already formed, will proceed to their formation as soon as possible, and transmit their names to the LEAGUE Offices, Manchester.

"PROTECTION TO BRITISH INDUSTRY."

Such is the title under which monopolist journals announce the attempts now making in several counties to establish an Anti-Free-Trade League. It would be nearer the truth to say, "Protection to British Idleness."

In so far as the projected clubs are formed for the purpose of keeping up high rents, they aim at protecting a class which would little relish the compliment of being ranked amongst the working classes. Landlords are like the lilies, "which toil not, neither do they spin." Their labour is in expending, not in earning. They are almost the only persons in the country who have nothing to show for their gains. We dispute not their title to their estates: property is sacred, and not the less so for descending by inheritance, instead of being won by exertion; but their title to be called industrious we do dispute. They have the land; it is theirs, and that unquestionably; but they did not make the land; they do not till the land; and all the service which society requires of them for the land is, that they show their parchments and sign receipts for the rent of the land. The duty is not very onerous. That done, they can go about their business—their pleasure, we mean; and the strong arm of law, nerved by opinion also, is around them for protection; but, in all fair interpretation of words, it is the protection, not of British industry, but British idleness.

How the tenant-farmer, the cultivator of the soil, the real agriculturist, is protected in his industry by laws or clubs framed for the purpose of enhancing the rent, which constitutes his heaviest burden, it would be rather difficult to show. One thing is plain, that Corn Laws have not been propitious to industry in this class. The progress of improvement in British farming—at least in English farming—has been so slow as to render it a by-word. "Agriculture is yet in its infancy," says a high authority. "'Protection' has rocked its cradle, sung it to sleep with promises from which it wakes every now and then in convulsions, and drugged it with opiates till it is deemed too rickety to walk alone." The endeavour to make high prices by the agency of law, and secure profits by the exclusion of competition, may be a protection for gambling speculation, but is no protection for the spirit of industry.

That the Corn Laws restrict trade, is undeniable. They diminish the power of exchanging with the inhabitants of other countries; they annihilate all the trade which would result from the free importation of food; they smite with barrenness the portions which would be cultivated with avidity, to purchase with their crops the products of British industry. At home, they diminish every poor man's ability to purchase articles of clothing or of comfort. Their advocates declaim against trade, and talk of its overgrowth; and it is for them to explain, if they can explain such an absurdity, how the restriction of British trade can possibly be the protection of British industry.

It is by trade that all the world lives; it ever has been so, since natives emerged from barbarism. Those who have nothing else for the purpose, trade in their own labour. Professions thrive upon the thriving of trade. The landlord himself is a trader, being a middleman between the farmer who supplies him with money for the use of his land, and the manufacturer, home or foreign, who supplies him with necessities or luxuries in return for his money. Thus are all dependent upon all, and all enriched by all. Trade is like the principle of attraction in the system of nature. What philosopher clamours for less gravitation in the universe, that one planet may be protected from the sun, and revolve independently? The absurdity would scarcely be greater than that of clamouring for less trade and more independence. All industry is some form of trade. The protection of industry is the security of trade, and the encouragement of trade is the reward of industry.

It is not often worth while to make a stand about mere phrases. There are, however, some words the perversion and abuse of which should not be allowed quietly. Such are "Protection" and "British Industry." They represent great realities—the combination of them, in connexion with taxation upon food, is a solicism in language as well as a fraud in act. This fallacious protection to British industry consists in plundering the labourer's cupboard and stopping him on his way to market. He is protected from repletion and profit, not from injury and want. He is protected into compulsory idleness, perhaps crime; into the poor-house, the prison, and the grave.

Let this new protectorate, which the landowners are setting up, plainly avow its object; then it may proceed to calculate its powers. As yet that portion of them which consists of Anti-League clubs is not very formidable. Amongst others the magnates of East Suffolk, lords and landlords, clergymen and others, got up a meeting in a little school-room at Framlingham on the 13th inst., for the purpose, as Lord Rendlesham declared, of "convincing the world that, though the League be 'a great fact,' the agricultural interest is still a greater fact." If the meeting was meant to be a symbol of this greatness, the growth of young Hercules must be spoken of in that anticipatory manner which American settlers employ when describing their cities (that are to be) in the wilderness. At present room could be made for a dozen of these "greater facts" in the area of Covent-garden Theatre, leaving abundant accommodation for a large majority of Leaguers. This meeting was distinguished by the production of an Anti-League manifesto, in the form of a petition to Parliament, of which the first paragraph is a boast of past exploits coupled with a reproachful accusation against the Peel ministry. The landowners and clergy, who are both represented in the upper House, state themselves, and we have no doubt truly, to have been "assiduously employed" at the last election in procuring the return of members of the lower House favourable to "protection." They remind the Government that they largely increased its majority. Might it not be well to ask themselves how it happens that they are "disappointed," as they confess they are, in the consequences? Why have their own delegates proved unfaithful to them? Why has the Minister of their choice and their creation baffled their hopes? Where was their stronghold, the House of Lords? There must be some potent cause for all this. No individual treason to their purposes can account for so strange a result. It would be wise to investigate this mystery before they embark in further efforts that may only conduct to a repetition of disappointment.

We will suggest a solution. A numerical majority of the Legislature cannot always govern the country as it would. There are opinions and interests which its leaders may find too mighty to be dealt with by the mere force of numbers. Sir Robert Peel was borne into office for the sake of maintaining what is called Agricultural Protection unaltered; and he at once saw the impossibility of governing the country upon that principle. "The gods themselves yield to necessity," and stern must have been the necessity which made him false to the followers who had just been so "assiduously employed" in his elevation. He had many inducements to a different course. His own previous declarations had been distinct and strong against change. Nobody dreamed of his "fishing for a new Corn Law in the lottery of legislation." At his back was as large a majority as any Minister need desire, all fresh from the hustings which had resounded with the cry of "No surrender." Years of apparent fidelity to his party had mitigated the feeling, but not obliterated the recollection, of his conduct on the question of Catholic Emancipation. What can account for the changes complained of in the petition but such a necessity as made it impossible even to attempt to carry on the Government, leaving intact the principle of Monopolist Protection? Against this necessity, or power, the Corn Law party strove vainly at the last election. We say vainly; although they had all the success of which their attempt was capable. They returned their majority; they lost their unalterable law. In the means, they triumphed; in the end, they are, so far, baffled. At present their success in the means is very problematical; but let us take it for granted; and then, we ask, what better reason have they for anticipating a satisfactory result? The influences which made Sir Robert Peel untrue to them are not a jot weakened; on the contrary, they are largely augmented. The difficulties with which his Government is encompassed have also increased. It is too late for any club, or combination of clubs, which the Monopolists can summon into existence, to say to him, or to any Ministry, "Thus far shalt thou go, but no farther." The tide of opinion has set in too strongly. These miniature meetings only proclaim the weakness of Monopoly even amongst its own dependents. If left to themselves they will soon cease to be the tools which their projectors contemplated; and if not left to themselves, they will be tools of little worth. Discussion will convince the farmers, as it has already convinced almost all the world besides, that perfect freedom of trade is the best protection to British industry.

MONOPOLIST TRAPS—COLONIES AND RECIPROCTY.

There are few questions on which there exists in the public mind greater delusion than on that of our colonies; and no wonder, when we find in the discussions relating to them in Parliament such an extraordinary amount of ignorance.

The popular impression is, that our colonies are a source of great wealth, and that our trade with them is greater and more valuable than that with other countries. The monopolists endeavour by every means to foster this impression, by magnifying their value and importance, and by alarming manufacturers with the idea that the colonies are the only resource on which we can depend for an extension of our trade, seeing that the progress of machinery on the Continent, and adverse foreign tariffs, may shut us out from all other markets. We shall endeavour to show that the colonies, as at present managed, so far from being a source of wealth, are a great loss to the mother country; that we have nothing to fear from foreign tariffs provided we take care of our own, and that, unless all colonial monopoly be abolished, it would be for the interest and advantage of this country that the colonies should be all abandoned.

Our colonies were founded on monopoly from the beginning. "Of the greater part of the regulations concerning the colony trade (says Adam Smith), the merchants who carry it on, it must be observed, have been the principal advisers. We must not wonder, therefore, if in the greater part of them their interest has been more considered than either that of the colonies or that of the mother country." Under such advice the colonies were prohibited from resorting to foreign markets for the supply of their wants, and were forced to send all their produce in a raw state, that the manufacturers of the mother country might secure to themselves all the advantages arising from their further improvement. "This latter system (says Bryan Edwards) was carried so far in the colonial system of Great Britain as to induce the late Earl of Chatham to declare in Parliament, that the British colonists in America had no right to manufacture even a nail for a horse-shoe." In return for these advantages, we give to the colonies the monopoly of the sale of their produce in this country, by imposing preferential duties on it. For example, sugar from the colonies pays a duty only of 24s. per cwt., whilst sugar from any other place pays 61s. per cwt. Colonial coffee pays a duty of 4d. per lb., whilst all other coffee pays 8d. per lb. On most other articles there are preferential duties in favour of the colonies of 50 per cent. Now, so far as regards the amount and value of our trade with the colonies, the monopolists endeavour to convey a very false and exaggerated impression. According to the official returns of the exports of produce and manufactures in 1842:—

| | |
|--|-------------|
| The value of the exports to the colonies was | £13,261,436 |
| Ditto to foreign countries | 34,119,587 |

Total exports £47,381,023

Our trade, therefore, with the colonies is little more than one-fourth part of our total trade with all the world. But suppose it should greatly increase, what advantage is derived from our trade with the colonies in contradistinction to our intercourse with independent nations? If we get a higher price for the manufactures we send to our colonies than for those sent to other countries, or if we get the produce we receive from them cheaper than we could get it from other countries, there might be good reasons for preferring colonial to foreign trade; but the colonies buy manufactures from us in the same market that foreigners do, and, therefore, pay only the same prices; whilst we are obliged to pay for colonial produce 50 to 100 per cent. more than we could buy the same articles at in other countries.

Mr. Porter, of the Board of Trade, no mean authority, in his able and valuable work, "The Progress of the Nation," makes the astounding statement, that if we had made our sugar colonies a present of the whole value of our manufactures exported to them in 1840, amounting to about £4,000,000, we should have been gainers of £1,000,000, had we been allowed to buy the article of sugar alone in the cheapest markets!

"The amount of injury (says Mr. Porter) sustained from this last-named cause [monopoly] cannot well be made the subject of calculation; but some idea may be formed of the ruinous effect of differential duties upon the expenditure of this nation, by showing the result produced in one year by the prohibitory duty upon a single article of colonial production—sugar. It is shown that we paid, for the quantity of sugar used in 1840, more than £5,000,000 beyond what would have been paid for the same quantity, irrespective of duties, by any other people of Europe. The total value of our manufactures exported in that year to our sugar colonies was under £4,000,000; so that the nation would have gained a million of money in that one year, by following the true principle of buying in the cheapest market, even though we had made the sugar growers a present of all the goods they took from us. It must be idle to suppose that colonies depend for their existence and progress upon such preferences. Unless prevented through the interference of legislative restrictions, they will certainly be able to apply their industry in some profitable channel."

If to the enormous loss to the country by the sugar monopoly be added the loss by the coffee and timber monopolies, the expense of our naval and military establishments in our several colonies, and the cost of protecting them in time of war, none of which expenses are paid by these colonies, it is doubtful whether the whole of our annual exports be not swallowed up by the annual cost.

National vanity may be flattered by the possession of large territories in every quarter of the globe, but it is "paying dear for our whistle" to purchase the gratification at such a sacrifice of national wealth and happiness. It is justly observed by the writer of "Reciprocity, by a Manufacturer":—

"John Bull's pride of ownership is gratified by the extent and magnificence of his territories. He forgets the yearly cost, or argues that it is not a mere question of cost. He derives so many indirect benefits from his colonies." The healthy nurseries of Australia, New Zealand, or the Canadas, afford a wide outlet for his surplus population, or convenient settlements for his needy offspring. They supply places for the younger scions of nobility, estates for the gentry, and a wide profitable field for the labour of the poor.

"Doubtless our intimate connexion with these vast continents,—whose climate, soil, and productions approximate so closely to those of Europe, where Englishmen thrive and luxuriate like indigenous plants, gradually replacing the aborigines with a new, healthy, vigorous, energetic race,—whither our countrymen are transplanted without the necessity of changing their mother tongue, or subjecting themselves to a new form of government—where security of property is guaranteed, and the chances of life are not endangered—is productive of real solid advantages, not to be estimated from a table of our exports and imports. The torrid clime of India, where so many of our countrymen have found an early grave, and our race in vain attempts to strike root, holds out no such claims to our regards."

"It is not the mere fact of those countries being our colonies which constitutes their acceptance in our eyes. It is the intrinsic adaptation of the soil and climate to our constitution and wants, and the temptations to settlement which the scanty possession of a few miserable hunting tribes offers to our crowded population—these are the attractions for our hordes of emigrants, which no change of government can repel."

After all our fostering care and sacrifices for our colonies, it becomes an important consideration what guarantee have we of their permanency?

"We are too prone to regard the colonies as a mere appendage of the British crown, intended to increase our revenues and resources. Whenever we have attempted this mistake, the colonists are ever the foremost to convince us of our error. The connexion on our part is that of a parent watching over its child, nurturing and protecting its infancy, strengthening its riper years, and gradually instilling the spirit of self-government. When it arrives at the age and strength of manhood, our wisest policy would be to give it independence, but not before it has the energy to maintain that independence."

"Our Government has discovered the impolicy of making use of our colonies as penal settlements, and has given a new version to the sentence of transportation. What, then, becomes of the peculiar advantages derived from our colonies, in contradistinction to our intercourse with independent nations? Could they be proved, who can guarantee the permanency of our colonies? We have already been separated by force of arms from the most important of them—the United States, after a long, unsuccessful, and humiliating effort to regain our sovereignty. Within a few years we have witnessed the sudden attempt of Canada to assert her independence; and to her internal divisions alone can be attributed her want of success. The storm has been allayed; but any imprudent act of the Legislature might rouse the latent passion, and sever the connexion for ever. The acts of the House of Assembly in Jamaica have shown a spirit of defiance to the mother country, of which the ultimate aim cannot be mistaken. Possibly some fear of the emancipated slaves may have infused a greater share of moderation in their councils, and occasioned the desire of protection from Great Britain in case of need. Our invincibility in the East, upon which is based the vast superstructure of our dominions in that quarter of the globe, has been shaken. The rest of our colonies hang upon the thread of our naval superiority, which the American wars have taught us not to consider infallible. Are we, then, to trust our vast foreign trade, with the mighty attendant interests of 'ships and commerce,' upon so frail a tenure as the continuance of our colonies? It would be a risk—a miscalculation of chances—unworthy of a gambler!"

"Spain offers us an instructive example of the fugitive vanity of colonial possessions. The discovery of America aroused in her the ambition of conquering a hemisphere. With a miser's grasp she laid hold of the boundless riches of her new-born empire. Gold was then considered as the only wealth; and, by the utmost exactions of a greedy despotism, she wrung from the toil of her Indian subjects the hardly-earned produce of the South American gold mines. By the most severe and prohibitive laws, she endeavoured to retain this wealth within her own dominions. Her commerce with the rest of Europe was neglected. All her attention, all her hopes were absorbed by her colonies. Spaniards lost their industry and enterprise. They revelled in their easily-acquired riches. Yet, in spite of every precaution, their gold oozed out, to purchase from the rest of Europe articles which they had ceased to manufacture for themselves. Spain gradually sank in the scale of nations. By contact with an easy, indolent race, her subjects lost their energy and high state of cultivation. Eventually, the despised and oppressed colonists, roused by unjust exactions, levied solely for the benefit of the mother country, raised the standard of revolt, and boldly shook off an unworthy allegiance. Even the poor Indians, who so long were trampled under foot, have turned short upon their scorers, and achieved their independence."

Doubtless our colonies, if properly managed, might be productive of benefit to the mother country; but it is folly to keep possessions which are constant sources of charge and impoverishment, nor does it appear wise to cherish them to the neglect of nearer and better customers. The unprofitableness, and indeed the danger, of such a course, are equally conclusive. Do away with all preferential duties—throw upon our colonies every fair and reasonable charge which it costs the mother country for their protection—(if colonies derive advantage and security from the mother country, the least they can do is to pay the expense of it)—leave commerce to find her own channels—and the relative advantage of the colonial trade will show itself. Such a policy would relieve both parties of a very heavy indirect taxation; and the colonists themselves would eventually find it the greatest boon we could confer upon them.

If any inference is to be drawn from the United States, our commerce would receive a fresh impulse from the independence of our colonies. It is remarkable, however, how little the true interests of the country were understood by our most distinguished statesmen of both political parties in the case of America. All, without exception (and the nation participated in the same feeling,) deprecated the separation of our North American colonies as one of the greatest calamities that could befall the country. The writers of that time prognosticated the ruin of England from the day when she lost these important colonies. Dean Tucker alone appeared to look beyond the narrow views then entertained, and to foresee that, instead of a calamity, the separation would be, as it has proved, a blessing to both countries. A great nation, peopled by the Anglo-Saxon race, has sprung up out of the ancient British colony, which costs us not one farthing of expense to govern; but to which we have the freest access, and with whom, but for our own folly and attachment to monopoly, we might have had a greater trade than with all our colonies put together.

The increase in our trade with America since she became free, is extraordinary. Our exports to our North American colonies were as follows:—

| | |
|---|------------|
| 1776—At the commencement of the revolutionary war | £1,300,000 |
| 1784—To the newly-recognised states | 3,600,000 |
| 1836—To the newly-recognised states | 12,425,605 |

The history of our commerce with the United States leaves us no cause to regret their independence. In every respect we have been considerable gainers by the change; and in 1836, our exports, as will be seen above, nearly equalled the exports to all our colonial possessions in every part of the world. Let us now take a glance at the gratitude of the colonies:—

"Whilst we are propping up our colonial interests by differential duties (more especially on the article of sugar), Jamaica, the most important of our West Indian possessions, is returning the compliment, by raising her scale of duties on home produce. Such is the gratitude we meet with for our spendthrift philanthropy, in paying an extravagant price for the manumission of their slaves, and our grant to them of a monopoly of the home market for sugar."

The following communication was made to Government by the Cork Committee of Merchants, March 17th, 1843:—

"STATEMENT."

"A new schedule of inland duties has lately passed the Legislature of Jamaica, for the purpose of raising a revenue for that colony, and now waits the sanction of the home Government."

"Finding that these proposed duties are very considerably increased, and unequally proportioned, the Committee of Merchants of Cork have directed the attention of the Secretary to the Colonies, Lord Stanley, to the subject, as one which would be seriously disadvantageous to Irish commerce and agriculture, and demanding the most decided interference on his part."

"The proposed new scale is to this effect:—

"On beef, 20s. a barrel, equal to from 30 to 75 per cent., according to quality."

"Pork, 20s. per barrel, equal to 45 per cent."

"Butter, 4s. per 64 lbs., equal to 8½ per cent."

"Bacon, 8s. per cwt., equal to 20 per cent."

"Candles, 1s. 6d. on 56 lbs., equal to 7 per cent."

"Lard, 3s. on 70 lbs., equal to 12½ per cent."

"Porter, £3 3s. per ton, equal to 25 per cent."

"Soap, 2s. per 56 lbs., equal to 25 per cent."

"Its rates on English manufactured goods, when contrasted with the preceding, are very unequal. On glass, silks, cotton, hardware, manufactured paper, &c., the duty proposed is no more than 4 per cent. on the value."

"The imports of Irish produce into the island of Jamaica for the year ending 1840, which may be considered a fair criterion on antecedent years, and before the introduction of foreign provisions into the West Indies, were—

- "1,200 barrels of pork.
- "12,700 firkins of butter.
- "7,400 firkins of lard.
- "15,000 boxes of candles.
- "37,000 boxes of soap.

"Besides beef, porter, hams, and other articles."

"Irish imports into the other islands are also very considerable; and though the new Jamaica tariff is of very deep importance, as has been shown, yet it is very possible that the other colonies may follow the example, unless the Irish interests unite without delay to check the present, as well as any other similar proceedings."

"The different duties in favour of articles the produce of the United Kingdom and its possessions, shall, in no case, be lower in the colonies than they are at home."

"This statement requires no comment: but what becomes of the peculiar advantages, the special security, of our colonial trade, if, for the sake of revenue, the colonial legislatures are permitted to raise their duties at the very time we are reducing ours, and allowing increased privileges to their produce?"

We have shown that it is unwise, and no less dangerous, to withdraw our attention from our neighbouring customers in Europe and the United States, to give a preference to the distant markets of our colonies. There is a principle of self-adjustment in commerce which it is dangerous for any government to meddle with. The balance is so nice and delicate, that any forcible regulation is sure to disturb it. With equal propriety might Government interfere in every relation of buyer and seller. Merchants manage their own affairs best, and all they ask from political powers is, full liberty to pursue their avocations in peace.

We have nothing to fear from the hostile tariffs of foreign countries, provided we take care of our own; and we must not suffer ourselves to be led astray by those interested in monopoly, who labour to impress the public mind with the belief that we are dependent chiefly on our colonial demand for our export trade, and that it is the only source of an extended business. The progress of our trade since 1831 dissipates these fallacies, as will be seen from the following official statement of exports:—

| | Colonial Exports. | Foreign Exports. | Total Exports. |
|------|-------------------|------------------|----------------|
| 1831 | £10,254,940 | £26,909,432 | £37,164,372 |
| 1842 | 13,261,436 | 34,119,587 | 47,381,023 |

At both periods our whole colonial trade constituted only about 28 per cent. of our entire export trade. During that period the increase of our colonial trade has been £3,006,496, of which sum our East India territories, to which Free-Trade principles have been applied during that period, represents £1,311,919; the Australian new markets, £557,693; and Gibraltar, for the purpose of smuggling into Spain, £570,434, leaving only as an increase during that period on the whole of our colonial trade the trifling sum of £566,450; and on the whole of the North American and West India colonies, for which so much sacrifice in the shape of protection is made, the increase has been only as follows:—

| | Exports to North American colonies | 1831. | 1842. |
|----------------------------|------------------------------------|------------|------------|
| | | £2,089,327 | £2,333,325 |
| Ditto West India colonies. | 2,581,949 | 2,591,425 | |

Total..... £4,671,276. £4,924,750

Showing an increase of only £253,674, or very little more than 5 per cent. while our foreign exports increased upwards of 26 per cent. To the West India colonies, which are protected in a higher degree than any other, the increase has only been £9,476!!

Notwithstanding the continued efforts of grasping nations to monopolize the benefits of commerce by protection, and draw it into an artificial channel, all such attempts have proved unavailing. The inducements to trade must be naturally tempting, or will prove vain. Laws and regulations may contract the range, but can never succeed in bestowing the profits on one party only. Commerce is founded on barter, and no person can be induced to exchange that which he has for that which is offered in exchange, unless he prefer the latter. To speak of one-sided trade, therefore, is a contradiction and an absurdity. The thing cannot permanently exist. We have striking evidence of this in our intercourse with France and Russia, two countries which have been drawing closer their restrictive system while we have relaxed ours. Mark the results:—

| | 1831. | 1842. |
|-------------------------|------------|------------|
| Exports to France | £602,688 | £3,193,939 |
| Exports to Russia | 1,191,565 | 1,885,958 |
| | £1,794,253 | £5,079,897 |

Showing an increase of our trade under our relaxing tariff, in spite of their hostile tariffs during that period of £3,285,644, a larger increase than has taken place during the same period to all our colonial possessions in the world!

We think we have demonstrated, in the language of Adam Smith, that "the maintenance of monopoly has hitherto been the principal, or more properly, perhaps, the sole end and purpose of the dominion which Great Britain assumes over her colonies;" that we have nothing to gain by the continuance of the connexion, unless that monopoly be abolished; and that, however foreign nations may mistake their own interests by endeavours to monopolize trade by prohibition and restrictions, it is folly for us to follow the absurd example, seeing that every relaxation of our own tariff is followed by an increase of our trade. Finally, the freedom we ask from, the freedom we would grant to the colonies, to the whole world—is, to BUY IN THE CHEAPEST AND SELL IN THE DEAREST MARKETS.

MEETINGS.

GREAT MEETING IN EDINBURGH IN AID OF THE NATIONAL ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE.

[Abridged from the Scotsman.]

On Thursday, the 11th inst., a most important meeting was held in this city, to receive a deputation from the Council of the League, consisting of Richard Cobden, Esq., M.P., John Bright, Esq., M.P., Colonel T. P. Thompson, and R. R. Moore, Esq.—the immediate object of the meeting being to aid in the collection of the great fund of £100,000. The New Music Hall—the largest room in Edinburgh—was completely filled; and at least 1000 more tickets could easily have been disposed of had there been the means of accommodating a larger number.

The audience was composed of a most intelligent and influential body of our citizens, and not a few ladies were present; and we can safely assert that a meeting more enthusiastic, more thoroughly in earnest, never assembled in this city. The speeches were most able and impressive, and their reception by the auditory such as must have been most gratifying to the deputation, and to all the friends of Free Trade. The Right Honourable the Lord Provost was in the chair; and among those on the platform were, Richard Cobden, Esq., M.P., John Bright, Esq., M.P., Colonel T. P. Thompson, R. R. Moore, Esq., Baines Duncan and Gray; Wm. Dick, Esq., Dean of Guild; Councillors Wright, James Duncan, Stark, Lothian, Stott, Cruickshank, Grierson, Dodds, Drummond, Lindsay, and Sanderson.

There were thirty-four clergymen present:—Of the Secession Church, Reverends Dr. Brown, Dr. Harper, Dr. Ritchie, Dr. Wm. Piddie, George Johnston, P. Davidson, Jas. Robertson, George Deans, John Cooper, A. Elliot, Joseph Brown, George Sandy, W. Marshall, Andrew Thomson, W. Thompson, and Dr. Thomson, Coldstream. Of the Relief Church, Revs. John French, Francis Muir, G. O. Campbell, and Thos. Stevenson. Of the Independent Church, Revs. W. L. Alexander, C. H. Bateman, Dr. Paterson, A. T. Gowan, and James Robertson. Of the Baptist Churches, Revs. Christopher Anderson, Jonathan Watson, John Horsburgh, and A. Arthur. Of the Free Church, Revs. Henry Grey, A. W. Brown, and James Noble. Of the Methodists, Rev. C. Wallis; and of the Unitarians, Rev. George Harris. Also, John Wigham, Jun., Esq., chairman of the Anti-Corn-Law Association; George Stone, Esq., Muirhouse; R. Catell, Esq.; W. Mackenzie, Esq., of Muirton; J. Hunter, Esq., advocate; J. Straton, Esq., of Kirkcaldy; R. Simpson, Esq., advocate; Duncan McLaren, Esq., Arch. Thomson, Esq., R. Grieve, Esq., William Tait, Esq., James McLaren, Esq., Wm. Miller, Esq., Dr. Daun, John Ritchie, Esq., Wm. Renton, Esq., Andrew Symington, Esq., John Gregory, Esq., Peter Howden, Esq., J. M. Bell, Esq., Thomas Russell, Esq., James Grant, Esq.; James Donaldson, Esq., advocate; Alexander Inches, Esq.; G. H. Girdle, Esq.; James Leishman, Esq.; Edward Maitland, Esq., advocate; Arthur Dingwall, Esq., advocate; Wm. Hutchison, Esq.; G. D. Fordyce, Esq., advocate; R. W. Jameson, Esq., W.S.; Andrew Rye, Esq., S.S.C.; James Piddie, Jun., Esq., W.S.; James Walker, Esq., Wm. Chambers, Esq., Robert Glass, Esq., Ralph Richardson, Esq., James Taylor, Esq., G. McCallum, Esq.; Donald Mackenzie, Esq., advocate; Alexander Robertson, Esq., of Eldin; John Foyer, Esq.; J. Anderson, Esq.; Francis Richardson, Esq.; John Lees, Esq.; A. C. Dick, Esq., advocate; Joseph Baird, Esq.; John Stewart, Esq.; A. Cunningham, Esq.; Morris Scott, Esq.; John McIntosh, Esq.; Wm. Dunlop, Esq.; George Inglis, Esq.; Simon Campbell, Esq., S.S.C.; Jas. McIntosh, Esq.; George Fenwick, Esq.; J. H. Burton, Esq., advocate; G. K. McCallum, Esq.; John Gray, Esq.; John Howison, Esq.; Jas. Crawford, Esq., adv. cate; John Dunlop, Esq., R. S. Grieve, Esq.; Alken Megget, Esq.; P. Wilson, Esq.; J. Wigham, Esq.; Geo. Muirhead, Esq.; R. Scott, Esq.; John Jopp, Esq., S.S.C.; Chas. Black, Esq.; C. Kennington, Esq.; C. McLaren, Esq.; W. Porteous, Esq.; C. Jenner, Esq.; Patrick Paul, Esq.; Alex. Jameson, Esq., S.S.C.; J. B. Gracie, Esq., W.S.; Alex. Jameson, Esq.; James Boyd, Esq.; A. Adie, Esq.; Jas. Smith, Esq.; Michael Wilshire Esq.; Hew Crighton, Esq., S.S.C.; John Spence, Esq.; James Bridges, Esq., W.S.; Peter Jameson, Esq.; W. Waddell, Esq.; A. Robertson, Esq.; Captain Wilkie, V. C. Baird, Esq.; Andrew Miller, Esq.; Jas. Macdonald, Esq.; D. Nicolson, Esq.

There was also present a deputation from Leith, consisting of George Binny, Esq., chairman of the Anti-Corn-Law Association; Bailie Gillon, Councillor Crabbie; David Thom, Esq.; William Muir, Esq.; and W. G. Cassells, Esq.

A deputation from Dalkeith, consisting of Alexander Mitchell, Esq., James Gray, Esq., and others.

A deputation from Musselburgh, consisting of H. Kemp, Esq., and others. Edward Baxter, Esq., Dundee.

The following tenants of large farms in East Lothian, viz., Mr. Waterston, Balgonie Barns; Mr. Archibald Hepburne, Whittinghame; Mr. George Hope, Penton Barns; Mr. Miller, Newhouse; Mr. John Skirving, Hales Mains; Mr. Reenie, Oxwell Mains.

The Lord Provost was received with enthusiastic cheers. He said, I thank you for the honour you have done me, in calling me to preside on this very important occasion. I cannot help thinking, however, that I have some claim to this distinction, for when my fellow-citizens elect me to the office, in virtue of which alone I could aspire to the honour of this chair, it was the only one which I specifically stipulated for being permitted to occupy, whatever might be the opinions of my constituents on the subject. (Cheers.) It is not my intention to occupy your time by discussing the principles of Free Trade, or the iniquity of restricting and diminishing the food of the people, or the virtues of the sliding scale—these have been dealt with on other occasions by our honoured guests in such a way, that the outworks of monopoly have been surrendered one after another—the citadel itself is now assailed, and breaches begin to open in the walls. One vigorous assault more, and the fortifications of monopoly and restriction are levelled for ever. (Loud cheers.) It has long appeared to me one of those self-evident truths, that require no discussion, that men ought to be permitted to buy where they can purchase most advantageously, and to sell where they can find the best market; and above all things, that they should enjoy this right in regard to articles of food. When I was a young man, I used to think it would be only necessary to state distinctly such self-evident propositions to secure the assent of every one that was possessed of ordinary intelligence; but experience has taught me that, such is the power of prejudice, habit, education, and a thousand disturbing influences, the minds of many are entrenched so strongly against the truth, that they require line upon line, and argument upon argument, before the slightest impression can be made upon their preconceived notions. Nothing can be more admirable than the conduct of Anti-Corn-Law League in this respect. They saw that no progress could be made towards the attainment of their object, while this mass of ignorance and prejudice lay in their way. They did not oppose prejudice by prejudice, nor pander to the passions of the multitude, nor resort to acrimony and abuse; but they employed the only weapons that were legitimate in this warfare—the omnipotent arms of truth. Their lecturers have disseminated the principles of Free Trade in every village and town; their pamphlets and tracts in millions cover the land, and find their way into the humble cottage and the baronial hall. The champions of Free Trade, whom we have the honour and pleasure of seeing among us this night, have bearded the lion in his den. (Enthusiastic cheers.) They have plainly and affectionately expostulated with the agricultural labourers, the farmers, and the landlords, in the most sordid, the most landlord-ridden, and the most priest-ridden districts; they have instructed and delighted crowded audiences in Manchester, Liverpool, London, and all the great towns. In short, they seem to possess a sort of ubiquity. The papers of the same day record their triumphs in the town and in the country—in the south and in the north. They were in the great commercial capital of the west yesterday—to-day they are in Edinburgh—to-morrow they will be in Perth—the next day in Aberdeen—up through the length and breadth of the land they go, conquering and to conquer. (Cheers.) Their labours have been herculean, and they have been cheered with corresponding success. They have secured the support of the great mass of the middle classes; and notwithstanding the outrageous libels and inflammatory harangues of Ferrand, Oastler, and Co., the labouring classes are now generally convinced of the deceptions of these unscrupulous charlatans, and acknowledge the Free-Traders as their best friends. (Cheers.) In the higher classes opposition is rapidly giving way; even Sir Robert Peel, and the more intelligent of his party, are evidently wavering; and I hope and believe that it will not be long till the great party in opposition, as a body, disregarding all the apprehensions of the timid and the sophistries of the interested, will give full practical effect to the principles which they have so long theoretically promulgated. Allow me to say, that although I am personally interested in no party, and no party has any claim upon me, I cannot cease to remember with gratitude the services rendered to the cause of civil and religious liberty by the associates of Fox, and Grey, and Romilly, and Spencer, and Russell. (Cheers.) I cannot forget the sympathy and aid we received from them in the struggles of former years; they were my first political love; and while I deplore the evil influences which have as yet prevented their cordially and unanimously joining the present movement, I hail with delight the symptoms of their speedy accession. Earl Fitzwilliam has declared in our favour; Lord Spencer has spoken still more decidedly; the Marquis of Westminster has followed Lord Spencer; the prejudices of others are fast breaking down; and we may now hope that, as a great and influential party, we shall soon find them in their proper position, united with the great body of the people struggling for their rights. Attempts have been made to excite apprehensions of the League as an association too powerful and somewhat dangerous in the state; but it is not the mere association of the League that is working so powerfully on the public mind; there is a power beyond that of the League—the power of truth (cheers)—it is this that arms the League with energy and vigour, and leads it on to victory. If dangerous, it is only dangerous from the continuance of the privations and sufferings of the nation;—remove them, and the League will become weak as Samson when shorn of his locks. Till these are removed agitation will continue and increase—discontent will increase—destitution will increase—disorder will increase, till the country sink in anarchy and crime. (Hear, hear.) Will you endeavour to avert so sad a calamity? then use the means—our friends are willing to carry on the contest against the powers that threaten the existence of our national prosperity, but they must be furnished with the sinews of war. Say not we have too much to contribute for other objects—we have to subscribe for labourers out of employment—for the sick and destitute—for schools and for churches. In subscribing for the removal of restrictions on trade, you gave the most effectual contributions to the unemployed labourer—for the removal of restrictions naturally increases the demand for goods;—this again requires an additional number of workmen—the increased demand and competition for workmen raises the wages of labour, instead of doling out a scanty pittance in the shape of charity degrading the unhappy receiver, procure for him the comfortable wages of honourable industry, which will elevate him in the scale of society. If you wish to prevent the spread of disease, secure for the labouring classes the means of procuring health—giving food and clothing and shelter. Do you desire to banish ignorance and immorality? Furnish means for procuring instruction and an honest livelihood, break the shackles of industry, remove the restrictions of trade, lay open the field of the world to British skill and enterprise—this will afford relief to the labourer, the tradesman, the manufacturer, the merchant, and to all classes in the British Isles. The blessing would not be confined to Britain, but would be spread and multiplied wherever our commerce reached—still educing good,—

"And better still, and better thence again,
In infinite progression."

(Loud and long-continued cheers.)

The Lord Provost then read the copy of a letter which had been addressed by the committee to the members for the City, with their several answers to the same, as follows:—

"Edinburgh, Dec. 21, 1843.
"DEAR SIR,—At a meeting of the committee, I was desired to send you the enclosed serje ticket, and to invite you to be present at the meeting, without reference to the opinions you may hold on the question."

"I was likewise desired to request you to take part in the proceedings, on the condition that your opinions are such as to allow you to speak in support of the object of the meeting—the immediate abolition of all the duties on the importation of corn, and the propriety of raising a fund to aid the League in promoting this object.—I am, &c."
"D. M'LENNAN,
"Convener of Committee."

"The Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay, M.P., &c. &c."

"Albany, London, Dec. 23, 1843.
"DEAR SIR,—I have often expressed my opinion on the subject of the Corn Laws, and am not aware that I have anything to add, to retract, or to explain. You will not, therefore, be surprised at my saying that I do not think it right to attend the meeting of the 11th of January."

"I have the honour to be, &c. (General hissing.)"

"T. B. MACAULAY."
"DEAR SIR,—I have received your note, enclosing a ticket to the serje to be held on the 11th of January, to receive a deputation from the League, and informing me that the Anti-Corn-Law Committee had requested you to invite me to be present, 'without reference to the opinions' I may hold on the question; and that you had also been desired 'to request me to take part in the proceedings of the meeting, on the condition that my opinions are such as to allow me to speak in support of the objects of the meeting—the immediate abolition of all duties on the importation of corn, and the propriety of raising a fund to aid the League in promoting this object.'"

"As I do not entirely concur in the first of these objects, and disapprove of the extent and manner in which much of the agitation on this subject has been conducted, I am unable to comply with the request of the committee to take part in the proceedings; and my conduct would obviously be liable to misconception were I to be present without doing so."

"While I regret that I must therefore decline attending the meeting, I think it due to the Anti-Corn-Law Committee, as representing a large body of my constituents, to state to them, explicitly and respectfully, my opinions, and the course I intend to pursue in Parliament this session upon this most important question."

"I voted for Mr. Villiers's motion last session for the total repeal of the Corn Laws, on the grounds taken by Lord Howick, that if it were carried, any amendment might be moved upon it in committee. As everything that has since occurred confirms me more strongly in the opinion I expressed in my letter of the 25th of February last to Mr. Wigham (the former Convener of the Anti-Corn-Law Committee), that the abolition of all duties would be greatly preferable to the continuance of the sliding scale, I shall in this session vote for every motion that has for its object the getting rid of the present laws; but I reserve to myself the power of adopting a low fixed duty, if the time and circumstances under which it is proposed shall still induce me to consider it the most beneficial arrangement for all the great interests of the country. In the present state of parties on this question in both Houses of Parliament, no measure for the total repeal of the Corn Laws could be carried; and there can be no doubt that a low fixed duty would at least be infinitely more advantageous to the country than the existing injurious regulations."

"I am quite aware of the progress this question has made during the last few months, and that the time is rapidly passing away during which any compromise of it can be made; and I have no hesitation in saying, that if the intimation of the agricultural interest shall prevent them perceiving the necessity of settling it within a short period, I shall again on the maintenance of any duty at all, because the advantages attending it would be more than counterbalanced by the irritation and disunion between the different classes of society which the present agitation is engendering, and which, I fear, may produce consequences more permanent than this question, and even more serious than the good which any change in the Corn Laws would effect.—I remain, &c.,
"W. GIBSON CRAIG."

"Riccarton, Dec. 26, 1843." (A few hisses.)

Mr. COBDEN then rose amidst great and reiterated shouts of applause, and said:—When I entered this magnificent hall, and looked around upon the intelligent audience before me, and recollected the enlightened city in which I found myself, I could not help inquiring at my next neighbour, whether it could be necessary in such a place, and to such an audience, to say one word on the general merits of the question of the Corn Laws, or in favour of the principle of Free Trade. I am told, however—that I must be here prepared to make good our cause, and show not only the justice of the principles of Free Trade, but that I must here demonstrate to you that our principles are not only true and just in the abstract, but that they are susceptible of immediate practical application, and are adapted to the exigencies of the present times and circumstances of this country. Now, this is a task which I undertake, so far as I am able, to accomplish in your presence this evening. All parties I believe—at least the members of all parties whose opinions are worth a moment's attention—are agreed that the principles of Free Trade are the principles of common sense, and that they are true and right in the abstract. (Cheering.) But when you ask those who are willing to acknowledge their justice and truth as a theory to apply them practically, we are told there are certain circumstances, in the present condition of this country, which render these principles wholly inapplicable. What are these difficulties? In the first place, we are met with the objection, that this is an old country in an artificial state. My answer is, we are in an artificial state, because bad laws, which war against nature and nature's laws, have brought us into that state. We can remedy this by returning within the laws of nature; and making our legislation more in accordance with what is evidently the design of Divine Providence. Again, we are told this country is heavily burdened with debt and taxation; and that in such a country to apply the principles of Free Trade would be to endanger the safety of our revenue. Now, it may appear to be returning to the A B C of our agitation, if I reiterate in your presence that it is not the object of the League to remove a single item of revenue which is levied directly with a view to the Queen's Exchequer; but that our sole object is to abolish all duties which are levied for the purpose of taking money out of the pockets of a certain class of the community, and that the most numerous, in order to put it into the pockets of another class of the community, and that the least numerous. In other words, our object is to abolish all duties that are levied for what is called protection. Mr. Cobden then proceeded to consider the question in its several bearings, and concluded a speech of great power as follows:—I hope there will be no hanging back in Edinburgh on this question. (Cheers.) I am glad to tell you that your support has been already of vast importance to our agitation, and I am glad to see so splendid a meeting to forward our present campaign, presided over by your Lord Provost with so much honour to himself. I ask you on the ground of policy—I ask you with reference to its effect on the revenue—with reference to its effect on the welfare of the farmers—on grounds of justice to the great body of the people—on the score of humanity, for it is a better cause than charity itself—I ask you for the sake of peace, prosperity, education, and vital religion itself, for I believe that all these great interests are bound up with our cause—I ask you on all these grounds to give to the cause of Free Trade your hearty support. I thank you for the kindness you have shown me on this occasion. (Great applause.)

Mr. HUNTER, advocate, then rose amid loud cheers, and said that his object in addressing the meeting at this early stage of the proceedings was to submit for their consideration, and, he trusted, for their ultimate, cordial, and unanimous approval, a resolution pledging themselves to support the principles and the plan of operations which had been so clearly and powerfully explained to them by Mr. Cobden, and which they would hear farther developed and enforced by the other members of the deputation of the League. (Hear, hear, hear.) The resolution was:—

"That, deeply convinced that the only means of reviving trade, of saving agriculture as well as commerce from ultimate ruin, and of preserving the peace and welfare of the nation, is totally and immediately to abolish the Corn Laws, and all other unwise restrictions on the free interchange of commodities with other nations, we cordially approve of the objects and exertions of the National Anti-Corn-Law League; and, heartily concurring in the plan promulgated by them, and now explained by their distinguished representatives, we now pledge ourselves to do everything in our power fully and effectually to carry that plan into speedy operation."

On the introductory portion of the resolution it would be superfluous, indeed, to consume time by entering into argument. Mr. Hunter then proceeded to comment on the details of the plan by which the results aimed at by the League were to be obtained; and, having pointed out that the basis of their operations was the diffusion of information among the people, the propriety of which could not be questioned even by their most uncompromising opponents, continued:—But the efforts of the adversaries of the League have been directed against those parts of the plan intended so to influence the electoral body as to ensure the return of representatives convinced of the magnitude and danger of the existing evils, and determined on their removal; and these efforts seem to have made an impression in quarters undoubtedly entitled to respect. When calmly considered, these objections will be found to be wholly untenable. He held that the formation of the League, and the details of the plan by which its objects were to be obtained, were strictly conformable to law; and he spoke advisedly, that they were in perfect accordance with the spirit of the constitution, and sanctioned by recognised usage. (Cheers.) There can be no doubt that every profession, trade, or class of men, possessing a common material interest, are entitled to combine and unite for the purpose of obtaining the repeal of laws by which they deem that their interests are seriously injured, and by the abrogation of which they have reasonable grounds for believing that their prosperity will be promoted in future. (Hear.) As applicable to particular manufacturing, or commercial or agricultural bodies, this rule has never been questioned; and daily experience proves that persevering exertions are made by them, avowedly acting in unison, to secure the election of men qualified by their knowledge or weight to procure legislative measures for the maintenance or advancement of those interests. The same principle must apply with equal soundness and force to the means adopted for obtaining an alteration, not, be it observed, of any of the rules or forms of constitutional law, but of statutes by which the material interests of the whole manufacturing and commercial classes are as much injured as those of any one class can be by any special enactments. The details of the measures proposed to effectuate these objects must, indeed, be in entire accordance with the preservation of public tranquillity. Those embodied in the plan of the League not only possess this character, but are eminently fitted to promote the efficiency and purity of the electoral body, and extending much more widely in their beneficial results, eminently to advance the moral worth of the nation at large. The two parts of the plan which he thought of chief importance were the superintendence of the electoral registers and the adoption of vigorous measures for the extinction of intimidation, and more especially of bribery. The importance of the former of these objects, although perhaps not obvious at first, is well understood by those practically conversant with the value of securing to constituencies the means of rendering the elective franchise truly available. The most careful attention to the electoral lists is indispensable for the removal of unqualified persons, of objecting to those who have no right to be registered, and of aiding the enrolment of those who, although friendly, might from supineness or timidity, hesitate to insist upon their privileges. He grieved to say that much apathy in this most essential particular had been shown by those from whose liberality of principle and commanding position more energy and perseverance might justly have been expected. Their unaccountable indifference contrasted remarkably with the ceaseless and unwearied diligence of the abettors of monopoly, whose present strong position in Parliament was mainly to be attributed to the temporary ascendancy which they thus acquired in the electoral bodies. But by the active measures of the League this evil would be remedied, and the constituencies would be so purified and strengthened as to ensure, hereafter, to the friends of commercial freedom the means of making the franchise available for the great purposes for which it is held—the promotion of the welfare of all. Great as this benefit would be, it shrank in dimensions when placed by the side of that mighty good which was to be achieved by the adoption of vigorous measures for the suppression of bribery. The fearful operation of this heinous sin in perverting all classes, the bribers and the bribed—in spreading a desolating moral pestilence throughout the land—and in threatening to convert the moral sentiment of the people into a noisome mass of corruption—could not be deplored with grief too strong or felt with abasement too profound. The whole of the large sum asked for the League would be expended in its cure; and should the League effect it, they would be entitled to the blessings of their countrymen, and to those of all future generations. (Loud cheers.) After some further observations, Mr. Hunter moved the resolution, and concluded amidst loud cheers.

Mr. DUNCAN M'LAREN then rose amid loud and long-continued cheering. He said: I feel it a great privilege indeed to be permitted to support the principles of the League before so large an assemblage of my fellow-citizens. The resolution which has been moved is expressive of our cordial concurrence in what they have done—of our determination to support them, and to take what other steps they may think necessary to adopt. The outline of the plan of operations which they had chalked out for themselves has been generally explained to you by the honourable member for Stockport; and the way in which you received his explanation convinces me that it would be a waste of time to enforce the necessity of acting on his recommendation. I see that every one here is prepared to support the views embodied in the resolution, and to give the Anti-Corn-Law League the most cordial support in all its plans, including, of course, the means of carrying those plans into effect by subscribing to the funds. (Cheers.) It seems to me, that it would be out of place for me to enter on any discussion with regard to the Corn Laws, after what you have already heard so powerfully stated, and considering that we are yet to be addressed by the honourable member for Durham—by that veteran in the cause, Colonel Thompson—by Mr. Moore, as well as by Mr. Jameson and others. I shall therefore be very brief in the observations I have to make, and I would rather direct your attention to the practical conclusion, as a minister would say. Each of you will find enclosed in a bag, a little paper billet with these words:—Enter my name as a subscriber to the fund of the League for such and such an amount. The League have given those facilities to all who are present. All of you have within your reach the opportunity of giving sums, great or small; and the subscriptions will be sent for or may be paid in as most convenient for the parties who contribute. I may state that the committee who have taken the management of these matters have been very successful. They have individually contributed among themselves in a private way. A number of subscriptions have been intimated to me on the platform; a number have been intimated to me during the day both personally and by letter. The spirit evinced is such, that I hope the amount realized here will be the double of what it was last year. (Loud cheers.) Having announced some subscriptions, and explained the mode of their further collection, Mr. M'Laren said:—To-day I had a conversation with a very benevolent and excellent individual, who gave me a subscription of £20, and said he subscribed to this fund as, in his opinion, a great national charity. He said he felt greatly for the poor and destitute. He would be anxious to promote the good of the poorer classes in any way he could. But he expressed his strong conviction that the removal of the Corn Laws was the most certain means of removing pauperism and destitution, and that by subscribing to what is pre-eminently of a national character. (Loud cheers.) The Lord Provost has expressed the same views; and for myself I can say, that if I considered this merely a political question, I should not have given my money or my time to it as I have done. But regarding the removal of restrictions on trade as the means of giving employment to the poor, of raising their condition, of enabling them to subsist on the fruits of their own industry, instead of depending on the charitable collections which we have every now and then to make; believing that the principles advocated by the League when carried into effect will to an immense extent remove the cause of destitution, and thus increase the comforts of the poor, and elevate the condition of the people in a moral as well as physical point of view—I have no hesitation in earnestly entreating all my friends to support the great League Fund. (Cheering.) Mr. M'Laren concluded, by expressing a hope that the inhabitants of Edinburgh, who subscribed so liberally last year, would on this occasion exceed the expectations formed of their efforts. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. BRIGHT, M.P., then came forward, amidst great applause, and delivered an eloquent and forcible speech. The following are the honourable members' remarks, having reference to the letters of the members for Edinburgh:—I cannot forbear from remarking on the position in which you stand in reference to this question. You are here confederated with us—we, the representatives of the Anti-Corn-Law League, did last year, and do now, shake hands with you, and you are incorporated with the League. You have subscribed already; you are again about to subscribe, to enable us to do that in other constituencies which we have already done here. But what, if you send us to teach and enlighten other constituencies—what, if you neglect yourselves—what, if the missionaries and apostles are the first to fall away from the faith—what, if the constituency of Edinburgh, who are so intelligent, so well informed, and so zealous—what, if you rest satisfied to be represented in the House of Commons (tremendous cheering) by men, one of whom gives you a half-hearted and a hollow support, and the other meets your invitation to attend the discussion of this great question with a reply so brief that it looks like a rebuff? (Cheers.) One of your members is a man of some celebrity. Our vast possessions in the country of India are subject in part, I believe, to a code of laws which he took the chief part in drawing up. He is also known as a powerful and beautiful writer, especially on historical subjects. But does he know anything of the philosophy of history? Can he not look—for he possesses vast stores of knowledge—can he not look back to the history of other countries, and to the history of this country, and find there that the real way to disturb the happiness of a people is to substitute injustice and selfishness for justice and philanthropy? Can he not look there and find that true Conservatism is based on the elements and immutable principles of truth? Does he not know that the temper of the English people, and still more the temper of the people whom I now address, though it may be slow to move—though they may be friends to order, though they may venerate the institutions of our country, and look upon the aristocracy and the monarchy with awe and with affection—yet it is possible, when evils like these exist, that the iron may enter into their souls, that injustice may accumulate, till all the learning and the morals of the country—all the prejudices and preconceived notions that now exist—nay, all the religion that is in the land, may be insufficient to keep the people from breaking down suddenly, destructively, and for ever, the great and giant evils under which they feel oppressed. (Loud and long-continued cheering.) I much fear that this representative of yours contracts his vision, and looks only upon party, and supposes that to be his country; or that he regards the interests of party as greater than that of the twenty-seven millions of people of Great Britain and Ireland, four millions of whom are in a state of abject suffering and hopeless pauperism. (Hear, hear.) But if he is not to be convinced—if in him, as his letter expresses, no change need be sought, and no change will be found—then we have here a field for the exercise of our special duties. (Cheers.) As a body sent by the dense population in which we live, and authorised by certificates ratified by 100 public meetings in the country, we appeal to you and remonstrate with you as to the position in which you stand with regard to your representation. I have no hope of deliverance from the Crown—I expect no justice from the House of Lords—(hear, hear, hear); but I do look to the constituencies of the empire, that they will return men to the Commons House of Parliament who will not pander to the improper authority of the Crown, still less who will support the unjust rights of the aristocracy, but who will pursue the great, and noble, and glorious object of defending the rights and interests of humanity, which are bound up in the rights and interests of the common people. (Loud cheers.)

The resolution moved by Mr. Hunter, and seconded by Mr. D. M'Laren, was then put to the meeting, and carried unanimously.

The collection of the subscription tickets, one of which had been put into the parcel of fruit given to each individual, was then proceeded with, and occupied a short time.

Colonel T. P. THOMPSON was received, on coming forward, with enthusiastic cheering. The veteran advocate for total repeal addressed the meeting in his peculiarly characteristic style, and resumed his seat amidst cheering as prolonged and hearty as that which greeted him on rising.

Mr. R. W. JAMESON, W.S., rose and said:—The duty assigned me is a proud but now an easy one—to collect and declare your opinion of the conduct of the men to whose principles you have now pledged yourselves, in whose objects you are so deeply interested. The authors, the actors, the leaders of this great national movement are now before you (cheers); and to me it is given to ask, how think you have they performed their great and self-imposed task? What think you of their League? What think you of themselves? The League is now crowned with unparalleled success (hear, hear); but this is no absolute criterion of merit; merit is not measured by success. The League is a great and growing combination of intelligent men. Such combinations are not new. Clubs, societies, unions, leagues, associations, are but the terms we use when men combine for common objects, good or bad. We have had societies whose efforts have been blessed in the freedom of the slave, and associations who have trampled down the perhaps viler outrage of tyranny and exclusion in religion's name; while we must also confess to unions whose object is disunion and dismemberment; and yet more strange, while we have legislating houses and selected clubs whose avowed and (as yet) legal—I do not say lawful—object is to preserve the monopoly of the very rich, we have also had unions whose miserable object has been to create a pernicious monopoly among sections of the very poor. These combinations are the result of our political position and power. What the despot once attempted by force, to be resisted or obeyed as force might incline, is, in our happier days, obtained by such combinations acting on the governing power, according to position, numbers, influence, and, though more rarely, goodness of object. So far the League is but a copy—a necessary conformity to the mode in which power is now procured, or made available; but the mode of its contrivance—the means of its progress—are its authors' own; and here I claim for them undivided and exclusive approbation. (Cheers.) Mr. Jameson having referred to the past and unsuccessful efforts made to obtain by petition the repeal of the Corn Laws, to the dreadful state of the country and suffering of the people subsequently induced by them, and to the origin and progress of the League, moved, amidst great applause, a vote of thanks to that body.

Mr. STONE seconded the motion.

The CHAIRMAN said he wished the meeting would express their opinion by holding up their hands.

The vote of thanks having been enthusiastically responded to,

Mr. R. R. MOORE, a member of the deputation, in a brief but eloquent speech, acknowledged the vote.

The CHAIRMAN announced that the amount of subscriptions, including the sums subscribed previously, was £1142. He wished to remind the meeting, at the same time, that last year, during the whole time, the sum collected was £1090; and he begged also to mention, that on account of the crowded state of the room, the subscription had been imperfectly received. (Of the sum collected on the present occasion, we believe £260 was received by cards.)

The announcement of the amount of contributions was received with loud cheers.

Mr. COBDEN, in highly complimentary terms, moved a vote of thanks to the Chairman, which was passed with three times three, the hon. member giving the signal.

The CHAIRMAN said the honour was so great, he could not return thanks for it.

The meeting then separated about eleven o'clock.

Edinburgh subscriptions to the League fund:—

Alex. Annandale, 20l.; James Aytoun, 5l.; James Anderson, 2l.; A. B., 1l. 1s.; A. Adam and Sons, 2l.; a Friend to the League, 1l. 1s.; Alexander Aitken, 1l. 1s.; David Aitchison, 1l.; Richard Alexander, 1l. 1s.; H. Armour, 2s. 6d.; a Friend to Free Trade, 1l. 1s.; A. S., 1l. 1s.; a Convert, 1l. 0s. 9d.; Jane Anderson, 2s. 6d.; A. B., 2l. 2s.; John Anderson, 7s. 6d.; a Well-wisher, 2s. 6d.; a Lady, whose heart is willing, but purse is weak, 1s.; a Friend to Free Trade, 1s.; John Anderson, son, 5s.; a Friend to the Poor, 5l.; Thomas Angus, 2s. 6d.; A. B., 10s.; a Friend, 2s. 6d.; a Friend to Free Trade, 2s. 6d.; W. Anderson, 10s.; a Friend, 5s.; A. Alexander, 1s.; A. Aitken, 10s. 5d.; R. Aitken, 2l. 2s.; a Friend, 2s. 6d.; a Farmer who wishes he could give more, 1l.; a few Stocking Makers, per Hugh M'Pherson, 1l. 5s.; J. Anderson, 7s. 6d.; a Free Churchman and Free Trader, 1l. 1s.; Rev. Christopher Anderson, 2l. 2s.; John Adie, 1l.; Robt. Aitken, 2l. 2s.;

Magdalene Aitken, 1s.; Alex. Allan, 5s.; a Friend,
1l. 1s.; an Old Stager, 1l.; a Cobdenized Farmer, 6d.;
James Anderson, 1l. 1s.; A. Z. (double of last year), 2l. 2s.; A. and C. Black, 20l.; J. M. Bell, 4l. 4s.; Robert Bryce, 1l.; William Boak, 1l.; Joseph Baird, 1l. 1s.; J. H. Burton, 3l. 3s.; Wm. Brown, 10s. 6d.; B.
Hall Blyth, 1l.; Alex. Banks, 1l. 1s.; James Balford, 10s. 6d.; George Beattie, 1l. 1s.; Dr. Beilby, 3l.;
James Bruff, 1l.; James Boag, 3l. 3s.; Barely free from Debt, 5s.; James Brown, 1l. 1s.; John Brunton, 1l. 1s.;
B. M., 7s. 6d.; William Balleny, 7s. 6d.; A. Brooks,
10s. 6d.; John Brown, 1l.; R. Brown, 2s.; James Barlas, 1l.; D. Burns, 1l.; Wm. Bartram, 1l. 1s.; J.
Blair, 1l.; Rev. Dr. Wm. Brown, 1l. 1s.; Hugh Brown, 1l.; A. Black, 5s.; A. Breck, 1l. 1s.; A. H. Balfour,
5s.; K. C. Banks, 2s. 6d.; Jonathan Bladworth, 2l.;
George Badeses, 2s. 6d.; L. Berry, 1l. 1s.; Barely free from debt, 5s.; Robert Cadell, 20l.; W. Chambers, 10l.
10s.; Messrs. J. Clapperton and Co., 10l.; A. Cunningham, 10l.; Robert Cox, W.S., 4l.; Thomas Calder, 1l.; George Clark, 1l. 1s.; A. Cuthbert, 5s.; James Carrick, 5s.; — Clark, 1l. 1s.; Edward Cruickshank, 2l.
2s.; Robert Chisholm, 1l. 1s.; Wm. Scott Chisholm, 1l.
1s.; A. Cushnie, 2s. 6d.; J. Clark, 5s.; A. Cochran,
5s.; J. H. Chisholm, 5s.; John Carton, 5s.; Hen.
Crichton, S.S.C., 2l.; — Colthart, 1l.; W. Crouch, 1l.;
J. Craig, 1l.; — Campbell, 2s. 6d.; J. B. Campbell, 2l.;
Simon Campbell, S.S.C., 1l. 1s.; A. Cameron, 1l.; Miss Carruthers, 1l. 1s.; N. Cushnie, 1l.; John Clark, 1l.; John Curister, 5s.; Jos. Coulshard, 1l.; William Dunlop, 20l.; Dr. Daun, 10l.; Mrs. Drummond, 6l.; Wm.
Dick, 5l. 5s.; Arthur Dingwall, 1l. 1s.; William Deans, 1l. 1s.; Bailie Duncan, 2l. 2s.; Quintin Dalrymple, 1l.;
John Dick, 1l. 1s.; P. E. Dove, 1l. 1s.; Rev. P. Davidson, 1l.; A. C. Dick, 2l. 2s.; John Donaldson, 2s. 6d.;
James Donaldson, advocate, 1l. 1s.; Andrew Dods, 1l. 1s.;
Mr. Dickenson, 1l.; James Duncan, W.S., 10s. 6d.;
George Drummond, 10s. 6d.; James Dymock, 5s.;
William Darling, 2l.; John Dalrymple, 5s.; Geo. Dickson, 2s. 6d.; D. R., 10s. 6d.; D. M. M., 10s.; — Douglas, 5s.; James Donaldson, 1l. 1s.; J. Eagle, 10s.; Friend to the League, 5l.; Friend to the Cause, 2l. 2s.; A. Fyfe,
S.S.C., 1l. 1s.; Thomas Fleming, 1l.; Rev. John French, 1l.; James Ford, 1l.; Alexander Fletcher, 2s. 6d.; Father of ten children, 2s. 6d.; W. Fleming, 1s.; John Foyer, 10s.; — Findly, 10s.; F. R. K., against iniquity, 2s. 6d.;
Dan. Forester, 1l. 1s.; John Gray, 10l.; Robert Grieve, 10l.; G. R. and Co., 5l.; Bailie Gray, 10l.; John Gregory, 5l. 5s.; G. H. Gille, 5l.; James Grant, 2l. 2s.;
Robert Glass, 1l. 1s.; Andrew Gray, 1l.; James Gray,
1l.; R. P. Greig, 2l.; Thomas Gourlay, 5s.; A. Gibb,
1l. 1s.; Thomas Glen, 5s.; A. Gulland, 5s.; George Gourlay, 2s.; W. C. Gregory, 5s.; J. B. Grace, 2l.;
Wm. Gray, 2s. 6d.; Dr. Gairdner, 10s.; Thos. Gairdner,
10s.; J. F. Galloway, 1l. 1s.; J. S. Galloway, 1l. 1s.; G.
Gulland, 1l.; G. S. J., 1l.; T. Glen, 5s.; Mrs. Glen, 3s.;
Messrs. J. and W. Howison, 10l.; Messrs. W. Howison and Son, 5l.; Robert Hunter, 10l. 10s.; Wm. Hutchison,
S.S.C., 5l.; George Hope, 2l. 2s.; Forrest Hay, 1l.; John
Hutton, 2s. 6d.; Geo. Horne, 5s.; P. Howden, 1l. 1s.;
Rev. George Harris, 1l.; George Harrison, 1l.; James
Hogg, 5s.; H. J., 1l.; A. Hay, 2l. 2s.; J. Hill, grocer, 2s. 6d.; Thomas Hately, 5s.; J. Henderson, 5s.; George
Harvey, 1l.; W. Hughes, 5s.; J. Horsburgh, 1l. 1s.;
Thomas Ireland, 1l.; George Inglis, 3l.; Alex. Inches, 10s. 6d.; Andrew Isles, 1l.; R. Irvine, 1l. 1s.; E. Ironside, 2s. 6d.; Ionohodie, 1l.; James Jamieson, 25l.;
Alexander Jamieson, 5l.; R. W. Jamieson, 2l. 2s.; Adam
Johnston, 1l. 1s.; J. H., 2s.; Peter Jamieson, 1l. 10s.;
J. W., 10s. 6d.; — Jameson, 5s.; J. Johnston, 1l. 1s.;
a Lady, per J. J., 1l. 1s.; J. M., 5s.; Davie Johnston, 1l. 1s.; Mrs. Dr. Kennedy, 10s. 6d.; G. Knight, 1l.;
W. Kemp, 2s.; Thomas Kerr, 1l. 1s.; Dr. Kennedy,
10s. 6d.; Messrs. Kennington and Jenner, 5l. 5s.; David Kay, 5s.; John Kyd, 2l. 2s.; Jas. Leishman, 5l.; Messrs.
Laidlaw and Sons, 5l. 5s.; J. Lees, 2l. 2s. 2d.; W. Leckie, 2l.; Thos. Lindsay, 10s. 6d.; John Laing, 2s. 6d.; Wm.
Murray, 20l.; Thos. Milne, 10l.; Wm. Miliar, 1l.; Jas.
Mitchell, 10s.; C. Morton, 1l. 1s. 6d.; W. Millar, S.S.C.,
3l.; E. F. Maitland, 4l.; Geo. Mushet, 5l.; John Murray, 1l. 1s.; Messrs. Mould and Todd, 1l. 1s.; W. B. Moffat, 1l.; John Millar, 5s.; Charles Muirhead, 1l. 1s.;
James Millar, 2l.; W. Marshall, 1l. 1s.; J. Maxwell, 10s.;
Thomas Moffat, 1l. 1s.; J. Malcolm, 3l. 3s.; H. Morrison, 1l.; A. A. Morton, 5s.; J. Milne, 3l. 3s.; L. Millar, 1l.; Thomas Millar, 1l.; J. Millar, 5s.; Money makes the mare to go—the last kick at the rogues in grain, 1l. 1s.;
C. Muirhead, 1l. 1s.; Messrs. A. and E. Murray,
10s. 6d.; Alexander Marshall, 1l.; W. H. Macfarlane,
1l.; Duncan M'Laren, 50l.; George M'Callum, 20l.;
H. M'G., 5l. 5l.; Charles M'Laren, 10l.; Messrs. Jas.
M'Claren and Son, 5l.; William M'Murray, 50l.; George
K. M'Callum, 5l. 5s.; Mrs. M'Farlane, 5l.; J. F. M'Farlane, 2l. 2s.; J. M'Intosh, 5l.; John M'Pherson, 1l.;
— M'Gill, 5s.; J. M'Intosh, 3l. 3s.; James M'Donald, 1l. 1s.; J. M'Farlane, 5s.; Peter M'Laren, 5s.; John M'Queen, 2s. 6d.; Miss Grant M'Laren, 2s. 6d.; Miss Agnes M'Laren, 2s. 6d.; Master John M'Laren, 2s. 6d.;
— M'Kenzie, 10s.; Wm M'Gregor, 1l. 1s.; J. M'Intyre, 5s.; J. Nelson, 1l.; R. R. Nelson, 1l.; A. Nisbet, 5s.; W.
Nicolson, 10s. 6d.; No Sliding Scale or Fixed Duty, 4s. 6d.; W. Oliphant and Son, 2l. 2s.; One who fears the Jews, 1l. 1s.; Charles Oliphant, 2l.; W. Pike, 1l. 1s.; J.
Paterson, 1l. 1s.; W. Paterson, 1l.; P. Q., 1l.; G.
Paterson, 1l. 1s.; J. Pringle, 2s. 6d.; P. Paul, S.S.C., 5l.; J. Paterson, 1l.; Rev. Dr. W. Peddie, 1l.; J. Pe-die, jun., 2l.; J. Pryde, 1l.; Charles Peter, 10s.; Mrs.
Pringle, 1s.; W. Fairman, 1l.; Messrs. Richardsons,
Brothers, 100l.; John Ritchie, 5l. 5s.; Alexander
Robertson, 5l. 5s.; Wm. Renton, 5l.; John Russell, 1l.; Wm. Renton, 5l.; R. B. S., 5s.; Wm. Reid, builder, 1l. 1s.; T. Russell, 1l. 1s.; David Robertson, 1l. 1s.; Andrew Reynolds, 2s. 6d.; John Ralph, 2l.;
Francis Richardson, 5l.; John Ritchie, D.D., 1l.; J.
Reid, 1l.; James Robertson, 1l.; J. B. Ritchie, 5s.; A.
Roe, 5s.; T. Robson, 2s. 6d.; J. Ritchie, 2s.; — Robertson, 7s. 6d.; J. Robertson, 1l. 1s.; J. Rutherford, 1l. 1s.; J. Robertson, 1l.; Alex. Reid, 1l. 1s.; A. Richardson, 1l. 1s.; J. Robertson, 1l.; A. Robertson, 10s.;
John Robertson, 1l. 1s.; T. Russell, 2l.; Hugh Rose, 2l. 2s.; Hugh Ross, 5s.; Stone and Kemp, 150l.; W. Sommerville, 21l.; W. Sommerville, jun., 20l.; G. Smith, 2l. 2s.;
John Stewart, 1l. 1s.; Stewart and Todd, 1l. 1s.; James Simpson, 1l. 1s.; D. Syme and Son, 2l. 2s.; Thomas Sharp, 10s.; George Simson, 1l.; James Scott, 1l.;
Archibald Scott, 1l. 1s.; E. Forsyth, Scotsman Office, 5s.; W. Skeen, jun., 7s. 6d.; James Stewart, 10s.; A.

F. Sommerville, 1l.; Mrs. Smith, 5s.; J. H. Stott, 10s. 6d.; William Syme, 5s.; J. Sinclair, jun., 2l. 2s.;
Councillor Stark, 1l. 1s.; R. Scott, 2l. 2s.; A. H. Smith, 1l. 1s.; G. T. Straton, 5l.; David Scott, 1l. 1s.; George
Stewart, 1l.; George Sandy, 1l.; H. G. Smith, 1l. 1s.;
Andrew Scott, 1l.; R. Shand, 1l. 1s.; P. Sinclair, 1l.;
J. H. Stewart, 2l. 2s.; John Smart, 5s.; James Slater, 2s. 6d.; David Smith, 7s. 6d.; M. Taylor, 2s. 6d.; John Taylor, 5s.; James Taylor, 10l.; George Tibbets, 1l. 1s.;
James B. Tod, 1l.; George Thomson, 5s.; T. G., 5s.;
A. Thomson, 10l.; F. Thomson, 5s.; Two Young Re-pealers, 2s.; G. W. Willis, 2l.; James Walker, 1l. 1s.;
James Watt, 2l.; John Wood, 1l.; John Wright, 10s. 6d.;
James Wilson, 10s.; John Walls, 7s. 6d.; J. Wilson, 5s.;
George Wilson, 1l.; W. Watherston, 5s.; J. O. C.
Whitson, 2s. 6d.; R. Winter, 1l.; X. Y. (double of last year), 2l. 2s.; George Young, 5s.; John Young, 1l.

We are happy to learn that the subscriptions in this city in aid of the great League fund are going on with extraordinary success. On Monday and Tuesday not less than 230 new subscriptions were sent to the local treasurer.
The whole number of subscribers is already 657, and the amount of their subscriptions £1362. We have no doubt that the number and amount of subscriptions will yet be largely increased, as the circulars for the city were delivered only on Monday and Tuesday.—Scotsman.

BANQUET, IN SUPPORT OF THE PRINCIPLES OF FREE TRADE, IN THE CITY HALL, GLASGOW.

(Abridged from the Glasgow Argus.)

This great and important demonstration, in support of the principles of Free Trade, and especially in behalf of a total repeal of the Corn and Provision Laws, took place on Wednesday night, the 10th instant, in the City-hall, when, as we anticipated, it proved one of the most powerful exhibitions of public sentiment on this question which has yet been witnessed in the West of Scotland. In point of respectability, according to the ordinary acceptance of this term, the meeting was perhaps never surpassed in Glasgow; and, as regards general intelligence, sound and enlightened views of national policy, and an intimate and rational acquaintance with the principles of Free Trade in particular, coupled with an ardent determination to carry these principles into practical effect, it might fairly stand comparison with any kindred assemblage which has hitherto met to promote the great and engrossing object which formed its grand and central basis. Indeed, for every attribute which can give moral weight, and add increased energy to a cause having truth and justice on its side, the demonstration of last night was pre-eminently remarkable; and blind must be the man who fails to see that any cause so supported must in the end triumph over every obstacle. The entire number of persons in the hall was about 2000, including ladies, of whom 150 occupied the western gallery.

The Chair was occupied by the Hon. the Lord Provost.

Vice-chairmen:—Walter Buchanan, Esq.; John Tennant, Esq.; Alex. Graham, Esq.; Wm. Cross, Esq.

On the chairman's platform we observed the following gentlemen:—

The Hon. Fox Maule, M.P., James Oswald, Esq., M.P., Richard Cobden, Esq., M.P., Colonel Thompson, R. R. R.
Moore, Esq., John Bright, Esq., M.P., Archd. Hastie, Esq.,
M.P., Rev. Dr. Wardlaw, Rev. Dr. Heugh, Rev. Dr. Willis, George Stirling, Esq., Samuel Higginbotham, Esq., John Wilson, Esq. (Dundee), P. W. Kennedy, Esq. (of Drumellan), Robert Stewart, Esq., George Anderson, Esq., David Chapman, Esq., William Gemmell, Esq., Walter Crum, Esq., Alex. Cou-per, Esq., David Murray, Esq., George Brown, Esq., Charles Gray, Esq., James Scott, Esq., John Ker, Esq., Andrew Galbraith, Esq., Thomas Speirs, Esq., John Young, jun., Esq., George Stevenson, Esq., John Kerr, Esq., John Kerr, Esq.

At the Croupiers' table were:—Provost Bain (Greenock), Baillie Hamilton, Whitehead, Hastie, Anderson, Buntin; Provost Bankier, James Dunlop, Esq., George Crawford, Esq., George Wilson, Esq., Jn. Wilson, Esq. (Auchencroft), John
Robertson, Esq., Robt. Hutchison, Esq., Robert Bartholomew, Esq., Wm. Gray, Esq., John Pattison, Esq., John Anderson, Esq., H. E. Crum, Esq., A. C. Dick, Esq. (advocate), Alexander Denny, Esq., William Couper, Esq., William Logie, Esq.,
P. Cowan, Esq.

The following letters of apology were received from noblemen and gentlemen, who found it inconvenient to attend:—

From the Right Hon. Lord Dunfermline.

"Colinton, Dec. 20, 1843.

"DEAR OSWALD,—I last year declined to attend a Free-Trade meeting in Edinburgh, and to which I was urgently invited by my old constituents. No person can be more favourable to the principle of Free Trade in corn than I am, and I do most earnestly wish, for the sake of the country, that the question was finally settled. I am much obliged to you, and to the Glasgow committee, for having done me the honour to invite me to attend their meeting; and, in declining, I am anxious that I should not be supposed to have any doubts in my mind with regard to the expediency of obtaining, as quickly as possible, the establishment of Free Trade in corn. Yours truly,

"DUNFERMLINE."

From the Right Hon. Lord Kinnaird.

"Rossie Priory, Inchture, Dec. 20, 1843.

"SIR,—Having to attend two similar meetings to the one to which you have done me the honour to invite, the one at Perth, and one at Dundee, I must trust to your making my excuses to the committee of the Glasgow Anti-Corn-Law Association.
I remain, Sir, your obedient servant, KINNAIRD.

Letters of apology were also read from the Hon. C. P.
Villiers, M.P., P. M. Stewart, Esq., M.P., Geo. Duncan, Esq., M.P., and from John Fergus, Esq., and W. D.
Gillon, Esq.

The Lord Provost, along with the distinguished strangers, and others named above, entered the hall about 20 minutes past six, and were greeted with the most enthusiastic cheering by the gentlemen, and the waving of handkerchiefs by the ladies, who lent an agreeable interest to the west gallery. Dr. Wardlaw, at the request of the Lord Provost, invoked the divine blessing on the assembly, and the successful accomplishment of the objects for which it had met, in language alike touching, beautiful, and appropriate.

The Lord Provost, in rising to propose the first toast, was loudly cheered. He said:—Ladies and Gentlemen, I have great pleasure in taking the chair on this occasion. The question of Free Trade has long occupied the attention of the citizens of Glasgow, many of whom, towards the close of last century, zealously maintained the sound principles which the celebrated Adam Smith so ably and admirably propounded, and practically illustrated, whilst he filled one of the chairs in our university.
(Cheers.) I am happy to find that so many of our intelligent merchants and manufacturers of the present time are becoming every day more and more alive to the important principles involved in this all-engrossing subject—the abolition of all monopolies; and I assure you that I feel gratified, when an opportunity occurs, that I can, in the exercise of my duty as chief magistrate, give countenance and support to any measure that will tend to ameliorate the condition of the working classes, or improve the commercial and manufacturing interests of this great and flourishing city, the mercantile metropolis of Scotland.

(Cheers.) We have met here to-night to express our abhorrence of those laws which, by enhancing the price of bread, cut deeply into the comforts of this great community, as well as of the country generally; they also tend, by restricting our intercourse with foreign nations, to limit the demand for our manufactures, diminishing the employment of the working population—and the necessary consequences follow, the reduction of the wages of our operatives and artisans. (Hear.) I am well aware there are many gentlemen, whom I have the pleasure of seeing around me, who will, in the course of the evening, explain and enter upon the details, and picture to you in more glowing terms than I can, the misery those unjust laws inflict on the vast majority of our population. To them I leave the task; and I now request you will fervently join in doing special honour to one whose father's principles, as well as her own education and feelings, leave us no room to doubt that in her we have a friend to every measure that can promote the social happiness, comfort, and prosperity of her people.—"The Queen." (Great cheering.) Tune—The national anthem—the vast assembly standing.

His LORDSHIP then proposed, successively, "His Royal Highness Prince Albert." (Loud cheers.) Tune—
"Prince Albert's March."

"The Prince of Wales and Royal Family" was drunk with equal enthusiasm. Tune—"What'll be King."

The Lord Provost then called on the Hon. Fox
Maule for the next toast.

Mr. Fox MAULE, on rising, was loudly and enthusiastically applauded, and "one cheer more" was given for the member for Perth, before the approving feeling of the assemblage allowed him to proceed. He said:—Ladies and Gentlemen, in rising to address you on this occasion, I feel that to-night I have been placed in a position which there are many here present much more worthy to occupy than myself. Indeed, I should have been disposed rather to follow those who have already led the way in bringing the great principles of Free Trade before the public, than to be put forward as the first to introduce that subject to you this evening. But it has been the pleasure of the committee to arrange it so, and I shall, therefore, endeavour, in as few words as I can, to give the toast which they have allotted to my share. It embraces the great and wide subject of "Free Trade"—(cheers)—a toast into all the ramifications of which I will not enter in detail—for, were I to do so, in the first place, I should weary your patience, and, in the next place, I should do that of which I have sometimes had occasion to complain in following the toasts of other speakers—I should trench upon my neighbour's ground. I shall endeavour to avoid that, if possible, and I shall endeavour to speak to those paramount principles which, if they exist anywhere, I should imagine must and will exist in that city in which Adam Smith taught and wrote—(hear, hear)—in that city which boasts itself not only the commercial and manufacturing metropolis of Scotland, but in second scarcely to any city in the empire.
(Applause.) The principles of Free Trade, gentlemen, have begun to force themselves so convincingly, day after day, upon the minds of the inhabitants of this country, that it scarcely requires—indeed it would be an insult to your understanding—that I should go back into their origin, or trace them to their ultimate objects. I consider that the proper business of such a meeting as this is to consult together, and to listen to practical suggestions as to how, in the speediest and most effective, and at the same time in the safest manner, we can carry these principles into effect in the Government and the Legislature of our country. (Loud cheers.) I think you will admit that we have had, of late years, pretty clear and plain proof, that the old systems of special protection are not those upon which—even though you might believe and countenance them for the moment—the vast interests of such a country as this can permanently stand. ("Hear," and applause.)

Like a plant, which may be reared or forced in a hotbed or hothouse, monopoly may be of benefit for the moment; but to stand all the tear and wear of a changeful climate—to be thoroughly fixed and permanently rooted in our soil—monopoly is not the plant to flourish in this country, nor is our soil fitted to measure its growth.
(Cries of "Hear, hear.") We are free men, and why should we not have Free Trade? (Great applause.) I think it stands to reason, that that system is best, and promotes to the greatest extent the wellbeing of all, which shall give to us the easiest enjoyment of that which the rest of the world produces, and which shall convey to the rest of the world the produce of our own industry in return. Now, these are the principles upon which I for one wish to see legislation; and I wish to see them embraced not in this point only, but in all. In fact, I wish to see no taxation in this country which is not solely for the purpose of maintaining our national credit, and answering our national engagements (hear); and I would further wish to see that taxation so levied that its pressure might be equal on all classes, and that no class or section should have exemption at the expense of another.
Now, in speaking of Free Trade, I think all I have said may be included in this principle. There are various subjects to which the principles of Free Trade have been more peculiarly directed; but as one deeply interested in the prosperity of agriculture, I am not sorry to have the opportunity before this company, in this great city, to bear my public testimony to that which has been asserted by others—that I believe Free Trade in agriculture, or, in other words, the repeal of the Corn Laws, which give a monopoly to the owners or holders of land, should be, for the general good of the country, conceded—that these laws should be immediately repealed. (Loud applause.) I have not come to this opinion suddenly, nor have I arrived at it from any personal motive or purpose; but the more I have considered the subject, the more I have been convinced, not only that the landowner or landholder will not be losers by the repeal of the Corn Laws, for that is a narrow view of the question, but they will be so far gainers, that, without any loss to themselves, the repeal of these laws will confer an immense boon on the rest of the community. (Hear, hear.) Now, in reference to the article of corn, I would like to say one or two words on that subject to any farmers who may be here present; and I would wish to express my conviction, from the little experience I have had in communication with agriculturists, and especially with the tenantry of this country, that I believe there is a growing opinion amongst the tenantry that the sooner the Corn Law is settled the better, and that they will not consider any settlement satisfactory which does not involve a total repeal of these laws. (Applause.) This I believe to be a growing feeling among the agricultural population; and our agricultural population, you will bear in mind, and the gentlemen from England will bear in mind, depend mostly upon leases and fixed engagements with their landlords. But to what do I trace this change and growth of opinion. I trace it to the efforts of a body of which, though I am not a member myself, yet I cannot have looked unobservantly upon what they have been doing during the last twelve months. It was not my intention to have entered into any details regarding the Anti-Corn-Law League; yet when I see a body of men as much entitled to hold their opinions, and to press them on the public, as I or any other class of the community are entitled to hold opinions—when I see a body composed of such gentlemen as those on my right and left, to whom have been attributed malicious motives, and who have been falsely attacked and challenged for using the most atrocious of language, and the most horrible of doctrine—when I see this, I must take the liberty of stating my opinion of the high merits of that body, and of the important services which the Anti-Corn-Law League have rendered during the last twelve months. (Hear, hear.) I have often remarked quietly to various members of that body, that, in the first commencement of their career, they, as well as their opponents, dealt too much in bandying hard words with each other; I told them that this was not only a waste of their time, but a highly impolitic proceeding into the bargain; but during the last twelve months we have seen that body scattering arguments throughout the length and breadth of the land—reams of reasoning flowing from their pens, and working by that machinery, and fighting with those weapons, which are most worthy of reasoning men, and most likely to convince reasoning beings. (Applause.) There may, no doubt, have been here and there, in a large body such as this, some men whose vivid imagination and fiery temperament may have occasionally run away with them; but we must judge a body like this by its written feelings and opinions, not from the sudden speeches of some of its members. And, when we look upon the endeavours of the Anti-Corn-Law League to inform the public upon all the bearings of the great question of Free Trade, I must admit I have seldom seen an association, and I have never known one which had such beneficial objects in view, or urged them with such legitimate and laudable weapons. I have thought it right to say this much, and to express publicly my opinion in order to show that, though I do not belong to them, I am so far from discouraging their efforts that I regard them as the means of vast good, and it is our duty, therefore, to bear them up against those who would foully and unjustly calumniate them. (Hear, hear.) Having said this much in regard to this great and growing body in the country, permit me to go on to state that I believe the cause they have been advocating is coming by slow and sure degrees to a crisis. (Hear.) When I look into England—when I regard the counties of England, and observe the different tone of language which is now held at agricultural meetings—I cannot help being struck with a strong feeling that the landlords and farmers of England, though they won't confess it themselves, are making up their minds for what they see is inevitably approaching. ("Hear, hear," and applause.) Why, we begin to hear in the counties of England remarks on the necessity of leases, and suggestions as to the utility of draining; we begin to have the practice of the Lothians quoted in Devonshire and Dorsetshire; and we find that Agricultural Associations are no longer mere bodies met for the purpose of dining together, and hearing or making speeches in favour of monopoly; but they have set themselves earnestly to do business in their own line, by endeavouring to point out to the tenantry of the country how they may make the land grow more, and how, by increased production, they may meet the defalcation, should there be a defalcation produced by a repeal of the Corn Laws. (Hear.) It has been generally imagined that the most prosperous tenant was the man who held the farm at the lowest amount of rent; but, let me tell you—and in doing so I have the authority of eminent agriculturists—that a rent inadequately low is nothing more nor less than a reward for indolence. The man whose rent is so low that, with the merest daily labour, he can extract from the ground that which is necessary for his ordinary wants, will leave his land in the same state that he got it. (Hear, hear.) But the man who is spurred on by a moderate rent and a large family, will exert every nerve to make the ground produce to the uttermost; and that man, of all others, is he who will not fear any repeal of the Corn Laws, but would rather court the settlement of a question which distracts his attention, and which, when settled, will leave him liberty to apply his energies in a manner from which he will be sure to derive a fair return. Such sentiments, I am convinced, will, in due time, prevail all over England; but I believe we shall not succeed in this great question till we can secure leases to improving tenants. But some of the English landlords complain that they cannot do without the Corn Laws, because their estates are burdened with mortgages. These men then may not be able to afford the money to improve their own estates, but if they give leases, enterprising tenants will be found to improve these lands, and lay out the money. And shall the indisposition of the proprietors to lay out this money—which may more properly be stated as an indisposition to part with their hold over the consciences of their tenantry—shall this indisposition interfere between the public and their obtaining this great boon? (Hear.) A boon it is not; it is their right. It is the right of the people of this country to have food at the lowest possible price, and, when this can be had without injury to any class, I say the longer we are in obtaining this right from the Government, the more blame we should take to ourselves that the question is so long unsettled. But that we shall obtain it in a few years, I am convinced—we shall secure, either from the principles of a liberal Government, or the fears of a Tory Government—we shall either have it in the same spirit in which the repeal of the Test and Corporations Acts, or Municipal Reform, were given; or we shall obtain it in the same way as Catholic emancipation was secured in 1829. (Hear, hear.) But it is a most wretched state for the country to be in in the meantime; and it is worse to have men in power who will nibble at reforms without making them while there is time. There must be no nibbling in the case of Free Trade. "Nibbling," as Lord John Russell said to Sir Robert Peel, "unsettles every thing, and settles nothing." And therefore the safest, and wisest, and best course for all parties, is to let us have done with all these laws which give any one class a superiority over another—which give a boon and protection to which they have no title in justice; for I maintain that no man or class is entitled to protection in the shape of monopoly, on any pretence whatever. (Applause.) It is not my intention to detain you longer from the business of the evening. I have merely made these remarks as leading to the practical development of the subject before us, and I conclude by inviting you to join me in drinking the toast of "Free Trade; in condemning all opposite principles of legislation; and in pressing for a speedy abolition of those monopolies which are a burden to the country and a bane to the people."—The toast was received with great enthusiasm. Tune—"Weel may the boatie row."

The Lord Provost, after some preliminary remarks on the origin and progress of the League, requested all to join him in "The health of the Gentlemen composing the Deputation from the League." (Loud cheering.) [At the conclusion of the Lord Provost's speech, his lordship, amid loud cheers, exhibited a specimen of Glasgow manufacture—a handkerchief—which had been presented to him for the occasion, having designed upon it excellent likenesses of two of the distinguished guests of the evening, Messrs. Cobden and Bright. The handkerchief, we understand, was designed by Messrs. Doherty, Steven, and Fulton, Duke-street.]

Mr. COBDEN, on rising to acknowledge the toast, was received with every demonstration of the most enthusiastic welcome—the cheering continued loud and long, and the hon. gentleman, at the outset of his speech, was more than once interrupted by a repetition of the plaudits. The hon. member then delivered a speech of great power, in which he reviewed the present progress of the League; noticed, in a happy strain of humour, the species of opposition to which it was now subjected, and the support it was receiving from eminent landowners; and concluded with an eloquent eulogium on the beneficial principle of Free Trade. Before sitting down, Mr. Cobden gave—"The Agricultural Interests of the Country, and may all classes connected with it become satisfied that they cannot prosper while Commerce and Manufactures decay." (Drunk with loud cheering.)

Mr. ALEXANDER GRAHAM proposed "The Ministers of Religion who have identified themselves with the cause of Free Trade." A few years ago, said Mr. Graham, in the course of an excellent speech, two clerical convocations were held on this special subject. The first was at Manchester, and consisted of 650 Dissenting ministers of all denominations. Besides, nearly 900 other absent ministers also addressed letters to the assembly, expressive of their approbation of its object. (Hear.) The other convocation, held at Edinburgh, consisted of 200 ministers. Each assembly closed its sittings with a solemn address to the public, condemning all monopolies as alike offensive to God and injurious to man. United, they form a sacred cloud of witnesses to the justice of our cause. (Cheers.) I would not maliciously keep alive from oblivion the memory of that act of the General Assembly, by which they petitioned Parliament against a repeal of the Corn Laws, as threatening to depreciate the value of their grain revenues; but the fact is worthy of record, as an illustration of this—one most repulsive aspect—of a bad system, under which the ministers of religion have become vested with an interest antagonical to that of the people, and are exhibited before the world as collateral sharers in the spoils of an unjust monopoly—one even tempting them, in the secrecy of their hearts, to contradict and recall the weekly public prayer of their lips for plenty in the land both to man and beast. (Hear, hear.) To fancy that all ministers are bound by their spiritual office from giving their sanction to such a movement as the present, seems little better than a revival of the ascetic or monkish spirit of a darker age. As religious instructors, they have not ceased to be members of civil society, in all the varied interests of which, for weal or for woe, they and their families continue to be as deeply involved as ever. (Hear.) If selfishness, avarice, and unfaithfulness demand their condemnation, we ask from them a verdict of guilty against the Corn Laws, on each of these charges. They were selfish and avaricious in their origin. They are a violation of duty in those representatives of the people, who, in breach of the trust reposed in them, in that character enacted laws to swell their own rent-rolls, at the expense of those very constituents whom they had sworn to guard from all injustice. (Hear.) If the abstraction of the wages of the hireling, and the avaricious enhancement of his bread, have been denounced in Scripture, we ask them to recognise and condemn, in the present system, living examples of the same offences. Above all, if low physical condition is now obstructing the religious and moral cultivation of the popular mind, we ask those Christian ministers who still contemplate from a distance the present struggle, to co-operate in removing a barrier so formidable to the success of their own sacred labours. (Cheering.)

The Rev. Dr. HUTTON rose amidst loud cheering to propose the next sentiment—"The progress of knowledge, a necessary guarantee for the extension and permanence of Free Institutions." (Immense cheering.) In reference to the question of Free Trade, and the justly-hated Corn Monopoly, I may say generally that I do not know any aspect in which that cause is to be viewed in which any well-informed man, no matter what class of society he belongs to, need hesitate to avow himself an honest and uncompromising friend. (Cheers.) I know that the question is entirely political—that is, that it falls within the province of legislation; but, notwithstanding that, where is the man in the nation who has not a deep personal interest in it? and where is the man who should not feel the obligation which rests upon the entire body politic to rectify public legislation, if that legislation be faulty? (Loud cheering.) I never was a political man in the ordinary sense of that term, and never will be; but for myself, I wish that such a political information should be abroad, that should qualify the people to have sound and rational views upon the national interests, and for exercising some influence upon the legislation of the country through the electoral franchise, by the free expression of their conscientious convictions, as well as by the sending up (on all convenient and necessary occasions) of respectable, but firmly-worded remonstrances and petitions. But it appears, my Lord Provost, from the eloquent remarks of your distinguished friend on the right, that this question comes under the character of the rational rights of individuals, and rational liberty; that is, the liberty which every man ought to have, to purchase in the cheapest market what he wants, and to sell in the most advantageous that which he has to dispose of, and as Britons who have liberty for their birthright, to transmit that liberty in its entirety to unborn generations. We must struggle for this department of liberty until we have finally obtained it. (Cheers.) But the question is not only political, it is ethical—it appeals to our sympathies and duties as men, as well as our duties as citizens; and it is religious also. I cannot suppose a man can be fully alive to the just and good law of God—which inculcates his loving his neighbour as himself, and doing all the good he can—and knowing that duty, who can consistently sanction a law which taxes the bread of the poor in order to add to the luxuries of the wealthy. ("Hear, hear," and cheering.) If such be the case, I think no matter to what class of society we belong, we should endeavour to give all the force and efficacy we properly can to this great movement. The rev. speaker then proceeded to remark how much depended, in all great questions, on individual effort, and eulogised the untiring efforts of Mr. Cobden. After some further observations of a general character, the rev. gentleman gave the toast amidst loud and repeated cheering.

Mr. BRIGHT, M.P., rose amidst prolonged cheering, and spoke to the sentiment:—"The total and immediate Repeal of the Corn Laws." He concluded an eloquent speech with the following peroration:—"England is speaking out in significant language; £100,000 is not a small sum to be given by a people that is not particularly prosperous. (Cheers.) They are in earnest, or they would not subscribe so; and you are in earnest or you would not subscribe the £5000 I understand you are about to remit to the League. (Cheers.) The time for tampering with this question has gone by; the time for hoodwinking the people is passed; and nothing now will suffice but a total and immediate repeal of this law. (Tremendous cheering.) There must be no fixed duty to mar the victory truth is about to achieve—no farther changes and delays only to continue the miseries our countrymen are enduring. (Great cheers.) I have heard of a two-legged animal that has feathers, which, if placed on a floor with a chalk mark in a circle round him, fancies that he cannot get beyond it; and though there is plenty of food on the outer side of the circle, his impression is so strong that he cannot reach it, that he will perish with hunger. (Laughter.) We are much in this position. There is a chalk line round about us; and there is food enough, and liberty enough to take the food beyond it; but, some way or other, we have got ourselves impressed, that we cannot get over this local difficulty. But time presses, and we must go over it. (Cheers.) No more prejudices, no veneration for aristocracy, if such a thing ought to exist at all, should prevent us. (Cheers.) Think not that the present cessation of distress will be permanent. Has Providence granted you the blessings of bountiful harvests for ever? Does not the same divine wisdom rule now that ruled in 1839; and may not the same evils await us in 1845 and 1846, and then come a scarcity, followed by all the distresses which fell upon us a few years ago? I ask, may not these calamities become so dense and unbearable that it may be that men may break the bonds they can no longer bear? (Great cheering.) I may say that the deliverance of the industry of this people is at hand. I speak not without authority. We have attended hundreds of meetings. No men in this country have seen the faces of so many of their countrymen as we have. (Cheers.) We have shaken by the hand, from our heart of hearts, hundreds of thousands of the intelligent population of this country; and we have authority for saying, that it is the opinion of the middle classes of this country, who are the intelligent, and the powerful, and the electoral classes, that this law is bad, that it originated in injustice, and has been maintained by an unjust exercise of power. (Cheers.) And we ask you, the people of this city, whether you are willing to come with us to the breach—to bear all, suffer all, and work all that is necessary for the carrying out of our principle, the fundamental principle of the Anti-Corn-Law League? (Great cheering.) I know you well—I have not read the history of your country for nothing; and I need not point out to you passages in that history which prove beyond dispute that there is in the people of Scotland a love of liberty that can never die. (Cheers.) Your country has been the cradle of liberty, the home of freedom for centuries back. (Cheers.) You have not been oppressed and trampled on by England, as some other parts of the world have been. (Cheers.) And now I trust that what you have done for freedom—what you have done for civil and religious freedom—you are now ready to do for your commercial liberties. (Great cheering.) I ask you to resolve with me that—

"By oppression's woes and pains—
By our sons in servile chains,
We will work while strength remains,
But we shall be free." (Cheers.)

Mr. Bright then gave "The total and immediate repeal of the Corn Laws," which was drunk amid enthusiastic cheering.

Mr. BRIGHT again rose, and intimated that cards would be found in the hall on which friends of the cause who might be inclined to subscribe to the League might attach their names and addresses.

Colonel THOMPSON, who was received with loud cheers, spoke in his usual style of happy illustration to the following sentiment:—"An adjustment of taxation to give relief to the industry of the country and the masses of its population."

Mr. OSWALD, M.P., rose amidst loud cheers, and said:—"My Lord Provost, ladies and gentlemen, a toast has been put into my hands, and, gentlemen, were I to attempt to make a speech previous to giving it, I am quite sure that anything I might say, when compared with what has been already said, would be so exceedingly beneath what the learned gentlemen who have preceded me have spoken, that I believe it will be wisest on my part not to make a speech at all. Gentlemen, I believe all that I have to do is to congratulate you on the progress the cause is making, and to observe that, I believe in a much shorter time than the Hon. Mr. Stanley anticipates, the Corn Law will be put an end to. (Cheers.) But to the toast that has been put into my hands: allusion has been made to "The noble lords of the Upper House of Parliament who support the principles of Free Trade." Now, I believe I may safely state, that the last people in the country to be convinced of the propriety of repealing the Corn Law are the members of that house (hear, hear); and I believe I may also say, taking the landlords as a body, that they have not only set themselves against considering this question, but have absolutely shut their ears against hearing any information on this subject. But I believe also, as one of the gentlemen who has already spoken remarked, there is not a class in Great Britain who are so grossly and lamentably ignorant on the question. (Great laughter.) They will not listen to anything against their own preconceived opinions. But there is one circumstance which is evidence of their fear of the result, and of the sure foundation of our hopes of repeal. The monopolists are beginning to be outrageously angry when the question is mooted at all. (Laughter and cheers.) They are beginning to believe that the end of their monopoly draws nigh—and, gentlemen, I will venture to predict what will happen before repeal is gained. As on the passing of the Reform Bill; King William IV. induced the greater portion of the Upper House to retire, such will be the case when the Corn Law is repealed. (Loud cheers.) They will have no arguments—they will not attempt to argue—they will, in a sulky and angry mood, tell the others that they are wishing to revolutionize the country—the bill will be passed, and the country will be in greater tranquillity than it has been. (Cheers.) Now, although I told you that the great body of the House of Peers are opposed to this movement, there are such names as Westminister, Percy, Ducie, and Lord Kinnaird (cheers), who approve and support it. We see, at least, that some of the ablest and best-informed, and some who have the largest possessions in the kingdom, are along with us. I therefore have much pleasure in drinking the healths of those Members in the Upper House who support the principles of Free Trade. (Loud cheers.) The toast was given with all the honours.

Councillor Cross next addressed the meeting, and in a neat and appropriate speech proposed the toast: "The Abolition of the Sugar and all other Colonial Monopoly," which was received with enthusiastic applause.

The Rev. Dr. WILLIS proposed:—

"The speedy repeal of all those laws which enhance the price of food, and are productive of poverty, immorality, and crime."

Of nothing, said the reverend speaker in the course of his speech, am I more satisfied, than that the depressed physical condition of the masses interposes a great obstacle in the way of their moral amelioration. [Here Dr. Willis read, in support of this view, a short extract from Mr. Chadwick's report on the state of the labouring population. The general bearing of the extract was, that generally a deteriorated physical condition has been found, by the teachers of pauper children, to render the intellects of the scholars more torpid. It is also found, in the experience of the metropolitan police, that the majority of juvenile delinquents are deficient in bodily strength—"though the impression is very prevalent that the criminal population consists of persons of the greatest physical vigour. Instances (says Mr. Chadwick) of criminals of great strength certainly do occur; but, speaking from observation of the adult prisoners from the towns, and the convicts in the hulks, they are in general below the average standard of height." It seems plausible to say, educate men, multiply schools and churches, and never fear for their external comfort. I demur to this. I believe that godliness is profitable for all things, that it brings present and future blessing; but schools and churches are not capable of working miracles in feeding and clothing men, nor, however they may elevate and cultivate men's minds, can they provide labour for their hands, or ensure a market for their labour. (Hear.) Religion, Sir, is a friend to prudence; and, so far from superseding wise and equitable legislation, requires it. Schools and churches!—these are no doubt invaluable, but if our educational and moral appliances are to be worked with any good effect, the masses, who are to be wrought upon, must be elevated further than at present above extreme need and wretchedness. (Loud cheering.) I utterly deny the principle, which so much pervades certain schemes of religious and political economy, that because religion brings comfort in its train, we are to trust the outward health and preservation of society to moral means. (Hear, hear.) The Christian revelation supposes a law of nature existing, which it recognises. It does not create the rights of men in respect of each other, or the essential relations of civil society: it acknowledges these, hallows and consecrates them, and directs how to use them well. But religion is perverted, and placed at an unfair disadvantage, when it is made the pretext, by uncalculated compliments to the admitted value of moral appliances, for opposing any of the original rights of rational beings, or undervaluing the provisions of a humane and equitable civil policy. (Cheers.) Sir, I feel it a privilege, as a minister of religion, to have an opportunity, on such an occasion as the present, were it only to declare on behalf of religion, that it is misrepresented and wronged when it is made an occasion of treating, with comparative indifference, any direct method of improving the physical state of the labouring classes. (Cheers.)

Mr. CONDEN said it devolved on him to propose a toast in which he was sure he would have the most zealous and cordial co-operation. In proposing the health of the chairman, he remarked that it had given him great pleasure while in the South to observe the remarkable promptitude which the chief magistrates of this city and the metropolis of Scotland had exhibited, in taking a prominent part in, and presiding over Free-Trade meetings. (Cheers.) The toast was drunk with loud cheering.

The LORD PROVOST briefly thanked the meeting for the honour they had conferred upon him, and after passing a high eulogium upon "The Free Trade members of the House of Commons, who have honoured us with their presence," proposed the toast, coupling with it the name of Mr. HASTIE, M.P. for Paisley.

Mr. HASTIE, M.P., said he had hoped that he would have been allowed to remain a silent listener on the present occasion. To be a listener to what he had heard was a treat of no ordinary kind. No House of Commons debate had ever put the question so ably or so clearly, or so plainly to the understanding of every man in the British empire, as the speeches of that evening had done. He would not detain them with any remarks of his own, seeing he had not the happy gift of eloquence which belonged to some of his friends; but he begged to propose a toast that he was sure would come home to the hearts of every gentleman present. He then proposed "The Ladies." (Great cheering.)

The LORD PROVOST said, seeing no other person had come forward to return thanks for the ladies, he begged to take that honour upon himself (cheers), and expressed a hope that on every future occasion of a similar nature they would find the gallery equally graced with the presence of the fair sex, as it had been that night. (Cheers.)

Colonel THOMPSON gave the health of "The Chairman, Vice-Chairman, and other office-bearers of the Glasgow Anti-Corn-Law Association." After the enthusiastic meeting which their efforts had been the means of bringing together, they could feel no doubt that it would be closed by a specimen of liberality which he and his friends would be proud to convey to their countrymen in the south. (Cheers.)

Mr. W. BUCHANAN returned thanks in a few sentences.

Mr. BRIGHT expressed his regret, that, owing to the arrangements and the late hour, they had not been able to carry out the subscription in the hall in the way intended, and as they were accustomed to do in England. Several tickets had been handed up with subscriptions, and the Lord Provost informed him, that there was one gratifying subscription from a Lesmahagow farmer—(cheers)—but at that late hour of the evening, it would be injudicious to read the amounts. Arrangements had been made, however, for waiting upon the citizens of Glasgow in their respective districts; and he hoped that they would then show, in an efficient manner, their attachment to the cause which all had at heart. (Cheers.)

The LORD PROVOST then proposed three cheers for the Anti-Corn-Law League, which were heartily given, and the large meeting separated a little before eleven o'clock, in the most decorous and orderly manner.

GREAT ANTI-CORN-LAW TEA-PARTY IN CARLISLE.

(Abridged from the Carlisle Journal.)

On Monday evening, the 8th instant, a tea-party was held in the large and splendid room of the Athenæum, Lowther-street, for the purpose of receiving a deputation from the Council of the Anti-Corn-Law League, and originating a subscription in aid of the great League Fund of £100,000.

The meeting took place at six o'clock, when about 300 persons sat down to tea, which had been provided by Mrs. W. Fisher, in great abundance and of excellent quality. Amongst the company were the principal manufacturers and tradesmen of the city, and a number of ladies. The chair was taken by Joseph Ferguson, Esq., of Fisher-street. About seven o'clock, John Bright, Esq., M.P., entered the room, and was received with great applause. Other members of the League had been expected; but being engaged elsewhere, were unable to visit Carlisle. A great number of persons entered the room after tea; and, in all, about 500 persons were present.

The CHAIRMAN said, he felt exceedingly glad to see so numerous an attendance; it argued that they felt a due interest in that great cause which they had met that night to support. This question had been long before the public, and Carlisle was among the first towns to raise its voice in denunciation of the Corn Laws. (Hear, hear.) Several public meetings were held, and they were always strongly impressed with a sense of their impolicy and injustice—of their impolicy, because they narrowed the field of commerce, paralysed the industry of the people, and sapped the foundations on which alone could be reared the prosperity and happiness of the country; of their injustice, because they made employment scarce for the working man, preventing him from selling his labour to the best advantage, and because they interrupted the bounty of Providence, by raising the price of bread to such an extent as to produce a scarcity which the Almighty had never intended. (Applause.) These were their impressions many years ago, and time had but served to strengthen them. (Cheers.) It might have been expected that a great cause like this would have to encounter opposition, and opposition it had experienced in abundance. There was a formidable array of power and influence against it, but thanks to public discussion, by which truth was elicited—thanks to the exertions, and to the zeal, time, and talents which his friend on the right (Mr. Bright,) and others like him had bestowed; but, above all, thanks to the goodness of the cause itself, notwithstanding every opposition—it had made great progress, and now possessed a powerful influence on the public mind, and which, he trusted, was soon destined to achieve a triumphant consummation. (Cheers.) He would now proceed to the business of the evening, by introducing a gentleman, who, though personally unknown to them, was known by every individual to be one of the most able and powerful champions of the Anti-Corn-Law League—one who had devoted his great talents, and employed his time, in furtherance of this great cause:—there was no one to whom they owed more gratitude for what he had done—he therefore begged to introduce Mr. Bright. (Loud cheering.)

Mr. BRIGHT on coming forward was received with warm plaudits. The honourable member then spoke at great length and with his customary vigour and eloquence, and concluded amidst reiterated cheering. Our limits compel us to omit the report of the honourable member's speech.

The CHAIRMAN then called upon

PETER DIXON, Esq., of Holme Eden, to move the first resolution. He was received with applause. He said:—Ladies and Gentlemen, I have come reluctantly before you. I dislike public speaking; and I had hoped when I came into the room that one more qualified to do justice to this resolution would have been present—one deeply connected with the agricultural interest; and why he is not here I cannot tell. Such being the case, however unqualified, I determined not to shrink from the duty, a duty which I conceive of the greatest importance. I believe that if we can render one good service more than another, it is to aid in that great work for which we are assembled to-day. (Cheers.) I will read the resolution to you.—

"That this meeting expresses its unabated confidence in the League, and pledges itself to aid it in its exertions for the abolition of the Corn Laws."

Now, ladies and gentlemen, appearing after this excellent and eloquent man, and after the appropriate remarks of our worthy chairman, anything I can say must appear but feeble; but I have known this Corn Law for nearly 30 years; at least since its first enactment in 1815, when the worst of the Corn Law Bills was passed. (Hear, hear.) That, I recollect well, was opposed to public opinion at the time, and the persons who brought it forward had their houses besieged. But, notwithstanding the feeling against it, the unreformed Parliament carried it; and what was the consequence? Facts are stubborn things. I was then in business with my brothers, as at present; and from the United States of America we had orders for thousands of pieces on our books; at that time we had free intercourse with America. (Hear, hear.) What is the case now? In looking over our order-book to-day, I find that we have not a single order from the United States. (Hear, hear.) That is really a striking fact. At that time we were paying the weavers, and were happy to do so, three times their present amount of wages. (Cheers.) Ever since this Corn Law was passed, trade has been going backward, and masters have been most uncomfortable. If there be anything more unpleasant than another, I declare it honestly, it is that of reducing wages. (Hear, hear.) Nothing but extreme compulsion would really induce us to do it. Well, that is the case in regard to America; and now with regard to Europe. Why, our orders for Europe were very extensive before the Corn Law was passed, but now they are crippled to an extraordinary extent. We have orders for Europe certainly, but nothing to what we ought to have. I attribute this to the Corn Law. How is it that we cannot sell our manufactured goods, but that the very labour we should give our people has to be sent away from them? The cotton is spun in this country, and sent to other countries to be woven. Warps and weft go out ready to put on the loom of the foreign weaver; and the consequence is, that our weavers are not well off. (Hear, hear.) If these Corn Laws were repealed there would be such a stimulus to industry as nobody can calculate. (Hear, hear.) I was disappointed beyond measure by the Reform Bill, about which there was such a stir made in this country. We got a reformed Parliament, and what did they do? Instead of attending to the interests of the poor man, most of them seemed only anxious to feather their own nests. (Hear, hear.) What did Earl Grey do, but get his cousins places. ("Hear," and laughter.) To him, certainly, we are indebted for the Reform Bill, but it was not worked out rightly, and I must say I was exceedingly disappointed at the result of that measure. (Hear.) The Parliament had not the courage to deal with the grievances of the people, but went on cobbling one thing after another, and now the Anti-Corn-Law League has come forward, and for the manner in which they have acted the country owes them an eternal obligation. They have come forward clear of all party tincture. I believe that party has been the ruin of this country, but these men have taken a line of conduct which is honourable to themselves and advantageous to the people, and we have this day heard their determination to steer clear of all party and private objects. Good sense and truth must prevail, they must have away. (Cheers.) I do feel grateful to these men for the very magnanimous part which they have taken, in sacrificing their time and comfort for the advancement of the cause. Mr. Bright has scarcely been at home these twelve months. None of us would do this, and therefore we cannot sufficiently estimate their services; we may give our money, but it is nothing compared to their personal exertions. I feel warmly upon this subject. We cannot aid the League without money, and I hope, after the bright example set to us in almost every town in the kingdom, that we will not be found wanting. (Hear, hear.) If we do that, we lend a helping hand to give peace to our country, and every blessing that attends it. (Cheers.) I believe that Providence has ordered it in this way—that these men have been specially raised up for the purpose of saving their country from absolute ruin,—I have therefore much pleasure in moving the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. J. D. CARR seconded the resolution, which was put, and carried unanimously, amidst great applause.

Mr. JAMES STEEL was called upon to move the next resolution:—

"That this meeting pledges itself to assist by every means in its power, in the collection of the fund of £100,000, required by the Council of the League for the prosecution of its objects; and that a subscription be now entered into for that purpose."

There was nothing like striking when the iron was hot; and after the speech of Mr. Bright, he (Mr. Steel) thought the iron was hot enough, and they might expect some good work from it. (Laughter and applause.)

Mr. T. T. RAILTON seconded the resolution. He said the time of the meeting had already been occupied by the able speech of Mr. Bright. The sinews of war were the money; and one great object the League had in view in raising this money should be borne in mind, it was an excellent and important object, and one without which they could not succeed, namely, the putting down of bribery. (Hear, hear.) He trusted they would succeed in that determination, and that in every case in which bribery might be found, they would expend a portion of their money in prosecuting parties who might be guilty of it. He most heartily seconded the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN, in putting the resolution, trusted they would second it in a more effectual manner than by showing their hands. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) He trusted they would show how much they were attached to the great objects they had in view, and how much Mr. Bright had impressed them with the necessity. "For my part," said the Chairman, "before I came I had written on a piece of paper the amount I intended to give; but at Mr. Bright's suggestion, I will add a figure to it, or at least alter one. (Cheers.) Let us show that we consider it an honour to assist in the great work, and follow the example of other towns, which have doubled their subscriptions of last year. (Cheers.) Carlisle never was deficient in liberality and public spirit, and I am sure it will prove on this occasion that it means to maintain its character. (Cheers.)"

The resolution was then put, and carried unanimously.

Mr. BRIGHT said some sums were already put down, but he did not like to read them, as some of them would be increased. (Laughter.) Their worthy friend, Moore, generally took that part of the business at subscription meetings, but he (Mr. Bright) could make no pretensions to imitate his exertions. If it should happen that the subscription at Carlisle was less than the most sanguine expected, the blame would be laid at his door. (Laughter.) He then proceeded to read over some of the heavier subscriptions (which will be found in our list below), and which were hailed by loud cheering.

Continued on page 267.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE £100,000 FUND.

Subscriptions received during the week ending
Wednesday, January 17, 1844.

N.B. As the subscription list is made up from Wednesday to Wednesday, contributions received on Thursdays and Fridays are not published in the LEAGUE of the Saturday immediately succeeding, but are included in the list of the week following.

| | | | | | |
|---|----------|---|--------|---|---------|
| James Heywood, banker, Manchester | £100 0 0 | John Longland, do. | 20 2 6 | George Knott, shoe manufacturer, Bow-street, Little Bolton, Lancashire | £1 0 0 |
| Ralph Andrews, at Hyde, Moss, and Sowerby's Mill, Dukinfield, near Manchester | 1 0 0 | John Small, do. | 0 1 0 | John Rilly, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Jonathan Cox, do. | 1 0 0 | A Free Trader, do. | 0 1 0 | James Andrews, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thos. Arrowsmith, do. | 1 0 0 | Henry Holland, do. | 0 1 0 | John Jeffery, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Robert Holt, do. | 0 1 0 | Thomas Lenden, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Small Subscriptions from St. Austell | 0 4 4 | Smaller Sums, do. | 0 7 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | James Hood, Halliwell, Little Bolton, Lancashire | 2 2 0 | John Morton, Witfield Example Farm | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Jas. Mather, Church Inn, Whitfield, near Manchester | 2 0 0 | Thomas Bennet, Milbury House | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Thomas Chaplin, 160, Oldham-road | 0 5 0 | James Watts, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Thomas Whitehead, 204, do. | 0 5 0 | P. Shirreff, Buckover, near | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Samuel Crook, 107, do. | 0 2 6 | Joseph Laver, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | James Moore, 138, St. George's-road, Eccles, near | 1 0 0 | William Dove, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | George Wroe, do. | 1 0 0 | James Elliot, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Samuel Wilkinson, do. | 1 0 0 | John Frank, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Richard Herfort, do. | 1 0 0 | Daniel Falser, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Dr. Welsh, do. | 1 0 0 | A Friend, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Wilson Dickenson, do. | 1 0 0 | C. H. Shirreff, Buckover, near | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | W. H. Smith, do. | 1 0 0 | From a few Friends at Battle | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Thomas B. Booth, do. | 1 0 0 | T. P. Pocock, Upton Level, Heytesbury | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | John Caterall, do. | 0 10 0 | Arthur Morgan, New Bridge-street | 5 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | William Worth, do. | 0 10 0 | Edward Sheldon, ironfounder, Coastly, near Bilston, per James Raby | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Stanley Pollitt, do. | 0 10 0 | Samuel Roscow, Edmonston | 2 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | John Chardle, do. | 0 10 0 | S. Renter, Finsbury Chambers, London Wall | 1 1 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | James Langhaw, do. | 0 10 0 | John Gibbs, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | William Kliner, do. | 0 5 0 | J. Rolfe Gibbs, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | James Sherlock, do. | 0 5 0 | Robert Gibbs, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | William Plant, do. | 0 10 0 | A Friend, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | William Worthington, do. | 0 5 0 | A Friend, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Thomas Wilson, do. | 0 5 0 | R. Reid, do. | 0 10 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | John Harrison, do. | 1 1 0 | J. R. P. Payne, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Jonathan Leigh, Patricroft, do. | 1 1 0 | R. Dickens, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Thomas Mort, do. | 1 0 0 | C. Wheeler, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | H. H., a Friend, do. | 1 0 0 | E. Margesson, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Thos. Burton, 10, Victoria Bridge-st., Salford, Manch. | 0 5 0 | Members of the Mechanics' Institution | 0 10 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | William Worthington, 12, Marsden-street, do. | 5 0 0 | A Tenant Farmer, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | James Whiteley, Medlock-street, Hulme, do. | 2 2 0 | Cockings, 145, Long-acre, per W. Crookford | 1 1 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | James Boyle, 4, Victoria-street, do. | 1 0 0 | A Friend, South Lambeth | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Geo. Richmond, 14, Moreton-st., Strangeways, do. | 1 0 0 | Henry St. John Joyner, Chadwell-place, Essex | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | James Paton, 81, Thomas-street, do. | 0 5 0 | George Borrowman, Hawick, N.B. | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Jonathan Hague, Failsworth, near | 1 0 0 | W. Pugh, Hay, Breconshire | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Joseph Marsden, do. | 1 0 0 | Tannahill, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | William Crouch, do. | 1 0 0 | A. Cock and Son, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | James Dawson, do. | 0 5 0 | S. T. Williams, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | David Taylor, do. | 1 0 0 | Dr. Paddon, do. | 0 10 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Samuel Barlow, do. | 1 0 0 | A Friend to Repeat | 0 10 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | A Friend to Sir Robert Peel, per H. W., do. | 1 0 0 | Anonymous, Leeds | 0 0 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | A Friend, per Wm. Harvey | 5 0 0 | Samuel Buckley, smith and wheelwright, Old-street, Ashton-under-Line | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Pair-play, per Wm. Harvey | 7 0 0 | Samuel Trend, 66, James-street, Devonport | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | T. W. Dyson, 28, Oldham-street, Manchester | 1 1 0 | Robert Jinks, tanner, Stanion, Thrapstone, Northamptonshire | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | John Lee, 1, Mount-street, do. | 1 1 0 | Working Men's League Rent, per James Barnet, 60, Castle-street, Edgeley, near Stockport | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | A Corn-Law Repealer, by J. Leatherbrow, 74, Stratford New-road, Manchester | 1 0 0 | John Jubb, do. | 5 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Arnon Gough, 12, Red-bank, do. | 0 2 6 | Joseph Jubb, do. | 2 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Sam. Vernon, 6, Oxford-street, do. | 0 2 6 | C. R. Greenwood, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | John Ashurst, 16, Downing-street, do. | 0 5 0 | Thomas Blakeley, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | A Tory Friend, per A. Nodal, Downing-st., do. | 2 2 0 | Timothy Ellis, do. | 0 10 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Wm. Nell, Manor-st., Ardwick, do. | 1 1 0 | John Halden, 6, Bread-street, City | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Zachariah Richardson, Higher Ardwick | 0 2 6 | Joseph Travis Clay, do. | 100 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Wm. Taylor, do. | 0 2 6 | Woodhouse B. and J. Walker | 5 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Wm. Froggatt, 6, Hall-st., Oxford-street, do. | 2 0 0 | John Thornton | 1 10 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | James Dawson and workpeople, at M. and J. Briggall's, South-st., Peter-street, Manchester | 2 2 0 | Charles Sheffield | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | John Hewitt, Ardwick-green, do. | 1 1 0 | William Helm | 1 10 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | R. C. Hulley, M.D., St. John-street, do. | 1 0 0 | Robinson Maclean | 1 1 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | R. Wolstencroft, 56, Booth-st., C.-on-M., do. | 1 0 0 | John Broughton | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Josh. Ogden, jun. Long-mill-gate | 1 0 0 | Thomas Dearnaly | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | A Lady, do. | 0 2 6 | John T. Armitage | 0 10 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | John Yates, Dean's-gate, do. | 0 2 6 | William Hodgson | 0 10 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Elizabeth Pool, do. | 0 2 6 | Benjamin Mellor | 1 1 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | John Adams, 268, do. | 1 0 0 | A Friend | 1 1 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | William Currie, 93, do. | 1 0 0 | William Park | 0 10 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Abm. Ward, 51, do. | 1 0 0 | James Eastwood | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | J. Irving, 39, do. | 1 0 0 | James Marshall | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Alexr. Waddell, Town Hall-bdgs., King-st., do. | 2 2 0 | William Morton | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | John Hugh, do. | 2 2 0 | John Walker | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Wm. Robt, Cleveland-bdgs., Market-st., do. | 3 3 0 | Thomas Aspinall | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Sam. Holt, Chapel-place, Upper Brook-st., C.-on-M. | 0 5 0 | Joah Shaw | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Small sums, Manchester | 0 7 0 | J. H. Rivett | 0 10 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Rev. Alex. Jack, High-street, Dunbar, N.B., do. | 1 0 0 | John Schofield | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Jas. Black, do. | 0 5 0 | Jonas Wilkinson | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | William Whitehead, do. | 0 2 6 | Samuel Walker | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | John Purves, do. | 0 2 6 | David Robinson | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Alexander Barclay, do. | 0 2 6 | Charles Keeler | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Mrs. Robert Brown, do. | 0 2 6 | John Taylor | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Alexander Cunningham, do. | 0 2 6 | John Schofield | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Archibald Dickson, do. | 0 3 0 | Joseph Riley | 0 1 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | James Dods, Silver-street, do. | 0 2 6 | George Pawson | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | George Bayne, High-street, do. | 1 0 0 | James Bartin | 0 1 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | John Brown, brewer, do. | 1 0 0 | Jonathan Hinchliff | 0 1 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Alexander Wood, do. | 0 2 6 | A Friend | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | R. S. Morton, High-street, do. | 1 0 0 | George Bower | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Robert Murray, do. | 0 2 6 | Joshua Cuttill | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | James Morton, Cottages, do. | 0 2 6 | Benjamin Thewlis | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | William Gillespie, High-street, do. | 0 2 6 | Joshua Dewa | 0 1 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | William Robertson, do. | 0 5 0 | Samuel Dodgson | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | John Weddell, do. | 1 0 0 | George Clay | 0 1 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Simeon Savers, Silver-street, do. | 1 0 0 | Matthew Mellor | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Miss Margaret Kelly, Dunlop Cottage, do. | 1 0 0 | John Eastwood | 0 1 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | James Wilson, Belhaven, do. | 6 10 0 | Balance of an old subscription | 2 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Miss Haig, do. | 1 0 0 | William Bird, Abington-street | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | William Kirkwood, do. | 0 10 0 | J. Stimpson, Springfield | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | D. Dunlop, do. | 0 10 0 | G. Moore, St. James's-street | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | George Comb, do. | 0 10 0 | J. Edens, St. Mary-street | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | John Rennie, Orwall Mains, do. | 0 2 6 | R. Robinson, Wellington-place | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | A Friend to the Cause, Belhaven, do. | 1 0 0 | E. Cotton, Newland | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Small sums, do. | 0 17 6 | W. D. Borton, Horse-market | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | John Taylor, Preston Brook, Lancashire | 1 0 0 | G. Hester, Bridge-street | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Robert Lees, Hogshead Colliery, near Rochdale | 5 0 0 | E. Cooke, Albion-place | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | John Smith, Langley, near Macclesfield | 2 10 0 | J. Jee, Abington-street | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | A Friend to Free Trade | 2 10 0 | W. Hollis, Western-terrace | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Samuel Bartlett, Week-street, Maidstone | 1 0 0 | S. Mason, Commercial-street | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | W. P. Shirley, farmer, Basted, Wrotham, Kent | 1 0 0 | Thomas Grundy, Victoria-place | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | A Friend, Maidstone | 1 0 0 | W. Rice, Royal-terrace | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Small sum, do. | 0 1 0 | Joseph Watson | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Alfred Andrew, Droydsden, near Manchester | 2 2 0 | Henry Welland | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Thomas Worsley, Ormskirk | 0 2 6 | George Cooper | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | A Merchant, Dundee | 5 0 0 | John Gooden | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Andrew Storrier, do. | 1 0 0 | J. F. Butler, Childerditch Hall, near Brentwood, Essex | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Hugh Samson, do. | 1 0 0 | J. A. Nicholson, 4, Stephen's-green, Dublin | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | George Stephen, do. | 1 0 0 | Joseph Garrett, Braintree, Essex | 2 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | A Free Trader, per J. Walker, do. | 0 5 0 | Shaw, Philadelphia | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | George Oxley, Bradford, Yorkshire | 0 5 0 | J. and G. Seward, 8, Hereford-place, Commercial-rd. | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | William Grove, Swan Inn, Tenbury, Worcester | 30 0 0 | A poor man at Colchester, whose name would crush him | 0 1 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Joseph Griffiths, Crow Inn, do. | 1 0 0 | John H. Hutchinson, 19, Little Pulteney-street, Golden-square | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Richard Wade, do. | 0 10 0 | Mrs. Winiford, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Edward Jones, do. | 0 5 0 | Henry Hutchinson, jun., do. | 0 10 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | R. R. Saver, do. | 0 5 0 | A Friend | 0 5 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | B. T., do. | 0 5 0 | R. J. | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | John Woollams, do. | 0 5 0 | James Jackson, 3, Kemp's-ct., Berwick-st. | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Small sum, do. | 0 2 6 | Geo. Brettell, 17, Sherard-st., Grosvenor-sq. | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | A Friend, per Joseph Schofield, Littleborough | 1 0 0 | Wm. Hunt, Wellington-mews, Queen-street, Golden square | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Robt. Brown, Camoen Coffee House, Ishington-green | 0 2 6 | A Friend | 0 1 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | John Gardner, Hertford | 1 0 0 | A Mother's Mite | 0 1 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | N. E. Toomer | 1 0 0 | A Friend | 0 1 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | George Muthing | 1 0 0 | James Howell | 0 1 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Joseph Young | 2 0 0 | John Quin | 0 1 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Mrs. Joseph Young | 1 0 0 | Edmund Ratford | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Henry Hall, Northampton | 1 0 0 | John Mills, Grove-street, Walworth-common | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | T. E. Rev. S. Wood, Lewes | 0 10 0 | James Matland, 44, Bridge House-place, Stone's-end, Borough | 0 2 6 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Polard, Sea View Cottage, Ventnor, Isle of Wight | 1 0 0 | R. J. Nettlefold, 54, High Holborn | 1 1 0 |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | William Alexander, Yarmouth | 1 0 0 | | |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | W. E. Hickson, 20, West Southfield | 5 0 0 | | |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Thomas Leavelly, Forest House, Dalston | 1 0 0 | | |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Mrs. Stroud, 13, Clarendon-place, Vassall-road, Kennington | 0 10 0 | | |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Charles Constable, Horley Mill, Crawley | 1 0 0 | | |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Robert Pattison, ironmonger, South Shields | 1 0 0 | | |
| John H. Field, do. | 1 0 0 | Thomas Dawson, Bank Cottage, Little Bolton, Lancashire | 1 0 0 | | |

| | | | | | |
|--|--------|---|--------|---|----------|
| Dr. Hamilton, Plymouth | £1 0 0 | John Wilkinson, Whitehaven | £1 0 0 | Roberts and Walton | £100 0 0 |
| Workmen to the employ of Messrs. Maudslay, Sons, | 3 8 0 | Pottery | 3 0 0 | Geo. Barnes and Brothers | 100 0 0 |
| and Field (1d. weekly subscriptions) | 1 0 0 | Charles Magee | 1 0 0 | Spencer and Moon | 100 0 0 |
| A Deadly Enemy to the Deadly Bread-tax .. | 0 2 6 | Daniel Douglas | 1 0 0 | James Marsland and Son | 60 0 0 |
| Dr. Irons | 0 2 6 | Richard Gordon | 1 0 0 | John and Geo. Hoigate | 60 0 0 |
| George Douglas | 0 3 0 | Rev. J. Harbottle | 2 0 0 | William Hopwood | 40 0 0 |
| David M'Kie | 0 3 0 | Thomas Whalley, Fort, Brothers, | 1 0 0 | Geo. Slater | 40 0 0 |
| James Bruce | 0 5 0 | and Co., Oakenshaw, near | 1 0 0 | John Sellers and Sons | 30 0 0 |
| Thomas Crawford | 0 2 6 | Blackburn | 1 0 0 | John and William Brennand | 25 0 0 |
| John Lees | 0 2 6 | Thomas Briggs | 1 0 0 | John and Lord Massey | 20 0 0 |
| John Ramsay | 0 2 6 | Whittaker Haworth, Britcliffe- | 1 0 0 | Altham Coal Company | 20 0 0 |
| Andrew Wylie | 0 2 6 | row | 1 0 0 | James Folds | 20 0 0 |
| Thomas Duncan, confectioner | 1 0 0 | Joseph Long, grocer | 1 0 0 | Smallpage and Bracewell | 20 0 0 |
| John Rutherford | 1 0 0 | James Entwistle | 1 0 0 | Henry Knowles, manufacturer | 20 0 0 |
| Mrs. Beton | 0 10 0 | Stokes and Nephews, Belvoir-street | 50 0 0 | Jas. Howorth, worsted spinner | 20 0 0 |
| A Friend, J. C. | 0 5 0 | Brewin and Whetstone, Northgate-street | 50 0 0 | Henry Holroyd, sizer | 10 10 0 |
| William Fairney | 0 2 6 | Joseph Fielding, Lancaster place | 30 0 0 | William Lomas, grocer | 10 0 0 |
| Andrew Sharp | 0 2 6 | Isaac Hodgson, Bank, St. Martin's | 20 0 0 | James Sutcliffe, manufacturer | 10 0 0 |
| Thomas Rattray | 0 2 6 | Whetstone and Gittins, Northgate street | 20 0 0 | Saml. Howard, Healey-wood | 10 0 0 |
| James Dewar | 0 2 6 | Burgess, Brothers, Belvoir-street | 20 0 0 | John S. Witham, Oak-mount | 10 0 0 |
| William Thomson | 0 2 6 | Paget and White, Loughborough | 20 0 0 | John Wilkinson and Sons, Lane-bridge | 10 0 0 |
| Alexander Young | 0 2 6 | T. and W. Archer, Market-place | 10 0 0 | William Pollard, cotton spinner | 5 0 0 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 | R. Carter and Son, Churchgate | 10 0 0 | Edward Pollard, Turf-moor | 5 0 0 |
| John Grey | 0 2 6 | J. and J. Harvey, Market-place | 10 0 0 | Hughes and Co. | 4 0 0 |
| James H. Main | 1 0 0 | J. W. Noble, M.D., Danett's Hall | 10 0 0 | John Vevers and Son | 2 2 0 |
| David Scott | 1 0 0 | R. and G. Toller, Cank-street | 10 0 0 | Ladies | 2 0 0 |
| Graham Speedy | 1 0 0 | Thomas Corah, Regent-street, Welford-road | 10 0 0 | James Hopwood, Westgate | 2 2 0 |
| James Robertson | 1 0 0 | Mr. Alderman Richards, London-road | 10 0 0 | Two Friends to the League | 2 2 0 |
| R. Pullens and Sons, warpers and darners | 0 10 0 | John Ellis and Son, Westbridge | 10 0 0 | Henry D. Fielding | 2 2 0 |
| Ditto, dyers | 0 10 0 | Rev. Geo. Legge, London-road | 5 0 0 | Mrs. Fielding and Son | 1 1 6 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 | Frisby and Chawner, Belvoir-street | 5 0 0 | Thos. Chaffer, timber merchant | 2 0 0 |
| John Anderson, Kinnoul-street | 0 2 6 | Thomas Biggs, Belgrave-gate | 5 0 0 | A Friend | 2 0 0 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 | Ann Wood and Sons, Friar-lane | 5 0 0 | John Sutcliffe, spirit merchant | 2 0 0 |
| Alexander Greig, Melville street | 0 10 0 | Wm. Bates, Friars'-causeway | 5 0 0 | Williamson and Harling, Lane-bridge | 2 2 0 |
| Mrs. Bramwell | 0 5 0 | Sargeant and Sons, Charles-street | 5 0 0 | Geo. Graham, Lane-bridge | 1 1 0 |
| Alexander Menzies | 0 3 0 | Robert Briggs, Crown and Anchor, Belgrave- | 3 0 0 | Rev. W. J. Shrewsbury, Rawtenstall, near | 1 0 0 |
| Charles Lun | 0 10 0 | gate | 2 2 0 | Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 | George Eaglesfield, New-walk | 2 0 0 | Thomas Booth, at Mr. Marsland's | 1 0 0 |
| St. John's Foundry workmen | 0 10 7 | — Latchmore, Gallowtree-gate | 5 0 0 | Mrs. S. Knowles | 1 0 0 |
| John Jamieson, D.D. | 0 10 6 | N. Westerman, Regent-street, Welford-road | 5 0 0 | Mrs. Watson, Healey-wood | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Scott | 0 5 0 | Swan and Paddy, Southgate-street | 5 0 0 | Anthony Cardwell, Kinsley-mill | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Bayley | 0 5 0 | Thomas Nunneley, High Cross-street | 5 0 0 | George Howorth, Hargreaves-street | 1 0 0 |
| William Forbes | 0 2 6 | A Friend | 5 0 0 | James Richmond, Yorkshire-street | 1 0 0 |
| George Fleming | 0 5 0 | Charles Billson, New-walk | 5 0 0 | Ralph Lomas, grocer | 1 0 0 |
| Erskine Gillespie | 0 2 6 | Fielding and How, West Bond-street | 5 0 0 | John M'Ghie, Canal Warehouse | 1 0 0 |
| Malcolm Campbell | 0 2 6 | Thomas Chapinan, Stockdale-terrace | 3 3 0 | John Dean, manufacturer | 1 0 0 |
| J. and W. Gowans | 0 5 0 | J. and H. Jarvis, hosiers | 2 0 0 | John Harker, tinner | 1 0 0 |
| Hugh Dow | 1 0 0 | Thorpe and Sons, Belvoir-street | 2 0 0 | John Taylor, Yorkshire-street | 1 1 0 |
| John Watson | 0 2 6 | Neal and Sturges, Swan's Mill | 2 0 0 | James Hird, Lane-bridge | 1 0 0 |
| Andrew Roy | 0 2 6 | Hiffe and Breward, Rutland-street | 2 0 0 | John Pickles, at Turnbridge-mill | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 | Leicester Mercury | 2 0 0 | John Halsted, Parker-street, Park | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend | 0 3 0 | Edward Newton, Church-gate | 2 0 0 | Wm. Horner, St. James's-street | 1 0 0 |
| Archd. Campbell, dyer | 0 3 0 | John Baines, London-road | 5 0 0 | John Kay, Turf-moor | 1 0 0 |
| Peter Campbell | 0 2 6 | Wm. Hall, Friday-street | 1 1 0 | Norton Fletcher, glazier | 1 0 0 |
| David Sime | 0 2 6 | Abraham Hodgson, West-bridge | 1 0 0 | Operatives at Bridge-street Mill | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Innie, High-street | 0 2 6 | Joseph Branstom, Humberstone-road | 1 1 0 | A Friend | 1 1 0 |
| James Barlass | 1 0 0 | Thomas Jackson, Granby-street | 1 1 0 | A Friend | 1 0 0 |
| James Henderson | 0 2 6 | John Cole, King-street | 1 1 0 | S. Smith, draper | 1 10 0 |
| Rev. Wm. Lindsay | 0 2 6 | Wm. Scott, Market-street | 1 0 0 | Edmund Robinson, Gas-street, Lane-bridge | 1 0 0 |
| James Croom | 0 2 6 | Wm. Rowlett, Canning-place | 1 0 0 | P. Phillips, druggist | 1 0 0 |
| Garvie and Deas | 1 3 0 | S. Grundy, 11, Humberstone-road | 1 0 0 | — Arrowsmith, tailor | 1 0 0 |
| A. Miller and Son | 1 0 0 | Joshua Shenton, London-road | 1 0 0 | William Sellers, Healey, near | 1 0 0 |
| John Dewar | 1 0 0 | R. W. Gillespie, High Cross-street | 1 0 0 | Wm. Muschamp, grocer, Lane-bridge | 1 0 0 |
| Robert Clark | 0 3 0 | James Hunter, Pocklington's-walk | 1 0 0 | Edmund Cunliffe, grocer, Lane-bridge | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Whittet | 0 5 0 | An American Free Trader | 1 0 0 | Wm. Wilson, grocer, Lane-bridge | 1 0 0 |
| John Cowans | 0 10 0 | A Friend | 1 0 0 | Henry Hale, grocer, Lane-bridge | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 | Rev. J. Goodby, 6, East-street | 1 0 0 | — Branstom, Canal Warehouse | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas H. Marshall | 0 8 0 | A Friend | 1 0 0 | Mrs. Williamson, South-parade | 1 0 0 |
| James Horne | 0 2 6 | A Real Friend | 0 10 0 | Henry Tunstall, Marsden, near | 20 0 0 |
| Wm. Murdoch | 0 2 6 | James Parkins, hatter, Bond-street | 1 0 0 | William Ecroyd, Lomebaye, near | 20 0 0 |
| John M'Kerechar | 0 2 6 | Miss Shenton, London-road | 1 0 0 | William Smith, Hill End, near | 15 0 0 |
| John Murray | 0 2 6 | Rev. H. H. Arnold, New Walk | 1 1 0 | R. T. Roe Walton, Marden Hall, near | 10 0 0 |
| David Greig | 1 1 0 | — Scampton, Belvoir-street | 1 0 0 | John Farrer Ecroyd, Lomebaye, near | 5 0 0 |
| J. and J. Readie | 1 0 0 | John Beales, Wellington-street | 1 0 0 | James Smallpage, carrier | 5 0 0 |
| W. and P. Arnott | 1 1 0 | John Carryer, New Walk | 1 0 0 | Tickle and Hargreaves | 5 0 0 |
| James Arkman | 1 1 0 | D. Wilford, Welford-road | 1 0 0 | John Halsted, jun. | 4 0 0 |
| A Friend | 1 1 0 | A Friend | 1 0 0 | Robert Smith, manufactur, Park | 3 0 0 |
| Simpson and Scott | 0 10 0 | S. Cartwright, Braunstone's-gate | 1 0 0 | John Frankland, ditto | 2 0 0 |
| Rev. J. Newlands | 0 5 0 | T. Wheeler, Belgrave-gate | 1 0 0 | William Roberts, North-parade | 1 0 0 |
| James Lawrence | 0 5 0 | William Mowbray, Navigation-street | 1 0 0 | James Smith, Hill, near | 1 10 0 |
| George Croll | 0 3 0 | T. Dalby, Belgrave-gate | 0 2 6 | George Lonsdale, Yarn-place | 1 0 0 |
| James M'Donald | 0 2 6 | T. Collin, do. | 0 10 0 | Baldwin and Crossley | 1 1 6 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 | Charles Lees, Market-place | 0 5 0 | Rev. B. Firth | 1 0 0 |
| William Peacock | 2 2 0 | Joseph Lawrence, Belgrave-gate | 3 0 0 | Ralph Landless, Marsden, near | 1 0 0 |
| John Peacock | 1 1 0 | — Rushin, Albion-hill | 1 1 0 | A Lady | 1 0 0 |
| James Readie | 0 10 6 | A Friend | 1 1 0 | Simon Harker, tinner | 1 0 0 |
| James White | 1 0 0 | James Dudgeon (Messrs. R. Harris and Sons') | 1 0 0 | Martin Brown, Keighley-green | 1 1 0 |
| Peter Carmichael | 1 0 0 | William Dove, 4, Marble-street | 1 0 0 | Henry Walton, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Anderson, Pomarium | 0 2 6 | Benjamin Russell, Horsefair-street | 1 0 0 | William Clarke, Eastgate | 10 0 0 |
| Food-tax Haters | 0 2 6 | James Hodges, Ashby-de-la-Zouch | 1 0 0 | William Wood, Crow Nest | 0 10 0 |
| John Carmichael | 0 5 0 | James Ward, Masons' Arms, York-street, | 1 0 0 | A Friend | 0 15 0 |
| Charles Robertson, Laigh Cawsey | 0 2 6 | Welford-rd | 1 0 0 | — Clegg | 0 10 0 |
| James Robertson, Hospital | 0 5 0 | John Mee, Asylum-street | 1 0 0 | Mrs. Brooks, Hall Inn | 0 10 0 |
| Workmen at Suncarty Bleachfield | 1 8 7 | M. Townshend, Watling-st., St. Margaret-st. | 1 0 0 | A Friend | 0 10 0 |
| Workers at Tulloch Bleachfield | 2 0 9 | Isaac Cockshaw, Welford-road | 1 0 0 | Hindle Rawcliffe | 0 10 0 |
| James M'Leish | 3 3 0 | Thomas Addison, Duke-street | 1 0 0 | William Smith, mason | 0 10 0 |
| G. L. Cornfute | 3 3 0 | William Wess, Marlborough-street, King-st. | 2 0 0 | Epsilon | 0 10 0 |
| H. Sandeman | 3 3 0 | C. N. Cartwright, Sarah-street, Friar's | 0 5 0 | — Lees, surgeon | 0 10 0 |
| J. Jamieson and Brothers | 3 3 0 | Towards the Conversion of Lord John Russell | 2 0 0 | Richard Sellers | 0 10 0 |
| John Pullen | 3 3 0 | Joseph Peag, Stockdale-terrace | 1 0 0 | John Williamson, Lane-bridge | 0 10 0 |
| Lawrence Pullen | 2 2 0 | George Evans, The Talbot | 1 1 0 | Miss Robinson | 0 10 0 |
| John Bower | 1 0 0 | A Lady | 1 1 0 | — Newton | 0 10 0 |
| Joseph Bower | 1 0 0 | James Crossley, High-street | 1 0 0 | F. Best and Friend | 0 7 6 |
| John Barlas, M.D. | 1 0 0 | M. Dowling, London-road | 1 0 0 | Three Servants | 0 7 6 |
| A Friend | 1 0 0 | J. Foxon, Gallowtree-gate | 1 0 0 | John Sutherland | 0 7 6 |
| James Moncrief | 1 0 0 | John Collier, Southgate-street | 1 0 0 | "As we are struggling for a Cheap Pie, let me | 0 5 0 |
| Wm. Halley | 1 1 0 | James Page, Wellington-street | 1 0 0 | have a Finger in" | 0 5 0 |
| M'Gregor and Chalmers | 1 0 0 | Frederick Grocock, Market-place | 1 0 0 | A Female Servant | 0 5 0 |
| George Imrie | 1 0 6 | Do. | 1 0 0 | Thomas Lister | 0 5 0 |
| William Wilson | 0 2 6 | George Daniell, High-street | 1 0 0 | A Rochdale Gent, for Parr's Pills for B. | 0 5 0 |
| William Miller | 0 2 6 | Clement Pretty, Market-place | 1 0 0 | Ferrand | 0 5 0 |
| William Clunie | 0 5 0 | William Elgood, London-road | 1 0 0 | A Friend | 0 5 0 |
| Alexander Sutherland | 0 2 6 | Thomas Porter, do. | 1 0 0 | J. C. Rawtenstall | 0 5 0 |
| Andrew Anderson | 0 2 6 | Valentine Harris, Regent-street, Welford-road | 1 0 0 | William Brown | 0 5 0 |
| Lawrence Rintoul | 0 5 0 | John Blakesley, Free-lane | 1 0 0 | No. 91 | 0 5 0 |
| James Christie | 0 2 6 | Laurence Staines, Russell-square | 1 0 0 | Charles Owen, currier | 0 5 0 |
| John Carron | 0 5 0 | T. W. Palmer, Market-street | 1 0 0 | Rev. Mr. Gill | 0 5 0 |
| David Glass | 0 2 6 | Mrs. Chapman, Stockdale-terrace | 1 0 0 | William Cowell, Westgate | 0 5 0 |
| Small Sums | 2 7 11 | John Holland, Humberstone-gate | 1 0 0 | Miss Forehan | 0 5 0 |
| Joseph Gilbertson, 90, Leeds-street | 1 0 0 | Samuel Noon, Watts-causeway | 1 0 0 | A Friend | 0 5 0 |
| George A. Mills, 85, London-road | 1 0 0 | Rev. T. Stevenson, Canning-place | 1 0 0 | Miss Karnshaw, Wheat Sheaf | 0 5 0 |
| I. A. Owen, 8, Mill-street | 0 2 6 | J. H. Clarke, Haymarket | 1 0 0 | John Rowell | 0 5 0 |
| Slack and Howden, 134, Park-lane | 1 0 0 | William Thurlby, Cheapside | 1 0 0 | James Best | 0 5 0 |
| Firth Woodhead, 69, Church-street | 10 0 0 | George Streetly, Gallowtree-gate | 1 0 0 | William Hudson | 0 5 0 |
| S. and T. Burley, 12, Fleet-street | 10 0 0 | Joseph Roberts, Market-place | 1 0 0 | An Enemy to the brewing Corn Laws | 0 3 0 |
| A Friend, per S. Bulley | 5 0 0 | Thomas Sharpe, Cheapside | 1 0 0 | A Lover of rational Efforts for Peace and | 0 3 0 |
| A. B., per S. Bulley | 5 0 0 | Thomas Rodgers, Regent-street, Welford-road | 1 0 0 | Plenty | 0 3 0 |
| Wm. Croxfield, jun., 11, Rake-lane, Edgehill | 1 0 0 | J. and W. M'Alpin, Gallowtree-gate | 1 0 0 | William Booth, Meadows | 0 2 6 |
| James Paterson, 1, Arcade, Newington | 1 0 0 | John Manning, High-street | 1 0 0 | William Harrison, from America | 0 2 6 |
| Joseph Harrison, 5, Manchester-street | 1 1 0 | Joseph Nunneley, Friar-lane | 1 0 0 | Steam-loom Weaver | 0 2 6 |
| Robert Ray, 25, Banett-street | 0 2 6 | James Dilkes, Loughby-lane | 1 0 0 | David Platt, Garrow-lane | 0 2 6 |
| Bartholomew Backhouse, ditto | 0 2 6 | William Stevenson, Market-place | 1 0 0 | James Rawlinson | 0 2 6 |
| Jabz Reynier, 6, Exchange-alley North | 1 1 0 | David Shaw, Cheapside | 1 0 0 | John Marsden | 0 2 6 |
| Knoch Harvey, Hamilton Hall, Wavertree, nr. | 1 1 0 | E. Clephan, Paget and Kirby's | 1 0 0 | Sandy Clink-scales | 0 2 6 |
| John Travis, 21, Upper Stanhope street | 1 1 0 | John Newman, Market-place | 1 0 0 | For a Muzzle for S. Ferrand | 0 2 6 |
| Richard Crossley, 40, South Castle-street | 1 1 0 | H. Kemp, do. | 1 0 0 | Looking-Glass, &c. | 0 2 6 |
| A Conservative Free Trader, and no mistake | 5 0 0 | James Shadlaw, East-gate | 0 10 0 | A Friend | 0 2 6 |
| William Pitt, in addition to 10s. before, 2, | 0 10 0 | William Haines, High-street | 0 5 0 | T. H. | 0 2 6 |
| Strand-street | 0 10 0 | G. Viccars, N.w.-walk | 1 0 0 | Lawrence Hargreaves | 0 2 6 |
| George Francis, 100, St. James's-street | 1 0 0 | Thomas Viccars, do. | 1 0 0 | Wm. Dyson, Marsden, near | 0 2 6 |
| Taylor, Brothers, 16 Temple-court | 10 0 0 | J. Brewin, Mount Sorrel | 1 0 0 | Emery Howorth, Marsden, near | 0 2 6 |
| William Robinson, 14, Everson-crescent | 1 0 0 | P. Colston, St. Martin's | 0 2 6 | Wm. Parsons, Park | 0 2 6 |
| Mrs. Wright, Canton Tavern, Temple-court | 1 1 0 | Charles Beale, Regent-street, Welford-road | 0 2 6 | Equal Representation | 0 2 6 |
| Joseph Sergeant, 4, Roe-street | 1 1 0 | William Booth, Albion-street | 0 5 0 | Betty Marsden, South Parade | 0 2 6 |
| J. Northcote Ryder, New-Cross Station, Surrey, | 1 0 0 | Robert Warner, Leicester Abbey | 0 5 0 | Saml. Greenwood, currier | 0 2 6 |
| Works of London and Croydon Railway | 1 0 0 | C. Fisher, Handsworth | 0 5 0 | Law B. own, Duke of York | 0 2 6 |
| George Armstrong, 1A, Fenwick-street | 2 2 0 | William Clarke, Jury Wall-street | 0 5 0 | B. njamin Bury, Lane-head | 0 2 6 |
| Mary P. Coventry, 3, Phyllian-st., Low-hill | 2 2 0 | H. and T. P. Hull, Belvoir-street | 0 4 0 | James Spencer | 0 2 6 |
| | | Small sums | 0 4 0 | | |

| | |
|---|--|
| Wm. Whitaker, Woodman Inn, near Vevers Cunniffe Jonathan Allen Miss Wood John Wood, Lane bridge John Coupe, Lane-bridge Marguerite and Co. J. H. Roberts James Pollard, Bridge-end Small sums John Rogers, Carlton-street Wm. Cripps, Park-terrace T. Shepherd, Lenton, near B. Walker, Derby-road A Friend A Friend A Lady A Friend Mrs. Cripps, Park-terrace J. G. Johnson, Bromley-place A Lady Hy. Watkinson, Parliament-place A Lady K. H. Brooks, Peck-lane — Harlow A Friend Thomas Cullen, Pilcher-gate — Barney Y. Z. Frank Ward, Hasford, near A Chartist Two Young Men, whose hope is in Free Trade Thomas Donnelly, Woodborough, near A Friend to the Cause George Youle, Park Wells and Bell, Cheapside Wm. Holbrook, Haslington, near J. and G. Trueman, Stoney-street A Complete Suffragist A Friend William Watts, Angel-row Wm. Graham, do. Geo. Baldwin, Long row William Thorpe, Long-row William Knifield, Low-pavement Barton and Stair, Houndgate D. Christie, Edale, by Halcrow John C. Christie, do., do. Lorenzo Christie, Houndgate A Friend Francis Leavers, Stoney-street William Crofts, Derby-terrace George Galloway, George-street J. T. Bishop, St. Marygate John Mosley and Son, Red Lion-square R. Cowen, Beck-lane G. A. Beadmore, Pilcher-gate S. Parrott, Broad-street William Aulton, St. Marygate C. James, Radford R. Gray, Red Lion street George Spencer, Castle-terrace Robert Burton, Woodville, Sherwood George Cowen, Beck-lane Small Sums John Grundy, Belle Vue Richard Hamer and Son, Summerseat, near Rev. Franklin Howorth, Silver-street Robinson Jackson, Tithebarn-street Mrs. Jackson, do. Bartholomew Hamer, New-road J. and J. Porritt, Edenfield, near James Kay, Paradise-street Henry Ramabottom, Shuttleworth, near John Parkinson, Silver-street Mrs. Parkinson P. Valentine, Rock street Isaac Whitworth, Water Mill Robert Holt, Wood road, near John Lord, Union-square John Mansell, Bolton-street Robert Parks, surgeon, Silver-street David Smith, Rochdale-road J. A. Grundy, Belle Vue R. R. Grundy, do. E. H. Grundy, Bridge Hall, near F. H. Grundy, do., do. James Buckley, Rock-street Edward Potts, Bolton-street James Kay's Workmen, Paradise street Joseph Kay, Paradise-street E. Ackroyd, Fleet-street Thomas Horrocks, Croft House, near Gavin Packer, Hollin's Vale, near Wm. Buckley, Deepley Vale, near Joseph Wood, New-road Richard Lord, Fleet-street Adam Kay, do. Thomas Holt, Agn-street Henry Peck, Fleet-street James Park, Stanley-street Mrs. Park, do. J. Lethwaite, Bolton-street R. T. Grundy, Stanley-street Frank Grundy, do. Henry Grundy, do. James Charles, Bolton street John Pickering, do. Wm. Carnes, Union-street John Habstead, Eden street T. Bowker, Mechanics' Institution, Radcliffe John Bolton, Bolton-street Wm. Pittfield, Two Brooks, Tillington, near Joseph Pollitt, Deepley Vale, near John Bridge, do. Sundries from Deepley Vale Workmen Joshua Barnes Fielden, Oldshop A Friend, per do. Robert Hargreaves, Brook street Richard Chambers, Pavement John Lord, George-street Samuel Lord, Hanging ditch John Lord, Odd Fellows' Hall Edmund Lord Abraham Lord Elizabeth Lord, Woodshade John Howorth, Church street Edmund Roberts, do. John Pilling and Family, Roomfield lane (2nd subscription) Lawrence Wilson, Cornholme Mill John Lacy, Bankfield John Stanfield, Kwood, near Joshua Fielden, Mount Pleasant Robert Fielden, Inchfield-fold Robert Mils, Patmos Wm. Butterworth, York street Thomas Greenlees, Patmos John Chatter, Salford Abraham Horsfall, York-street Robert Walmsley, Pavement Jonathan Barker, Millwood Mrs. Blomley Mrs. Chadwick, Banks William Hargreaves, Cockden James Hardman, Woodshade Small sums | 20 0 0 0 2 6 0 2 6 0 2 6 0 2 6 0 2 6 20 0 0 20 0 0 10 0 0 0 6 8 10 0 0 5 0 0 2 10 0 2 0 0 2 0 0 2 0 0 1 0 |
|---|--|

| | | | | | |
|--|---------|--|--------|-------------------------|--|
| James Carter, grocer, &c. | 24 0 0 | Jonathan Ellis, Hinchliff-mill, near | 21 0 0 | Holmforth, 21 0 0 | (Hear, hear.) It was sometimes said that ministers of religion should not enter into public matters; but if they were not to meddle in endeavouring to enforce the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal," he did not know what they should meddle with; and if one thing was plainer than another, it was that the Corn Law was an infringement of that commandment. But he trusted that he would see it abolished, and that the time was coming when such a blot on the character of the country would be wiped away, and men taught to do to others as they would that others should do to them. He begged to propose the following resolution:— |
| John King, Rawtenstall near Manchester | 1 1 0 | Nathan Littlewood, grocer | 1 1 0 | Mr. Huddersfield, 2 2 0 | "That the thanks of this meeting be given to Mr. Bright, for his attendance here this day, and for the address he has delivered; also to Mr. Cobden and the other members of the Council of the League, for the zeal, perseverance, judgment, and ability with which they have advocated the cause of Corn-Law abolition." |
| James Draxton, grocer, &c., Longbalm, Rawtenstall, near Manchester | 1 0 0 | Nathaniel Booth, Horagatehill, nr. Chorlton, near Huddersfield | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | Mr. P. SYDENHAM DIXON was the next speaker. He said:—Mr. Chairman, Ladies, and Gentlemen, I beg leave to second the resolution proposed by Mr. Wight; and though the evening is somewhat advanced, you will bear with me a minute or two while I endeavour to make a few remarks upon one of the fallacies which have been so prominently put forward by the monopolists in support of the system of Corn Laws which we are met to protest against this evening. The fallacy is, that Free Trade is good in theory, but cannot be reduced to practice. |
| Hartly Willman, ironmonger | 1 0 0 | Charles Flitton, Lane-side, Cum-berworth, near Huddersfield | 1 0 0 | 10 0 0 | (Hear, hear.) Now, we have the authority of Sir Robert Peel that it is true policy to buy in the cheapest market and sell in the dearest; we have, too, the authority of Sir James Graham, that "the principles of Free Trade are the principles of common sense;" and we have also the authority of a man who, above all others, should be acquainted with commercial matters, Mr. Gladstone, who says that Free Trade is beautiful in theory, but he doubts its applicability under existing circumstances. Now, my friends, all sensible men agree that a correct theory must be founded on actual practice. (Hear, hear.) What would be thought of a surgeon who set to work to write a book on the theory of anatomy, if it was not founded upon his own, or some other man's actual practice and experience?—what, for instance, I say, would be thought of a surgeon, who, when called upon to amputate a limb, should say, "Oh, amputation is a beautiful thing in theory, but it cannot be carried into practice?" (Laughter and cheers.) |
| Henry Tattersall, Shawclough, Newch., nr. James Hardman, at Mr. Jas. Ashworth's, Acre-mill, near | 2 0 0 | John Harpin, Birks House, near Thos. Wild, Union-buildings, Great Bolton | 2 0 0 | 1 0 0 | Now, gentlemen, we, who are subscribers and supporters of that "great fact," the League, are Free-Traders both in theory and in practice; and I believe it can be clearly shown, if there was time enough to go into the subject, from facts,—which you know are stubborn things,—that whenever the principles of Free Trade have been approximated to, by a reduction of duties on articles of general consumption, the revenue has been increased to an enormous extent. (Loud cheering.) Now, gentlemen, I hope that the excellent spirit evinced at this numerous meeting, and above all, that the subscription after it, will convince the monopolists of this city, especially those who are so fond of exalting the agricultural at the expense of the manufacturing interest, that you, the Free-Traders of Carlisle, are Free-Traders both in theory and practice; and that you will never rest till those principles which are acknowledged in theory by her Majesty's Government have been carried into practical effect (cheers); till all those unwise restrictions which tax the many for the supposed advantage of the few, shall have been done away with; and above all, till that greatest of all monopolies, so erroneously, as we think, termed "protection" to domestic agriculture has been totally abolished. (Loud cheers.) My friends, what a fallacy it is, to call it protection to domestic agriculture. Why, the agriculturists have a protection nobody can deprive them of—they have the protection of being in a country distinguished above all others for its mechanical skill—a country the wealthiest in the world—a country rapidly increasing in population—and which, as far as we can see, must be for many years a food-importing country. I may go further than this. I say the agriculturists have a natural protection—they have a protection wide as the German Ocean, and they have a protection as broad as the proud waves of the Atlantic; they have a protection as long as ships cannot be built without money; as long as seamen will not work without wages; and as long as harbour dues and town dues are demanded at our seaports. (Cheers.) Is not this a fact? Gentlemen, I am aware I use strong language; but at the same time I may be allowed to add, that I feel strongly, and "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh"—("hear," and cheers)—from the bottom of my heart I do feel strongly upon this subject; and I call upon you all, young and old, rich and poor, but especially upon the young men of this city—(hear, hear)—electors and non-electors, be their station in life what it may, I call upon those of my own age who are just about take a part in the active pursuits of this world—I call upon them, as they value the happiness of their common country, to make up their minds on this subject. (Cheers.) I believe the more they examine into the cause of Free Trade, the more it will be found consistent with the most enlightened patriotism—the most high-toned morality,—and, I may add, with Christian principles (hear, hear); and of one thing they may rest assured, that whatever is morally wrong can never be politically right (cheers); and that a fixed duty upon the provisions of any people, as that "great fact" the League calls it, must ever be a fixed injustice. I honour the League for not listening to the talk of a fixed duty. (Hear, hear.) I believe there was once a time when an 8s. duty would have satisfied the country, but it pleased Providence that that offer should not be accepted, and we are nearer total repeal now than if it had been accepted. No one regrets more than I do the distress which has prevailed for the last four or five years, owing to a depressed state of trade, which we think is clearly traceable to those vicious laws. But, at the same time, what is to be done? In this country, where aristocratic principles have such sway; where it is considered genteel to be a bit of an aristocrat, no reform of this sort can take place without the question being brought before the public mind, and agitated at meetings like the present. But I am wandering from the resolution. I am sure you will agree to it, and I need not add one word to it. It must be admitted that the labours of Messrs. Ashworth, Bright, and Cobden, who are called the A, B, C, of the Anti-Corn-Law League, have been almost superhuman; whether they are gifted with ubiquity or not, I cannot say, but they look like it. One thing is certain, that they have been successful, especially in the |
| John Twiner, stone dealer, Nann-hills | 1 0 0 | J. B. | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| W. E., at Mr. John Earnshaw's | 1 0 0 | A Friend | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| Isaac Hoyle | 1 0 0 | A Friend | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| Lawrence Lord, druggist, &c. | 1 0 0 | A Friend | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| George Stewart, grocer, &c. | 1 0 0 | Robert Harwood, Deansgate, Great Bolton | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| James Ashworth, woollen manufacturer, Acre-mill, near | 5 0 0 | A Lady | 0 5 0 | 0 5 0 | |
| James Ashworth, Lumb-hill | 1 0 0 | A Cold-water Drinker | 0 2 6 | 0 2 6 | |
| Abraham Jackson, Stacksteads | 1 0 0 | A Lady | 0 10 0 | 0 10 0 | |
| John Bradshaw, Stacksteads | 1 0 0 | A Friend to Free Trade | 0 10 0 | 0 10 0 | |
| John Ashworth, do. | 1 0 0 | Robert Green, Kersley, near | 0 5 0 | 0 5 0 | |
| John Stansfield and Son, grocers, &c. | 1 0 0 | David Cardingley, Oxford-st., Great Bolton | 0 5 0 | 0 5 0 | |
| Clement Nuttall, innkeeper | 1 0 0 | Aaron Dyson, Princess-street, do. | 0 10 0 | 0 10 0 | |
| Timothy Nelson, saddler | 1 0 0 | John Gordon, Rose-hill, do. | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| Edward Cockcroft, grocer, &c. | 1 0 0 | A Female Testotaller | 0 5 0 | 0 5 0 | |
| John Lord, reedmaker | 1 0 0 | John Wild, Union buildings | 0 3 6 | 0 3 6 | |
| Servetus Ashworth, Boothfold, Newch., near | 0 10 0 | Anti-Corn-Law Advocates | 0 18 1 | 0 18 1 | |
| John Pickup, Tunstead-mill | 0 5 0 | Mrs. C. Thistlethwaite, Sharples, near | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| John Fowler, draper, Church-st., Haslingden | 0 5 0 | James Higgin, Horwich Vale, near | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| Richard and James Pickup, Stackstead | 0 2 6 | A Friend | 0 2 6 | 0 2 6 | |
| Isaac Taylor, Newchurch, near | 0 2 6 | C. J. Darbishire, Folda, Little Bolton | 10 0 0 | 10 0 0 | |
| George Taylor, Tunstead-mill | 0 2 6 | A Farmer's Son from Lostock | 0 2 6 | 0 2 6 | |
| George Ashworth, grocer, &c., Bottoms | 0 5 0 | A Poor Man | 0 2 6 | 0 2 6 | |
| James Hinson, Irwell Springs | 1 0 0 | Charles Henton, Sharples, near | 1 1 1 | 1 1 1 | |
| Richard Horrocks, Irwell Springs | 1 1 0 | John Kitta, Green-street, Little Bolton | 0 10 0 | 0 10 0 | |
| John Ogden, Heald | 1 1 0 | A Lady | 0 10 0 | 0 10 0 | |
| Thomas Hunt, Irwell Springs | 1 0 0 | Mrs. John Horrocks | 0 5 0 | 0 5 0 | |
| James Howorth, Lower Tunstead | 1 0 0 | A Friend | 0 5 0 | 0 5 0 | |
| Samuel Howorth, Waterbarn | 1 0 0 | Ottiwil Yearshaw, Hay-street, Great Bolton | 0 2 6 | 0 2 6 | |
| John Earnshaw, woollen manufacturer | 21 0 0 | T. B. Garstang, surgeon, Moor-lane | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| John Ogden, bookkeeper | 1 0 0 | Mary Greenwood, Kersley, near | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| Charles Hardman | 1 2 6 | A. R. Varley | 0 2 6 | 0 2 6 | |
| James Barlow, jun., Dog Pits | 1 0 0 | Lee Leigh, Saltpetre-row, Great Bolton | 0 2 6 | 0 2 6 | |
| — Green, saddler | 0 5 0 | "Come Freely" | 0 2 6 | 0 2 6 | |
| James Gregory, tailor | 0 5 0 | John Mosley, gardener | 0 2 6 | 0 2 6 | |
| Francis Heyworth, corgor | 0 5 0 | A Friend | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| Edward Lord, mechanic | 0 5 0 | A Servant Girl | 0 2 6 | 0 2 6 | |
| Joseph Taylor | 0 2 6 | I. O. U. | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| Small sums from Weavers | 0 9 8 | Joseph Baron, Lam-street, Little Bolton | 0 10 0 | 0 10 0 | |
| A Friend, by Mr. Lord | 1 0 0 | An Englishman and Scotchman, 22, Bark-street, Little Bolton | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| Do. do. | 1 0 0 | Abraham Watson, Deansgate, Great Bolton | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| Small Sums | 0 8 6 | James Bromley | 0 10 0 | 0 10 0 | |
| Joshua Brough, Buxton-road | 5 5 0 | R. R. R. O'Moore | 0 12 8 | 0 12 8 | |
| Thomas Birch, Overton's Bank | 5 0 0 | A Chartist | 0 2 6 | 0 2 6 | |
| Nathan Davenport, Clark's Bank | 5 0 0 | James Mancor, Bridge-street, Great Bolton | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| John Brough, jun., Ballhay-road | 8 0 0 | A Well-wisher to the Working Man | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| James Johnson, Queen-street | 3 0 0 | A Lady | 7 2 6 | 7 2 6 | |
| John Lovatt, Mill-street | 2 12 6 | A Chartist and Repealer too | 0 2 6 | 0 2 6 | |
| Joseph Gould, do. | 2 12 6 | A family numbering ten, who want the Repeal of the Corn Laws | 0 14 0 | 0 14 0 | |
| James Alsop, Queen street | 2 0 0 | Henry Lever, Johnson-street | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| James Brough, Mount | 2 0 0 | Mrs. Little, Wood-street | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| John Wain, Ballhay-street | 2 0 0 | John Brown, Churchgate | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| A Tenant Farmer, near | 2 0 0 | Henry Hollins, Rose hill | 25 0 0 | 25 0 0 | |
| Josiah Astles, London-street | 1 0 0 | William Woods Cooke, Kensington-place, Little Bolton | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| Charles Ball, Bridge | 1 0 0 | A Lady | 0 5 0 | 0 5 0 | |
| John Brough, Mount | 1 0 0 | E. H. T. | 0 5 0 | 0 5 0 | |
| D. Cartwright, Sheep-market | 1 0 0 | Mrs. Geo. Wynne, Deansgate, Great Bolton | 0 10 0 | 0 10 0 | |
| D. Colquhoun, Clark's Bank | 1 0 0 | John Mitchell | 0 5 0 | 0 5 0 | |
| Mrs. Clowes, Mill street | 1 0 0 | James Shuttleworth | 0 10 0 | 0 10 0 | |
| T. Denay, Union-street | 1 0 0 | Henry and Southworth | 0 5 0 | 0 5 0 | |
| Rev. R. Goshawk, Ballhay-street | 1 0 0 | Thomas Kirkham, Moor-lane | 0 5 0 | 0 5 0 | |
| Joseph Hambleton, Spout-street | 1 0 0 | A Friend | 0 2 6 | 0 2 6 | |
| Hammersley and Bentley, Union-street | 1 0 0 | Ralph Almond, Bradshawgate | 0 10 0 | 0 10 0 | |
| John Heath, King street | 1 0 0 | J. M. Robinson, surgeon, Little Bolton | 1 1 0 | 1 1 0 | |
| W. M. Hillard, Market-place | 1 0 0 | Ed. Edwards, Hillfold Cottage, Sharples, near | 0 10 0 | 0 10 0 | |
| Henry Ind, Regent-street | 1 0 0 | Richard Cunliffe, Byng-street | 3 0 0 | 3 0 0 | |
| W. Johns, Union-street | 1 0 0 | Thomas Ormerod, St. George's-terrace, Little Bolton | 1 1 0 | 1 1 0 | |
| Joseph Large, King-street | 1 0 0 | Joseph Brown, Churchgate | 1 1 0 | 1 1 0 | |
| William Mellor, Buxton-road | 1 0 0 | James Crompton | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| J. and W. Morley, Spout-street | 1 0 0 | John Morley | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| Joshua Nicholson, Buxton-road | 1 0 0 | Henry Howarth | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| S. B. Whittles, Market-place | 1 0 0 | Wm. Darbishire | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| Benjamin Wolfe, do. | 1 0 0 | John Burns | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| R. S. Walters, Overton's Bank | 0 10 0 | Peter Stones | 1 5 0 | 1 5 0 | |
| Joseph Flowers, New-street | 0 10 0 | Charles Mayoh | 1 2 6 | 1 2 6 | |
| Thomas Slack, Derby-street | 0 10 0 | James Dean | 0 8 0 | 0 8 0 | |
| G. A. Smith, King street | 0 10 0 | Extra subscription at Ladies' table | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| Samuel Tatton, Clark's Bank | 0 10 0 | R. Crossley, at Messrs. Henry and Southworth's | 1 1 0 | 1 1 0 | |
| John Weston, Buxton-road | 0 10 0 | James Haslam, Folda's-street | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| Young and Lea, Spout-street | 0 10 0 | William Lomax, Halliwell | 5 0 0 | 5 0 0 | |
| A Friend | 0 10 0 | Samuel Taylor, cotton spinner, Chorley New-road | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| Joseph Howard, Market-place | 0 5 0 | John Rigby, ironfounder, Pillingwell, Great Bolton | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| — Jackson, King-street | 0 5 0 | Jonathan Haslam, beerseller, Moor-lane, Great Bolton | 0 5 0 | 0 5 0 | |
| H. L. Johnson, Queen-street | 0 5 0 | Wm. Thistlethwaite, at W. Flesketh's, Bradshawgate | 0 5 0 | 0 5 0 | |
| John Newall, Buxton-road | 0 5 0 | Wm. Warburton, grocer, &c., Deansgate | 1 10 0 | 1 10 0 | |
| John Newell, London-street | 0 5 0 | Anthony Thistlethwaite, 9, Bullock-street, Little Bolton | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| James Rigby, Market-place | 0 5 0 | Wm. Heaketh, Bradshawgate, Great Bolton | 1 0 0 | 1 0 0 | |
| Luke Stone, Derby-street | 0 5 0 | James Morris, Deansgate, ditto—20s. for self, 10s. each for his children | 5 0 0 | 5 0 0 | |
| Charles Walker, King-street | 0 5 0 | Wm. Greenhaigh, Railway-st., Great Bolton | 0 6 0 | 0 6 0 | |
| Thomas West, Sheep-market | 0 2 6 | John Gerrard, Derby-street | 2 2 0 | 2 2 0 | |
| William Bloore, Hare-hay | 0 2 6 | James Hood, Halliwell | 1 2 10 | 1 2 10 | |
| Hugh Ford, Mill-street | 0 2 6 | Small Sums | | | |
| George Hulme, Derby-street | 0 2 6 | | | | |
| Charles Lees, London-road | 0 2 6 | | | | |
| George Massey, Sheep-market | 0 2 6 | | | | |
| Paul Prince, Ballhay-green | 0 2 6 | | | | |
| Joseph Rigby, Market-place | 0 2 6 | | | | |
| James Rogers, Spout-street | 0 2 6 | | | | |
| Joseph Charne, Pickwood-road | 0 2 6 | | | | |
| Japeth Trafford, do. | 0 2 6 | | | | |
| George Yeomans, Church-street | 0 2 6 | | | | |
| Four Friends, half-a-crown each | 0 10 0 | | | | |
| Small Sums under 2s. 6d. | 0 17 6 | | | | |
| John Hadwin and Sons, Kebroyd, near | 100 0 0 | | | | |
| Wm. Appleyard and Son | 40 0 0 | | | | |
| Isaac Green, Horley-green | 10 0 0 | | | | |
| Dani. Ramsden, Kingston | 10 0 0 | | | | |
| Swindell and Jeffery, "to make up £1500" | 11 0 0 | | | | |
| Richard Ingham, Bedford-street | 5 0 0 | | | | |
| James Firth and Son | 5 0 0 | | | | |
| John Styling | 5 0 0 | | | | |
| J. W. Gregory | 2 0 0 | | | | |
| John Holt, Woolpack Inn | 2 0 0 | | | | |
| John Walker, Old Market | 2 0 0 | | | | |
| Mrs. Joshua Appleyard | 1 1 0 | | | | |
| T. C., Southgate | 1 0 0 | | | | |
| "For Four Children, 5s. each" | 1 0 0 | | | | |
| "For League Paper" | 1 0 0 | | | | |
| Mrs. Jonathan Crowther | 0 10 6 | | | | |
| "One who would give more if he could" | 0 2 2 | | | | |
| Mrs. Holbrook Gaskell, Prospect Hill | 20 0 0 | | | | |
| James Marson, Bewsey-street | 1 0 0 | | | | |
| John Brazil, Oxford-lane | 0 5 0 | | | | |
| Thos. Waddington, Golden-sq. | 1 0 0 | | | | |
| Wm. Thomason, Scotland-road | 1 0 0 | | | | |
| Thos. Davis, jun., Lyme-street | 0 10 0 | | | | |
| Wm. Jones, Foundry, Bewsey-st. | 1 0 0 | | | | |
| Robert Wilson | 1 0 0 | | | | |
| William Oddie | 0 2 6 | | | | |
| John Toth | 0 2 6 | | | | |
| Alfred Gaskell | 0 10 0 | | | | |
| A. H. Torry | 0 10 0 | | | | |
| Small subscriptions from 102 other mechanics employed at | 3 4 5 | | | | |
| Nathan Gaskell, Oxhouse, Upholland, near | 1 0 0 | | | | |
| John Jackson, Law's-aleph, do., do. | 1 0 0 | | | | |
| John Molyneux, Chapel-lane | 0 2 6 | | | | |

ERRATA.

In LEAGUE 16, for Joseph Brook, 75, East-street, Bank, Leeds, read George Brook; and for P. R. Hopwood, Harrogate, read Harrogate House, Wigan.

For want of time and space we are reluctantly compelled to postpone the publishing of the list of contributions from Edinburgh until next week.

GREAT ANTI-CORN-LAW TEA-PARTY IN CARLISLE.

Continued from page 263.

Cards and pencils were then handed round the room, and while they were filling up, the CHAIRMAN called upon

The Rev. H. WIGHT to move the next resolution. He said, the resolution intrusted to him he had much pleasure in proposing for their adoption; it was a motion of thanks to Mr. Bright for his attendance, and to the other members of the League, for the perseverance and judgment with which they had advocated the cause of a total abolition of the Corn Laws. He had met Mr. Bright in Edinburgh above a year ago; they had not then commenced their series of meetings in the agricultural parts of the country—a plan of which he (Mr. Wight) highly approved, and which, at the time mentioned, he had sent a message to Mr. Bright, strongly recommending the mode of operation of entering the agricultural parts of the country, and he thought it was the duty of those now assembled to express their thanks to Mr. Bright, Mr. Cobden, and the others, for the labour they had bestowed in sending truth among those people who were least likely to get it otherwise.

agricultural districts, in teaching the A, B, C of Free Trade to grown-up men. (Hear, hear.) I am sure you will all agree with me in wishing every success to them in their present mission, in hoping that they may have health and happiness in their family and domestic concerns, and that they may long survive the iniquitous system of monopoly against which they are so honourably contending. (Cheers.) He concluded by seconding the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN said, he felt it was almost unnecessary to put the resolution to a show of hands, but he would recommend that they signify their accordance with its sentiments by standing up. The whole audience immediately arose, and the resolution was carried by loud cheering, clapping of hands, &c.

Mr. BARNETT said:—My colleagues will be glad to hear that their labours have been approved of by the inhabitants of this city; and I shall consider it a substantial method of showing how you hold their services, if you will do what lies in your power by adding means to what they possess to carry out the objects we have in view; and I have to say, on behalf of my friend behind me (Mr. P. S. Dixon), who says we have had his maiden speech, the first he ever delivered, that if it should happen to be the last speech, a very great weight of responsibility will rest either upon himself, for not coming forward, or upon his fellow-townsmen, for not bringing him out. (Hear, hear, and cheers.) I cannot see why Carlisle should not produce a working member of the League.

The subscription cards were then handed up. Mr. Steel handed in one from, he said, one of the best farmers of the county, Mr. Dixon, of Broadwath, £5. (Cheers.) The cards containing the various subscriptions were then handed in, and read to the meeting by Mr. Bright—a duty which he performed very efficiently, interspersing the whole with good-humoured remarks. We subjoin the various sums, which were read amid applause,—the half-crown of the working man being as much honoured as the pound of the more wealthy citizen. Amongst the subscriptions is one of £40, from W. Marshall, Esq., M.P. for this city, upon which Mr. Bright remarked that he wished the other member for the city had been present, to put down his subscription; at all events, it was pretty clear that his constituents should either convert or change him. (Hear, hear.) The collection of the cards occupied a considerable time; and it was eventually announced that the total sum subscribed at the meeting amounted to £103 18s.—an announcement which was received with the greatest applause and satisfaction.

Mr. BRIGHT moved that the thanks of the meeting be given to the chairman, for his exceedingly proper conduct in the chair, and for his kindness in presiding over that meeting.

The motion was seconded, and carried by three hearty cheers.

The CHAIRMAN acknowledged the compliment, and the company dispersed.

The following is a list of the subscriptions announced in the room, with two or three others since received:—John Dixon, 100l.; Peter Dixon, 100l.; Mr. J. D. Carr, 10l.; W. Marshall, Esq., M.P., 40l.; T. Foster, 2l.; — M'Gibbon, 1l.; E. Brockbank, 2l.; — Nicholson, 5s.; — Wallace, 2l.; J. P. Harrison, 2l.; E. Bowman, 1l.; — Huthert (2nd sub.), 10s.; Hugh Earl, 10s. 6d.; H. Twiddle, 1l.; P. S. Dixon, 10l.; James Carruthers, 7s. 6d.; Edward Harrison, 5s.; — Aikin, 1l.; G. Robinson, 2l.; J. Carrick, 2l.; Messrs. Macknight, 10s.; T. T. Railton, 2l.; Thomas Sheffield, 1l. 1s.; — Steel, 2l.; — Irving, 2l.; Joseph Ferguson, 50l.; George Dixon, 20l.; Joseph Dixon, 5l.; Robert Ferguson, 5l.; Mrs. Carrick, 1l.; H. Scott, 1l.; Misses S. and J. Latimer, 5s.; Miss Sheffield, 10s. 6d.; J. Slater, 10l.; S. Back, 10s. 6d.; T. Barnes, 10s.; C. W. Henderson, 10s.; J. W. Browne, 5s.; Wm. Fleming, 2s. 6d.; John Shack, 2s. 6d.; Joseph Lonsdale, 5s.; J. L. Harris, 1s.; Thos. Ivison, 5s.; James McCutcheon, 1l.; John Mason, 10s.; Wm. Armstrong, 2s.; D. Stevenson, 1l.; Samuel Blaylock, 1l.; Joseph Smithson, 1l.; John Sheffield, 1l.; James Muncester, 2s. 6d.; Thomas Johnston, at Messrs. Dixons', 1l.; Andrew Routledge, 1l.; John Welsh, 1l.; a Friend, per Mr. Steel, 1l.; C. Taylor, 10s.; John Duncan, 2s. 6d.; George Armstrong, 5s.; Jos. Hannah, 10s.; Alexander Brethner, 1s. 6d.; William Fisher, 2s. 6d.; Joseph Smith, 1s.; John Taylor, 2s. 6d.; George Ivison, 2s. 6d.; W. Salkeld, 5s.; John Anderson, 5s.; Thos. Nelson, 2l.; Thos. M'Alpin, 1l.; H. M'Alpin, 1l.; Jas. Boyd, 2s.; Daniel Conlon, 2s.; Richard Muncester, 2s. 6d.; Thos. Rudd, 5s.; Mrs. C. Cockburn and Son, 2l.; Jos. Henderson, 2s.; J. M. Noble, 7s. 6d.; Richard Morris, 2s. 6d.; Robert Foster, 1s. 6d.; Wm. Fletcher, 5s.; Friends, per Mr. Rushton, 1l. 5s.; W. Miller, 2s. 6d.; J. Cowen, 2s. 6d.; Chas. Ivison, 2s. 6d.; Friends, by Mr. H. Scott, 10s.; A Friend, Glasgow, per J. D. Carr, 10s.; Geo. Rowell, 1l.; — Sheffield, artist, 1l.; — Gillbanks, 1l.; E. Harris, 5s.; David Forster, 3s.; Jos. Banks, 2s.; Wm. Sturdy, 5l.

We have found it impossible to give the reports, although in type, of the Perth and Aberdeen meetings. We regret also that we can give no report this week of the vast meetings held in the Free-Trade Hall, Manchester, on Thursday night, and in the Music Hall, Liverpool, on Wednesday evening. Perhaps the excuse we have to offer for these and other omissions will be sufficiently gratifying to our readers, when we inform them that the necessity for it arises from the great length to which the list of this week's paid subscriptions extends.

HAWICK.—ANTI-CORN-LAW DEMONSTRATION.—This demonstration took place within the Town-hall, on Thursday the 11th inst. The chair was ably filled by Mr. Wm. Scott, chief magistrate, supported by Mr. A. Haddon, junior magistrate. The audience, which was numerous and unanimous, was ably addressed by W. Wilson, Esq., Orchard House; Mr. Wm. Irvine, commercial traveller; and Mr. James Scott Foreman. The sum subscribed amounted to £70, which was merely a beginning; before the subscriptions close £200 will be realized, which is quadruple last year's contributions. The following are the principal subscribers:—W. Wilson, Esq., Orchard House, £10; John Wilson, manufacturer, £10; a Friend, £10; Walter Armstrong, draper, £3; M. Wilson and Sons, skinner, £3; Alex. Laing and Sons, £10; Robert Fraser, draper, £10; G.

Wilson, manufacturer, £5; William Turnbull, draper, £3; six other subscribers, £6.

STOCKPORT.—THE LEAGUE FUND.—We understand that a public meeting, in aid of the great League fund, will be held in this town, on the evening of Tuesday the 30th inst., and that Mr. Cobden, Mr. Bright, and Mr. R. H. R. Moore will attend and address the meeting. Mr. Batty's Circus, in the New Market, is spoken of as the place where it is likely to be held, unless the fears of proprietors be successfully worked upon by certain parties, who, we are informed, are using their influence to prevent its being let for the purpose, by representing the Leaguers as revolutionists, and intimating that utter ruin would attend the circus if such a meeting were allowed in the building.—Manchester Guardian.

AMERICAN PROVISIONS.—At a tea-party and conversation of the National Association, held at their hall in Holborn on Monday evening, at which Dr. Bowring presided, samples of foreign meats were placed upon the table; viz.—American beef, pork, and tongue; and Port-Phillip beef recently imported into this country, and in which it appears certain that a considerable trade will be carried on. In the course of the conversation after tea, Mr. Statham stated that the samples had been sent in by some provision brokers in the City, and that the prices at the public sales were, for the Port-Phillip beef, 1½d. per lb.; American beef, the sample of which was of fine quality, 2½d. to 3d. per lb., and pork about the same price: they were rather too salt, which can be easily obviated. A fine sample of cheese was also tasted, sold at 4½d. per lb., and equal to good Cheshire. He then drew attention to an extract from a statement of the New York prices on the 30th of December, when provisions, including beef, pork, hams, &c., ranged from 1½d. to 3d. per lb.; lard and butter, 2d. to 5d.; cheese, 2d. to 4d.; and raised the inquiry, why there should be so many millions who do not taste animal food, or taste it only as a luxury, when it can be obtained at those prices within fifteen days' sail from Great Britain? The millions "who rejoice in potatoes," would be stimulated in their rejoicings if they could obtain animal food to eat with them. A great deal of commiseration has been manifested for the starving sempstresses and the houseless poor; but they are the true friends of those classes who assist in opening the ports for the surplus produce of the world, and by Free Trade provide a fruitful return for the work of the labourer, who, if he could not get the roast beef of Old England, would find some consolation in the salt beef of brother Jonathan. Dr. Bowring stated that he entirely agreed with what had been stated by Mr. Statham as to the desirableness of our receiving the animal food of other countries. In order to assist this object, a party of noblemen and gentlemen connected with the Free-Trade movement, including Lord Radnor, Mr. Hume, Mr. Villiers, himself, and others, were going to see the samples at the importer's prior to the next public sale. The conversation was attended by about 500 persons, and passed off with great spirit. An exhibition of a great many objects of interest, works of art, &c., took place in the coffee-room of the association.

ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE AT IDLE, NEAR BRADFORD, YORKSHIRE.—On Wednesday evening last a meeting of the inhabitants of this village took place in the Odd Fellows' Hall. Christopher Dibb, Esq., acted as chairman on the occasion. Mr. Thos. Plint attended, as a deputation from the Leeds Association; and Mr. Wilkinson, Mr. Yates, Mr. Farrar, and other gentlemen, from the Bradford Association. The chairman, in opening the proceedings, briefly alluded to the objects of the meeting, offered a few observations on the iniquity of the Corn Laws and the Sugar Monopoly, and concluded by calling upon Mr. Wilkinson, one of the deputation from Bradford, to address them. Mr. Wilkinson addressed the meeting on the Corn Laws, their nature, tendency, and effects. Mr. Yates followed at considerable length. Mr. Plint, of Leeds, then delivered an able speech, which was listened to throughout with the most marked attention, and elicited the warm approbation of the meeting. The following subscriptions were then announced:—C. Dibb, 3l. 3s.; F. Audsley, 2l. 2s.; S. Humble, Esq., 2l. 2s.; a Decided Free-Trader, 1l. 1s.; Our Bread Untaxed, our Commerce Free, 1l.; Thomas Rider, 1l.; John Rushworth, 1l.; Richard Sugden, 5s.; Joseph Rawson, 5s.; Chas. Illingworth, 3s. 6d.; Sam. Hardacre, 2s. 6d.; John Oldfield, 5s.; Benjamin Ryecroft, 2l. 2s.; Charles Newall, 2s. 6d.; Wm. Craven, 2l.; Thos. Rustick, 1s.; Wm. Russell, 1l. 10s.; John Wade, 5s.; John Lee, 10s.; Wm. Bird, 5s.; George Vint and Brothers, 1l.; Wm. Booth, 10s.; a Friend, S. D., 5s.; George Oldfield, 1l.; James Wade, 1l.; Mrs. James Wade, 5s.; Miss Elizabeth M. Bannister, 2s. 6d.; John Hardacre, 2s. 6d.; John and James Ward, 1l.; Jonas Fletcher, 1l.; William Glover, 10s.; Thos. Hutton, 10s.; Small sums per J. Ward, jun., 1l. 8s.; Small sums from the workmen at Albion Mills, 2l. 6s.; Total, 30l. 3s. 6d. Other sums are expected. This village last year raised 16l. towards the League; this year it will more than double it.

THE COUNTER LEAGUE IN SUSSEX.—The movement for the formation of a counter League in Sussex is fast losing the character—if it ever possessed it—of being a tenants' movement, which the monopolists and their organs would fain have led the country to believe it was. The meeting at Chichester—the proceedings at which the Post reported with such a flourish of trumpets—was certainly addressed by two or three tenant-farmers, but amongst the dozen persons present was Mr. Rusbridger, agent to the Duke of Richmond, whose influence is paramount in that neighbourhood; and in all probability the agent was the "whipper-in" on the occasion. A preliminary meeting, said to be of "farmers," was also held at the King and Queen, Brighton, on Thursday week; what was said at it has not been published, though we are informed a reporter was present; but the resolutions have been advertised in the local papers, and they are signed, as honorary secretary, by Mr. W. W. Burrell, son of Sir Charles Burrell, M.P. for the rape of Bramber, a circumstance significant enough of the source of this movement. At Lewes, too, there was a meeting on Tuesday, which was of a more public character, having been called by advertisement. It purported to be a meeting of "the East Sussex Association for the Protection of Agriculture," an association which it appears was formed when the Whig ministry proposed the eight-shilling fixed duty, but which has been inert since that time. Its president is Lord Gage, and its vice-president Mr. W. C. Mabbott, a county magistrate. The object of the meeting, as stated in the advertisement, was "for the purpose of considering what steps to adopt to frustrate the attempts of the League to deprive them of the protection they now enjoy against foreign capital and labour;" but though it was market day, and there was a good attendance at the market, the farmers held aloof from the meeting, not more than from 20 to 30 of them being present at it; besides these were several magistrates and other landowners. The principal speakers at the meeting were Mr. John Ellman, who claims the honour of being the inventor of the sliding-scale; and Mr. Darby, the member for the county, who complained sorely of the apathy of the farmers, and made a moving appeal to them to unite to preserve their protection. Not a word was said as to the principle or policy of these laws, the principal object of the meeting apparently being to prepare for the aggregate meeting which is to be held at Steyning on the 29th inst.

AGRICULTURE.

DOINGS OF THE MONOPOLISTS.

The following extract from a correspondent of the Times affords some notion of the kind of sympathy that active monopolist, the Duke of Richmond, entertains for the poor:—

"I shall not trust myself to do more on the present occasion than make and authenticate the following statement:—
"John Holder and Ann, his wife, resident within that district, are both of the age of 80 years and upwards, and of unblemished character. They recently applied for outdoor relief from that board, and it was refused. Application was then made on their behalf to the Duke of Richmond, his Grace being chairman of the board, and then at Goodwood. Without any needless remark on the peculiarly delicate treatment which that letter experienced (written as it was by a lady, and worthy as it was of the lady by whom it was written) in being laid before the board to be answered by his Grace's attorney as its clerk, the substantive reply was a slip of paper bearing the following words, viz., 'John and Ann Holder his wife, aged 81. Admit the bearer.'"

Such an incident speaks volumes.

Now, the Duke of Richmond is a prime mover of the Pro-Corn-Law meetings—hole-and-corner meetings as most of them are—which are being held in the rural districts, and we trust the friends of Free Trade throughout the country will inform us, by letters addressed to Mr. PAULTON, the Secretary of the League, or to the Editor of the LEAGUE NEWSPAPER, at 67, Fleet-street, of such particulars of the names, rank, calling, interests, and connections of the prime movers of these fraudulent attempts to use the tenant-farmers, as may enable us to expose them in their true character to the public.

A LESSON FOR LANDLORDS.

We have before had occasion to refer to the remarks of Mr. Johnson Daniell, a landowner in Rampisham, Dorsetshire, a parish particularized by Mr. Sheridan as offering some painful illustrations of the destitute condition of the Dorsetshire labourers; and the following passages from a letter addressed by Mr. Daniell to the Dorset County Chronicle prove that even the landlords themselves must ultimately benefit by the hearty shaking they are receiving at the hands of the League. Nor are Mr. Johnson Daniell's suggestions the less valuable because he has thought fit to spice his communication with a fling at the LEAGUE, and to mis-state our advocacy of Free Trade in a manner which shows that he either entirely misunderstands, or wilfully misrepresents, our views. The spirit, however, which pervades this gentleman's letter, is that by which we should be glad to see all landlords actuated, namely, a desire to advance improvements in land and husbandry, by the healthy operation of enlightened self-interest on all the minds of all classes connected with land. With such a spirit, reliance on "protection" is utterly inconsistent; and, though Mr. Johnson Daniell may at present entertain a class-prejudice against the League, we have no doubt he will ere long become a Free Trader. At all events, his advice to landlords, if followed, is calculated to remove from their minds all apprehensions of Free Trade. And first, on the preachments of the squires at agricultural meetings, Mr. Daniell says:—

"Some landlords wisely and well instruct their farmers at public meetings, and elsewhere, to employ more labourers, to improve their lands, and so forth. Suppose they were to begin by employing them themselves?"

This is to the point, and how it is to be done in Dorsetshire is thus made obvious:—

"Every landlord may do this; every estate is capable of improvement; draining, planting, enclosing, are, more or less, the landlord's province; so also (rightly considered) is the reclaiming of waste or uncultivated land. Let any one get upon the Magnet coach at Salisbury, some fine windy day in December, and cast his eyes (if the wind will suffer him) in every direction, and without fear of anything to obstruct his view, as long as he traverses the county (cleared with the richest land and the most favourable climate, according to the LEAGUE), and then say whether we are over-planted, over-improved, or over-enclosed. Let him ride the vale of Blackmoor, and report whether we are over-drained, under-drained, or not. The winter climate would be another thing to them [sheep and cattle] under the 'leath' of a system of plantations, and the lands would bear record for years where the sheep had nestled under the break-blast of a wood of firs."

As probably most readers know, a considerable part of Dorsetshire consists of open land on the high chalk hills, which are very bleak in winter; and here the field for improvement by planting is immense. The vast increase which has by such means been given to land in many districts of Scotland would be nothing compared with the benefits accruing to Dorsetshire by protecting the high-lands from the cutting west winds. Mr. Daniell then states the effect the general adoption of such an improvement would have upon the condition of the Dorsetshire labourers:—

"The prosecution of such improvements as a duty—as part of the yearly functions of a landlord—would probably have some such effects as these. A landlord's employment is proverbially the best. He is expected to give, and ought to give, a shade better wages than the renting farmer. On his own part he looks to get the best workmen. His example in point of wages will be something. The effect of his employing many hands at once would be more. The certainty of his employing them annually would be invaluable. There would be (if all landlords would pursue the plan) a gradual, temperate, well-sustained rise in the labour-market. Not the hasty rush of a momentary torrent from an artificial or accidental cause; but the steady rise of a stream fed by more abundant, natural, and perennial sources. The labourers would hold up their heads—not with vain anticipations of 'something about to be done for them,' they know not by whom; but with well-grounded confidence in the annual employment of spare hands by their natural friends and protectors, and now their masters. When a neighbouring proprietor employed a large number of hands at good wages in his judicious improvements, it became difficult to obtain a sufficiency of labourers for winter work; and wages rose."

Here is the practical operation of the landlords, to quote the words of Lord Hardwicke, "doing their duty to themselves and the labourers." The following passage will speak volumes to those acquainted with rural life:—

"The landlord's work comes, for the most part, at a season when other work is hardly to be had. Planting, enclosing, and even draining, are usually jobs for the dull months of the latter autumn or winter, or (that worst of winters) the earlier part of an English spring. It is in some one of these periods, according to the locality and the nature of its occupations, that the dispirited labourer casts a rueful eye towards the Union. He holds out as long as he can; he gets work, if he can, on the roads; but cracking flints is not (any more than tending a spinning-jenny) the natural work of man. Agricultural labour is, and he will gladly seize the offer of the landlord's bailiff, to take a job of planting, draining, or embanking. It is not once nor twice that I have watched the hard weather-worn countenance of a man of 'staid' years, with a frame built to last out a century, but a face looking wan and woeful from long-continued want of work and consequent inferior food; more than all, from the hopelessness of any satisfactory resource. When such a one has said, in answer to my inquiry, 'I've had no work, Sir, since ha'arst,' and you recollect with a pang that, perhaps, three months have passed since that short period of activity and high wages—I say that to see the eyes of such an one glisten at the intelligence that he may go at once for a long job of planting by the piece."

Nor is it amongst the slightest benefits that such improvements cause no injurious disturbance in the labour market: they produce no heartburnings between the farmer and his men, but, on the contrary, while they offer an additional source of income to the labourer, which forms a clear gain to him, they benefit the farmer also, by taking off some of his men when he least wants them. Mr. Daniell says:—

"Such improvements, while they dispense benefits, interfere with no man. The labourer gains employment when the farmer needs him least. When the landlord's work is done the tasks of the farmer's year recommence. To do this is to do something visible, permanent, and systematic. Self-denial is a glorious word, but is apt to elude our vigilance in testing it in ourselves (for I maintain that we have no right to apply the test to others, or to judge them in this, any more than in more abstract matters); but here is something which, if done, cannot be gainsaid; if left undone, cannot be made good by words. Let us write our benevolence, not in transitory subscriptions only, which may cost a pound or two, but in broad characters of green and gold on the bleak hills of Dorset—in plantations which may defy the cutting south-west wind, the shelter of which may be felt far beyond the fields which it protects, or inscribe the same in wide ranges of corn which never would have flourished there but for the wise expenditure of the landlord."

But it is far easier to give a few paltry pounds to the agricultural society "for encouraging industrious labourers," and to attend an annual dinner or two, and there cant and whine, or lie and bluster, than to surrender personal enjoyment of income for the improvement of their patrimony, whilst landowners believe they can by means of Corn Laws secure to themselves high rents out of the sweat and toil of the industrious part of the community. Of the permanent benefit of such works to the landlord himself there can be no doubt:—

"For planted woods call for continual thinnings, and well repay the expense and labour. The fields drained will imbibe and be grateful for manure, which the undrained lands reject as unprofitable. The crops increase the stock multiplies—the farmer's means are improved—his own and the landlord's powers of usefulness are advanced. I need not say a word to show how the reclaimed lands require more hands to till them, and reward the expense. No one can foretell how far such improvements may extend their influence, as becoming the means of making still more—how many labourers may owe their bread to those who are now breaking up the land."

Nor is there anything new in these remedies: all that is required is a systematic adoption of them.

"In urging these topics I beg to be understood as recommending no novelties. I am convinced that many landlords (perhaps all) do what I humbly suggest; but I venture to print my opinion by way of recommending them as a system. It is one thing to apply a casual cure, and another to propose it as a treatment, and take some pains to collect the arguments for its usefulness. I know nothing of any one's property but that committed to my own care; but I am quite sure that, individually, I have enough to employ much of the energies of my mind, and more than the abilities of my purse, and all the unemployed poor of one parish, at least, for years."

Then comes the rub—the cost. Where is the money to come from? The squire probably spends as much or more than his income already, and it might affect his station in the county to retrench. But hear Mr. Daniell on this point:—

"This leads to the main objection. No men are apt to stand in more need of ready cash themselves than those who, in these times, depend wholly on the land. It will be urged that the want of this sovereign medium of cure is (in many cases) a grievous preliminary objection. I am well aware that it is so. I see it feelingly. Nevertheless, the employment of the disheartened poor is the cheapest of all improvements, the least costly of all true luxuries. The mere posting expenses of a journey to Naples would clothe a hill with wood, or drain a valley; and, at the same time, would clothe the labourers also, and provide nutriment for them, as well as for the land. The men who are planting for me at present (I cite my humble example only because I am best acquainted with my own case) earn (those who are able-bodied) 2s. a-piece per day when digging holes by the thousand; and though they receive less for day-work when they put in the trees (which I do not make piece-work), yet, balancing the one against the other, their wages average at the very lowest 9s. a week for able-bodied and not able-bodied, allowing for stoppages from bad weather. Twenty labourers at 10s. would be £10 per week (the rent of a good ready-furnished house, in an eligible part of London, for the same time), or, for thirteen of the worst weeks of the year, £130; which couriers, postillions, and postmasters would soon imbibe on the route to Naples or Vienna. There is not, of course, the least moral objection to that most enchanting of all luxuries, a well-planned and well-conducted tour; but I am setting one luxury against another—the most fascinating against the most useful and most permanent."

This goes to the root of the matter. The first step to agricultural improvement is, that landlords should realize to their own minds that "property has its duties as well as its rights." Neither are the returns for such outlays very distant. Mr. Daniell says:—

"Nor is it long before profit comes in to reward and aid expenditure. Trees planted not fifteen years ago, on land not worth more than 14s. per acre, now return me more than £3 per acre for the same in thinnings for poles and fuel."

Yet what paralyses those landlords who would undertake these things but our old enemy—the monster Monopoly, which meets and impedes all classes at every turn—the Corn Laws. He says:—

"The most deadly objection is the uncertainty which hangs over our agricultural horizon. With the hundred-handed and thousand-tongued League clamouring against us; with the possibility, perhaps the prospect, of a fixed duty, which would be un-fixed as soon as levied; with a sliding-scale fearfully remodelled, and which appears to have imparted to our Premier something of its own lubricity; barley unsold, and oats scarcely saleable—(iron railroads consume no provender of this sort); with light crops, and light sovereigns; he is undoubtedly a bold man who now breaks up land for tillage."

This is a mistake, for it is by breaking up land—properly and judiciously breaking it up, and farming it well afterwards—that the farmer and landlord can best provide against low prices. And it is by such means that landlords can alone unite all the classes connected with land.

"I have stated, what appears to me one present available resource for bettering the condition of the poor, by immediate employment;—of the farmers by diminution of the rates—(a triple-headed monster demanding to be fed continually for poor, church, and roads,—but of whose very existence some landlords seem to have only indistinct and hazy perceptions); and of the landowner by the improvement of his estate; binding all together by the golden links of mutual dependence and combined utility."

This is just what the squires are so fond of talking about, but to prevent which their acts and systems do so much. Now, this is a really useful letter, and proves, that as soon as the landowners are compelled to rely on their own resources instead of attempting to tax the public to keep up their rents, they will be benefited, not injured by the change.

MONOPOLIST TACTICS.

The following is the notice by which Lord Elcho, the Vice-Lieutenant of the county of Haddington, calls a county meeting.

"In compliance with the foregoing requisition, I hereby call a meeting of the noblemen, gentlemen, commissioners of supply, justices of the peace, tenant-farmers, and others, of the county of Haddington, who are favourable to the maintenance of the present Corn Laws, to be held in the Assembly-room, Haddington, upon Friday the 4th January current, at two o'clock afternoon, for the purpose therein mentioned."

Is it usual for a public officer to call a meeting of a party? To express a foregone conclusion? To pre-judge a question on which most extraordinary diversities of opinion exist? At all events, such a notice shows that the monopolists feel safe only in a packed meeting. Of course none but protectionists will go, and the determination of the meeting will not be that of the county of Haddington, but of a meeting of protectionists in that county. This is like the anonymous paper just circulated in the county of Hertford, which says:—

"It is proposed to establish an Agricultural Protection Society, composed of the tenant-farmers in the county of Hertford; the objects of which are to protect the British agriculturists against the present attack and threatened innovations of the Anti-Corn-Law League, and to oppose all measures that may be brought forward having a tendency to deprive the agriculturists of protection, to which they are justly entitled," and so forth. Now, this emanates from the agents of the Marquis of Salisbury, who has recently attained a somewhat unfavourable notoriety amongst the Hertfordshire farmers, and Lord Verulam, and has been carefully distributed amongst the safe men and dependent farmers only. All these protection societies, of which the monopolist press would make something for their clients, are mere failures. That of Essex, the most plausible, is a mere "bottle of smoke;" a correspondent says, "A friend of mine counted the assembly at Colchester, 186 in number, including fourteen reporters. The Morning Chronicle states that £300 were subscribed at the meeting. This, surely, is an error? Only two sums of £5 each were publicly announced at the meeting. The subscriptions, if published, would prove their landlord and clergy origin."

This is from an eyewitness. Some of the monopolist journals tell us that £1200 have been subscribed in Essex, but by whom? We dare the monopolists to publish the list? We doubt its existence to anything like the amount stated, and whenever the list of subscribers appears, it will be found to be chiefly composed of mortgaged landowners, clergymen, game-preservers, squires who know nothing of agriculture, and are mere rent-devourers, land-agents, the nameless brood of hangers-on of the squires, and political landlords and partisans.

Of the tolerance with which any difference of opinion was received, the reader may judge by the following extract from a letter published in the Ipswich Express:—

"I was exceedingly disgusted on Saturday last with the conduct of some who attended the Agricultural Protection Meeting at the Cape Hotel, Colchester, which, without any provocation whatever, grossly annoyed and insulted a very respectable member of the Society of Friends, who attended as a spectator. It would appear that, in their zeal for the support of their views, some individuals could not bear the sight of an opponent. Some interruption was created in the meeting, owing to the unmanly taunts with which a few noisy farmers endeavoured to annoy the party referred to; but it is much to his praise that he treated silently all their endeavours to excite him to an expression of his feelings, which was obviously their intention, in order that they might have a pretext for turning him out of the room. A tradesman of Colchester endeavoured to remonstrate with the noisy clique, but he was instantly met by vulgar abuse."

This is akin to the ruffianism of Mr. Chaplin at Lincoln; but such conduct invariably recoils on the ill-doers.

THE SQUIRES UNMASKED.

We have elsewhere shown that the "protection societies," formed and forming in various agricultural districts, are the result of landlord instigation, carried out by means of the creatures and agents of the landlords, and with an exclusive reference to landlord interests. The disguise of a tenant-farmers' movement has been best preserved in Essex; elsewhere the mask has slipped aside; while in East Suffolk it has been altogether cast away. At the meeting held at Framlingham by the "East Suffolk Protective Society," the speakers, the speeches and the resolutions, besides being eminently silly and childish, were entirely directed to uphold the landlord-interest in monopoly. The most notable persons were squires and clergymen, and a landed proprietor occupied the chair. To record all the rich things which were said and done at this meeting would exceed our limits, but we will cull a few of the most striking sayings. The Chairman, Mr. Moseley, seems to be a real monopolist—none of your half-and-half ministerial apologists for "protection;" he said:—

"They were all aware that at the last general election the majority expected by the friends of the present Government was twenty or thereabouts. By the exertions of the yeomanry, and of the agricultural interests generally, a majority of one hundred was secured. Yet, what was the result? In the very first session after the present Government were placed in power, Sir Robert Peel brought in his Corn Bill, which lessened the protection given to the agricultural interests;"

and more to the same effect. This seems more like bullying than backing their own selected Minister. Now, what the objects of the society are, the following passages from the chairman's speech will disclose. He said:—

"The first object the members of the East Suffolk Protective Society had in view in the present meeting was to contradict the assertion of the Anti-Corn-Law League, that the maintenance of the Corn Laws was only a matter of importance to the landowner and the owner of tilth. The meeting assembled at Framlingham that day demonstrated the contrary. Knowing the strength of the agricultural interests, their enemies were endeavouring to divide them, and to create jealousies between landlords, tenants, and labourers. They asserted that the Corn Laws were only for the benefit of the owners of land. It would, however, require but a very few words to show that they were for the benefit of all classes."

And how was this shown? Why, by the stale trick of assuming that Free Trade would throw land out of cultivation, whereas it would have exactly the contrary effect:—

"If land were thrown out of cultivation, the labourers now maintained by the cultivation of that land would be thrown out of employment."

But land would not be thrown out of cultivation, as is admitted by all farmers whose opinions are worth a straw; on the contrary, the certainty of moderate prices would direct the attention of all farmers to increase their produce, and in so doing they would employ more labourers than at present. Again he says:—

"The landlords would, it was true, be the last to suffer; but they would, eventually, be sure to lose. And if their rents were reduced one half, what, he begged to ask, would be the effect upon the blacksmiths, the carpenters, the wheelwrights, and the shopkeepers in the rural districts?"

This gentleman finds great virtue in an "if;" but there is no chance of free trade in corn reducing rents one-half, except where landlords shall persist in granting no leases, in preserving game, and harassing their tenants by restrictions on culture, by timber growing, political annoyance, and perpetual interference; and their mortgages will generally prevent them from making any such sacrifice to their prejudices. But why do the squires everywhere say we shall be the last to suffer, whereas, in truth, if suffering there is to be, they must be the first? Rent is the residue after expenses of cultivation and the farmer's profit have been repaid; and if a less receipt is obtained, the first parties who must take less are the landlords; and they know that well enough, and hence these recent Pro-Corn-Law moves. Then he goes on to say:—

"If rents and prices were thus reduced, how, he would ask, were the rates to be paid? How was the national debt to be sustained, and the interest of it paid?"

Rents again! Why, it is rent calculated on a scale of prices much higher than is actually obtained, which has kept up the rates. The funds, which should have been profitably expended in labour on the farm, have gone into the landlord's pocket, while the farmer has had besides to keep the labourers as paupers.

Next we have Lord Henniker, one of the monopolist members for the eastern division of the county:—

"He would tell the agriculturists present at that meeting, that it was the policy of the Anti-Corn-Law League to divide and command. They were desirous of persuading the tenant-farmers that the tenantry were cajoled by their landlords."

Did not the landlords, by law, promise their tenants, first 80s., then 70s., and next 56s. a quarter for wheat? and have the tenants ever obtained those prices for three years together? Yet, have not rents been estimated according to the act-of-parliament scale? Is not this landlord cajolery? Then, having indulged in some silliness about "Bashaws in the East" and an "eel in a tub," his lordship said:—

"He was anxious to impress this one consideration on their minds:—What would be their case if 20s. of protection were taken away from them?"

Do? why their 20s. of protection only afford Lord Henniker and his class an excuse to set rents at a scale of 56s. a quarter for wheat, while the actual average of last week was 49s. 10d.? Protection is at this moment entirely inoperative; in the actual state of our market, if the trade were free, no corn could now be profitably imported.

Lord Rendlesham, the other monopolist member, said:—

"The time had now arrived when the tenants, the clergy, the gentry, and all men who lived by agricultural pursuits, or who were in any way dependant upon agriculture, should combine," &c. &c.

But the gentry, simple-minded men, had no thought for themselves; they only moved for the instruction of tenants and labourers.

"Their (the Free Traders) object was to bring down the price of labour in this country to the level of the wages paid on the Continent."

And then he quoted some alleged calculations as to the rate of continental wages, and added:—

"Who then, he would ask, was the poor man's friend—the Anti-Corn League, who would reduce him to this condition, or the landowner, who claimed protection for agriculture in order that he might give a fair day's wages for a fair day's work?"

Does this lordling legislator know the first principle on which the rate of wages depends? Does he suspect that it is only when employment is constant and profitable that the labourer will be well paid? And has it not been demonstrated again and again that the Corn Laws render employment irregular and profits precarious? Then, after bewildering himself amidst some columns of figures, he said:—

"At one time it was said by the Anti-Corn-Law League, that the repeal of the Corn Laws was to reduce the price of the poor man's bread; yet, at another time, they told the farmer that free trade would do him no harm, as bread could not be much lower in price than under the protective system. Then, why seek the repeal of a law that was inoperative? Why declare that the landlords had taxed bread?"

This is a willful perversion. The Free Traders say, and facts show, that when the crops of this country are not very abundant, the landlords tax the bread of the community, and drive it up to famine point; but when there is a full crop here, the Corn Laws, as regards the farmer, are inoperative, inasmuch as home competition has reduced prices as low as Free Trade would do. The Corn Laws are always robbing somebody, at one time it is the consumer; at another time, the farmer; but the landlord, protected by the law of distress, sits serene amidst national calamity, and either mocks the distress of the public, or groans hypocritically over the ruin which periodically overtakes so many of his victims—the farmers.

But the cream of the whole was the resolutions and the petition; and they strongly marked the landlord origin of the meeting.

Mr. Frewer, who called himself a farmer, moved:—

"1. That any further delay of resistance to the incessant and unprovoked attacks by the Anti-Corn-Law League on the landed interest, would be a dereliction of duty."

Mr. Sims, in moving the second resolution, used this unanswerable argument against a fixed duty; he said:—

"He was opposed to a fixed duty. He believed that it would be what it had been termed, though in a far different sense, by the Free Traders, a fixed injustice. If the price of corn were low, it would not be wanted; if high, it would not be maintained; and he declared that in his opinion, in such circumstances, it ought not to be maintained."

Now it seems not to have occurred to Mr. Sims or his hearers that the same decisive objection applies to the sliding scale, besides some others which are peculiarly its own. The second resolution was:—

"2. That our tacit reception of the declarations of the orators deputed by the League, namely, 'that the Corn Law is a question solely belonging to the proprietors of land and tithes, in which neither the tenant nor agricultural labourers are interested,' may induce the Government and Parliament to believe that the tenant and the labourers in agriculture admit the invidious declaration, which attributes the natural union between landlord, tenant, and labourer, and so weakens the landed interest, that it would be incompetent to oppose the wicked machinations of its enemies."

Now such a resolution could not have been framed by any one but a landowner or a titheowner. Why will farmers suffer themselves to be made catspaws, to propose such nonsensical twaddle?

Mr. Dykes, in proposing the third resolution, said:—

"Was it not unjust that the League should wish that corn alone should be cheap?"

But the League do not want to render corn cheap, they only want it to be left to find its natural price, that it should not be artificially enhanced for the benefit of the only unproductive class in the community, the owners of land. He proposed:—

"3. That it is the imperative duty of the tenantry, labourers, and tradesmen, who derive their chief support from the wealth of the soil, to unite with the proprietors of land and tithes, and to declare in petitions, &c. &c."

Here we have the voice of Jacob, the shrill cry of "land and tithes" again. Mr. Gross said:—

"How was it possible for the farmers of Suffolk to compete with the farmers of Poland?"

Seeing that the Suffolk farmers have good roads and markets, capital, implements of the best kind, intelligent labourers instead of unwilling serfs, and the best agricultural climate in the world, it does argue a somewhat undue share of humility in Mr. Gross and his fellow-monopolists, to imagine they cannot compete with the farmers of Poland. He moved:—

"4. That they are convinced that the ruin of the said proprietors would involve them in its vortex. That they will, therefore, cordially co-operate in the objects of this meeting, the expression of which will strengthen the arguments of our representatives in our support, and induce the Government more favourably to receive the petitions of this meeting."

Here we have the real object of the movement, namely, to act on the Government, exposed with infinite simplicity; and then the meeting was invited to subscribe.

Then we have the petition, a most choice morsel which says:—

"We submit to your consideration that at the last general election their exertions were needlessly employed in returning such representatives as would support the landed interest in your honourable House, and being successful, thereby added to the majority in favour of the present Government in the expectation of a just protection of their interests."

What will Sir Robert Peel and his adherent, Lord Heniker, think of that?

However they may have been disappointed in this by the alterations in the Corn Laws of 1828, and by the Tariff, they did not oppose them with that hostility which the apprehension of diminution of protection suggested; but submitted to the change to their disadvantage in the hope of concluding the violent asperity of the master manufacturers, in which they lament their total failure; indeed they are forced by those disappointing results to state, that concessions only add strength to the inimical projects for the complete ruin of all classes in agriculture; for it is admitted by both political economists and the Corn-Law Leaguers that the abrogation of that law would throw out of cultivation the inferior soils of this country; and this must deprive the husbandmen now employed upon them in proportion to their extent, which would create a surplus demand for work, and consequently reduce the wages of labourers in agriculture."

Now, nothing of this sort is admitted by the League, or by any economists we know except such crotchety persons as Colonel Torrens, whose absurdities have been so ably exposed and refuted by Mr. Senior in the "Edinburgh Review." There is a long declamatory conclusion, but it is so innocent of meaning that we do not think it worth reprinting. We have thus fully examined the Suffolk meeting, because it discloses, with less disguise than most others, the landlord-machinery by which these "Protection Societies" are worked. Can the squire really imagine any one, or any class besides themselves, will be duped by such demonstrations? The ostrich hiding its head in a bush is a model of provident discretion compared with the squirearchy, who hope in this eleventh hour to avert the fate of Monopoly by any thing so false, so hollow, and so feeble as the recent Pro-Corn-Law demonstrations.

FARMERS, BEHOLD YOUR "FRIENDS!"

The following passages are from an agricultural journal, and from an article in that journal expressly intended to urge the farmers to become active participants in the landlords' notable scheme of getting up the steam in favour of the Corn Laws:—

"Alas! for the farmer! high and low, rich and poor, are set at him. Ministers of state squeeze him because he is simple and solitary, and only speaks through his landlord. Landlords squeeze him, because if he do not consent to pay them the rent they demand, there are plenty more who will. Labourers are set against him, because, being squeezed by both, he cannot pay for their labour as much as he would wish."—Mark-lane Express.

And again:—

"His landlord, who, without him, would be nothing (how many landlords per thousand, are there, who would rise early and go to bed late, after a whole day of toil, in cultivating their vast estates as he cultivates them?)—his landlord, we say, takes advantage of being a party in making those laws to double or treble his rents, knowing that he must pay whatever is charged because he cannot help himself."—Mark-lane Express.

Though these truths are now put forth by the employees of the landowners as the means of stimulating the farmers to political agitation in aid of monopoly, they will outlive the occasion. The landlords were trusted by the farmers in 1841, and the farming-class universally believing they betrayed their trust, to ask the farmers again to move under landlord leadership is obviously hopeless; and the scheme of getting up a Pro-Corn-law movement, in which the farmers should seem to act for themselves, has been attempted instead. But the naked avowal of objects and motives—rents, mortgages, marriage settlements—which arouse the majority of landowners, will not attract the farmers; and it, therefore, becomes necessary for the agents and organs of the squire to season their fallacies and exaggerations with some spice of truth. Hence such statements as those we have extracted from the Mark-lane Express are slipped into monopolist articles or speeches, and are attempted to be connected with the delusive views the landlords desire to promulgate. Let the farmers remember the admission of these truths, and a little reflection and observation must quickly show them that the truths will remain after the unsubstantial delusions, in which for immediate objects they have been set, shall have been dissipated into thin air. It is no small part of the benefit of the meetings by which the landlords are now compelled to put a pressure upon their own Ministry, that the farmers will learn a lesson of self-reliance. They are now invited, for the first time, into the councils of the landowners; they are asked, by reference to their own supposed interest in the Corn Laws, to come to the rescue of a failing and a bankrupt monopoly.

HINTS FOR AGRICULTURISTS.

COMPETITION FOR LAND.—It is a matter of common remark that the ordinary, every-day transactions of men of business form a better test of the real effect of changes, past or contemplated, in the laws which affect their business than the loud assertions of political partisans. Take, for instance, the following paragraph:—

"The customary period for letting farms in the county of Northumberland is at hand, and it has been remarked that competition for occupying and working land was never more active than at present."—Provincial paper.

Now, the fact here recorded shows that, in Northumberland at all events, the absolute certainty that the Corn Laws will be repealed within a very short time does not diminish the "competition for working and occupying land," and the same thing is observable in other districts.

DESTITUTION OF THE PEASANTRY.—The following letter from a correspondent draws attention to a passage from the Agricultural Society's Journal, which discloses the actual state of the Wiltshire labourers in husbandry. In fact, the condition of the labourers of England forms a standing indictment against the Corn Laws and those landowners who support them.

"To the EDITOR of the LEAGUE.

"SIR,—Enclosed you will find an account of the condition of the Wiltshire labourers, from a source at which even Mr. Banks can hardly cavil, viz., a letter to Mr. Pusey, published by him in the 'Journal of the Agricultural Society,' vol. iv., part 1.

"The poverty of the labourer, arising from a bad system of farming, is lamentable to contemplate; they only who have been masters of well-paid labourers, as well as of men who only receive the miserable pittance of 7s. or 8s. per week, can fully appreciate the advantages to be derived by making work as plentiful here as in other parts of the kingdom. The injuriousness of a system that creates so little labour is most apparent by a comparison of the different states of the labourer in the north and the south of England. In every respect the Wiltshire labourer has the disadvantage: most of his necessary wants are dearer; land is generally let to him at a higher rate than to the farmer; his house often comfortable and confined, even to decency; his wages barely sufficient to find his family with food."—By Mr. Walkden, Salisbury-plain, near Devizes.—Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society, part 1, vol. iv.

"Here we see the real opinion of the agriculturists themselves (in their unguarded moments) respecting the labourers' share in the blessings of the sliding-scale!" "H. W."

ANTI-CORN-LAW LECTURE.—On Monday evening last a second lecture, on the evils of the Corn Laws, was delivered in the Temperance Hall by Mr. Falvey.

NEWCASTLE.—The Newcastle Anti-Corn-Law Society will either hold a public meeting in the theatre, or a soirée in the Music-hall, on the occasion of Mr. Cobden's visit. The committee have requested Mr. Harle's permission to present a copy of his "letter" to each of the freemen in Newcastle.

THE CORN LAWS.—On Monday evening, the Young Men's Free-Trade Association, Gateshead, met at Mr. Rickaby's, when it was resolved, that at each meeting essays be read and addresses made on the principles of Free Trade. W. Kell, Esq., was elected president, and Mr. John Robson and Mr. John Fawcett vice-presidents, for the ensuing year.

FREE TRADE.—THE CORN LAWS.—Thursday evening the 11th inst., Mr. Falvey delivered, in the Temperance Hall, the first of two lectures on the Corn Laws, and other restrictive laws, passed by the class legislators of this country for their presumed benefit, under the specious plea of "protecting native industry." The hall was about two thirds filled by an attentive and orderly audience, consisting almost entirely of working men.—Bolton Free Press.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We had prepared upwards of two columns of replies to our correspondents this week, but must postpone their insertion from a very heavy press of other matter of more immediate interest.

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any person forwarding 3s. 3d. by Post-office order, to the Publisher, 67, Fleet-street, London, will have one quarter's copies of the LEAGUE forwarded by post on the days of publication. Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with J. Gadaby, Newall's-buildings, Manchester; and the LEAGUE may be had by order of any news-agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

LEAGUE MEETING.—THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN.—THE FIRST MEETING for the present year of the NATIONAL ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE, will be held in the THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN, on THURSDAY EVENING NEXT, the 26th inst. The meeting will be addressed by T. M. Gibson, Esq., M.P.; the Hon. Edward Bouverie; the Rev. John Bunney, of Camberwell; and W. J. Fox, Esq. GEORGE WILSON, Esq., will take the Chair precisely at Seven o'clock. Cards of admission to the stage and boxes may be had on application after Monday next, at the Central Office of the League, No. 67, Fleet-street. The Cards of Registered Members of the League will, as heretofore, admit to the Pit and Galleries of the Theatre.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, January 20, 1844.

AGRICULTURAL INSTITUTES.

The formation of clubs and societies, in which farmers will have opportunities of discussing their real interests, affords good reasons for congratulation to the friends of Free Trade. Hitherto the agriculturists have been contented to let others think for them, to take their opinions ready-made from the squire, the parson, or the land-agent, and hence they have been led to clamour for laws which, under the name of protection, condemned them to servitude. Mutual discussion, an examination of each farmer's condition, and a comparison of his position with that of tenant-farmers in other parts of England and on the Continent, will soon lead the agriculturists of the south to discover the real evils against which they require protection, and the grievances which ought to be redressed. We regard these societies as a kind of agricultural institutes likely to be of as much value to the farmers as mechanics' institutes have been to the operatives; they will soon have lectures on natural history, comparing the national value of a pheasantry and a peasantry—teachers of botany, who will estimate the service rendered to corn-fields by hares and rabbits—arithmetical instructors, who will calculate what share of the farmer's produce goes to pay rent and tithe, and who will compare the proportion with that paid by his forefathers—and historians, who will show that property in land was a social institution, framed for securing the defence of the country, and that not only has property duties as well as rights, but that the duties are more imperative than the rights.

The necessity of these institutions is abundantly proved by the gross ignorance manifested at the meetings for forming these associations. Refuted fallacies have been gravely repeated, and have been heard without shouts of laughter. Misrepresentations so coarse and palpable, that one wonders at the power of face possessed by the utterer, have been vented by men of title and nominal education; and clergymen have descended from the pulpit to show, by their actions, that they believe in the repeal of the ninth commandment. But we are consoled for this melancholy exhibition of the low state of intelligence in the country by seeing that the farmers have begun, many ways, to think and consult for themselves. When once movement has been given to the stagnant waters, their future progress may be considered a matter of certainty. In the first instance, to be sure, many impurities will be thrown to the surface, and "slimy things that crawl with legs" will croak, and hiss, and dart venom; but, as the mass moves onward, it will leave its pollutions behind in the mud, and, by mere progression, clarify itself into a limpid stream.

That these associations should in the first instance assail the League, neither surprises nor annoys us. Men for the first time trying the experiment of thinking for themselves are like patients who have just been couched—the first glimmerings of light they obtain mislead rather than direct them. But the term of probation will soon be passed. Like the fabled islanders on whose shores a cargo of mirrors had been cast, and who,

"By means of looking-glasses, soon became a most reflecting nation," the farmers will soon become accustomed to the process of thinking, and will soon discover the proper objects on which to exercise their awakened faculties.

So far from regarding these associations with jealousy, we are eager to extend to them the right hand of fellowship. If they send us reports of their proceedings, we shall gladly publish them in the LEAGUE, accompanied by such comments as will accelerate the progress of agricultural enlightenment. We are ready to supply to their secretaries explanations of all that perplexes, and refutations of all that misleads, the farmers. We are anxious to deliver them from the mental thralldom which is the great source of their political bondage.

Their lies before us an advertisement of an estate to be sold within nine miles of Cambridge, and we find the tenants enumerated as part of the live stock, with just such an attestation to their character as the planters of South Carolina give when announcing the sale of slaves. Here are the very words:—

"Seventy-two acres of highly productive arable land, second to none of the gardening ground in the most esteemed districts of Bedfordshire, highly recommending itself to the market gardener, who could, with great facility, command three important markets, at neither of which has the supply of garden produce been hitherto equal to the demand; also an excellent farmhouse and homestead, several cottages, orchards, and gardens, inhabited by a people most respectful to their superiors, most grateful, most obedient."

Independent thinking is what the farmers sadly want, and we are heartily glad that they have discovered this truth for themselves. We will venture to predict that the new associations will find but little favour with landlords of the Buckingham and Newcastle school. "Cannot I do what I like with my own?" is a question too likely to receive a rough answer from an instructed agriculturist for its propounder to encourage any process of self-education among the farmers. We, therefore, in all sincerity, offer to the new associations all the aid which the LEAGUE can afford; and we shall pay every attention to the communications which, we hope, will be forwarded to us by their secretaries.

REVIEW.

A System of Logic. By J. S. MILL, Esq. London. Parker.

Whately, Whewell, and Mill are unquestionably the three most eminent cultivators of mental and moral philosophy in the present generation. Archbishop Whately revived the study of logic at a period when reasoning had ceased to be regarded as an art worthy of cultivation, and when all through our literature declamation was fast usurping the place of argument, and amplified assertion was commonly mistaken for continuous proof: the publication of his treatise on logic forms an era in literary history; his unequalled powers of illustration enabled him to give vigour and vitality to its dry scholastic forms—the skeletons became clothed with flesh, the lifeless abstractions were endowed with animation. He showed that logic, instead of being an exercise of the schools, entered largely into the business of public and private life, and he pointed out the source of multitudinous practical errors in the fallacious reasoning by which men imposed not only on others but themselves. Passing from pure logic, or the reasoning on certainties to the more general reasoning on probabilities, the archbishop in that work, to which we wish he had given a more appropriate name—his Rhetoric—entered fully into the consideration of the causes that induce assent to probable evidence, and thus completed the system of logic so far as it is applicable to life and business.

Professor Whewell, whose range of scientific examination is probably unequalled by any living philosopher, directed his attention to the evidence for the truths of the experimental and inductive sciences, a subject which had been all but wholly neglected since the days of Lord Bacon. Over the entire circle of experimental science he shed a light which pointed out the paths for investigation, and cleared away "the shadows, mists, and darkness" which rest upon "the wide unbounded prospect" of unexplored physical truths.

Mr. Mill has struck out for himself a new line of usefulness; without quite neglecting the practical applications of logic as an art, his main object is to establish what are its principles as a science, to fix the immutable laws by which the mind estimates truth, and to show the modifications which these laws receive in their several relations to the abstract and the concrete. Equally eminent as a metaphysician and a moralist, Mr. Mill everywhere manifests an intense love of truth, and his admirable analysis of the human faculties is rendered subservient to the high and holy purpose for which man was endowed with such faculties by his Creator, the acquisition of truth, and the rejection of error. While, as a philosopher, Mr. Mill has won for himself a place beside Locke and Bacon, as a moralist he is superior to both, for he has successfully shown that the principles of ethical science may be based on the most rigid rules of reason.

In a popular newspaper like the LEAGUE, it would be out of place to enter into a scientific discussion of a work, every page of which might easily be developed into a volume; but we may be permitted to say, that none are more concerned in the diffusion of correct principles of reasoning than the friends of Free Trade. The whole occupation of the League, from its first formation, has been the exposure of fallacies; and that we have been tolerably successful, is pretty evident from our adversaries being compelled to have recourse to direct falsehoods: when "abuse of words" fails, recourse is always had to "words of abuse."

It is of importance that we should bear constantly in mind, that every thing which promotes general intelligence, facilitates the discovery of truth, helps the detection of error, and tends to develop high moral principle, directly advances the cause of Free Trade. In all these various ways Mr. Mill has rendered special service to us, while he has conferred important advantages on the general community; and we therefore earnestly recommend his work to our readers.

The Child's Picture and Verse Book, commonly called "Otto Speckter's Fable Book." Translated by Mary Howitt. London: Longman and Co.

We regret that this beautiful little work did not appear before Christmas, for we should have earnestly recommended it as one of the best gift-books that has appeared for many a long day. Splendidly bound, illustrated with more than one hundred wood engravings, and printed in the first style of typography, the book has few rivals in external attractions; but these are the smaller part of its merits. Mary Howitt has versified the fables with a poetic vigour, united to a moral purity, which is calculated to implant good principle and cultivate sound taste. French and German versions are given on the pages corresponding with the English fables, and thus, in addition to its other merits, the work will be a valuable help in the domestic teaching of foreign languages.

We are reminded by this work of another less-worthy publication, with which the name of Otto Speckter is connected: we allude to "Puss in Boots," just published by Mr. Murray, which is very creditable in its outward appearance, and utterly discreditable in everything else. The very worst and most vulgar version of the old nursery tale is reprinted without any notice of the interesting variations with which the story is told in different countries; the Neapolitan form of the story adds a conclusion which admirably "points the moral and adorns the tale;" but to get these variations Mr. Murray must have employed a competent editor, and this the worthy publisher did not think necessary. The descriptions appended to the plates are written in a loose slipshod style, which renders the book unfit for the young, unless we wish to render them familiar with bad English.

The lithographs which form the chief attraction of the volume are copied from Otto Speckter's plates, but we are not told whether the consent of the original proprietors was obtained to this proceeding. Now, Mr. Murray has been one of the loudest declaimers against the interference of foreign publishers with English copyright, and we therefore feel some curiosity to learn whether Mr. Murray has or has not been guilty of the legalized piracy which he has made himself not a little conspicuous in denouncing?

KNARESBOROUGH.—The agents of the Anti-Corn-Law League were actively employed on Wednesday last in this town, it being market day, in distributing the address of that body to the electors for the West Riding, who attend that market.—Leeds Mercury.

THE FUNDS.

| | Mon. Jan. 12 | Tues. Jan. 13 | Wed. Jan. 14 | Thurs. Jan. 15 | Fri. Jan. 16 | Sat. Jan. 17 |
|--------------------------|-----------------|------------------|-----------------|-------------------|-----------------|-----------------|
| Bank Stock..... | 187 | 187 | 188 | 189 | 189 | 191 |
| 3 per Ct. Red. Ann. | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 |
| 3 per Ct. Cons. Ann. | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 |
| 3 1/2 per Ct. Red. Ann. | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 |
| 3 1/2 per Ct. Cons. Ann. | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 |
| Long An. Ex. 1850 | 12 11-16 | 12 11-16 | 12 11-16 | 12 11-16 | 12 11-16 | 11 1/2 |
| Cons. for Acc. | 96 1/2 | 96 1/2 | 96 1/2 | 96 1/2 | 96 1/2 | 97 |
| Exc. Bills, £1000 | 66 7 pm. | 67 pm. | 67 pm. | 67 pm. | 67 pm. | 67 pm. |
| India Bonds..... | 274 | 274 | 274 | 274 | 274 | 275 |
| Belgian 5 per Ct. | 104 | 104 | 104 | 104 | 104 | 104 |
| Brazilian 5 per Ct. | 74 | 74 | 74 | 74 | 74 | 74 |
| Chilian..... | 101 | 101 | 101 | 101 | 101 | 102 |
| Colomb. ex. Venes. | 11 1/2 | 11 1/2 | 11 1/2 | 11 1/2 | 11 1/2 | 11 1/2 |
| Danish..... | 87 | 87 | 87 | 87 | 87 | 87 |
| Dutch 5 per Cent. | 100 1/2 | 100 1/2 | 100 1/2 | 100 1/2 | 100 1/2 | 100 1/2 |
| Dutch 2 1/2 per Ct. | 84 1/2 | 84 1/2 | 84 1/2 | 84 1/2 | 84 1/2 | 84 1/2 |
| Mexican, 1837 .. | 32 1/2 | 32 1/2 | 32 1/2 | 32 1/2 | 32 1/2 | 32 1/2 |
| Portuguese, conv. | 42 1/2 | 42 1/2 | 42 1/2 | 42 1/2 | 42 1/2 | 42 1/2 |
| Russian 5 per Ct. | 31 | 31 | 30 1/2 | 30 1/2 | 30 1/2 | 30 1/2 |
| Austrian..... | — | — | — | — | — | 113 1/2 |
| Peruvian..... | — | 22 1/2 | 22 1/2 | 22 1/2 | 22 1/2 | — |

MARKETS.

CORN MARKET.

MARK-LANE, Monday, Jan. 15.—There was a short supply of English Wheat at market this morning, and the condition of it being rather improved, an advance of 1s. was readily obtained for the best qualities; other descriptions were held firmly for a similar advance, but they were taken off slowly, and the stands were not cleared at the close of the market. The best qualities of free Foreign were held at higher rates; but for this considerable business would have been done; as it was the transactions were not extensive. The supply of Barley was large, and prices were 1s. lower than last week. There was no alteration in the value of Beans and Peas. Notwithstanding a good supply of Oats from Ireland, and a fair show of Scotch and English, an improvement of 6d. per qr. was obtained on all descriptions from this day week.

S. H. LUCAS and SON.

| | Wheat. | Barley. | Oats. | Beans. | Peas. |
|--------------|--------|---------|--------|--------|-------|
| English..... | 44 1/2 | 35 1/2 | 35 1/2 | 12 1/2 | 9 1/2 |
| Scotch..... | — | 36 1/2 | 10 1/2 | — | — |
| Irish..... | 12 | 18 1/2 | 27 1/2 | — | — |
| Foreign..... | 14 1/2 | 37 1/2 | 24 | — | 4 1/2 |

Flour, 4870 sacks, 1509 bls. Malt, 6607 qrs.

| Currency per imperial measure. | | Peas, Grey | |
|--------------------------------|------------|-------------------------------|------------|
| Wheat, English, White | 48s to 60s | Maple..... | 30s to 32s |
| New..... | 48s to 60s | Malt, Pale Suffolk and | 32s to 34s |
| Do. do., Old 60s to 64s | | Norfolk..... | 34s to 36s |
| Do. Red, New 42s to 44s | | Oatmeal..... | 34s to 36s |
| Do. do., Old 50s to 52s | | Do. Short..... | 31s to 33s |
| Dantzic..... | 57s to 63s | Do. Scotch..... | 31s to 33s |
| Stettin..... | 50s to 57s | Do. Potatoes..... | 22s to 24s |
| Barley, Malt..... | 32s to 34s | Do. Short..... | 17s to 18s |
| Distilling..... | 30s to 32s | Do. do., New 19s to 21s | |
| Grinding..... | 26s to 30s | Do. Black..... | 17s to 18s |
| Beans, Tick, New 26s to 28s | | Do. Galway..... | 16s to 17s |
| Do., Old..... | 23s to 30s | Flour, town made and | |
| Harrow, New 28s to 30s | | best country marks 45s to 60s | |
| Do., Old..... | 30s to 32s | Norfolk and Suff. | |
| Pigeons, New 29s to 31s | | folk..... | 40s to 42s |
| Do., Old..... | 28s to 30s | | |
| Peas, White..... | 31s to 32s | | |
| Do., Bolders..... | 34s to 36s | | |

MARK-LANE, Friday, Jan. 19.—There is very little English Wheat fresh up since Monday; it meets a ready sale at the prices of that day. The demand for Foreign is also, but Monday's prices are well supported. There is a good supply of English and Foreign Barley; the best qualities maintain Monday's rates, other descriptions are scarcely so good sale. The supply of Irish Oats is very moderate; a few English and Scotch vessels have arrived during the week. The trade is not brisk, but Monday's rates are fully supported, and in some instances a trifling advance has been obtained. No alteration in Beans and Peas.

S. H. LUCAS and SON.

Account of Corn, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 13th to the 19th of Jan., both inclusive.

| | English. | Irish. | Foreign. |
|-------------|----------|--------|----------|
| Wheat..... | 3240 | — | 3280 |
| Barley..... | 6500 | 620 | 3070 |
| Oats..... | 5730 | 3030 | 800 |

Flour 4870 sacks.

A WEEKLY REPORT of the NUMBER of QUARTERS, and the AVERAGE PRICE of CORN and GRAIN, sold in the several Counties of England and Wales (comprising the Two Hundred and Ninety Towns named in the Act of the 5th Vic., cap. 14), which governs Duty.

WEEK ENDED JANUARY 19, 1844.

| | WHEAT. | BARLEY. | OATS. | BEANS. |
|-------------------------|-------------|-------------|-------------|-------------|
| | Qrs. Aver. | Qrs. Aver. | Qrs. Aver. | Qrs. Aver. |
| | sold. price | sold. price | sold. price | sold. price |
| Weekly Averages..... | 101,759 50 | 9,121,612 | 53 0 47,080 | 18 9 0009 |
| Aggregate Averages..... | 50 5 | 32 3 | 18 7 | 30 7 |
| Duty..... | 20 0 | 6 0 | 8 0 | 10 6 |

LONDON AVERAGES for the Week ending Jan. 19, 1844.

| | Qrs. | Price. | Qrs. | Price. |
|-------------|-------|-----------|------------|----------------|
| Wheat..... | 4193 | 51s. 10d. | Rye..... | 1849 28s. 7d. |
| Barley..... | 7463 | 30s. 1d. | Beans..... | 1026 30s. 10d. |
| Oats..... | 21753 | 19s. 11d. | Peas..... | — |

FOREIGN PROVISION TRADE.

At public sale yesterday, by Messrs. Keeling and Hunt, 35 tierces Labrador salmon sold at 63s per tierce, duty paid—about 24d. per lb.; 50 boxes cheese, ex Victoria, a New York, sold at 48s. per cwt., duty paid; 50 ditto, ex Prince Albert, from the same port, realized 53s. to 54s., being the finest yet imported; 50 ditto, ex Hendrik Hudson, a New York, sold at 44s to 45s.; 30 kegs ox tongues, ex Gladstone, a New York, sold by the keg, in bond, at 20s. to 21s.—these prices are about equal to 2s. 2d. each tongue, duty paid; 20 half-barrels sausages, ex Wellington, a New York, sold at 10d. per lb., duty paid; 100 dried American hams, ex Mediator, a New York, sold at 38s. per cwt. in bond; 50 half barrels fine family beef, ex Prince Albert, a New York, went at 35s. to 36s. 6d. in bond, each barrel contained 100lbs.; 5 cwt. American smoked beef sold at 35s. to 36s. 6d. per cwt. duty paid; 30 tierces prime mess beef, ex Toronto, a New York, all sold at 74s. in bond, the tierces contained 304lbs.; 25 barrels prime mess pork, ex Empress, a New York, went at 45s. per barrel of 200lbs. in bond; 9 tierces pork middles sold at 24s. per cwt. in bond; 30 kegs lard, ex Hendrik Hudson, a New York, sold at 37s. 6d. per cwt., duty paid—in selling this parcel, the broker stated that the candle tins burning on the table was made from the stearine extracted from hogs' lard, and that parcels of such candles were expected in this country, and could be sold on terms to compete with the best English make; 25 tierces of prime mess beef, ex Lady Seaton, a Montreal, sold at 74s. in bond—tierces contained 304 lbs. each; 30 tierces beef, ex Ellen, a Port Phillip, found no offer; 30 casks mess beef, ex Barrys, a Cape of Good Hope, was in the same predicament. The goods thus sold presented a marked improvement in their saleable quality, and an Irish curer in the room informed us that the staple of the American provisions, as well as of the refused colonial beef, was as good as possible, but that inferior salt and too much saltpetre had been used in curing.—Commercial Daily List.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 16.

BANKRUPTCIES SUPERSEDED.

J. KIDD, Kendal, Westmorland, grocer.

J. and F. HARWOOD, Fenchurch-street, City, stationers.

BANKRUPTS.

J. PIGGOTT, jun., Richmond, Surrey, cabinet maker. [Brown and Co., Commercial-chambers, Mining lane.

M. J. DYKE, Romsey, Hants, innkeeper. [Curtis, Romsey; Bower and Co., Chancery-lane.

W. BROMLEY, Gray's-inn-square, Gray's-inn, scrivener. [Wilde, Rees, and Co., College-hill.

C. S. Sweeney, Albion-place, Hyde Park-square, apothecary. [Mawc, New Bridge-street.

H. BLEBINGER and J. BLEBINGER, Cataton-street, City, warehousemen. [Sperry, Broad-street-buildings, City.

E. HOUBON, Thrapston, Northamptonshire, linen draper. [Sole, Aldermanbury.

W. BAKER, Lower Grosvenor-street, Bond-street, surgeon. [Lloyd, Great James-street, Bedford-row.

J. C. KNILL, Gloucester, tailor. [Smallbridge, Gloucester.

G. PHILLIPS, Leicester, innkeeper. [Henderson, Mansell-street, Goodman's-fields.

DIVIDENDS.

Feb. 8. T. Creeke, Cambridge, tailor—Feb. 6. J. Marshall, Birch-lane, merchant—Feb. 6. J. W. Uyer, Colchester, plumber—Feb. 7. A. W. and T. S. Lowman, Eastleap, chiselmongers—Feb. 7. T. H. Jackson, Sheffield, glass cutter—Feb. 13. T. W. Wilson, Barnsley, Yorkshire, linen manufacturer—Feb. 12. W. Sheppard, Iron Acton, Gloucestershire, miller—Feb. 8. C. Pearrell, Anderton, Cheshire, boiler maker—Feb. 8. W. H. and T. B. Turner, Blackburn, cotton spinners—Feb. 9. W. Smithson, Thirsk, Yorkshire, linen and woollen draper—Feb. 9. M. Willock, Huddersfield, merchant—Feb. 9. T. Johnson, Liverpool, printer—Feb. 8. G. Brinsmead, Bideford, Devonshire, retailer of flour.

CERTIFICATES.

Feb. 8. J. R. Spencer, Halstead, Essex, tanner—Feb. 13. C. Leaf, Wood-street, Cheapside, warehouseman—Feb. 8. T. Wright, Blackmore-street, chiselmonger—Feb. 6. R. Hale, Margate, bookseller—Feb. 7. R. T. Millbank, Burwood-place, Rdgware-road, apothecary—Feb. 6. T. Martin, Pavement, Moorfields, victualler—Feb. 7. J. Mallett, Hadley, miller—Feb. 6. G. Z. White, Southampton, stone mason.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.

A. MACKAY, Musselburgh, merchant—J. CAIRNS, Kippendavis, Perthshire, farmer—W. BROWN, Troon, merchant—C. BLAIR, Alloa, maltster.

FRIDAY, JAN. 19.

BANKRUPTCY SUPERSEDED.
J. HOWE, table knife manufacturer, Sheffield.

BANKRUPT.
J. REAVELEY, paper commission agent, Hammond's-wharf, Queenhithe, [Cooper, Old Cavendish-street, W. BEARUP, builder, Newcastle-upon-Tyne. [Lambert, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.
W. LEWIS, jun., baker, Axbridge, Somersetshire. [Robins and Co., Wells, Somersetshire.
T. BENTLEY, calico printer, Eccleston, Lancashire. [Alcock and Dixon, Burnley; Bennett, Manchester.

PRICE OF SUGAR.

The Average Price of Brown or Muscovado Sugar for the Week ending Jan. 16, 1844, is 35s. 2d. per cwt., exclusive of the Duties of Customs paid or payable thereon on the Importation thereof into Great Britain.

Just published.
BRITISH AND FOREIGN REVIEW, No. XXXII.

- Contents:—
1. Criticism and Criticism in France.
2. Dr. Arnold's Lectures.—The Church and State.
3. The Musical Antiquarian Society.
4. The Principles of Taxation applied.
5. Secret Diplomacy of Louis XIV.
6. The Oxford Controversy.—Anglo-Catholicism.
7. The Oregon Territory.
8. Laing's Notes of a Traveller.
9. Ireland.—Repeal of the Union.
10. Note on the Law of Debtor and Creditor.
11. Postscript on the Oregon Territory Question.—The Prel. Davis's Message.

London: R. and J. H. Taylor, Red Lion-court, Fleet street.

CHEAPEST ILLUSTRATED WORK EVER PUBLISHED.

PAYNE'S UNIVERSUM; or, Pictorial World.
Edited by CHARLES EDWARDS, Esq. Being a collection of Engravings of Views in all Countries, Portraits of Great Men, and Specimens of Works of Art, of all ages and of every character, will be published in Monthly Parts, each containing Four highly-finished STEEL ENGRAVINGS, from new plates engraved expressly for this work, printed on demy quarto paper, and will be accompanied with 8 to 12 pages of letter-press, uniform with China, America, &c. &c.
Three Premiums will be given with the 4th, 8th, and 12th Parts.—(See Prospectus.)

"Payne's Universum, or Pictorial World.—The first number of this delightful publication has just appeared, and certainly gives ample proof that the work will be carried out in a manner that will reflect the highest credit upon its conductors. There are four beautiful engravings in it which may well vie with any that have appeared before the world in this or any other form. It is the other parts but equal that now under our consideration, they will amply deserve what we are sure they will receive, the unqualified patronage of the public."—Morning Advertiser.
London: Published by Brain and Payne, 12, Paternoster-row; and to be had of the following Agents, and of all Booksellers:—Wrightson and Webb, Birmingham; G. and J. Smythe, Liverpool; Galt and Anderson, Manchester; Blincoe and Sims, Leeds; John Kennedy, Edinburgh; David Bryce, Glasgow; Henry Davies, Cheltenham; K. Nettleton, Plymouth; Wreart and Co., Exeter; Oldland, Bristol; Blinn and Goodwin, Bath; J. Tyler, Brighton; Cussons, Hull; Hargreaves, York; Bruce and Co., Newcastle-upon-Tyne; E. Simmonds, Farnham; Bradford and Co., Cork; H. Green, Belfast.

Now ready. Second Edition, price 4s. 6d.
THE PAPAL AND HIERARCHICAL SYSTEM
compared with the RELIGION of the NEW TESTAMENT.
A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land; the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means, and my people love to have it so, and what will ye do in the end thereof?—Jer. v. 30, 31.
So clear and scriptural are the views put forth, and so truly Protestant, that the Author in writing and publishing the work has conferred an incalculable benefit, and at a most seasonable time, upon the Christian church.—Evangelical Magazine, Aug., 1843.
"A reasonable and able discussion of a subject which will, ere long, command the rapid attention of the civilized world."—Nonconformist, Sept., 1843.
Just published, price One Shilling.

HYDROPATHY DEFENDED BY FACTS; or, the COLD WATER CURE shown to be as safe in Practice as it is rational in Theory. By A. COWART, surgeon, R.N., Ramsgate.
CHIEF EDITIONS OF DYMOND'S ESSAYS.
Complete in 1 vol. at 3s. 6d., originally published in 3 vols. at 21s. The Seventh Thousand of this Edition.

ESSAYS ON THE PRINCIPLES OF MORALITY, and on the Private and Political Rights and Obligations of Mankind. By JONATHAN DYMOND, Author of "An Enquiry into the Accordancy of War with the Principles of Christianity," &c.
In this work will be found some clear views on the popular questions of the day—the Education of the People, and the Connexion between Church and State.
Price 1s.

ESSAY ON THE ACCORDANCY OF WAR with the PRINCIPLES OF CHRISTIANITY. By JONATHAN DYMOND.
"No one can hope to overthrow the reasoning of Dymond without denying the truth of the book (the Bible) from which he deduces his arguments."—New Edition, with Additions and Corrections, price 4s. 6d.

THE WATER CURE. By E. S. ABDEY, A.M., Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge, and Author of "A Journal, &c., in the United States."
"Mr. Abdey is already favourably known to the public as an author, and his present able work may be safely recommended as containing the best exposition of the principles of Hydropathy, as well as an interesting and convincing statement of facts."
London: Charles Gilpin, 8, Bishopgate Without.

WORTHY OF REMARK.—The fact that many of the principal Hospitals in the kingdom—among which it is sufficient to name Guy's, St. George's, and the Westminster, in the metropolis, and the Manchester, Bristol, and Brighton Infirmarys—have adopted HETTER'S PATENT BRANDY, in preference to Foreign, affords a sufficient guarantee to the consumers of Brandy of the extreme purity of the article; the connoisseur being, at the same time, baffled in his attempt to distinguish between its flavour and that of fine Cognac.—Price, pale or coloured, in quantities not less than Two Gallons, Eighteen Shillings per Gallon, at the Distillery, No. 7, Smithfield-bars, leading to St. John-street.

A BRONZE SCROLL FENDER for 15s.—RIPON and BURTON are now offering the most extensive assortment of FENDERS in London, embracing every possible variety, at prices 20 per cent. under any other house. Iron fenders, 3 feet long, from 4s. 6d.; 2 feet 6 in. 3d.; 4 feet, 6s.; ditto bronzed, 3 feet, from 6s.; 3 feet 6 in., 7s.; 4 feet, 8s.; rich scroll fenders bronzed, from 10s.; or with steel rod and moulding, from 12s.; polished steel and ornate mounted fenders at proportionate prices. Fire-irons for chambers, 1s. 9d. per set; ditto steel ditto from 1s. 6d.; handsome ditto, with cut heads, 6s. 6d.; newest patterns, with elegant bronzed heads, 11s. 6d.—Detailed catalogues, with engravings, sent (per post) free.

THE ONLY SAFE AND HEALTHY STOVES.
THE PATENT CHUNK and VESTA STOVES are the only ones recommended by the faculty for the bedrooms of invalids, and other places where a genial warmth is requisite. They are without doors, from which, in Arnold's (whether improved or not) and all others, the impure gases escape; consequently, the evils attendant upon such escapes, as headache, dizziness, &c., as well as fatal explosions, cannot occur in the use of them. These stoves having stood the test of five years, during which time upwards of five thousand have been fixed in churches, schools, halls, forcing pits, nurseries, &c., they are most confidently offered to the public. They have been found to combine, in an extraordinary degree, great simplicity of use and certainty of action, with perfect safety, at an almost incredible small cost for fuel (coke or clinders).—Chunk, 60s. each; Vesta, 80s. each.

THE PYRION STOVE (also a patent) has most of the advantages of the Chunk and Vesta, with the extremely novel one of showing the fire (as in a register stove) in one moment; it is eminently a ventilating stove, and will be found invaluable where any prejudice exists against a close stove: price 60s. Full particulars, with engravings and testimonials, post free.

THE PERFECT SUBSTITUTE FOR SILVER.
The material RIPON and BURTON offer to the public has for the last eight years been found equal to silver in appearance and sweetness, and superior to it in durability. Of the prices of tea sets, water, candlesticks, and all articles hitherto made in silver, a detailed catalogue, with engravings, will be sent (gratis) post-free.

| | Middle | Threaded | VICTORIA |
|--|----------|----------|----------|
| Table Spoons and Forks, full size, per dozen | 12s. 0d. | 27s. 0d. | 30s. 0d. |
| Desert ditto and ditto, ditto | 10s. 0d. | 21s. 0d. | 25s. 0d. |
| Tea ditto and ditto, ditto | 8s. 0d. | 11s. 0d. | 12s. 0d. |
| Gravy ditto | 3s. 0d. | 6s. 0d. | 7s. 0d. |

RIPON and BURTON, 15, Wells-street, Oxford-street, Established 1819.—Catalogue gratis.

THE IRISH STATE-TRIAL PORTRAITS.
JUST PUBLISHED, price only SIXPENCE, on one large sheet, executed in the most superior style of Art, full-length Portraits of O'CONNELL and his SON JOHN, with Medallion Likenesses of all the other STATE TRAVELLERS, including the late REV. JAMES TYRELL, F.P. (with Biographical Sketches). These Portraits have been executed by the most celebrated London Artists, at an immense expense, and are now offered to the Public at the unprecedentedly low price of SIXPENCE, in the hope that a speedy sale will repay the enormous outlay, and these beautiful and correct likenesses of the Irish Patriots of 1844 find a place on the Cottage Wall of all who love Ireland.
London: Berger, Holywell-street, Strand; Heywood, Manchester; Stewart, Bradgate, Meryell, Liverpool; Griffin, Barnes, Glasgow; Watts, Guest, Birmingham; and all Booksellers, Printers, &c.—Price Sixpence.

THE NEW PATENT INKSTAND BY R. T. CLIFFE, is superior in all respects to those recently patented. The ink is drawn from the surface of the reservoir, the sediment remains below. No variation of temperature affects the ink, and from its simplicity cannot be got out of order. Hyde and Co., agents, 61, Fleet-street; where may be had their Bank Sealing Wax, an article excelling all others in purity of quality and brilliancy of colour.

MR. BEARD'S DAGUERRETYPE, or PHOTOGRAPHIC PORTRAITS.—These inimitable and much-admired Portraits, in which further improvements have lately been effected, and taken by the Patented, at 25, King William-street, City; 34, Parliament-street; and at the Royal Polytechnic Institution, 209, Regent-street. By whom, also, Licenses are granted for exercising the invention in provincial towns and districts.

THE AMERICAN ROCKING-CHAIR, so much admired by all who have visited America, for the remarkable ease, pleasure, and comfort which it affords, is just imported, and for sale at the extensive Carpet and Upholstery Establishments of LUCK, KENT, and CUMMING, No. 4, Regent-street; Carpenters' Hall, 68, London wall; and WM. CUMMING and Co., 98, Hatton-garden. It is asserted with confidence that there is no piece of furniture in use in civilized society more universally sought after and approved of when known, by all ranks, ages, and conditions of people, than the "American Rocking Chair." The price is 41s. 6s., the purchaser to be at liberty to return it if not approved within a week. When their excellence becomes known, few families will be without one, as they are suitable for all, and particularly stout persons and invalids.—A liberal discount to the trade.

A CUP OF COFFEE IN ONE MINUTE!
DUNN'S ESSENCE OF COFFEE, warranted to keep good in any climate.—This Essence of the finest Mocha Coffee, improved by a process the result of thirty years' experience, contains all the fragrant and exhilarating properties of the Coffee in the highest perfection. It is admirably adapted to persons travelling, Officers in the Army and Navy, and Families visiting watering-places.
Manufactured by D. DUNN, Fentonville, London, Manufacturer of Chocolate Powder, Essence of Ginger, and other Spices, Herbs, &c.
Sold in Bottles from 1s. to 4s. each, and may be ordered of any respectable Grocer in the United Kingdom.
Directions.—Put about a teaspoonful of the Essence into a coffee-cup, add sugar and cream or milk, then fill it up with boiling water, and a cup of Coffee, of superior flavour, is instantly made.

YORK and LONDON LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY, King William-street, London. Empowered by Act of Parliament.

GEORGE FRANKLIN YOUNG, Esq., Chairman.
MATTHEW FORSTER, Esq., M.P., Deputy Chairman.
The superiority of the system of Assurance adopted by this Company will be found in the fact that the premium required by a bonus office to assure £1000 on the life of a person in the 20th year of his age would in this office insure £1291 7s. 6d.
Assurances at other ages are effected on equally favourable terms, and thus the assured has an immediate bonus instead of a chance dependent upon longevity and the profits of an office. In cases of assurance for a limited number of years, the advantage offered by this Company is still greater, no part of the profits of a bonus office being ever allotted to such assurances. Prospectuses, containing tables framed to meet the circumstances of all who desire to provide for themselves or those who may survive them, by assurance either of fixed sums or annuities, may be had at the office as above, or of the agents.
JOHN RABBIT, Secretary.

VICTORIA LIFE ASSURANCE and LOAN COMPANY, No. 18, King William-street, City.

Sir James Duke, Alderman, M.P., Benj. Hawes, Esq., Deputy Chair. Chairman.
Benj. Barnard, Esq. Charles Baldwin, Esq. Chairman.
Particular advantages are offered by this Company. Thus—Parties assuring the lives of others may make their policies secure, notwithstanding the life assured may go out of the limits of Europe, without the necessary permission of the Directors having been previously obtained. Credit of half the premium for the first five years allowed on policies effected for the whole term of life.
Assurances may be effected with or without profits—on an ascending or descending scale, or for short periods.
Advances made to Assurers on real or undoubted personal security, for terms of years, repayable by instalments.
Attention is particularly requested to the detailed prospectuses of the Company, which may be obtained at the Office, 18, King William-street, City, or by letter, addressed to the Secretary.
WILLIAM RATRAY, Actuary and Secretary.

EXTRAORDINARY ECONOMY—TO TEA DRINKERS.—MR. EVANS'S PIGUA PLANT is a beautiful beverage, superior to Tea for Health and Economy; it is more than three times the strength, thus being about one-fifth the expense. It forms a rich, nutritious, aromatic, and delicious beverage; unlike Tea, it does not injure the nervous system. It is most pleasant and invigorating, and is recommended to the debilitated for its invaluable qualities, to advanced age for its strengthening properties, and to the public generally, for its moderate price and intrinsic excellence.

THE TEST.—The proof of the efficacy and healthful effect of Mr. Evans's Plant in preference to Tea or Coffee.—Let a nervous or dyspeptic patient use two or three cups of strong tea upon retiring to rest, and the effect will be nightmare, disturbed sleep, and other violent symptoms of indigestion, &c.
THE PROOF.—Let the most debilitated, dyspeptic, asthmatic, consumptive, and nervous patients use two, three, or more cups of a very strong infusion of Mr. Evans's Pigua Plant, and in the morning they will awake refreshed with their repose. It is highly recommended by Physicians to Invalids and Children, as a most invigorating and pleasant beverage.

The following are Reasons why Mr. Evans's Plant is superior to Tea, viz.:
1st. Because it is beneficial to Health.
2nd. It does not injure the nerves.
3rd. It does not prevent Sleep.
4th. Children may use it with advantage to Health.
5th. It is strengthening and nutritious.
6th. A quarter of a pound will go as far as three quarters of a pound of the best Gunpowder Tea.
7th. It is recommended by Physicians; and Tea is disapproved of by them.

"Sir,—I have great pleasure, and, indeed, I consider it an imperative duty, in justice to you, and for the benefit of others, to bear testimony to the excellent qualities of your Patent Pigua Plant." It has wholly removed a constant painful nervous debility with which I was affected, which produced restless nights, and consequently overpowering languor during the day.
"Since the use of this infusion the disease has entirely disappeared. I sleep soundly often for six, seven, and eight hours together, and am in better health than I have been for many years—and others, to whom I have recommended it, have experienced the same beneficial results."
"You are at liberty to use this testimonial, which I am ready to confirm in person any day you think proper."
"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,"
"G. TANGREDIN."

"Sir,—The Beverage sold by you under the name of Mr. Evans's Plant I have drunk for some time, it was first recommended to my notice as a Salubrious Beverage by a friend who is a great dyspeptic, and I have since recommended it to several patients suffering from Chronic affections of the Digestive Organs, Heart and Lungs, with manifest advantage."
"July 1, 1843." "And am, Sir, yours, &c."
"To Mr. Wm. Evans." "JOHN BARRETT, M.D., 50, Edgware-road."
Numerous testimonials from Physicians, and others of undoubted authority, may be seen at Mr. Evans's office. The Plant is patronized by many of the great families in the land.

The amount in economy derived from the use of Mr. Evans's Plant compared with Tea, is as follows. Suppose a family using one pound of Tea per week, worth 4s. per lb., substitute Mr. Evans's plant at 8s. 6d. per lb., which requires but one-third the quantity to make the infusion of equal strength, the saving would be, per week, 3s. 10d. and the cost to the family 14d., instead of 4s.; for one third of a pound of Mr. Evans's Plant will go as far as one pound of Tea.
Families supplied with Six pounds for 21s., sent to any part of England postage free, by remitting a Post-office order.
Sold at Mr. Evans's Pigua Plant Depot, No. 1, Savoy-street, Strand, London, in quarter pound tins, at 3s. 6d. per lb.; also by Mr. Gadaby, Newall's-buildings, Market-street, Manchester.
It greatly improves the Voice; it is recommended to Singers and Public Speakers. One Agent wanted in each town where there is none; any respectable trade approved.

MIDDLESEX REFORM REGISTRATION OFFICE, 11, Beaufort-buildings, Strand.—The REGISTER for the County of Middlesex being now published, Free-Trade Electors are so called to INSPECT it to ascertain if their names, addresses, and qualifications are correctly inserted; and to give information of any amendment whose name is on the previous and present year's Register or who may have parted with the qualification he claimed for (the new Act of Parliament disqualifying such persons from voting). The result of the last revision has been highly satisfactory, having reduced the Register to 643. As renewed exertions are expected and required during the ensuing year, liberal subscriptions are cordially looked for to carry out the undertaking.—Subscriptions received by Mr. W. H. James, at the Office; and at the bankers, Messrs. Cocks, Biddulph and Co., Charing-cross.

CABINET FURNITURE, CARPETS, and UPHOLSTERY.—THOMAS PAUL and CO. inform the nobility and gentlemen furnishing, that their CABINET STOCK comprises every kind of furniture, calculated for any description of residence, from the cottage to the mansion, and will be found 50 per cent. cheaper than at any other house in London. Independently of the great saving, every article is manufactured of the most seasoned and sound materials, so that parties furnishing (even for a foreign climate) are secure either from complaint or defective wear. References of many years' standing, together with the most ample warranty given where required. Their stock of Brussels carpets consists of a splendid variety, commencing at the extraordinarily low price of 2s. 3d. per yard, and those of new and elegant designs from 3s. per yard.—THOMAS PAUL and CO., cabinetmakers, upholsterers, and carpet manufacturers, opposite the Mansion House, City.

THE NEW LIGHT.—A GREAT NOVELTY.

The patent CAMPHINE LAMP gives a light of surpassing power, softness, and purity, without any kind of grease or dirt, smoke or smell. The lamp is simply and beautifully constructed, and can be fitted to any description of lamp, pedestal, or gas fitting. It is not easily put out of condition. The Camphine (also a patent) is 4s. per gallon, and is so pure that if spilt on any article of dress or furniture will not leave either mark or stain, while it consumes so slowly that, at the cost of three farthings for two hours, it gives a light equal to twelve mould candles, without any attention. It will be found far less expensive than any, and incomparably superior to all existing lights. To be seen burning at Rippon and Burton's (sole wholesale and retail agents for English's Patent Camphine).—N.B. THE ONLY Patent Camphine Lamp has "Rippon and Burton, Wells-street, Oxford-street," conspicuously placed on its head. The public are cautioned against all not so marked.

PATRONIZED AND SANCTIONED BY HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN, H.R.H. PRINCE ALBERT, THE ROYAL FAMILY, AND THE SEVERAL COURTS OF EUROPE.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the Growth and for Preserving and Beautifying the Human Hair. Price 3s. 6d.—7s. Family Bottle (equal to 4 small) 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s.

CAUTION.—SPURIOUS COMPOSITIONS are frequently offered for sale under a FICTITIOUS name or the word "GENUINE." It is therefore imperative on purchasers to see that the words "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" are on the Wrapper of each bottle, and on the back of the wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 39,928 letters. All others are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS. The principle on which "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" is prepared, is confined solely to the knowledge and practice of A. ROWLAND and SON, who are still at an immense expense in completing its preparation, and the amalgamation of its PURELY VEGETABLE MATERIALS renders abortive any attempt to discover its component parts.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for Improving and Beautifying the Skin and Complexion. Price 4s. 6d., and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included.
ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, renders the Teeth beautifully White and preserves the Gums. Price 2s. 6d. per box, duty included.

CAUTION.—It is imperative on purchasers to see that the word "ROWLAND'S" is on the Wrapper of each article. For the protection of the Public from fraud and imposition, the Honourable Commissioners of Her Majesty's Stamps have authorized the Proprietors' Signature to be engraved on the Government Stamp, thus, A. ROWLAND and SON, 70, Hatton-garden, which is affixed to the Kalydor and Odonto. Sold by them and by Chemists and Perfumers.
* * All others are SPURIOUS IMITATIONS!!!

LOWDEN'S CELEBRATED COUGH PILLS,

A safe and effectual cure for Coughs, Colds, Shortness of Breath, Asthma, &c. &c. They promote free expectoration, and hence prevent that accumulation of phlegm which causes a sense of choking, all irritability, tickling in the throat, and relieve that sense of oppression, fulness, and difficulty of breathing, which nightly deprives the patient of rest.
In Asthma and Coughs of long standing they are invaluable, and universally admitted to be the best known Medicine; in any case where they do not effect a perfect cure they afford such relief to the sufferer during the paroxysms or fits as to induce him henceforth never to be without them.
Sold by Mr. Lowden, Chemist, 205, Fleet-street, London, in boxes at 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d.; also by one or more respectable Medicine Vendors in each town in the United Kingdom.

BIOUKRENE, or FOUNTAIN of LIFE.

This invaluable Medicine proves efficacious in removing all Scrofulous and Scrofulic Diseases. It attacks the cause of all eruptions on the skin; it purifies and nourishes the blood, invigorates the digestive organs, and effects an entire cure of Scrofula and Scurvy in all the forms which these diseases assume.
This medicine is free from those mineral preparations which cannot be taken without injury to the constitution. Its action on the system is remarkably mild and gentle, and will not interfere with the patient's ordinary pursuits.

* * See a pamphlet entitled "Health and Comfort for the afflicted," which may be had, gratis, of Mr. William Bailey, North-street, Wolverhampton, and also by all other vendors of Bioukrene; which is sold by Sutton and Co., Bow Church-yard; Edwards, St. Paul's Church-yard; Hannay and Co., Oxford-street; and by all Druggists and Medicine Vendors.
Bottles, 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., and 11s.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH, Mr.

THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM, price 4s. 6d.—Patronized by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. This valuable SUCCEDANEUM for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity, is far superior to anything ever before used, as it is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and in a short time becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary. It arrests all further progress of decay, and renders them again useful in mastication. All persons can use Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM themselves with ease, without the aid of a dentist, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 68, Berners-street, Oxford-street, price 4s. 6d., and will be sent by post to any part of the kingdom.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. Thomas continues to supply the loss of teeth, and has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, which will be found very superior to all others, as they will never decay nor become discoloured, and their perfect resemblance to nature defies detection even by the closest observer. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. The charges will be found less than most dentists.—Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 68, Berners-street, Oxford-street. At home from Eleven till Four.

FRAMPTON'S PILL OF HEALTH.

Price 1s. 1d. per box.
This excellent Family PILL is a Medicine of long-tried efficacy for correcting all disorders of the Stomach and Bowels, the common symptoms of which are constiveness, flatulency, spasms, loss of appetite, sick headache, giddiness, sense of fulness after meals, dizziness, the eyes, drowsiness, and pains in the Stomach and Bowels. Indigestion, producing a torpid state of the Liver, and a consequent inactivity of the Bowels, causing a disorganization of every function of the frame, will, in this most excellent preparation, by a little perseverance, be effectually removed. Two or three doses will convince the afflicted of its salutary effects. The Stomach will speedily regain its strength; a healthy action of the Liver, Bowels, and Kidneys, will rapidly take place; and, instead of listlessness, heat, pain, and jaundiced appearance, strength, activity, and renewed health will be the quick result of taking this medicine according to the directions accompanying each box; and if taken after tea free an indulgence at table, they quickly restore the system to its natural state of repose.
Persons of a FULL HABIT, who are subject to headache, giddiness, drowsiness, and slinging in the ears, arising from too great a flow of blood to the head, should never be without them, as many dangerous symptoms will be entirely carried off by their immediate use.

For FEMALES these Pills are most truly excellent, removing all obstructions; the distressing headache so very prevalent with the sex; depression of spirits, dulness of sight, nervous affections, blotches, pimples, and coldness of the skin, and give a healthy and juvenile bloom to the complexion. As a pleasant, safe, easy Aperient, they unite the recommendation of a mild operation with the most successful effect, and require no restraint of diet or confinement during their use. And the ELDERLY PEOPLE they will be found to be the most comfortable medicine hitherto prepared.
Sold by T. FRAMPTON, 250, Strand, London. Price 1s. 1d. and 2s. 6d. per box; and by the Vendors of Medicine generally throughout the Kingdom.

Ask for FRAMPTON'S PILL OF HEALTH, and observe the name and address of "Thomas Frampton, 250, Strand, London," on the Government stamp.

London: Printed (at the office of Palmer and Clayton, Orange-court, Fleet-street) by A. W. PEARSON, of Tavistock-square, London, and of Fleet-street; and published by him at Ten Leaves Office, 67, Fleet-street, Saturday January 20, 1844.

THE LEAGUE.

No. 18.]

SATURDAY, JANUARY 27, 1844.

[3d.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND, £100,000.

All subscribers of £1 and upwards to the ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUND FUND, will be entitled to, and receive a copy, weekly, of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have forwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the Offices of THE LEAGUE, Newall's-buildings, Manchester, or 67, Fleet-street, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND, are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council respectfully request that their friends, in all places where committees for raising subscriptions to the £100,000 Fund have not been already formed, will proceed to their formation as soon as possible, and transmit their names to the LEAGUE Offices, Manchester.

LANDOWNERS' MOVEMENT AGAINST THE LEAGUE, AND TRICKS TO GET UP FARMERS' MEETINGS.

The last act of the drama approaches. For thirty years the landowners have had a rent league, of which the Houses of Lords and Commons have been the executive council. Why are they not content with this league?—Because the oppressions of this rent league have at length driven the people, like the cities of the Hanseatic League in olden time, to unite together to repel the injustice of the barons and landowners, who, under the forms of law, as effectually plunder the people of the present day as the barons and pirates of former days plundered the Hanseatic cities by violence and force of arms. The Anti-Corn-Law League, the PEOPLE'S LEAGUE against starvation and robbery, is already become a mighty body, daily increasing as it rolls along through the length and breadth of the land. Its claims, founded on the eternal principles of justice, unite the wise, the learned, and the good of every name and denomination, and assure its final triumph. It is this League, founded on the broad basis of truth and justice, and engrafted in the hearts of the great mass of the people, that those who tax the people's bread, and defraud them of their right to labour—dread. The landowners feel that their days of oppression are numbered—they know that the hearts of the people are not with them—they see that they stand on the point of the pyramid, and that all around is insecurity and danger. And they cry for help to keep up rents—to whom? To the poor farmers and labourers, the especial victims of their oppression! They have sought to delude them with the cry that high prices of food are as equally beneficial to the farmer and labourer as to the landowner. But the League has not laboured five years in vain; its lecturers and tracts and publications have spread over the whole country, and opened the farmers' eyes so far, that they were shrewd enough to see that the protection societies and Anti-League associations which they were incited to form were neither more nor less than clubs to keep up rents and tithes. The deep-laid scheme of inducing the farmers voluntarily to become the dupes of the landowners, by forming rent-clubs, failed. But the landowners felt that, without the semblance of support from those for whose pretended benefit the Corn Laws (rent laws) were passed, these iniquitous laws could no longer be sustained, and so they set to work forthwith to effect by force that which they found it impossible to accomplish by persuasion. The stewards, land-agents, bailiffs, land-surveyors, and parsons were instructed to take those measures which such kind of personages know so well how to arrange, to bring farmers and labourers to meetings to vote for resolutions proposed by the lords of the soil to maintain high prices and high rents.

We know the whole secret of these "great Anti-League meetings," who are the movers, and who the active agents in getting them up; and we earnestly invite our friends in every part of the country to continue to keep us informed of all their proceedings. They may rely on our confidence. We do not mean to say that there are not some few farmers who take part in these meetings who may be ignorantly sincere; but we do say, without fear of contradiction, that the great body of the farmers have no sympathy with the objects of these rent-clubs, and will neither subscribe to them, nor attend their formation, unless urged by those significant hints which stewards and bailiffs are accustomed to give to poor, trembling, and heart-broken farmers and labourers. We know the arts that have been resorted to to collect the "great meeting" at Northampton. We know that Free-Traders were compelled to attend and to vote against their consciences. We know too, notwithstanding the allusions to the happy condition of the agricultural labourers in that county, that such is the lamentable distress of these labourers that their employers, dreading lest the effects of their wretchedness may lead them to acts of desperation, take it in turns every night to watch their premises!! If those who talked of the happy condition of the labourers be ignorant of the facts we have stated, we invite them with all seriousness to inquire into them. Landowners are sleeping on a volcano. Let them no longer trust to the reports of stewards and bailiffs, but inquire for themselves, if the blazes of incendiary fires have not already illuminated their minds.

There is to be a great Anti-League meeting on the 29th instant at Steyning, in Sussex. If the tricks which have been resorted to be successful, our readers must be prepared to hear this meeting trumpeted forth as the most important ever held. There are to be present dukes, lords, and squires. The landowners' agents are going round in every parish with requisitions for signature by the farmers and tradesmen; and, in many cases, creditors are calling on their debtors to sign and to attend the great meeting. Farmers' labourers are to be sent in great numbers, that the landowners may boast of their presence and support. Many who have not had more than ten days' work in a month are being drilled for the meeting, and are promised constant employment if they do their work well. Even paupers in distant towns are to be provided with horses to go to the meeting and back, to swell the hurrah for high rents and dear bread!! Such are the pretended farmers' associations or Anti-League meetings, but really landowners' clubs to perpetuate monopoly and high rents.

We hear great boasts of the sums subscribed; we know, however, that few farmers will part with their money except on compulsion. The object of the fund has not been made known, but we hope one object will be the publication of a journal in opposition to the LEAGUE, and that the practice of the League will be imitated in publishing the names and amounts of all subscriptions, and then the world will see who are the supporters of high rents and dear bread.

We warn the landowners of their course, and, in all sincerity, recommend them to turn their attention to the deplorable condition of their farmers and labourers. We are in possession of facts and materials of so extraordinary a character, that, if we give them credit for feelings of common humanity, we must believe they are ignorant of everything beyond their own castle gates. This ignorance may be bliss to those nursed in the lap of ease and luxury, but will any sane man say that it is wisdom?

PROTECTION TO AGRICULTURE.

The first association formed in England for granting real protection to agriculture was the Anti-Corn-Law League, and we have little doubt that the rival associations now in process of formation throughout the country will ultimately be absorbed in that body. Legislative interference between them and their customers is the great evil from which farmers require to be protected; because the obvious result of such interference is to diminish the ability of the customers to purchase their produce, to throw an increasing amount of the support of unemployed labour on the land by diminishing the demand for manufacturing labour, and to furnish a pretext for continuing that state of dependence, uncertainty of tenure, and variability of rent, which constitute the chief grievances of the farmers in the midland and southern counties.

If these agricultural associations are conducted as well as constituted by farmers, we have no doubt that they will lead to much good; but if the leaders belong not to the class of farmers but to the class of landowners, instead of these associations being directed to the protection of agriculture, they will be used to maintain rent, to support mortgages, and to secure settlements. They will, in fact, become associations against agriculturists and for monopolists. To show the farmers that they are menaced by such a danger, we shall examine some of the speeches delivered at the late meeting in Northampton, and show that the sentiments uttered and the plans proposed are decidedly hostile to the farmers, and, if carried out, must lead to agricultural ruin.

One of the first speakers was Mr. Canning, and, among other curious things, he said:—

"A foreigner bringing corn to England would go to the manufacturer, perhaps, and look over his stock, but would he take it in return for his corn? No, he would not, but he would take the gold instead. Of the ships trading to this country in corn most of them returned in ballast."

Mr. Canning describes a state of trade which could only exist with a variable market; now it is one of the greatest evils arising from the Corn Laws, that they render all dealings in corn more or less gambling transactions, and derange the natural current of exchange. Mr. Canning seems to have fallen into the blunder which was exploded some centuries ago, that the exportation of gold is an evil to the nation; but as that gold represents some previous product of industry, else it could not have come into the hands of the possessor, the foreigner would still take manufactures in an indirect form, and would do so at a double loss—first, of the difference of the cost price between the manufactures and the price realized for them by the possessor of the gold; and, secondly, of the freight lost by the return of the ship in ballast. The cause of corn-ships returning in ballast is, that the opening of the ports to corn is so uncertain that it comes in gluts, and renders the mercantile arrangements impossible, which would naturally take place in a regular and steady trade.

Mr. Canning goes on to say:—

"But the object of the manufacturers was to reduce the occupiers of land to their own low level, and until they can do that, they never would attain the position they evidently wish to occupy. Their object is to get money, and their accusation was, that the farmers were too prosperous. Now he (Mr. Canning) defied any man to prove that the agriculturists were obtaining a large per centage for their outlay of capital. It was a fact beyond dispute that they obtained a less interest for their money than any other class of her Majesty's subjects."

It would be gratifying news to the agriculturists to discover that their rates of profit are equal to those of the large manufacturers. We should be glad to know how many fortunes have been made by farmers in Northamptonshire, and to compare them with the number of fortunes made by manufacturers in Lancashire. Mr. Canning, indeed, soon contradicts himself; for, instead of showing the manufacturers to be on a low level, he declares, with truth, "that the farmers obtain less interest for their money than any other class of her Majesty's subjects;" this is the very evil of which the Anti-Corn-Law League has laboured to convince the country, and it is from a deep conviction of the evil that it earnestly seeks the repeal of those laws which compel the farmers to play so losing a game. To such reasoners as Mr. Canning it leaves the logic of saying, "because you farmers receive too small profits under the present system, therefore you farmers should exert yourselves for its continuance."

The commonplaces about Church, State, and Constitution have been so hackneyed in defence of every oligarchical and monopolist abuse, from the days of the slave-trade to those of rotten boroughs, that we must be excused from noticing such stereotype formularies. Mr. Canning, in conclusion, insinuated that the League had some other secret plans beyond the repeal of the Corn Laws; but, as he did not even hint their nature, we must leave him to his imaginings until they take "form and pressure."

Mr. Cartwright, M.P., was the next speaker, and he furnishes us with the following novel information:—

"It is madness for the manufacturers to look further for a better market abroad than they have at home, while they know that, if they depress the land, they must lose the market at home—and the home market, every one knows, takes four-fifths of the whole produce of the manufacturers."

It so happens that everybody knows the direct contrary: four-fifths of our manufactured cottons are exported, and only one-fifth retained for home-consumption. The abolition of the Corn Laws, by increasing the amount of general employment, will improve the home market, and will enable the farmers to become purchasers. The foreign competition to be dreaded is the irregular and sudden importation of corn in large quantities, which prevents the farmer from having that steadiness of market which would enable him to calculate his returns with tolerable certainty.

The next speaker was Sir C. Knightley, and of his speech the following bit of elegance is a pretty fair specimen:—

"This League, called the Anti-Corn Law League, is, I think, the most pestiferous society that has ever been formed since the days of the Jacobin Club during the French Revolution. It is matter of wonder to me how any harmony can exist between these people; how gentlemen of education and rank can have any sympathy with such raggamuffins. Many people may wonder at the apparent sacrifices which some of these people appear to make. I may say, 'Oh! what good and virtuous men they must be to sacrifice their property for the sake of the poor.' But, though the means appear to be the same, the end is very different. I can only compare them to what, in my younger days, we used to call a scratched pack of hounds—that is, the drafts and culls from every pack in England."

As we can only argue with gentlemen, we must pass over this effusion of vulgar vituperation, simply pointing to it as a proof that the race of Squire Westerns is not yet extinct in England. As a sample of his political economy, take the following exquisite morceau:—

"Philanthropy may be a very fine thing, but there is no law which directs us to starve our own people for the sake of benefiting foreigners. The present low prices, the present extreme depression of agriculture, I attribute mainly to the agitation of the itinerant vagabonds belonging to the League, who are daily, at all their various meetings, taking opportunities of saying that the Corn Laws are virtually repealed; that they must be repealed, and that Sir Robert Peel will and must repeal them before another session of Parliament shall have passed away. I myself am one of those who do not believe that he has the slightest intention of repealing them. You and I have heard enough of the Corn Laws lately, and so I should think has Sir Robert Peel too."

The sneer against philanthropy was admirably well placed; there is a law which directs us to starve our own people to swell the rents that are to be expended in foreign luxuries. The power attributed to the League of lowering the price of corn has only the merit of being supremely ridiculous. It has often been asked "how many acres would make a wisacre?" The problem is not likely to be solved by Sir Charles Knightley.

Next came my Lord Southampton, and all that he said having any bearing on the subject is contained in these words:—

"These agitators go into the towns and districts, collect people together, and say they want to get cheap bread for the people. But how do they propose to get cheap bread? By taking off the duty on corn, and what will be the result? The result will be that half the land will be thrown out of cultivation, to the entire ruin of the occupying farmers; and what, then, will become of the agricultural labourers, who constitute the great mass of the population of this country? Bread may be cheap, but what means will they have to buy it with? It is all very well to say 'cheap bread,' but let us have some means of paying for it, or it will be very dear to those who cannot procure work, and who must either go to the workhouse or starve."

We have hopes of the conversion of Lord Southampton: he is decidedly with the League in declaring that the true question in issue is the means of providing employment for the people. We say that more trade will give more work, that more work will give more wages, that more wages will enable the operatives, now miserably underfed, to purchase more food, and that the demand thus healthily created will more than counterbalance the removal of a sickly and artificial monopoly of market.

Mr. Maunsell followed, and also took up the question of employment. We agree with him that the land of England cannot give full employment to the labourers; and we, therefore, propose to widen the sphere of their industry. The country does not produce sufficient food for its present population, and must import corn; the only question is, whether this importation shall be conducted on a principle of justice to the land-cultivator or of advantage to the landowner. To keep up an unnatural competition for land is, of course, at the first view, an advantage to the proprietor, but it is ruinous to the farmer, and, in the long run, destructive of the proprietor's own interests.

The fourth member for the county, Mr. A. S. O'Brien, made the most characteristic speech of the whole. He asserted that the present is a landlords' Parliament, and then claimed credit for the said house of landlords not having done all the mischief that was in its power. It appears that farmers should be grateful for the income-tax taking from the profits of their industry only as much as it takes from the non-producing possessors of estates and other fixed property. In conclusion, he quoted the beautiful expression of the Psalmist—"The Lord shall bless her land with increase; I will satisfy her poor with bread." There was something very like blasphemy in thus closing a speech which advocated that policy by which the poor operatives of Britain are deprived of employment and consigned to starvation.

In the remaining speeches we find little more than abuse of Earl Spencer, whose manly denunciation of monopoly has shown that it is not the landed interest, but the mortgaged interest of England that is anxious for the support of monopoly.

The speeches at the Northampton meeting are admirably calculated to procure for such assemblages the best wishes of the friends of Free Trade. Much has been achieved when the Cartwrights and the Knightleys have been brought to appeal to conviction rather than coercion—to the reason and not the fears of their tenants. It is unfortunate for them that they cannot lay aside the old form of dictation, and insulting assertion of the ascendancy of class—"The hands, verily, are Esau's hands," though "the voice is the voice of Jacob." We have too much confidence in the common sense of the farmers to believe that they will remain in the leading-strings of such nurses as the quartetto of Northamptonshire: the process of their conversion has already begun, and we firmly believe that it will be greatly accelerated by the exhibition of the utter weakness and incapacity of the oracles in which they have confided; for obstinacy itself would shrink when asked to join company with such defenders of its cause as those who enacted the last farce of monopoly at the George Hotel of Northampton.

MEETINGS.

GREAT MEETING AT COVENT GARDEN THEATRE.

The first aggregate meeting of the friends of the National Anti-Corn Law League (after an interval of two months) was held on Thursday evening at Covent Garden Theatre. The applications for tickets had been more numerous than ever during the preceding week, and a few minutes after the doors were opened every seat within the walls of the theatre was occupied, large numbers filling the lobbies and avenues. The proceedings throughout were marked by the greatest enthusiasm, and the audience several times rose en masse to greet by deafening applause the more striking points of the addresses during the evening.

At seven o'clock, George Wilson, Esq. (the Chairman of the League), appeared on the stage, accompanied by several distinguished members and supporters of the League; they were greeted by loud plaudits.

On the platform we recognized, among others, The Hon. Charles Pelham Villiers, M.P.; Thomas Milner Gibson, Esq., M.P.; Dr. Bowring, M.P.; D. Christie, Esq., M.P.; William Williams, Esq., M.P.; the Hon. E. P. Bouverie; W. J. Fox, Esq.; Rev. John Burnett; Charles Thompson, Esq.; F. Pattison, Esq.; Arthur Pattison, Esq.; John Potter, Esq.; Manchester; B. Baines, Esq.; W. A. Wilkinson, Esq.; David Carr, Esq.; John Macleod, Esq.; John Anderson, Esq.; W. A. Thompson, Esq.; J. Cox, Esq.; W. Adam Smith, Esq.; W. H. Le Breton, Esq.; T. Wadsworth, Esq.; W. Pye, Esq.; W. Smith, Esq.; D. Shephard, Esq.; Sir Wm. Baynes, Bart.; Oliver Wilcock, Esq.; W. Thornborrow, Esq.; T. Sharer, Esq.; Charles Davy, Esq.; Henry Lloyd Morgan, Esq.; W. Geein, Esq.; Richard Ware Cole, Esq.; Edward Edwards, Esq.; British Museum; George Ridout, Esq.; Dr. Simpson; Dr. Girtin; Joseph Phelps, Esq.; J. P. Burnard, Esq.; William Hewitt, Esq.; David Aumonier, Esq.; J. Ridge, Esq.; A. Fox, Esq.; Z. T. Purday, Esq.; J. Crookford, Esq.; David Price, Esq.; George Beaton, Esq.; P. A. Taylor, Esq.; S. Harrison, Esq.; Professor Key; J. Coppock, Esq.; Edingham Wilson, Esq.; John Adolphus, Esq.; Dr. Cooke Taylor; Francis Place, Esq.; Cowden Clarke, Esq.; — Cummings, Esq.; J. Welford, Esq.; James Fordat, Esq.; John Bathope, Esq.; Crawford Birkett, Esq.; J. L. Boothby, Esq., &c. &c.

The Secretary (Mr. SAUL) having read the minutes of the last meeting, it was moved by the Hon. C. P. VILLIERS, M.P., and seconded by Mr. J. POTTER, that they should be confirmed. The motion was carried with acclamation.

The CHAIRMAN then came forward, and was received with a burst of applause. He spoke as follows:—Ladies and Gentlemen, I have no doubt that the first question which every friend to Free Trade would now put to me would be this—"What has the League been doing? What progress has been made upon this question since we have assembled within these walls?" (Cheers.) I will shortly tell you. In the first place, I suppose it is unnecessary to remind you that the Anti-Corn Law League is not yet abolished. (Cheers.) The Duke of Buckingham has not yet joined the League. (Laughter.) The Duke of Richmond has not signified his approbation of the proceedings of this body. Sir Edward Knatchbull still gropes over marriage settlements and mortgages; and Col. Sibthorp gives the immense sum of £50 to an Anti-Corn Law League—(loud cheers and laughter)—and the members of the League have been obliged to put up with the insignificant subscription of £500 from a nobleman, who, perhaps, if he be not rich enough to buy them all up together, is very nearly so—I mean the Marquis of Westminster. (Loud cheers.) That we have made some progress, that we have had some meetings which our opponents can neither afford to overlook nor to deny, you will agree with me when I shall enumerate them. In the first place, we had a meeting at Liverpool, where £4600 was received towards the Great League Fund; which sum has subsequently been increased to £6000. Then we had a meeting at Ashton-under-Lyne, a borough within seven miles of Manchester: at that meeting speeches were made by my hon. friends Mr. Villiers and Mr. Cobden, and other members of the Council of the League, and £540 was received, which, added to £3800 previously received from Ashton-under-Lyne, amounts to £4340. Then we had a meeting at Leeds, which was presided over by the Mayor of Leeds (Mr. Stansfield), who you recollect took the chair at the first League meeting in London (cheers); the Messrs. Marshall, one of the largest manufacturing firms in the kingdom, gave £800 to begin with towards the fund—£500 for the firm, and £300 for the senior partner: the subscriptions at Leeds amounted to £2700, and are not yet completed. Then we had a meeting at Halifax, in Yorkshire, where £2000 was received for the fund. At the next meeting, at Huddersfield, in Yorkshire, we received £2000. At Bradford upwards of £2000 was received. At a small place in Lancashire, called Bacup, £245 was collected; the principal people in the village had previously subscribed £1100 to the fund, making £1345 from an obscure village in the north of Lancashire. Then we had a meeting at Bolton—the borough so well represented by my friend Dr. Bowring (loud cheers)—where £1205 was received to the fund. (Cheers.) Then we had meetings in the midland counties, Derby, Leicester, and Nottingham. At Derby, the old firm of Strutt gave £500 to commence with; and the subscriptions amounted to £1200 there. Then at Leicester, where £800 was collected; and there was another meeting at Nottingham, where £520 was collected, which has subsequently been much increased. Then there was a meeting at Burnley, another small place in Lancashire, where £1000 was collected, which has since been paid. Then we had a meeting at Oldham, where upwards of £1000 was collected. Then at Todmorden, a small village, £611 was collected to the League fund. At Hebden Bridge, near Todmorden, there was a meeting, at which £500 was subscribed to the fund. At Warrington a meeting was held, and £341 was collected. At Coalbrookdale, in Shropshire—the centre of the district represented by the twelve apostles—(cheers and laughter)—a meeting was held, and nearly £400 was collected on behalf of the League fund. Then there was a meeting at a small place in Yorkshire called Pudsey, where £200 was collected. There was a meeting also at Macolesfield, where £180 was collected. At Holmfirth, another small place in Yorkshire, 100 guineas were received. At Dewsbury, also in Yorkshire, £100 was collected. At Otley £100 was collected. And at a number of small places in Lancashire—very obscure places, where meetings were held, and the subscriptions did not amount to £100 each—I shall not trouble you with them. And then we had a meeting at Stroud, where £558 was collected. (Cheers.) In addition to this, a deputation from the League, consisting generally of Messrs. Cobden, Bright, Moore, Col. Thompson, Henry Ashworth, and others, proceeded to Scotland. (Cheers.) At Glasgow, they held a meeting, at which the Lord Provost took the chair, and upwards of £3000 was collected on behalf of the League fund. At Edinburgh, the next day, a meeting was held, the Lord Provost in the chair, when £1500 was collected. At Dundee, £500 was collected. At Leith, £350. At Paisley, £230. And coming back, at the small village of Hawick, £70. (Loud and long continued cheers followed the announcement of these proceedings.) This, then, is the evidence which we present to you of the progress which this question is making in the public mind. (Cheers.) It is a fresh bond of union—a new agreement—a new covenant, to which the various members of the League in Scotland and the north of England have attached their names, pledging themselves to each other, to you, and to the country, that so long as they are blessed with health and strength, so long they will, in the course they have chalked out for themselves, persevere and cease not, till they have gained the great object which the League have in view. (Loud cheers.) But we have been told, that, gratifying as has been our progress, we are to meet with opposition and impediment in some of the southern counties of England; and we have had our attention directed to the number of associations which are springing up on every side, in opposition to the League, and in support of the present Corn Law—(ironical cheers and laughter); and we have heard it stated, that these meetings have been organised by tenant-farmers. Now I don't believe it (cheers), and I'll tell you why. (Cheers.) In the first place, one of their chief objects is to oppose the National Anti-Corn Law League. The speeches at their meetings generally consist, three-fourths of them at least, of vituperation against the League. Now the tenant-farmers have no such ill feeling towards the League. (Cheers.) The tenant-farmers do not make those speeches at their meetings. The tenant-farmers don't occupy the chair—tenant-farmers don't write M. P. at the end of their names, nor the title reverend before their names. (Loud cheers.) The tenant-farmers know that we never deceived them from the first. The tenant-farmers know that in 1841 we never marshalled them to the meetings, on our flags inscribed "No Surrender;" then, in a moment—in the very midst of their rejoicings—gave them a new sliding scale, a tariff, and an income-tax to rejoice over. (Loud cheers.) The tenant-farmers know that from the first we told them, in their own districts, through Mr. Cobden and Mr. Bright, that the League was for total and unconditional repeal—that they derived no advantage from the imaginary benefits which the Corn Laws were said to confer upon them, and that, if they would persist in impoverishing their customers, they must suffer in return. (Cheers.) These were the doctrines the League professed to them. The tenant-farmers listened, heard, and voted in favour of Free Trade; it will not do, therefore, for the squires and lords to come out and call themselves the tenant-farmers of England. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, I have heard some other little facts of those reported meetings, which have occupied so many pages in the newspapers. We first saw an account of one of the most important of these meetings at Colchester, and it was said that there were from 500 to 600 persons present. Now it so happened that one of the members of the League (a tenant-farmer) was at that meeting, and he took the trouble to count the people who were present on the occasion. Well—there were neither five, nor four, nor three, nor two hundred present. There were just 186 persons present, including 14 reporters. (Loud laughter, and cries of "Bravo the Press.") Then, there was another meeting very near—I think it was in the next county. There certainly was a great deal said at that meeting; there were 11 people present in the room, and about as many columns of a report of the proceedings appeared in one of their favourite papers. (Laughter, and cries of the "Morning Jenkins.") Then we are told that a great deal of money has been raised on behalf of their side of the question—they will have occasion for it. (Loud cheers.) What did the League do after the meeting at Colchester? What did it do? Why, an article was written and published in our organ; copies of the voters' lists, county and borough, were taken down from the shelves of our office, and 18,000 copies of the LEAGUE were sent off specially addressed to every elector in the county of Essex. (Cheers.) We shall never disturb their meetings. We shall never interfere; for we have an inviolable respect for organized meetings for discussion; and we give them credit for the statement which they profess—nay, any man—for any object, especially by that class who are supposed to live by the sweat of their brows. (Loud cheers.) We shall not disturb their meetings; but, at the same time, we shall take care that every fallacy which is put forth by their best speakers shall be answered in our publications (hear, hear), and a copy of each publication sent to every voter in the county in which such meeting takes place. (Cheers.) But, it may be said—Why oppose the League now—it has existed five years—what particular necessity is there for opposing it at the present time? I will tell you why. We are amongst the electors now; the League has pledged itself, and will fulfil its pledge, as far as practicable, to contest every seat in Parliament whenever any vacancy may arise. (Immense cheering.) We may be defeated, but we shall return again and again to the combat (cheers); we may lose close boroughs like Salisbury—we may lose other boroughs in which vacancies may arise—as we shall not have the selection of the places where the question may be put in issue; that will not make the slightest difference in our mode of action; for we have laid it down as a rule, that no monopolist shall ever again take his seat in Parliament without having it said that he had to meet the concentrated strength of the League directed against him. (Loud applause.) These Anti-Anti-Corn-Law meetings, then, we may imagine will be continued until the feeling has exhibited itself through the whole of the counties of England. Are we prepared for them? If they bind themselves together—lords and squires, and monopolists in every direction—is the League prepared for them? My answer is "Yes, it is—was never better prepared." I point to the meetings which have been held in aid of the great League fund. (Hear.) I point to the increased array of intelligence and local strength everywhere developing itself on behalf of the objects we have in view. (Cheers.) I know we may be defeated once or twice; but I know that no good, no true question ever yet sunk into the minds of the people of England—was ever taken up by an honest body, the middle class more especially—which ultimately did not become the law of Parliament, and receive the sanction of the Sovereign. (Loud cheers.) We may have to wait some time before this question is settled; but we shall not grow weary in well-doing. (Cheers.) We know this, at least, that no period of suffering will ever be permitted to recur in this country equal to that which we have passed through within the last five years in the manufacturing districts. (Hear, hear.) We know that no Minister will ever again dare to place this country in that position in which the manufacturing districts were placed during the succession of bad harvests two years ago. (Hear.) And knowing this, and knowing that every day we add numbers to the League who were formerly opposed to us; and knowing that, on every hand, we are increasing in strength while they are diminishing; and knowing that our resources at this time of the year are treble what they ever were on any former occasion, we bid you have hope and take courage that we are near the termination of this great struggle. The hon. gentleman concluded his address amid loud and general applause.

The CHAIRMAN then said:—I have now great pleasure in introducing to the meeting the Hon. Edward Bouverie.

Mr. BOUVÉRIE, on coming forward, was received with loud plaudits, which having subsided, he spoke as follows:—As this is my first appearance on the London stage, I must request your indulgence—honestly and unaffectedly—during the remarks which I have to make on this occasion; and I need this indulgence the more because you do not require to be told that amongst gentlemen like these around me on the platform—veterans who have fought in the foremost ranks of the battle of Free Trade—I am but a new recruit, unskilled in handling weapons, and without their power or ability to use them. (Cheers.) This, however, is not the first occasion on which we have acted together. On a late occasion—I mean at the last Salisbury election—we fought the common fight together, and, though I was not at that time enrolled under the banners of the League, yet a common cause and a common object formed a bond of union, amity, and good feeling between us. (Cheers.) We were defeated then, gentlemen, and, singularly enough, we were defeated, I may say, by Free Trade. (Laughter.) There is one subject of all others—Free Trade though I am, and Free Traders though those gentlemen who supported me were, to the backbone—there is one article which I cannot agree that any one man has a right to sell, or another man to buy—and that is, the vote of an elector. (Tremendous cheering.) But in spite of all this, I do rejoice to think that the League, and the great cause which it advocates, have been making progress ever since—have been going on from strength to strength, and, as you have heard from the Chairman, daily gathering fresh influence and weight. (Hear, hear.) I do rejoice, too, that those counter associations of the League have been formed, and for this reason—What is the object the League has in view? Is it not that the truth should be asserted? (Cheers.) All we ask is, inquiry—we do not want to smother the truth—we ask the people to think and investigate for themselves; therefore it is, that the greater the discussion of this subject, the more it is agitated and inquired into, the more likely the people are to become converts to our views. (Cheers.) I must say that it appears to me, so far as I have read the accounts of the meetings that have taken place in opposition to the League, that the gentlemen who composed those meetings have not taken the course most likely to elicit truth on the subject. (Hear, hear.) I have read several columns of very violent abuse, couched in the coarsest Billingsgate expressions, showered most bountifully upon gentlemen who at any rate profess to, and, I believe, act conscientiously (cheers); but there is not one mite of argument to convince either those who heard, or the country at large who read, that they were right in their view of the question, and that we were wrong. (Cheers.) I find, in the midst of all this mass of calumny and abuse, one little solitary fact adduced by a noble peer, who, in stating things upon his legs in a public meeting, ought to take care to ascertain the correctness of his facts before he asserts them. He stated, as an instance of the dreadful suffering which had been inflicted upon the agricultural interest by the new tariff, that the west of Scotland was suffering greatly from the alteration of the duties on cheese. What is the fact? Why, there was no alteration at all in those duties! No; Sir R. Peel was satisfied with the little he had done—God knows it was little enough (cheers); and as a sop to the agriculturists these little matters of butter and cheese were left pretty much as they were before. (Hear, hear.) It is not only a fact that there was no alteration, but it is a fact likewise that, each year since the passing of the tariff, there has been a less quantity of cheese imported into this country than there was before. (Hear, hear.) In 1841, being the year preceding the passing of the tariff, there were upwards of 246,000 cwt. of cheese imported into this country. In 1842, the year of the tariff, there were but 178,000 cwt., being between 60,000 and 70,000 less than the year preceding; and in the year 1843, when the tariff was in full operation, there were only 158,000 cwt. imported, or nearly 100,000 cwt. less than in 1841. (Loud cheers.) It is very natural to inquire "What is the reason of this?" why, they used up the customers: that is the truth of the matter. It is the labouring classes—the people who are in full employment, and are tolerably well to do in the world—who buy these articles; and if they are out of employment, and their employers are ruined, they can have no means to purchase; and thus it is that the farmer is unable to sell his cheese. (Hear, hear.) Gentlemen, we are on the eve of the meeting of another Pro-Corn-Law Association—Parliament; and little enough I fear is to be expected from that body, containing, as it does, a protectionist majority with Sir Robert Peel at its head. (Cheers.) Now, I have some hopes, I confess, of seeing Sir Robert Peel in this place—a member of the League some day—(laughter)—perhaps kindly offering to you the use of his bull (renewed laughter and applause), or offering to destroy the rabbits in his gardens at Whitehall, for the benefit of the public; and I will tell you why I expect this. It is because, if you look at his whole public life, you will see that those great measures which he most assisted in passing are those which he previously most vehemently opposed and held up to derision. (Cheering.) I will bring him to book. Some 30 years ago Sir Robert Peel opposed resolutions brought forward by one of the leading members on the Liberal side of the House of Commons—Mr. Horner, on the great currency question—which at that time were of deep interest to the community. What did Sir Robert Peel do? Why, eight years after that—in 1819—he brought forward a measure based upon those very resolutions, and he stated in the House of Commons, that without shame—he had no shame (cheers and laughter)—and without regret, he did confess that at that time he had opposed those resolutions, and that he was in a different mind to what he was before. (Cheers.) Then there was another great question—I mean that of Catholic Emancipation; and how any mortal man with ordinary sense sufficient to guide him in the judgment he forms of his fellow-creatures, and of the affairs of the world which are going on around him, can put his trust in Sir Robert Peel after what he did upon that occasion, I am at a loss to conceive. (Hear, hear.) In 1827, when Mr. Canning came into office, Sir Robert Peel stated, as his reason for giving up the situation which he held in the House of Commons, that Mr. Canning had always been favourable to granting the claims of the Roman Catholics, and as he (Sir Robert Peel) had all his life been opposed to the granting of those claims, and as he believed that the granting of them would endanger the constitution of the country and the safety and welfare of the Church, he must give up his office. Two years after that, he not only supported a measure, but, as the minister of the Crown, introduced and carried through Parliament a bill for granting those claims to Roman Catholics. (Cheering.) Well, I have not done with him yet. In 1833, Sir Robert Peel, then a leader of the Opposition, in the course of those functions which that position cast upon him, made a speech upon the financial condition of the country, and, as an income-tax had been adverted to, he expressed his opinion with regard to that. (Cheering.) At present, mind you, he is not so fond of expressing those frank opinions, because he has so often expressed them, and has been so often made to eat his own words, that he has now become most particularly delicate upon that matter, and scarcely ever gives utterance to his opinion at all; and hence the difficulty of finding out what the hon. baronet means. (Laughter.) However, then he did favour us with his opinion upon the income-tax; and what did he say? "Nothing but a case of extreme necessity could justify Parliament in subjecting the people of this country, in a time of peace, to the inquisitorial process which must result from rendering that impost productive." (Hear, hear.) Now, mark this—it's so beautiful, and applies so famously to the present income-tax. (Great laughter.) "And to have recourse to such machinery to raise 2 or 3 per cent., would be most unwise. The application of the tax to Ireland would be attended with extreme difficulty; but, if the property-tax were established, Ireland should not be exempted from its operation. He wished to see Ireland as much favoured as possible, consistently with justice (a laugh); but to impose a property-tax upon England and Scotland, and to exempt Ireland, would, in his opinion, however unpopular that might be, be exceedingly unjust;" therefore, by his own showing, the right hon. baronet not only has now done that which, under other circumstances he declared to be exceedingly unwise, but he has also done that which he positively pronounced exceedingly unjust. (Cheers.) Surely, after a man has so gone back from what he has frequently stated in his place in Parliament, no honest person can trust in his declaration. (Loud cheers.) Therefore, though I do say that, in forming general conclusions from these particular strong reasons, one may hope to see him here, yet I do not say that I should rejoice to see him here enrolled as a leader in this society. (Loud cheers.) Now, gentlemen, I often think that hereafter, when we shall all be dead and gone, and shall have passed away from this scene—when our descendants shall examine into the history of those times, and study the character of the public men of this age—what opinion they will form of the public character, the public morals, and virtue of our days, when they shall behold prominent amongst our leaders two such bright examples, pure and disinterested public servants, devoted and admirable men as Sir Robert Peel and Alderman Gibbs. (Loud cheers, mingled with laughter, which lasted some minutes.) With respect to the party, the great party, who are in favour of agricultural protection, and who support Sir Robert Peel at present—though most unwilling support they give him—they contend for no less a proposition than this: That, supposing there were no customs' duties required at all—supposing that the revenue of the country could be raised entirely from some internal source of taxation, such as crown lands, or any other more advisable source—they say that we should still have to maintain the whole staff of Custom-house commissioners, tide-waiters, searchers, inspectors, overseers, preventive-service men, and revenue cutters, for the mere purpose of keeping out foreign produce. (Hear.) That is the principle which they contend for, inasmuch as they say that "all we want is to keep them out." And they ask it as a right to which they are entitled. Yet whilst they claim this right they admit that we have the abstract principles on our side. (Hear.) Mr. Gladstone says that Free-Trade principles are the principles of common sense; and Mr. Baring says that he is a Free Trader in the abstract; and we hear a gentleman, who lately made an oration in Essex, say he is a Free Trader in principle. Now, what is the meaning of a thing being true in principle or theory, and not true in fact? The very substances contained in the assertion, that a thing is true in theory, means that it is true in fact.

What would you think of a person, living amongst rational beings, who would say that he admitted Copernicus was right in saying that the sun went round the world, and then add, "So it is in theory but not in fact, because I see the sun rise in the east;" in fact the sun goes round the earth. That is what those people contend for, who say a thing is true in theory but not in fact. But these gentlemen bid us look at the burdens there are upon the land. Now, admitting for the sake of argument, (because I won't admit on any other account,) that there are burdens—what comparison is there between the burdens on land, which are peculiar burdens upon the land and not upon the landowner, because he bought the land subject to those burdens for centuries past, and that other burden placed upon the country to maintain protection laws? The one is a mere burden of gold—the other of starvation, sorrow, life, and death. (Loud cheers.) That is the difference between the burdens; and we cannot weigh them against each other—we cannot put tears in one balance and gold into the other. (Renewed cheers.) Therefore, supposing those burdens to exist, they are not to be compared with the other burdens to which I have referred, and ought not to be taken into consideration. (Hear.) Let us consider the burdens they really have, and what they are. Sir Robert Peel enumerated them at Tunworth. First, there are tithes. Now when were tithes introduced into this country? How are they a burden upon the landowners? A thousand years ago, the owners of the land and the Legislature consented to contribute a portion of their property for the payment of the clergy—thus it is no burden on the landowner—he bought it subject to that, or he inherited it subject to that, and it is no more a public burden upon it than any rent a farmer may have to pay (hear, hear), and indeed he gets his land so much cheaper on this account. (Cheers.) Then rates are said to be another burden, and no doubt a portion of that burden does fall upon the land; but does it fall entirely upon the land? Do not you all who occupy houses pay house-rates, and police-rates, and gas-rates, and water-rates, and twenty other rates? and you claim no protection upon that account. (Cheers.) Well, then, we come to what I admit is a burden, and I think it ought fairly to be admitted, because we should always give our opponents the full benefit of their hardships when they have so many! (cheers and laughter),—the land-tax—that is a burden, and what is its amount? In 1841, the produce of the land-tax was £1,214,000. Then I turn to the legacy-tax and probate duty: and perhaps some of you are not aware that land pays neither of these duties: so that if I were to succeed to £50,000 a year to-morrow, in land, I should not have to pay a penny for it; but if the person from whom I inherited it turned it into money, and sold it for £1,000,000, I should have to pay ten per cent. on the whole of that sum, if I were no relation to him (hear, hear); and I find that the amount of these two duties was £2,100,000—no bad set-off, I think, against the land-tax. (Cheers.) I must apologize for entering into these details, because, in point of fact, the question depends upon detail, and further, because I am not able to make you a fine oration even if I wished. (Cheers.) But there is another section of the House of Commons who say, "We disregard the notion of protection altogether, but we must have a revenue collected, and we think it ought to come as much from corn as from any other article imported into this country." We Free Traders say, "No—corn is not an article which ought to be made the subject of taxation when imported. We say, first, it is one of the necessities of life—one of the raw materials which is worked up into all other produce, and therefore it should be admitted duty free. We say further, that a duty if any ought to be levied upon those articles, the supply of which is as regular as possible, so that the produce of the duty one year should equal the produce of another year; but that corn is not an article that would produce such a constant duty as this, is evident from the variations of the seasons: it is, therefore, manifestly unfit to be made the subject of a fixed duty. We say, also, that a tax should take as little as possible from the pockets of those who pay it, whilst it should give as much as possible to the Government who has to receive it; but we say a fixed duty on corn is not such a duty,—and why? Because, for every quarter of wheat imported into this country, subject to duty, and sold in the market, we have to pay upon every other quarter grown in the country an amount of duty equivalent to that paid upon foreign wheat; because, if they be of the same quality they will be sold at the same price, and in consequence of the duty home-grown wheat will be allowed to rise to the same price as foreign wheat before it can compete with it. Therefore, if the duty be 5s. or 6s. upon foreign wheat, we pay a like duty on the home-grown wheat, and that not to the Government, but into the pockets of those who grow it; and, therefore, we say corn is not the subject for a fixed Custom-house duty. (Cheers.) I must again apologize for having returned to these details. I am happy to be able to agree with what the Chairman of the League has said about the ultimate success of this question. Who can doubt it? (Cheers.) Is there a man here who doubts that ultimately this law must be repealed? (Cheers, and cries of "No, no.") Let him look at the history, if there be such a one, of all the great questions which have been carried in this country. Let him see, if he can, one for which the people of this country clearly and determinately expressed themselves, which has not ultimately become the law of the land. (Cheers.) Was it those great landowners and squires, who got up and talk about Jacobin and republican associations, who granted the Reform Bill to this country? No, but the people of this country said, "It is just and right;" and the Reform Bill, long resisted, was ultimately carried. (Cheers.) Was it the members of the upper classes of this country who first brought forward the abolition of slavery? No; there was one gentleman, no doubt, in a distinguished position, who did advocate the African's cause; but those who carried that measure were hard-working men in the middle classes of life; they contrived the means, adopted the measures, and slavery was abolished. (Loud cheers.) To come to a more practical question, which was of great importance to all of you—Was it the aristocracy of this country who proposed, or willingly carried for your benefit, the Penny Postage? No. Why, the Whigs and the Tories both opposed it, but the middle classes asserted their strength, and all reasonable, thinking, and hard-working men say that it would confer a great public benefit. (Cheers.) But we need not look merely at the present time. If we go back 200 years, we shall find that we have been fighting over again the same battle that was fought then. We shall see that there were men in that age who could make a bold stand against monopoly in the House of Commons, or wherever it should meet them; and we must remember that they had a great deal to contend with which we have not. (Hear.) The Government was not then in the hands of the middle classes as it is now, but they had to battle against the prerogative of the Crown; and yet they did it, and what was the result? Why, monopoly was abolished, and an act of Parliament was passed 220 years ago, commanding that all monopolies should cease in the realm (cheers); and no doubt we shall see an act of Parliament passed, not, perhaps, in quite such general terms, but declaring—and that is what we want—that the Corn Laws are injurious to the best interests of the country, and that they shall from henceforth be repealed. Mr. Bouverie resumed his seat amid loud applause.

The CHAIRMAN then announced that Mr. W. J. Fox would next address the meeting.

Mr. W. J. Fox came forward amidst enthusiastic cheering. Silence having been obtained, he proceeded as follows:—I have to address you on the first meeting of a new year of agitation, at a time when confusion, anxiety, and uncertainty are prevailing throughout the country,—when the Legislature is expected shortly to meet,—when the people look on rather with sullen expectancy than with any degree of hopefulness,—when the League has gone on marshalling its strength, augmenting its funds, and multiplying its numbers,—when political parties are on the look-out to see what chance may turn up for retaining their position, or for getting into the position of their adversaries,—when Anti-League Associations are forming in different counties,—and when, therefore, it is appropriate and desirable to reiterate, though in terms that have been often heard, but which cannot be too frequently repeated—to reiterate the League principle—the one aim and object of this association, that for which we are banded together—without which we will never be content; till we attain which our organization and exertions will continue—the one broad simple principle of Free Trade; and, as applied to the greatest practical case, the total, the immediate, and the unconditional abolition of the Corn Laws. (Loud cheers.) That is the star by which we steer; to that single point we bear right on, heedless of all other considerations. We care not for parties; we care not for demarcations of faction, new or old; we care not for the consistencies or inconsistencies of this or that leader of any portion of the House of Commons—the total, the unconditional, and the immediate abolition of the Corn Laws is what we ask, and all we ask. We require no more—we will take no less—from Sir Robert Peel on the one side, or Lord John Russell on the other. (Loud cheers.) We ask no more, and we will take no less, from Lord Melbourne on the one side, and the Duke of Wellington on the other—or from my Lord Brougham on all sides. (Loud laughter, and cheers.) We wage no further warfare with those who concede this principle; we wage everlasting warfare with all who will not grant it; and because it is a principle, in our minds it admits of no compromise whatever. (Cheers.) That is our watchword. If a certain class in the country reiterates the cry, "No surrender," we reply by "No compromise." If this movement were what it has been sometimes mistakenly represented,—if it were a mere manufacturers' combination,—if it endeavoured to put certain portions of the trade and commerce of this country on a different, a safer, and more profitable footing, and this were all,—if this were a mere party movement, an action of hostility towards one set of politicians, and an endeavour to introduce into their place another set of politicians,—if this movement were a class feeling,—if we really did the absurd thing that has been ascribed to us in the published resolutions of societies,—if we hated agriculture (an inconceivable absurdity! for how can any man hate that without which he gets no bread to eat?)—or if this were a mere popular, or a mere cuckoo cry, set up by individuals for their own personal aggrandisement, or for political ends, like "No Popery," and similar cries that have so often led multitudes astray, and wrought confusion in the country, why, then, there might be compromise in the matter. But we say it is "the very stuff of the conscience;" it is a principle upon which we have made up our minds as embracing the right of man anterior to the existence of civilized society; for if anything can be called a natural right, it is that of man's exchanging the produce of his honest labour freely in the world's markets for whatever he may desire which may be most welcome to him, ministering to his subsistence or enjoyment. (Cheers.) This is not a question that admits of degrees; it is not a thing to be settled piecemeal. We respect all rights; but we have no respect for wrongs. (Renewed cheers.) We understand not the doctrine of tolerating a certain portion of robbery, iniquity, and oppression upon the community, and on individuals. We take up our position on the right and the wrong of the case—for property of all sorts, as realized by human skill and labour, and as sanctioned by human laws and institutions. We avow our respect for, and we hold in sacred veneration, the property of the class which has most opposed itself to our claims. The broad acres of the landowner are his; we mean not to touch them; we set up no scramble for their division. We interfere not with his regulations of that which, by inheritance or by purchase, belongs to him. Let him do as he will with his own; he is amenable to opinion if he violates decency and morality; but, so far as he keeps within the limits which the great objects of human society prescribe, we respect his rights even there. Let him have his game or let him decimate his hares and rabbits; let him grant leases or refuse them; let him cut down the ancient timber on his estate to put cash into his pocket, or let him have a great respect for and be conservative of timber and institutions. We meddle with nothing whatever of this; let him have his whole rights. The land is his; the produce of the land is his, or theirs to whom he hires out that land; but there is one thing which is not his, and that is, the industry of other people, their labour, and their skill, their perseverance, their bones and sinews, their daily toil; and the bread which they earn by that toil and work, he has no right to diminish by taxation. (Loud cheers.) They are his fellow-countrymen and not his slaves. The labourer's bones and muscles are his own property, and not the landlord's. We claim for ourselves that which we concede to him—the fair produce of whatever power, privileges, or advantages we possess. Here our principle claims the same respect, the same sacred veneration for the rights of property of the man who has nothing in the world but the physical strength with which he goes forth in the morning to earn his dinner at noon, and that of the inheritor of the widest and most princely domain which can be boasted of in this country of Great Britain. (Cheers.) And, in our regard for this principle, we are opposed, not only to the form of invasion of the industrious man's property, but to any other mode or plan of invasion of that property which might be substituted by any other parties or for any other purpose. Our principle is as opposed to a fixed duty as it is opposed to a sliding scale. (Cheers.) The one is as much an invasion of the common rights of the people as is the other; for what is its tendency, under whatever pretext it can be levied? There is no doubt that any duty on the importation of corn must enhance the price of food; and whatever enhances the price of food takes away from the fair earnings of the industrious. When we call to mind the condition of great multitudes of the industrious classes—when we think how they rise early and sit up late, and eat the bread of carefulness, by what miserable and wearing toil their poor pittance is won from the world—when we remember how many there are the whole history of whose lives is summed up in the well-known verse—

"Work, work, work,
Till the eyes be red and dim;
Work, work, work,
Till the brain begins to swim,"—

when we look on such a destiny as this, if a fixed duty would take but a farthing out of the pound, we say it should not be taken off their pittance to augment the stores of the Dukes of Buckingham and Richmond, or any other landlord. (Loud and prolonged cheering.) Why, there are cases in which the imposition of a fixed duty on corn, whatever the amount, would lead to more objectionable results, perhaps, than those which belong to the sliding scale. It has been often urged, and I believe it has been felt as an objection, "What will you do with your fixed duty, your 10s., your 8s., or your 5s., what will you do with it when the price of food rises as it is subject to, and at times does rise to—a famine price?" (Hear, hear.) And it has been replied, "Then it must be relaxed. And what power shall determine the relaxation, and by what test? Only realize in your imagination, for a moment, the condition of a Prime Minister who has to watch the country to see whether the time is come, or coming, at which the fixed duty on corn must be relaxed by a special interposition of the Government, because food is reaching a famine price! He must note in the papers how many are picked up fainting in the streets from want of food; how many cases of starvation will prove that bread has risen to the price at which the relaxation must take place; what amount of disease, how much typhus, will be a justification of the relaxation of that duty? These are the inquiries a Prime Minister must make in such a case. He must watch the country, and feel its pulsation, as the regimental surgeon stands by when a soldier is flogged—finger on wrist, eye on the bleeding wound, ear upon the sound of the cat on the bare back, with a stop-watch noting whether the instant has yet arrived when he is to interpose and say, "Hold, enough!" (Loud cheers.) Is this a fitting position for the chief of the legitimate government of a free nation? (Loud cries of "No, no.") One violation of justice always leads to another. Forget justice, and charity will not long be remembered, and humanity cry in vain. A fixed duty! It is only protection under another name! That which is called "protection"—and "protection" is the very thing against which this League wages warfare, and which it exists in order to put down and annihilate for ever (loud cheers)—we have no more charity for protection in this form than another. What is it? "The protection of agriculture." What portion of agriculture? What class of persons? Strip it of devices and sophisms, and circumlocutions—it is the protection of rent, and nothing else. (Cheers.) The protection of the farmer! The tenant-farmer!—has it ever enriched him? The protection of the labourer; what has been his history for many a year past? He has been protected downwards from one stage to another of descent,—protected out of his old clothes into rags,—protected out of his cottage into a ruined hovel, with but one filthy room in it for wife and family, all to pig together. He has been protected till his wife and children are so ragged that they cannot go to church for the rites of religion. He is protected out of the field into the union workhouse, or perhaps into a court of justice, or a gaol; and at last he is protected into that narrow home,

"Where the wicked cease from troubling,
And the weary are at rest;"— finding in the cold shelter of the grave more reality of protection than he ever got from the Corn Laws. (Loud and continued cheering.) Protection! Why, what should we protect? Not a losing trade, for that is taxing all the community for the advantage of a class; that is pursuing an object that cannot repay the labourer. Not a thriving trade, for that needs no protection. And why should any one class be singled out? What is there in the condition of the recipient of rents that he is to be protected at the expense of all the rest of the community? Why not protect the philosopher, the artist, the poet? What can protection do for them, or for any thing that is intrinsically valuable? There was a poet born this day—some Scotchmen here will immediately remember to whom I refer, for many are engaged elsewhere in celebrating the birthday of Robert Burns. (Loud cheers.) Nature made Burns a poet, and aristocratic protection made him an exciseman. (Cheers.) But the protection he most desired was that which his own stout heart and strong arm could give him. He was a man who would not humble himself in the dust before an aristocrat. He could adopt such language as this in reference to servility—

"For me aye low I nee I nee low,
For the Lord be thankit I can plough,
When I downa yoke a naig,
Then, Lord be thankit, I can beg."

And the independence of the beggar was with him, and is, in reality, a more desirable thing than that pecuniary independence which is obtained by plundering others of their rights and their means of subsistence. (Loud cheers.) It was justly said by an honourable gentleman who preceded me—if it be considered as a question of revenue, what is there in the world from which a revenue ought not sooner to be derived than from human food? (Hear.) Tax anything but that! But revenue is a mere pretext in the case. In fact the operation of these laws is full of petty juggling: some saying "revenue," when they mean "protection," others saying "protection," when they mean "revenue." Sir Robert Peel contrived, in the first year of his tariff, to realize a duty of 8s. a quarter on corn—3s. a quarter more than it had ever before brought to the country. Those who are crying out that this is a question of revenue, are only leading us by a roundabout way towards the same object—the putting money into the pockets of a class, derived from the earnings of the rest of the community. (Hear.) But it is not the less an invasion of their rights, though the circuitousness of the method obscures and mystifies the process. They draw it silently and unobservedly, as they think, on account of this roundabout way of getting at it. But, after all, there it is! They are like the dishonest churchwarden. (Laughter.) I did not mean—(Renewed laughter.) There have been more dishonest churchwardens in the world than one (hear), however unenviable the pre-eminence that he has obtained. My allusion was to the old story of the churchwarden, who carried round the plate for the sacrament money for the poor, and who, upon such occasions, always took care to put sawdust in his pockets, that a few shillings might drop in without jingling. (Laughter.) The Corn Laws are the landowners' sawdust (great cheers and laughter); but the money goes not in a less quantity, because its abstraction is more noiseless in the way of robbery by act of Parliament, than in any other irregular abstraction of property. With such men and such dealings as these, we make no compromise. Indeed, why should the League compromise now? (Hear.) "Compromise" is not exactly the word that belongs to our present position. If we dreamed not of it when we were weak, we are not likely to listen to it now that we are strong; if it was not our word when we were but few, it is little likely to be so now we are many. Allow me to say, that you in London scarcely imagine at present what the strength of the League is. It would be worth while your sending a deputation down into the North, there to mark and observe the nature of that strength, its progressiveness, and its intensity. (Hear, hear.) You should see the multitudes flocking together in those districts—men, women, and children—persons of all ranks and classes—as to a work that called forth the deepest sympathies of human nature. Yes, you should see them coming and mingling together in the same assembly—masters' and men pouring out from the factories. There is no heed paid there to the calumnies and stories which are circulated in some quarters; there are no symptoms there of the tyranny which has been talked of elsewhere. Whether it exists in other cases I know not; it certainly does not in the towns I have visited, and where I have seen this question agitated; but there come the operatives from the factories, not choked with "devil's dust," as Mr. Ferrand says, but ready to "down with their own dust" in the cause—contributing, and that largely—women bringing their portion, and showing that they feel that it is indeed a woman's part to help the helpless, to sympathise with the oppressed, to relieve the struggling—old and young combining, the very children feeling, as it were, an atmosphere of patriotic exertion, and having a presentiment that in times to come—when the victory of Free Trade shall be gained, and men will look back upon it as a matter of history and glorious achievement—that they, too, will have pride in saying, "I, also, was a repealer in my infancy!" (Cheers.) Could you see the spirit with which they are animated, the enthusiasm that pervades their meetings, you would feel that indeed the death doom of monopoly was sealed; and whenever London shall take its proper position—when the feeling in the provinces shall be proportionally responded to here—when you meet with their religious principle in this matter—when you meet with their pecuniary liberality in this great cause—when you are animated with this firm determination—why, then, the work is accomplished, and these laws will be totally and finally abolished. (Loud and prolonged cheering.) Not but what compromise would be as remote from the thoughts of the leaders of the League if they were alone in this great struggle. (Hear.) This was manifest from the spirit of the seven men at the meeting in Manchester several years ago, when they banded themselves for this purpose. Their principle from the beginning was complete abolition and repeal, and nothing short of repeal; and I believe that they and others would have adhered to it, although no public sympathy had been aroused—though none of these great meetings had been held to cheer them on in their course; for when once a principle like this gets possession of the soul of man, it is indomitable. It is the fight of martyrdom and of victory! There may be victims—there cannot be defeat; there may be delay, but there cannot be eventual repulse. It is to individual devotion—to the determination never to compromise a principle—that we owe most of the world's great blessings. Without it we should have had no political freedom—no Protestant reformation—no Christian religion! (Cheers.) Could the League falter in its course now—a thing which I hold to be morally impossible—it would still not signify in the great cause, for the leaders in such a cause as this, could they prove traitors, cannot stop the movement, they are but foremost in the ranks—they are marching on "regular as rolling water;" and if they will not themselves keep in advance, why, they will only be trampled under foot in the progress of the country till the great consummation. (Cheers.) I say again, "no compromise," because we are challenged—we are summoned to the conflict. The landowners of England are throwing down the gauntlet; they are going to wage warfare with the League, and they say they will put down the League. (Laughter.) We will try that question with them. They are not the bold barons of Runnymede; the age of chivalry is gone; and most of all it is gone in their ranks, for there is little chivalry in becoming traders in corn and taxing the country to enhance their profits. But what do these people mean by a course which tends to isolate them from every other class of the community?—suspicion in their tenants; hatred and insubordination in their labourers; an interest against which they wage war in the other great classes in the empire; repudiating not their debts but their diamonds; rejecting from their ranks such men as the Spencers, the Westminsters, the Dunces, and the Rednoses—the robbers themselves of what should constitute their dignity and their armour? And what do they mean, I say, by standing aloof from the world, and dreaming that they are strong enough to trample under foot its inhabitants, and to reap its plunder? (Cheers.) Nothing can avert them but discomfiture and confusion. They must see that their state, the more they persist in such course, is one of insecurity and apprehension; they will feel the ground tremble under them, as it is said to have shaken wherever the fratricide Cain set his foot; and, ramble where they will, no sympathy will cheer their course, no kind and gushing feeling will welcome their arrival: their real interest is, then, to reunite themselves with the nation, in conjunction with which they may have respect, wealth, and happiness; in warfare with which they can only bring on the destruction of their class. (Hear.) As to these meetings of the tenantry, ordered to come, as they seem to be in some cases, and declining to come, as they evidently do in others, the deception and exaggeration of their numbers and their contributions have already been mentioned to you. I have no doubt that large exaggerations do take place wherever a numerous meeting is reported; and would the Morning Herald favour us, as it sometimes obliges the Government, with the private notes of its reporters, ("hear" and loud cheers), we should then know something more of the real state of the case. I have seen but one account, and that in a local paper, of a genuine meeting of tenant-farmers, placed beyond suspicion as to the class of persons and the freedom of their discussion. That was a meeting which lately took place at Evesham, of the tenant-farmers, members of the Agricultural Society of the Vale of Evesham. About twenty-five of them met together to discuss the subject of leases; and, after fairly and fully hearing both sides of the question from two of their number, who had studied the subject, and were opposed in opinion, they came to two divisions: one division was on the desirableness of leases, on which twenty voted for it, and two against it; the other was on the subject of corn rents, where there were eighteen for and three against. And such will be the result of these County Protection Associations, if the farmers are allowed fair play. Meanwhile, from their number, it is a pity they do not seek an aggregate meeting. (Hear.) I think, inconvenient as this place is for your number, they might perhaps be accommodated here. Mr. Paulton could find a private box for the Protection Society of each county: we could find a private box for each of them. (Laughter.) The conscientious friends of the present sliding scale, and of Sir R. Peel, might, perhaps, all be accommodated in the manager's box, and then when their discussion were done they might join in yours, and compare notes with you on the great question at issue. But it will never avail for the landlords to attempt to drive the farmers to such meetings, in the same manner as they drive them to the poll at elections; there is more required, and it is difficult to make persons in their present doubting, inquiring, and perhaps suspicious and sullen state of mind, go through the manual exercise which their chairman may desire. I understand that at one of these meetings, when a resolution was to be passed, the chairman had great difficulty in getting a show of hands: he had to tell the farmers over and over again that now they were to hold up their hands; but the farmers by, perhaps, a voluntary blunder, instead of holding up their hands turned up their noses. (Laughter.) On the argumentation at these meetings I shall make no remark; for out of nothing nothing can come. (Laughter.) They have been generally a sheer tissue of abuse, and the only fragments or grains that are to be found in these bushels of chaff are the old iterations of fallacies which every labourer can detect, of wages rising with the price of corn,—of the need of protection against competition,—of the desirableness of independence on the foreigner, and so on; things that we may heartily rejoice to hear are brought into something like discussion; for where all the rest of the world has exploded them as nonsensical, in those regions where they have been turned to account, it is well that they should be now put forward and subjected to investigation. It is a favourite theme, this independence of foreigners. One would imagine that the patriotism of the landlord's breast must be most intense. (Laughter.) Yet he seems to forget that he is employing guano to manure his own fields; that he is spreading a foreign surface over his English soil, through which every atom of corn is to grow; becoming thereby polluted with the dependence upon foreigners, which he professes to abjure. To what is he left—this declaimer against foreigners, and advocate of dependence upon home? Trace him through his career. This was very admirably done by an honourable gentleman, who just now addressed you, at the Salisbury contest. His opponent urged this plea, and Mr. Bouverie stripped him, as it were, head to foot, showing that he had not an article of dress upon him which did not render him in some degree dependent upon foreigners. (Hear, hear.) We will pursue this subject, and trace his whole life. What is the career of the man whose possessions are in broad acres? Why, a French cook dresses his dinner for him, and a Swiss valet dresses him for his dinner. (Laughter.) He hands down his lady, decked with pearls that never grew in the shell of a British oyster (laughter); and her waving plume of ostrich feathers certainly never formed the tail of a barn-door fowl. The viands of his table are from all countries of the world; his wines are from the banks of the Rhine and the Rhone. In his conservatory he regales his sight with the blossoms of South American flowers. In his smoking room he gratifies his scent with the weed of North America. His favourite horse is of Arabian blood; his pet dog of the St. Bernard breed. His gallery is rich with pictures from the Flemish school, and statues from Greece. For his amusements, why he goes to hear Italian singers warble German music, followed by a French ballet. If he rises to judicial honours, the ermine that decorates his shoulders is a production that was never before on the back of a British beast. (Loud laughter.) His very mind is not English in its attainments, it is a mere pic-nic of foreign contributions. His poetry and philosophy are from Greece and Rome; his geometry is from Alexandria; his arithmetic is from Arabia; and his religion from Palestine. In his cradle, in his infancy, he rubbed his gums with coral from oriental oceans; and when he dies his monument will be sculptured in marble from the quarries of Carrara. (Loud cheers.) And yet this is the man who says, "Oh! let us be independent of foreigners!" (Laughter.) Let us submit to taxation; let there be privation and want; let there be struggles and disappointments—let there be starvation itself; only let us be independent of foreigners!" (Hear.) I quarrel not with him for enjoying the luxuries of other lands; these are arts that make it life to live. I wish not only that they may have all the good that any climate or region can bear for them—it is their right if they have wherewithal to exchange for it. What I complain of is the so-phistry, the hypocrisy, and iniquity of talking of independence of foreigners in the article of food, while there is dependence in all these materials of daily enjoyment and recreation (cheers); food is the article the foreigner most wants to sell; food is that which thousands of our operatives most want to buy; and it is not for him—the mere creature of foreign agency from head to foot—to interpose and say, "You shall be independent; I alone will be the very essence and quintessence of dependence." We compromise not this question with parties such as these: no, nor with the Legislature. We are not going to the Legislature this session. (Hear, hear, hear.) No more petitioning (cheers) Members of the House of Commons! Members of the House of Lords! do as you please, and what you please—our appeal is to your masters. (Tremendous cheering, which lasted for a considerable time.) The League goes to the constituencies, to the creators of legislators, and tells them they have made the article badly, and instructs them how to form it better on the first occasion. (Renewed cheering.) Here we carry on the warfare, appealing—not as has been falsely said to calumny, delusion, or to corruption, but calling up in those who possess political power the intelligence and independence which dignify humanity. And it is remarkable the contrast in the elections that have already taken place since this course was adopted by the League,—that while their adversaries seek out for every little spot, for every speck of dirt and corruption in human character, and build upon that,—while those who espouse the interest of the great land monopoly hunt up the tailor and shoemaker, or the glove-maker, and say, "Have you not a little monopoly of your own? Keep up our great monopoly, and we will uphold your little monopoly." "Tickle me, toby; tickle me, do" (loud laughter);—while they endeavour in every way to play upon all the foolishness and baseness of human nature, the League has endeavoured to work by intelligence and principle, and by these alone, calling out not what is brutal, but what is most divine in human nature—the realizing that spirit of independence, without which no institution, no forms of freedom, no rights of voting, nothing that society can enact or sanction, ever made a people free and great, or ever will. For this reason it was that they were held to be such "monstrous interlopers," such "strangers;" this has raised the cry in London and Salisbury, "Here are people come up amongst us whose homes are in Lancashire—great strangers who have no business here." This was the same sort of indignation that Doctor Caius manifested in "The Merry Wives of Windsor," when he found Slender's man in his closet. ("Hear," and laughter.) When he inquired of Dame Quickly, who was there? the lady only inflamed his wrath the more, by saying, "He is an honest man." Why, the monopolist uses the same language as Doctor Caius: "Vat shall do honest man do in my closet—there is no honest man shall come into my closet." (Laughter.) But the honest man has got into their closet—with a search-warrant, and finds there what shall bring them to shame and confusion, exposing the sophistry, laying bare the tricks, and paving the way for future struggles of a similar description, and of yet more resplendent consequences. We have no compromise on such a question as the Corn Laws, because we cannot compromise with crime; and I hold these laws to be one great crime, both in themselves and in their consequences. On the very face of the thing they are a fraud; for when a class says to a nation, "Exclude all foreign corn; be independent of foreigners;" does it not imply that they, the home growers, will furnish the supply? Do they not, by the very fact of interposing to prevent our getting provisions abroad, undertake that there shall be food of their raising at home? Have they done this? (Loud cries of "No, no.") Have they produced it at a price at which the great mass of the community, however industrious, could afford to purchase a sufficient quantity? Have there not been want and starvation both in this country and Ireland, while there has been ample abundance which has been increasing the wealth of the landowners, but not ministering to the necessities of the community? Have they the power? Why, the very increase of our population, some 230,000 a year, would require to feed it, the addition every year, of a county as large as that of Surrey, for its produce to minister to this additional number of mouths, a sufficient quantity of bread and meat. Can they do this? Can they add another county to England? Can they make, as it were, another England? Can they create and furnish us with the produce of a new Ireland; or can they keep the old Ireland? (Loud cries of "No, no," and vehement cheering.) I say that those laws are a crime that occasion the destruction of human food. (Hear.) Not long ago—about the time I was at Liverpool—large quantities of American butter were brought out of the warehouses; a hole was bored in each firkin—the butter would not answer, as a commercial speculation, to pay the duty on it—and into those firkins pitch and other substances were poured, in order that this butter might be rendered altogether unfit for human use. I believe that it was ultimately actually made into grease for the wheels of the locomotive engines. (Loud cries of "Shame!") At Sunderland the same thing has occurred twice within no great number of weeks, with respect to wheat kept there in bond. The people were starving, and the wheat was all the while rotting within the warehouses, until at last it was brought out from under the Government lock and key, by her Majesty's servants, the Custom-house officers, taken to a dunghill, mixed with all sorts of substances; and thereby rendered utterly unfit for use for the common purposes of human food, was there converted into manure—and this at a time when the people were talking about the poor laws, charities, subscriptions, and collections, and of their tender feelings for the sufferings of the poor. (Cheers, and cries of "Shame!") And there is more yet of crime. Let any one look at the table of committals for offences, and compare it with the price of wheat from year to year. The exceptions are very rare in which a rise in the price of corn is not also attended by an increase in the number of committals. In the years from 1834 to 1836, when wheat was at 44s. 3d. a quarter, the average number of committals was 21,000; from 1837 to 1841, when wheat averaged 63s. 2d., the annual number of committals was 25,000; 4000 criminals a year added by this horrible sliding scale of guilt and misery! To take extreme years: in 1835, wheat was a little under 40s. a quarter; the number of committals was 20,751. In 1842, when wheat was 57s. 3d., the committals rose to 31,309. There are calculations indicating, by the experience of many years, the results of this system. It is a horrible operation to trace out these iniquitous laws, depressing the circumstances, murdering the soul as well as the body, making even the generous and meritorious tendencies of our nature subservient to crime, rendering the love of a man for his own family, and those dependent upon him, a motive and an incentive to guilt, creating crime, and mocking the repetition of the Queen's proclamation for the suppression of vice, by an act of Parliament for the production of criminality. (Hear.) Oh! I do declare, before heaven and earth, that I would rather hold up my hand at the bar of the Old Bailey as a culprit driven to crime by the feeling which these iniquitous laws produce, than be one of those who have profited by their enactment to coin money out of the hearts, lives, and consciences of their fellow-creatures. (Immense cheering; the assembly rising, en masse, and waving hats and handkerchiefs.) Nor is this all. The annual table of mortality shows analogous results to those of the table of crime; with the price of wheat, the number of deaths falls and rises. In 1798, and in 1802, wheat was 59s. a quarter; the average of deaths 20,508 in London. In 1800, an intermediate year, and therefore not liable to any exception on the ground of increased population, when wheat was upwards of 60s., the number of deaths was 25,670: 5000 deaths in that year, analogous with the increase in the price of food, directly tending to impress on our mind, the connexion of cause and effect. It seems as if that grim monster had forgotten his impartiality—as if the bony tyrant had become the very servant of monopoly; and though it is still, in some measure, true that "the rich and the poor lie down together in the grave," yet wealth, by its laws, sends the poor there first, and sends them there in numbers to prepare for its own reception. The effect of the classification of society by the different degrees of safety, and good lodging, and nutriment, is, that while of the middle and higher class only one child in five fails to attain the age of five years, in the working class half the number die before they reach that period. Are we to be told that further experiments should be made in laws connected with phenomena such as these? Are we to give Peel's bill a longer trial, or any form of monopoly whatever? Are we to have more experiments of privation and disappointment and suffering, of crime and of death? It was an old medical axiom to let experiments be made upon vile and worthless bodies; but here are laws making the most cruel of all experiments, even upon the body of a great and suffering nation. (Cheers.) I say, this is enough to arouse every feeling of our souls, and to proclaim a crusade of men, women, and children, of all ranks and classes, against this iniquity; listening to no compromise until it be put down utterly and for ever. For this we band ourselves. You, inhabitants of the metropolis, will, I trust, take your rightful position, and go forward in the van, and lead on the march of the provinces. For this we combine our exertions, determined not to rest until we behold realized that great object of our anticipation—the giant form of emancipated labour throned on the ruins of all existing monopolies. (Loud cheers.) For this we strive from year to year; and while there is one atom left of restriction on the Statute Book—while there is any enactment injurious to the rights of industry and of labour—while there is any imposition on the food of the people—we will never desist from agitation—no, never, never! (Enthusiastic cheering.) Towards this consummation from year to year we hold onward our course, endeavouring in its realization to effect not only good for ourselves, but for other classes also, however blind they may be to their own interests: for we see in universal freedom the best security for the largest property, as well as the rightful and honourable encouragement for those who have no property at all. (Hear.) We believe commercial freedom will develop intellectual and moral freedom,—teaching the different classes their dependence on each other, uniting nations in bonds of brotherhood, and tending to realize the anticipations of the great poet before referred to, and whom this day gave to Scotland and the world:—

"Now let us pray, that come it may,
As come it shall for a' that;
That man to man the world o'er Shall brothers be for a' that."

Mr. Fox resumed his seat amidst prolonged and most enthusiastic cheering.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Milner Gibson will next address you.

MR. MILNER GIBSON then advanced to the table and was greeted with a burst of applause. He said:—Sir, I should have preferred to have remained silent, to have had time for reflection, after the spirit-stirring and eloquent oration which we have just heard from our friend Mr. Fox; and I feel confident, Sir, that I speak the sentiments of this vast assemblage, when I say that he has conveyed to the world the full intention of the National Anti-Corn-Law League. (Loud cheers.) He has not gone beyond what they profess, nor has he in the slightest degree fallen short of what they desire. It is true, Sir, I believe, that the principle which we advocate is the total and unconditional repeal of the Corn Laws, and, at the same time, we advocate the abolition of all other protective duties. (Cheers.) We are not willing to reserve to any portion of the community that protection which we are resolved, if we can, to take from the agriculturists (hear, hear); and standing here, as I rejoice to do, in the presence of this vast and intelligent assembly, I feel proud in having it in my power to deny most emphatically, a charge which has been brought against the Anti-Corn-Law League, that it is a body which seeks simply to attack the landed interest, and desires to procure protection to manufactures. (Hear, hear.) Representing, myself, in Parliament the metropolis of the manufactures of England, I here emphatically, on their behalf, deny that charge, and assert before you all, that those men who have petitioned the Legislature to repeal the Corn Laws have also desired that the Legislature should withdraw all protection from those branches of industry which they pursue. (Cheers.) My honourable friend Mr. Fox well said, that it was a farce to petition the Legislature. I am glad that we are no longer to waste our energies by getting up futile petitions to the landlords' house. We shall be entertained next session by petitions of another description; we shall have landlords' petitions presented by landlords to landlords. (Cheers and laughter.) These are the petitions with which the country will be entertained; and, believe me, I speak the exact truth when I say, that the parties who got up those petitions will be the same that will present them in the House, and the majority who rule in that House will be the persons to repulse them. (Loud cheers.) It is difficult to conceive a more ludicrous farce enacted in the presence of any body of men; and that it should be enacted in what is called the collective wisdom of the community—(derisive cheers)—is indeed humiliating to those who reflect that they are supposed to be represented in their opinion by that august body. (Cheers.) Sir, the Anti-Corn-Law League has reason indeed to congratulate itself, and to congratulate the country, upon the progress which this great movement is making. It is called indeed an atrocious conspiracy—it is called sometimes also a petty cabal of rascals—(laughter)—sometimes we are informed that this association is a formidable combination of wicked men, endangering alike the existence of the Throne and the Church; and at another moment we are told that we are a petty clique of manufacturers who have no influence, merely endeavouring to force our opinions upon the community by the help of a little money. (Cheers and laughter.) Now, we can't be all these different things. I remember very well an anecdote related of the late Wm. Cobbett. He said, speaking of himself, "Sometimes people call me the scum of the earth; sometimes they say I am the dregs. I can't be both scum and dregs." (Cheers and laughter.) Let us understand from this that the Anti-Corn-Law Association is neither a formidable conspiracy of wicked men; nor a petty cabal of manufacturers; but that it is a vast union of the middle and intelligent classes of this community, who are determined that they will no longer be constrained to live by sufferance; who are determined to vindicate their social position; who no longer will allow themselves to be kept down in the social scale in order that feudal ascendancy may be maintained, and that they may be ruled over by those remnants of the barbarous ages which are perpetuated by the Corn Laws. (Cheers.) The spirit of the Corn-Law system is this: that the trader, manufacturer, and commercial man, have no right to more trade; no claim to greater enjoyment of the comforts of life than it may suit the landlord and the proprietor to allow them. (Hear, hear.) That is the principle of the Corn-Law system. They proceed upon the assumption that the landed aristocracy of England have some inherent right to regulate trade; to mete out the reward of industry, and to tell their fellow-citizens how far they may enjoy the comforts of life, and to how high a position they may rise in the social scale. (Loud cheers.) I say, Sir, that this association is a great combination of rational and thinking men, who now stand forward determined to abolish this foul tyranny, and to erase from the statute-book these remnants of feudal barbarism. (Cheers.) True it is, as my hon. friend Mr. Fox said, that we neither covet the acres, nor desire to interfere with their property—all we ask of them is, that they should desist from interfering with trade, and that they should allow the great body of the community to have the full enjoyment of those resources which Providence has placed within their reach. (Loud cheers.) We are told that the lion of England is roused, and is shaking his mane. I am afraid that the lion of England is the lion of the fable—a donkey in a lion's hide (laughter and cheers)—and now that the animal has begun to bray, all the rest of the creation has discovered that he is not a lion, but an ass. (Loud cheers.) Was there ever in this world such a collection of wretched trash as has appeared in the speeches lately delivered at the various agricultural associations in the country—very little argument, a great deal of abuse, with, perhaps, an occasional allusion to particular burdens, and to the danger threatening both Throne and Church. (Cheers.) But the old stock in trade seems to be abandoned, and the landed aristocracy would appear to be taking up the position, that might constitutes right. (Hear, hear, hear.) One special burden spoken of I will take the liberty of alluding to to-night. It was mentioned by a gentleman at the Northamptonshire meeting, who said that ambassadors, and diplomatists, and consuls were sent abroad at a great expense to this country, and all for the advantage of the commercial world, whilst the agriculturists paid the expense. And this was said by a gentleman who bears the name, but I fear has not the abilities, of that distinguished statesman, Canning. Yes, Mr. Canning told the tenant-farmers—who, in fact, were not tenant-farmers, but a collection, for the most part, of those persons who usually take a prominent part in contested elections—he told those tenant-farmers, or whatever they may be called, that the ambassadors who were sent abroad constituted that special burden upon land which entitled the landed proprietors to enact a sliding scale upon corn. (Cheers and laughter.) I always understood that ambassadors were chosen from the agricultural, or rather from the aristocratic body itself, and that the diplomatic situations were considered pleasant vineyards, with large salaries, suitable to the taste and fancies of aristocratic legislation; but I never heard any commercial man or trader express the slightest thankfulness they ever rendered to them. (Cheers.) I always heard from intelligent merchants, "For heaven's sake don't let ambassadors meddle with our affairs!" That is what we ask. Let trade be free—let merchants manage their own affairs, and don't imagine that interference in the Legislature or of the diplomatist can direct the merchant how to employ his capital, or what exchanges it will be advantageous for him to make better than he can discover for himself. (Cheers.) I feel, Sir, that at this late period of the evening I should be thought to trespass improperly on your time, upon those arguments, or rather those signs of argumentative weakness which make their appearance at agricultural meetings. There was, however, one old fallacy dished up in Northampton to which I will just allude, viz.: That if we admit foreign corn free of duty, foreigners will not take our manufactures in return, but only our gold. What has struck me is, that it is surprising the audacity those agriculturists express about gold going out of the country. One would think that they had been instrumental in bringing a great deal in. (Cheers.) I should like to know how much gold we should have in England if we had nothing but agricultural produce to send in exchange for it. Are there gold mines in Northamptonshire? or is silver dug up in Buckinghamshire (cheers)—that these should be all this excessive anxiety for exchanges in trade should send it out of the country? Why, all the gold and silver we have in England has been purchased by manufacturing industry, all that ministers to the luxuries of the great, all that adds to the splendour of the aristocracy, is purchased by our manufacturing industry—yet when we ask them to allow our manufacturing population to purchase bread to relieve the necessities of the poor, and increase the comforts of the industrious class, they say, "No, we cannot let you, for fear gold should go out of the country. We are willing to allow so much trade as will minister to the luxuries of the great, but not so much as will minister to the necessities of the poor." (Cheers.) The amount of 50 millions is imported into this country annually, and we know that the whole gold coin existing in England would not pay for nine months of these imports—so that the peculiarity in the commodity of corn which should raise such excessive alarm is, that if a little bread should be brought into England we should be deprived of the only exchangeable commodity in this country—money. But, sir, it is vain to dwell upon any such futile reasoning as this; the question which we now have to consider is the question of how best we are to abolish these Corn Laws; we do not want in these days to refute fallacies; it is but wasting our energy to attempt to call back again the slain. How are we, I say, to abolish these Corn Laws? If the middle classes of this country will stand by their order, as the aristocracy have stood by theirs, they will succeed in abolishing them very speedily. (Loud cheers, and cries of "We will.") But, if they cringe to wealth, to fashion, and to aristocratic power—if they allow themselves to be wheedled into servility—then these Corn Laws will continue, and all the speeches and the arguments in the world will not get rid of them. It is a consciousness on the part of the ruling power that the great body of the industrious classes understand their true position, are in earnest, and are determined to vindicate their rights, that will induce that power at length to yield. They will not make a free gift; they will not surrender without pressure these "valuable privileges," as they are called. No; they fancy that the aristocratic system has got such hold in the hearts of the people of this country, that they may hope for a long tenure of power, and that the day is very distant when the industrious classes will have that full scope given to their industry to which they have a righteous claim. (Loud cheers.) Sir, I believe that the voices of members of Parliament in the Legislature will be of no effect unless they are backed by the voices of those without; unless it be known that a great body of the middle class are determined, as one man, to stand by their order, the Corn Laws will not be abolished. It is in the power of the electors of this country—the borough electors—to abolish the Corn Laws if they please. (Cheers.) They are not in such a minority as is generally supposed. The county representatives have not that immense ascendancy in the Legislature that has been generally represented. Why, what is the fact? That out of the 500 members which England and Wales return, 330 of them are borough and city members, and only 160 county and university members. Ireland and Scotland are with you now. (Cheers.) You have a majority in Scotland and in Ireland. (Renewed cheers.) It is but to accomplish a majority in England, to conquer this 160 county members with the 338 borough members, and the Corn Laws and all other monopolies are for ever abolished from the statute book. Then let us each and all pledge ourselves to endeavour, to the utmost of our power, at the next general election, to return none but men who are pledged to the total and unconditional repeal of the Corn Laws. (Loud cheers.) This is the practical mode of dealing with the question; let us go into action—let us attack the registration of electors—let us endeavour, by every possible means to advance the cause amongst the electoral body—let us endeavour to induce our friends to exert themselves, by every possible persuasion and influence, to bring the middle class out of that unhappy servility in which they are placed in many of the southern boroughs—let them stand by their order, and I am convinced that they will compel the aristocracy to surrender these unjust pretensions, and that before no very distant day. (Cheers.) And let them empower their members not now to approach the Legislature with bated "breath and whispering humbleness," but let them authorize their representatives to speak to the Legislature in a spirit and tone of firm remonstrance, as if there was a power at their backs that would, before long, make itself felt. If they will do that, they will find their feelings represented in the House of Commons; and my belief is this, that we shall have, ay, before the close of the present Parliament, a very marked difference in the tone and speeches of gentlemen, who know that the day is approaching when they shall have to meet their constituents. It is remarkable how speeches alter when a general election is at hand! If you begin to press now, and continue that pressure with an increasing and accelerated force, by the time that a general election arrives you will have greatly increased that number of men who will vote for my honourable and distinguished friend, Mr. Villiers. (Loud cheers.) We are about to receive the Queen's Speech (laughter), and I fear that it will contain nothing of hope to the mercantile and trading population of this country. I dare say it will be full of congratulations: some undoubtedly there ought to be, for I am one of those who cannot help feeling that the state of peaceable relation in which this country is now placed with the different powers of Europe, is one which ought to give all men, really anxious for the welfare of their fellow-creatures, the deepest and most heart-felt pleasure; but I believe this, that whatever be the present peaceful relation of England—whether with France, Austria, Russia, or the United States of America—there is no guarantee for the duration of that peace, but unrestricted commercial freedom; and, believe me, that there can be no hope that the blessings of civilization, of peace, and of general good understanding, will be spread through the different nations of the earth, until they are all united by that strongest of ties, a common interest, and a free exchange of their thoughts, their commodities, their goods; and that there be abolished entirely this selfish protective system which does but keep up the walls of separation, and dispose men to embark in hostilities who would otherwise almost view each other as fellow-subjects of one common country. Let us, therefore, not only as wishing peace to England, but as desiring that the blessings of peace and civilization should spread through the most distant regions of the world, all feel that the first and best object for philanthropists to pursue, is the accomplishment of unrestricted commercial freedom. (The hon. gentleman sat down amidst loud cheering.)

The Rev. J. BURNET, of Camberwell, upon coming forward was received with great applause, which having subsided, the rev. gentleman addressed the meeting as follows:—Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, I most fully agree with the sentiment of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, namely, that the great object of the League should now be,—in what particular way it is to carry out its noble purposes. There was at a time when such meetings as the present would, perhaps, have been dismissed at the point of the bayonet, or by the staff of the constable, under the plea that it was convened with the view of bringing the Government of the country into contempt. But now, Sir, such a multitude as this are actually assembled for the purpose of saving the Government from bringing itself into contempt. (A laugh.) Such assemblies as these treat the Government in a very different way from that in which they themselves would once have been treated by the Government: they do not attempt or desire to use any violence towards the Ministry; all they wish is to throw light upon its proceedings, that its members, under the guidance of this light, may arouse themselves and make such meetings as these their own. (Cheers.) That, I maintain, is the great object which such assemblies as the present have in view. But, Sir, reference has been made to the opposition now being formed against the Anti-Corn-Law League. I should like to see the members of that opposition join with the League (laughter), to make discussion a club business; that the League should meet here upon one evening, and the Anti-League upon the next; and that they should upon such occasions endeavour to make the whole community at large understand the real bearings of the case, and enable them to determine whether the League had or had not been misleading the community. (Cheers.) Why this, and similar buildings, are as open to those individuals as they are to the members of the League. (Hear.) If they are the wealthy of the land, and if the League is composed of an insignificant part of the population of this country, why do not those gentlemen of wealth and importance come forward, in the most open and public manner, to the buildings which are the usual resort of wealth and importance, and there expose the League and all its fallacies, so that it may die to-morrow, and the Corn Laws be established for ever? (Cheers and laughter.) I cannot conceive why they keep in the background, unless it is under the influence of a conviction that they would die in the foreground. (Laughter.) Sir, we have often heard of "protection" in connection with the Corn Laws. As it has been observed, it is sometimes exceedingly difficult to comprehend what is really meant by protection; and, perhaps, at first sight, it is as difficult to understand against whom the protection is expected and desired. If the agricultural interest come forward in order to claim it, then it is evident, and they are bound in honesty to confess the fact, that they occupy the place of helpless individuals who cannot protect themselves. (Hear.) But is it true that they have been reduced to this condition? Is this the state of the aristocracy of the land? Will the lords of the fee of this mighty empire come forward and say, "Helpless are we! So far is our body behind the world in practical science, so incapable to compete with others beyond the seas for the great staple of life, so ignorant are we of everything that is high and commanding in farming, so far do we come short of any thing like equal powers of production or genius to increase our powers of production, and bring them up to an equality with that of foreigners, that we can do nothing at the plough or in the barn, in the field at seed or harvest time, that will preserve our existence—and, therefore, we throw away the plough, the barn, the threshing-machine, and the seed-bag, we rush to the House of Commons, and cry out for protection (cheers and laughter): they only can protect us; our genius is of no avail in the matter; our property, of which we boast, cannot protect us; our influence, in which we profess to exult, cannot serve us—nothing will do but the Imperial Legislature!" (Laughter.) Why, this is a helpless cry after all! There is something in this demand for protection which indicates a consciousness of weakness, while, at the same time, it is grotesquely mixed up with boasting exultations about strength. (Hear.) Those individuals, Sir, are going to put you all down; and yet, at the very same time, they tell you that they cannot keep themselves up. ("Hear," and loud laughter.) Now, I have said that it is difficult to find out against whom the protection is sought. Those gentlemen seek protection against the manufacturers of their own country. When the "agricultural interest," as it chooses to designate itself, asks protection, it is against the men of Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, and Glasgow, and the whole manufacturing population of the country. These are the persons of whom they are afraid, against whom they seek protection, and appeal to the Legislature. But in what way do they ask to be protected against them? Why, they are afraid that all these manufacturers will go to the cheapest market for their daily bread, and they say, "Protect us against them: prevent them from doing this, and we shall be safe; but if you allow them to go to the cheapest market to get their daily bread we are ruined; therefore protect us against them, and against them only." They say, too, they want protection against the foreigner, but this is one of the fallacies that they are always bringing into the market along with their corn. (Laughter.) Foreigners are shut out of our market to a certain extent by a very different kind of protection. Our protection against them lies in our practical science, and also in the difference between the price of the commodity that we can produce, and the price of the commodity which he can produce when taken in connexion with the expenses of its importation. The seas around us give us a natural protection against the foreigner. He must be at the expense of importation before he can come into our market, but beyond that natural protection agriculture has no right to ask anything further: the waves that roll round us are our protection in this particular, as they have been in many other respects; and, therefore, the protection sought by the landlords of the kingdom is a protection against the poor and needy, and the starving, to prevent them from going to the cheapest shop where they may buy their daily food. (Loud cheers.) Ah! how low does aristocracy sink when we see it in its carriage, its splendour, its wealth, its influence, hurrying to both Houses of Parliament, to be protected against the poor woman who has just strength enough to fly out of the way of their bounding steeds, and to buy only half what she could purchase, were they to take away their protection against her. (Loud cheers.) "Protect me," says the great landlord duke, "against that poor woman with her penny, going to buy her bread; protect me against her ever being able to do anything but that; protect me against her ever finding her way into any channel where she might find more for her penny. What a degradation to a lord!" (Loud cheers.) A lord the soil degrade himself by asking for protection! And yet let us never forget when the term protection is at any time employed in connexion with the Corn Laws that such is really its meaning, is really its application,—that the only persons against whom the protection is desired are the inhabitants of the country. I have said the manufacturer: I ought to go further—the agricultural labourer—nay, the tenant-farmers—have an interest in freedom of trade in the articles which they produce: against them, too, is this protection sought by the aristocracy of the land. But is there any interest in this community that would really reap a lasting, permanent, comfortable, and honourable advantage from this protection against the poor and the miserable? Why, sir, if we look to the gentlemen who are the lords of the soil, are we to suppose that they are to be happier in the enjoyment of their property while that property is let out to tenants, who make the whole study of their farming a system of gambling; for such the Corn Laws will very naturally make, and do always make, the farming interests of this country? They do not know what their prices are to be; they cannot tell how to take their farms; they have no means of valuing them with anything like enlightened views of the future; all is upon the gambling-table of the Corn Laws; and what may be the result they know not. And hence there are cases constantly occurring in which the farmer is breaking down, and in which the landlord does not rise up. Let us for a moment suppose that trade was altogether free; then everything would be fixed and settled. Some ask a fixed duty. We should then, however, have a fixed trade, which is better than a fixed duty. (Hear.) Now, the great obligation of the League is, to take care that the men in power shall receive no countenance from their indolence; that Government shall receive no hope from your becoming lax in your proceedings. If you find, perchance, that Sir Robert Peel may slide out on his sliding scale, you must take special care that Lord John Russell does not slide in on his fixed duty. (Loud cheers.) The men in power have played long enough at sliding out and sliding in; and the best course that you can take now is, to let them know clearly, and without the least difficulty, that you understand this game, and that there shall be no more sliding out and sliding in, whilst the people are altogether neglected by both systems of sliding; but you must let them know that it is your determination that they shall be fixed and settled men, and that sliding and shuffling in the Legislature shall come to an end with the Corn Laws. (Loud cheers.) But what right have those individuals who call themselves "the agricultural interest" to claim any particular advantage over their neighbours? Why, look at a large machine, and you have an illustration of a great nation. All its wheels stand connected; all are intended harmoniously to work; and when they are combined, and the power is made to tell, woe be to the man who dares to interpose his feeble hand to stay their impetus—he must be crushed to powder! Just so is it with this community: all its interests and classes represent the wheels of this vast machine; and if one interest will take itself away from the working of the whole, or attempt to control that working, and throw itself into the midst of the mighty movement, that interest must receive its own destruction. (Cheers.) But, sir, if we look upon the Corn Laws in their working upon the great body of this country, in bringing them together to discuss the great principles of justice, for which they have banded themselves, I do not know whether we have then any very great reason to regret the occasion of our thus coming together. (Hear.) Let it be remembered that we are indebted to these laws for much of the dissension of our day; and let the reason, too, be remembered which has brought the people together—the Corn Law does not prevent them, but rather encourages them to discuss all the principles in all their bearing of the great body politic of the empire. The Corn Laws have furnished a school in which the rising generation begins to understand its duty in time—a seminary in which the men in their vigour and their strength have found a way by which that vigour and strength may be employed for the public good; and, when these laws shall have passed away, every corruption that may hang around the state machinery shall be dealt with the same energy, combination, and resolution, and the same perseverance which has been employed to annihilate the Corn Laws. (Loud and long-continued cheering.) I do not know, sir, but that this may be found an ample compensation for all that we have suffered even from the Corn Laws. There are evils that work their own cure; and, if the Corn Laws are made to stand out as the representative of all our national evils—that evil has been grappled with in a way that has taught the country its own strength, and has led it up from the lowest point of weakness to the highest measure of power—not physical, but moral—a power which alone can give greatness, and which only can be safely wielded both with regard to those against whom it is directed and those who wield it. (Cheers.) If the nation, therefore, is taught thus to use its own power, we have reason to look, not merely for the abolition of the Corn Laws, but of every evil that a keen-sighted and well-treated community can detect, and which a determined and resolute people have resolved to overthrow. It has been said, "We do not wish to petition." I think, sir, that this resolution is wise. Turn away from your House of Commons, if they refuse to turn to you. (Loud cheers.) There was a time when to have a nod from a member of Parliament, even when an election was coming, was reckoned an honour; but to have him speak, even when an election came, was wonderful. To be permitted to speak to him with all humility became at last the fashion, and the opportunity of speaking to a member of Parliament was thought by the individual so favoured an honour that he might hand down to his grandchildren. (Laughter.) By-and-by, however, as the community were tutored up to a little more courage in approaching those great men, the members and the community got a little acquainted; a little further on they thought they might improve this acquaintance, that they might petition them about their grievances; and a letter to a member was imagined to be a wonderful effort at petitioning! By-and-by it was thought they might venture to ask him to present their petition to the House: when that was done, and recorded in the newspapers, many people supposed that then they were made men. They had reached almost their consummation. By-and-by, however, they conceived they might wait upon them and ask them to support those petitions; subsequently again they thought they might take another step, and find fault with them for not supporting them. They went a little further still, and they asked them to make motions upon the principle of those petitions. That was going still further; but they went further yet, and they examined the votes, and ascertained how they had supported the motions of others on those principles. They then began to take them to task a little in private on the subject, and they at last learned to catechise them on the hustings. (Laughter and cheers.) They went on in this way, until they have ventured so far that members now begin to think of them even in the House, and to think of them even when they are speaking; and, if they cannot see the idea that such and such an one wants expressed whose ghost haunts them in the House,—if they cannot get the very idea that they think might satisfy him, they will hesitate, and hammer, and stammer, till they get something like it; or they will perplex their phraseology so that he will not be able to detect a fault in it at all (laughter); or, if he does, they will manage to make it so obscure and ambiguous, that they can explain it to him either this way or that way. Well, now, petitions at last were sent in immense numbers, and the members were troubled with deputations on the subject, until at length they found that between their petitioners and their patrons—between the persons who made them, the poor people, and the persons that rewarded them, because they had made them poor—between the one and the other they felt a great deal of difficulty, and now they have mustered up a mighty party, which they are ashamed to call a Tory party; and, therefore, they have baptised it under a new name, and they have called it a "Conservative" party (laughter); as if they were to conserve the olden times, the times gone by. Now, we have been petitioning just in the full vigour of this last effort, when the party has come forward with this Conservative or Tory name—or call it what you please; when like a drowning man—it grasps firmly; it holds powerfully; it lays about it with unusual and unnatural strength; and I think the Anti-Corn-Law League have acted wisely in standing away from the blows of this expiring giant until by the mere strength of his own energy he has exhausted himself and expired. (Loud cheers.) You can send to Parliament to expedite this happy consummation such individuals as will not minister to the continuance of his painful existence. (Hear.) In pity to himself, therefore, let him die in peace; and I am glad that the League have determined that he shall die so; for die he must, I have no doubt. (Cheers.) But it has been said that the Minister of the Crown is a man who is "given to change;" that therefore this dying fit may pass away, and he may lift up himself, and astonish us all, by another resurrection. (Laughter.) Well, let him do so; we have no wish at all to destroy the party, provided the party will come out to its own duty. I despise no man, sir, for change; but I despise the man who appears to live by change; I respect the man that changes before truth and the power of evidence. (Cheers.) I would, however, warn the meeting, as an honourable gentleman has already done—and in whose remarks I fully concur—against their trusting the Minister of the day. (Loud cries of "Hear, hear, hear.") Sir Robert Peel is a servant of all work—(cheers and laughter)—he looks about him and watches the time, and he does it wisely. We say nothing at all of the moral grandeur of such a course in a Minister's career; but certainly it is cleverly and wisely executed. Now, this is another reason for your perseverance. If he is a servant of all work, why not compel him to go and occupy himself in another vocation? (Hear.) If he is ready to change right and left, backwards and forwards, up and down, hither and thither, here and there, why not make use of him? Many, many are the instruments in legislative and political movements that are, politically speaking, contemptible; with which we could not for a moment come in contact without feeling that we were defiled—(cheers)—but with such an instrument you must work. If you find that this instrument stands in your way, you must be satisfied to allow the thing to take its own course. You need not degrade yourselves—(hear, hear)—you have only to persevere, and, if the tide of events should still keep the servant of all work upon the surface, you have got rid of the evil, and therefore either let him float down with any popularity he may contrive to attach to himself. I shall not, however, occupy the meeting at this late hour of the night, as it is now time for us to go home; we do not wish to keep late hours; we will leave that to the aristocracy (laughter); and as we, therefore, mean to keep proper hours as well as proper principles, I think it my duty to take my leave of this meeting, urging, however, at the same time the importance of persevering in the great work which they have begun—for you have only begun it, gentlemen. Never let your diligence for a moment flag; never let your zeal cool; never let circumstances throw you off your guard. Keep your position, not only always ready for battle, but always fighting; not only prepared for what is to come, but always bearing about the things that are coming, and moulding them for the public good; and when the Corn Laws shall have passed away, and when your object shall have been completely realized, generations yet unborn will exult in the manly hardihood with which, in the face of all contempt and all sacrifice, you came forward to plead the rights of the children of men. The rev. gentleman sat down amidst loud cheering.

The CHAIRMAN then said:—Ladies and gentlemen, this is the first meeting of those which we propose to hold weekly in this theatre for some time to come. I am not at liberty to announce the speakers for next Thursday evening, but an announcement will be made in the newspapers in the course of a few days, and on that occasion we shall be glad to see all our friends again.

The meeting then separated at half-past ten.

STROUD, GLOUCESTERSHIRE.

On Tuesday evening the Stroud Anti-Corn Law Association, which is under Earl Ducie's immediate patronage, held a crowded and enthusiastic meeting in the large subscription-room of the borough. The building is calculated to hold nearly 2000 persons, and long before the hour of commencement of the meeting every nook and corner was filled, hundreds being turned away from the impossibility of gaining admittance.

The noble patron of the association (Earl Ducie) was announced to fill the chair; but almost at the last moment a messenger arrived, stating that his lordship was confined to his bed from a fit of severe indisposition. The post of chairman, therefore, devolved upon G. P. Scrope, Esq., one of the members for the borough. Mr. Flint, of Leeds,

W. J. Fox, Esq., and Mr. Shirreff, a practical farmer, were announced as a deputation on behalf of the League.

Mr. Fox in the course of his speech alluded to the Anti-League movement, and said, that it was now a great fact—almost as great a fact as the existence of the League itself—that that body was working, not only by co-operation, but by opposition—not only by sympathy, but by antipathy. (Cheers.) They had been told, the other day, that the League was an unconstitutional body; that its organisation was contrary to law; that it sought to intimidate the Government, and the Government was called on to put it down. But now the farmers' friends were changing their tactics: they found the League could not be put down, and now they were setting up their own little leagues in opposition to it; and the farmers' friends, by these little leagues, only sanctioned the great League, and made it of more importance. They would have their organisation, too. They would have their public meetings. Ay, and they would have their subscriptions too; and it was positively asserted, in a Leicestershire journal, that at one of these little league meetings, a few days since, they had actually subscribed the magnificent sum of 5s. towards supporting the Corn Laws. (Laughter and cheers.) But he could tell them that these puny attempts at opposition would only promote the success of the cause they had at heart; these little leagues would either incite the great National League to increased exertion, or, if anything like liberty of discussion and action was allowed at them, they would only become Anti-Corn Law Leagues in miniature; the farmers would learn at them to inquire into the bearings of the great question; they would thus become normal schools of repeal; and as the little ducklings followed the great duck into the water, so would these little leagues follow in the wake of the great League, promoting the very principles they were meant to oppose. (Cheers.)

Several other gentlemen addressed the meeting, and resolutions were unanimously agreed to expressing confidence in the League, and a determination to carry out its objects. At the conclusion of the meeting the following sums were handed in as contributions to the hundred thousand pound fund, and were received by the assembly with tumultuous applause:—The Right Hon. Earl Ducie, 100l.; G. P. Scrope, Esq., M.P., 50l.; N. S. Marling, Esq., 50l.; S. S. Marling, Esq., 50l.; C. Stanton, Esq., 40l.; George Hooper, Esq., 40l.; J. Watts, Esq., 20l.; T. Stanton, Esq., 10l.; J. Partridge, Esq., 10l.; the Working Men of Stafford's Mill, 10l. (loud cheers); ditto of Ebley Mills, 20l. (loud cheers); ditto of Stanley Mills, 25l. (loud cheers); ditto of Earlington Mills, 25l. (loud cheers); sundry subscriptions from Nailsworth, 50l.; ditto from Stroud, 50l.; making a total of £558. The amount subscribed last year was only £274, so that this year the contribution is more than doubled, besides considerable subscriptions which are yet expected.—Morning Chronicle.

THE LEAGUE FUND AT BIRMINGHAM.

A most numerous and respectable committee of merchants and manufacturers, having been formed in Birmingham for the purpose of assisting the League in its present efforts against monopoly, held a meeting on Tuesday night. Henry Smith, Esq., in the chair.

A spirited address to the merchants, manufacturers, and other inhabitants of Birmingham and its neighbourhood, informing them that a great meeting will speedily be held at Birmingham to promote the objects of the League, and calling on them to attend the meeting, and aid in the abolition of monopoly, was adopted. The demonstration at Birmingham is accordingly expected to be most influential, far more than, and counterbalancing, the anti-league movement in Warwickshire, which has begun there as well as in other counties.—Ibid.

NEWCASTLE.

For a considerable period before the time of meeting, on Monday last, the door of the Music-hall was besieged by crowds of persons, eager to gain admittance; and immediately on the opening of the doors a dense body of persons rushed forward, and filled the staircase and the body of the hall in an inconceivably short space of time. Previous to the commencement of the business, the magnificent hall, capable of containing 1000 individuals, was filled from end to end with persons of all classes, amongst whom were a considerable sprinkling of ladies. The gallery was also crowded with a numerous and attentive audience. Altogether, the proceedings were of a more enthusiastic character than we remember to have witnessed on any similar occasion.

Precisely at seven o'clock, the Mayor, Sir John Fife, Knt., took the chair.

The CHAIRMAN then rose and said:—Ladies and gentlemen, I am very sensible of the honour you have done me, in placing me in this chair, because I believe that it is awarded to me, not so much in consideration of any official position which I hold, as from my well-known strong opinions in favour of Free Trade—(cheers)—and I hope I may venture to say, in favour of freedom in every form. (Renewed applause.) Although there is no question requiring more temper, more impartiality, more extensive information, perhaps, in its discussion, and for its full and free intelligence and understanding to the public mind, than the question of commercial restrictions, and the importance of Free Trade to our best national interests, yet, unfortunately, it is a question which has awakened a great many selfish interests, and roused many violent and savage feelings. Sir Robert Peel himself imagined that we were instigating even to his assassination. (Hear, hear, hear.) And, on the other hand, some amiable parties in Lincolnshire equitably proposed putting Mr. Cobden into a well. (Loud laughter.) I suppose the pundits of Lincolnshire had heard something about truth being found at the bottom of a well; and, very probably, they would like to keep it there. (Laughter.) But it is our business to bring it to light; and the means we take to do so are by calling such assemblies as this. (Applause.) The Chairman concluded by a few general remarks; after which,

Mr. JOSEPH WATSON read letters, the first from Mr. W. Hutt, the member for Gateshead, excusing himself for non-attendance on the ground that he did not entirely agree with the League, and that, were he even present to explain the grounds of his dissent, he would be a good deal incapacitated from so doing by a severe cold; the second from Mr. Ord, the member for Newcastle, also declining to attend, stating, however, that while he did not differ from the League in the object they sought to attain, he was not

(Continued on page 280)

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE £100,000 FUND.

Subscriptions received during the week ending Wednesday, January 24, 1844.

N.B. As the subscription list is made up from Wednesday to Wednesday, contributions received on Thursdays and Fridays are not published in the LEAGUE of the Saturday immediately succeeding, but are included in the list of the week following.

| | |
|---|--------|
| J. Kershaw, Dearnley, near Littleboro', Lancashire | £1 0 0 |
| Richard Holroyd and Co., Mill-street, Manchester | 40 0 0 |
| James Andrews, Gee-cross, near | 1 0 0 |
| Charles Gough, 12, King-street, | 2 0 0 |
| John Chadwick and Sons, 28, do., | 5 5 0 |
| Simpson, Thompson, and Co., | 30 0 0 |
| — Kessell, at Kessell & Co.'s, Booth-st., | 10 0 0 |
| Lemuel W. Wright, Greenford Cottage, near Wrexham | 2 2 0 |
| H. Milnes, at J. A. Simpson & Co.'s, Piccadilly, Manch. | 1 1 0 |
| George Sanders, at do., | 1 1 0 |
| George Pagan, New Cumnock, Ayrshire, N.B. | 1 1 0 |
| Joseph Bannister, Waterloo place, Hastings | 0 5 0 |
| Richard Edwards, Pelham-street, | 1 5 0 |
| John Tree, Fish-street, | 0 3 0 |
| Stephen Thwaites, John-street, | 0 2 6 |
| John D. Thwaites, Meadow Cottages, | 0 2 6 |
| J. L., | 0 5 0 |
| Col. Macadam, 42, Wellington-square, | 1 0 0 |
| Col. Williams, Cotaheld-house, Battle | 1 0 0 |
| Rev. William Davis, Croft Chapel, Hastings | 0 5 0 |
| J. M., | 0 5 0 |
| Small sums, | 0 19 2 |
| Edward Lloyd, currier, Abergelle, North Wales | 1 0 0 |
| Samuel Taylor, Rochdale | 20 0 0 |
| A Friend, per Rev. F. Knowles, Park-l., n. Warrington | 0 10 0 |
| A Friend, per do., | 0 2 6 |
| Mrs. A. Holland, Knutsford | 1 0 0 |
| Mrs. Susan Gannon, do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Wareham, do. | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Miss Hodgetts, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Edward Clarke, do. | 0 2 6 |
| William Cunliffe, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Peter Wallden, tanner, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Bennett, shoemaker, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Henry Birch, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Moses Dale, do. | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums, | 0 8 0 |
| Rev. R. Johnson, rector of Claybrook, Leicestershire | 1 0 0 |
| James Hopwood, Lutterworth, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Erskine Beveridge, Priory-place, Dunfermline | 10 0 0 |
| Thomas Ireland, Bridge-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| The Workmen at St. Leonard's factory, do. | 4 0 0 |
| Alexander Aitken, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Henry Aitken, Reid-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Robert Kay, Moodies, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Brown, Priory-lane, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Russell, Appin-terrace, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Rev. Professor McMichael, do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Morris, Gardener's Land, do. | 1 0 0 |
| George Inglis and Son, do. | 2 2 0 |
| James Aitken, James street, do. | 0 7 6 |
| George Angus, Kirkgate, do. | 0 10 0 |
| John Marshall, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Dick, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Rev. F. Law, do. | 0 10 0 |
| David Lawrie, Abbey Park-place, do. | 0 10 0 |
| A Friend, East Port, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Andrew Reid, School Rd-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| I. Kershaw, Sladen Mill, Rochdale, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Leader, Leck Parsonage, near Kirby Lonsdale | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas C. Bigwood, Queen-street, Portsea | 1 0 0 |
| John Newlyn, High street, Portsmouth | 1 0 0 |
| Small sums, Manchester | 0 1 0 |
| F. Chaplin, The Chantry, Bishop's Stortford | 1 1 0 |
| A. Chaplin, do. | 1 0 0 |
| F. T. Nash, do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Nash, do. | 1 0 0 |
| — Clements, do. | 1 0 0 |
| — Hawkes, Parsonage, do. | 1 0 0 |
| — Johns, Windhill Lodge, do. | 1 0 0 |
| W. Taylor, The Wharf, do. | 1 0 0 |
| — Eddy, do. | 0 10 0 |
| T. Bird, Stort Lodge, do. | 0 10 0 |
| — Waterman, do. | 0 10 0 |
| — Beard, do. | 0 10 0 |
| — Pratt, do. | 0 2 6 |
| — Slater, do. | 0 2 6 |
| — Skipp, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Peter and Dan. Hainsworth, Farley, near Leeds | 10 0 0 |
| George Andrews, do., do. | 5 0 0 |
| John Hainsworth, sen., do., do. | 5 0 0 |
| Reuben Hainsworth, grocer, do., do. | 1 10 0 |
| Samuel Hollings, do., do. | 1 1 0 |
| P. Hainsworth (7 workmen), do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Roberts, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Abimelech Hainsworth, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Small sums, do., do. | 0 2 1 |
| John Turner, jun., do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Two Friends, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Smith, cloth miller, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Reuben Hainsworth, clothier, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Benjamin Hainsworth, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Jeremiah Naylor, do., do. | 0 10 0 |
| A Friend, do., do. | 0 10 0 |
| Joseph Whitaker, grocer, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend, C. F., do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Widow Fairbank, grocer, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Ann Fairbank, do., do. | 0 10 0 |
| Ruth Spence, do., do. | 0 10 0 |
| Benjamin Walte, clothier, do., do. | 0 10 0 |
| Matthew Fairbank, do., do. | 0 10 0 |
| Charles Hainsworth, do., do. | 0 10 0 |
| W. H. Hurst, woolstapler, Bradford | 0 10 0 |
| John Busfield, Farley, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Isaac Hainsworth, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Mathew Roberts, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| James Roberts, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Turner, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| Richard Varley, Stanningley, near Leeds | 5 0 0 |
| William Varley, do., do. | 5 0 0 |
| John Harrison, do., do. | 2 0 0 |
| Henry Cooke, Paper-mills, Richmond | 0 5 0 |
| Mrs. H. Cooke, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| W. Cooke, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| James Cooke, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Doeg, Bramley, near Leeds | 1 1 0 |
| Per Arthur Forsyth, workmen in the East Mill, Brechin, N.B. | 1 8 6 |
| Edward King, Church-street, Todmorden | 1 0 0 |
| John Maitland, Causey-wood, near do. | 1 0 0 |
| Henry Madden, Banks-mill, do. | 10 0 0 |
| William Dillon, Sea Horse Inn, Coventry | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Rays, silk dresser, Wray, near Lancaster | 0 3 0 |
| Small sums, do., do. | 0 17 0 |
| John Robinson, 17, Spier-street, Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| John Taylor, 3, Princess-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Samuel Taylor, do., do. | 2 0 0 |
| Michael Goodall, London, per C. Cobden | 2 3 0 |
| John Law, Remaden-wood, near Todmorden | 2 10 0 |
| El. Hudson, Gale, near Littleborough | 2 10 0 |
| A Well-wisher for all | 5 0 0 |
| Nathaniel Moore, Ashton-under-Lyne | 1 1 0 |

| | |
|---|--------|
| Thomas Carrick, 18, Brown-street, Manchester | £1 0 0 |
| W. Hibbert, Hovey-bridge, Hyde, near Manchester | 3 3 0 |
| Wm. Davis, Mottram New-road, Godley, do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Taylor, Hyde-lane, Hyde, near do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Kerley, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Samuel Leah, Gee-cross, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Hannah Cheatham, Hovey-bridge, Hyde, nr. do. | 0 10 0 |
| Elliz. Green, 21, Norbury-street, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Peter Oldham, Clarendon-place, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Miss Marsh, Hovey-bridge, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Joseph Platt, Newton-green, Newton, near do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Hyding, Russell-street, Hyde, near do. | 0 2 6 |
| Samuel Hyding, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| J. O. Builivant, Clarendon, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| George Scott, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Stephen Healey, Hyde-lane, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Zachariah Smith, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| H. Slater, Market-place, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Rowbotham, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| James Davenport, Hyde-lane, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Kerrison, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Isaac Whitaker, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Charles Kerrison, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Oldham, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Sam. Phillips, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| John North, George-street, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Sam. Collier, Hyde-lane, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Margaret Collier, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Gledhill, Low-street, Newton, near do. | 0 2 6 |
| Charles Cooper, Hyde-lane, Hyde, near do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Hughton, Gee-cross, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| James Hanson, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Mark Billinge, do., do. | 0 2 0 |
| Jonas Rowbotham, do., do. | 0 2 0 |
| Thomas Bradley, Mottram New-rd., Godley, do. | 0 5 0 |
| George Barker, 270, Deansgate, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Thompson, 52, Shudehill, do. | 0 15 0 |
| Matthew Irving, 18, Maskell-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Hall, 82, Chapel-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| H. and R. Howden, 28, Oxford-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Muir, 41, Oxford-road, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Charles Greaves, 88, Oxford-road, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Windsor, 65, Piccadilly, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Mrs. E. Gidney, 41, do., do. | 0 10 6 |
| James Shannon, 18, Oak-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Hervey, 4, Edward-street, Ardwick, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Thomas Smith, Coach and Horses, Booth-st., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Benjn. Harper, Moss-side, do. | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend, by R. Smith, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Emery, Pendleton, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Warburton, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Popplewell, 10, Bank-parade, Salford | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Hughes, Bury-street, Salford | 0 2 6 |
| Alfred Birtha, 15, Higher Temple-street, Chorlton-on-Medlock, do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Lomas, Newton-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Wm. Gibbons, 22, Tame-street, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Roger Higham, 15, Every-street, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Robert Smith, 1, Holt-town, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Brown, 9, Pigot-street, C.-on.-M., do. | 1 1 0 |
| Rev. T. C. Holland, Loughborough | 0 10 0 |
| Wm. Burke, 44, Sidney-street, Manchester | 2 2 0 |
| Thomas Dickinson, 8, Dale-street, do. | 0 5 0 |
| — Nelson, Queen Ann-street, Redbank, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Garry and Friends, Hen and Chickens, Deanage, do. | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend, per Wm. Jolly, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Samuel Scott, 9, Preston-street, Salford | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 6 0 |
| James Barrow, Great Ancoats-street, Manchester | 1 1 0 |
| Washington Haddington, Bristol-street, Birmingham, | 1 0 0 |
| per Ann Smith, Prestbury | 1 0 0 |
| Stanley-Mills Association, Stroud, per G. Dangerfield | 5 0 0 |
| Edward Jones, High-street, Whitchurch, Salop | 1 0 0 |
| Samuel Venables, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Green, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Wythe, Wash Latchford, Warrington | 1 0 0 |
| John Ross, Castle street, Woodbridge | 0 2 6 |
| John Driver, Br. ck kiln, Wickham Market | 0 2 6 |
| David Walker, Dallingborough | 0 2 6 |
| John Walker, Abbey Farm, Campsey Ash | 0 2 6 |
| James Smith, Burgh, near Woodbridge | 1 0 0 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 3 0 |
| Ellis Sanders, Broad-street, Ross | 10 0 0 |
| Joseph Drew, mason, do. | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend to Freedom, do. | 0 10 0 |
| A Friend, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Rev. E. A. Claypole, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Rev. W. M. Byrne, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Francis H. Adams, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Mrs. Martha Lewis, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums, do. | 3 0 0 |
| Samuel Heron, Dob Meadows, Over Darwen | 1 0 0 |
| Robert Christie, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Joshua Baron, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Henry Watson, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Jepson, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Walsh, do., do. | 0 3 0 |
| Peter Croshaw, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| James Butterworth, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Edward Grainger, Dudley | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Ashworth, Bull's Head-yard, Manchester | 5 0 0 |
| T. P. Moses, Fazakerley-street, Prescott, Lancashire | 0 2 6 |
| Abram. Hollhead, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Owen, Market-place, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Barrow, Yew Tree-place, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| William Barrow, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Peter Barrow, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Edward Bridge, Red Hazles, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| William Orford, Fazakerley-st., do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Charles Lynd, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| James Scarisbrick, Eccleston-st., do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Appleton, Fall-lane, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Edward Crump, Eccleston-st., do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Hornby, Fall-lane, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Peter Appleton, Market-place, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Traverser, Church-street, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Preston, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Miss Ann Millett, Eccleston-st., do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Hopwood, Mill-hill, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Moulesdale, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Leyland, New-street, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Rev. G. W. Elliot, Hillcock-street, do., do. | 0 10 0 |
| J. W. Kershaw, Fall-lane, do., do. | 0 10 0 |
| William Mercer, Hillcock-street, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| William Haynes, Market-place, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Prescott, New-street, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| James Yates, Paradise Colliery, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| William Roscoe, Tarbock, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Stephens, Red Hazles, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| W. and J. Copple, Eccleston, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Tyrer, New-street, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| Birchall and Cross, Sutton, near do. | 1 0 0 |
| Isaac Johnson, Parr-square, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| P. A. Houghton, Hillcock-street, do., do. | 1 1 0 |
| James Robinson, Yew-tree-place, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| C. and F. Fogg, Market-place, do., do. | 1 1 0 |
| H. and S. Procter, Eccleston-st., do., do. | 1 1 0 |
| Henry Lucas, do., do. | 1 1 0 |
| Miss Gaskell, West End, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Miss Blispham, St. George's-road, Bolton, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Preston, New-street, Prescott, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Beesley, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Andrew Barton, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Tyrer, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Brown, do., do. | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums, do., do. | 0 15 6 |
| John Daniell, Deverill-road, Warminster | 0 2 6 |

Edinburgh.

| | | |
|--|------------|---------|
| A Friend, | Warminster | £20 2 6 |
| Thomas Hardick, builder, | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Rev. Geo. Howe, High-street, | do. | 0 2 6 |
| J. P. Ubsdell, | do. | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend to the League, Church-st., | do. | 0 2 6 |
| Geo. Lampard, Longbridge, Deverill, do, | | 1 0 0 |
| Small sums, | do. | 0 1 0 |
| Sam. Allen, Atherstone, per Thos. Rathbone | | 1 0 0 |
| John H. Watt, Irvine, N.B. | | 1 0 0 |
| A. Laake, hat maker, High-street, Montrose | | 1 0 0 |
| Jas. Booth, 10, Bradshaw-st., Shude-hill, Manchester | | 1 0 0 |
| A Convert | | 1 1 0 |
| A Friendly Farmer | | 0 10 0 |
| A Friend to Trade | | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend, Gayfield-square | | 0 10 0 |
| A Friend, 22, Nelson-street | | 0 2 6 |
| An Admirer | | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend to the Cause, 25, Arthur-street | | 0 2 6 |
| An Old Friend | | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend, 6, Nelson-street | | 0 2 6 |
| George Burn, High-street | | 1 1 0 |
| J. Brough, 14, Calton-hill | | 1 0 0 |
| John Bruce, 16, Scotland-street | | 2 0 0 |
| James Barclay, Balerno Lodge, Balerno | | 1 0 0 |
| John Brown, D.D., 10, Gayfield-square | | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Cooper, 23, Minto-street | | 3 0 0 |
| Kate Dalrymple, hardly earned | | 0 2 6 |
| Lieut.-Col. Duncan | | 1 0 0 |
| William Douglas, 1, Regent-st., Portobello | | 0 5 0 |
| — Dunbar, 44, Dundas-street | | 1 0 0 |
| James Erskine, 17, Brunswick-street | | 0 2 6 |
| John Fyfe, 17, St. Patrick-square | | 0 7 6 |
| A. Grierson, George-square | | 1 1 0 |
| Rev. Henry Grey, 24, Warriston-crescent | | 1 0 0 |
| Miss Stirling Graham, 29, Forth-street | | 1 0 0 |
| C. Hardie, 16, Catherine-street | | 0 5 0 |
| H. M. G. | | 5 5 0 |
| R. Hunter, Amexander, Pennicuik | | 0 2 6 |
| J. S. | | 1 1 0 |
| J. W. A. | | 0 5 0 |
| William Kirkwood, Musselburgh | | 1 0 0 |
| Miss Malcolm, 30, Dundas-street | | 1 1 0 |
| John Malcolm, 9, Greenside-street | | 0 4 0 |
| J. Miller, farmer, Newhouse, by N. Berwick | | 2 0 0 |
| Henry Morrison, Queensferry-street | | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Mackenzie, of Muirton, 29, Charlotte-sq. | | 2 2 0 |
| Kenneth M'Leay, R.S.A., 30, Stafford-street | | 1 1 0 |
| W. Nicol, 86, South-bridge | | 2 0 0 |
| Miss Eliza Nicolson, 10, Salisbury-road | | 2 2 0 |
| "Nix my Dolly" | | 0 2 6 |
| James Nelson, 209, High-street | | 0 5 0 |
| Dr. Purdie, 15, Union-street | | 0 5 0 |
| Robert Russell, Canonmills | | 1 1 0 |
| Robert Richardson, 23, Minto-street | | 2 0 0 |
| John Sheppard, 68, George-street | | 1 1 0 |
| Robert Selby | | 2 2 0 |
| Robert Shells, 29, George IV. Bridge | | 1 0 0 |
| S. M. | | 0 5 0 |
| John Snow, South James-street | | 0 2 6 |
| Frederick Schultze, sen., Ramsay-place | | 1 0 0 |
| Two Friends | | 0 10 0 |
| Robert White, Bonnington | | 1 0 6 |
| A. Wilkie | | 1 1 0 |
| Mrs. Janet Young, Poultry-market | | 1 1 0 |
| Alex. Annandale, Polton-mill, Lasswade | | 20 0 0 |
| John Anderson, 22, Nicolson-street | | 2 0 0 |
| A Friend to the League | | 1 1 0 |
| H. Armour, 18, Buccleuch-place | | 0 2 6 |
| A Convert | | 1 0 0 |
| A Well-wisher | | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend to the Poor | | 5 0 0 |
| A. Aitken, 11, Duncan-street | | 0 10 6 |
| A Farmer who wishes he could give more | | 1 0 0 |
| A few Stocking-makers per Hugh McPherson, | | |
| Old Assembly Close | | 1 5 0 |
| J. Anderson, 21, Rose-street | | 0 7 6 |
| A Free Churchman and Free Trader | | 1 1 0 |
| Robert Aitken, 11, Duncan-street | | 2 2 0 |
| Alexander Allan | | 0 5 0 |
| A. Z. | | 2 2 0 |
| A Tradesman | | 3 0 0 |
| J. M. Bell, 4, Forres-street | | 4 4 0 |
| Robert Bryce, Spittal-street | | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Bosk, 25, Laurieston | | 1 0 0 |
| Jos. Baird, 16, Royal Exchange | | 1 1 0 |
| J. H. Burton, Duncan-street | | 3 3 0 |
| W. Brown, Hailes Quarry House | | 0 10 6 |
| George Beattie, 5, Lothian-road | | 1 1 0 |
| Dr. Bellby, Northumberland-street | | 3 0 0 |
| Barely Free from Debt | | 0 5 0 |
| James Barlas, 5, Duncan-street | | 1 0 0 |
| Rev. Dr. W. Brown, 2, Meadow-place | | 1 1 0 |
| A. H. Balfour, 3, St. John's-hill | | 0 5 0 |
| Jonathan Bladworth, Grassmarket | | 2 0 0 |
| L. Berry, Greenside-place | | 1 1 0 |
| John Brown, M. D., London-street | | 1 1 0 |
| Robert Cadell, St. Andrew-square | | 20 0 0 |
| J. Clapperton and Co., High-street | | 10 0 0 |
| H. Cunningham, Bonnington | | 10 0 0 |
| George Clarke, 8, Keir-street | | 1 1 0 |
| A. Cuthbert, 1, St. James's-square | | 0 5 0 |
| — Clarke, 343, High-street | | 1 1 0 |
| Edward Cruickshank, 2, Laurieston-place | | 2 2 0 |
| Robert Chisholm, 15, Bruntsfield-place | | 1 1 0 |
| William Scott Chisholm, do. | | 1 1 0 |
| Henry Crichton, S.C.C. | | 2 0 0 |
| — Colthart, Croftam, Brampton, Cum-berland | | 1 0 0 |
| W. Crouch, 4, North-bridge | | 1 0 0 |
| J. Craig, 3, Armistion-place | | 1 0 0 |
| Simon Campbell, S.C.C., Bellevue-crescent | | 1 1 0 |
| Miss Carruthers, Frederick-street | | 1 1 0 |
| John Custer, 21, Richmond-place | | 0 5 0 |
| Dr. Daun, Drummond-place | | 10 0 0 |
| Mrs. Drummond, 16, Shandwick-place | | 5 0 0 |
| Arthur Dingwall, Rutland-square | | 1 1 0 |
| Wm. Dick, Clyde-street | | 5 5 0 |
| Wm. Deans, merchant, Leith | | 1 1 0 |
| Baillie Duncan, 1, Heriot-row | | 2 2 0 |
| Quintin Dalrymple, 29, Frederick-street | | 1 0 0 |
| John Dick, Clyde-street | | 1 1 0 |
| P. E. Dove, 4, Henderson-row | | 1 1 0 |
| Rev. P. Davison, 11, Dean-street | | 1 0 0 |
| J. Donaldson, advocate, 46, Northumberland-st. | | 1 1 0 |
| Wm. Darling, 94, South-bridge | | 2 0 0 |
| John Dalrymple, Bath-street, Leith | | 0 5 0 |
| D. M. M., Westerhall Cottage | | 0 10 0 |
| — Douglas, 1, South-bridge | | 0 5 0 |
| John Dunlop, Brocklock | | 10 0 0 |
| Friend to the League | | 5 0 0 |
| Friend to the Cause | | 2 2 0 |
| A. Fyfe, S.C.C., Leopold-place | | 1 1 0 |
| Thomas Fleming, South-bridge | | 1 0 0 |
| Rev. John French, Buccleuch-place | | 1 0 0 |
| J. Ford, 29, West-port | | 1 0 0 |
| F. R. K., against iniquity | | 0 2 6 |
| Dan. F. reater, 1, West Newington | | 1 1 0 |
| John Gray, Craigie-terrace | | 10 0 0 |
| G. R. and Co. | | 5 0 0 |
| Baillie Gray, Prince's street | | 10 0 0 |
| G. H. Girdle, St. John's-street | | 5 0 0 |
| James Grant, 16, South-bridge | | 2 2 0 |
| Robert Glass, Victoria-terrace | | 1 1 0 |
| Thomas Glen, 7, Spencer-place | | 0 5 0 |
| J. B. Grade, W. B. | | 2 0 0 |
| William Gray, 43, Buccleuch-street | | 0 2 6 |
| Dr. Gardner, 12, Hill-street | | 0 10 0 |
| Thomas Gardner, Larch-grove, Balerno | | 0 10 0 |
| T. J. Galloway, 197, High-street | | 1 1 0 |

Edinburgh.

| | | | |
|---|-----|----|---|
| Mrs. Glen, 7, Spencer-place | 40 | 3 | 0 |
| J. and W. Howison, 2, Drummond-street | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Howison and Son, Drummond-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Hutchison, S.C.C., Duncan-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| George Hope, Fenton Barns | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Rev. George Harris, Hope-park | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Geo. Harrison, 36, North-bridge | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| H. J. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Henderson, 6, George-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| W. Hughes, Nottingham-place | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| J. Horaburg, 15, Buccleuch-place | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| George Inglis, South-bridge | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Inches, Niddry-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| E. Irvine, Scotsman Office | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Ionobodie | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Jamieson, Grassmarket | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Peter Jamieson, 6, Nicolson-square | 1 | 10 | 0 |
| J. M. St. Andrew-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thomas Kerr, St. Leonard's-house | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Dr. Kennedy, 5, Broughton-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Kyd, 5, Armliston-place | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| James Leilham, Inverleith-place | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Laidlaw and Sons, Simon-square | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Leckie, 2, Picardy-place | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Sir George MacLennan, Bt., 11, Athol-crescent | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Murray, Henderson | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Milne, 7, South Frederick-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Millar, 4, Hope Park | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Charles Morton, Ramsay-gardens | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Millar, S.C.C., George-square | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| E. F. Maitland, Alva-street | 4 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Maxwell, 5, Archibald-place | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| L. Millar, 27, Frederick-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Millar, 1, Bread-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Millar, Hay-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| "Money makes the Mare to Go"—the last | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Kick at the Rogues in Grain | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| C. Muirhead, 16, Young-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A. and E. Murray, N.W. Circus-place | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Alexander Marshall, Dean-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. H. MacFarlane, 46, Howe-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Duncan M'Laren, High-street | 50 | 0 | 0 |
| George M'Callum, India-street | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| J. M'Laren and Son, Roxburgh-place | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| George K. M'Callum | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. M'Farlane, 16, Sandwich-place | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| J. F. M'Farlane, North-bridge | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| James M'Intosh, 9, Graham-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| John M'Pherson, 22, India-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| E. M'Gill, 103, Rose-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Miss G. M'Laren, 13, Frederick-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Miss Agnes M'Laren, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Master John M'Laren, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Wm. M'Gregor, 1, Macdowall-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John M'Intyre, 23, Archibald-place | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| — M'Kinlay, 3, Hanover-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| R. R. Nelson, Nicolson-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| No Sliding Scale or Fixed Duty | 0 | 4 | 6 |
| W. Oliphant and Son, 9, South-bridge | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Charles Oliphant, Inverleith-place | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Paterson, 28, Grassmarket, and more if | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| needed | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| George Paterson, 13, Montgomery-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| P. Paul, S.C.C., Princes-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Pairman, 5, Richmond-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Richardson and Brothers, Bow | 100 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Robertson, of Eldin | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| William Renton, 22, Buccleuch-place | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| John Russell, Annandale-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Renton, 14, Princes-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| R. B. S., Rankellor-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| William Reid, builder, 11, Calton-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Francis Richardson, 28, Grassmarket | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| John Ritchie, D.D., 19, Salisbury-road | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. H. Ritchie, do., do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| J. Robertson, 30, Hanover-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| J. Rutherford, 94, Cross-causeway | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| J. Robertson | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Reid, 4, Henderson-row | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Hugh Rose, 1, Blenheim-place | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Stone and Kemp | 150 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Sommerville, Dalmore Paper Mill, Pennicuik | 21 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Sommerville, jun., Dalmore Paper Mill | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| George Smith, 50, Niddry-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| John Stewart, Nicolson-square | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Stewart, 176, High-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Councillor Stark | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Alexander Scott, 4, Westport | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| R. Scott, 20, Great Stuart-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| A. H. Smith, 306, Lawnmarket | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| David Smith, 5, St. David-street | 0 | 7 | 6 |
| James Taylor, Tanfield | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Geo. Thomson, Jamaica-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A. Thomson, 93, West Bow | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Archibald Thomson, High-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| William Tait, 107, Princes-street | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Tod, Princes-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| G. W. Willis, 42, Rankellor-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| John Wigham, jun., Salisbury-road | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| John Wigham, sen., Nicolson-street | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| X. Y. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Geo. Young, 1, South-bridge | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Small sums | 1 | 19 | 6 |
| James Aytoun, Heriot-row | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| A. Adam and Sons, Bonnington | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. Anderson, 8, London-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mrs. W. Anderson, 5, North Charlotte-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Rev. C. Anderson, 5, North Charlotte-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| John Aird, 11, Howe-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Miss Marion A. Anderson, Prestonpans | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| "Away with restrictions, and let men and | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| money find their level" | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A Friend, Lothian-road | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Complete Suffragist | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade, Cramond Bridge | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Anonymous | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Wm. Arthur, Canongate | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A True Friend | 0 | 4 | 0 |
| A Friend to the Cause | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade, No. 78 | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| An East Lothian Farmer of fifty years' standing | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| David Arthur, Canongate | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A Friend, 121, Princes-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Shilling last year | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend to the Agricultural Labourer | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| Thos. Allan, 265, High-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| An Old Soldier | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A. T. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A. L., Eke-side | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade, Norton-place | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Affleck, 14, Canning-place | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend to the Poor | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend, New Bridge | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Miss Anderson, 6, Windmill-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Laird's Son | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Aitken, Bonnington | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend, per G. Dingwall Fordyce, advocate | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| A Friend to the good Cause | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| David Aitken, Tranent | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend to the Cause | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend to the Anti-Corn-Law League | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend, 16, Cumberland-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Widow's Mite against the Sliding Scale | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Man of Common Sense | 1 | 0 | 0 |

Edinburgh—continued.

| | | | |
|---|----|----|---|
| A Friend to the League | 40 | 2 | 6 |
| Mrs. Anderson, 30, Rose-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Supporter of the Cause | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend, 11, Charlotte-place | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Anonymous | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend who wishes to live and let live | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Already subscribed at the glorious Meeting on | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thursday | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A. A. Z. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend, 26, Gardner's-crescent | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend, Lasswade | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend to the Cause | 0 | 6 | 0 |
| A Friend, X. Y. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend to the Cause | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A. P., Broughton-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend to the Cause, 196, Rose-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Conservative half-crown | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Provider of Bread for Ten | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Farmer | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A poor Printer's Pop at Protection | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Widow's Mite, Society | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend to Liberty | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| A Friend, Path-head, Ford | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Starving Man | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A. C., a friend to justice | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend (a lady) | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George Alston, 52, Hanover-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Argonaut | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Well-wisher | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Anonymous 3, S. G.-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A. and C. Black | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Banks, North-bridge | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Branton, 82, Prince's-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| B. M. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Brown, 6, Rose-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| D. Burns, 44, Rankellor-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George Barlas, 5, Duncan-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Buhner, 10, East Rose-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Alex. M. Bell, W.S., 12, India street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| James Blackhall, 22, North-bridge | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| D. Berrey, 9, Society | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| J. Branton, Pathhead, Ford | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William Beattie, painter | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Miss Isabella B. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George Brown, Randolph-place | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Victor Blanc, 69, George-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| — Bruce, St. Cuthbert's Glebo | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| C. Blyth, 5, South-bridge | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A. Broomfield, Arncliffe-place | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Charles Bayne, 64, Rose-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Peter Bairnsfather, 9, Royal Circus | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Brown, 4, Haddington-place | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Francis Burke, accountant | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| J. Ballantyne, 5, Nicolson-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Miss Begrie, 73, St. Leonard-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mrs. Dr. Blair, 3, Stafford-street | 0 | 3 | 6 |
| Thomas Blyth, 153, Pleasance | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Banks and Co., Canon-mills | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Chambers, Manor-place | 10 | 10 | 0 |
| Robert Cox, W.S., Rutland-street | 4 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Calder, 2, Albany-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A. Cushnie, 56, Terrace | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| T. O. Campbell, 18, Greenside-place | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Cushnie, Malta-green | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Peter Crooks, W.S., 2, Abercromby-place | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| James Chisholm, 5, Shakespeare-square | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| George Cunningham, Balerno | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Alexander Christie, 23, George-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Craig, 18, Nicolson-street | 0 | 3 | 6 |
| Walter Cran, 6, Market-street, Musselburgh | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Cameron, 11, Thistle-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Clark, 31, Morrison-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. Margaret Crawford, Hadow's-court | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Cosmopolite | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Rev. James Clark, 7, Duncan-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Patrick Campbell, surgeon, Newington | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| R. Caunter, 60, Great King-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Calderwood, 17, Union-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. Clark, 118, Lauriston-place | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| R. Clinkcales, South Bridge-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Contribution of Eight Bairs for bigger scones | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Cay, 14, Barony-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| William Clark, 76, Thistle-street | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| Thomas Cairns, 18, Dean-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A. Cameron, Regent-arch | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. Thos. Calder, 2, Albany-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Miss N. Constable, 56, Lothian-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Carnstairs, Restalrigg | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Robt. Carmichael, 75, Northumberland-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Robt. Clark, 1, London-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Thomas Cumming, Tranent | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| — Campbell, 29, High-street, Portobello | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Wm. Dunlop, Grove-street | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| A. C. Dick, 44, Great King-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Andrew Doda, High-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Duncan, W.S., 46, Queen-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| D. R. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Alex. Duncan and Son, 18, St. Andrew-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Alex. Douglas, 5, Roxburgh-place | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Dick, 59, Albany-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Andrew Dun, 30, London-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Robert Disher, 6, St. John's-hill | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Miss Disher, 200, Canongate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Downs, 21, Canongate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Davidson, Pennicuik | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Alex. Donaldson, Niddry-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| D. T. R., Alva-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| D. R. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Dickson, gardener, Ormiston, Tranent | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Hall and Son, North Herwick | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Duncan, 10, Broughton-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| His Servant, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Dickson, 2, Scotland-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Dick, Colinton | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| — Easer, 54, Frederick-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| George Edington, 144, Cowgate | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Elder, Lenny Mains, Cramond | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| — Edgar, 22, London-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Alexander Fletcher, 26, Frederick-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| From a Friend | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| For Free Trade | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Ferrier, Canongate | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| R. G. Fletcher | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Friendly Aid | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| From a Lady | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George Ford, 245, High-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| B. Fotheringham, 13, Henderson-row | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Finlay | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| G. Dingwall Fordyce, 5, Carlton-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Fleming, Upper Sp., law, Colinton | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| From a Friend | 0 | 4 | 0 |
| From a Friend to the Cause of Free Trade | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Four Friends | 0 | 4 | 0 |
| R. Fortune, 67, Nicolson-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| From an Old Lady | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| From one who does not like Peel's sauce | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| From oppressive laws, has no more to give | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George Fenwick, 333, High-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| — Fisher, Lawnmarket | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Forbes, 27, St. John-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Francis Fraser, 8, Davis-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A. Foreyth, 3, Comely Green-crescent | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Andrew Falker, South-bridge | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| From one who goes to bed free of debt | 0 | 2 | 6 |

Edinburgh—continued.

| | | | |
|---|----|----|---|
| W. Finlay, 110, Nicolson-street | 41 | 0 | 0 |
| From a Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Friend to Free Trade | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| From a keen Tory | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Friends, 6, Gilmour-place | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| From a Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| From a few young men in Messrs. Kennington and Jenner's, 47, Prince's-street | 1 | 2 | 6 |
| A. Gulland, 20, Greenside-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| G. Gulland, New-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| T. Glen, North Bank-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| C. Gordon | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William Galloway, 37, Frederick-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Andrew Graham, 70, Bristow-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| G. H., 68, Prince's-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| G. H. | 0 | 7 | 6 |
| James Greenshields, 37, Rose-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Green, 37, Hanover-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| David Gray, 88 C., 25, York-place | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| R. Gliven and Co., Lothian-road | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| T. Gray, 8, East Register-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Hunter, Northumberland-street | 10 | 10 | 0 |
| Forrest Hay, Bonnington Mills | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| P. Howden, Meuse-lane | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Hogg, 122, Nicolson-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A. Hay, 28, Greenside-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Charles Hardie, 16, Catherine-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Hill, 60, Broughton-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Charles Hill, Colinton | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Alexander Henderson, 72, Leith-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George Henderson, 55, Calton | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| David Hunter, baker, Kirkcaldy | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. H. Hay, John's-place, St. Leonard's | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| J. Henderson, 88 C., 20, St. Patrick-square | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| — Hepburn, 26, Hanover-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Matthew Howden, 50, Minto-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| — Henderson, Rose Hall | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Thomas Houlden, 9, Nicolson-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| R. Hamilton, 102, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| H. F. | 0 | 8 | 6 |
| H. F. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| H. 8. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Hume, 8, East Register-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Hamilton, 32, Beaumont-place | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Hopeton, 332, Lawnmarket | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| H. G. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| H. L. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George Hay, gardener, Causewayside | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Henderson, Laaswade | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Ireland, 37, South-bridge | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| F. Ironside, 124, High-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. P., South-bridge | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| J. Inglis, 65, Lauriston-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Miss Irvine, 18, Buccleuch-place | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Irvine, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| David Irvine, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Robert Irvine, jun., do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| "I'm sorry I can't give more" | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mrs. Inner, Bloomberry House, Canaan | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George Imlich, 47, Anne-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Adam Johnston, 38, St. Andrew-square | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| J. W., Thistle-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Miss Johnston, Linkfield, Musselburgh | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. W. S., to defray expenses incurred on his account | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. W. J., Hanover-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. J. W., Hanover-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. B. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| J. B., Union-place | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Johnston, Springfield-mills | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mrs. Jardine, 51, Broughton-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| F. Jeandin, 56, George-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| J. B., 10, West Preston-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Kennington and Jenner, 47, Prince's-street | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| David Kay, 7, Rose-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thomas Kennington, 47, Prince's-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Colonel Kinnaird, 1, Meadow-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Kay, 27, North-bridge | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Kirkhope, India-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Keir, 1, Prince's-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alex. Keir, 2, Dundas-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Kemp, 81, High-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George Leck, Clearburn, Newington | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Joseph Lillie, 41, George-square | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Mrs. Laing, 61, North Castle-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Laird, 58, High-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thomas Littlejohn, 33, Leith-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Mrs. Laurie, Frederick-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Law, gardener, Dalry | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Lawson, 110, West-port | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Mitchell, Lauriston | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Mould and Tod, 29, North-bridge | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| W. B. Moffatt, 7, Infirmary-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Rev. W. Marshall, 9, Smith's-place | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thomas Moffat, Rankellor-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| J. Malcolm, 30, Dundas-street | 3 | 3 | 0 |
| Alexander Morton, 65, Northumberland-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| G. Murie, 39, Lothian-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William Miller, 86, Nicolson-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George Monro, 14, Salisbury-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| — Marshall, Albany-lane | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| "May Heaven prosper the noble cause of jus- tice and humanity" | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Francis Marshall, 23, Downie-place | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Maiben, Lauriston-terrace | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| M. A. E. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George Murdoch, Bonnyrigg, Laaswade | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Hugh Martin, 19, Carnegie-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thomas Mather, 14, Greenside-row | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| — May | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| H. Monteath, surgeon, Pennicuik | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George Mercer and Son, 17, Nicolson-street | 3 | 3 | 0 |
| F. G. Mitchell, 28, Claremont-crescent | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Jas. Marshall, Broughton-place | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Wm. Mill, 33, West-port | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Wm. Murray, London Hotel, St. Andrew-sq. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Robt. Muir, 23, Jamaica-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| M. M., with hearty wishes for success | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Murray, 1, Catherine-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| May you succeed, 13, Union-place | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mrs. Milner, 5, Baxter's-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wallace Macfate, 42, South-bridge | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| M. F. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Moffat, 27, Abbey-hill | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Menzies, 12, Romilly-place | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| D. W. Mitchell, 59, Dublin-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Charles McLaren, 15, Northumberland-street | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| J. McIntosh, Nicholson-street | 3 | 3 | 0 |
| James McDonald, Buccleuch-place | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Mrs. McKenzie, 8, Duncan-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| William McCulloch, 142, High-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Robt. McDonald, 275, High-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John McIntyre, 17, Archibald-place | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| D. McIntyre, 351, High-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| David McDonald, 3 East Arthur place | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John McLauchlan, 60, South-bridge | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Alexander McKenzie, 148, Cowgate | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Donald McKenzie, 11, South Charlotte-st. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Macd naid and Toshack, 4, Swinton-row | 0 | 7 | 6 |
| J. McLaren, 6, Downie-place | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| — McPherson, 48, Hanover-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John McGregor | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George McMillan, 30, Dundas-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. McGibbon, 3, Duncan-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John McDonald, 353, High-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Robert M'Farlane, advocate | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A. M'C., 20, Fettes-row | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A. M'Donald, 16, Roxburgh-place | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Madden, Trant | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Wm. M'Alpine, Mint, Edinburgh | 1 | 0 | 0 |

| | | | |
|--|----|----|---|
| James M'Pherson, 1, Port Hopetown | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| D. and J. M'Callum, 50, Nicolson-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Nelson, 17, Hanover-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| P. Newham, 6, Middleby-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| — Nisbet, 6, York-place | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| David Nicolson, 36, Canongate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Napier, 25, West Nicolson-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| N. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Oswald, 8, Lothian-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| One of the Fraternity of Dunces miscalled Political Economists | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Francis Oliphant, Middle Arthur-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. John Ogle, St. John's-place | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| O. P. Q. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| One who has a hard struggle with the world | 0 | 3 | 6 |
| William Pike, Prince's-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Paterson, 47, Albany-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| P. Q., No. 2 | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Dr. John Paterson, 11, Salisbury-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Rev. Dr. W. Peddie, 57, George-square | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Peddie, jun., 56, Albany-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Proprietors of the Edinburgh Chronicle | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Picken, 18, Victoria-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| — Paton, South-bridge | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| G. Pantou | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Paterson, Preston-pens | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George Paterson, 25, Minto-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| — Paisie, 11, Archibald-place | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Porteus, Gorgie Mills | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Patrick Pearson, 23, Hill-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Peterkin, 5, South College-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William Pringle, 7, Wharton-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Palmer, 5, Earl Grey-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William Pearson, Cockenzie | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Andrew Paterson, foundry, Pennicuik | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| T. Russell, brushmaker, Bank-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| David Robertson, 8, Branton-place | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Andrew Reynolds, 20, Cumberland-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A. Rose, 2, Drummond-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| T. Robson, 18, William-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A. Richardson, 48, Frederick-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Andrew Robertson, 9, Leith-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Robertson, 8, Buccleuch-place | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Robertson, 31, Buccleuch-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George Ritchie, Pathhead-ford | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| P. Ritchie, 54, Nicolson-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Ritchie, 140, High-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| A. Ross, Inverleith-row | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Robertson, 8, Keir-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Robertson | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| R. and A., 7, Sciennes-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| William Robb, 56, Cross-causeway | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Alexander Robertson, 50, Broughton-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Archibald Rough, 18, Leith-walk | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Ramsay Richardson, 178, Rose-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George Ramsay, Park-place Inn | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Miss Russell, Comely-bank | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Ramsay, South-bridge | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Peter Rutherford, 76, Nicholson-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| R. H., 24, Pleasance | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| William Robertson, Summer-hall | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Daniel Robertson, 21, College-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Simpson, 88, Northumberland-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thomas Sharp, 14, Prince's-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| George Simson, 54, Frederick-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Archibald Scott, 10, Teviot-row | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A. F. Somerville, Drummond-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Sinclair, jun., 79, South-bridge | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| David Scott, 12, India-place | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| J. A. Stewart, 45, Frederick-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| H., Duncan-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| — Scott, 109, George-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Dr. John Stewart, 4, Albany-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Dr. Spittal, 16, Howe-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| S. J., Bernard-row | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Simpson, 2, Melville-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. and W. Snowden, 69, Grassmarket | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Mrs. Smith, 16, South Charlotte-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| C. Spence, 21, St. David-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Alexander Scott, Bristol-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Alexander Steel, Pathhead-ford | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Andrew Smith, Palace-yard | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Spero Mellora | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Miss Shaw, 4, Warriston-place | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Stewart, 28, Mt. James's-square | 1 | 10 | 0 |
| John Steele, Polton Mill, Lasswade | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Smith, West Port | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Spence, 50, Great King-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Stoddart, 40, Pleasance | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Andrew Smith, Preston-hall | 0 | 3 | 6 |
| James Smith, 15, Saunders-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mrs. Simson, 3, Hamilton-place | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A. G. Sutherland, 18, Fettes-row | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. Wm. Scott, 10, Buccleuch-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Symington, 39, Thistle-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mrs. Stoddart, West Preston-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Spittal | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Steel, Tranent | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Andrew Simpson, Tranent | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| J. L. Smith, 1, Antiqua-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| S. J., 11, High-terrace | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| D. Stewart, 39, Frederick-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| R. Simpson, Pathhead-ford | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James B. Tod, 5, Fyfe's-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Tait, 12, South-bridge | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| George Tod, 61, Clark-street | 0 | 7 | 6 |
| Two Friends | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| William Thompson, 11, South-bridge | 0 | 7 | 6 |
| Two Ladies | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| "The Hire of the Labourer kept back by fraud" | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| T. A. Thomson, 1, Annandale-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Three Poor Men, with 23 children | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| William Turnbull, High-street, Musselburgh | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| The Mite of an old Hagman | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Turrance, 36, Buccleuch-street | 0 | 7 | 6 |
| John Tod, Meuse-lane | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| G. Murray Thompson, 175, Cowgate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| T. S., jun. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Thornburn, Minto-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thirteen Friends, by Thos. Glen, 7, Spence's-pl. | 0 | 12 | 6 |
| Hugh Tait, 36, Dundas-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Turnbull, 5, William-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| "Up and waur them a', Willie" | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| E. Viner, 8, Inverleith-row | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Watt, Morton-street, Leith | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Walls, 17, London-street | 0 | 7 | 6 |
| William Wemyss, Salisbury-road | 30 | 0 | 0 |
| A. Wemyss, Hanover-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Peter Wilson, Regent-arch | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Waterston, Rose-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Waddell, 30, Melville-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thomas White and Co., 225, Canongate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A. Wood, 98, South-bridge | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| D. Welsh, 3, Rose-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Robert Waterston, Path head, Ford | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Wight, 4, East Adam-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Joseph Wilson, 13, Terpichen-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| "Willing, but weak" | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| W. H., No. 2 | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| W. T. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| William Wilson, 165, Pleasance | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Andrew Whyte, 1, Hunter-square | 2 | 3 | 0 |
| Joshua Wood, 236, High-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Whitman, 8, St. James's-square | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Whitewright, Costorphin | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| R. D. Wilson, 17, Elder-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| — Williamson, Fountainbridge | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Samuel Weir, 13, Canal-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |

| | | | |
|--|----|----|----|
| "Who wishes he could give more" | 20 | 5 | 0 |
| John Young, 11, Calton-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Young, George-square | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Young, 126, High-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. Young | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Y. Z. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Small Sums | 15 | 18 | 94 |
| George Best, Compton, near Guildford | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| Benjamin Holditch, Lynn | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Arthur Morse, Swaffham, Norfolk | 50 | 0 | 0 |
| John Blacket, Brixton-hill | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| George Price, Mile End, Portsea, Hants | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| C. W. D. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Johnson, Prescott | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thos. Bernard, 5, Hyde-place, Royal-hill, Greenwich | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Morrison, 28, St. Mary-at-Hill | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| W. Goslin, 24, Golden-square | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. A'Beckett, 6, Golden-square | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Wood, 8, Little Newport-st., Leicester-square | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Snow, 3 and 4, Sherrard-street, Golden-square | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A. H. Coulson, 4, St. Peter's-terrace, Walworth | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George E. Mylne, 11, Albion-terrace, Canonbury-square, Islington | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| George Beaton, 15, Mount-row, New Kent-road | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| James Castle, High-street, Wallingford | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| "Of Free Trade Principle" | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George Warner, Berkeley | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Miss Emma Trotman, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| The Workmen at Mr. Nussey's Mill, Batley, near Dewsbury | 1 | 12 | 6 |
| Thomas Turner, Pathe Farm, Othry, Somerset | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| E. J. Eccles, Plaitow, Essex | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| D. Murray, Hayes-place, Lisson-grove | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Richard Beauchamp, 11, Hertford-street, May Fair, (as a second subscription) | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Thos. Hewitt Key, 48, Camden-street, Camden-town | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| A Teetotaler | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| Cheltenham, per | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| — E. Kendall | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| — Pilkington | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| — S. Wightwick | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| — T. Henney | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Stanton, 78, Cannon-street, for a number 10 of the LEAGUE paper | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Anthony Austin, jun., Stamford Villas, Fulham | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| William Stubbs, Leftwich, near Northwich | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| George Smith, Northwich | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| L. Lemmon, Hove, near Battle, per Dr. Bateman | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| F. Stewart, 167, Sloane-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| J. C. Wolf, Peckham | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| C. J. F. Ollers, 16, Prospect-place, St. George's-road, Southwark | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Charles Beevor, 49, Berner's-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Wells, 11, Phoenix-street, Soho | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Abraham Douglas, corn dealer | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| John Cleghorn | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Rev. Joseph Brown | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Mitchell, merchant | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Gray, baker | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Dawson and Co., brush manufacturers | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Andrew Somerville, baker | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Anderson, baker | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Thompson, baker | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Chisholm, tobacconist | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. and J. Tod, merchants | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William Porteous, tailor | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Mitchell, merchant | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| William Dalgleish, cork manufacturer | 1 | 2 | 6 |
| James Somerville, shoemaker | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A Free Trader | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Gordon, ironmonger | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Somerville, shoemaker | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Farmer | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| R. Glendinning, carrier, Path-head | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Mrs. Macfarlane | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Robertson, at Mr. Mitchell's | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Collier, merchant | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| P. Lyle, bookseller | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Bryson, watchmaker | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A. Menteith, shoemaker | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| R. Thomson, candlemaker | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Thomson, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Thomas Blair | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Free Trader | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Lyle, banker | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| R. Purves, tailor | 0 | 7 | 6 |
| — Browning, tea dealer | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| I. O. U. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| G. Ferrier, at J. Gray and Son's | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Thompson, ropemaker | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Porteous, letter carrier | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. Jardine, publican | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| U. X. L. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| R. Stevenson, at J. Gray and Son's | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. Gray and Son, merchants | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| James Porteous, tailor | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Miss Wilson | 0 | 4 | 0 |
| D. and W. Watson, merchants | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Miller | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend, at Mr. Mitchell's | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| R. Gordon, tobacconist | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Morton, farmer, Shott's Iron Works, near Edinburgh | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Andrew Gray | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Samuel Mitchell, merchant | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Anti-Monopolist | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Free Trader | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Aitchison, at Mr. Mitchell's | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| D. Goodier, tobacconist | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Free Trader | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Cockburn, draper | 0 | 7 | 6 |
| J. H. Y. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Andrew Campbell, draper | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Free Trader | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Gray, baker, Gilmerton, Edinburgh | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| A Farmer | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Muir, Path-head Ford | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| William Stewart, at Mr. Mitchell's | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| D. Hogg, farmer, Begbie, Haddington | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Jas. Tweedie, farmer, Deuchrie, Preston Kirk | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Farmer | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Farmer | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Aitken, Dalkeith Mills | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| An Inquirer | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Andrew Wilson, mason | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Rev. C. Waddie | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A Free Trader | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Rev. Mr. Gowans | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William Findlay, grocer | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William Miller, baker | 0 | 3 | 6 |
| Mrs. Berry | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Andrew Taylor | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| William Wilson, draper | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend to the Cause | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| P. Johnstone and Sons, drapers | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| R. Dawson, currier | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Robert Taylor, smith | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Porteous, tobacconist | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| T. Howden and Co., drapers | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Lowrie, china merchant | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| George Aitken, jun. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| D. Farquharson, innkeeper | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Lee, at Mr. Mitchell's | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Lothian, meal dealer | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Small Sums | 2 | 1 | 8 |

| | | | |
|---|---|----|---|
| Thomas S. Hubert, 119, High Holborn | 0 | 5 | 6 |
| R. Matthews, 45, Basinghall-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Dixon, 734, Queen-street, City | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Todd, Limerick, Ireland | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Bailly, Calne, 2nd subscription | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Mullineux, Wilton-street, Northwich | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| T. B. Rowe | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| L. Rowe | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| S. Wood | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| — Cunningham | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| — Goatley | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Rev. W. C. Yonge | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| — Barnes | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| — Dowden | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| F. Hammond | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| — Simpson | 0 | 4 | 0 |
| — Ratcliffe | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| W. Hammond, jun., his Mother's First Gift | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| — Waters | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Jacob Redshaw | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| — Blundell | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Joseph Goldney | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Martin Plim | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. Smith | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. Bourne | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| — Blackman | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| — Marson | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| W. Whitman | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Michael Sims | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Joseph Hinge | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Hinge | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Dexter | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| Jonah Wood | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| W. Spindler | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| Robert Skegg, sen., Weybridge | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| W. Shoveller, 2, Bridge House-place, Newington Causeway | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| W. Welland, 25, King-street, Holborn | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Wm. Tanner, 5, Queen-street, Grosvenor-square | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Wm. Hunt, 21, Star-street, Edgware-road | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Henry Francis, 5, Brown-street, Grosvenor-square | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Henry Smith, Cotherstone, near Barnard Castle, Durham | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Edward Jackman, 263, Wapping | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Abraham Kimm, 274, Wapping | 1 | 1 | 0 |

Colchester, per J. Harward

| | |
|---------------------------------|--------|
| R. M. Savill | £1 0 0 |
| Christopher Stopes, East-street | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Carter Madell | 0 10 0 |
| A Female Friend | 0 10 0 |
| B. J. | 0 5 0 |
| Matthew Harvey, Maldon-lane | 0 5 0 |
| P. E. F. | 0 5 0 |
| A Free Trader | 0 5 0 |
| Free Trader | 0 5 0 |
| John How, Beverly Lodge | 0 5 0 |
| Anti-Bread Tax | 0 2 6 |
| S. C. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Isbern, East-street | 0 2 6 |
| William Quilter, East-bridge | 0 2 6 |

Forfar, per Peter Reid

| | |
|------------------------------------|-------|
| A Friend | 2 2 0 |
| John Lawson and Son, manufacturers | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend from the first | 1 0 0 |
| John Ramsey, reedmaker | 1 0 0 |
| John Steele and Son, manufacturers | 1 0 0 |
| James Craik, jun., manufacturer | 3 0 0 |
| Wm. and John Don and Company | 2 0 0 |
| Wm. Sturrock, manufacturer | 2 0 0 |
| Peter Reid, merchant | 1 0 0 |
| George Webster, merchant | 1 0 0 |
| Charles Gall, leather merchant | 1 0 0 |
| George Webster, wright | 0 2 6 |
| William Melvin, draper | 0 2 6 |
| James Thomson, draper | 0 2 6 |
| John Low, ironmonger | 0 2 6 |
| Robert Bell, manufacturer | 0 2 6 |
| John Creig, manufacturer | 0 2 6 |
| James Gordon, merchant | 0 2 6 |
| James Barclay, writer | 0 5 0 |
| Charles Rodger, writer | 0 5 0 |
| William Potter, brewer | 1 0 0 |
| Patrick Whyte, tanner | 4 0 0 |
| Wm. Littlejohn, hosier | 0 5 0 |
| James Anderson, merchant | 0 5 0 |
| James Robb, teacher | 0 5 0 |
| John Petrie, manufacturer | 0 5 0 |
| John Lawson, jun., manufacturer | 0 2 6 |
| Archibald Thornton, reedmaker | 0 7 6 |
| Wm. Barry, merchant | 0 2 6 |
| George Smith, bookseller | 0 5 0 |
| David Craik, warper | 0 2 6 |
| John Fyfe, jun., manufacturer | 0 2 6 |
| David Robb, shoemaker | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Whyte, banker | 1 1 0 |
| Small Sums | 0 5 9 |

Staleybridge.

| | |
|--|---------|
| Edward Cheetham, Ackers-lane | 1 1 0 |
| James Bamforth, Ashton | 1 1 0 |
| Edwin Ousey, Raabottom-street | 1 1 0 |
| Thomas Cheetham, Ackers-lane | 1 1 0 |
| David Humphreys, Raabottom-street | 1 1 0 |
| James Hill, Hyde's-street | 5 0 0 |
| A Friend to good Trade, Harmony, & Concord | 1 0 0 |
| — Bates, Melbourne-street | 1 0 0 |
| — Milburn, Castle-street | 0 10 0 |
| Jeremiah Cheetham, Ackers-lane | 1 1 0 |
| — Harrop, do. | 0 10 0 |
| — Worrall, Grosvenor-street | 1 0 0 |
| Henry Birch, Mount Pleasant | 2 2 0 |
| Moses Hadfield, Caroline-street | 0 5 0 |
| Ralph Harwood, do. | 0 5 0 |
| George Yates, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Small Sums | 4 18 0 |
| Jonathan Andrew, Bridge street | 0 10 0 |
| John Linney, High-street | 0 5 0 |
| John Greaves, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Dean and Tinker, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Edward Cheetham, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Ralph Ogden, Oxford-road, Dukinfield | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Rowland, Lodge-lane, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Platt, Oxford-road, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Charles Ashton, do., do. | 0 5 0 |
| James Nield, High-street, Staleybridge | 0 2 6 |
| William Folkes, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Mills, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Mrs. C. Buckley, do. | 0 10 0 |
| William Edwards, Hollins | 0 2 6 |
| Benjamin Wainwright, Grosvenor-street | 1 0 0 |
| George Lee, High-street | 0 2 6 |
| William Knowles, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Abraham Robinson, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Hyde, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Adshead, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Tongue, Sett-street | 0 2 6 |
| John Hurat, High-street | 0 5 0 |
| John Howard, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Miles Smith, Bridge-street | 0 2 6 |
| Matthew Whalley, do. | 0 5 0 |
| T. S. Taylor, Grosvenor-street | 1 0 0 |
| James Woolley, High-street | 0 5 0 |
| John Kenworthy, do. | 0 2 6 |
| James Bower, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Samuel Oldham, do. | 0 3 0 |
| Daniel Thackeray, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Thackeray, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Miss Ann Sampson, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Ogden, The Kenyons, Dukinfield | 0 5 0 |
| Small Sums | 0 6 0 |
| Robert Platt | 150 0 0 |

Mr. Platt's Workmen.

| | |
|------------------|--------|
| John Brooks | 1 10 0 |
| William Conway | 1 0 0 |
| Abel Brooks | 0 10 0 |
| G. Platt Conway | 0 5 0 |
| John Firth | 0 6 0 |
| William Norton | 0 6 0 |
| Thomas Ireland | 0 7 0 |
| Daniel Lyne | 0 5 0 |
| John Nield | 0 5 0 |
| George Nield | 0 7 0 |
| James Bardsley | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Mercer | 0 5 0 |
| Benjamin Hurat | 0 5 0 |
| James Mercer | 0 5 0 |
| Rodger Cain | 0 5 0 |
| Joseph Williams | 0 5 0 |
| George Chadwick | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Chadwick | 0 5 0 |
| William Buckley | 0 5 0 |
| James Kinder | 0 5 0 |
| Roderick Round | 0 6 0 |
| John Manly | 0 4 6 |
| Henry Russell | 0 3 6 |
| John Kinder | 0 3 6 |
| Samuel Kinder | 0 3 6 |
| Michael Walling | 0 4 0 |
| James Knott | 0 3 6 |
| John Knott | 0 3 6 |
| Jonathan Maraden | 0 3 6 |
| James Thompson | 0 3 6 |
| Thomas O'Neil | 0 3 6 |
| Ralph Barber | 0 3 6 |
| Patrick M'Ginnis | 0 3 6 |
| Benjamin Bewell | 0 4 0 |
| James Lloyd | 0 3 0 |
| Allen Shaw | 0 3 6 |
| Patrick O'Toole | 0 2 6 |
| Joel Gee | 0 2 6 |
| Alfred Birch | 0 3 6 |
| John Jones | 0 3 6 |
| John Craig | 0 3 6 |
| Joseph Canway | 0 3 6 |
| Abraham Harrop | 0 3 6 |
| Thomas Keating | 0 3 6 |
| Small Sums | 0 3 6 |

Leigh, near Manchester.

Holmfirth, near Huddersfield, Sixth Remittance.

Halifax, Fifth Remittance.

Pudsey, near Leeds

Warwickton, per Jno. McManis.

| | |
|---|---------|
| Isherwood and Hayes | £70 0 0 |
| W. C. Jones | 10 10 0 |
| Robert Nield | 5 0 0 |
| T. B. W. Sanderson | 5 0 0 |
| Charles Anderson, surgeon | 2 2 0 |
| — Jackson | 2 2 0 |
| Thomas H. Bamford | 1 0 0 |
| George Borthwick | 1 0 0 |
| Peter Cocker | 1 0 0 |
| Rev. Dr. Harrison | 1 1 0 |
| Joseph Austin | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas T. Hayes | 1 0 0 |
| Richard Greenough | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Cleworth | 1 0 0 |
| William Thorp | 1 0 0 |
| Hands employed in Messrs. Jones, Brothers, and Co.'s Mill | 5 0 0 |
| Hands employed by Messrs. Isherwood and Hayes | 2 2 6 |
| James Kippax, innkeeper | 1 0 0 |
| Charles Trotter, surgeon | 4 10 11 |
| Benjamin Bealey, do. | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend, per J. Beardsell and J. Mellor | 1 0 0 |
| Rev. John Cockin | 3 0 0 |
| Mrs. John Earnshaw, Dob | 1 0 0 |
| William Haigh, grocer | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend, per Isaac Beardsell, Holme | 0 10 0 |
| John Wyllie, schoolmaster | 0 10 0 |
| Joseph Hawkesworth, Newtown | 0 5 0 |
| Gamaliel Batty, butcher | 0 2 6 |
| Mrs. Wm. Child, Prickledon | 0 2 6 |
| Matthew Bower, Hinchliff-mill | 1 0 0 |
| James Gardener and Jonas Booth, Holme | 1 0 0 |
| Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Woodhead, Ridings, Thongsbridge, near Huddersfield | 3 0 0 |
| John Mellor, jun., Wooddale | 1 1 0 |
| George Gartside, dyer | 3 0 0 |
| Christopher Moorhouse, White Hart Inn | 1 0 0 |
| Small Sums | 0 1 0 |
| Thomas Taylor and Son, Hays Mill, Ovensden, near | 50 0 0 |
| J. and J. Houldsworth | 10 0 0 |
| William Thompson, solicitor | 2 0 0 |
| John Ingham, Waterhouse-street | 1 1 0 |
| S. Smith, Bedford-street | 1 0 0 |
| Henry Rayner, Little John Mill, Brighouse, near | 1 0 0 |
| Alexander Dunbar | 1 1 0 |
| A Friend | 1 0 0 |
| Joshua Blakey, in addition to £5 before | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend | 1 0 0 |
| William Conway | 0 10 0 |
| William Walsh | 0 10 0 |
| Samuel Johnson | 0 5 0 |
| James Bintliffe | 0 2 8 |
| "One who intends to give again" | 0 0 4 |
| John Varley, Stanningley, near Leeds | 50 0 0 |
| William Musgrave | 8 8 0 |
| Samuel Musgrave } Town-end | 1 1 0 |
| Simeon Musgrave | 1 1 0 |
| Richard Elward, Roker-lane | 5 0 0 |
| Charles Moss, Marsh | 5 0 0 |
| William Walton, Little-moor | 1 1 0 |
| John A. Hinings, Lowtown | 1 1 0 |
| John Walton, Fartown | 1 1 0 |
| Thomas Lawson, Lowtown | 1 1 0 |
| Joseph Walker, Lane-end | 1 1 0 |
| William Halliday, Crimble | 1 0 0 |
| John Halliday, Lowtown | 1 1 0 |
| Christopher Verity, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Thomas Waterhouse, Greenside | 1 1 0 |
| Richard Womersley, Marsh | 1 1 0 |
| Benjn. Sharp, Liddithill | 1 1 0 |
| Samuel Sharp, do. | 1 1 0 |
| William Sharp, do. | 1 1 0 |
| James Walker, Lowtown | 1 0 0 |
| William Roberts Hinings, do. | 1 1 0 |
| William Harrison, Delf-hill | 1 1 0 |
| John Walker, do. | 1 1 0 |
| William Proctor, Crimble | 1 1 0 |
| John Tunnicliffe, sen., do. | 1 1 0 |
| Joshua Fearnley, Kent | 1 1 0 |
| Joshua Harrison, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Jonathan Thripletor, Crimble | 1 1 0 |
| John Holdsworth and Sons, Roker-lane | 1 1 0 |
| William Wade, Chapel-town | 1 1 0 |
| Charles Lockwood, Bank-house | 1 0 0 |
| John Cooper, Greenside | 1 1 0 |
| John Boyd, jun., Fartown | 1 0 0 |
| James Beaumont, Chapel-town-top | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Cawthra, Green-top | 1 0 0 |
| Henry Carr, jun., Little-moor | 1 0 0 |
| Benjamin Gant, Lowtown | 1 0 0 |
| Hugh Hinings, Manor House-street | 1 1 0 |
| John Fearnley, jun., Crimble | 1 0 0 |
| John Huggan, Crimble | 1 0 0 |
| John Baker, Church-lane | 1 0 0 |
| George Waring, Chapel-town | 1 1 0 |
| Joseph Kinsley, Robin-lane | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Blackburn, Waterloo | 1 1 0 |
| Joseph Wilson, Fartown | 1 0 0 |
| James Blackburn, Greenside | 1 0 0 |
| John Vickers, jun., Stanningley, near | 2 0 0 |
| Samuel Varley, Stanningley, near | 1 0 0 |
| J. Hartley, at Mr. Varley's, Stanningley, near | 1 0 0 |
| John Mitchell, do., do. | 1 2 0 |
| Joseph Harrison, do., do. | 1 2 6 |
| Woolen Weavers, do., do. | 1 1 6 |
| Woolen Spinners, do., do. | 1 2 0 |
| Long Wool Sorters, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Overlooker and Workmen, Crawshaw-mill | 1 12 6 |
| Overlooker and Workmen, Clift-mill | 1 14 0 |
| Samuel Webster, clerk, Waterloo-mill | 1 1 0 |
| Overlooker and Workmen, do. | 1 1 0 |
| John Webster, clerk, Gibraltar-mill | 1 0 0 |
| Overlooker and Workmen, Gibraltar-mill | 1 0 0 |
| Overlooker and Workmen, Allenbridge-mill | 1 8 6 |
| Overlooker and Workmen, Albion-mill | 1 13 6 |
| Overlooker and Workmen, Union-mill | 1 4 0 |
| Overlooker and Stubbers, Priestley-mill | 1 2 0 |
| Engineer and Fullers, do. | 1 1 6 |
| William Greenwood, Roker-lane | 1 0 0 |
| William Musgrave, Crimble | 0 10 0 |
| To unship Bobby if he don't mend his manners | 0 10 0 |
| Benjamin Asquith, Fartown | 0 10 0 |
| Christopher Halliday, sen., Lowtown | 0 10 0 |
| George Kitchen, Lane-end | 0 10 0 |
| George Webster, Lowtown | 0 10 0 |
| John Carr, Little-moor | 0 10 0 |
| Anonymous | 0 10 0 |
| X. Y. Z. | 0 10 0 |
| George Bretherick, jun., Lowtown | 0 5 0 |
| Matthew Exley, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Emanuel Brown, Liddithill | 0 5 0 |
| Henry Fearnley, Lowtown | 0 2 6 |
| James Halliday, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Jesse Oddy, do. | 0 2 6 |
| A Man who has nine Children and cannot fill their bellies | 0 2 6 |
| Joshua Webster, Lowtown | 0 2 6 |
| J. B. Grice, Bewsey-street | 1 1 0 |
| John Wolstencroft, Horse-market | 0 2 6 |
| William Pierpoint, do. | 1 0 0 |
| James Edleston, Warwick-street | 2 0 0 |
| John M'Dowell, Church-street | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Fiddes, Horse-market | 1 0 0 |
| John Gaddes, Golden-square | 1 0 0 |
| G. W. Hardy, Bewsey-street | 1 1 0 |

Ashton-under-Lyne.

Huddersfield.

| | |
|--|---------|
| John Ledward | £70 0 0 |
| A Friend, per George Horabottom | 0 5 0 |
| John Siddall, at Messrs. Reyners | 1 0 0 |
| Collected by a Lady | 0 11 6 |
| John W. Goodall | 2 0 0 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 |
| A Challenge for a Sweetheart | 0 2 6 |
| Robert Hunter, Hodgson-street | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend to the League | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend to the League | 0 2 6 |
| Miss Smith, Dukinfield | 0 2 6 |
| Edward Whitehead, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Ottwell Worrall | 1 0 0 |
| A Lady, Henry-square | 1 1 0 |
| Aaron Andrew | 1 1 0 |
| Thomas Hurst, 8, Katharine-street | 1 0 0 |
| Stephen Andrew | 1 1 0 |
| A Friend | 0 4 0 |
| John Johnson, reedmaker | 1 1 0 |
| Joseph Kershaw, Hurst | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Dyson, Duke-street | 0 5 0 |
| John Brooks, sen. | 1 1 0 |
| A Lady | 1 0 0 |
| Edward Winstanley, Ryecroft | 1 0 0 |
| W. Lilley | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 |
| Geo. Andrew, Mossley, near Oldham | 1 1 0 |
| A Lady | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend | 1 0 0 |
| A Handloom Weaver | 0 2 6 |
| My Sweetheart | 0 10 0 |
| Thomas Bentley, Welbeck-street | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend | 0 5 0 |
| J. Schofield, jun., Audenshaw, nr. Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| A Chartist, Droyloden | 0 2 6 |
| B. Goodfellow, engineer, Hyde, near Manchester | 10 0 0 |
| William Outhwaite | 1 1 0 |
| Rev. Jonathan Sutcliffe | 1 1 0 |
| Mrs. Sutcliffe | 1 1 0 |
| Robert Bardsley | 0 5 0 |
| Matthew Lodge, sawyer | 0 2 6 |
| Misses Kershaw | 1 0 0 |
| A Closer | 0 12 0 |
| John Hallworth | 0 5 0 |
| Orlando Oldham's Workmen, Geecroze, near Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| Orlando Oldham's Workmen, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Orlando Oldham, do., do. | 5 0 0 |
| John Hyam, Dukinfield-hall | 1 0 0 |
| Jas. Brooks, jun., Geecroze, near Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| A Lady | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 |
| Joseph Ryder, dresser | 0 2 6 |
| Henry Newton | 1 3 0 |
| A Friend | 0 5 0 |
| John Cheetham, Stalybridge | 1 1 0 |
| "Big Fiddle," Hyde | 0 2 6 |
| John Garlick | 0 3 6 |
| John Linley | 0 2 6 |
| William Andrews | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 |
| A Lady | 1 0 0 |
| Mrs. K. Moorhouse | 1 1 0 |
| Two young Ladies | 0 4 0 |
| Robert Newton, Katharine-street | 1 0 0 |
| Mrs. Newton, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Clegg, Hurat | 0 2 6 |
| Frederick Tinker, Hyde, near Manchester | 1 0 0 |
| John Ogden, Birch-lane, Dukinfield | 0 5 0 |
| William Buckley, attorney | 2 0 0 |
| An Old Woman | 0 5 0 |
| Geo. Shaw | 0 10 0 |
| A Friend | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 |
| John Crompton, Stalybridge | 0 2 6 |
| Jas. Cartwright, Dukinfield Hall | 5 0 0 |
| E. S. | 0 5 0 |
| John France, Ryecroft | 0 2 6 |
| Robert Jamieson | 1 0 0 |
| Amicus | 5 0 0 |
| Samuel Cowley | 5 3 0 |
| Wright Cartwright, Hooley-hill, nr. Manchest. | 1 0 0 |
| Job Cartwright, do., do. | 1 1 0 |
| Thomas Collier, Dukinfield | 1 0 0 |
| Josh. Tinker, Ryecroft | 0 5 0 |
| Isaiah Crowther, at Messrs. Reyners | 1 0 0 |
| Robt. Wood, surgeon | 2 0 0 |
| Small sums | 0 11 9 |
| William Leadbeater and Co. | 10 0 0 |
| Matthew T. Jessop, Lascelles Hall, near | 0 10 0 |
| Abraham Bykes, Lepton | 0 11 0 |
| John Jessop, do. | 0 10 0 |
| — Clay, at Mr. Clayton's, Strangeways, Manchester | 5 0 0 |
| Edward Crooks, at Richard Dewhurst's, Aspley | 1 10 0 |
| James Hunter, do., do. | 1 1 0 |
| George Cockin and Son, Temperance Hotel, Cross Church-street | 1 0 0 |
| John Smith, Marsh, near | 3 0 0 |
| John Mellor, Paddock, near | 2 0 0 |
| Dani. Taylor, Lockwood, near | 3 0 0 |
| Clark Whitley | 1 0 0 |
| John Heywood, Cherry Tree, near | 1 0 0 |
| Charles Hall, Longwood, near | 2 0 0 |
| Thomas Shaw, Goll-side, Lockwood, near | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Ainley, Golcar, near | 5 0 0 |
| Joseph Quarumby, Clayhouse, Golcar, near | 1 0 0 |
| John Robinson, Honley, near | 20 0 0 |
| Ily. Scott | 1 1 0 |
| Wm. Dyson, manufacturer, Golcar, near | 2 0 0 |
| James Fawcett, tinner, King-street | 1 1 0 |
| James Hawkesworth, Hoyland-swain, near Barnsley | 1 0 0 |
| Geo. Mallinson and Sons | 100 0 0 |
| Benjamin Thornton, New-street | 5 0 0 |
| Thomas Wrigley, jun., at Rosbuck's, King-st. | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Haigh, solicitor | 1 1 0 |
| Geo. Carver, stationer | 1 0 0 |
| Henry Bottomley, South Crosland, near | 1 1 0 |
| William Briggs, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Charles Holdroyd, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Stead, do., do. | 1 0 0 |
| Matthew Hirst, Queen-street | 2 0 0 |
| Benj. Lockwood, Cowlersley, Milnsbridge, nr. | 1 0 0 |
| Mrs. Pearson, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Green, do. | 1 0 0 |
| R. Winterbottom, 35, Commercial-street | 1 0 0 |
| Edmund Leach, Longwood, near | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Garside, Hole House, Linthwaite, near | 1 0 0 |
| James Ramsden, Ramsden Mill, near | 1 0 0 |
| James Baxter, Coach and Horses Inn, Linthwaite, near | 1 0 0 |
| John Sykes, Heywoods, do. | 1 0 0 |
| George Armitage, High House, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Bottomley, Longlands, Blithwaite, nr. | 1 0 0 |
| Mrs. John Farrer, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Samuel Whiteley, Milnsbridge, near | 1 0 0 |
| Mary Gill, do. | 0 2 6 |
| John Farrand, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Charles Unsworth, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Joseph Walker, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Morley, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Entwistle, grocer, Church-street | 2 0 0 |
| James Hindle, joiner | 1 0 0 |
| John Harrison, engraver | 1 0 0 |
| Alexander Christie | 1 0 0 |
| Robert Tasker, blacksmith | 1 0 0 |

| | | | | | | | | | | | | | | |
|-----------------------------------|---|----|----|---|----------------------|---|-----|----|-------------------------------|-------------------------------|--|----|----|---|
| Derby. | William Christie, Panmure-street | 22 | 2 | 0 | Renny, Sons, and Co. | 45 | 0 | 0 | George Hamilton, manufacturer | 25 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | James Hamilton, manufacturer | 2 | 0 | 0 | | Francis Webster | 2 | 0 | | 0 | James Lord, do., Alder's Mill | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Wigan, Fourth Remittance. | Thomas Douglas, 8, King-street | 2 | 0 | 0 | Arbroath. | W. F. L. Carnegie of Boysack | 5 | 0 | 0 | George Hamilton, manufacturer | 25 | 0 | 0 | |
| | William Moyes, ironmonger | 2 | 0 | 0 | | Garalde and Mayall, cotton spinners, Union Mill, Greenacres, near Manchester | 40 | 0 | 0 | | Rev. William Frewin, Underbank | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Scarborough. | James Russell, Gas Works | 2 | 0 | 0 | Falkirk. | Samuel Riley, draper, Market-place | 5 | 0 | 0 | | George Hamilton, manufacturer | 25 | 0 | 0 |
| | William Haller, Weigate | 2 | 0 | 0 | | James Butterworth, draper, Greenacres Moor, near Manchester | 20 | 0 | 0 | James Lee, innkeeper | | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| Infracombe, per Captain Kennerly. | David Low, Slater, Reform-street | 2 | 0 | 0 | Falkirk. | Messrs. Whitaker, cotton spinners, Royton, nr John Holden and Brothers, cotton manufacturers, Holdenfold, do. | 10 | 0 | 0 | George Hamilton, manufacturer | | 25 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Kirkland, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 | | Geo. Holden and Son, cotton manufacturers, Royton-lane, near | 20 | 0 | 0 | | James Mayoch | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bradford, Fifth Remittance. | William Scott, architect, 18, High-street | 1 | 1 | 0 | Falkirk. | John Chadwick, cotton spinner, Rhodes Mill, Greenacres, near Manchester | 10 | 0 | 0 | | John Moss | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | David McLeish, manufacturer | 1 | 1 | 0 | | Christians and Sons, cotton spinners, Clough Mill, Crompton, near do. | 10 | 0 | 0 | | Hugh Horrocks | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | Andrew Wilson, Barrack-street | 1 | 1 | 0 | Falkirk. | Joseph Baxter, do., Hollinwood, near do. | 5 | 0 | 0 | | Joseph Welch | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Aberdeen, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 | | Dyson and Brothers, do., Greenacres Moor, near do. | 10 | 0 | 0 | | John Wood | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | J. T. Fairweather, Murraysgate | 1 | 1 | 0 | Falkirk. | William Hall, grocer, Manchester-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | William Ainsworth | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Scott, Murraysgate | 1 | 1 | 0 | | Thomas Holden, cotton spinner, Shiloh, Royton, near | 4 | 0 | 0 | | James Hargreaves | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | Andrew Low, Park-place | 1 | 1 | 0 | Falkirk. | John Knott, tin plate worker, King-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Kay and Fletcher, dyers, Radcliffe | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| | Anderson and Cathcart | 1 | 0 | 0 | | David Walton, cotton dealer, Greenacres Moor, near Manchester | 10 | 0 | 0 | | Mrs. Hornaby, innkeeper, Radcliffe-bridge | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | Workers at Baxter (William Wright) | 1 | 0 | 0 | Falkirk. | Thos. Mulladew, cotton manufacturer, Moor-side Mill, near do. | 5 | 0 | 0 | | James Button, grocer, Radcliffe | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Brothers, and Co.'s power loom factory | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Joseph Hyams, bookkeeper, Priory-street | 2 | 0 | 0 | | Kills Greenhaigh, innkeeper, Radcliffe-bridge | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | J. Gilbert, 2 Vanit | 1 | 0 | 0 | Falkirk. | John Hanson, currier, do., do., near do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | John Rayner, druggist, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | George M. Steele, Reform-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Rubin Cooper, grocer, Market-place | 2 | 0 | 0 | | Robert Hooth, manufacturer, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | William Scott, 80, Murraysgate | 1 | 0 | 0 | Falkirk. | Jas. Lees, cotton spinner, Greenacres Moor, New Earth Mill, near Manchester | 4 | 0 | 0 | | John Davenport, tailor, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Boyd, Sugarhouse-rynd | 1 | 0 | 0 | | James Schofield, do., Bankside Mill | 2 | 0 | 0 | | James Buckley, manufacturer, Stand-lane | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | James Todd, manufacturer, Seagate | 1 | 0 | 0 | Falkirk. | James Stott, grocer, Edge-lane, near | 2 | 0 | 0 | | Thomas Farrar, do. | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Baxter, Bell-street, Chapel-shade | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Abraham Evans, Manchester-street | 2 | 0 | 0 | | James Taylor, do. | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | Free-Trade | 1 | 0 | 0 | Falkirk. | Thos. Chadwick, cotton spinner, Royton, near Manchester | 2 | 0 | 0 | | Wm. Henry Taylor, do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| | Robert Toth, Dock-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | John Buckley, waste dealer, Greenacres, near Manchester | 1 | 5 | 0 | | Richard Ellerback, cotton spinner, do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | J. Couvenaut, 20, Castle-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | Falkirk. | Joseph Wainwright, cotton spinner, King-st. | 5 | 0 | 0 | | Walker Allen, manufacturer, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Wm. Martin, Trades-lane, Calendering-court | 1 | 0 | 0 | | John Frith, bookkeeper, High-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Peter Scholes, grocer, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | John Methven, St. Clement's-lane | 1 | 0 | 0 | Falkirk. | Samuel Grindrod, collector of taxes, Greenacres Moor, near Manchester | 1 | 0 | 0 | | James Snape, auctioneer, Stand-lane | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | G. Brown, at Baxter, Brothers, & Co's office | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Edward Wright, bookbinder, Yorkshire-street | 2 | 0 | 0 | | William Hardman, butcher, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | C. Nicholson, brushmaker, Murraysgate | 1 | 0 | 0 | Falkirk. | Joseph Mellor, shoemaker, High-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Robert Hamer, warper, do. | 0 | 4 | 6 |
| | Malcolm McLean, Scouring-burn | 1 | 0 | 0 | | John Mansfield, waste dealer, Austerlands, near Lees | 1 | 0 | 0 | | J. Hall, saddler, Beases-o'-th'-Barn | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | R. G. Holden, Seagate | 1 | 0 | 0 | Falkirk. | Samuel and James Meyall, cotton spinners, Greenacres Moor, near Manchester | 5 | 0 | 0 | | John Sykes, Beech-grove | 25 | 0 | 0 |
| | Rev. J. R. McGavin | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Thomas Kerahaw, agent, &c., High-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Wm. Smith and Sons, Cookridge-street | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | A Friend | 1 | 0 | 0 | Falkirk. | Isaac Taylor, cotton spinner, Greenacres Moor, near Manchester | 1 | 0 | 0 | | James Swift, Low Fold-mill, Leylands | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Peter Watson, Cradle-mills | 0 | 10 | 6 | | John Buckley, spinner, do., do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | John Armistead, Springfield-mount | 21 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | William Walker, Reform-street | 0 | 10 | 6 | Falkirk. | Isaac Wild, cotton spinner, do., do. | 2 | 0 | 0 | | Joseph Isherwood, sen., Wortley, near | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Anderson, writer, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 | | Edmund Clegg, pawnbroker, Greenacres, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Wm. Walker, Black Lion, Mill-hill | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | Robert Whyte, High-street | 0 | 10 | 0 | Falkirk. | Mrs. Joseph Wainwright, King-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Abraham Naylor, 57, Basinghall-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Smith, Laker, Seagate | 0 | 10 | 0 | | Mrs. Joseph Mellor, High-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | H. W. Walker, Briggate | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | William Beharril, manufacturer, Prince's-st. | 0 | 10 | 0 | Falkirk. | Peter Roscoe, wheelwright, Greenacres Moor, near Manchester | 1 | 0 | 0 | | H. H. Stansfield, Headingley | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| | Jas. Lennox, at Edward Baxter's, calenderer | 0 | 7 | 6 | | Alexander Taylor, grocer, do., do. (2nd sub.) | 4 | 0 | 0 | | Mrs. H. H. Stansfield, do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | Anonymous | 0 | 7 | 1 | Falkirk. | James Taylor, Vale-mill, Crompton, near do. | 1 | 1 | 0 | | W. B. Holdsworth and Co., Hunslet | 25 | 0 | 0 |
| | Nemo | 0 | 5 | 0 | | James Riley, grocer, Market-place | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Isaac Thompson, Knotrop | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | W. A. Fleming, Chamberlain's-office, High-st. | 0 | 5 | 0 | Falkirk. | Samuel Mason, Albion Inn | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Ben. Mellor, Accommodation-road, Hunslet | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | Francis Walker, Reform-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | | Richard Pilton, Spinner, Bale-mill, Crompton, near Manchester | 1 | 0 | 0 | | James Ogle, Lady-lane | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | Arthur Hegg, High-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | Falkirk. | George Travis, grocer, Manchester-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Peter Kettlewell, Briggate | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| | Jas. Cunningham, Wallace-mills | 0 | 5 | 0 | | William Richardson, Lees-road, Greenacres, near Manchester | 1 | 0 | 0 | | W. and T. Kettlewell, do. | 6 | 6 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | John Toth, 95, Perth-road | 0 | 5 | 0 | Falkirk. | Richard Marsh, Greenacres Moor, near do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Friends to the League, Fountain Inn, Armley-road, Wortley | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | James McLagan, Ward-mill | 0 | 5 | 0 | | William Heginbottom, cotton manufacturer, Medlock-mill, Greenacres, near do. | 5 | 0 | 0 | | John Naylor, Low-road, Hunslet | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | John Coupar, baker, Prince's-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | Falkirk. | A. Milne, waste dealer, Greenacres Moor, nr. do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Provost Adam | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | George M'Donald, 18, Union-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | | Thos. Seville, do., Sandy-lane, Royton, nr. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Wm. Dobbie, High-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | Miss Taylor, Albert-court | 0 | 5 | 0 | Falkirk. | Thos. Travis, cotton spinner, Highlands, Royton | 1 | 0 | 0 | | John Sutherland, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | Dr. Lyall, 37, Tay-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | | Joseph Travis, do., do., do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Robert Young, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | James Denholm, Royal Hotel | 0 | 5 | 0 | Falkirk. | William Travis, do., Holdenfold, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | James Russell, draper, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | William Ogilvie, 33, Cowgate | 0 | 5 | 0 | | John Heap, do., Top of Fold, do. | 2 | 0 | 0 | | William Ure, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | J. M. Beattie, 31, Reform-street | 0 | 5 | 0 | Falkirk. | I. Seville & Sons, do., Union Mill, Royton, nr. | 10 | 0 | 0 | | John Smith, Brickfield | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Andrew Guthrie, 4, Murraysgate | 0 | 5 | 0 | | Francis Pitt, painter, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Wm. Wyse, baker | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | Captain Karaholm, per J. W. Milln | 0 | 5 | 0 | Falkirk. | William Taylor, surgeon, Crofthead, do. | 3 | 3 | 0 | | Joseph Gartshore | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | J. Stewart, 39, High-street | 0 | 3 | 0 | | — Kerahaw, do., do., do. | 1 | 1 | 0 | | John Young, Grahamston | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | Wm. Laird, 88, Nethergate | 0 | 2 | 6 | Falkirk. | John Kay, shopkeeper, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Andrew Neilson, farmer in Both Kennar, near | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | D. McGregor, 4, Perth-road | 0 | 2 | 6 | | James Ashworth, cotton spinner, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | H. W. Cochran | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | D. Dewar | 0 | 2 | 6 | Falkirk. | George Ershaw, do., Dogford Mill, do. | 5 | 0 | 0 | | Robert Currier, High-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Smith, 108, Murraysgate | 0 | 2 | 6 | | James Bentley, news agent, Royton, near | 1 | 0 | 0 | | John Smith, writer | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | John Clarke, British Hotel | 0 | 2 | 6 | Falkirk. | William Barker, Springhill Iron Works, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Wm. Gillespie, sen., draper | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Blair, Eastern-bank | 0 | 2 | 6 | | John Travis and Brothers, cotton manufacturers, Laley Brook, near | 15 | 0 | 0 | | Dr. Esop | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | John Duffus, 21, Greenmarket | 0 | 2 | 6 | Falkirk. | John Fletcher, cake baker, Grove-place, Greenacres, near Manchester | 0 | 2 | 6 | | Rev. William Steel | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Watson, 21, High-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | | William Taylor, auctioneer, Royton, near | 0 | 10 | 0 | | Charles Jeffrey, bookeller | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 | Falkirk. | John Clegg, pawnbroker, Manchester-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| | A. B. Saunders, Meadow-street | 0 | 2 | 6 | | John Collinge, Old Soldier Inn, Greenacres, near Manchester | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Thomas Wilson, Grangemouth | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | D. W. McDonald, 17, Overgate | 0 | 2 | 6 | Falkirk. | Dickinson and Sharples, glaziers, Greenacres Moor, near do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Peter Wilkie, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Adam Duffus, 75, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | | Thomas Collett, Three Horse Shoes, do., do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Peter Feely, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | Geo. Davidson, Gas Works | 0 | 2 | 6 | Falkirk. | William Buckley, innkeeper, Spencer's Arms, Greenacres, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Alexander Thomson, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Wm. Mitchell, 29, Dainfield-walk | 0 | 2 | 6 | | John Jackson, druggist, Greenacres Moor, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Andrew Cowie, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | Robert McLachlan, Hawk-hill | 0 | 2 | 6 | Falkirk. | E. Dunksley, surgeon, do., do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | | Alexander Lawrie, Brightons | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Jas. Smith, Ellangown | 0 | 2 | 6 | | Joseph Gilliam | 100 | 0 | 0 | | R. Taylor, Redding | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | Small sums | 0 | 14 | 0 | Falkirk. | Brierley, Brothers, Union-street | 15 | 0 | 0 | | Wm. Wilson, Banknoch, Denny, Stirlingshire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Wm. Ainsworth, sen., Birkett Bank | 3 | 0 | 0 | | Mrs. Brierley, Grosvenor-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | John Wilson, Bantaskine by | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | Alexander Wood, gardener, Wigan-lane | 1 | 0 | 0 | Falkirk. | Lees and Mills, cotton manufacturers, Waterhead Mill, Greenacres Moor, near Manch. | 40 | 0 | 0 | | James Hosie | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | Thos. Leech, School-lane | 1 | 0 | 0 | | James Greaves, do., do., do. | 30 | 0 | 0 | | Thomas Johnston, Redding | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | A Friend (second donation) | 1 | 0 | 0 | Falkirk. | Eli Lee, roller maker, do., do. | 10 | 0 | 0 | | Dr. Hamilton | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | An Operative's Mite | 0 | 5 | 0 | | Maraden and Collinge, spinners, Harsedge Mill | 20 | 0 | 0 | | R. Benny, Bonnybridge, Denny, Stirlingshire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | Free-Trade | 0 | 5 | 0 | Falkirk. | Thomas West, meter maker, Union-street | 5 | 0 | 0 | | Jas. Somerville, Glensyards, Denny Loanhead, Stirlingshire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | A Friend | 0 | 4 | 0 | | Benjamin Wilson, Yorkshire-street | 5 | 0 | 0 | | Alex. Cairns, Bonnybridge, Denny, Stirlingshire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Lancashire. | A Free-Trade | 0 | 5 | 0 | Falkirk. | Wm. Greenwood, corn dealer, Greenacres Moor, near Manchester | 0 | 5 | 0 | Small sums | 0 | 7 | 0 | |
| | A Working-man | 0 | 1 | 0 | | George Knight, beer-seller, do., do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | | |
| Bury, Lancashire. | J. Hickney | 5 | 0 | 0 | Falkirk. | George Platt, do., do., do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | | |
| | William Rowntree | 2 | 0 | 0 | | John Greenwood, corn dealer, do., do. | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | | | |
| Bury, Lancashire. | Joseph Tindall | 1 | 0 | 0 | Falkirk. | Henry Hogg-on, agent, &c., Shaw-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | | | |
| | Henry Etherington | 1 | 0 | 0 | | John Hiral, printer, Church-street | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | | | |
| Bury, Lancashire. | Henry Hopkins | 1 | 0 | 0 | Falkirk. | James Hargreaves, drugst, High-street | 2 | 0 | 0 | | | | | |

delivered an address pregnant with facts, which produced a powerful effect on the meeting.

Mr. R. R. R. Moore followed, and, after an eloquent speech, proceeded with characteristic tact to take up the subscription. Amongst the sums enumerated were—The Jarrow Chemical Company, 25*l.*; Christian Althusen, 20*l.*; and a second donation of 5*l.*; George Crawshaw, Esq., 11*l.*; and afterwards 5*l.* more; J. Lee and Co., 20*l.*; J. Scarth, Esq., 10*l.*; R. B. Sanderson, Esq., 10*l.*; R. Ormston, Esq., 10*l.*; a Leaguer, 10*l.*; Loah, Wilson, and Bell, 10*l.*; Charles Rayne and Co., 10*l.*; H. E. A., 10*l.*; J. Shield, jun., Esq., 5*l.*; Captain Weatherley, 5*l.*; J. Watson, 5*l.*; J. Borthwick, 5*l.*; James Dale, 5*l.*; Jos. Laycock and Co., 5*l.*; Stephen Lowrey, 5*l.*; Alderman Potcock, 5*l.*; William Armstrong, 5*l.*; J. Berkely, 5*l.*; Sir John Fife, 10*l.*; and the Sheriff of Newcastle, 3*l.* 3*s.* Numerous subscriptions of smaller amount, varying from 2*l.* 2*s.* down to 4*d.* were handed in. The total sum at last announced was 461*l.* 16*s.*

Mr. S. DONKIN, of Bywell, addressed the meeting as a farmer, and proposed the following resolution:—

"That the grateful thanks of the meeting be given to the members of the deputation, not only for their attendance here, but for their long, protracted, and self-denying services in the cause of commercial freedom."

Colonel THOMPSON returned thanks in the name of the deputation, and noticed the gratification he had derived from his recent visit to Scotland, the inhabitants of which country he eulogized in these pithy terms:—"They are an intelligent and a fine race, these Scotch, believe me."

Mr. DONKIN then proposed a vote of thanks to the Chairman; and, in doing so, took a brief review of the deputation's reception at several of the principal towns in Scotland, where, he said, the zeal of the municipal authorities in favour of Free Trade presented a strong contrast to the coolness of official men in England, however warm friends or partisans they might have been in a private capacity.

The vote was carried by acclamation.

The CHAIRMAN having responded, the meeting broke up.

Besides the mayor and deputation, the following were among the highly respectable company assembled on this interesting occasion:—John Cookson, Esq.; William Cookson, Esq. (sheriff); Christian Althusen, Esq.; George Straker, Esq.; Rev. J. Pringle, Rev. Jos. M'Alister, Jonathan Priestman, Esq.; Stephen Lowrey, Esq.; Charles Rayne, Esq.; John Henderson and Nicholas Oliver, Esqrs., of Durham; T. M. Greenhow, Esq.; Captain Weatherley, W. L. Harle, Esq.; G. Crawshaw, Esq.; Mr. S. Donkin, of Bywell, &c. &c.—Abridged from the Tyne Mercury.

COALBROOKDALE, Jan. 24.—A splendid Free-Trade tea-festival was held at this place last evening, at which Messrs. A. Prentice and W. J. Massie, of Manchester, attended as a deputation from the Anti-Corn-Law League. The lecture-room, in which the meeting took place, was tastefully and beautifully ornamented with evergreens, artificial flowers, &c.; and, when filled with company, presented an animated and striking appearance. The different tables were bountifully supplied, free of cost, by the several ladies who kindly presided; and no demonstration in this neighbourhood has ever been attended by a more respectable audience, or graced with a larger number of the fair sex, than on the present occasion. During tea several appropriate airs were played by a very efficient band. On the removal of the tea equipage, on the motion of R. Darby, Esq., which was carried unanimously, Abraham Darby, Esq., was called to the chair, and opened the business in a very appropriate speech. The several resolutions, condemnatory of monopoly and approving of Free Trade, were proposed and seconded by Messrs. Weare, Millington, Isaacs, Heaford, Evans, and W. H. Darby, supported in a masterly manner by Messrs. Prentice, Massie, and Pinnegan, and carried without a single dissentient. Although the inhabitants of this district subscribed upwards of £350 at a meeting held about three weeks ago, yet an addition of upwards of £67 was made to the sum then raised, which will most probably be further increased. The greatest enthusiasm pervaded the meeting, and the determination which was evinced will, it is to be hoped, have a very beneficial effect in this neighbourhood. At the conclusion thanks were voted and carried by acclamation to the ladies for their kind assistance and support, and to Messrs. Prentice and Massie for their able exposure of monopoly.

* * We refer to our Supplement for reports of the several meetings held in Scotland, Manchester, and Liverpool. The great length of our Subscription List, and of the meeting at Covent-Garden Theatre, of which we give a full and special report, renders necessary the postponement of several Reviews and other articles which we had prepared for publication.

LETTER FROM LORD KINNAIRD TO THE ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE.

Rossie Priory, Jan. 16, 1844.

MY DEAR SIR,—I must congratulate you on the letter you have received from Lord Westminster, whose declaration, in conjunction with that of Lord Spencer, in favour of the total abolition, will have the best effect, as I expect their example will be followed by other large landed proprietors, knowing, as I do, that there are many who agree with us, but are prevented coming forward, either from not liking to be thought to take a part in the agitation on the subject, or restrained by the trammels of the party, which is pledged to a fixed duty; the latter reason will not long prevent them, as the fixed-duty men are divided as to amount, and others, as Mr. Gibson Craig states, "if the infatuation of the agricultural interest shall prevent their perceiving the necessity of settling it within a short period, will abandon the maintenance of any duty at all." That what is called the agricultural interest will as a body agree, even if it were practicable, to a compromise, I do not believe; therefore, I look forward to the support of this section of the fixed-duty men very speedily. I find that many of the supporters of the present Government would prefer the total abolition to any further alteration in the Corn Laws, and I have no doubt that the best practical farmers will soon come round to the same opinion.

We had a most gratifying meeting at Perth, on Friday last, to hear the deputation from the League, presided over by Mr. Fox Maule—a convert from a fixed duty to a total repeal, the members present amounting to upwards of 2000, and amongst them a large proportion of farmers from the neighbourhood, who, though, not of course agreeing entirely with the speakers, yet listened most attentively to the arguments used, and the answers given to objections urged; and knowing, as I do, the intelligence of the farmers in this district, I augur the very best results, being satisfied that the statements and arguments used made a deep impression on their minds, as I never witnessed any meeting where the attention of every one seemed so intense during the four hours that the meeting lasted. The reception the deputation have met with in the north has been most enthusiastic.

As I said before, I expect that many will follow the example of Lord Westminster, and join the League, which, from its straightforward course and business-like manner of conducting its affairs, stands deservedly high in public estimation, uninjured by the venomous shafts of abuse and falsehood which have been levelled at it. Indeed the eyes of all Europe are upon it—the question everywhere being asked—how is the League getting on? as the people of every county are interested in our success. If I am spared in health and strength till after Easter, the members of the upper house shall not want an opportunity of speaking out, and relieving themselves from the obloquy felt so keenly by the Haddingtonshire farmers, attached to those for whose exclusive benefit these laws are said to be maintained.

Yours, faithfully,

KINNAIRD.

G. Wilson, Esq.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Press of matter again obliges us to omit our replies to correspondents.

TO ADVERTISERS.

We are obliged to postpone the insertion of several columns of Advertisements which we had in type, in order to make room for matter that would not admit of postponement.

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any person forwarding 3*s.* 3*d.* by Post-office order, to the Publisher, 67, Fleet-street, London, will have one quarter's copies of the LEAGUE forwarded by post on the days of publication. Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with J. Gadaby, Newall's-buildings, Manchester; and the LEAGUE may be had by order of any news-agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

GREAT LEAGUE MEETING.—THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN.—THE NEXT WEEKLY MEETING OF THE NATIONAL ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE, will be held in the THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN, on THURSDAY EVENING NEXT, the 1st of FEBRUARY.

GEORGE WILSON, Esq., will take the Chair precisely at Seven o'clock.

Cards of admission to the stage and boxes may be had on application after Monday next, at the Central Offices of the League, No. 67, Fleet-street.

The Cards of Registered Members of the League will, as heretofore, admit to the Pit and Galleries of the Theatre.

YOUNG MEN'S ANTI-MONOPOLY ASSOCIATION.—The Committee of the Metropolitan Young Men's Anti-Monopoly Association are requested to attend at the Committee-room, on MONDAY Evening next, the 9th inst., to take into consideration the best means of carrying out those objects for which the Association was originally formed. The Chair will be taken at half-past seven precisely.—Committee-room, Hart's Hotel, 159, Aldersgate-street.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, January 27, 1844.

"The vessel of the state drifts onward without rudder or compass;" the marines appear to have taken her out of the hands of the sailors, and to have chosen a fresh-water pilot, whose only principle of navigation is to keep close by the land. The poor pilot, seeing rocks ahead, and breakers under his lee, casts a longing eye seaward, and seems to wish for a chance of running free into the Trade-winds, instead of dodging about under the flaws and gusts alongshore. If danger comes suddenly, from his absurd steering, he dreads being pitched overboard by the sailors, whose League is formidable—if he quits the narrow seas, he fears an insurrection of the lubberly marines, who are beginning to prate about mutiny. At the very moment that the ship is about to make a new tack, none of the crew can conjecture to what point of the compass the pilot will turn her head; the marines hope that he will hug the land, but have secret misgivings because he has lately taken soundings, though the sailors say that this was only "bobbing for flats"; some of the young tars say that he has been treading on their corns, which they take to be a hint that he only waits for the turn of the tide; but the old blue jackets shake their heads, look anxiously at the sky, and talk of a pilot who "gathered the storm," which his flatterers said he "weathered," under whose steering the Old England had a narrow escape from the unfathomable pit. Doubt and distrust are spread from stem to stern, and the pilot, though once deemed a good hand at "spinning a yarn," has only once opened his oracular jaws, and was then delivered of a bull, so that those who used to cry up his wit as sterling are now forced to confess that it was mere Brummagem.

But this is a faint type of the condition of England at the present moment: there is uncertainty everywhere, and confidence nowhere; the tenant hesitates to conclude an agreement with his landlord; the retailer pauses in perplexity before sending an order to the wholesale dealer; the exporting merchant is perplexed by hostile tariffs; and the importer, instead of consulting commercial lists, finds that his best guide is a weather-almanac. In this state of doubt men interpret the uncertain sign of the times according to their own preconceived opinions, just as Brunswickers and Emancipators did in 1828. The Duke of Buccleuch, having duly paid his respects to "the father of lies," gives £100 to the protection of monopoly, but it is remembered that Sir Charles Wetherell was similarly permitted to parade ascendancy principles after the concessions of 1829 had been determined upon by the Cabinet; and the descendant of the moss-troopers, like the representative of the obstinates, is said to be allowed to exhibit his vagaries merely as a diversion. In truth they are well calculated to afford diversion from Caithness to Cornwall. The son-in-law of the Premier gives his adhesion to the monopolists, but it is whispered that the object of the scion of the haughty house of Jersey was to snub his matrimonial connections and disavow his race from the "parsley-bed." When the Premier's grandsire laid the foundation of an enormous fortune and stupid nickname for his family by printing calico with the parsley leaf, he little dreamed that a jest devised to amuse children would become a fixed truth in genealogy and the standing jest in the immaculate house of Jersey.

Some of the monopolists point to the landlord associations for the protection of rent, into which efforts are made to dupe or coerce the tenantry, and say "Here are pledges to the maintenance of the sliding scale;" but the wiser of the party aver that the sudden fit of speaking and writing which has seized on the lords of mortgaged acres is the worst symptom of their cause. "All would be well," they say, "if the blockheads could only be persuaded to hold their tongues; these are not the days when the cackling of geese will save the capitol." On the other hand, the Free-traders adopt the hortatory strains of the emancipating bard, and earnestly pray:—

"Write on, write on, ye barons dear,
Ye dukes write hard and fast!
The good we've sought for many a year
Your quills will bring at last.
Sure, never since the precious use
Of pen and ink began,
Did letters writ by fools produce
Such precious good to man!"

"Write, write, ye peers, nor stoop to style,
Nor beat for sense about;—
Squires, think not reason worth your while,
But still your nonsense spout.
Oh, ne'er since asses spoke before
Such miracles were done;
Make but a few such speeches more,
And Free Trade's cause is won!"

Verily, Moore's verses may serve as a prologue to the great drama of legislation now about to begin, whether it will turn out a farce, or a tragedy, or an extravaganza, compounded of both. The manager has collected so heterogeneous a company, has so studiously kept away his "stars" from rehearsals, and has made so many blunders with his suits, that we dare not attempt to speculate on the pieces he intends to produce, until after the rising of the curtain. We shall carefully watch the production, for we have strong evidence to prove that the House has been packed: indeed Sir Robert Peel's management has always been distinguished by a liberal distribution of "orders."

REPRESENTATION OF DUDLEY.—It is confidently stated that a new writ for this borough will be moved for immediately on the opening of the ensuing session, and the Anti-Corn-Law League are actively preparing for a vigorous attempt to secure the seat for a Free-Trader. Mr. Acland has arrived in the borough, and commenced the campaign by a course of four lectures on the Corn Laws. Several agents of the League are also actively at work distributing Anti-Corn-Law tracts amongst the electors and non-electors. Two candidates are spoken of as likely to contest the borough on the Free-Trade interest, and whichever of these gentlemen may be eventually chosen to stand, we can promise the monopolists that they will have a candidate of no ordinary character and influence to contend against. We shall soon be able to speak in plainer terms.—Worcester Chronicle.

AGRICULTURE.

GAME AND THE GAME LAWS!

What a chapter of folly, misery, and crime does the above title suggest! On Saturday last a human being was sacrificed on the altar of aristocratic "sport;" for such in truth was the execution of Roberts, in Lancashire, for the murder of Lord Stanley's gamekeeper. And another wretched victim now awaits his trial for a similar crime in Surrey. How long will the civilized, the humane, the religious people of this country bear these things? We have elsewhere inserted a few paragraphs, taken—almost at random—from the provincial papers, illustrative of the effects of game and the game laws on the rural districts. No humane or reflecting men can read them without a shudder; can politicians read them without anxiety and fear?

These laws are an anomaly in a civilized community; they are entirely unsuited to our present social condition; they are not merely derived from feudal times, they are feudal laws in actual operation; they are a disgrace to the British nation.

Perhaps few readers are aware of the actual condition of the law as regards game, and we will therefore briefly state it. In 1831 the acts of Parliament then in force concerning game, being TWENTY-EIGHT in number, were consolidated into one act—1 and 2 William IV., c. 32—which forms the present code of forest laws, under which the rural districts now writhe and groan. The first act of the twenty-eight repealed and consolidated in 1831, carries us back into the dark ages; it was 13th of Richard I., c. 13—who does not remember Gurrth, the swineherd, with his maimed dog in "Ivanhoe," and the curses, not loud but deep, which Scott makes him bestow upon the Norman barons and their forest laws?—and was intitled "An Act relating to such persons as shall not have or keep any greyhound, hound, or other dog to hunt, and shall not use fyrets [ferrets], hare nets, hare-pipes, cords, or other engines to take and destroy hares, conies, or other gentlemen's game;" and it is a remarkable fact that, as the country advanced in wealth and population, the titles of the statutes passed to protect the game became more and more indicative of savage outrage and violent crime.

As we cast our eye down the list we find, on approaching our own times, and particularly in the reigns of the Second and Third GEORGE, the new game statutes bearing some such ominous titles as "for the punishment of persons being found armed by night with intent to destroy game;" and the records of our criminal courts will show what a fertile source of violence and crime such laws have proved. The chief practical alteration made by the new game law of 1831 was to permit game to be sold under certain stringent regulations; whereas previously, though constantly sold everywhere, all persons concerned in such traffic were liable to enormous fines, and to imprisonment. In all other respects the most odious provisions of the old laws were perpetuated. Under all existing leases the landlord was to have the sole right to take and kill the game on his tenant's farm, unless the game had been expressly granted, which in practice was never done, and in all future lettings he was to be entitled to reserve the game; in such cases the occupier of land was subjected to a penalty of 40s. for every head of game killed by him upon his own farm. Moreover, the landlord is not only entitled to take the game himself, but he may authorize any other persons to do so; he may empower a gamekeeper, or he may let the game to a stranger. Then lords of manors may appoint gamekeepers, and may authorize them to seize "all such dogs, nets, and other engines and instruments for killing or taking game as should be used within the manor by any person not authorized to kill game." The game on all commons and wastes was also expressly declared to belong to the lords of manors. Penalties from 40s. to £20, and punishments from a month's imprisonment to fourteen years' transportation, are to be inflicted by justices of the peace to enforce their feudal code. Such is an outline of the existing game laws, under which any man who possesses five hundred acres of land may occasion the demoralization of a wide district. And there are few rural parishes in which game preserves do not exist. Pheasants, hares, and rabbits abound everywhere amidst the poor, and often pauperized agricultural labourers; and when we remember that these creatures find a ready sale at high prices, that none of the middle or poorer classes regard poaching as criminal, and that large numbers of the farming labourers are, invariably, for six months in the year on the verge of destitution, it is not surprising that "poaching" forms two-thirds of the crime which the rural magistrates are engaged in repressing. Nor do the brutal affrays, the bloodshed and murders, of which we constantly read as the direct products of the game law, disclose one half of the deeper crimes originating in poaching. The breach of one law, though that law is a cruel and oppressive one, begets the habit of disregarding all law, and thus social order is seriously compromised for the sake of protecting the sports of the gentry. But passing, for the present, from this part of the subject with this observation, that the more the game laws are considered, the deeper and more ramified will be found the evils which they inflict upon the happiness and prosperity of the community, let us see how they affect agriculture.

"How can we compete with the farmers of Poland?" says a Suffolk farmer, in an agony of fear, lest the Corn Laws should be repealed; "what chance have the overburdened farmers of this country in competition with the lightly-taxed wheat growers of continental Europe?" say landlords and land-agents, with real or well affected alarm; but, waving for the present all other answer to these exaggerated fears, we say advisedly that there is more corn yearly destroyed, or prevented from coming into existence by game, than would be imported from abroad in any two years of the most free trade in grain! All farmers agree in stating that it is impossible to estimate fully the injury they receive from game; no compensation can make good the loss thereby occasioned to the occupier of land. Mr. Thallon, in his excellent letter to Mr. Cobden, at Cupar (which will be found in another column), says, "No arbuter whatever can estimate the real damage our crops sustain, as pheasants and partridges, &c., first pick up the seed and cause a thin braird, then the rabbits and game eat it down so soon as it comes above ground, so that what comes to maturity at last, is deficient in quality and full of greens, being rather like a second crop in many instances than a first;" and he gives an instance of money value of the loss, when he adds, "on about 700 Scotch acres held by me and four other farmers, for crop in 1841, we had upwards of £700 sterling of damages awarded to us, and we were not indemnified even with that sum." And the reader will recollect innumerable passages to the same effect, which we have cited from the letters and speeches of tenant-farmers.

But landlords expect to obtain a full rent for their land, and to keep a large stock of game upon it besides; and this can only be done by enhancing artificially the price of the half crops of corn which under the existing tenures and burdens—landlord-caused burdens—of land can only be grown. This is one of the primary motives of the landlords in struggling to maintain the Corn Laws, and it is to preserve the GAME NUISANCE that tenant-farmers are now called on to band themselves together, and to embark in a course of political agitation. And the farmers are beginning to be aware of the fact. We are much deceived if the landlords, in calling upon the tenant-farmers to act and think for themselves, have not evoked a spirit which will not be laid until protection from evils nearer home than Polish or American competition shall have been obtained.

PROTECTION FOR AGRICULTURE.

"THE HAND IS THE HAND OF ESAU; BUT THE VOICE IS THE VOICE OF JACOB."

He must be, indeed, as blind as the patriarch of old who does not see that, though a few tenant-farmers are put forward as the movers in favour of "protection," the sentiments which are uttered at all the meetings of the new-born "Protection Societies" belong exclusively to the landlords. We do not say that there are not some renting farmers who participate in the attempt at a counter-movement; for such is the dependent condition of a great proportion of the tenantry of England that whatever the landlords will to be done must be obeyed by a certain number of their tenants; but to represent such gatherings as those at Chelmsford and Colchester as the spontaneous efforts of the industrious agriculturists is the silliest of all illusions. We shall show presently, by an examination of a few of the speeches at Colchester, and at Framlingham, in East Suffolk, that none of the arguments are addressed to the difficulties of the question as regards the tenant-farmers: all their grievances are kept out of sight, whilst the most absurd exaggerations are put forward to frighten them into Pro-Corn-Law petitions to Parliament. And this is the real object of the squire's move. They imagine such petitions will either compel Sir Robert Peel to abstain from further alteration of the Corn Laws if he had intended to propose such a change, or to afford him an excuse for not doing so should inaction be his policy. We believe that all this stir, so far as the object of the landowners is concerned, is a work of supererogation, for nobody ever seriously supposed that Sir Robert Peel would, next session, propose or assent to an alteration of the Corn Laws.

But it will be useful that the true character of the movement should be understood. Of that in Essex we have before spoken: its active agents are the creatures of the landowners, and the very anxiety of the squire to make the effort appear to be that of the farmers alone serves to prove the contrary. If the interest of the owners and the occupiers of land be in truth, as the former allege, identical, why should they not boldly and openly come out as the natural leaders of the rural classes? The reason is, that the landlords well know that they are entirely distrusted by the farmers. It is thought they may be induced to act by themselves, and it is hoped that they may act under the delusions propagated by the owners of the soil. But in other counties the landlords are more obviously the mainsprings of the counter-move than even in Essex. In Sussex the agents and toadies of the Duke of Richmond are the speakers and actors, and the duke himself is to be brought out as a great gun on an early occasion. The honorary secretary of the society is Mr. Burrell, the son of Sir Charles Burrell, a Monopolist M.P., and a rampant protectionist landowner. In Kent Sir Edward Dering and a few other landlords are the fuglemen. In Hertfordshire the agents of Lords Verulam and Salisbury have been sending round an anonymous circular, and putting forth a nameless paragraph, to try to get up a "protection" meeting in that county. In Lincolnshire Mr. Chaplin and his brother landlords take the lead; in Warwickshire a landlord and a parson are the speakers; and in East Suffolk (to which meeting we adverted lately) the speakers, the speeches, the resolutions, and the petition are the weakest efforts of the weakest brains to be found amongst the most unreasoning class of landlord monopolists.

Now, it is said the farmers are a non-reading class, though we do not think the imputation is altogether just, and it is certain that they will now read most of the Pro and Anti-Corn-Law speeches. Now, we would only ask the hard-headed tenant-farmers of England to say whether the arguments, or what serve the Pro-Corn-Law speakers instead of arguments, satisfy their minds? They denounce the League, and abuse Mr. Cobden or Mr. Bright, but do they grapple with the arguments of the Free-Traders? Do they show how the Corn Laws have benefited the farmers? Where are the profits which protection during the last 30 years has placed in the tenants' pockets? How much have prices been above the rates at which rents have been calculated, or how much below those rates? Let the farmers copy out every statement made as a fact by the Pro-Corn-Law speakers, and, as opportunity offers, let them examine the accuracy of the alleged facts. We know that this will be done, with more or less of method and precision, by hundreds and hundreds of farmers, and we know that, as certainly as it is done, the result will be directly the opposite of that which the squire seeks to produce. With regard to the abuse of the League and its speakers, in which the protectionists deal so largely, we say, once for all, we pass it over as utterly unworthy of notice; it only reminds us, and it will remind not a few of their own hearers, of the well-known story of the attorney, who, having no defence to offer on behalf of his client, gave the following pithy instructions to his counsel:—"No case; abuse the plaintiff's attorney." So the political landlords would seem to have instructed their land-agents and their lawyers, who seek to gull the farmers:—"Don't say much about monopoly, but 'pitch into' Cobden and the League." Our object will be, in all our notices of the Pro-Corn-Law speeches to throw aside all such mere flowers of rhetoric, and to elucidate the small portion of reasoning or quasi-reasoning by which these rhodomontades are accompanied. Thus, Mr. Baker, at Colchester, said:—

"Landed property became valuable in proportion as capital and skill were applied to its cultivation, and was more valuable in a highly civilized country than in one less civilized. In England they had at their command unbounded wealth; but they were circumscribed in their operations within a limited circle. The application of capital had given a higher value to land in England than in any other country; it became, therefore, necessary to keep up the agricultural interest with a high hand. Those countries which were advanced in civilization, and where cultivation was carried to its greatest extent, conferred more benefits on the poorer classes than uncivilized."

Here we have a passage which shows the danger of playing with edged tools. Arguments are awkward things in the hands of those who don't know how to use them, or whose case is past the aid of argument. Most true is it, Mr. Baker, that land is more valuable as capital and skill are applied to it, and that it is the application of capital and skill—the wealth and population which render such application possible, being founded on our commercial and manufacturing industry—which has given a higher value to land in England than in any other country; but if so, what becomes of the bugbear of foreign competition? True, it is, that the poorer classes are better off in civilized and well-cultivated countries than in rude and uncivilized lands; and why is Great Britain better cultivated and more civilized than Hungary or Poland, but because she has been for centuries the seat of commercial and manufacturing industry? But is the land of this country as well cultivated as it might be? Is there as much capital and skill applied to the cultivation of the soil as might be so applied with profit? Mr. Baker knows well enough that three farms out of five, in his own county of Essex, are not half cultivated, and he knows, moreover,—indeed, he has said as much in his letters in the Mark-lane Express,—that, in the majority of instances, such slovenly cultivation is attributable to the tenures on which tenants hold their land: in some places game-preserving prevents the application of skill and capital; in others, obsolete covenants and penalties on breaking up old pasture land; and so forth; while on nine farms out of ten throughout England the want of leases—a want mainly caused by the Corn Laws—renders improved cultivation precarious or impossible. Nothing is required but the removal of all artificial restrictions on the corn trade, and the abandonment of all feudal and obsolete customs by the landowners, to cause a prodigious application of fresh capital and new skill to the cultivation of land in this country. For the effects thereof we can't do better than refer to the above extract from Mr. Baker's speech. Does not this show the discretion of the lawyer with a bad case, in sticking to abuse? Mr. Baker is safe so long as he vituperates the League, but the moment he stops to argue he states himself out of court. Again, he said:—

"Under the present state of things he contended that the labourer was able to supply himself and his family with good wheat bread. But what would be the case if they were to bring in foreign corn into this country? The foreign-grown corn would supersede our home-grown corn; consequently the labour that produced the home-grown corn would be superseded too."

Here we have a bundle of falsehoods and fallacies capable of the most complete refutation. In the first place, the labourer is not now fully or constantly employed, because the ups and downs of farmers effectually prevent any tenant from saying one year what he will be able to do the next. Foreign corn would not and could not supersede our own corn. About two or three millions of quarters of wheat in the year only could be brought to this country with the slightest chance of profit, and the only effect of that importation would be to keep the price of wheat steady. The farmer would know what he had to trust to; he would adjust his rent with his landlord, and he would require his other outgoings to be accommodated to the ordinary rate at which his produce would sell; his object would be to grow a large acreable produce; and to do that he must cultivate carefully, he must insist upon a lease, he would require to be a free man, and not a mere vassal. Nor are these things merely speculative and conjectural; in the abundant years 1833, 1834, and 1835, this change was actually in progress. Mr. C. C. Parker, a gentleman of Essex, largely engaged in farming and in the management of landed estates in that county, said, before the Agricultural Committee of 1836, that "since rents had been lowered, not only the new but the old farmers, having capital, had decidedly improved the condition of their farms," and he expressly stated "that he had never seen more improvement in draining, chalking, and liming than within the last three years." Now these "last three years" were those of the lowest prices which had been known in England for nearly a century. Mr. Parker also said that there had been a great change of tenantry in Essex, but that the tenants who had left had been either imprudent men, or persons induced by the "very high prices of corn" to take farms without anything like sufficient capital for the management of them, hoping that, if they could survive one or two harvests, the produce of their farms would give them capital." Such evidence is worth more than all the rant of twenty Mr. Bakers. Again, this bustling land-agent said:—

"The advantage which the foreign corn-grower had over the British agriculturist was this—they could take up fresh land to any extent. In England the whole of the land was occupied, and they had to keep up the fertility of the soil by expensive artificial manures; whereas, in America and other places, as soon as one piece of land was exhausted, they ploughed up fresh land. It was manifest, then, that the inhabitants of these countries had an immense advantage over the people of England."

Now, a man may successfully "put up" rents without being much of a geographer, but when he stands forth as the champion of the squires and the Corn Laws, he ought to apply to the means of information which are within every body's reach.

Had he done so, he would have learned that in America all the "fresh land" which can be taken up is eight hundred or a thousand miles from the seacoast, so that the value of wheat grown in the far west, when it arrives at the seaboard port, is nearly double its value at the place of growth; that all this land is in a state of nature, great part of it being covered with primeval forests, without a shed or a fence, or an enclosure upon it; that those who bring it into cultivation have little capital beyond a waggon and team of oxen, a few tools, and the labour of themselves and their families, and that a rough abundance is all they hope or expect for the first generation. In all the states nearer the Atlantic, the unthrifty practice of taking up fresh land, and abandoning the old, which Mr. Baker erroneously imagines to be so advantageous, has been so long continued, that the inhabitants of the Atlantic states are in a great measure dependent upon the far west for food. That America will, in times of scarcity here, supply us with some corn, so as to prevent the exorbitant rise in price which we now experience in deficient years, is certain; but none will benefit more by the steadiness so induced than the tenant-farmer, for he will base his calculations on facts, not on fancies as at present. Then, as to the continent of Europe, had Mr. Baker taken a peep into Mr. Jacob's reports, and other documents of authority, instead of indulging in wild assertions, he would have seen whether the people of the corn-growing countries of the Continent could really "take up fresh land to any extent." We will, however, supply our agricultural readers with the information it did not suit the purpose of Mr. Baker and his employers to afford.

Mr. Jacob tells us that in Poland, which is undoubtedly the most fertile of the continental corn-growing countries, all the land has been exhausted from excessive cropping, that the owners of it have not the capital which would be necessary to restore it by keeping stock, and the climate effectually prevents that system of green crops without which the attempt to keep stock would be nugatory. Most of the land is cultivated by mere serfs, or peasants little better than serfs, and there, as here, the landlords are so deeply mortgaged that they cannot raise the capital necessary for improved agriculture. Again, Mr. Jacob says that in Prussia it is calculated that the average increase of the four kinds of grain—wheat, rye, barley, and oats—taken together, is not more than four times the seed sown; and the rotation pursued in Poland, Prussia, and most other of the corn-growing countries of Europe, is two successive corn crops, then a fallow only, and corn crops again—"a system," as Mr. Jacob truly observes, "which would exhaust the best soil with which we are acquainted." And it is a statistical fact that for a number of years since 1805 there has been a regularly diminishing export of wheat from Poland. Then the continental roads offer most serious obstacles to exportation of corn, so much so that at the distance of only twenty-four miles from Rostock the cost of the carriage of rye to that port amounts to thirteen per cent. on its value! So far from there being any truth in the ridiculous statements made by the squires and their agents, as to the quantity of corn being procurable from the Continent, that, on the contrary, Mr. Jacob, writing in 1827, says, "at the present harvest of 1827, it is doubtful if ten days' consumption of wheat could be drawn from the whole Continent, even at an advance of one hundred per cent. on the prices of the period." And the inquiries of Mr. Meek, who was sent by Sir Robert Peel to the same districts in 1842, show that no perceptible change has since occurred. Now let the farmers deal with this question like practical men, and they will find all such reckless and general assertions as form the staple of the speeches of Mr. Baker and his fellow-agents reduced to their true value—nothing.

THE MONOPOLISTS IN EAST LOTHIAN.

The lairds of East Lothian, having collected together as many farmers as habit, prejudice, or influence could induce to come out in aid of high rents and low profits, held their meeting on the 19th inst., at Haddington, to petition Parliament not to alter the Corn Laws. As evidence of the interest felt in the objects of the meeting by the landlords, we give the following list of landocracy then and there assembled:—

The Earl of Lauderdale, Lord Elcho, the Hon. Francis Charteris, M.P., the Hon. James Sinclair, Sir Thomas B. Hepburn, Bart., M.P., Sir George Grant Suttie, Bart., Sir David Kinloch, Bart., Sir Robert Houston, K.C.B., James M. Balfour, Esq., M.P., Jas. Hay, Esq., Patrick Dudgeon, Esq., Wm. Aitchison, Esq., Robt. Ansell, Esq., Jas. Hunter, Esq., Jas. W. Hunter, jun., Esq., Wm. Burn Callander, Esq., Jas. Aitchison, Esq., Robert Brown, Esq., James Hamilton, Esq., Robert Hay, Esq., William Horne, Esq. (sheriff of the county), Robert Riddell, Esq. (sheriff-substitute), Thomas Lea, Esq. (provost of Haddington), John Haldane, Esq., George Park, Esq., William Park, Esq., &c.

Sir Thos. Hepburn was the first speaker. He denied that the Corn Law was "solely a landlord's question"; and alleged that Free Trade would injure tenants and labourers, which he attempted to make out thus:—

"I shall assume that the farmers could obtain the land they now hold at a rent reduced perhaps one-half. The tenant would take the land, paying for it one-half of what he now does. But can that be sufficient for a similar alteration or reduction in the tenant's profits? Or is it to be supposed that the value of farm produce would be higher in proportion to the rent than it is now? This no sensible man can believe."

Again:—

"The high rents alone, therefore, is not the question for the tenant to consider; but whether he will have high rents with high profits—or whether he will have low rents and a proportionately low rate of profits."

Now, these gratuitous assumptions prove nothing, except the utter ignorance of the speaker of the economical law which governs rents and profits. So far from the truth is it that high profits are connected with high rents, that directly the reverse takes place. High rents are the result of a great competition for land, which induces farmer to bid against farmer, until the very lowest rate of profit, at which any man will consent to carry on the business of farming, is all that the tenant calculates on getting after payment of the expenses of cultivation and rent. In making this calculation the farmer estimates the price of grain at the rates which the Corn Laws promise, and he is compelled to do so, for, whatever doubts observation of the past may have infused into his mind as to the actual obtainment of such prices, there are many farmers who believe in the efficacy of the Corn Laws, and will bid according to act-of-Parliament prices. Then, having ascertained or estimated the quantity of produce and the expenses of cultivation, with the very lowest profit he will accept, he offers to the landlord all the surplus as rent.

Now, to adopt, for the sake of illustration, Sir Thomas Hepburn's assumption that a very large fall in prices will take place under a Free Trade, and that the returns of farming are thereby diminished, from whence must the first deduction be made? Why, from the surplus, the RENT. Let him remember that "the desire to take land"—in other words, the competition, on which he seems to rely—as all landlords do rely—to keep up rents will only induce farmers to bid against each other according to the diminished scale of prices, and therefore the surplus offered for the land will be less than hitherto given. The farmer won't consent to take less than the lowest rate of profit usually expected amongst farmers; and inasmuch as Free Trade would give a great impulse to other employments, and tend to raise the general rate of profits in all businesses, the rate of profit expected by the farmer would be raised also, and so the surplus or rent might be somewhat further diminished. It would be of no use for the landlord to say he would get other tenants, for all other tenants would make their calculations on the same basis. And, the cause being a general one, landlords would not find it to their interest to enforce against existing tenants the letter of an engagement, which, by the supposition, altered circumstances had rendered inequitable.

We have dealt with the laird's arguments upon his own premises—not meaning thereby to admit their accuracy—but for the purpose of proving that, on his own showing, the Corn Law is almost exclusively a landlord's question. If prices were to be kept ever so high, the farmer would get no more than his ordinary profits, for the competition amongst farmers would prevent that; but the higher the price of grain the larger will be the surplus or rent given to the landlord.

Now, we trust that Sir Thomas will try to understand the principles of rent before he next ventures in public to say that, "as a question of degree, it is more that of a labourer and a tenant's question than a landlord's." The rate of wages, again, depends, not upon the price of food, but upon the demand for labour; and experience has proved that when the price of agricultural produce is moderate the farmer seeks to increase the quantity of his crops, and in so doing employs more labour. It is from the sudden ups and downs which the Corn Law occasions that the agricultural labourer suffers, for he is never so well off as when prices have been low for several years together, as, for instance, from 1832 to 1837. Afterwards Sir Thomas said:—

"I do not deny the power of the continental growers to do this (furnish a supply at a cheaper rate) to a certain extent, if they can find the capital; but I am sure we do not require it. From parliamentary returns it appears that the whole amount of foreign wheat entered for home consumption for the last fourteen years, from July, 1829, to April, 1843, was only 13½ millions of quarters, and about 4½ millions of cwts. of flour, and it was only in seasons of scarcity that any large portion of that quantity was imported."

But it is in seasons of scarcity that importation is required, and then it is not, by reason of the Corn Laws, obtainable until prices have reached famine point. Then we probably procure as much as if the trade had been free, but it is got by means and under circumstances which disturb all the ordinary commercial relations of Europe.

In refutation of the absurd untruth, that English wages must be reduced to Continental rates, we cannot do better than refer to Mr. Cobden's conclusive statements at Perth on that subject, which appear in another column. British labourers are paid more than those on the Continent because their labour is more valuable. But perhaps the farmers would like to hear what a monopolist, Mr. Canning, at Northampton, said—inadvertently, perhaps—on this subject:—"What did the French say? Why, that an Englishman was able to accomplish more work in a given time than a Frenchman." Here we have all the nonsense about continental wages being the result of Free Trade knocked on the head by one of the monopolists! Usually the only difficulty in dealing with monopolist statements and reasonings arises from the circumstance that it is necessary to show that their premises, their "facts," are false, and that, even supposing them to be true, the conclusions they deduce from them are unwarranted. Sir Thomas then produced the following "accurate calculations" by Mr. Sligo, of Sealdiffe:—

"To show the loss that this county would sustain by the depression caused by Free-Trade prices, he states that the total rental of the county of Haddington amounts to £244,886 2s. 7d. Assuming that the value is divided according to Mr. Smith's system, which allows one-third to the landlord in the shape of rent, one-third for expenses, and one-third to the tenant for profit, he estimates that, if the crop of 1841 had sold at Free-Trade prices, that is, 20s. per quarter, the loss to the rental would have been £69,766, and, even if had been sold at 30s. per quarter, the loss would have been £68,481. But, if we add to this the loss on the tenants' profits, the evil would be doubled."

We have disposed of these "calculations" by anticipation in our remarks on Sir Thomas Hepburn's own statement. But we may add, there is no chance of wheat falling to 20s. or even 30s. per quarter; and will repeat that, if it did permanently fall to such rates, the loss would fall upon the owner, not the occupier, of the soil. The arbitrary division of the produce into three parts, and allotting one of such divisions for rent, is ridiculous. Until the tenant has been paid the expenses of cultivation, with the lowest profit he is willing to accept, there can be no rent, which is only the surplus after expenses and profits have been paid. This the farmers will easily understand when the mystification of "protecting" duties shall have been removed. And the lairds now understand this well enough; and hence the present outcry.

Our eye having wandered over some column or two of print without meeting with the semblance of an argument, until we come to the following by Sir George Suttie, which, by courtesy, we shall so designate. He said:—

"Owing to the burdens which land had to bear, and the amount of taxation in this country, the price of everything was considerably enhanced. If they were to be brought into competition with countries where taxation was comparatively unknown, unquestionably there would be a reduction in the value of everything, for they would be forced into competition with corn brought from countries where it was raised at a much lower cost. He happened to know that in some of those countries the labourers never tasted wheaten bread. That, he believed, was an admitted fact. He had travelled some years ago in the north of Germany, and when going to Hamburg (whence they would get corn) he was recommended—and he found it an advisable precaution—to take some wheaten bread with him in his carriage; and he found none for three days. Now, he would ask any reasonable man if the labourers of Germany would continue to grow wheat in order that the labourers of England might continue to eat it? (Hear.) He could not understand why the labourers of Germany would not eat their own wheat except that they could not afford to eat it."

Now, this is really very childish. All European nations are taxed to the utmost of their ability, and we only pay more taxes than our neighbours because we happen to be somewhat richer. Taxation may be so adjusted as to press unequally on different classes: as for example, our landowners are largely exempt from bearing a fair share of taxation, but the burden of taxation forms no reason for attempting to create an artificial scarcity besides. How would the landlords like to be charged an extra 30 per cent. on the commodities they buy because they have mortgages on their estates? Yet that is the argument for enhancing prices, to enable this country to pay the interest of the debt. The twaddle about the wheaten loaf and the labourers of Germany we have given as an apt illustration of landlord ratiocination. Mr. Charteris, the M.P., was innocent of uttering anything which, by the greatest stretch of courtesy, we could call an argument. He probably reserves his power for the House of Commons.

To Mr. Balfour, M.P., the same remark applies, except that he reiterated the taxation argument, viz., that, being in debt, we must pay extra taxation besides, and he gave vent, as a peroration, to the following valiant resolve:—

"We will not allow of any change that would diminish our protection—we will not even allow of a change in the present system; for we may be assured that every change in the existing law is a step nearer to our total destruction and ruin."

It is difficult to sustain an edifice, the foundation of which is rotten, and Mr. Balfour's mixture of consciousness and bravery is not a little comical. How tame these brave members will be when they come to the heels of their leader, Sir Robert Peel!

Mr. W. Aitchison cites the domestic authority of his Swiss governess to prove that Switzerland is not so prosperous as is believed, and the passage is too rich to withhold from the reader:—

"He (Mr. Cobden) told us another story about Switzerland, that it is the most thriving and happy country in the world by means of Free Trade. I believe that it is a thriving country; but there is a Swiss lady residing in my family, who occasionally visits that country, and she tells me that it is indeed thriving; but she ascribes it to a very different cause from what Mr. Cobden does. It is true they have adopted Free Trade; but it is upon the principle of giving everything and of taking nothing." (Hear, hear.)

And well might the audience shout "Hear, hear!" for the Swiss trade, which "gives everything and takes nothing," might well astonish the canny Scots.

But listen again to Mr. Aitchison's domestic instructress:—

"They have great watch manufactories and cotton manufactories; but the only thing they import into the country is a little salt. As for the steadiness of their prices in corn, the lady I refer to had a letter lately from her mother, who tells her that the crops there had turned very ill out, and that what sold for 20s. immediately after harvest, has now been raised to 30s. There is a rise of 50 per cent."

No doubt this is conclusive—to such minds as that of the speaker, but will such inanities satisfy the business-like farmers of East Lothian? If such a rise in corn has really occurred in Switzerland, it only proves that, notwithstanding some disadvantages of climate, they can there grow corn so much below their neighbours, for as the trade is free, it must be plain that the enhanced Swiss

THE LEAGUE.

No. 19.]

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1844.

[3d.]

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND, £100,000.

All subscribers of £1 and upwards to the ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUND FUND, will be entitled to, and receive a copy, weekly, of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have forwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the Offices of THE LEAGUE, Newall's-buildings, Manchester, or 67, Fleet-street, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND, are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council respectfully request that their friends, in all places where committees for raising subscriptions to the £100,000 Fund have not been already formed, will proceed to their formation as soon as possible, and transmit their names to the LEAGUE Offices, Manchester.

THE RENT LEAGUE.

Abundant evidence has been afforded this week to prove that the associations formed under the pretence of protecting agriculture are really designed to perpetuate the present vassalage of the farmers, and continue the present degradation of the farm-labourers. Vehicles were provided at Steyning in which the farmers were carted to the meeting with just as little exercise of their own free will as when they are brought to the hustings. At Oxford the chief accusation against the League was, that its lectures and publications tended to excite distrust between landlord and tenant, by inducing the latter to reflect on the circumstances of his situation, particularly on the insecurity of his tenure, and the consequent uncertainty of a return for his invested capital. At all these meetings a band of whisperers is provided, to inform the farmers that the landlords will not agree to reduction under any circumstances, and, therefore, that they must cling to protection as the only means by which they can pay the amount of rent which is certain to be demanded. Protection to rent is so palpably the object of the various associations which are got up by the landlords in their several districts, that there is now hardly an attempt to disguise the object, at least the pretences employed are so flimsy that they could scarcely impose upon an idiot.

But there is another sense in which these collective associations may be justly termed a Rent-League: they have neither community of opinion, cohesion, nor unity of action. When the farmers are brought together, they naturally ask, "Why are we collected here? What is to be done?" And they feel themselves mocked and insulted when they are told—"You are met to do nothing, and to ask the Minister to do nothing." Men are invited to quit their occupations and assemble in Steyning, or Barton, or Oxford, to discuss the grievances of their position, and then resolve that their position should remain unaltered, and that their grievances should remain unredressed. They are told that, because they are distressed, they ought to make up their minds to remain as they are, and to ask the Government to keep them so. This, assuredly, is a vast improvement on the old joke of Jack doing nothing and Tom helping him. But this farce is far too absurd for the farmers to be willing actors in it, and at more than one meeting demands have been made for an indefinite something, arguing the foregoing conclusion, that things cannot remain as they are. "The councils of the Anti-Leaguers," says the Times, "are impeded by irresolution and clouded by doubt;" and thereupon it exhorts the farmers to abandon "the ragged remnant of a foolish law, and to take their stand upon the great legitimate ground of taxation for revenue." Loud as is the voice of the Thunderer, it has been responded to by very feeble echoes. There is no party in the country disposed to advocate a fixed duty; if there are any scattered individuals favourable to such a compromise, they have the good sense to keep their unfavourable opinion to themselves.

But even the friends of sliding scales are hopelessly rent asunder; the landlords and the trading politicians advocate the present system; the great body of the farmers, and not a few of the mortgaged landlords, see nothing before them but ruin from adherence to a system "which has unsettled everything and settled nothing." They re-echo the complaint of the Morning Post:—

"The agriculturists of England were prosperous when Sir Robert Peel succeeded to office. In two years he has established a system under which half of the agricultural capital of England has disappeared."

This is our argument, but put before the public in a very clumsy form. We say, what every one knows, that the effect of the Corn Laws has been to prevent the growth of agricultural capital, and that this effect is produced by their unjust interference with the profits of industry; for capital is nothing more than accumulated results of industry. Captain Pechell has placed the matter in the right point of view in his address to the farmers of Sussex:—

"It does certainly appear to me that 'protection to the tenant' is in other words 'protection to the rent of the landlord.' Though the interest of the tenant goes in a great degree along with that of the landlord, still it is not for you to fight the battle of the landlord for high prices to keep up high rents. You have seen that these high prices which have been promised to you by the several acts of Parliament have not made your fortunes. You cannot find a farmer in this country who has retired from business with a fortune and a provision for his family. Show me any other trade, a grocer or a miller, in which this is so. In every other business except farming, men have laid something by for their family. Here we have been since the close of the war, in 1815, with the landlords always calling out for protection, and still there has been agricultural distress. Not one of you have bettered your condition by it."

Is there any other trade or profession in the country where men have toiled so hard and so long as English farmers without having bettered their condition? This is a question sure to be discussed at any meeting which is really "agricultural," but which is equally sure to be "burked" at a meeting got up, like that of Steyning, for the purpose of propagating a delusion. Captain Pechell justly says:—

"When I see the means that are taken—when I hear of the plans that are adopted to get up a large meeting at Steyning on Monday next—when I see it stated that the tenants are to be conveyed thither as they were conveyed to the poll in old election times, to be cooped up and to be bundled by dozens into carriages and conveyed to the hustings, it does in my mind create a strong suspicion that there is not a solid foundation for the business they are about to transact. No gentlemen know their own interests better than the farmers. When they want to go to Steyning market they know their way there. They do not want the landlords to find them a conveyance upon these days when it suits their interest to be there. It, therefore, appears to me that there is a great apathy among the farmers generally, and that there is a strong reluctance in them to attend this meeting. Never would it have occurred to the landlords of West Sussex to take the steps they have taken to get a strong meeting of this kind if they had not found that the farmers cared little upon the subject. They see that the farmers would be glad to be let alone, that they do not want to get into hostile collision with parties when no earthly advantage is to be derived from it; and when this meeting takes place there will be a great imposition practised."

The imposition has been practised, but the parties imposed upon are neither the farmers nor the public, but the self-deceived landlords, who suppose that they have sufficient influence to persuade men that the remedy for their distress is to do nothing.

THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

"MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,
It affords me great satisfaction again to meet you in Parliament, and to have the opportunity of profiting by your assistance and advice.

"I entertain a confident hope that the general peace so necessary for the happiness and prosperity of all nations will continue uninterrupted.

"My friendly relations with the King of the French, and the good understanding happily established between my Government and that of his Majesty, with the continued assurances of the peaceful and amicable dispositions of all Princes and States, confirm me in this expectation.

"I have directed that the Treaty, which I have concluded with the Emperor of China, shall be laid before you, and I rejoice to think that it will, in its results, prove highly advantageous to the trade of this country.

"Throughout the whole course of my negotiations with the Government of China, I have uniformly disclaimed the wish for any exclusive advantages.

"It has been my desire that equal favour should be shown to the industry and commercial enterprise of all nations.

"The hostilities which took place during the past year in Scinde have led to the annexation of a considerable portion of that country to the British possessions in the East.

"In all the military operations, and especially in the battles of Meane and Hyderabad, the constancy and valour of the troops, Native and European, and the skill and gallantry of their distinguished Commander, have been most conspicuous.

"I have directed that additional information explanatory of the transactions in Scinde, shall be forthwith communicated to you.

"GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,
The estimates for the ensuing year will be immediately laid before you. They have been prepared with a strict regard to economy, and at the same time with a due consideration of those exigencies of the public service which are connected with the maintenance of our Maritime strength, and the multiplied demands on the Naval and Military establishments from the various parts of a widely extended Empire.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,
I congratulate you on the improved condition of several important branches of the trade and manufactures of the country.

"I trust that the increased demand for labour has relieved in a corresponding degree many classes of my faithful subjects from sufferings and privations, which at former periods I have had occasion to deplore.

"For several successive years the annual produce of the revenue fell short of the public expenditure.

"I confidently trust that in the present year the public income will be amply sufficient to defray the charges upon it.

"I feel assured that, in considering all matters connected with the financial concerns of the country, you will bear in mind the evil consequences of accumulating debt during the time of peace, and that you will firmly resolve to uphold that public credit, the maintenance of which concerns equally the permanent interests and the honour and reputation of a great country.

"In the course of the present year the opportunity will occur of giving notice to the Bank of England on the subject of the Revision of its Charter.

"It may be advisable that during this Session of Parliament, and previously to the arrival of the period assigned for the giving of such notice, the state of the law with regard to the privileges of the Bank of England, and to other banking establishments, should be brought under your consideration.

"At the close of the last Session of Parliament I declared to you my firm determination to maintain inviolate the Legislative Union between Great Britain and Ireland.

"I expressed at the same time my earnest desire to co-operate with Parliament in the adoption of all such measures as might tend to improve the social condition of Ireland, and to develop the natural resources of that part of the United Kingdom.

"I am resolved to act in strict conformity with this declaration. I forbear from observations on events in Ireland, in respect to which proceedings are pending before the proper legal tribunal.

"My attention has been directed to the state of the law and practice with regard to the Occupation of Land in Ireland.

"I have deemed it advisable to institute extensive local inquiries into a subject of so much importance, and have appointed a Commission with ample authority to conduct the requisite investigation.

"I recommend to your early consideration the enactments at present in force in Ireland concerning the Registration of Voters for Members of Parliament.

"You will probably find that a revision of the Law of Registration, taken in conjunction with other causes at present in operation, would produce a material diminution of the number of county voters, and that it may be advisable, on that account, to consider the state of the law, with a view to an extension of the county franchise in Ireland.

"I commit to your deliberate consideration the various important questions of Public Policy which will necessarily come under your review, with full confidence in your loyalty and wisdom, and with an earnest prayer to Almighty God to direct and favour your efforts to promote the welfare of all classes of my people."

Such is the Speech of her Majesty's Ministers on the opening of the session. Pity it is that constitutional forms do not allow of its being pronounced by one of themselves. This matter is, however, very well understood. The conventionalism which for a moment renders a VICTORIA the mouth-piece of a Peel, deceives nobody, restrains nobody, and forbids the slightest shadow of whatever blame or contempt may overcloud the Minister to obscure the Sovereign. Therefore, we say now, as we shall say when the royal assent is given to a bill for repealing the Corn Laws,—God save the Queen.

But Sir Robert Peel, and his Cabinet, are all the more deeply responsible, both for the contents and omissions of the speech, in consequence of its having to be spoken by her Majesty. Now, there is one omission which must at once strike every reader. On the topic which is uppermost in the public mind; on which all classes, from the peer to the peasant, are intent; which brings from their homes to the hustings those least accustomed to give up their time to agitation—the peaceful tradesman of the metropolis and the lordly proprietor of half a county; and on which foreign nations are waiting and watching to see what will be proposed to Parliament, or effected by its interference: on that topic, Sir Robert Peel has made her Majesty as silent as the grave. You would not know, from the speech, that any controversy existed upon the Corn Laws; still less could it occasion the faintest suspicion that almost every county in the kingdom was in movement, and every town in a state of excitement. Whatever construction be put upon this silence,—whether it be the muteness of superciliousness or of equivocation,—it fails of the respect due to the wants and wishes of the people, and of that respect which Sir Robert Peel owes to her Majesty, though we may no means infer that he owes it to himself.

Even the Morning Post opines that "many persons may have anticipated some allusion to the state of the agricultural districts; some mention of the Corn Laws," and in this instance we perfectly agree with our cotemporary. Nor is the disgraceful silence atoned for by the allusion to the improved state of trade and manufactures. This indirect reference is most undignified. It may accord with the obliquity of the Minister, but has no harmony with the sincerity of the royal character. For what does the allusion mean? It is the Peelite argument for the present aliding scale—an argument repudiated alike by both parties in the discussion. The agriculturists say that they are not relieved, but worsened by the present bill; and the Free Traders affirm that the existing mitigation of their distresses is simply the result of a few months of comparative cheapness in the cost of food. There is no Peel party where the popular voice is heard; and so Sir Robert Peel takes advantage of his position to get behind the back of his Sovereign, and push her into the arena, to insinuate, rather than assert, his own sophism. This is most pitiful.

If her Majesty's Ministers really rejoice at the temporary alleviation which has accompanied the cheapening of food, and if they do indeed see good in the opening of new markets for the produce of the industry of the people, why do they resolve still to resist that one great measure which would ensure continued cheapness, would mitigate the distress that still remains, and would open to our industry the markets of the world? Why, in defiance of such implied admissions, do they cling to dearth and exclusion? Why do they disregard the gathering cloud of agricultural distress? And why do they leave the country to the awful contingency of those calamities and horrors which one short harvest would in all probability realize? Why do they play so desperate a game now, when by their own statement there is breathing time for averting mischief so incalculable? Why? Ay, why?

The response comes, not from the Treasury Bench, but from Steyning. One of the Ministers masters and makers has spoken, and the creature hears his voice. The Duke of Richmond says "he will only ask them to speak out, and no doubt they will speak out." Hence, first, their "expressive silence;" and then their lowly submission. Ministers, like tenants, are under the screw. Conditionally, the oracle has pronounced their doom. They stand mute before its threats, and then take their parts. All the world knows the tendency of their opinions; O, if they had but the spirit of men in them, "another sight had seen that morn," and Monopoly would have heard the outspeaking of its own destiny, speedily hailed by the acclamations of a nation.

The people are plainly thrown upon their own resources. What Government and legislators will not, or cannot, do for us, we must do for ourselves, by that growing power of opinion which every day augments in strength. Most timely is it, that the cry of "No compromise" has been raised. And the opening of the session must confirm the conviction of all, that not by petitions to Parliament, any more than by memorials to the Treasury, is our battle to be won, but by fairly working out the scheme of Electoral Agitation, and thus holding our course right onwards to the total, immediate, and unconditional Repeal of the Food Monopoly, and of all other Monopolies.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

The House of Lords assembled on Thursday, at two o'clock, when her Majesty opened the session with the speech, as given in our first page.

The address, which, as usual, was merely an echo of the speech, was moved by the Earl of Eldon and seconded by Lord Hill. The debate, in which the Marquis of Normanby, Lord Brougham, the Marquis of Clanricarde, and Earl Fitzwilliam took part, turned chiefly on the state of Ireland, and presented nothing remarkable. Lord Campbell said a few words on the failure of the late bankruptcy measure, which Lord Brougham defended. The remainder of the business was merely formal.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

After some formal business, and some notices of little interest, Lord Clarendon moved the address, which was seconded by Mr. Cardwell. Mr. Hume declared his intention of moving an amendment: he particularly complained of the silence respecting the Corn Laws in the royal speech. In the present crowded state of our columns we cannot attempt to give even an outline of the debate, the following passage, however, from the very effective speech of Mr. Villiers, produced too great an effect on the House, and is too important to the country, to be passed over in silence:—

"He (Mr. Villiers) asked, then, whether this was not trifling with the people? (Cheers.) He asked whether, in the condition of the whole community, the restrictive system was to go on? They all knew that the population went on increasing; there was an extent of distress and destitution which ought to shock every man of common humanity. (Cheers.) Although it was said that the distress was diminished, he had never before read such descriptions of destitution as every day met their view. It was perfectly horrid to find women destroying their own offspring, because they could not endure to see them starve, to find the people hurrying to gaol because they were better off there than in their own homes. (Cheers.) He was a work, published under the sanction of the right honourable gentleman the President of the Board of Trade, to show that the adoption of a different system would extend the comforts, and provide for the necessities of the people; yet they had been told that evening that there was no chance of having the present system altered; that, whatever might be the consequences to the people, there had gone forth a decree from the landed interest that if there was the slightest change in the system, the least alteration, or if the protection was to be in any way diminished, the ministers would not be allowed to retain their places. (Loud cheers.) It might be said that this had been the practical working of the constitution, and such intimations might have been privately given to the Minister, but he had never before known anything so indecent or haughty, and so dictatorial, as he had recently heard uttered at public meetings (ministerial cheers, and counter cheers from the Opposition),—that a Minister should be openly threatened with expulsion if he did not do what was most injurious to the community at large, unless he maintained such a system as would put most rent into the pockets of the great dictators themselves. (Loud cheers.) Noble dukes gave the sign, and the squireens followed. (Cheers.) There was not a term of abuse which was not lavished on the right hon. baronet. He (Mr. Villiers) had no objection to the right hon. gentleman. If any one were to administer such a system, no one could doubt either his competency or his capacity; his only regret was that the right hon. baronet had not, if he might use the term, the spirit to turn round upon these people and show them their utter helplessness without him (loud cheers); their utter inability to administer without him the Government upon their own system. (Cheers.) Now, with all their rank and property and pride, they would fall were it not for the person who had talents and experience and capacity. (Loud cheers.) If the right honourable gentleman had the courage to adopt the system which he himself believed to be sound, he would rally the people to his support, he would take that higher station which he represented as alone making office valuable to him. (Cheers.) Those who had the power to declare his not doing this, had not the capacity to form a Government. (Cheers.) Who were the victims of all this pride on the one side, and of avarice on the other; of this trial to maintain a consistency for a month or a year on the one side, and of a struggle to retain that to which they had no right, on the other? It was the people. (Cheers.) Could they wonder, then, that the honourable member for Rochdale should seek to stop the supplies when those crying grievances existed, without a hope of redress? Was his honourable friend, the member for Stockport, to be blamed when, with this before him, he was labouring from morning to night, not going to the extreme means of the honourable member for Rochdale, but trying to influence the constitution of the House of Commons, so as to make them do justice to the people? (Cheers.) Had they any right to blame him, or could they wonder at the organization of which he was the head? They knew that evils existed, for which it was now hopeless to expect redress; these were the justifications for his exertions, and if it were tried, with those evils existing, to prevent the expression of complaints, in his opinion a greater error could not be committed. (Loud cheers.)

MEETINGS.

GREAT MEETING OF THE LEAGUE AT COVENT GARDEN THEATRE.

On Thursday evening last, the second weekly aggregate meeting of the League was held at Covent Garden Theatre, at which the audience was as numerous, and manifested as great enthusiasm in the cause of Free Trade, as at any previous gathering within the walls of that building. It being the first metropolitan meeting at which Messrs. Bright, Colonel Thompson, and R. R. R. Moore have appeared since their return from their recent provincial tour, those gentlemen, upon presenting themselves upon the platform, were received with the warmest plaudits. The name of Lord Morpeth, in connexion with the Wakefield meeting, elicited loud cheers, which, however, were succeeded by a marked feeling of disappointment when it was discovered that his lordship had not realized the expectations which had been previously formed of him in reference to the course which it was anticipated, from his character for humanity and philanthropy, he would have taken upon the vital question of the Corn Laws. G. Wilson, Esq. (chairman of the League) presided. The following, among other gentlemen, were upon the stage:—

George Wilson, Esq., chairman; Dr. Bowring, M.P.; John Bright, Esq., M.P.; James Brotherton, Esq.; W. J. Fox, Esq.; R. R. R. Moore, Esq.; Colonel T. P. Thompson, Henry Harrison, Esq.; Richard A. Harrison, Esq.; S. Lees, Esq., Manchester; Dr. Cooke Taylor; W. A. Wilkinson, Esq.; James Russell, Esq.; J. G. Hall, Esq.; James Grieve, J. Parker, Joseph Ivey, Richard Napier, L. A. Chowne, John Richards, J. Clark, W. Levy, P. A. Taylor, John Travers, R. Ricardo, K. Garrett, R. Sanders, Rev. Mr. Philip, Dr. Hitchman, K. B. Garey, Esq.; Robert Smith, Esq.; Messrs. Rosson; Alexander McPhail, Esq.; G. W. Cant, Esq.; Thomas Mason; the Messrs. Pattison, Jun.; J. B. Smith, Esq., Manchester; D. Richardson, Esq.; Sir Wm. Baynes, Bart.; W. G. Thomson, Esq., Sunbury; W. Thornborrow, Esq.; Alfred Warner, Esq.; Thos. Chas. Smith, Esq.; J. H. Palmer, Esq.; F. Roe, Esq.; G. C. Dyke, Esq.; T. Barbour, Esq.; W. A. Thomson, Esq.; J. M'Leod, Esq.; John Robertson, Esq.; George Smith, Esq.; Ald. Glascock, Esq.; David Carr, Esq.; John Thompson, Esq.; Thos. Bateman, Esq.; J. T. Norris, Esq.; J. P. Nixon, Esq.; Richard Ware Cole, Esq.; Dr. Partridge, — Egan, Esq.; H. L. Morgan, Esq.; Thos. Towle, Esq., Oxford.

The CHAIRMAN called upon Mr. Sawl to read the minutes of the previous meeting, which having been done, Mr. J. B. SMITH, of Manchester, moved, and Mr. JAS. BROTHERTON, seconded their confirmation, which was carried unanimously.

The CHAIRMAN came forward amid loud cheers, and said:—Ladies and gentlemen, we meet again to report the progress of this movement during the past week, as well as to reiterate our unequivocal objection to the present, or the imposition of any other Corn Law. The meeting this evening shows in its numbers that the interest upon this question is not diminished; and we find that to be the case wherever deputations from the League have been in the various cities and boroughs in the country. There is one universal feeling—I may say one feeling—of hostility to the Corn Law; a general feeling of opposition to its longer continuance; a determination to stand by the League in its measures, to aid it in its funds, in order that the abolition of this foul monopoly may be total, unconditional, and immediate. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, the deputation from the League have been visiting within the last week several boroughs in the north of England; we are now taking the boroughs in the due course of succession; the deputation will proceed steadily visiting each borough in the country, collecting the League fund, and we shall not deviate from our plans on any consideration; we shall not be tempted to depart from them by the seductive allurements which are held out in other quarters. (Hear.) We shall steadily follow this line of policy, in the full persuasion that it is in these meetings alone, and in the subscriptions collected at them, that we shall find the true criterion of the feeling of the people. It is in the amount which we collect—not from individuals, but from numbers—the subscriptions alone, that we gather the public opinion, that we collect our strength, and that we are assured of support in any measures that we may take hereafter. (Loud cheers.) Since we last met here, we have had meetings at Hull, Wakefield, York, Sunderland, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Sheffield, Blackburn, and Stockport. At Hull £400 was subscribed in the room; at York, £200; at Wakefield, £224; at Sunderland, £350; at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, £500; at Sheffield, £750; at Blackburn, £933; at Stockport, where last year £411 only was raised, this year £1333 was collected. (Loud cheering.) I need not state to this meeting that Stockport is the borough which has the distinguished honour of being represented by Mr. Cobden (renewed cheers), and that there this question has long ceased to be regarded as a party matter. At the last meeting on Monday, the chairman, the mayor of Stockport, who is a Conservative, gave his £100 to the League fund. (Cheers.) The subscriptions were contributed from a greater number of persons, in proportion to the amount, than have been given in any other borough in the kingdom. (Hear.) The work-people in some of the large manufacturing, holding every variety of political opinion, subscribed as much as they could towards the object which the League has in view, and as an expression of their admiration of the indomitable spirit of perseverance of Mr. Cobden, their representative. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, we have been told—it has been reiterated from day to day—that the League will shortly have to hide its diminished head (laughter), in consequence of the appearance of other greater and brighter luminaries in the political horizon. (Renewed laughter.) We have been informed that within the last few days a meeting has been held at Steyning, which was graced by the presence of two dukes, five earls, one viscount, seven members of Parliament, and an innumerable host of reverend gentlemen, and "other" tenant-farmers. (Laughter.) Now, gentlemen, I dare say that, from the hostility which they have manifested towards the League, they think we regard their meetings with similar feeling to what they do ours. I pass over altogether the indecent exhibition of peers standing forth at such assemblies, as though they were coroneted hucksters—the sole dealers in the food and provisions of the people. I will not dwell upon the spectacle of these noblemen, assembled to maintain a law which will allow them still to remain the proprietors, the sole proprietors, of stalls and storehouses where provisions are sold, except at famine prices (hear); but I say no Leaguer could look but with pleasure upon the exhibitions which have taken place at such meetings. I am quite sure that much money as we have spent in printing and in hiring rooms in order that our views might be made known, we never in our lives spent any which was so beneficial to us as that which has been expended by them, and the speeches which have been made by their leading men at these meetings, and especially at that of Steyning. (Hear.) I very much question now, if the League were disposed again to spend £50,000 in printing as we have already done, whether we could expend it so well as by republishing, for the information of the public generally, the whole of the speeches which have been made at this and other agricultural meetings. (Laughter.) Gentlemen, I do not think that these new associations will, in fact, put down the League. (Laughter.) I do not really imagine that we have much to apprehend from their opposition. (Hear.) At not one of these meetings has the tenant-farmer had the question answered which Mr. Cobden has put to them in twenty-eight counties, namely, "What benefit have you derived from the Corn Laws?" (Hear.) I know it has been a complaint at these meetings, made by tenant-farmers after they have terminated—it has been a complaint repeatedly made, that that question has not been answered. The farmers are fully alive to this subject; they now know that their interest is identical with that of the great bulk of the population; they know that no money has ever reached their pockets, obtained by protection, which has not afterwards been required by the landlord in the shape of rent; and they regard the hushing up of the important question proposed by the member for Stockport, with very great suspicion indeed. But, gentlemen, although there are many landlords who are only actuated by fear, by pecuniary motives, in their support of the Corn Law, I believe there is yet a still larger class who do not understand the question, and who think that their political influence, and their political influence alone, is essentially connected with it; and that, if they could see clearly that they were not likely to lose this political influence, in future they would become ardent Corn-Law repealers. It is to that class especially, and not to the Dukes of Richmond and Buckingham, and the men of their stamp, that the League would make its appeal. (Cheers.) We ask them to elicit the generous feelings of their nature, and to triumph over party spirit in this question; we entreat them to see how the League and its leading members have laid aside their feelings, and made this a question, not of class or party movement—but one against all classes or parties who may support the Corn Law. (Loud cheers.) We beg them to look back on the dreadful havoc which these monopolies have made in the manufacturing districts during the last five years, and to be swayed by the principles of justice and humanity, instead of the lust and thirst for power. (Loud cheering.) They cannot, they true, now restore the emigrant back to his home; they cannot reunite again the scattered members of the family who have been dispersed throughout the world in consequence of these monopolies; they cannot bring back from the workhouse those who have been compelled to lin

gra con con cur
An thei give ord (Lo to-can one (ran men sum
I lour you hav the
A sc light have about befo men who farm
Lea
they her to a Clon prea have cheer jesty in fr anoti cheer were of ar and thwa his b hear pistol the u (Crie such decre prope over (hear
I tru matt to the invit that (Loud Leagu mind pation truth manki men w cheer

They interes listeni a descr
the hi of the over t native fore,
True
amout return to repr
3000 p
64d. p
I know and I man b passed
What be rem and c which is the d and u is it, crease
That League
the gi had t keep i fall int our me month which templ
I don't many reprobi believe feling.
we toll would facts ar to then talked our rep
the la
When quaror lowers one-d 4s. in to the When
lated

linger out their days; they cannot resuscitate from their graves the broken-hearted, or those whom a jury of their countrymen have affirmed to have died for want of the common necessities of life; but they can prevent the recurrence of such disasters as those I have mentioned. And it is in order that they may do so that we call on them now to refuse allegiance to any class who will not give up their thirst for power, and to unite with us in order that these monopolies may be for ever abolished. (Loud cheers.) Gentlemen, we shall have the pleasure to-night of listening to addresses from that veteran in the cause of Free Trade, Colonel Thompson (cheers); from one of the originators of the League, Dr. Bowring (renewed cheers); and from our distinguished friend the member for Durham, Mr. Bright. (The chairman resumed his seat amid loud applause.)

Dr. BOWRING, on coming forward, was received with loud plaudits. He said:—Gentlemen, I must crave your indulgence if my address should be brief, because I have just left my duties in the House of Commons, and to the discharge of those duties I must return. (Hear, hear.) A scene like this, indeed, is, as it were, an interlude of light, which contrasts most gratefully with the darkness I have left (loud cheers), and to which darkness I am again about to go. (Cheers and laughter.) But I was curious before I came among you to ascertain whether the recommendations of those argumentative and heroic gentlemen who call upon the Government, at the meetings of tenant-farmers which you have heard described, to put down the League by the strong arm of the law (laughter),—whether they had won the attention and the friendly auspices of her Majesty's Ministers, and whether I should have to announce on this occasion that the present was the Clontarf of the Anti-Corn-Law League; and we, the preservers of the public peace and public order, should have to intreat you quietly to disperse. (Laughter and cheers.) I was desirous of ascertaining whether her Majesty's Ministers, being engaged with one set of repealers in Ireland, were disposed to come into controversy with another set of repealers in England. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) I was anxious further to know whether we were likely to see in this country the striking exhibition of an Attorney-General armed with the sober, serene, and quiet dignity of justice, who, being foiled and thwarted by his adversary, menaces that he will blow out his brains (laughter), and in a court of justice too (hear, hear); and that, my friends, not with a metaphorical pistol, but with one of those deadly instruments by which the murder of human beings is too often accomplished. (Cries of "Shame, shame.") We have seen in that country such a scene passed over, and justices from the bench have decreed, that it is right, fit, wise, prudent, and proper, that it should be forgotten and delivered over to oblivion. But it will not be forgotten (hear, hear): it will long be remembered. (Hear, hear.) I trust that what has taken place in Ireland on this matter of state prosecution will serve as some caution to those obstreperous and intemperate gentlemen, who invite the Government to call in the constable, in order that the Anti-Corn-Law League may be put down. (Loud cheering.) Why, what is the Anti-Corn-Law League? It is a representative of the progress which mind is everywhere making towards its own emancipation. (Hear, hear.) It is the consolidation of a great truth connected with the wellbeing and civilization of mankind. Its progress is opposed by the same class of men who resist all progress towards improvement. (Loud cheers.)

"Had their nod presided at creation's birth,
Its mandate would have said to God,
Wake not from chaos heaven or earth."

They will not allow us to wake from chaos the slumbering interests of this great community. (Shame.) I have been listening during the last hour in the House of Commons to a description of England's prosperity—to a description of the happy condition of the working classes (bisses)—of the dispersion of the clouds which have too long hung over the commercial and manufacturing industry of our native land. The sun this day is shining; now, therefore, "Why do you complain?" (Ironical cheers.) True it is that in some districts and departments the amount of human suffering is diminished. I received a return yesterday from the town which I have the honour to represent (Bolton), and it showed that there were only 3000 persons receiving relief whose average earnings were 6½d. per week. (Cries of "Shame.") I am answered, I know, by the fact that last year there were 13,000; and I gratefully acknowledge that there are 10,000 human beings less miserable than in the year that has just passed by. But does this result satisfy me? No! What we say to our opponents is this—"Much still may be removed by the overthrow of the Corn Laws." (Loud and continued cheering.) There is much happiness which may be augmented by their overthrow; and what is the duty and destiny of man, when he well conceives and understands his duty and his destiny? What is it, I ask, but to diminish misery, and to increase the felicity of his fellow creatures? (Cheers.) That is the object which the Anti-Corn-Law League has proposed to itself—the greatest good to the greatest number. (Hear, hear.) They have had that constantly, and will, I believe and hope, keep it constantly in view. (Cheers.) We need not fall into a passion because our adversaries do—we have had our moments of exasperation. I don't deny that, a few months ago, in face of a state of things in this country which no rightful, no virtuous, no religious man could contemplate with unwept eye and unlacerated heart (cheers); I don't deny, I say, that in the presence of that misery many of us were indignant, and used strong words and reprobative indignation, directed against those whom we believed, and still believe, were the cause of all that suffering. (Hear.) But still we had our arguments, too, and we told those who were demanding protection, that if they would come and reason with us—if they would examine facts and figures—we believed that we could demonstrate to them that they erred in their own calculations. They talked of the particular burdens which press on the land: our reply was, there was no land so little burdened as the land of Great Britain and Ireland. (Hear, hear.) When the feudal system was established—when the conquerors of this country delivered its surface to their followers—only four-fifths of the land were surrendered, and one-fifth was preserved for the expenses of the state; and 4s. in the pound was the land-tax in this country down to the end of the 17th century. (Hear, hear, hear.) When the landowners got the upper hand they regulated the land-tax and compounded for it; so that instead of paying £16,000,000, as they ought to be paying, under the conditions of their contract, they are at this moment not paying more than one million and a quarter (shame); yet, at this moment, this land-tax of feudalism still presses on the land of other countries. (Hear.) It is the almost universal law of Germany. In France, the average of the land-tax is equal to 4s. in the pound on the rental, and yet we profess not to be able to compete with those whose condition is so much less advantageous than our own. (Shame.) We—the people of England—we import the raw materials of our manufactures from the remotest regions of the world; we manufacture cotton by hundreds of millions of pounds; and silk manufacture (the raw material of which is wholly provided by foreign countries) amounts to from 12,000,000 lbs. to 14,000,000 lbs. We import the finest wool and the finest flax from different regions; and we apply our knowledge, our industry, and capital, to meet the whole world in competition. What, then, have we to fear from competition? (Hear, hear.) We, with all our advantages, are we to be behindhand in agriculture? (Cries of "No, no.") We told them, too, that in competing with the foreigner the farmer of this country really paid no rent at all, for the cost of bringing the wheat here is equal to the rent paid by the farmer in this country. Wheat cannot be imported for less than from 6s. to 7s. per quarter; and if an acre of land produces three or four quarters, as it ought, it is clear that the amount of protection which the mere cost of transport gives the farmer in England is equal to the rent which he pays. (Hear, hear.) It is my confident belief, that if these trammels were removed which he is still desirous should press on him—if he were launched into a fair field with no favour—if the protection which laws and landlords profess to give him were wholly removed, I believe our agriculture would make as much progress as our manufactures, and that, instead of being a country now dependent as we are—millions being fed by the produce of foreign fields—it is my conscientious belief that agriculture when emancipated from these fetters would produce more at home than we could consume, besides giving us the means of exportation to foreign countries. (Hear, hear.) That was the state of England some years ago. (Cheers.) Now, I must keep my promise, and not detain you longer. I am to return to listen to a debate (I can scarcely call it a debate, for the arguments, you are well aware, are all on one side); but I am going to listen to an incredible quantity of eloquent nonsense, which will be received in the honourable House as a fit representation of the wisdom of our ancestors, and of the results of the constitution, which is "the envy and admiration of the world." (Laughter and cheers.) I am going to hear myself and you, gentlemen, abused, and shall endeavour to listen to that abuse with serene and Christian complacency. (Loud cheers.) Supported from without, we will endeavour to do our duty within. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) We care little for what may be said of us, either there or elsewhere—we are delighted to see our enemies coming forward with their reasoning and their money—we know that a penny on the side of truth is mightier than one hundred pounds on that of falsehood. (Cheers.) We can see with delight, and it has been recognised this very evening, that between the pressure of the total repealers on the one side, and the agricultural protectionists on the other, a fixed duty is for ever crushed. (Loud cheers.) That in itself is a great result! There is no hope to pass over that difficulty on a golden bridge. Repeal—total, immediate, irrevocable repeal—is written high and broad upon your standard, and that standard, my friends, you will bear on manfully to a glorious and world-blessing victory. The hon. member was loudly cheered on retiring from the stage.

The CHAIRMAN next introduced Colonel Thompson to the meeting.

Colonel THOMPSON, on advancing to the table, was greeted with deafening applause from all parts of the house. The cheering having subsided, he spoke as follows:—Ladies and Gentlemen, after a most successful round of provincial engagements, we have again the honour to present ourselves before you. (Laughter.) Though we profess neither to be Ariels nor Sylphides, we have "done our business yarely," the railways have shown themselves "tricky spirits," though we were not. (Renewed laughter.) It seems as if bright reformations were always to be heralded by improvements in the arts. Before the great religious reform, the skill of man had invented the art of printing to carry on its wings the results of those improvements in the progress of the human mind. So now, when your reform—a reform of men's souls through their bodies—is the subject of agitation, it has pleased heaven to send railways upon earth that we, your humble instruments, might fly through portions of space at a rate otherwise impossible to human powers. We have passed through the northern portion of our island, which has ever been celebrated for energy and genius—we have seen its intelligent population pour out to meet us, and everywhere gratulating hands have been extended towards us. (Cheers.) Had it been our wish, we might have made one triumphant progress through the country; and when we returned to our own land, bringing with us the good wishes of all whom we had left, we found there too, in our northern borders, no less of encouragement, no less of excitement and of hope. (Loud cheers.) Indeed, we have found nothing but encouragement wherever we have gone; and now we present ourselves here before you to bring to you, as to the metropolis of this grand national exertion, the fruits of our endeavours and our toil. (Loud cheers.) We have witnessed better than popular applause—we have had popular assistance. (Hear.) We have seen, I may say, the union of all parties. The agriculturists? have we not had the best of them on our side? Look at the titled names in Scotland that came forward to our assistance—and then to those bright names which, since we quitted, have joined you with their aid. See what a noble new year's gift we heard of, from your Marquis of Westminster? (Loud cheers.) And who is he? Some radical perchance—some demagogue?—The owner, he, you know, of Grosvenor-square—the Gros Veneur (to speak in French)—the grand huntsman who came over with the Norman Conqueror. He is with us—he has joined us—to declare henceforth that there is neither Norman nor Saxon in the land, but that we are one united people to put down one great oppression which hangs like a burden on us all. (Cheers.) We fear not our aristocracy—the honest part, at least; we march willingly under their banners—knowing that no strength is equal to that of a people who march under their natural leaders. (Hear.)

Their fathers led our fathers, and they shall lead us, if they will only lead the right way. (Loud and continued cheering.) We have found but one point on which men seem yet to have some hankering inclination to oppose us. I speak not of our open enemies, but of those whom we reckon among our friends. (Hear.) There have been symptoms of a lingering desire for a fixed duty. Now, had you seen a man who had long been almost choked with an oppression round his neck—the result of a tightened cord—what hope would you have of getting him to consent to a certain degree of fixed strangulation? (Loud laughter, and cheers.) And why, forsooth, is this to be urged upon us? Some say it is to make up for a fixed taxation pressing on the landed interest. Now, if they could or would prove this taxation, would you not enter into a subscription to pay it off? You would put a poll-tax on the heads of your daughters to pay their marriage settlements! (Laughter.) You would do this, if need could be demonstrated, sooner than have recourse to the bungling method which is proposed to you through the method of protection. (Hear, hear.) Then some tell you that there is a revenue to be raised. The Chinese annals, as you know, go far beyond all European records. Periods are recorded there when arts and sciences were at a low ebb, and, more especially, the art of cookery—men ate their provisions raw. Once upon a time, near the imperial residence, a house took fire, and in it, amongst other things roasted, was a pig! (Laughter.) Whereon, when this had been tasted and the report of the savoury diet had been conveyed to court, the Brother of the Sun and Moon enacted that thenceforth each day a roasted pig should appear on the royal table, and a house be burned to roast it with. (Loud laughter.) Now, thus it is with our same roasted pig—the five-shilling duty. It is proposed that your house and mine should be destroyed, as a means of effecting the operation. (Hear, hear.) What chance is there, my friends, that we shall live to see a roast-pig ministry? (Continued cheering.) Before that come to pass, knowledge will have found its way even to themselves. They will have ceased to be so far unwise as to endeavour to impress on the country of which you are a part, the necessity of so lame, so bungling an invention. (Cheers.) We have seen something of the strength of our enemies, too, or heard of it, rather, from the public prints. We have seen them meeting together with vast turmoil and professing to subscribe—they have, by their own choice metaphor, tried to alarm us by telling us that the British lion had shaken his mane. (Laughter.) Would it not have been as Germans to the matter, if they had said The British ass has wagged his tail? (Laughter, and cheers.) Do you know, citizens of London, what these efforts remind me of? Some five-and-twenty years ago—it may be within the memory of many here—an insurrection was attempted in your metropolis. One portion of the rioters went to take the lower, and they carried their ammunition in a stocking. (Loud laughter.) Such is the preparation our enemies have made to defeat you and yours. (Loud cheers.) Such is the preparation your enemies have compassed to put you down. (Hear, hear.) I trust the Corn Laws are going—almost gone. (Laughter.) A Colonel of mine had once a horse that was near its end. "Poor creature," he said to his Irish dragoon—"he's lingering."—"Yes, Sir," replied Patrick, "he's lingering fast." (Laughter.) I hope the meeting will think with me that the Corn Laws are lingering fast! (Laughter.) It will not be long, believe me, before we present ourselves to you on a still happier errand than ever has yet befallen us: to hail and rejoice with you in the ending of those restrictions which have compromised every man's industry—trodden on every man's hearth—depressed every man's reasonable hopes—confounded his expectations—spread misery amongst our families and friends—made our country a little country, when it ought to have been a great one—a miserable one, when it ought to have been a happy one—lengthened nothing but the bankrupt list, and reduced our means of profit to the lowest ebb. (Cheers.) [At this stage of the proceedings, Mr. Bright, the hon. member for Durham, entered the theatre, having just arrived from Wakefield by railway. His appearance on the stage was a signal for a tumult of applause, which lasted some minutes—the audience rising en masse, and waving their hats and handkerchiefs.] Colonel Thompson continued.—"A friend in Manchester told me a few days ago, of what I think must have been the minimum of capitalists and employers. He said he knew an individual, who employed one man when he was busy! (Laughter.) How many here have seen their own capital and employment "lingering fast," as the honest Irishman said, towards such a state of things as to employ one man when they were busy! (Hear, hear.) But there will be an end of this! Noise will not carry the day against us—the noise is hollow—the people are not with our opponents. Their own friends, the agriculturists, are not with them; the farmers, in their hearts, are on our side; and the agricultural people, how do they show allegiance to their lords and masters? They burn their haystacks. If the case were so with the manufacturing employers—if their subalterns and servants were showing their attachment to their masters by the destruction of their property—what arguments would thence be derived? We should find wide-mouthed members of the House of Commons declaiming on the horrors of our manufacturing system, while they would have us believe that all is fair on their own side; that none complain—but all goes on in love and happiness in those paradises which exist in our agricultural counties. (Ironical cries of "Hear, hear.") I have in my pocket at this moment a journal of the south of England (a North Devon journal), in which is related an account of an agricultural labourer who was brought before the quarter-sessions for stealing 3lbs. of bacon to keep his Christmas with. When it was inquired how this man came to be so hungry for 3lbs. of bacon at Christmas, it appeared that he had a wife and three children, all of whom were living on his wages of 6s. per week; and that, when due reductions were made for rent and for every other necessary payment, there remained for food for these miserable souls exactly seven farthings each per day. (Loud cries of "Shame, shame.") Now, I would that all here, merely by way of wholesome medicine—exactly on the principle on which the owners of our caravans of wild beasts are said to give no food on Sundays, simply with a view to the animals' health—I would that each of you should try one day what it is to live on seven farthings (laughter); and I think, if we had it in our power to cause those who neglect these laws to live on seven farthings for one fortnight.

night, they would be brought down to such a state of wholesome humiliation, that they would no longer stand between you and your deliverance. (The hon. gentleman sat down amid loud cheering.)

The CHAIRMAN then said:—I have much pleasure in next introducing Mr. Bright to your notice. (Loud cheers.)

JOHN BRIGHT, Esq., next came forward amidst tremendous cheering, he said:—I rejoice to be permitted again to meet so many of the Free Traders of this metropolis as have been able to squeeze themselves within the dimensions of this building. I am glad to see that here, as elsewhere, there is no diminution of interest in the great question we have this night to discuss. We come not here now, as some say, at the close of our campaign; for the warfare in which we are engaged, the campaign, must be one, and one incessant campaign, until the Corn Laws shall be utterly abolished. (Cheers.) Some armies, whose force is physical force, are generally taken into winter-quarters at this season of the year; but instead of seeking winter-quarters, some of us have been found in nearly all quarters of the country, and the report we have to bring to this meeting, as the central great gathering of the League, is one most satisfactory to ourselves, and which must be as cheering to you: for we find everywhere an increase of zeal based upon an increase of knowledge upon this question. From one end of the country to the other we find just one complaint, that in every town there is no building large enough to contain the meetings which would be held, were all to come who are inclined to come to them. We have, since I was last here, seen stronger proof than heretofore of the great hold which the Anti-Corn-Law League and its great principle have obtained upon certain distinguished and influential individuals. Our chairman has told you on former occasions, and if he had not you would have learned from the public papers, that the wealthiest, and one of the most powerful of the landed aristocracy of this country, has boldly connected himself with the very fearful association to which we belong, and has liberally subscribed to its funds; but I would ask you to look to the parties who are subscribers to the League, amongst other influential classes as well. We are said to be "a property-destroying League," and yet the richest man in the nobility of this country does not fear to unite with our efforts; and the richest man in the commonalty of this country amongst your own moneyed men, the bankers, has not feared to unite himself with us; and the richest family, probably, which is to be found connected with the manufacturers of this country is also united firmly and enthusiastically with the League. And here, perhaps, in reviewing these circumstances I ought not to pass by one circumstance which has caused the deep and general regret of thousands, whose anxiety is for the wellbeing of the League, and for the prosperity of all classes of their countrymen. I allude to the severe loss which all good objects have sustained by the decease of that well-known, most excellent, most liberal man, Joseph Strutt of Derby—a man whose munificence is, perhaps, unparalleled amongst his countrymen; whose thousands and tens of thousands of pounds have been freely contributed to the town and neighbourhood wherein he resided, and I trust, for centuries to come, the effects of his munificent liberality in that town may be seen in the increasing civilization and advancement of its population. But, perhaps, we may take consolation—as one man ceases from his labours, that ten men are raised up to join this great work; for wherever we go we find new adherents to this cause, and old adherents with increased zeal. Twelve months ago we returned from a visit to Scotland, and at one of the meetings in Manchester I took occasion to describe some circumstances connected with that visit: it was a visit full of hope and full of satisfaction to the deputation. We have been into Scotland again; the satisfaction we had last year is greatly increased this. (Hear.) We have held meetings in not less than fifteen or sixteen of the principal towns and cities in Scotland. At Edinburgh and Glasgow the meetings were very large, and would have been much larger had there been any building sufficient to contain them; meetings of the most enthusiastic and stirring character, meetings which will affect, for a long time to come, the political character of the representation of some portions of the Scottish people. The change since last year is most marked and manifest. Increasing knowledge there has done what it has done in England, it has given increased zeal; and, a circumstance which some men regret, but which I see no reason to lament, has added greatly to the power of the Free-Trade portion of the Scottish people: I allude to the schism which has taken place in their religious institutions. (Hear.) I believe we have not sufficiently understood the effect of the schism upon the policy of that people. Almost every man connected with the Free Church of Scotland is in his heart now a warm supporter of the League. (Hear, hear.) It was our good fortune to meet many of them in private, to meet some of their ministers on the platforms at our meetings; and everywhere we found that the men who were in favour of the Free Church, who preferred Christianity pure, unadulterated, unmeddled with by the dirty intrigues of political partisans (loud cheers), every where we found those men in favour of perfect freedom of trade, and of the great movement which the Anti-Corn-Law League is carrying on. (Renewed cheers.) But the Scotch are a great people. There is much for us to learn in reviewing their character and their country. Their intelligence and virtue I believe sincerely are higher and greater than ours. (Hear, hear, hear.) Their municipal institutions are not so much extended as ours; their franchise in the municipalities is the same as at their parliamentary elections—the £10 franchise; and yet I believe there is not more than one borough in Scotland in which the whole of the municipal power is not in the hands of thorough-going Free Traders (loud cheers); whilst in this country, with a franchise much more extensive, based on household suffrage, we have in many towns the whole of the municipal authority in the hands of the bitterest enemies of Free Trade. And then look at the conduct of their Provosts, or chief magistrates: they are elected to the office they hold on account of services rendered to the people; gratitude to them for those services gives them those honours; but unlike too many of the chief magistrates of the towns and boroughs in England—who think that the moment they are thus elevated it is their duty, as far as possible, to make it appear that they are unworthy of the office to which they have been appointed—the provosts of the towns and boroughs of Scotland maintain, in their elevated position, with increased zeal, if possible, the great principles for which they had aforetime contended; and wherever we went, in nearly all these boroughs, unless some accident or indisposition prevented it, the provost was there to take his legitimate position as head and president of the meeting. He was there acting as a chief magistrate elected by the people ought always to act, ready to unite with his fellow-countrymen in every legal and moral act for the preservation of the public rights against the usurpation of that class who inflict the public wrongs. (Cheers.) All Scotland may be said to be with the League (cheers)—enthusiastically with the League. The season of the year wherein we have visited that country is not that in which external nature shows to the greatest advantage,—but Nature's landmarks were there still. The everlasting hills were there, the valleys and the plains, the lakes and the streams, and the waterfalls, and the associations which are connected with them, connected with the memorable past, and which point I trust to the hope of a still more glorious future. But there is in Scotland good which no season can affect: there was none of the foliage of summer, none of the golden hues of the autumn; but summer can never dissolve the union which exists between the hearts of the people of Scotland and any good and noble object; and winter's frost can never chill the sympathies, and can never cool the ardour of the people who have ever been foremost in the race of liberty, and are now anxious to lead you on to high and noble achievements. (Cheers.) Were Scotland of itself a kingdom, and its people its own governors, it would be the best governed country on the face of the earth; but connected with this country—with a people, like ourselves, who either do not know our duties, or do not perform them (hear)—connected with a people over whom an ignorant squirearchy rules without limit—Scotland is subject to many evils which the Scottish people, if left to themselves, would long ago have been rid of. (Cheers.) And yet we are coming up to them now. Meetings have since been held in Newcastle, Sunderland, Shields, Sheffield, agricultural York, and also in Hull. The meetings at this latter place—for there were two of them, were of the most enthusiastic and influential character. The representatives for that city have need to be looking about them. Hull does not vote for the abolition of the Corn Laws by its members; one of whom votes against the sliding scale, and the other votes for it. We have no wish to interfere with the representation anywhere, excepting so far as that representation counteracts the efforts of the League; but I would say to the members for Hull, and many other representatives who are this night gathering for the first sitting of the present session, that, from what we learn of the opinion of the public now, there are many men who now possess senatorial honours, who, if they should again be tested on the hustings, will find it their duty, or rather find themselves compelled, to return to private life, or else to become converted to honest and wiser principles. (Loud cheers.) Blackburn is another town at which an influential meeting was also held, the result of which, as far as the subscriptions are concerned, you have already heard; but there are other important consequences which will follow upon it. Two members are sent to Parliament from that town, one of whom votes with the Government in favour of the present sliding scale, while the other acts somewhat better, and generally, I believe, walks out of the House upon such divisions. (Laughter.) Both these gentlemen are now upon their last trial. From facts which have come to our knowledge we are aware that they, along with many others, have had an intelligible notice to amend their conduct with respect to the great questions affecting the true interests of their constituents, or else to quit. (Laughter.) The Stockport meeting was, perhaps, the most remarkable of all. Two years ago, or one year ago, that town was involved, in something like that ruin to which the Standard newspaper with philosophical coolness would consign the manufacturing districts. ("Hear," and hisses.) At that time it was a source of consolation to the monopolists that, when trade improved, the League would find their efforts to agitate the country fruitless; that as soon as the people had more money in their pockets they would be less liberal in parting with it than they had heretofore been; but this is a source of comfort which has been long since dried up (laughter); and Stockport is an instance of the fallacy of their supposition. Last year the subscriptions in that town amounted to £450; this year, in better circumstances, with increased knowledge and zeal, and with the breaking up of the monopolist party—Stockport has subscribed about £1350, or three times the amount of last year. (Loud cheers.) The gentleman who there took the chair—the mayor of the borough—calls himself a staunch Conservative; and he never gave a better proof of his real Conservatism than by coming out and aiding the operations of the League. (Loud cheers.) Last night I was present at a very important meeting in the West Riding of Yorkshire, held at Wakefield; many of the most active Free Traders from every district of that large and influential riding were present. The chair was filled by one of the wealthiest and most extensive manufacturers in the kingdom, James Garth Marshall, of Leeds. (Hear.) Besides the deputation from the League, a nobleman was present, whose opinions upon this question have been looked forward to with some anxiety. His lordship was called upon to speak at an early part of the meeting. Now, bear in mind that the people of the West Riding are infatuated in their admiration of their old representative, Lord Morpeth. (Hear.) I believe, as a man, he has deserved as much of their admiration and esteem as most men, or, perhaps, as any other man could. His lordship rose to speak, and was received with extraordinary enthusiasm. For some time he spoke well—and elicited the approbation of the meeting—in terms of eulogy of the services of the League, speaking in complimentary language of the deputation who were then present,—felt evidently a little difficulty as to his position,—wished the League goodspeed in their efforts,—trusted that they would maintain their advancing banner;—but, for himself, there seemed to be in his mind a clinging to the idea that a pledge, or a thorough declaration of opinion in accordance with the League, might on some future occasion cause him difficulty and embarrassment, in case there should come into office a Ministry who might hope to make a settlement of this question upon some other terms than those upon which the League acts. Now, this latter part is my impression of what was passing in his mind, from the language which he used. I am convinced that his opinions and his conscience are with us on the subject of Free Trade. (Hear.) When away from that little difficulty he spoke with freedom, and power, and fervour, and he declared, moreover, that rather than this present system should endure for one little year he would prefer the total and immediate abolition of the Corn Laws. (Loud cheers.) I do not mention this for the sake of praising or blaming Lord Morpeth, but for the sake of telling you the effect produced on that meeting, when the hesitation came, and the "but" (which generally comes when there is a little difficulty). There was a dead silence in the hall, and when the difficulty was explained, the countenances, which had just before glowed with all the enthusiasm and ardour imaginable, became filled with evident disappointment, and it was not possible, during the whole of the remainder of the speech, that there should be, and there was not anything like—perhaps not one-tenth part—the excitement and enthusiasm and ardour manifested by cheering that there was before this little difficulty had presented itself. Now, there is a lesson for statesmen of the present day. There is not a man now in Parliament who has a stronger hold upon the affections and the personal and individual attachment of the constituency than Lord Morpeth has upon the constituency of the West Riding of Yorkshire; and yet those men, and to their honour be it spoken, felt, that if there should continue this difficulty—if it were impossible that it should be surmounted—that then they would have to make a sacrifice most painful to themselves, and to withdraw their confidence in some degree from a man whom they had all trusted as a brother and a friend. I wish the whole of the late Ministry had been there. (Hear.) It was a lesson worth the learning—it was an example worth seeing—it was a speech given in silence, which no man in the position of the speaker could ever forget. It marks how great is the feeling throughout the country; for the people of the West Riding of Yorkshire have had much to struggle with—have had many difficulties in gaining the position upon this question which they now occupy; and that they have acted so nobly as they have, that they have subscribed upwards of £13,000 to the funds of the Anti-Corn-Law League within the last three months, and that they so conducted themselves at that meeting last night, is a proof, I hold, that the inhabitants of that district look upon this great question as one of vital importance to them, as the life-and-death question to the momentous commercial and manufacturing interests of that county. There is another pleasing feature in the present times, and that is the singular movement and flame which has burst out all of a sudden amongst the landowners, the clergy, and the farmers. (Hear.) It is an outburst of passion on the part of the landowners and the clergy. Now I am not, I hope, trespassing beyond the objects of this meeting, and the legitimate province of a speaker here, to include the clergy in this expression of opinion (hear); for if there be one man who has used more violent, unseemly, ungentlemanly, and unchristian language than another against the members of the Anti-Corn-Law League, it has been some man who writes "Reverend" before his name. ("Hear," and hisses.) I lament that any man who is in a position wherein he should be employed in teaching the people—who professes to expound to them, Sabbath after Sabbath, the beautiful and benign requirements of the Christian code—who stands up before a congregation to ask them to disregard filthy lucre, and many of the wants and wishes of this lower world, and to set their eyes upon things above, upon riches that are durable and eternal,—for such a man as this to appear upon platforms at meetings of landowners and farmers in the counties, and there to denounce this great national organization—composed now of millions of his countrymen—as seeking to overthrow every valuable institution of the country, whilst he there is pleading for a law which is valueless to him and to his confederates, unless it inflicts want, and suffering, and famine, on hundreds and thousands of the poorest of the people. (Loud cheers.) It is pleasant to see them engaged in collecting subscriptions; but a difficulty arises in one's mind as to what these subscriptions are to do. In the first place, I know not that they can with propriety or profit lay out £50,000 or £100,000 in the endeavour to secure a parliamentary majority. They boast already that they can out-vote the opposition of all shades of Free-Traders by a majority of 100; and it is notorious that in another House of the Legislature scarcely a voice is heard in favour of justice to the people. (Loud cheers.) What, then, are they to do with this money? Are they to try some means of bribing their present majority to stick fast to their present professions? (Cries of "Yes, yes.") Or do they intend to weed them out a little, taking away those that are not trustworthy for their purpose, and putting in men who will stand up for the principle of "No surrender?" Are they about to publish an organ of their party, as we publish the LEAGUE paper, which is now circulating from 15,000 to 17,000 copies a week? (Loud cheers.) One would think that most amusing and consistent paper, the Morning Post (hisses and groans), would be advocate and organ enough for the Protection to British Idleness Society. (Laughter.) Will they publish tracts? They say they will; I should very much like to see them; one or two I have seen; but really I should "hide my diminished head" if they issued from any party with whom I was supposed to be connected. (Hear.) Will they hire and pay clever men to go through the country, having a heart full of the importance of their mission, to come before audiences of their countrymen, and to plead for laws which shut out the bounty of Providence, and bring suffering and misery to millions? I hope they may. It would be a matter of great amusement and great service to our cause if we could find the walls of our towns placarded with the information that some lecturer of the Starvation-and-short-commons Society would deliver "a lecture on the benefit of one meal a day, under certain circumstances, that meal to be confined to the article potatoes." We shall see nothing of this. I know not how the money is to be spent. Perhaps they will reply, that is no business of mine. (Laughter.) I remember that they formerly asked many questions as to the mode in which we intended to dispose of our funds. But I believe those inquiries have not been repeated this year, inasmuch as past experience has shown them clearly the manner in which we expend the funds we raise. (Cheers.) It will be worth while observing the progress of this singular movement, in order that we may discover whether there is any extent of folly to which the credulity of the farmers will not carry them. (Hear.) Is it possible after the experience of the law of 1815, which promised them 80s. a quarter for their wheat, whilst in 1822 it slipped down as low as 38s. and 40s.; after that of 1823, which promised to give them 64s. a quarter, but in 1835 sunk down to 35s.; after that of 1842, which intended to secure them 56s., but within twelve months of the passing of that law sunk as low as 46s. 1—with all these facts before them,—and the additional circumstance that the men they sent up in 1841 pledged, over and over again, to suffer no diminution of their protection, actually voted for a new Corn Bill and Tariff, and boldly justified those measures,—I say, is it possible that the farmers of England, after such experience, will still put their trust in the men whose measures have so often deceived them, and by whom they have been so shamefully betrayed? (Hear, hear.) But I suspect, after all, that farmers do not come willingly to these meetings. It has come to our knowledge, that landowners of the monopolist party have sent special circulars to all their tenants, begging of them—although, if the truth were known, it would be found that the language in reality was not that of entreaty, or, if it was couched in such terms, it implied something else—asking them to come to these Protection Anti-League meetings. When we remember that, for two years past, many farmers have returned from the audit of their landlords, after having paid 10, 15, or 25 per cent. less than the amount of rent they had formerly covenanted to pay, we need not be surprised that they are unable to resist the pressing entreaties of these landlords to come to such meetings and vote for the perpetuation of monopoly. (Cheers.) The landlords and the farmers remind me much of the story of the giant and the dwarf, the giant taking all the honour and the dwarf all the blows. (Laughter.) The farmers often sink—the landlords are always found buoyant and swimming. (Hear.) The landlords are now endeavouring to persuade the country that this movement is a farmers' movement; whilst at every meeting you find lords, members of Parliament, and large landed proprietors taking the chair, moving and seconding the resolutions, and exhorting the farmers to zeal in "the great and good work" to which they are leading them. (Hear.) The landlords in their kindness to their tenants, in their paternal care over them, and great desire to save them from the agitations of the Anti-Corn-Law League, remind me greatly of the American anecdote, in which a shark is described with its cavernous mouth wide open, bidding a poor negro boy who has fallen overboard to "come in out of the wet." (Loud laughter.) It may be that the agitation of the League is prejudicial to the present interest of the farmers: I do not deny it. The fears, turmoil, and uncertainty, which are thereby created, must be injurious to the interests of that party against whom it is particularly directed. But we are not responsible for this. (Hear, hear, hear.) We have no more love for agitation than any squire who lives quietly at home. We came not out to this agitation from any affection for it: had we known what we were to encounter up to this point, I doubt if we should have ventured upon the work. But the Corn Laws were in existence—they were blighting, withering, and sapping the very foundations of the prosperity of this country; they were inflicting wrongs of a deep and terrible nature upon us and upon those amongst whom we lived. We found ourselves in the position of gradually being surrounded with greater and greater difficulties, our embarrassment increasing on every hand, the country sunk in ignorance or in apathy on this question. And beginning by little and little, we went on to greater and greater things, until now the Council of the League is intrusted by the people of this country—and that trust has been ratified and confirmed by hundreds of meetings—with the great mission of utterly abolishing the Corn Laws, and fully establishing in the Legislature of this country the great and glorious principle of perfect freedom of trade. (Tremendous cheers.) But these landlords are very rampant just now. Last session their voices were rarely heard: they went home to their game-killing, and occasionally they met their tenants, and they found nothing like cordial greeting—and some man, more blunt than others, expressed the opinion with which his tortured heart was overcharged. They found they had lost to some extent the confidence of their constituencies; they were goaded on insensibly by the organ of the high protection party. They, perhaps, would not have stirred for all this, if it had not been for the symptoms which were daily showing themselves, that the League was gathering strength as it proceeded, and that the Ministry, with all one House in favour of it, or nearly so, and a vast majority to back it in the other, were supposed to be about to capitulate. It was then that those landlords, fearful of the consequences, anxious to nail their great captain to his, or rather to their principle,—it was for this that they came forward, and it is for this now, and probably to some extent in the hope to influence the Queen's speech delivered to-day, that we have seen such an outburst of passionate excitement amongst landowners, clergy, land-valuers, and lawyers throughout the agricultural counties. (Cheers.) But the Queen's speech has been spoken; and, so far as I have heard, there is no mention of corn. (Hisses, and cries of "Shame.") Great pity that so important a question should have been neglected. (Hear.) Much to be deplored that these poor landowners, suffering all the torture of this dreadful suspense, should not have been relieved. But so it is; and the Minister has not spoken out (laughter); and, from all I can hear, some landowners have gone down to the House in high dudgeon at this, and hope yet to make him speak out. (Renewed laughter.) Now I hope they will succeed: we have no fondness for such suspense. But there is a curious circumstance to be noted in these rival agitations, namely, that the landowners' agitation is directed to prevent the Government of their choice from acting upon that Government's avowed principles; our agitation, on the other hand, is directed upon and against that Government, to make them act honestly upon the principle which they have over and over again acknowledged to be sound. One member of Parliament, it is stated, has written back, in answer to the customary official note requesting him to be in his place this evening, that there must be something more decided in the Minister's measures; that this policy will not suit him, (laughter); he is of a character too solemn and too awful to be trifled with any longer. (Renewed laughter.) Well, I hope all this valour which has been shown in the field will not ooze out when these valiant men meet together in the senate. Nothing can please the League more than that these meetings should take place in the country; for even error in discussion is better, and a more healthy sign, than stagnation and apathy on the part of the farmers. A discussion of the most absurd nature—of fallacies that any child out of doors might refute—will be a pleasant change to the one-sided "debates," if such an expression may be used, which for two seasons past have taken place in the House of Commons. (Hear.) But Sir Robert Peel is a man of a more wily nature than Sir John Trollope, whose letter I have spoken of. Sir Robert Peel knows that there are times in most countries when statesmen must cast about very warily before they commit themselves to any certain policy. (Hear.) Seeing that the one object of Sir Robert Peel's policy is to continue Sir Robert Peel as Prime Minister of this country, it is evidently important to him that he should make no false step at this particular time. (Laughter.) Last year he told us that he would make no alteration for that session; we know not what he may say this time; but I do not think he is bold enough, or so unwise to declare, so far as he and his Ministry are concerned, that they have nailed their colours to the mast, and that they will stand upon a principle which he has many a time pronounced unsound and fallacious. (Hear.) If he should—and if my wishes could compel him, he should do so—then what will be our course and that of the people? We shall go on as we are now doing—steadily advancing to our object, and the final accomplishment of our labours. Multitudes of the men who call themselves "Conservative" in politics—who, somehow or other, from some hallucination, have looked upon Sir Robert Peel as the saviour of their country—will find that, as far as commercial matters go, he is not its saviour, but its destroyer. (Loud cheers.) They will be inclined to come over to us. And that still numerous and influential party who stand between the monopolists and the League—those connected with the late Government, and those who hope to be connected with the next (laughter)—I expect that, in case such a declaration should be made, they would find it perfectly easy to abandon their professions in favour of a fixed duty, seeing that it could be no longer carried out, and no arrangement of parties could be made to secure it, and that we should in future receive their cordial and hearty co-operation. (Hear.) It is said that to-night, or on some early occasion, several new writs will be moved for in the House of Commons, in consequence of resignations of members which are about to take place. We are pledged to contest these seats—(loud cheers)—in boroughs, and it may be in some cases in counties. (Renewed cheers.) But to carry out this great scheme more labour is required than most of you have any conception of. Greater labour has been bestowed in the collection of the fund now in hand, and in the agitation which has been carried on for the last four months, than any man can fairly judge of who has not partaken of it. (Hear.) There has scarcely been a night upon which meetings have not been held, and frequently two upon the same evening. Every part of the northern districts has been scoured and thoroughly visited: no man in that part of the country, who has not been desirous of remaining in ignorance, can say he has not had an opportunity of instructing himself upon this great question. Having done all this, and worked thus hard, returned to the metropolis, and being now in the act of addressing you, the Free-Trade representatives of the great mass of the Free Traders of this metropolis, I think that we have a right to call upon you for a more evident expression of your sympathy and support than we have heretofore received. (Loud cheers.) I wish it were possible to let every one in this building see such a meeting as many of those which we have attended. You would there see manufacturers, shopkeepers, and artisans of every description, vying with each other in the support they give to the League. As many small tickets, or cards with subscriptions upon them, as would fill a hat have been collected at several of these meetings, which have not been one-fourth so numerous as this. Five, ten, and twenty shillings have frequently been given by men whose only property has been their labour (cheers); who never see a shilling or a sovereign which is not the produce, hardly earned, of their weekly toil: but, being deeply conscious that upon the solution of this question depends their steady employment and obtaining remunerative wages, they have nobly stepped forward to help in this great contest. There was a contest, I think it was in ancient Carthage, when the women of that city freely gave up all their ornaments and their trinkets to raise a fund to defend that city from its enemies. (Hear.) I think in modern times a similar noble example was presented by the city of Warsaw. Neither of those cities were successful in their defence of their rights and liberties from the aggression of their powerful foes. Is there not spirit, virtue, liberality, and zeal enough in this great metropolis to do something like that which has been done in fifty towns in this country, any one of which might be added to this metropolis, and it would appear no larger for it? (Loud cheers.) Oh, I have delighted in some of those meetings that we have attended! It does the heart good to see a devotion to a great and just principle like that we plead for. No tampering with it—no hoping for compromise—no casting about to escape from the just burthen which they must bear in prosecuting this labour! (Cheers.) Open a subscription among 1000 or 2000 people, and not a man will leave the room till all the subscriptions have been added up, and the whole of the sums read out to the assemblage. It is consolatory to find in this cause that, when you speak of giving money, people are, if possible, still more anxious to stay; and the subscriptions which have been raised in Lancashire and Yorkshire, especially in Stockport and other towns in the north of England—I say those subscriptions test the sincerity of the men who give them, and are, as it were, a loud voice speaking to the statesmen of this country, that however much it may suit the interests of party to leave this question unsettled, or however much it may suit their arrangements to settle it upon some basis which shall only be another unsettlement, yet to the people it is of the utmost importance that the principle they plead for should be fairly and fully adopted, and that the wrongs that they denounce, the tyranny against which they now contend, should for ever be destroyed in this country, and that their industry should be free, and they should be at liberty to exchange with all the world. (Loud cheers.) We have the same cause now that we have ever had. We have the same principle we started with; we have made no change. Last night's meeting at Wakefield is proof that no change will ever be made. We go on with these principles and with the same policy: we ask but the cordial co-operation of our countrymen, and we are certain that there awaits us a great and a glorious triumph; and we know further, that although this country suffers for every hour that this law remains un repealed, yet that with that suffering there is no little gain; there is a healthier feeling with respect to public matters in this country now than there has been probably within the memory of any one in this vast meeting. I am sure that the middle classes are becoming conscious of their power and their rights. (Hear.) They see that the oppressor is on the one side of them, and the oppressed on the other: (Loud cheers.) They feel that upon them rests a heavy responsibility; that they are blameable if these wrongs continue, if this suffering is to be longer endured. They are taught that with them rests the legislative power in this empire, and that if they will only be true to themselves and to the great, just, and holy principle for which they contend, there is no power in the aristocracy of England—none in the mortgaged and embarrassed portion of them especially—none in that class who seem to wish to rise upon the ruins of their country—that there is no power with them to oppose the free and full expression of the public will. (Cheers.) Do not imagine, because there are some members of counties who can neither be converted nor changed, that we shall, therefore, never succeed. Do you suppose that any members of close counties, or small, and almost close boroughs, are to be put in competition with an equal number of members representing the counties or the large towns and cities of Yorkshire and Lancashire? Do you imagine that Glasgow can speak out continually, and Edinburgh declare to its representatives that their position is perilous (hear, hear); that Manchester, Leeds, Sheffield, and Birmingham, and, more than all, that this vast metropolis (cheers) can speak out, and that any man holding the position of Prime Minister in this country should disregard your voice, and listen only to the clamour of an interested set of monopolists, who are utterly careless of the interests and the wants and wishes of their country? (Tremendous cheers.) It may be that we are entering on another session of Parliament which will be, to some extent, fruitless as the last. There will be stormy debates, doubtless, and many great interests of the empire will come under discussion. I long to see what those valiant men will do who have given us every name that is vulgar, rude, and calumnious at the meetings they have lately held. Why, they said, we were an illegal association, and now they are trying their best to follow in our steps! Sir John Trollope declares that he cannot be considered a supporter of the Ministry, unless they will put down so noxious an association as this (laughter); and yet these very associations are passing resolutions that they will correspond with similar associations in various parts of the country; that they will, in fact, become "corresponding societies," and agitate the country; that they will get up clamour, make uncertainty still more uncertain, and cause the present doubts of the farmers to become still deeper bewilderment, in order that they may maintain a law which we have determined to overthrow. (Loud and protracted cheering.) Well, let them do their best. I do not pretend to be a prophet, but yet there is little risk in predicting, that the very men who at these county farmers' protection meetings have been using such violent language against us, as well as some language not very civil towards Sir Robert Peel and the Ministry,—I think, I say, that there will be no risk in predicting, that now in Parliament they will be as quiet as before; that when Sir Thomas Fremantle is sent round to the back benches, with his bland and insinuating manner, requesting most particularly from Sir Robert himself that there shall be as little said as possible by that side of the House (laughter),—my opinion is, that we shall find these men just about as tame as before, and equally ready to deceive the farmers as they were upon previous occasions. And then, when this agitation has gone on in the counties, and this treason to the farmers has been manifested in the Senate; and when this inolement season shall have passed, and the sun shall shine gaily upon the agricultural counties of this country, so that we may visit the farmers again;—then our waggons will be drawn forth, and our hustings erected, our placards posted, and the farmers called together as before. We will address them as we have previously done:—"Are you yet convinced that the men whom you have trusted have deceived you—that this Corn Law, which was to be the sheet-anchor of your safety, has been merely a slippery quicksand in which you have well-nigh been engulfed? Are you, then, ready now to cast away all those miserable delusions on which you have rested? Can you trust us, who five years ago spoke the very tones, uttered the very words we now utter; who have never deceived you, who have wished to be your friends, who have wished politically to make you free, and render you socially and individually prosperous? (Loud cheers.) Will you come forward and join the people of the north of England, the intelligent population of Scotland, and the myriads of honest men of the metropolis of this country? Will you take the Anti-Corn-Law League by the hand, who will be your firm friends, and save you from the delusions and treachery of your landlords (hear); making you that which you wish to be, and which, but for the Corn Laws you would be—the independent and prosperous yeomen and cultivators of the soil of your country." (Immense cheering.) Well, now, some plan must be taken this spring to obtain that co-operation from this metropolis which the people of the north feel that they have a right to demand at their hands of its inhabitants. (Loud cries of "Hear.") London is almost a large aggregation of cities: it is difficult to compass it; plans and schemes that would succeed in other places are not applicable to this. But there are hundreds here, and thousands outside these walls, who have the means to give and a conviction to induce them to contribute—possessing a zeal which will urge them to assist liberally. (Hear.) You need not wait until you are called upon in a formal manner. Spontaneous free gifts are better than those which have to be asked for. There is no reason why thousands in this metropolis should not call at our offices in Fleet-street, and there leave anything which they may feel at liberty to give, for the prosecution of this great cause. (Cheers.) If there be a population in this empire more than another called on to help this cause, it is the inhabitants of this city. I cannot conceal from myself, nor can you conceal from yourselves, the terrible condition of those by whom you are surrounded. Every paper which issues from the press tells a dreadful tale of woe; hundreds—ay, scores of hundreds—are suffering the utmost destitution, myriads are in hopeless penury. (Hear, hear.) Where is help to come from? Who offers these wretched beings a remedy? Has Government proposed a cure? (Cries of "No, no.") Do the monopolists say they have anything that can raise the wages of the sempstresses that have been spoken of, and give honour, independence, and virtue to thousands who are tempted to crime? (Renewed cries of "No, no.") No. Offer me a remedy, if it be at all feasible, I will join in applying it; but so long as no other party has a remedy to offer—so long as we come before you year after year with the real cure for many of the nation's ills—I do think that we have a right to claim and call upon the vast population of this city—upon its wealth, its intelligence, its benevolence, and its sympathies—for co-operation and support in ridding your city from the terrible disgrace which now rests upon it, that a large portion of your population is starving in the midst of more of wealth, splendour, gorgeousness, and power of aristocracy than ever congregated in any other city on the face of this earth! (Loud cheers.) I feel that I have spoken to-night under disadvantages which must be evident to most of you—under a state of exhaustion which ought to have excused me from being here at all; after continued labour for months past, and after a very long journey from Wakefield to-day (hear, hear): but, under any circumstances almost, I would come forward to add to what I have before said to the assembled thousands of my countrymen in condemnation of this most hideous law, and of this guilty principle, which a majority of the legislators of this country seem resolved to uphold. I have said before, and I say it now, I trust not in faith. I have no reliance in their patriotism, I have no faith in their love of justice. I have no hope that the heart's core—the stony heart of Monopoly—will ever relent. But I have faith in my countrymen. (Cheers.) I have faith in the people of this land. (Enthusiastic cheering.) I have faith in you: I know that the men whose countenances I shall view within an hour hence are but the ephemeral supporters of an ephemeral but an enormous abuse; and trusting as I do to the intelligence and virtue of this people, —and I should be ashamed to own myself one of you if I had not this trust.—I can congratulate you with the utmost sincerity of heart that the days of this system are numbered—that even now the labours of the League are diffusing gladness and joy by anticipation among thousands of families whose hearths and hearts have been long desolate. (Loud cheers.) I am certain, also, that the world is looking on upon this struggle: intelligence and virtue everywhere will respond to the appeal that we now make to you, and the time is not far distant when Britain shall add to all the other things of which she may boast, this greatest of all boasts—that she was the first of the great commercial nations of the earth who struck down a principle which has existed for centuries, and for centuries has been false, and that she had, as she has done on many other matters and on several occasions, led the world in a wiser path, and to a new career of greater, brighter, and more enduring triumphs than man has ever yet achieved. (The hon. gentleman concluded the above eloquent speech amid reiterated applause.)

The CHAIRMAN then came forward and said:—Ladies and Gentlemen, I am quite sure, after the eloquent speech which we have heard from Mr. Bright, you will agree with me that it will be most politic, and in every respect the best proceeding, to close the meeting. [The Chairman was here interrupted by loud calls for Mr. Moore and Mr. Fox.] I am quite sure that every gentleman who attends here will recognise the rule which has hitherto been strictly adhered to, to confine the speaking to those gentlemen appointed by the Council previous to assembling in this theatre; and although no man present would listen with greater delight than I should either to Mr. Fox or Mr. Moore, yet, being myself always the servant of the Council, I feel compelled to adhere to the usual practice, and to ask your indulgence until next Thursday evening.

The meeting then separated.

WAKEFIELD.

WAKEFIELD, Wednesday Evening.

The promised "demonstration of the friends of Free Trade, and the abolition of the Corn Laws, in the West Riding of Yorkshire," was made this evening. The theatre selected for this truly magnificent display was the noble hall of the Corn Exchange, which was most judiciously and tastefully fitted up for the occasion. Along the side of the hall, beneath the windows (which, as well as the gallery, were ornamented with flowers and evergreens), and facing the great entrance doors, extended the guests' table at the centre of which was placed the chair, having twenty seats on either hand. Seats were provided for 625 in all; and, large as was the number, every ticket was disposed of several days ago, and many persons applied in vain as early even as Monday.

The following localities were represented by their delegates:—Doncaster, Halifax, Parsley, Gomersall, Clackheaton, Heckmondwike, Doncaster, Dewsbury, Yeadon, Horsforth, Guiseley, Rawden, Pudsey, Batley, Barnsley, Wakefield, Huddersfield, Lindley, Lockwood, South Crosland, Hunsley, Kirkburton, Golear, Dalton, Kirkstall, Murfield, Skelmanthorpe, Clayton West, Holmthorpe, Molegreen, Birkby, Bradford, Otley, Morton, Clayton, and Leeds.

James Garth Marshall, Esq., presided as chairman, the vice-chairmen being H. H. Blansfield, George Craven, F. Schwann, and F. Carbutt, Esqrs. The whole of the excellent arrangements were under the immediate superintendence of—Kendall, Esq., assisted by G. M. Bingley, Esq., the secretary of the Wakefield Anti-Corn-Law Association.

On the right of the chairman sat Lord Morpeth, D. Gaskell, Esq., Colonel Thompson, George Wilson, — Grimsdale, William Hand, George Oxley, T. Baseley, E. Baines, T. Plint, R. Milligan, R. Forbes, J. Schofield, — Gully, Joseph Kaye, R. Ackroyd, William Morris, and Willoughby Wood, Esqrs., and the Rev. J. G. Morris.

On the left were Richard Cobden, Esq., the Mayor of Leeds; John Bright, — Wilkinson, R. B. R. Moore, D. Lupton, T. Mallon, George Crosland, H. Ashworth, G. Wise, J. P. Clay, James Thompson, — Welsh, D. Peckover, — Dawson, H. Clayton, Taylor Crooke, W. Harvey, and — Chadwick, Esqrs.

The Hon. C. P. Villiers, who had accepted an invitation, was unable, from sudden indisposition, to attend.

The cloth having been removed,

The CHAIRMAN rose and gave in succession the usual routine toasts:—"The Queen," "Prince Albert," "The Queen Dowager," "The Prince of Wales and the rest of the royal family."

The CHAIRMAN expressed his regret that they would not have the pleasure that day of seeing amongst them one of the greatest champions of their cause, Mr. Villiers, who was unavoidably detained.

Mr. PLINT then read letters of excuse from the Earl Fitzwilliam, the Earl of Radnor, Lord Kinnaird, Earl Dacre, Sir George Strickland, Edward Vassour, Esq., F. H. Fox, Esq., of Barnham, Sir Charles Tennant, George John Farquharson, Esq., of Edinburgh, Esq., M.P.; W. B. Wrightson, Esq., M.P.; Edward Baines, Esq.; — Wrightson, Jun., Esq.; Mark Phillips, Esq., M.P.; Thomas Blakbeck, Esq., of Settle; and Thomas Tansley, Esq., M.P.; all of whom signified their inability to attend it. He then read a report, which embodied a statement of the amounts collected in the different districts of the county in the present and the preceding year. The totals of each district were as follow:—

| | 1843. | 1844. |
|----------------------|-------|---------|
| Leeds district .. | £1743 | £3876 |
| Barnsley do. .. | 100 | 254 |
| Sheffield do. .. | 75 | 1800 |
| Doncaster do. .. | 75 | 100 |
| Bradford do. .. | 1000 | 2768 |
| Huddersfield do. .. | 1000 | 2180 |
| Halifax do. .. | 1000 | 1885 |
| Heddon Bridge do. .. | 240 | 400 |
| Brighouse do. .. | 64 | 90 |
| Wakefield do. .. | 120 | 357 |
| Holmfirth do. .. | — | 212 |
| Total .. | £6139 | £18,157 |

The CHAIRMAN then rose, and, after some general remarks, said:—We are met here to-day to discuss the advantage of an entire freedom of industry and of trade, especially in the article of corn—apart from all party distinctions in politics, or any other differences of opinion. We recognise that great social principle, as the one sole object of our meeting. We have among us men of all shades of political opinion, who freely meet to co-operate in this one great object; and we shall separate in all other respects as independently as when we met. When we look around us and see what England was—what our industry has made her—do we not burn with shame, when we reflect that the people who have created this great nation go to their work in chains and fetters, wrought by pernicious monopolies and injurious restrictive laws? (Cheers.) Can we look at one another, and think of these things, and not form a vow, inaudible perhaps, but deeply seated in our breasts, that we will devote the whole energies of our lives in combating this thralldom, until we have utterly destroyed it, and until our industry is as free as are our persons and our thoughts? (Cheers.) I will not, however, dwell upon these topics, which more properly belong to other gentlemen to discuss; but I will merely allude to one most certain proof at once of the goodness of our cause, and that our advocates have well and truly fought our battle. That proof is in the number of converts to our principles from all classes of society in all parts of the kingdom, who spontaneously are thronging into our camp. The League has not obtained these acquisitions by any unworthy or unwise abandonments or compromise of their one great principle. To that we must adhere. It is the sole ground of our strength and union. It cannot, however, be other than a great encouragement to us to find that men who are now our firmest supporters, come from the ranks of the noblest and wealthiest of the landed proprietors. (Cheers.)—from the largest and most skillful agriculturists, as well as from the tolling millions, both in town and country. (Cheers.) But whilst we are welcoming new converts, there is another welcome to be spoken of to-day. Lord Morpeth—[Here the whole assemblage rose as one man, and commenced cheering, characterized by the most intense enthusiasm, which did not subside for several minutes. At times it appeared to die away, and silence to be about to be restored, but again and again it was renewed with redoubled energy.] Lord Morpeth is no new convert to the principles of Free Trade. He is no new visitor of these large meetings of the West Riding. It is because we know him so well—because we know him as a statesman and a man—because we know the qualities equally of his understanding and his heart (cheers)—it is for these reasons that the return of Lord Morpeth amongst us is welcomed with a degree of respect and of joyful cordiality that could not but have attended the fullest acquisition of the support of his distinguished name. I now, gentlemen, propose to you the health of the Right Honourable Lord Viscount Morpeth.

The toast having been drunk with the most unbounded enthusiasm,

Lord MORPETH rose, and was received with a reiteration of the cheering with the mention of his name had been at first greeted. His lordship having acknowledged the kindness with which he had been received, and observed that he was bound to look to himself, that his coming amongst them should not appear to rest on any false pretences, said:—The chief object of this gathering, as I understand and interpret, is, upon the part of the West Riding of Yorkshire, to do honour and to give encouragement to the Anti-Corn-Law League, and to its deputation now present, and to promote, as far as in them lies, the abolition, the total and immediate abolition of the Corn Laws. (Immense cheering.) That you inform me is the object and meaning of your present gathering. (Yes, certainly.) Well, then, I know it will be inquired both by friend and by foe (hear), "am I prepared to go so far?" (Hear, hear.) My last dealing, as you may probably remember, with the subject of the Corn Laws, was in the year 1841, as a member of the then existing Government, and as being a party to the proposition for an 8s. duty. (Hear, hear.) In that proposition we failed, and we fell (laughter and cheers), because the upholders of the present Corn Laws, our opponents then, as they are your opponents now, thought that we proposed to concede too much, and that our proffer was over liberal to the consumers. Now, so far from being admonished by failure, so far from being covered by defeat, I think the day for the same terms is gone by (here the meeting rose en masse and cheered vociferously), and that what was considered by the constituents of the empire to be too much then, would be too little now. Moreover, the very fact of my coming here under the bond of no coercion (having remained aloof from public life for the last two years), without concert or consultation with any one, speaking entirely and exclusively for myself—all this, gentlemen, is a proof that I do not wish to withhold my acknowledgments for the zeal and energy which have been displayed by the Anti-Corn-Law League; not, of course, pretending to endorse everything they may have said or may have done, or to withhold my sympathy for the struggle which you my late constituents of the West Riding are so gallantly and, as we have just had a proof, so munificently carrying on to promote the cause in which you conceive—and justly conceive (immense applause)—your vital interests are deeply involved. But, gentlemen, though I feel that I might safely wrap myself up in vague generalities, and steer clear of using any expression which should run counter to the feelings even of him who feels the strongest and goes the farthest among you; yet in your own presence, gentlemen, and in the presence of your distinguished guests—although I am aware that I may be somewhat checking those plaudits which have even now rung around me, and may be damping the warmth which seems to glow in your welcome of me—I do not scruple to avow that, at any time hereafter—either if I should think that the necessary or best understood interests of the public revenue absolutely required it, or if I should see no other way of effecting a better settlement of the whole question than that which now prevails; or if I thought I was making a great advance in a right direction—in these or in such like cases, I do not debar myself from the power of acquiescing in a fixed duty of low amount. (Loud cries of "No, no," that won't do," and expressions of dissent.) I was prepared for the expression of some dissent to the liberty which I nevertheless must reserve to myself. I knew that in so doing I should not, as Mr. Bright thought of the West Riding formerly, come quite up to the mark, or as my friends the Americans say, with more expressiveness than refinement, I should not quite "toe the mark." But when I have said this, which I have thought it right as an honest man to do (cheers), not foreseeing what combination of circumstances might arise, I at once frankly add, that I am by no means bigoted to this measure of a fixed duty. (Cheers.) Indeed, when it is thus limited to a small amount, I am not inclined to attach to it the same importance, on one side or the other, which is sometimes done upon both. At all events, I demur to any intolerance with respect to this proposition, and sure I am, at least of this, that I would infinitely prefer a repeal, a total and immediate repeal, to a year's continuance of the law as it now subsists. (Immense applause.) And even if in the present year, a total and immediate repeal could be carried,—as I suspect it would be, gentlemen, if the ultimate decision rested with you (cheers),—I certainly should not be inconsolable, or long in making up my mind to the result. (Cheers.)

His lordship then proceeded to remark, (that he had shared in the satisfaction of the audience in the accounts of the progressive advances of Free Trade and free industry; and, having dwelt upon some general topics, trusted he would be excused for adding more to the way of preface to the toast—"Prosperity to the West Riding, and may its agricultural, manufacturing, and commercial classes become convinced that their true and permanent interests are indissolubly united, and have their surest basis in freedom of trade and industry." (Cheers.) His lordship having briefly painted, in glowing terms, the happy results of unfettered commerce, said:—I do not wish, gentlemen, upon such an occasion, to employ any serious or solemn terms, when at least our meeting, in its aspect, is entirely festive, though none can doubt the sober seriousness of your determination. ("Yes, yes, we are determined.") But what I want our opponents—the opponents of free industry—to lay to heart is, whether, in the course they are pursuing, they are not fighting against nature itself, and against the laws which guide and bind the universe? (Cheers.) For what, gentlemen—what is the obvious meaning, what is the inevitable inference of those arrangements which mingle on the surface of our globe—so much of want here, and so much of abundance there—here, such utter destitution—there, such prodigal profusion? Writers of fiction and fancy have been pleased, sometimes, to attribute voices to the winds, and to people with sounds the echoes of the hills; but the real words which Nature sends forth through all her wide departments are "work" and "exchange." (Great cheering.) His lordship then illustrated this position by a reference to America, whose inexhaustible granaries could stay the advances of our own pauperism, and supply the hungry of England with bread. The English traveller in foreign climes found many grounds for exulting in the superior advantages of his own country; but his exultation was checked when he contrasted the fearful pressure, the destitution, and sometimes famine, which visited so many homes and families. He then expressed his warm sympathy with the League, and counselled them not to undervalue their opponents. He concluded as follows:—Yes, gentlemen, I know not what new forms of tactics the enemy may assume. Farmers may secede from useful agricultural societies. (Hear, hear.) The Anti-League may be rallying up to scatter the light chaff of your arguments with the heavy flail of their logic. (Loud laughter.) You may be accused of setting fire to risks, or resorting to another element—they may threaten you with submergence in rivers (laughter); but you will look upon all these ebullitions of hostility as evidences and omens that you are gaining ground—that you are making way—that you are making yourselves felt. And it is that I may be sure of indicating the principle which I believe embraces all our efforts, and of rivetting our allegiance to the cause which I believe the exigencies of our country, and the circumstances of the world make emphatically the cause of the day, that I propose to you to drink—"Prosperity to the West Riding, and may its agricultural, manufacturing, and commercial classes become convinced that their true and permanent interests are indissolubly united, and their surest basis in freedom of trade and industry."

The toast was received with great enthusiasm.

The Mayor of Leeds, Mr. HAWES STANFORD, then proposed "The healths of Richard Cobden, Esq., M.P., and John Bright, Esq., M.P., the undaunted and untiring champions of Free Trade, with the warmest thanks for their invaluable exertions." (Cheers.)

The toast having been drunk,

Mr. COBDEN presented himself to the company, but was for some time prevented from addressing them by the reiterated sounds of applause with which he was received. Silence having been obtained, the honourable gentleman disclaimed for himself and Mr. Bright taking to themselves, exclusively, the meed of praise which had been bestowed upon them, which was due in as large a share to others whose names were not often heard beyond the council-room of the League, but who were serving the great cause with as much devotion and efficiency as any member of the Council whose duties were of a more public nature. Mr. Cobden then addressed himself to the general question, and, after many pointed observations, said:—We have been met elsewhere with the objection, that corn is a fair subject for taxation. Well, gentlemen, though we are Free Traders, we do not profess to legislate on the fiscal affairs of this country, and if it were proposed to levy a tax upon corn fairly and equitably, and without carrying with it by insidious means a great monopoly, I do not know that we, as Free Traders, should be called upon to interfere with that form of taxation. But to impose a tax upon bread is a course which I never read of in the history of any country, however barbarous. What, however, is this proposal? It is that we should tax the corn brought from abroad, and not corn raised at home; and the notorious object of that is, to give the growers of corn at home protection. Now, we object to that because it is a monopoly. We object to it upon principle, and still more do we object when the tax must be at the expense of the great majority of the community who cannot be compensated for it. For it is not in the power of Parliament to give protection either to the manufacturer or to the labourer. To them, therefore, a monopoly in bread must be an uncompensated injustice. If there be any gentlemen who really and honestly desire to raise a tax upon corn, they must propose, in order to prove the honesty of their purpose, that the tax should be levied in the shape of an excise at the mill. I speak as an individual, and I denounce such a tax; but, speaking as a Free Trader, if they propose a Corn Law, and wish not to inflict a monopoly upon their country, the plan is to lay a tax upon all corn ground at the mill, and allow foreign corn to come into this country free; then everybody eating corn would pay a tax, and nobody growing corn would derive advantage from such a tax. I, however, think that, when the question comes in that shape, there will be no one in this country particularly clamorous for a bread-tax—(cheers)—no more than there are to be found persons clamouring for the re-imposition of a tax upon salt, or any other article from which they derive no profit. If you want a revenue from corn, you may get by a tax at the mill ten times as much as you can get by a duty on foreign corn, while the people will eat bread at the same price. Mr. Cobden then noticed the charge made against the League of being too precipitate, which he ably refuted. He urged on the meeting never to depart from the abstract justice of the principle. The progress they had made was a sufficient argument for adherence to the principle. They had had to educate the nation, having nothing to sustain them but simple truth and justice. They had persevered without swerving to meet the exigency of any party. Mr. Cobden continued:—We are not politicians or statesmen, and have never aimed at being such. We were driven from our businesses quite unexpectedly to ourselves; for I declare solemnly, if I had thought five years ago that I should have been gradually and imperceptibly brought to the station I now occupy, and from which I had foreseen, doubtably to return (loud cheers)—I say, if I had foreseen, five years ago, that the struggle in this cause would have involved sacrifices of health, of time, of domestic comfort—say, other sacrifices, too, which men of business can comprehend—I believe, much as I felt upon the question, I should not have dared, in justice to myself, or to others to whom nature has given a claim upon me, to have taken a part. (Loud cheers.) Given a claim upon me, to have taken a part. (Loud cheers.) But our question has been advancing until it has become a great national and a great political question; and now, when we find our cause lifted to the first rank in the senate, we want men there—men having established character as statesmen—men to whom privileges appertain, and to whom the people are inclined to look as leaders, statesmen, and politicians. We want these men in the House now, to take charge of this great cause. (Cheers.) And if there was one sentiment more pervaded my mind than another, as I came to this place, it was the strong hope which I entertained, knowing that it was coming here to meet the distinguished statesmen to whom his countrymen are inclined to look as much as—I had almost said more—than any other living statesman (cheers) for the future conduct of the nation's interest in the House of Commons,—I say, the sentiment which pervaded my mind most strongly was, that, coming to the West Riding of Yorkshire, I should find the man who would be the means of conducting us through the desert to the land of promise,—and long continued cheering.)—I say it most emphatically—in the name of my colleagues and myself—that most happily should we surrender our cause into the keeping of such a man, if he advocated our principles in the House of Commons. Most gladly would we have tolled in the ranks out of doors, where we can be of efficient service, and where we would have cheerfully aided such a statesman in identifying his name with the greatest commercial reform—nay, the mightiest revolution that this world ever witnessed. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, I do not despair. (Loud cheering for several minutes.) We will work on another year. (Cheers.) I think the noble lord said a year, on another year. We will work on gladly for him for another year (cheers); and then, when he has reflected upon our principles—when he has considered the justice of our case—when he has brought his mind, by the unaided course of his own calm reflections and his high moral guidance, to believe that we are right and just in our object,—when he shall have done this, I live in hopes that he, at the end of a little year, will yet come forward and achieve the triumph of this great question in the House of Commons. (Cheers.) But, whilst we express that hope again, I must remind you that we are here as Anti-Corn-Law Leaguers. We are here pledged to our principles, and I must tell you, in the West Riding, that it lies with you now to show to the people of England that we are honest in the avowal of our principles. You may be called upon to make sacrifices, greater sacrifices, of personal feeling, rightly directed and well merited—greater personal attachment than any antiquity of this country ever was called upon to make. I neither hold out bribes nor threats to the noble lord. I know he is competent, by his own unaided intellect and right-minded integrity of character, to decide for himself. But we stand pledged not to Whigs or to Tories, but to the whole people of this country that we are not politicians. (Cheers.) Mr. Cobden having mentioned the names of various eminent individuals holding Conservative opinions who were with the League, said:—In conclusion, I say to the noble lord one word more. The noble lord has said to us "God speed you; you are in the right path, and I hope that you will go forward under your advancing banner." I say to him, he is in the right path, and God speed him whilst he makes progress in it.

The honourable gentleman sat down amidst the hearty plaudits of the meeting.

Mr. BRIGHT, on rising, was greeted with the same earnestness and warmth of feeling which had marked the reception of his distinguished colleague. The committee of management had requested him, said he, to propose to the meeting this sentiment—"The Abolition of the Sugar and all other Monopolies," and although it was not his custom to propose what were commonly called toasts, he had very great pleasure in proposing this sentiment, and was glad of being permitted to offer some observations upon it. The hon. gentleman then proceeded to discuss several bearings of the Free-Trade question; and commented at some length on the various meetings of the agricultural "protection" societies. Having next referred to his recent successful tour in Scotland, the honourable member said:—I have listened to the speech delivered by your late representative with feelings of mingled pain and pleasure; with feelings of pleasure at many beautiful sentiments, which were expressed and clothed in as beautiful language; but with pain, that hitherto he has not seen it right to take up to the full extent the principle which we ourselves are now advocating; but I cannot conceal from myself, that from his speech there is in his mind so small a remnant of love of what is old in this matter, that it seems most extraordinary if it should remain there long at all. (Hear, hear.) I listened to his description of some portion of his journey on the American continent; to the glowing language in which he spoke of those vast prairies, which seemed as if some countless ages since the vast ocean had flowed over them, and that by some omnipotent fiat it had been at once suspended and changed into the solid earth; and I heard his description of those large rivers which rise no one knows how, or knows really where they are in future centuries to lead as highways from the ocean to the people who inhabit their banks. I was pleased to hear all this, and when he spoke of the surplus produce of those vast countries, and of the want there is in this country, I confess that I did feel disappointed (loud cheers) that any bar should be proposed or permitted to be put, which should in any degree narrow the market and the circle out of which we might obtain a supply for the hungry people of this country. A small fixed duty might not be insurmountable by the corn growers of the nearest country; but to America, distant three thousand miles, and to those vast prairies distant five thousand miles, a fixed duty of very small amount would operate generally as an insurmountable barrier to a constant trade in corn between this country and that. I will not enter more into this part of the question. The League has put its hand to the plough, and it will not turn back. (Loud cheers.) The honourable gentleman concluded by proposing "The total and immediate abolition of the sugar and all other monopolies."

Mr. RAND, of Bradford, proposed "The health of Geo. Wilson, Esq., the chairman of the Anti-Corn-Law League." As a Conservative, it was a source of satisfaction to his mind, that, at a period when strong political feelings were dividing the country into contending parties, some common ground could be discovered on which they could lay aside their party politics, and unite in the prosecution of one great question—a question so great, indeed, that it might well call upon them not to lay aside those politics merely for a season, but almost, if not altogether, to forget their existence. With respect to the charge brought against the League, that their object in endeavouring to procure cheap corn was to bring down wages, it was one which had often been refuted, and which he himself most distinctly denied. The firm to which he belonged employed 1500 persons, and he could affirm that, generally speaking, their wages had been the highest when corn had been at the cheapest, and they had been the lowest when there had been a scarcity. (Cheers.) Much of the influence of every movement depended upon the character of those who took a leading part in it, and especially of those who presided over it. He had not the pleasure of knowing personally Mr. Wilson, the chairman of the League, but he had marked that gentleman's public course, and had read his addresses, and it was his firm impression that much of the progress of the League itself was to be attributed to the care, judgment, persevering energy, and unimpeachable character of Mr. Wilson, its chairman. (Great cheering.) He had, therefore, very great pleasure in moving the toast, "George Wilson, Esq., and may the labours of the Anti-Corn-Law League be speedily crowned with success." (Cheers.)

The toast was drunk with several rounds of applause. In the absence of Mr. Wilson, whose duties at the Council of the League, in London, prevented his attendance, Mr. H. W. ASHWORTH acknowledged the toast.

Mr. BAZZLEY proposed the health of the chairman of the meeting, which was drunk with great applause.

The CHAIRMAN returned thanks.

The health of Colonel Thompson was then proposed by Mr. SCHWANN.

Colonel Thompson acknowledged the compliment in one of his happiest moods, and concluded by proposing the health of Mr. Plint, who returned thanks.

The meeting was protracted considerably beyond twelve o'clock, and the greater part of the company remained to the latest moment, special trains having been retained at the several railway stations to convey parties to their respective homes.—Abridged from the Morning Chronicle.

STOCKPORT.

One of the largest, most respectable, and most enthusiastic meetings ever held in Stockport, took place last Tuesday, in aid of the great League fund of £100,000. The meeting was held in Betty's Royal Circus, Middle Millgate, a spacious pavilion capable of seating 2500 persons; and the whole available space in the boxes, pit, and galleries, was crowded to excess. At ten minutes before seven o'clock, the chair was taken by Cephas Howard, Esq., mayor of the borough; and on the platform were seated the following gentlemen:—Richard Cobden, Esq., M.P., Mr. Alderman Armitage, and Mr. A. R. E. Moore (a deputation from the League); Henry Marsland, Esq., M.P.; Messrs. Alderman Orrell, Alderman Mellins, Samuel Carrington, John Dyson Fernley; Rev. Charles Baker, Rev. S. Healey; the Town-Clerk; Messrs. Thomas Bakker, James S. Healey; Benjamin Ashton, John Lees, Henry Pearson, W. S. Dotts, Hamer, Sefton, Wilde, McCulloch, Carrington, Potter, &c. &c.

In opening the proceedings, the CHAIRMAN said, they were met for the purpose of receiving the deputation from the Anti-Corn-Law League, advocates of the repeal of the Corn Laws, and Free Trade in every department of commerce. (Loud applause.)

HENRY MARSLAND, Esq., M.P., then came forward to move the first resolution, and was received with cheers. He adverted to the origin of the Anti-Corn-Law League, the opposition they had met with, and the triumph they had achieved over their opponents. They had gone among the agricultural districts for the purpose of enlightening the minds of those for whose benefit the Corn Laws were said to be enacted. Great had been the labours of his hon. colleague (loud cheers) and his coadjutors, in the cause; and the farmers had now become convinced that they were not benefited by those laws; and had much rather that we should be the consumers of their produce than the victims of their policy. The Anti-Corn-Law League had done very much to liberate us from the political tyrannical in which we were tied, and men of all shades of politics were now found uniting in this great movement in favour of free and unshackled commerce. He rejoiced that this was no party-movement; and, as a proof that it was no party-movement, he was glad to be able to point to the gentleman who now occupied the chair. (Hear, hear.) After adverting to the deep distress which had lately been felt in Stockport—distress which might soon return unless the policy by which it had been caused was altered—he concluded by moving the following resolution:—

"That this meeting, being firmly of opinion that this country suffers severely from the baneful effects of monopoly, especially the Corn Law, and that all laws which interfere with the freedom of industry and with the bounties of Providence are impolitic and unjust, resolves to tender its best assistance, on all necessary occasions, to the National Anti-Corn-Law League, in its persevering endeavours for the complete abolition of all commercial monopolies."

The Rev. CHAS. BAKER, Baptist minister, briefly seconded the resolution, which passed without a single dissentient voice.

The CHAIRMAN then announced that there were some gentlemen who wished to present addresses to their worthy representative, Mr. Cobden. (Applause.)

GEORGE WOOD, an operative, came forward, and said he was deputed by the Mutual Aid Society, at the large mill under Mr. Edward Hollins, to present an address to Richard Cobden, Esq., on that occasion. The address was signed by 343 adults in Mr. Hollins' employ; and they had signed it from a deep-rooted conviction of the iniquity and injustice of the corn and provision laws, and also from the confidence they had in the Anti-Corn-Law League to carry out their object. In order to convince the meeting of that, they had subscribed, out of their hard earnings, £45 to the League. ("Hear, hear," and loud applause.) They knew that they had no more control over the value of their labour than the farmer had over the value of his potatoes. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) They knew that a whole loaf and a full measure of justice were better than half a loaf and the cant of humanity. (Hear.)

Mr. HAMER then presented an address to Mr. Cobden, from the burgesses and others of St. Thomas's Ward, containing similar sentiments to the preceding.

Mr. McCULLOCH presented an address from the inhabitants of Edgely Ward.

Mr. WILD presented an address from the operative tailors.

Mr. WILLIAM CARRINGTON presented an address from the operative hatters.

Addresses were also presented from the workmen employed by Mr. Alderman Orrell and Mr. Thomas Stewart.

Mr. COBDEN, M.P., then rose, and was received with enthusiastic plaudits from every part of the building, accompanied by waving of handkerchiefs and clapping of hands. When the applause had subsided, the honourable member proceeded to address the meeting. After returning thanks for the addresses which had been presented to him, he said, that latterly he had been paying a great deal more attention to other people's constituencies than his own—(laughter)—and, on the present occasion, he appeared before them rather in the character of a deputy from the Anti-Corn-Law League, than as representative for Stockport. He then adverted to the progress which the cause of Free Trade was making throughout the country, and to the opposition which had been shown to the League on the part of its opponents, in the shape of absurd charges of incendiarism and assassination, observing that he thanked the opponents of the League for the way in which they had been met. After having touched upon a variety of topics, Mr. Cobden concluded by expressing the gratification he felt at meeting his constituents on that occasion. If the League went on as it had done for two years longer, he had no doubt that his labours would be at an end; and he hoped they should at the end of that time have to meet again to congratulate themselves upon the great and glorious triumph of Free Trade. (Great applause.)

A Working-man, named WELSH, here got up, and said he wished to ask Mr. Cobden why he did not come out, and discuss the question of the Corn Laws with Mr. Feargus O'Connor, after having challenged him? (Disapprobation.)

Mr. COBDEN said he should be at open-air meetings, both in Lancashire and Yorkshire, during next summer; and if Mr. O'Connor would only condescend to be there, like other people, he should have no objection to face Mr. O'Connor. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. R. R. MOORE then rose, and, after some remarks on the addresses which had been presented to Mr. Cobden, proceeded to state the course which the League had adopted in enlightening the public mind on the question of Free Trade. In the course of last year, 7,000,000 of tracts had been distributed amongst the electors throughout the country, and there were numerous and convincing proofs of the good they had done. The attention of the whole press of the country had been called to the question; and the agitation carried on last year had had the effect of causing 36 more votes to be given in the House of Commons for Mr. Villiers's motion than ever there were before. After instancing other proofs of the successful results of the labours of the League, Mr. Moore proceeded to read a long list of subscriptions in Stockport, in aid of the £100,000 fund. (We are obliged, from the pressure on our space, to omit the items in detail: they shall appear in the regular list next week.)

Mr. MOORE then announced that the amount subscribed in the room was £284, in addition to £320 subscribed by Messrs. Orrell and Hollins in Manchester previously. (Applause.) Last year £411 was subscribed in Stockport altogether; this year the subscription would be trebled. He thought they would not leave the room till they had made the amount £1000. (Applause.) Several other subscriptions were then announced, after which Mr. Moore stated that the total subscriptions amounted to £1013 9s. 4d., independent of the £320 subscribed in Manchester, making the total contribution of Stockport ONE THOUSAND THREE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-THREE POUNDS NINE SHILLINGS AND FOURPENCE. (Great applause.) On the motion of Mr. J. D. FRANKLYN, the thanks of the meeting were then given to the deputation from the League, for their attendance.

Mr. COBDEN acknowledged the vote; and proposed a vote of thanks to the chairman, which passed unanimously, and the meeting then separated, at twelve o'clock.—Abridged from the Manchester Guardian.

BLACKBURN.

A meeting, in aid of the great League fund of £100,000, was held here on Monday evening last. Mr. William Eccles in the chair; addresses were delivered by Mr. Cobden, M.P., Mr. Bright, M.P., and Colonel Thompson, as a deputation from the Council of the League, and subscriptions were entered into in the room, amounting at the close of the meeting to £713, in addition to £320 subscribed by Messrs. Eccles, Thompson, and Co., and £20 by Messrs. Wardley and Sons at the Manchester meeting. The greatest interest and enthusiasm was manifested amongst all classes, and both sexes, in the object of the meeting. We have received a detailed report, but our limits will only admit the insertion of the subscriptions, which are as follows:—Eccles and Shorrocks, 200l.; Thomas Eccles and Children, 5l. 6s.; T. Wardley and Sons, 2l. (besides 20l. subscribed by them at Manchester); R. S. Ashton, 2l.; John Burnett, 1l.; Thomas Abbot, 1s.; Thomas Harrison, 1s.; John Birtwistle, 1s.; Henry Smalley, 2l.; Darwen-street, 1l.; Thomas Briddle, 1l.; Wm. Lister, 5s.; E. Haddock, Over Darwen, 1l.; John Smith, 1l.; Henry Briggs, 1l.; E. Knox, 4s.; John Birtwistle, 1s.; James Fildes, 1s.; Roger, Sparrow, and Co., 50l.; George Briggs, 10l.; John Humphrey, 10s.; John Webster, 2s. 6d.; Thomas Carr, 10s.; Oliver Koylance, 1l.; Thomas Seville, 1l.; William Eccles, 10l.; Mrs. Pilkington, 5l.; Miss Pilkington, 10l.; Miss E. S. Ashton, 5l.; Mrs. Pickett, 1l.; Sarah Ward, 1s.; Hargreaves and Gill, 3 guineas; T. Garstang, 10s. 6d.; Robert Mellor, 1l.; Mrs. Shorrocks, 1s.; George Yates, 4s.; Thomas Wilcock, 10l.; George Jackson, 5l.; Mrs. Fowler, 5l.; Two Juvenile Friends, 7s.; T. Vevers, St. Alban's, 10l.; W. Bulcock, 6l.; James Atkins, 2 guineas; R. Porter, 2 guineas; W. Yates, 1l.; John M'Nao, 1l.; A. M'Kie, 1l.; Richard Maudeley, 5s.; The result of giving up tobacco smoking, Edward Bates, 1l.; G. Hartley, 1l.; A. Plimble, 1l.; Wilding and Fisher, 5l.; G. Dewhurst, 2l.; John Thwaites, 5 guineas; Rev. Francis Skinner, 1 guinea; John Rutherford, 5 guineas; Thomas Coulthard, 1l.; Gerard Dixon, 5s.; Nathan Bowker, 5s.; an Assistant in one of the Tory buildings, Church-street, 2s. 6d.; Thomas Lightbound, 2s. 6d.; Joseph Haddock, 2s. 6d.; Sarah Whitehead, 2s. 6d.; James Aspin, 2s.; Mrs. Eccles and Children, 10l.; E. Ainsworth, 6d.; James Blacklock, 1 guinea; Richard Shackleton, 1 guinea; a Farmers' Friend, 2s. 6d.; Richardson and Thwaites, 2 guineas; John Arkwright, 2s. 6d.; Mrs. Pilkington and Children, Park-place, 5l.; Wm. Irving, 10s.; Thomas Jefferson, Starkie-street, 2s. 6d.; Thomas Ainsworth, 5s.; Thomas Burton, Jun., 1l.; James Shorrocks, 2l.; John Stolt, 10s.; A. Jardine, 1l.; John Ainsworth, 2l.; Wm. Hoole, 5l.; Mrs. W. Hoole, 2l.; Edward Jukes, 1 guinea; Thomas Shorrocks, 1l.; Thomas Witherington, 1l.; Robert Brown, 5l.; Richard Walsh, 1l.; W. Lowrie, 2s. 6d.; John Walmsley, 1 guinea; John Lucas, 10s.; Joseph Bates, 2s. 6d.; Edward Briggs, 30l.; Peter Little, 2s. 6d.; Mrs. Lister, 10s.; H. Lister, 5s.; J. Foster, 1l.; J. Pilling, 5s.; W. Johnson, 2 guineas; W. Bamber, 2 guineas; No. 3, Thomas-street, 1 guinea; H. Brooks, 10s.; Rd. Aspin, 2s. 6d.; One of Turner's Plumbers, 2s. 6d. (laughter); J. Boyle, (Salford), 2l.; J. Carr, 1l.; T. Marsden, 5s.; W. Briggs, 3 guineas; R. Webster, 1 guinea; an Enemy to all Monopolies, 5 guineas; Robert Rae, 10s.; Mrs. Bolton, 10s.; John Higginson, 4s.; Ralph Pearson, 5s.; John Furlong, 1l.; James Knox, 2 guineas; W. Shorrocks, 2s. 6d.; W. Briggs, 1 guinea; John Eastwood, 2s. 6d.; Mrs. Watson, 1s.; James Hatfield, 1s.; James Dickenson, 5s.; James Lawson, 1l.; J. Bradley, 1l.; A Friend, 5l.; H. Hodgson, 5s.; a Handloom Weaver, 2d.; W. Ridings, 6d.; a Lady, 2s. 6d.; a young Tradesman, 1l.; A Friend, 1s.; T. Brooksby, 2s. 6d.; John Heyhurst, 2s.; a Lady, 10s.; Richard Hargreaves, 2s. 6d.; W. Birtwistle, 5s.; John Pickup, 1l.; W. Slater, 2s. 6d.; John Walsh, 3s.; W. Beckett, 2s.; W. Crichley, 2s. 6d.; James Abbott, 5s.

Mr. BRIGHT here announced the total subscription to be 713l. 14s. 8d., exclusive of 200l. subscribed at Manchester by Blackburn gentlemen. (Great cheering.)

After a vote of thanks to the deputation, the meeting separated.

YORK.

On Thursday evening, the 26th ultimo, a public meeting was held in the Festival Concert Room, in this city, to receive a deputation from the Council of the League, consisting of Richard Cobden, Esq., M.P., John Bright, Esq., M.P., and Col. Thompson—the immediate object of the meeting being to aid in the collection of the great fund of £100,000.

The meeting was very numerously attended. On the platform we observed Richard Cobden, Esq., M.P.; John Bright, Esq., M.P.; Col. Thompson; Edward Smith, Esq., Sheffield; Wm. Allen, Esq., Malton; John Hopkins, Esq., Malton; W. O. Copperthwaite, Esq., Malton; John Swale, Esq., York; Chas. Robinson, Esq., York; Caleb Fletcher, Esq., York; T. J. Thompson, Esq., Malton; Henry Richardson, Esq., York; W. Richardson, Esq., York; Robert Henry Noddings, Esq., York; &c. There were also present the Rev. C. Wellbeloved; the Rev. W. Hincks; Leonard Simpson, Esq.; Joseph Rowntree, Esq.

At half-past six o'clock, on the motion of Mr. THOS. SWALE, seconded by Mr. FLETCHER, the chair was taken by Edward Smith, Esq. of Sheffield.

The CHAIRMAN, on presenting himself to the meeting, was received with cheers. He said:—Ladies and gentlemen, I confess it would have been more agreeable to me this evening to have appeared simply in the character of a visitor and spectator of the interesting proceedings which I doubt not we are about to witness. Had some of your own citizens been disposed to take this post, which they are so well qualified to fill, I think it would not only have been more appropriate, but also more agreeable to most of those connected with this movement. (Applause.) It is, however, a natural feeling, that those who hear the doctrines propounded in their city for the first time, which are now coming before them—I speak not of political doctrines (hear)—it is natural that they should be unwilling to connect themselves with such a movement, until they are well informed of their nature. But it is one of the most gratifying events of the time, that men of intelligence, whatever may be their political opinions, are now disposed to meet the question in the spirit of fair, calm, deliberate inquiry. (Hear.) I attended a meeting last night—a large and excellent meeting—at which were present many men of Conservative politics; and we have had many examples of such individuals not merely countenancing these proceedings with their presence, but also contributing liberally for the diffusion of that information which we now come to offer to you. They consider this question as one which ought to be rescued from party politics. (Great applause.) We come not here as agents of any party. We think the question of a sufficient supply of food to the community—of prosperity, not merely to the manufacturers, but to the agriculturists—is a question which ought to come home to the hearts and feelings of every one, without being bandied about from Whig to Tory, or Conservative to Radical, merely as a rallying point for party strife. (Applause.) Why should the question of commercial freedom be any more a question of political party strife, than any of those great scientific subjects with which we are acquainted, or those regulations which are requisite for the good government of the country, apart from any politics? We know of no reason whatever; and we entreat them, if any such be now present, to lay aside all prejudices for a while, and to come to this inquiry for the purpose of fairly listening to the facts and reasonings to be brought before them. If you can controvert those facts, and if we are wrong, the sooner we are set right the better. If we are under a grievous mistake, why, it is time that that mistake should be rectified—it is time the delusion should be cast aside—it is time that those men going about the country, turning the world upside down, should be put down at once, by the truth being exposed. (Applause.) He then took a general review of Free-Trade principles, and concluded amidst loud applause.

Colonel THOMPSON, who was received with great cheers, delivered an excellent speech, and was followed by

Mr. COBDEN, who was received with enthusiastic and prolonged applause. His able speech was almost exclusively devoted to proving the good which agriculture itself must do

(Continued on page 807.)

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE £100,000 FUND.

Subscriptions received during the week ending Wednesday, January 31, 1844.
N.B. As the subscription list is made up from Wednesday to Wednesday, contributions received on Thursdays and Fridays are not published in the LEAGUE of the Saturday immediately succeeding, but are included in the list of the week following.

| | | | |
|--|-----|----|----|
| Geo. Barge, 44, Grosvenor-st., C-on-M., Manchester | 21 | 1 | 0 |
| Robt. Thornley, Wrexham | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thos. Robinson, Low-street, Keighley | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Newall, Market-street, Manchester | 21 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Gibbon, Newton Alconby, Gt. Ancoats-st., do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Geo. Kendall, 18, Market-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Taylor, Jasmine Cottage, Hollinwood, near do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Osborn, Dunstable, Beds. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| L. Morrison, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| An Advocate for the Poor, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| An Old Trader, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| G. Osborn, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| J. B. Clarke, High-street, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| T. Partridge, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| H. Cheshire, Convent, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| G. Collings, Garden Meeting, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| A Friend, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Wm. Madlocks, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Joseph Millings, Covent Garden, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| John Nicholl, Church-street, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Wm. Hattie, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| David Burgess, Leighton-street, Woburn | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| John Harkness, Gwyn-street, Bedford | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Jas. M'Kay, Leighton-street, Woburn | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Wm. Jardine, Dunstable | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Wm. Gutteridge, High-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Gutteridge, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| G. Clarke, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| R., do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| T. B., do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Rev. B. Backwell, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| John Darley, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Small sums, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| M. A. Hall, Cable-street, Torrington | 0 | 11 | 6 |
| Wm. Dailyn, Potacra-street, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| John Denbow, Calve-street, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| John B. Kingdon, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| George Cosens, New-street, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| T. R. Tapley, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Edwin Handford, druggist, High-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George Toms, glove manufacturer, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Charles Veysey, High-street, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Rev. James Buckpitt, New-street, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 | 15 | 9 |
| R. Stanley, Deansgate, Manchester | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| A Friend, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| E. Clark, 77, Oxford-road, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Geo. Macbeth, 21, Oxford-street, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| John Potter, 1, George-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Grimshaw, 33, Ducle-street, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Joseph Brown, 71, St. Stephen's-st., Salford, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| T. H. Goddard, 16, Edward-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Jas. M'Dougal, 71, Westgate-street, Newcastle-on-Tyne | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Sheldermine, Moor-st., Rusholme, Manchester | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Wm. Phillips, Kingthorpe-grove, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Jas. Lomas, Britannia, New-on-street, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Nicholas Tweddle, 111, Duke-street, Hulme, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Guy Carruthers, 27, Daisy-street, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Robert Carruthers, 3, Thomas-street, New Brighton, Hulme, Manchester | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| W. Read, 47, Stretford New-road, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Bourne, 67, Fountain-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Francis, 308, Oldham-road, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. J., do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| A Friend, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Michael Conner, 57, Port-street, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| John Lamb, 81, Plymouth-grove, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mrs. Pickles, 99, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| N. W. Gilbody, 34, Faulkner-street, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Robert Weatherill, Openshaw, near A Conservative, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Miss Blyth, Peables, N.B., do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| William Blyth, Adelaide, South Australia | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Morgan, 197, Oxford-road, Manchester | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Edward Few, 116, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Wm. Kelly, 40, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| John Spence, 1, Clarendon-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Abraham Dearden, 4, York-street, Artwick, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Edw. Lancaster, Ogden-st., Gt. Jackson-st., do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| John Whybrough, York-street, C-on-M., do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Naylor, Bristol-st., Radnor-st., Hulme, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| J. Ogden, Stretford-st., Wilmot-st., do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| B. Warburton, Globe Inn, Medlock-st., do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend, per James Naylor, do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend, per James Naylor, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Geo. Boxson, Clarendon-street, Hulme, Manchester | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 | 15 | 0 |
| The Workmen of Rikanah Armistage and Son, Charles-town Mill, Pendleton, Manchester | 10 | 2 | 6 |
| And. Beveridge, 10, Reform-st., Dunfermline, N.B. | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| George Moffatt, 38, Fenchurch-street, London | 100 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. L. Colquhoun, Clathick, near Crieff, Perthshire | 3 | 3 | 0 |
| Samuel Oates, High-street, Knaresborough | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| David Jardine, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Addyman and Co., do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Thomas, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| John Roads, Low Bond-end, do. | 0 | 0 | 10 |
| John Munton, Windsor-lane, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| John Cesa, Castle-gate, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Daniel Dodson, Bridge, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Joseph Pratt, Windmill-lane, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Wm. Forster, Finkle-street, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| John Inman, Hay-park, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Josh. Dixon, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 | 11 | 0 |
| John Black, Bowdon Hall, Chapel-en-le-Frith | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Barnes, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Riley, Bridge Hulme-green, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Kirk, jun., do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Brinsley, Horwich, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Joe. Carrington, Boroughfield, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| T. Riddough, 14, Ducle-street, Manchester | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Wm. Collier, Weston, near Runcorn | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Do., do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Do., do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Do., do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Do., do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Do., His whole heart is in it | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| A Friend to the cause | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| James Hanks, St. Helen's | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Richard Heys, Hazel Grove, Cheshire | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| Timothy Wharmby, do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Henry Heys, do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| John Smith, jun., do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Bottoms, Stockport Moor, near do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Burrows, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Wood, jun., do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Charles Webb, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Harvey Lowndes, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Samuel V. dir, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| John Bradley, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| James Bradley, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |

| | | | |
|--|-----|----|---|
| Joseph Bradley, Hazel Grove, Cheshire | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| William Hallworth, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Watkinson, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| J. B. Whitehead, Holly Mount, Rawtenstall | 2 | 10 | 0 |
| Marianne Whitehead, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| P. O. Whitehead, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Elizabeth Whitehead, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| T. Hoyle Whitehead, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. O. Whitehead, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend in the West, per T. Bazley, jun. | 50 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Bazley, jun., Manchester | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Sutcliffe, farmer, Old Royd, near Todmorden | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Hargreaves, readmaker, Bacup, near Rochdale | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Randall Hibbert and Sons, Godley, Lancashire | 60 | 0 | 0 |
| Moses Chetham, Heywood | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Greenwood, tinner, Todmorden | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. and J. Bancroft, Ashton-under-Lyne | 10 | 10 | 0 |
| Thos. Hitchin, Newton Picken Works, near Butler-street, Manchester | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| E. T. Birch, St. Loyd-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Fred. Steiner, Hindburn House | 99 | 0 | 0 |
| Josh. Duckworth, Foxhill-bank, Lancashire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Chadwick and Ashworth, 5, Brown-street, Manchester | 40 | 0 | 0 |
| Isaac Knott, Hyde-street, Staleybridge | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Simpson, Foxhill-bank, Accrington | 105 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Berry, Church, near do. | 15 | 0 | 0 |
| Fred. C. Harrison, Aberysthach, n. Pontypool, S.W. | 1 | 10 | 0 |
| James Walkinshaw, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thos. Underwood, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Thomas Davies, grocer, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Jas. Lock, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Henry Hughes, stationer, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Chas. Davies, ironmonger, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| Robt. Carter, builder, do. | 0 | 0 | 2 |
| John Hair, miller, Pontnewnedd, nr. do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Rudge, Pontnewnedd, do. | 0 | 0 | 5 |
| Hugh Crawford, Windyedge, Belth, Ayrshire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robt. Hurdrop, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robt. Watson, Grahamston, Falkirk | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Rich. Halcro, Nile-street, Sunderland | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. French, Tatham-street, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Toms, Olive-street, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| C. Richardson, West Lodge, do. | 3 | 3 | 0 |
| Richd. Haddock, Bridge-street, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| J. P. Kidson, Bishopwearmouth, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| W. T. Moore, High-street, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A Free-Trade, per E. Robson | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| J. C. Carr, Queen-street, Sunderland | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Jas. Hills, High-street, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A Shipowner, London (2nd subscription) | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Palmer and D. H., Vine-place, Sunderland | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Cash, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Hills, High-street, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| J. C. Mounsey, do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Wm. Haddock, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Anon, do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| John Pickard, Whitburn-street, Monkwearmouth | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Coxon, King-street, Sunderland (2nd subscrip.) | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| Ogle and Douglas, Deptford, near do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| R. Perkins, Union Tavern, Long-millgate, Manchest. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thos. Ratcliffe, at Gardner and Bazley's Mill, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Benj. Parlow, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Patrick Graham, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thos. Pilling, do. | 1 | 4 | 0 |
| J. T., per Wm. M'Call | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Henry Johnson, Nor'h Meols, Lancashire | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Mr. Horrocks, Southport | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Farmer's Son and the Workmen of Holroyd and Co. | 2 | 13 | 6 |
| R. H. Armstrong, 26, Union-street, Manchester | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. and S. Alcock, Rook-street, do. | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| John Roberts, Henllan, near Denbigh | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| John Beasell, 6, Crescent, Peckham Rye | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| George Alder, London | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Richard Sefton, Longport, Staffordshire Potteries | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Plesed, 122, Ratcliffe highway | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Chapple, 10, Great Dover-street, Southwark | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thomas Sharer, Hartlepool | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| T. Young, 92, Fore-street, Finsbury | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| J. B. Richards, 12, Holland-street, Soho | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| T. A. Shaw, London | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Wakefield, 1, Vernon-st., Bagnigge Wells-road | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Theodore Lifford, Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Dr. William Brown, Melrose, Roxburghshire | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thomas Fletcher, John-street, Sunderland | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. and R. Titford, Leadenhall-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| John Stokes, Belle Vue Cottage, Shacklewell | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| S. H. Appleton, Paisley | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Clunie, 71, Watling-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Adam Gray, Melrose, Roxburghshire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Halliday | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Matthew Henderson, Chalton, near Belford | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George B. Hogg, Leven Mills, by Leven, Fifeshire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Hudson, New Bridge-street, Vauxhall | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Frank Blackett, 31, West Smithfield | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thomas Leonard and Son, Store-st., Bedford-square | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Mr. Freeman, Buntingford, Herts | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. H. Millard, draper, Windsor | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Ruston, Tulse-bill, Brixton | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Joseph Walters, Alfreton, Derbyshire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Isaac Hodgson | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Keswick, { F. Greenup, Portinscale | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Small Sums | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| "A Farmer of 320 acres" | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Anthony Spurr, 19, Chadwell-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Parkins, 11, Hanway-street, Oxford-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Robert Easto, Upper Tulse-hill, Brixton (2nd sub.) | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Watts, cooper, Shoe-lane, Fleet-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Beale, cooper, Smith's-buildings, City-road | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| T. E. Baker, 51, Burton-crescent | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Mitchellhill, 20, Argyle-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. T. Pratt, 14, Castigny-place, City-road | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Few Friends of Free Trade, using the parlour of the Duke of Clarence, Walworth | 1 | 5 | 0 |
| L. F. Frampton, Catterell | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. J. Baxter, 19, Bereford-street, Walworth | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Richard W. Cooper, Mill Wharf, Two Waters, Herts. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George Charlton, (2nd subscription) | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A. J. Rogers, Grosvenor House, Knightsbridge-green | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William Archer | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| David Hepburn | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| R. and J. Greig | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| David Clunie, sen. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Brown, academy | 0 | 6 | 0 |
| Andrew Fenwick | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Steele | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Honey, Ruthvenfield | 0 | 7 | 6 |
| John Murie, Windyedge | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Stewart Duncan | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Dr. Deaseret | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| William Counts, High-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Small Sums | 0 | 4 | 6 |
| J. R. Morrison, 2, Crown-court, Philpot-lane, London | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Charles Wilson, Bridge-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Wilson, Earlston | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Charles Wilson, jun., Bridge-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Rev. Henry Renion | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Heckford | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Andrew Lockie, farmer | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Andrew Johnston, Chronicle office | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Dods, grocer | 1 | 0 | 0 |

| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|--------------------|----|----|---|---|---|
| St. Neot's, Huntingdonshire. | Subscription from Friends at St. Neot's | | 23 | 2 | 0 | | |
| | F. Towgood, Riversfield | | 2 | 2 | 0 | | |
| | Mrs. Towgood, do. | | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| | R. Towgood, do. | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | A. Towgood, do. | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | William Maine, farmer, Toseland, near | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | P. Pratt | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | W. Clark | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | W. Parish, farmer, Great Staughton | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | Small Sums | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| A Working Man | Workmen of St. Neot's Paper Mills, per F. Chapman | | 0 | 10 | 0 | | |
| | William Warry, 18, John-street | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | F. Leecham, 2, Duck-lane | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | W. S. Kennedy, Burslem | | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| | G. W. Cant, 69, High Holborn, } per J. P. Burnard | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | T. Mason and Son, 70, do., } | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | W. T. P. | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Mrs. Charles Clark, 19, Giltspur-street | | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| | Wm. Pegg, 90, Upper Ground-street, Christ Church, Surrey | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Samuel Fyson | J. Rutter, Mitcham | | 6 | 5 | 0 | |
| John Rutter, do. | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| Thomas Russell, do. | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| J. S. | | 0 | 10 | 0 | | | |
| Joseph Bealby, 60, Holland-street, Blackfriars-road | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | |
| J. J. G. Wilkinson, 13, Store-street, Bedford-square | | 0 | 10 | 0 | | | |
| William Newbery, 6, King-street, Holborn | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | |
| Rev. J. O. Squier, Deptford | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | | |
| Mrs. Powell, 49, Lisle-street, Leicester-square | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | | |
| Mr. Watson, 7, Ironmonger-lane | | 1 | 1 | 0 | | | |
| W. Plumpton, 68 and 69, Whitechapel-road, per Mr. Tracy | Tracy | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | William Andrew, High West-street | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Henry Brady, High-street | | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| | J. Kimpster | | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| | William Angus, Union Cottage | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | G. | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | A Friend to Free Trade | | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| | John Davidson, Steam Flour Mill | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | F. P. Ionn, High-street | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Sydney Pilling, Bottle-bank | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| Gateshead. | William Hymers, High-street | | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| | Thomas Atkinson, Bridge-street | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Jacob Grey, do. | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | S. Forster, Melbourne-street | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Jas. Potts, Brandling Railway | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | T. Ferguson, Gateshead Fell | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | W. K. | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | John Burn, High-street | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | S. T. | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | J. F. Brett, High-street | | 0 | 10 | 0 | | |
| D. Hobkirk, Ravensworth-terrace | George Bell, High-street | | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| | W. Mudie, a working man, Bensham | | 0 | 10 | 0 | | |
| | T. Wariman, Pipewellgate | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Jas. Ennis, do. | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Thos. Hind, Heworth, near | | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| | A. R. Bowes, Mulgrave-terrace | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | J. Russell, Bottle-bank | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | Jas. Wilson, Hill-gate | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | G. Crawshaw (3rd subscription) | | 5 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Small Sums | | 0 | 3 | 0 | | |
| "A Farmer that wants no protection nor sliding scale" | | | | | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend, per T. Woods | Jas. Bell, Pool-street, Walsall, Staffordshire | | 0 | 3 | 0 | | |
| | Mr. Wallace, 66, Warren-street, Fitzroy-square | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Mr. Seamer, 33, Nelson-terrace, Stoke Newington-rd. | | 2 | 2 | 0 | | |
| | John Clark, brewer, Keawick | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Wm. M'Laren, 87, Lower East Smithfield | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | N. Griffin, Brixton-hill | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | James Nicholas, 4, Smart's-buildings, Holborn | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | Henry Thompson, 16, Northwick-ter., St. John's-wood | | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| | Mrs. Henry Thompson, do. | | 0 | 10 | 6 | | |
| | H. H. Thompson, do. | | 0 | 10 | 6 | | |
| Miss Charlotte Elizabeth Thompson, do. | J. S. Thompson, do. | | 0 | 10 | 6 | | |
| | T. V. | | 0 | 0 | 6 | | |
| | Helen Priestman Bright, One Ash, Rochdale, "to help Papa and Richard Cobden and Robert Moore to get bread for poor little children" | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | William Hudson, Manor-street, Little Bolton | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | John Whyte, Bridgman-street | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | John Dean, Silverwell House | | 25 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Wm. Barlow, Oxford-street | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Davies Rawsthorne, do. | | 2 | 2 | 0 | | |
| | John Brown Holden, do. | | 5 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Mary Emmett, do. | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| John Cottrill, Market-street | John Cottrill collected | | 2 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | James Knowles, New Market-place | | 0 | 12 | 6 | | |
| | John Knowles, do. | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Dan. Haddock, do. | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Wm. Ackroyd, do. | | 10 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | George Dutton, do. | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Charles Wiggins, do. | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Richard Dunderdale, Deansgate | | 2 | 2 | 0 | | |
| | John Manchester, do. | | 2 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Geoffrey Taylor, do. | | 2 | 0 | 0 | | |
| Wm. Green, do. | Sam. Ackroyd, do. | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Henry Wilkinson, do. | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Wm. Taylor, do. | | 2 | 2 | 0 | | |
| | John Harwood, do. | | 2 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Isaac Wright, do. | | 2 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Henry Bathé, do. | | 2 | 10 | 0 | | |
| | James Metcalf, Crown-street | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Joseph Crossland, Mawdsley-street | | 10 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | James and John Dayley, Shambles | | 10 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | John Mallett, St. George's-street, Little Bolton | | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| Charles Skelton, Cheapside | Thomas Nuttall, do. | | 1 | 1 | 0 | | |
| | John Platt, Newport-street | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | John Platt's Two Children | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | A Female Free Trader at J. Platt's | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | Samuel Hamer, Newport-street | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Isaac Matkin, Newport-street | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | James Slimcock, do. | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | Hugh Makinson, Knowsley-street | | 2 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | James Moore, at Mr. Thomasson's, New-mill, Little Bolton | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Thomas Davenport, do. | | 1 | 4 | 6 | | |
| Henry Hargreaves, do. | John Haslam, Bradshawgate | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Thomas Scowcroft, do. | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Robt. Birchby, do. | | 0 | 10 | 0 | | |
| | Henry Travers, do. | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Abraham Fletcher, do. | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | P. Tattersall, do. | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | Jas. Haworth (2nd sub.), do. | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Charles Pitfield, Great Moor-street | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Robert Andrews Hibbert, Wood-street | | 3 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Peter Smith, Haulgh Hall | | 2 | 0 | 0 | | |
| A Friend | John Woods, Bridgman-place | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | John Cross, Top o' th' Height | | 5 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | John P. Temperley, Bradford place | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Henry Grindrod, Crook-street | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Wright Sutcliffe, do. | | 0 | 10 | 0 | | |
| | Richard Hargreaves, do. | | 0 | 5 | 0 | | |
| | Matthew Mather, Derby-street | | 1 | 0 | 0 | | |
| | Richard Porter, Churchgate | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |
| | George Hill, Sweet-green | | 0 | 10 | 0 | | |
| | | | 0 | 2 | 6 | | |

Derby.

Gomersall, near Leeds, Second Subscription.

Lancaster, Third Remittance.

| | |
|---|----------------|
| William, George, and Joseph Strutt | £500 0 0 |
| Boden and Morley | 100 0 0 |
| An Opponent to the Sliding Scale | 100 0 0 |
| Thomas Webb, Tutbury | 25 0 0 |
| William Taylor | 25 0 0 |
| John Towle, Burrowash, near | 25 0 0 |
| Thomas Madeley and Co. | 25 0 0 |
| Frost and Stevenson | 20 0 0 |
| John Moss, St. Peter's-street | 20 0 0 |
| R. Burton, Smallwood Manor, near Uttoxeter | 20 0 0 |
| J. and C. S. Peet | 20 0 0 |
| William Unsworth, Siddal's-lane | 20 0 0 |
| "Live and let live" | 10 0 0 |
| A Friend, by Thomas Madeley | 10 0 0 |
| Thomas Richardson, Ashbourn-road | 10 0 0 |
| T. G. B. Ponsonby, Esq., M.P., Cavendish-square, London | 10 0 0 |
| Two Friends to Free Trade | 10 0 0 |
| James Hollingworth, London-road | 5 0 0 |
| Hall and Goodwin, Market-place | 5 0 0 |
| Robert Peck, Vernon-street | 5 0 0 |
| John Duncilliffe, St. Mary's-gate | 5 0 0 |
| An Enemy to Monopoly | 5 0 0 |
| Thomas Wright, Friar-gate | 5 0 0 |
| Thomas Tunaley, jun., Derwent-street | 5 0 0 |
| Joseph Handford, Osmaston-road | 5 0 0 |
| Two Friends to Free Trade | 5 0 0 |
| Mr. Hunt, City-road | 5 0 0 |
| William Cramond, George-street | 5 0 0 |
| A Father of a Family (double his former subs.) | 2 2 0 |
| John Bloor, Tutbury | 2 2 0 |
| Robert Chadwick, Queens-street | 2 0 0 |
| Tunley and Co., Siddal's-lane | 2 0 0 |
| George Stevenson, Iron-gate | 2 0 0 |
| Mrs. George Stevenson, do. | 1 0 0 |
| A Limb of the Law | 2 0 0 |
| Johnson and Walton, Bridge-street | 2 0 0 |
| W. Pike, Cornmarket | 2 0 0 |
| T. Cooke, do. | 1 1 0 |
| Mrs. T. Cooke and Children | 1 1 0 |
| A Friend | 1 1 0 |
| Wolston Roberts, Sadlergate | 1 1 0 |
| A True Friend | 1 1 0 |
| Geo. Wild, Cornmarket | 1 0 0 |
| Dani. Holme, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Morley, Wardwick | 1 1 0 |
| Mrs. Wm. Morley | 0 10 6 |
| Joseph Chadfield, Friar-gate | 1 1 0 |
| A Free-Trader | 1 1 0 |
| C | 1 0 0 |
| Christian | 1 0 0 |
| A Christian | 1 0 0 |
| F. Borrey, Sacheverell-street | 1 0 0 |
| W. Spaton, Cornmarket | 1 0 0 |
| Opifex | 1 0 0 |
| Rusticus | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Harvey, 10, Parker-street | 1 1 0 |
| Geo. Pemberton, tinman, Peter's-street | 1 0 0 |
| Hy. Bates, do. | 1 0 0 |
| A Corn Factor | 1 0 0 |
| Rev. N. Jones, North-parade | 1 0 0 |
| James Storer, Peter's-street | 1 0 0 |
| Cadman and Hollingworth, Sadlergate | 1 0 0 |
| Four Workmen | 1 0 0 |
| Double X. | 1 1 0 |
| Adam Simpson, Bridge-street | 1 0 0 |
| Geo. Sowter, Kedleston-road | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend | 1 1 0 |
| Wm. Frost, City-road | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend | 1 1 0 |
| A Farmer | 1 0 0 |
| W. Longdon, Old Tiger Inn | 1 0 0 |
| The Friends at Little Eaton | 7 0 0 |
| Some Ladies | 0 11 6 |
| Fred. Slack | 0 10 0 |
| H. B. | 0 5 0 |
| With all my heart | 0 10 0 |
| X. Y. Z. | 0 10 6 |
| Mr. Wescott | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend | 0 5 0 |
| A Lady | 0 5 0 |
| A Youth | 0 2 6 |
| Two Workmen | 0 3 0 |
| One who has been out of work nine months | 0 2 6 |
| A Methodist | 0 5 0 |
| T. Hawkridge, jun. | 0 5 0 |
| W. Warren | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Gee | 0 5 0 |
| Frost & Stevenson's Workpeople | Females 0 18 0 |
| Samuel Allsop | Males 2 9 3 |
| A few Workmen | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Madeley and Co.'s Workpeople | Females 1 2 0 |
| J. and C. S. Peet's Workpeople | Males 3 16 6 |
| Boden & Morley's Workpeople | Females 1 9 2 |
| Samuel Fox, jun., North-parade | Males 3 14 6 |
| Josiah Reader, 9, Gisborne-street | Females 1 2 6 |
| S. Kyre, Queen-street | Males 7 10 0 |
| S. Cartlich, Sadler-gate | 10 0 0 |
| A Convert to the Great Fact | 1 0 0 |
| A Radical | 2 0 0 |
| A Mite towards completing the £100,000 | 0 10 0 |
| The Workmen of J. and E. Swaine and Co. | 2 2 0 |
| Jas. Ramsden | 0 10 0 |
| Sam. Armstrong | 0 10 0 |
| John Berry and Son | 0 10 0 |
| Benj. Fearnsley | 0 10 0 |
| Geo. Berry | 0 10 0 |
| Jos. Taylor | 0 7 6 |
| John Steel | 0 5 0 |
| John Wright | 0 5 0 |
| James Booth | 0 5 0 |
| Jos. Ross | 0 5 0 |
| Thos. Elatrib | 0 5 0 |
| Joseph Greenwood | 0 5 0 |
| James Scott | 0 10 0 |
| Wm. Smith | 0 5 0 |
| Samuel Mortimer | 0 5 0 |
| Sam. Kerahaw | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Heaton | 0 2 6 |
| Abraham Battye, Birkenshaw | 0 2 6 |
| Henry Howarth, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Priestley, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thos. Hirst, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Smithers's Mill Men, per Joseph Smith, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Britannia Mill Men, per J. Wilson, do. | 1 5 0 |
| C. B. Hemingway, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Josiah Hogg, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Jos. Schofield, do. | 0 5 0 |
| John Gott, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Joseph Clegg, do. | 0 2 6 |
| J. Burrell, do. | 0 2 6 |
| H. Frankland, do. | 0 2 6 |
| William Marsland, do. | 0 2 6 |
| James Mann, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thos. Middlebrook, do. | 0 2 6 |
| James Eastwood, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Pearson and Spurr, do. | 0 1 0 |
| Sam. Porritt, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Jackson and Marr, Wray, near | 5 0 0 |
| Workmen at Carr Silk Mill, near | 2 0 0 |
| Mr. Middleton | 0 5 0 |
| Richard Hall, King-street | 0 10 0 |
| Benj. Mills | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Irwin, currier | 0 5 0 |
| Small sums | 0 2 0 |

Edinburgh Third Remittance.

| | |
|---|---------|
| A few Friends, per G. Gibson, Cross-causway | £50 4 0 |
| A. C., a Friend to Free Trade | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend, Howe-street | 0 5 0 |
| A. B. | 1 1 0 |
| A Friend, Buccleuch-place | 0 5 0 |
| A Traveller | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend in Tranent | 0 10 0 |
| A Friend in Archibald-place | 1 0 0 |
| John Aitken, 144, High-street | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 |
| A Free Churchman Whig of 1666 School | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend to Freedom and Free Trade | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend to the Poor Man's Fireside | 0 2 6 |
| A Free "Join" | 0 5 0 |
| A Lady, Portobello | 1 0 0 |
| A Jobbing Gardener, Causewayside | 0 2 6 |
| J. Alexander, B.S.C. | 0 5 0 |
| David Aitken, jun., Tranent | 1 0 0 |
| An Enemy to Monopoly and the Sliding Scale | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend to Free Trade, Juniper-green | 0 2 6 |
| An Offering for the Anti-Corn-Law League, "a Great Fact" | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend who has often read Colonel Thompson's "Corn-Law Catechism" | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend to the League | 1 1 0 |
| A. B. F., 42, Broughton-street | 1 1 0 |
| A Lover of Oat Cakes | 0 2 6 |
| An Anti-Thimble-rig-law Man | 2 0 0 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 |
| John Burke, 10, St. Andrew-square | 0 5 0 |
| Mr. Burns, 44, Rankellor-street | 1 0 0 |
| Archibald Braid, 6, Arthur-street | 1 0 0 |
| Alexander Bork, Lauriston-lane | 1 1 0 |
| Andrew Blackie | 0 2 6 |
| John Bishop | 0 2 6 |
| B. S. | 0 2 6 |
| D. Brown, Reddinglaw, Ratho | 1 0 0 |
| James Burgess and Son, 3, Hunter-square | 1 1 0 |
| C. C. | 0 2 6 |
| J. S. Crichton, 1, Keir-street | 1 0 0 |
| John Cox, Gorgie Mills | 1 0 0 |
| J. Cowan, Fleshmarket | 1 0 0 |
| David Connell, 48, Hanover-street | 1 0 0 |
| Miss Robina Cox, 25, Rutland-street | 1 1 0 |
| George Crichton, Bruntsfield-place | 1 1 0 |
| Cornraik | 0 3 0 |
| William Douglas, Portobello | 0 10 0 |
| Jn. Dryborough, 84, North Back of Canongate | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Dryborough, brewer | 0 10 0 |
| George Deas, advocate | 1 1 0 |
| Robert Dun, Lancasterian School | 1 0 0 |
| George Drummond, 6, Scotland-street | 0 10 0 |
| William Dick, Dean-street | 0 5 0 |
| D. M. and S. | 0 10 0 |
| Charles Dowie, 10, High-street | 0 10 0 |
| Every blow against Monopoly, Newhaven | 0 2 6 |
| From a Friend | 0 2 6 |
| From a Friend to the League | 0 10 0 |
| From Young Repealers | 0 5 0 |
| F. R. S. | 0 2 6 |
| From three Workmen | 0 3 0 |
| Miss Fairgrieve, 30, India-street | 0 2 6 |
| From a True Friend | 0 2 6 |
| From a Friend to Free Trade, Elm-row | 0 2 6 |
| F. M., Henderson-row | 0 2 6 |
| From Little Dick | 0 5 0 |
| C. H. Farquharson, 28, Leith-street | 0 2 6 |
| F. G. | 2 0 0 |
| From a Friend to the Cause | 0 3 0 |
| James Fairbairn, at Haldane and Rae's, from self and fellow-workmen | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Forbes, 16, St. James's-square | 0 5 0 |
| George Gibson, Cross-causway | 0 5 0 |
| James Gunn, 3, Calton-street | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. and John Glen, Victoria-street | 1 1 0 |
| John Henderson, 38, George-street | 0 5 0 |
| Wm. Hardie, 65, Thistle-street | 0 2 6 |
| G. Hepburn, 1, Queensferry-street | 1 0 0 |
| Half-a-Crown to a farthing that the Corn Laws are repealed | 0 2 6 |
| In confidence of a return with interest by-and-by | 0 5 0 |
| Alex. Jamieson, 71, Adam-square | 0 5 0 |
| W. M. Jamieson, High-street | 0 10 0 |
| James Johnston, 6, Fyfe-place | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas James, 493, Lawnmarket | 1 0 0 |
| Robert Jeffries, M.D., Dalkeith | 1 0 0 |
| J. McE. | 0 2 6 |
| Miss Sarah Jones, Carrick-on-Suir, Ireland | 0 2 6 |
| John Jopp, 30, Albany-street | 1 1 0 |
| J. R., 51, Hanover-street | 1 0 0 |
| James Johnston, 154, Canongate | 0 3 6 |
| Rev. George Johnston, 6, Minto-street | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Johnston, 235, Canongate | 0 5 0 |
| J. Keegan, solicitor, 5, North St. David-street | 1 1 0 |
| James Kirkwood, 10, Duncan-street, Drummond-place | 0 5 0 |
| Alex. Kay, 144, Prince's street | 1 1 0 |
| S. Lawson, Comely-bank | 0 2 6 |
| John Lauder and Co., 343, High-street | 5 0 0 |
| Let Complete Suffrage be obtained, and Free Trade will surely follow,—yes, no Monopolist will exist | 1 1 0 |
| Andrew Miller, Fisher-row | 0 2 6 |
| John Melville, 15, Canal-street | 0 2 6 |
| James Mitchell, 43, Lauriston | 0 10 0 |
| Henry Marshall, 25, Alva-street | 1 0 0 |
| J. Mitchell, 7, Calton-hill | 0 2 6 |
| George Melkie, 70, Grassmarket | 1 0 0 |
| Robert McLean, Heriot's Hospital | 0 5 0 |
| William Marshall, W.S., 18, Albany-street | 1 0 0 |
| J. McColl, 5, North Bank-street | 0 2 6 |
| James McIntosh, 5, North College-street | 0 5 0 |
| Nicolson-street, 132 | 0 2 6 |
| Mr. Noble, 338, High-street | 0 2 6 |
| "O, that bread should be so dear, and flesh and blood so cheap!" | 0 2 6 |
| O'Donnell and Co. | 0 10 0 |
| William Porteous, Grassmarket | 5 0 0 |
| R. C. A., a Free Trader | 0 2 6 |
| R. G., 9, Charlotte-place | 0 5 0 |
| A Ramsay | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Robson, 18, William-street | 0 2 6 |
| Rally round the banners of Complete Suffrage, and all monopolies will be speedily abolished | 0 2 6 |
| R. W. | 1 0 0 |
| Alexander Sinclair, 1, Park-street | 1 1 0 |
| A. G. Smith, 24, Gardener's-crescent | 1 1 0 |
| H. Small, Water of Leith | 0 2 6 |
| D. Simpson, 7, Duncan-st., Drummond-place | 0 5 0 |
| J. S. Sommerville, 212, Canongate | 0 7 6 |
| George Steven, Pathhead, Ford | 0 5 0 |
| John Sturrock, 6, Queen's-place | 1 0 0 |
| Alexander Smith, 1, Claremont-place | 1 0 0 |
| Robert Smith, 1, Claremont-place | 1 0 0 |
| D. and J. Stott, 28, Niddry-street | 0 2 6 |
| Mrs. Scott, Haddington-place | 0 5 0 |
| R. Simpson, 10, Nicolson-street | 0 2 6 |
| William Scott, 10, South College-street | 1 0 0 |
| "Buaviter in moito, sed fortiter in re" | 0 2 6 |
| Strike misgovernment at the root, and victory is sure; yes, the best Reform is the most complete | 0 2 6 |
| James Scott, 51, North Richmond-street | 0 5 0 |
| Slow but Sure | 1 0 0 |
| James Sward, jun., 23, Hanover-street | 0 10 0 |
| James Sward, sen., do. | 1 0 0 |
| John Scott, Kobb's-court | 0 5 0 |

Edinburgh—continued.

Idle, near Bradford, Yorkshire.

Liverpool, Eighth Remittance.

| | |
|---|----------------------|
| David Smith, 1, Archibald-place | £40 10 6 |
| D. J. Thomson, Blacket-place | 2 2 0 |
| Three Groans for T. B. Macaulay, and Hisses for Gibson Craig | 0 5 0 |
| T. D., 50, Hanover-street | 0 2 6 |
| R. B. Totting | 1 1 0 |
| Thirty Queen's Heads for Free Trade | 0 2 6 |
| Turn out worse than Tory—Despot Macaulay | 0 2 6 |
| Two Friends to the Cause, at Aytoun, Berwickshire | 0 10 0 |
| James Walker, 54, High-street | 1 0 0 |
| J. B. Wallace, 145, do. | 0 2 6 |
| W. C. | 0 2 6 |
| John Wemyss, 125, Fountain-bridge | 0 5 0 |
| W. C. | 0 5 0 |
| Wish I could give more | 0 2 6 |
| W. G. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Wilson, 18, Young-street | 1 0 0 |
| David White, 111, Nicolson-street | 0 5 0 |
| John Watson, Lawnmarket | 1 0 0 |
| John Watherston, 23, Rutland-square, £1 1, of which 10s. 6d. was inserted in the former list as "J. W." | 0 10 6 |
| Archibald Young, Annandale-street | 2 2 0 |
| Y. Z., a Friend | 0 5 0 |
| W. P. W., St. Bernard's-crescent | 0 10 0 |
| Small Sums | 3 11 4 |
| Alexander Adam and Sons, Bonington | 2 0 0 |
| James Aytoun, Heriot-row | 5 0 0 |
| Thomas Astley, Bonington | 5 0 0 |
| A Friend, 105, George-street | 0 5 0 |
| David Aitchison, 23, Kirkgate, Leith | 1 0 0 |
| James Anderson, South-bridge | 1 1 0 |
| A Friend, 25, Leith-street | 1 1 0 |
| A Repeater before the League was in existence | 0 5 0 |
| A. R. | 1 0 0 |
| A. Breck, 15, Frederick-street | 1 1 0 |
| John Blair, North Back of Canongate | 1 0 0 |
| William Bertram, 14, East Sciennes-street | 1 1 0 |
| B. Hall Blyth, 25, Minto-street | 1 0 0 |
| Hugh Brown, St. John's-hill | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Bailey | 0 2 6 |
| John Donaldson, 16, India-street | 0 2 6 |
| A. Gibb, Nottingham-place | 1 1 0 |
| Mr. Gregory, 61, Frederick-street | 0 5 0 |
| W. and C. Gilmour, South Back, Canongate | 1 1 0 |
| Andrew Isles, 101, Pleasance | 1 0 0 |
| John Jamieson, 18, Rutland-square | 25 0 0 |
| Thomas Lindsay, 171, High-street | 0 10 0 |
| John Leing, 7, Young street | 0 2 6 |
| William Lawson, 31, West Nicolson-street | 0 2 6 |
| George Musket, Dalkeith | 5 0 0 |
| A. Morton, 14, South-bridge | 0 5 0 |
| Peter McLaren, Greenside-place | 0 5 0 |
| A Mackechule, 23, Alva-street | 1 0 0 |
| Mr. Nicholson, Shrub-place | 0 10 0 |
| J. Pryde, 59, South-bridge | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Russell, Hunter's-square | 2 0 0 |
| W. Skeen, 5, Salisbury street | 0 7 6 |
| Stewart and Todd, Nicolson-street | 1 1 0 |
| George Stewart, 98, Nicolson-street | 1 0 0 |
| Andrew Scott, 41, York-place | 1 0 0 |
| T. S. | 0 8 0 |
| W. Watherston, 22, Rutland-square | 0 5 0 |
| George Wilson, 38, Rankellor-street | 1 0 0 |
| William Williamson, Murray-street | 0 5 0 |
| W. Kay, Canaan | 0 2 6 |
| W. G. | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Watson, 7, Hill place | 0 3 6 |
| D. E. D. Alison, South-bridge | 0 2 6 |
| A Well-wisher to the Cause | 0 5 0 |
| Uncle Toby | 0 2 6 |
| Small Sums | 0 16 6 |
| Thomas Rider, cloth manufacturer | 1 0 0 |
| Francis Audley, worsted spinner | 2 2 0 |
| William Russell, Odd Fellows' Hall | 1 10 0 |
| John Wade | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend | 0 5 0 |
| Joshua Banister | 0 2 6 |
| Benjamin Bland | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 |
| John Oddy | 0 2 6 |
| John Lee, cloth manufacturer, Simpson-green | 0 10 0 |
| William Booth, do. | 0 10 0 |
| Jonas Fletcher, Windhill | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Dalby | 0 10 0 |
| William Rider | 0 2 6 |
| John Hartley | 0 2 6 |
| Joshua Lobley | 0 5 0 |
| John Lobley | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums | 0 18 6 |
| Samuel Dawson, farmer, Wrose | 1 0 0 |
| Workpeople | William Craven 0 5 0 |
| at Buck | A Friend 0 2 6 |
| Henry Rendall | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums | 0 10 6 |
| Enos Dibb, grocer | 1 1 0 |
| A decided Free Trader, per Joseph Stringer | 1 1 0 |
| Peter Marsh, 6, Scotland-place | 1 0 0 |
| Richard Evans, 6, Seddon-street | 0 2 6 |
| Robert Aldersey, 16, Hanover-street | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 |
| James Hayes, 44, Gloucester-street | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend, per Mr. Lowe, 4, Argyle-place | 0 2 6 |
| Why akest thou me, a Conservative? | 0 2 6 |
| David Walsh, Manesty-lane | 0 2 6 |
| Joseph Douglas, care of Mrs. Critchley, Litherland, near Liverpool | 0 2 6 |
| Fletcher Room, 16, Wapping | 1 1 0 |
| William Parry, 35, Highfield-street | 0 5 0 |
| David Glover, 38, Vauxhall-road | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend, Toxteth-park | 0 2 6 |
| John Warrington, 1A, Lumber-street | 0 2 6 |
| William Williams, 17, Moorfields | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Rushton, 66, Edmund-street | 0 5 0 |
| Sam. Rogers, 28, Prussia-street | 0 5 0 |
| W. K. H. | 0 2 6 |
| Henry Cram, 35, South John-street | 5 0 0 |
| Wm. Galbraith, 20, St. James's-street | 0 2 6 |
| Henry Binns, 3, Mount Vernon-street | 25 0 0 |
| Chas. Holland, 22, Exchange-alley North | 50 0 0 |
| Jevons, Sons, and Co., 15, New Quay | 50 0 0 |
| Fred. Chapple, 11, Brunswick-street | 5 5 0 |
| Viana, Jones, and Co., 11, do. | 10 10 0 |
| Geo. Parsons, Royal Bank-buildings, Dale-st. | 10 0 0 |
| Wm. Lindsay, 2, New Quay | 2 2 0 |
| Jas. Rickaby, 26, South John-street | 5 0 0 |
| Wellwood Maxwell, 30, King-street | 25 0 0 |
| Geo. Maxwell, 30, do. | 10 0 0 |
| Joseph Heap, 35, North John-street | 20 0 0 |
| Joseph King, 15, Exchange-buildings | 25 0 0 |
| Two Tars | 0 5 0 |
| Andrew Buchanan, 49, Shaw's-alley | 0 2 6 |
| P. H., per W. H. Darby | 1 0 0 |
| William Linford, 112, Pitt-street | 0 2 6 |
| W. J. Blackburn, 120, Park-road | 1 0 0 |
| John Russell, 28, Exchange-street East | 2 2 0 |
| A Friend | 1 1 0 |
| A Friend | 2 0 0 |
| G. C. | 5 0 0 |
| Henry Booth, 8, Bedford street South | 10 0 0 |
| Duncan McVicar, 7, Exchange-buildings | 15 0 0 |
| Z. (Ireland), "The rights of Property, and no more—the rights of Labour, and no less" | 2 0 0 |
| Thomas Cuff, 49, Byrom-street | 2 0 0 |
| William Gillespie, 24, Byrom-street | 1 0 0 |
| Small sums | 0 2 0 |

High, near Stockport, Manchester.

Low, near Stockport, Manchester.

High, near Stockport, Manchester.

Low, near Stockport, Manchester.

James Hyde

Joseph Hargreaves

John Leach

Henry Lofthouse

John Bethell

Robert Tetlow

Josiah Clark

Nathan Donkerley, Geo-cross, Father

Samuel Donkerley, do.

Sampson Arden, Newton-street

Thomas Hague, Hyde-lane

Jonas Rowbotham, do.

John Ma shall, do.

Frederick Kiley, do.

Jonah Smith, Geo-cross

Thos. Hopwood, do.

James Booth, Back-lane

Elizabeth Kirk

A Friend, Pain's-lane, near

Jane Rodenburst, Ketley, near Wellington

Five Friends, Pain's-lane, near

Mrs. Beard, Ketley, near Wellington

John Millington, do., do.

Thomas Glibert, Bank

John Horton, Prior's Lee

S. Horton, do.

W. Simms, Friessland House, near

J. Tranter, Wapenshall, Wellington

Luke Tipton, Prior's Lee, near

Charles Jones, Snodhill (additional sub.)

Thomas Slater, do.

Edward Jones, Donington Wood, near

Mrs. E. Jones, do.

William Taylor, Pain's-lane

Miss Wernm, Donington Wood

Miss Nichols, do.

William Davies, Pain's-lane, near

Thomas Davies, Nabb, near Wellington

Mrs. W. Hill, Oaken Gates, do.

Mrs. Robinson, do.

Mrs. Ellis, do.

Mrs. Pickin, do.

W. Pugh, Ketley, near Wellington

Thomas Davies, jun., Nabb, Bear do.

Messrs. Wern, Brothers, Snodhill, near

Charles Wright, do.

G. Davies, Nabb, near Wellington

Mrs. Taylor, Pain's-lane

Mr. Stormont, do.

Mr. Binns, Donington Wood

W. H. Franks, Snodhill, near

Mrs. West, Hadley, Wellington

Small sums

Profits on Tea-party

John Dixon, Knells

Peter Dixon, Holme Eden

J. D. Carr

W. Marshall, M.P.

Joseph Forster, Caldewgate

Edward M'Gibbon, manufacturer

Ellwood Brockbank, George's-street

Mr. Nicholson, King's Arms-lane

Mr. Wallace, grocer

J. P. Harrison, druggist

Edward Howman, surgeon

John Huthart, hosier, (2nd sub.)

Hugh Earl, at Messrs. Dixon's

Henry Tweddle, painter

P. S. Dixon, Holme Eden

James Carothers, watchmaker

Rdwad Harrison, Joiner

Mr. Atkin, shoemaker, Castle-street

George Robinson, draper

John Carrick, Castle-street

William Blenkinsopp, Dalston, near

Messrs. M'Knight, dyers, Caldewgate

J. T. Ralston, solicitor

Thomas Sheffield, dentist

Mr. Steel, Journal Office

Mr. Irving, grocer

Joseph Ferguson, Flaher-street

George Dixon, Abbey-street

Joseph Dixon, Broadwath

Robert Ferguson, Flaher-street

Mrs. Carrick, 29, Castle-street

H. Scott, stationer

Misses S. and J. Latimer

Miss Sheffield, Abbey-street

John Slater, Castle-street

Samuel Back, 46, English-street

Thomas Barnes, Shaddon-gate

C. W. Henderson, Messrs. Dixon's

J. W. Brown, 3, English-street

W. Fleming, cabinetmaker

John Slack, Lowthian's Lane

Joseph Lonsdale, Caldewgate

Thomas Ivson, Rigg-moor House, Kirklington, near

James M'Cutcheon, farmer, Caldewgate

John Mason, 13, Henry-street

William Armstrong, Annetwell-street

D. Stevenson, Moffat, N.B.

Samuel Blacklock, manufacturer

Joseph Smithson, English-street

John Sheffield, Abbey-street

James Muncaster, Messrs. Dixon's

Thomas Johnston, do.

Andrew Routledge, English-street

John Welsh, Barwise-court

A Friend, per Mr. Steel

C. Taylor, 76, Market-place

John Duncan, Messrs. Dixon's

George Armstrong, Caldewbridge

Joseph Hannah, teacher

W. Fisher, Rigg-street

W. Salkeld, Warwick-bridge

John Anderson, do.

Thomas Nelson, builder

Thomas M'Alpin, Cummerdale

H. M'Alpin, do.

Richard Muncaster, Barton's-court

Thomas Radd, West-wall

Mrs. C. Cockburn and Son, Tower-street

J. M. Noble, Castle-street

Richard Morris, Messrs. Dixon's

W. Fletcher, 5, Swift's-row

Friends, per Mr. Rushton, plasterer

W. Miller, teacher

J. Cowen, Grapes lane

Friends, per H. Scott

A Friend, Glasgow, per Mr. Carr

George Rowell, English-street

Mr. Sheffield, artist, Wighton

Mr. Gillbanks, Market place

K. Harris, Mr. J. D. Carr's

David Forster, 4, King-street

John Hodgson, Old Brewery

William Sturdy, Lowther-street

A Friend to Free Trade, per Dr. Elliot

Isaac Cartmell, Fisher-street

John Moor, 21, Russell-street

John C. Armstrong, Caldewbridge

John Taylor, Shaddon-gate

George Ivson, do.

W. Postlethwaite, Trinity-building

Anthony Mullender, ditto

W. Ward, Shaddon-gate

W. Kippie, Caldewgate

Small sums

John White

Z. Rayner

J. Womersley

Thomas Whitehead

Jedith White

Francis Barracough, Ecclehill

Amuel Petty, do.

John Hammond, do.

Small sums

John Brooks, Katharine-street

Wm. Denby, Dukinfield, near

Wm. Sidebottom, Hyde, near Manchester

Benjamin Goldthorp

John Brooks, jun.

Wm. Thompson, Micklehurst, Sadfleworth

Uriah Chadwick, at R. Lees and Sons, D-kingsfield, near

James Bateman

Michael Bateman

Geo. and J. Hyde, Staley, near Staleybridge

James Howard, do.

Wm. Caley

John Lowe

Stanley Chadwick

John Riley

William Cockcroft, Mayroyd, near

Geo. Ashworth, Calais Mill, near

John Hodgson, Blind-lane, near

Wm. and Geo. Hincliffe, Scarbottom, near Mytholmroyd

D. Wilcock, Brearley, near Luddenden Fort

S. Briggs, Mytholmroyd

Miss Mary Oliver, Bridgeroyd, nr. Todmorden

Misses Fanny, Amanda, Grace, Hannah, and
Susanah Hincliffe, Stoodley-bridge, near
Todmorden, 5s. each

Misses Hannah, Ada, Fanny, and Georgiana,
and Master Will. Henry Hincliffe, Scar-bottom, near Mytholmroyd, 5s. each

Geo. Greenwood, Scarbottom, near do.

Geo. Mayson, do., do.

John Longbottom, do., do.

Richard Birt, Free Trader, do., do.

John Greenwood, do., do.

William Greenwood, do., do.

Miss Riley

William Holme and Brothers

Lady and Daughter

Two Leaguers

Miss H. Holme

Mr. Constantine

James Greaves

J. W. Greaves

Edwin Greaves

James Ashworth, Calais Mill

H. Sugden

W. Sutcliffe, slater, Ing, Heptonstall

Geo. Sutcliffe, Stones, Heygate, do.

Mrs. Sunderland

Richard Thomas

Thomas Crossley

Daniel Crossley

Mrs. Sugden

Miss Martha Sugden

Miss S. Jane Sugden

Miss Elizabeth Sugden

Alfred Sugden

James Farrar, Hepstonstall

John Hellwell

A Well-wisher to the League

A Friend

W. Stanfield, Calais Mill

A Repeater

A Teetotaller

A Free Trader

A Free Trader

A Repeater

Thomas Sunderland, Underbank

Mrs. Gaukröger

Dr. Howard

John Crossley and Sons

Misses S. and M. A. Crossley

Misses A. and G. Crossley

Mrs. Moorhouse and Miss S. A. Crossley

Small sums

John Allanson, surgeon, Union-street

Thomas Openshaw, Red Lion Inn, Fleet-street

John Howard, Parson's-lane

Robert Holt, slater, New-road

Charles Wood, Fleet-street

Adam Parkinson, Hollin's-vale, near

John Cornall, Bolton-street

George Walker, do.

T. Openshaw, at Messrs. Walker & Brothers'

William Robinson, do. do.

Joseph Burgoyne, do. do.

Robert Bleasdale, do. do.

Benjamin Crapper, do. do.

Arthur Bentley, John-street

William Ashton, Ramsbottom, near

Edward Ashton, do.

Thomas Ashton, do.

George Ashton, do.

Henry Ashton, do.

Arthur Ashton, do.

John Daniel Ashton do.

Miss Ellen Hardcastle, Limesfield, near

Miss Alice Haworth, do.

James Henderson, Agur-street

William Maclean, Bank-street

Stone and Kemp (in addition to £150 at Edinburgh and £50 in London)

John Rushton

Rilward K. Brown

Jeffery Smith

Joseph Wolstencroft

Daniel Harton

Samuel Wolstencroft, Blackley-mill

Theophilus Toase

Clement Kemp

A Friend, per John and Thomas Mellalieu

Samuel Mellalieu

Henry Mellalieu

John Hughes

John Lancashire, Long-street

John Thornley

James Kastwood

Edward Mansergh

John Stringer, Joiner

Thomas Ashton, Tonge-lane

William Kent

Robert Mellalieu, Church-street

John Booth, Manchester-road

A Friend

James Harrison, Jan.

Edmund Butterworth, weaver, Church-street

Thomas Booth

Joseph Staveacre, Tonge-lane

A Pill for Dr. Peel

James Kent, Tonge-lane

A Silk Weaver

John Stringer, block-printer

William Ridings, Long-street

A Warper

Adam Holden

Thomas Lees, Manchester-road

An Octogenarian Radical

Small sums

W. Kennedy, banker

P. Murdoch, Wellington-square

John Kinross, merchant

George Taylor

James Murdoch, merchant

John Sloane, Sandgate-street

David Meikle, merchant, Tarbolton, near

James Cumming, merchant

G. K. Young, Wellington-square

William Watson, Alloway-place

James Morton, coach builder

Adam M'Hutcheon

Thomas Cuthbert, merchant, Ochiltree, near

A Friend to the League

Robert Robertson, Wellington-square

James Morton, do.

Robert Mackay

P. Ferguson

Alexander Easson, manufacturer

Walter Jamieson, merchant

Alexander White, jun., do.

John Glass, Albert-street

W. C. Baxter, cabinet maker

Daniel Ross, Magdalen-yard

William Mathewson, clothier, Union-street

William Murdoch, grocer, Nethergate

Robert Mitchell, Pole Park mill, near

James Luke, sen., Clement's-lane, near

William Leighton, Castle-street

George M'Donald, 18, Union-street, in addition to 5s. before—£1

George Scott, ironmonger, in addition to 5s.
before—£1

Duncan Shaw, teacher, Piesance

Alexander Stewart, Royal Hotel

Robert Easson, grocer, Union-street

James C. Ross, clothier, do.

John M'Kay, do.

James Dick, Meadowside, near

Robert Leighton, Castle-street

A few Weavers at Glamis, near

John Strachan, teacher, Monifirth

James Fenwick, carver, Nethergate

Thomas Dick, Ascher, do.

Small sums

James Royston, Son, and Co.

John Foster and Son, Queen's Head, near

James Farrar

Benjamin Mellor, Stainland, near

Benjamin Mellor, jun., do.

Samuel Mellor, do.

A. E. Royston, West Parade

A Friend

John Oates, ironfounder

William Milner, printer

J. C. Hoatson

John Craven

Wm. M'Clellan (2nd subscription)

John Carter, King-cross-lane

Mrs. Clay, Greetland, near

Mr. Kilner, do.

Two Working Men

John Burley, Greetland, near

John Bairdow

Jervis White

Aaron Moore

Daniel Briggs

Abraham Booth

William Briggs

Charles Turner

John Tempest

Samuel Stocks

Joseph Bairdow

Ward Holroyd

James Balmfirth's 2nd subscription

Small sums

Lord and Whitworth

George Sutcliffe

Hugh Pickering

Thomas Eagin

James Eastham

Richard Holdsworth

Thomas Pilling, St. James's-street

Nathan Smallpage

Charles Sutcliffe

Richard Brown, St. James's-street

Thomas Broxup, saddler

Miss Sutcliffe, St. James's-street

Luke Collinge, furniture broker

William Robinson, St. James's-street

Mrs. Hargreaves, South Parade

A Lady

John Birley, Burnley-lane

John Nowell, butcher

John Walker

Robert Broxup, grocer

James Nuttall, Hill Top

John Pollard, grocer

John Sutcliffe, St. James's-street

Mrs. Senior

John Radcliffe, painter

William Thompson, hatter

John Holden, Royal Oak Inn

John H. Scott, St. James's-street

John Lancaster, Cheapside

William Coultate, jun.

Luke Hargreaves

A Friend

Robert Smith, jun.

Madonna Downham

John Clegg

Robert Clegg, shoemaker

William Hargreaves

John Stevenson

Samuel Bracewell

John Kenyon

Small sums

Thomas Todd

John Greaves

Dr. Fearnley

Charles Whitehead, Thornhill Lees

Henry Whitehead, do.

James Senior, Batley Carr

Titus Fozard, do.

Thos. Gomersall and Son

John Senior, Earlsheaton

Benjamin Potter, do.

Matthew Ridgway

Jonathan Fearnley

John France

W. and T. Eastwood

C. R. Scholes

D. Ramsden, Batley Carr

John Hills

John Horsfield

Charles Stapleton

John Willan

Henry York

Robert Fletcher

John Oates

David Thornton

Steward and Riley

T. Gomersall, jun.

D. Fox

Balance of Tea-party

Small sums

High, near Stockport, Manchester.

Low, near Stockport, Manchester.

High, near Stockport, Manchester.

Low, near Stockport, Manchester.

John White

Z. Rayner

J. Womersley

Thomas Whitehead

Jedith White

Francis Barracough, Ecclehill

Amuel Petty, do.

John Hammond, do.

Small sums

John Brooks, Katharine-street

Wm. Denby, Dukinfield, near

Wm. Sidebottom, Hyde, near Manchester

Benjamin Goldthorp

John Brooks, jun.

Wm. Thompson, Micklehurst, Sadfleworth

Uriah Chadwick, at R. Lees and Sons, D-kingsfield, near

James Bateman

Michael Bateman

Geo. and J. Hyde, Staley, near Staleybridge

James Howard, do.

Wm. Caley

John Lowe

Stanley Chadwick

John Riley

William Cockcroft, Mayroyd, near

Geo. Ashworth, Calais Mill, near

John Hodgson, Blind-lane, near

Wm. and Geo. Hincliffe, Scarbottom, near Mytholmroyd

D. Wilcock, Brearley, near Luddenden Fort

S. Briggs, Mytholmroyd

Miss Mary Oliver, Bridgeroyd, nr. Todmorden

Misses Fanny, Amanda, Grace, Hannah, and
Susanah Hincliffe, Stoodley-bridge, near
Todmorden, 5s. each

Misses Hannah, Ada, Fanny, and Georgiana,
and Master Will. Henry Hincliffe, Scar-
bottom, near Mytholmroyd, 5s. each

Geo. Greenwood, Scarbottom, near do.

Geo. Mayson, do., do.

John Longbottom, do., do.

Richard Birt, Free Trader, do., do.

John Greenwood, do., do.

William Greenwood, do., do.

Miss Riley

William Holme and Brothers

Lady and Daughter

Two Leaguers

Miss H. Holme

Mr. Constantine

James Greaves

J. W. Greaves

Edwin Greaves

James Ashworth, Calais Mill

H. Sugden

W. Sutcliffe, slater, Ing, Heptonstall

Geo. Sutcliffe, Stones, Heygate, do.

Mrs. Sunderland

Richard Thomas

Thomas Crossley

Daniel Crossley

Mrs. Sugden

Miss Martha Sugden

Miss S. Jane Sugden

Miss Elizabeth Sugden

Alfred Sugden

James Farrar, Hepstonstall

John Hellwell

A Well-wisher to the League

A Friend

W. Stanfield, Calais Mill

A Repeater

A Teetotaller

A Free Trader

A Free Trader

A Repeater

Thomas Sunderland, Underbank

Mrs. Gaukröger

Dr. Howard

John Crossley and Sons

Misses S. and M. A. Crossley

Misses A. and G. Crossley

Mrs. Moorhouse and Miss S. A. Crossley

Small sums

John Allanson, surgeon, Union-street

Thomas Openshaw, Red Lion Inn, Fleet-street

John Howard, Parson's-lane

Robert Holt, slater, New-road

Charles Wood, Fleet-street

Adam Parkinson, Hollin's-vale, near

John Cornall, Bolton-street

George Walker, do.

T. Openshaw, at Messrs. Walker & Brothers'

William Robinson, do. do.

Joseph Burgoyne, do. do.

Robert Bleasdale, do. do.

Benjamin Crapper, do. do.

Arthur Bentley, John-street

William Ashton, Ramsbottom, near

Edward Ashton, do.

Thomas Ashton, do.

George Ashton, do.

Henry Ashton, do.

Arthur Ashton, do.

John Daniel Ashton do.

Miss Ellen Hardcastle, Limesfield, near

Miss Alice Haworth, do.

James Henderson, Agur-street

William Maclean, Bank-street

Stone and Kemp (in addition to £150 at Edinburgh and £50 in London)

John Rushton

Rilward K. Brown

Jeffery Smith

Joseph Wolstencroft

Daniel Harton

Samuel Wolstencroft, Blackley-mill

Theophilus Toase

Clement Kemp

A Friend, per John and Thomas Mellalieu

Samuel Mellalieu

Henry Mellalieu

John Hughes

John Lancashire, Long-street

John Thornley

James Kastwood

Edward Mansergh

John Stringer, Joiner

Thomas Ashton, Tonge-lane

William Kent

Robert Mellalieu, Church-street

John Booth, Manchester-road

A Friend

James Harrison, Jan.

Edmund Butterworth, weaver, Church-street

Thomas Booth

Joseph Staveacre, Tonge-lane

A Pill for Dr. Peel

James Kent, Tonge-lane

A Silk Weaver

John Stringer, block-printer

William Ridings, Long-street

A Warper

Adam Holden

Thomas Lees, Manchester-road

An Octogenarian Radical

Small sums

W. Kennedy, banker

P. Murdoch, Wellington-square

John Kinross, merchant

George Taylor

James Murdoch, merchant

John Sloane, Sandgate-street

David Meikle, merchant, Tarbolton, near

James Cumming, merchant

G. K. Young, Wellington-square

William Watson, Alloway-place

James Morton, coach builder

Adam M'Hutcheon

Thomas Cuthbert, merchant, Ochiltree, near

A Friend to the League

Robert Robertson, Wellington-square

James Morton, do.

Robert Mackay

P. Ferguson

Alexander Easson, manufacturer

Walter Jamieson, merchant

Alexander White, jun., do.

John Glass, Albert-street

W. C. Baxter, cabinet maker

Daniel Ross, Magdalen-yard

William Mathewson, clothier, Union-street

William Murdoch, grocer, Nethergate

Robert Mitchell, Pole Park mill, near

James Luke, sen., Clement's-lane, near

William Leighton, Castle-street

George M'Donald, 18, Union-street, in addition to 5s. before—£1

George Scott, ironmonger, in addition to 5s.
before—£1

Duncan Shaw, teacher, Piesance

Alexander Stewart, Royal Hotel

Robert Easson, grocer, Union-street

James C. Ross, clothier, do.

John M'Kay, do.

James Dick, Meadowside, near

Robert Leighton, Castle-street

A few Weavers at Glamis, near

John Strachan, teacher, Monifirth

James Fenwick, carver, Nethergate

Thomas Dick, Ascher, do.

Small sums

James Royston, Son, and Co.

John Foster and Son, Queen's Head, near

James Farrar

Benjamin Mellor, Stainland, near

Benjamin Mellor, jun., do.

Samuel Mellor, do.

A. E. Royston, West Parade

A Friend

John Oates, ironfounder

William Milner, printer

J. C. Hoatson

John Craven

Wm. M'Clellan (2nd subscription)

John Carter, King-cross-lane

Mrs. Clay, Greetland, near

Mr. Kilner, do.

Two Working Men

John Burley, Greetland, near

John Bairdow

Jervis White

Aaron Moore

Daniel Briggs

Abraham Booth

William Briggs

Charles Turner

John Tempest

Samuel Stocks

Joseph Bairdow

Ward Holroyd

James Balmfirth's 2nd subscription

Small sums

Lord and Whitworth

George Sutcliffe

Hugh Pickering

Thomas Eagin

James Eastham

Richard Holdsworth

Thomas Pilling, St. James's-street

Nathan Smallpage

Charles Sutcliffe

Richard Brown, St. James's-street

Thomas Broxup, saddler

Miss Sutcliffe, St. James's-street

Luke Collinge, furniture broker

William Robinson, St. James's-street

Mrs. Hargreaves, South Parade

A Lady

John Birley, Burnley-lane

John Nowell, butcher

John Walker

Robert Broxup, grocer

James Nuttall, Hill Top

John Pollard, grocer

John Sutcliffe, St. James's-street

Mrs. Senior

John Radcliffe, painter

William Thompson, hatter

John Holden, Royal Oak Inn

John H. Scott, St. James's-street

John Lancaster, Cheapside

William Coultate, jun.

Luke Hargreaves

A Friend

Robert Smith, jun.

Madonna Downham

John Clegg

Robert Clegg, shoemaker

William Hargreaves

John Stevenson

Samuel Bracewell

John Kenyon

Small sums

Thomas Todd

John Greaves

Dr. Fearnley

Charles Whitehead, Thornhill Lees

Henry Whitehead, do.

James Senior, Batley Carr

Titus Fozard, do.

Thos. Gomersall and Son

John Senior, Earlsheaton

Benjamin Potter, do.

Matthew Ridgway

Jonathan Fearnley

John France

W. and T. Eastwood

C. R. Scholes

D. Ramsden, Batley Carr

John Hills

John Horsfield

Charles Stapleton

John Willan

Henry York

Robert Fletcher

John Oates

David Thornton

Steward and Riley

T. Gomersall, jun.

D. Fox

Balance of Tea-party

Small sums

High, near Stockport, Manchester.

Low, near Stockport, Manchester.

High, near Stockport, Manchester.

Low, near Stockport, Manchester.

John White

Z. Rayner

J. Womersley

Thomas Whitehead

Jedith White

Francis Barracough, Ecclehill

Amuel Petty, do.

John Hammond, do.

Small sums

John Brooks, Katharine-street

Wm. Denby, Dukinfield, near

Wm. Sidebottom, Hyde, near Manchester

Benjamin Goldthorp

John Brooks, jun.

Wm. Thompson, Micklehurst, Sadfleworth

Uriah Chadwick, at R. Lees and Sons, D-kingsfield, near

James Bateman

Michael Bateman

Geo. and J. Hyde, Staley, near Staleybridge

James Howard, do.

Wm. Caley

John Lowe

Stanley Chadwick

John Riley

William Cockcroft, Mayroyd, near

Geo. Ashworth, Calais Mill, near

John Hodgson, Blind-lane, near

Wm. and Geo. Hincliffe, Scarbottom, near Mytholmroyd

D. Wilcock, Brearley, near Luddenden Fort

S. Briggs, Mytholmroyd

Miss Mary Oliver, Bridgeroyd, nr. Todmorden

Misses Fanny, Amanda, Grace, Hannah, and
Susanah Hincliffe, Stoodley-bridge, near
Todmorden, 5s. each

Misses Hannah, Ada, Fanny, and Georgiana,
and Master Will. Henry Hincliffe, Scar-
bottom, near Mytholmroyd, 5s. each

Geo. Greenwood, Scarbottom, near do.

Geo. Mayson, do., do.

John Longbottom, do., do.

Richard Birt, Free Trader, do., do.

John Greenwood, do., do.

William Greenwood, do., do.

Miss Riley

William Holme and Brothers

Lady and Daughter

Two Leaguers

Miss H. Holme

Mr. Constantine

James Greaves

J. W. Greaves

Edwin Greaves

James Ashworth, Calais Mill

H. Sugden

W. Sutcliffe, slater, Ing, Heptonstall

Geo. Sutcliffe, Stones, Heygate, do.

Mrs. Sunderland

Richard Thomas

Thomas Crossley

Daniel Crossley

Mrs. Sugden

Miss Martha Sugden

Miss S. Jane Sugden

Miss Elizabeth Sugden

Alfred Sugden

James Farrar, Hepstonstall

John Hellwell

A Well-wisher to the League

A Friend

W. Stanfield, Calais Mill

A Repeater

A Teetotaller

A Free Trader

A Free Trader

A Repeater

Thomas Sunderland, Underbank

Mrs. Gaukröger

Dr. Howard

John Crossley and Sons

Misses S. and M. A. Crossley

Misses A. and G. Crossley

Mrs. Moorhouse and Miss S. A. Crossley

Small sums

John Allanson, surgeon, Union-street

Thomas Openshaw, Red Lion Inn, Fleet-street

John Howard, Parson's-lane

Robert Holt, slater, New-road

Charles Wood, Fleet-street

Adam Parkinson, Hollin's-vale, near

John Cornall, Bolton-street

George Walker, do.

T. Openshaw, at Messrs. Walker & Brothers'

William Robinson, do. do.

Joseph Burgoyne, do. do.

Robert Bleasdale, do. do.

Benjamin Crapper, do. do.

Arthur Bentley, John-street

William Ashton, Ramsbottom, near

Edward Ashton, do.

Thomas Ashton, do.

George Ashton, do.

Henry Ashton, do.

Arthur Ashton, do.

John Daniel Ashton do.

Miss Ellen Hardcastle, Limesfield, near

Miss Alice Haworth, do.

James Henderson, Agur-street

William Maclean, Bank-street

Stone and Kemp (in addition to £150 at Edinburgh and £50 in London)

John Rushton

Rilward K. Brown

Jeffery Smith

Joseph Wolstencroft

Daniel Harton

Samuel Wolstencroft, Blackley-mill

Theophilus Toase

Clement Kemp

A Friend, per John and Thomas Mellalieu

Samuel Mellalieu

Henry Mellalieu

John Hughes

John Lancashire, Long-street

John Thornley

James Kastwood

Edward Mansergh

John Stringer, Joiner

Thomas Ashton, Tonge-lane

William Kent

Robert Mellalieu, Church-street

John Booth, Manchester-road

A Friend

James Harrison, Jan.

Edmund Butterworth, weaver, Church-street

Thomas Booth

Joseph Staveacre, Tonge-lane

A Pill for Dr. Peel

James Kent, Tonge-lane

A Silk Weaver

John Stringer, block-printer

William Ridings, Long-street

A Warper

Adam Holden

Thomas Lees, Manchester-road

An Octogenarian Radical

Small sums

W. Kennedy, banker

P. Murdoch, Wellington-square

John Kinross, merchant

George Taylor

James Murdoch, merchant

John Sloane, Sandgate-street

David Meikle, merchant, Tarbolton, near

James Cumming, merchant

G. K. Young, Wellington-square

William Watson, Alloway-place

James Morton, coach builder

Adam M'Hutcheon

Thomas Cuthbert, merchant, Ochiltree, near

A Friend to the League

Robert Robertson, Wellington-square

James Morton, do.

Robert Mackay

P. Ferguson

Alexander Easson, manufacturer

Walter Jamieson, merchant

Alexander White, jun., do.

John Glass, Albert-street

W. C. Baxter, cabinet maker

Daniel Ross, Magdalen-yard

William Mathewson, clothier, Union-street

William Murdoch, grocer, Nethergate

Robert Mitchell, Pole Park mill, near

James Luke, sen., Clement's-lane, near

William Leighton, Castle-street

George M'Donald, 18, Union-street, in addition to 5s. before—£1

George Scott, ironmonger, in addition to 5s.
before—£1

Duncan Shaw, teacher, Piesance

Alexander Stewart, Royal Hotel

Robert Easson, grocer, Union-street

James C. Ross, clothier, do.

John M'Kay, do.

James Dick, Meadowside, near

Robert Leighton, Castle-street

A few Weavers at Glamis, near

John Strachan, teacher, Monifirth

James Fenwick, carver, Nethergate

Thomas Dick, Ascher, do.

Small sums

James Royston, Son, and Co.

John Foster and Son, Queen's Head, near

James Farrar

Benjamin Mellor, Stainland, near

Benjamin Mellor, jun., do.

Samuel Mellor, do.

A. E. Royston, West Parade

A Friend

John Oates, ironfounder

William Milner, printer

J. C. Hoatson

John Craven

Wm. M'Clellan (2nd subscription)

John Carter, King-cross-lane

Mrs. Clay, Greetland, near

Mr. Kilner, do.

Two Working Men

John Burley, Greetland, near

John Bairdow

Jervis White

Aaron Moore

Daniel Briggs

Abraham Booth

William Briggs

Charles Turner

John Tempest

Samuel Stocks

Joseph Bairdow

Ward Holroyd

James Balmfirth's 2nd subscription

Small sums

Lord and Whitworth

George Sutcliffe

Hugh Pickering

Thomas Eagin

James Eastham

Richard Holdsworth

Thomas Pilling, St. James's-street

Nathan Smallpage

Charles Sutcliffe

Richard Brown, St. James's-street

Thomas Broxup, saddler

Miss Sutcliffe, St. James's-street

Luke Collinge, furniture broker

William Robinson, St. James's-street

Mrs. Hargreaves, South Parade

A Lady

John Birley, Burnley-lane

John Nowell, butcher

John Walker

Robert Broxup, grocer

James Nuttall, Hill Top

John Pollard, grocer

John Sutcliffe, St. James's-street

Mrs. Senior

John Radcliffe, painter

William Thompson, hatter

John Holden, Royal Oak Inn

John H. Scott, St. James's-street

John Lancaster, Cheapside

William Coultate, jun.

Luke Hargreaves

A Friend

Robert Smith, jun.

Madonna Downham

John Clegg

Robert Clegg, shoemaker

William Hargreaves

John Stevenson

Samuel Bracewell

John Kenyon

Small sums

Thomas Todd

John Greaves

Dr.

tion of the enemy, intended to bring division into the camp. But the people of England had got too far to be satisfied with a fixed duty, and would never allow that to be the settlement of the question. So long as there was a fixed duty, how could they be secure that any particular minister might not double or triple the duty? They would never relax in their exertions until they had obtained a total repeal: they would double and redouble their subscriptions until they had it, they would send out their tracts into every town and hamlet in the kingdom, they would double the number of their lecturers, and they would do much more, but they would obtain a repeal of the Corn Laws. (Hear.) Feeling greatly interested himself, he should now take up no more of their time, but would call upon Mr. Cobden to address the meeting.

Mr. COBDEN, M.P., addressed the meeting in a long and able speech.

Mr. BRIGHT, after an excellent address, announced the chairman's name, £200 (loud cheers),—being double his last year's subscription.

The CHAIRMAN said, he hoped there was no man who would not be ashamed if he did not give twice as much as last year. (Cheers.)

Mr. BRIGHT said, his friend Mr. Moore had generally taken the management of this part of the business, for which he had an admirable tact, attributable, perhaps, to the fact that he was a native of the Emerald Isle.

The names were handed in upon cards, and read out by Mr. Bright. The following is nearly a complete list:—

Of Fifty Pounds.—Messrs. Turton and Sons, Spring Works (making, with four £5 subscriptions from the family, £70); Naylor, Vickers, and Co.

Of Twenty-five Pounds.—Messrs. Wm. Jessop and Sons; "Anti-Ferand." (Mr. Ward announced the latter subscription, placed in his hands by Mr. Palfreyman, from a gentleman who chose to be anonymous, and took the designation of "Anti-Ferand.")

Of Twenty Pounds.—W. Hargreaves (last year, 10l.—and 40l. next year, if needful); Wm. Fisher (10l. last year); Thomas Birks (5l. last year); Henry Wilkinson (10l. last year); S. Butcher.

Of Ten Guineas.—Mr. F. Hoole.

Of Ten Pounds.—Stevenson, Blake, and Co.; Crowley and Pearson; Twigg and Brooks, Kilnhurst. R. Leader, jun., and family (5l. last year); Knowles and Brown, Rotherham; "A Mother."

Of Five Pounds.—Mrs. T. B. Turton; Mrs. Jos. Turton; Mrs. W. Turton; Mrs. Matthews; Fenton and Shore; Peter Frith; Jos. Hobson, Burrey-street; Jos. Mappin, Norfolk-street; M. Hunter; D. Doncaster, Doncaster-street; W. Jackson, Bank-street; Edw. Bramley, M. and R. Brady; E. and J. Greaves, Park; P. Unwin, Burgess-street; Jos. Ashworth, Bridge-street; M. Spencer and Son; Jas. Brown, Division-street; Gately and Wortley; the Secretaries of the Free-Trade Association; A. Friend; J. W. Smith; Mr. Alderman Hoole.

Of Two Guineas.—W. T. and J. Mabbott, Division-street.

Of Two Pounds.—W. Thompson; John Nowill, Meadow-street; John Martin, Millsands; W. Corran, St. James's-row; Merrill and Jarvis; George Johnson, Porter-street; Jno. Leyland (last year, 1l.); W. Jarvis, Snighill; Andrew M'Turk; Charles Fisher, Orchard-place; Charles Fox, Cheney-square; R. Osborn.

Of Thirty Shillings.—John Gladwin; Jos. Jervis, Sportsman's Inn, Bridgehouses.

Of One Guinea.—John White, Workhouse-croft; Thomas Watson, Fargate; John Charlton, Charles-street.

Of One Pound.—John Nicholson, St. Thomas-street; John Littlewood, Park; John Dickinson, West-street; Alfred Hobson, Edward-street; Abm. Hill, Infirmary-lane (last year 5s.); John Hughes, Russell-street; Robt. Taylor, Division-street; T. S. Naylor, Brook-hill; Bolton and Co.; W. Binney, Mulberry-street; Alfred Osborn, Smithfield; John Osborn, Sussex-street (last year 2s. 6d.); George Latham (last year 2s. 6d.); J. Burgin, West-street; H. Jackson, Charlotte-street; T. Sheldon, Trafalgar-street; W. H. Jackson, Charlotte-street; J. Waters, Carver-street; Saml. Haguer, Eldon-street; a Friend; Joseph Dickinson, Westgate; Russell and Jackson; a Friend; Robert Holbein, Barker-pool; a Friend; W. Burdill, Snighill; W. Peach, Smithfield; Thos. Goodwin, West-street-terrace; John Arnold, Wellington-place; W. Bagshaw, Pitmoor; W. Lister, Westgate; W. Troth, Moorfields; Moses Kadon; Wm. Greaves, Park; a Friend; Wm. Leadbeater, Allen-street; John Pitt, Walgrave; J. S. Sellers, Sussex-street; J. Outram, Black Swan; Charles Unwin, Westgate; Geo. Holmes, Westgate; J. Turner, Harvest-lane; Robert Roper, Park; A. Tofield; J. H. Greaves, High-street; Thomas Jubb, Rotherham; Clerks at Green-lane Works; W. Nowill, jun.; George Kadon, Fargate; Isaac Read, Lambert-street; C. R. Holman, Bridge-street; W. D. Goodall, South-street; Samuel Hancock, Peacroft; James Taylor, Burgess-street; W. Atkinson, Angel-street; W. Holdsworth, Snighill; Jos. Smith, Sheffield-moor; Thos. Watson; Jno. White.

Of Ten Shillings.—Edw. Butterell; Jos. Morton, Infirmary-lane; a Working Man, Loxley; a Friend; Jas. Higgin, Attercliffe; J. H. Hancock; T. Twigg, Kilnhurst; G. Trickett, Loxley; B. Hall.

Of Five Shillings.—Thos. Hobson, Hallam (and twice as much next year, if required); a Friend; Sam. Smith, King-street; Chas. Hutchinson, Westgate; a Working Man; R. Thompson, Gravel-stones; a Friend to Working Men; J. Curr. Of Three Shillings.—"Complete Suffrage, wife and seven children, nine fourpenny pieces."

Of 2s. 6d.—Thos. Deakin, Infirmary-lane; a Friend; Jas. Johnson, Holey-green; a Well-wisher to the League; a Friend to the League; a Friend; a Friend.

At its conclusion, the Chairman cast up the list, and announced the amount to be £726. (Loud cheers.) Mr. WARD, who was received with loud and long-extended cheers, expressed his deep sense of their kindness, and said he had every reason to feel thankful at representing such a constituency as that of Sheffield. He spoke in high terms of the temper which was manifested at the meeting that morning, when every subject connected with politics had been fully and fairly sifted. He was sorry that his respected colleague had been prevented from attending the meeting that evening, and would observe of that gentleman that he would not shrink doing his duty to the town of Sheffield. On the Corn Laws, Mr. Parker had always voted in a straightforward manner, and free from all party considerations. They would be able to judge very soon as to what were the sentiments of the Whig party on this subject, and that from their old representative, Lord Morpeth. The declaration of that nobleman at Wakefield would be most important on this subject, because it would be looked upon as indicating the opinions of his party. The honourable member followed up the observations of Mr. Bright and Mr. Cobden, as to the language of their opponents. They generally looked to the gentlemen of the Upper House to set them an example—something partaking of the attitude of aristocratic dignity, like my Lord Wharfedale in the picture before him (cheers); but my Lord Orkney has described their proceedings as "kicking up a bobby." He concluded with:—If the constituency of this country will do—as he believed sincerely that they would do—their duty, he defied the present Government to continue the present system one year longer. The honourable member sat down amidst loud and cheering cheers.

After votes of thanks to Messrs. Cobden and Bright, to Mr. Ward, and the Chairman, the meeting separated.—Sheffield Iris.

HULL.

Two very important meetings were held in this town on Friday the 26th ult., to receive a deputation from the Council of the Anti-Corn Law League, consisting of Richard Cobden, Esq., M.P., John Bright, Esq., M.P., and Colonel T. P. Thompson. The first meeting was announced to take place in the Town-hall, at eleven o'clock, at which hour the hall was crowded to excess. On the arrival of the deputation, they were received with the most enthusiastic applause, and on the motion of Mr. John Foster, Sir William Lowthorp was called to the chair. He was supported on his right by Colonel Thompson, and on his left by Messrs. Cobden and Bright, and around them on the bench were seated a great number of the most respectable merchants and tradesmen of the borough, and also several clergymen.

The CHAIRMAN said:—Ladies and gentlemen, it has been to me a cause of deep regret that this great and important town should have occupied so low a position, and been so apathetic in reference to the question which is now to be brought before us. (Applause.) I, therefore, cannot but rejoice in the occurrence of this day's meeting, it being likely to identify us more fully with the principle and proceedings of the Great Anti-Corn Law League. That great body, gentlemen, like the mighty deep, receiving strength from every tributary stream moving onward with a power which nothing can resist, will shortly—(interruption from two or three persons in the gallery at the far end, and cries of "Turn him out," &c.) And why, gentlemen? Why, because it has in it the essential element of truth. (Applause.) It is this only on which it depends for success, and it is this which makes it invincible and irresistible. (Cheers.) How otherwise could we expect to see such wonderful effects as are produced by my honourable friends, Mr. Cobden, Mr. Bright, and Col. Thompson, whom I am most happy and proud to introduce to you this day,—men who have distinguished themselves in the annals of their country by their untiring zeal in seeking to promote its welfare? (Cheers.) How is it but on the principle of truth that we can account for it, that on a simple statement of facts, in spite of all difficulties and dangers from opposition, they have succeeded in convincing multitudes everywhere of every class, rendered powerless the arguments of their opponents, and succeeded in bringing the noble cause in which they have embarked to its present triumphant position. (Loud applause.) In short, gentlemen, I feel that this great cause is destined, by the blessing of God, to bring this country from its present long-continued distress; and I believe that nothing else, humanly speaking, can do it. It is to me a matter of wonder that any government can act on any other principles than those which are, in my humble opinion, so intimately connected with everything that is rational, benevolent, and scriptural. (Hear, hear.) It is on these grounds that I have all along taken, and do take such a decided stand. (Cheers.) I see involved in the question great truths, which cannot be abandoned with impunity. God has made us, in the economy of his providence, dependent on each other, and united us by mutual laws of dependence and obligation; and I see in this cause of Free Trade a cause which seeks to cement that union, and promote an intercourse which will advance, improve, civilize, and bless the whole world. (Loud cheers.)

Letters, stating reasons and apologizing for non-attendance, were read by the Chairman from Sir John Hanmer, M.P., Sir Walter James, M.P., Mr. Wrightson, M.P., and Mr. John Grimston of Newcastle.

Mr. COBDEN, Mr. BRIGHT, and Colonel THOMPSON, were then severally introduced to the meeting amidst warm plaudits. Their speeches were marked by characteristic power and effect, and drew forth loud and repeated demonstrations of applause.

After some disturbance from a person from Newcastle, who wished to challenge "any person in the world" to discuss the Corn-Law question with him, and who was much laughed at, the subscriptions were announced.—Joseph Sykes and Sons, 100l.; R. Sykes (Westall), 50l.; T. Thompson and Son, 25l.; J. Jones, sen., 25l.; Brownlow, Pearson, and Co., 25l.; Sir William Lowthorp, 10l.; A. Friend, 3l. 3s.; A. Friend, 2l. 2s.; Editor of the Hull Advertiser, 2l. 2s.; Dr. Firth, 2l.; William Sisson, 2l.; William Hodgson (Beverley), 5l.; George Malcolm and Son, 5l.; P. Tigar (Beverley), 5l.; John Foster, 5l.; T. A. Wilkinson, 5l.; George Cookman, 5l.; John and Robert Liddell, 5l.; John Atkinson, 5l.; John H. Midgley (Rochdale), 5l.; Herbert Seaton, 5l.; George Lee, 1l.; D. Goodwill, 1l.; B. Brady, 1l.; John Meggitt, 1l.; John Richardson, 1l.; P. Lowther, 1l.; J. Constable, 1l.; A. Friend to the League, 1l.; B. Gunnell, 5s.; William Crookill, labourer, 1s.; John Richardson, ditto, 1s.; George Auckland, ditto, 1s.; George Fisher, 5s.; A. Friend, 2s. 6d.; four Labourers, 4s.; W. H. Bell, 1l.; Joseph Stork, 1l.; T. Meggitt, 1l.; a Whig Fixed-Duty Man, 5l.; Joseph Major, 1l.; J. G. Hood (Hessle), 1l.

The subscriptions at this meeting amounted to 305l.

EVENING MEETING.

This meeting took place in the Victoria Rooms at half-past six o'clock, when about five hundred individuals, amongst whom were many ladies, sat down to tea. The demand for tickets was very great, and had the room been twice the size, it would in all probability have been filled. Sir William Lowthorp was again called to the chair, and briefly addressed the meeting.

Mr. Janson, from the Hull Flax and Cotton Mills, presented to Mr. Cobden an excellent address from the workmen employed by the Hull Flax and Cotton Mill Company.

Mr. COBDEN briefly returned thanks. The Rev. JAMES ASPINALL, rector of Althorpe, Lincolnshire, rose amidst loud and general applause, and delivered a speech remarkable for its vigorous reasoning and glowing eloquence. We can only make room for the following striking passage:—

"You will observe that I used the phrase was, when speaking of the landed interest. I did so purposely, inasmuch as the whole of my clerical income arises either from land or the produce of the land. Indeed, I go farther; I not only consider that it is the continued prosperity of trade which is to maintain our land in its present value, but I hold that it is the increase of trade up to the point it has attained, which has given to the land all, or nearly all the value which it possesses, and has, not figuratively, but literally, transmuted the soil of this country into gold far beyond what the alchemist of the dark and middle ages, as he watched over his crucible through anxious days and sleepless nights, ever ventured to anticipate in the wildest flights and most enthusiastic dreams of his excited imagination. (Loud cheers.) And I will tell you how I have been brought to form such an opinion. The very stages of my clerical life have, of themselves, conducted me to it. My first church was in Cheshire, about fifteen miles from Manchester, in a spot whence all the fruits of the land were swept away for the supply of the manufacturing districts. I next moved to Rochdale, the very man, if I may so say, of the giant Manufacture, whose appetite had to be satisfied, where, for five years, I had time to calculate the immense importance of the trade of the country to the owners of the soil. Subsequently, my abode was in Liverpool, the port of the manufacturing districts, as they are the workshop of Liverpool, where, day by day, I had the same lesson more and more impressed upon me. Last of all, I took up my residence in Lincolnshire, on the banks of the Trent, which noble river makes our part of the country, as it were, the market garden of London itself, while, by the Keabby Canal, that portion of the produce of the land which is not sent to the metropolis, is poured into the manufacturing districts. So that, whichever way I turn, and wherever I go, experience still puts this question to me, What would be the value of your parsonage and your title deeds, and your acres themselves, without the help of that trade which is so thwarted, fettered, and obstructed by unwise legislation? (Great Cheering.) I am no member of the Anti-Corn Law League; I have no interest in trade and manufactures, save and except so far that, dining altogether from the member for Dorsetshire, who was placed, in the last session of Parliament, to sneer at the tall chimneys in Manchester and the surrounding districts, I look upon every new chimney which towers aloft towards the clouds, every new factory built, every new loom put to work, and every new spindle set in motion, as so many additional securities maintaining and enhancing the value of the land of the country, whether belonging to the church or the laity. (Cheers.)"

Mr. COBDEN, on presenting himself, was received with great applause. As soon as this had in some degree subsided, he said that he could not say he had not been accustomed to listen to Anti-Corn Law speeches, for perhaps no one had heard more upon the question of Free Trade than himself; but he must say that he had listened with unprecedented gratification to the speech of his friend Mr. Aspinall. They were a description of poachers in Free Trade. When they heard anything that was new and elegant, they felt justified in appropriating something to themselves; and he did think that his friend's speech would furnish to him and Mr. Bright some flowers of eloquence. The honourable member then proceeded to discuss the general question, and concluded an able speech by a warm appeal to organize themselves into an extensive branch society of the League, and then to set to work, that the people might become thoroughly informed on the question; they would then never again send members to Parliament to represent monopoly. Mr. Cobden concluded amidst enthusiastic cheering, which was several times renewed.

Mr. BRIGHT followed in a powerful address.

The Rev. E. HIGGINS urged the necessity of contributing liberally to the League fund, and moved as a resolution, "That a subscription be immediately entered into towards the great League fund of £100,000."

The Ex-Mayor of Hull (Mr. Alderman Atkinson) briefly seconded the resolution, which was agreed to.

Colonel THOMPSON delivered an admirable speech, which was received with hearty applause.

After Colonel Thompson's speech, the following subscriptions were then announced:—Anonymous, 5l.; a Friend, 5l.; Mr. John Lovitt, 5l.; Mr. Holmes, 5l.; Mr. John Dalton, 5l.; Mr. Cobb, 2l. 2s.; Mr. W. H. Bell, 1l.; Mr. J. Store, 1l.; Mr. Major, 1l.; Mr. E. Thorp, White Hart, Silver-street, 1l.; a Friend, 1l.; Mr. Wilson, 1l.; Mr. G. G. Wood, 1l.; Mr. J. H. Vallance, 1l.; Mr. Hunt, 1l.; Mr. Andrew, 1l.; Mr. Langsdorf, 1l.; a Friend, 1l.; Mr. Larrard, 1l.; Mr. W. Armstrong, 1l.; a Friend, 1l.; Mr. Simpson, 1l.; Mr. Thompson, 1l. 1s.; Mr. Wray, 1l.; Mr. Morehead, 1l.; Mr. Todd, 1l. 1s.; a Friend, 1l. 1s.; Mr. S. Birch, 1l. 1s.; Mr. Waltham, 1l.; Mr. Hird, 1l.; Mr. Kilvington, 1l.; Mr. Vickers, 2l. 2s.; a Friend, 1l.

The evening's subscription amounted to £49 8s.; morning meeting, £305; total £354 8s.

Votes of thanks were then moved to the deputation, and to the Chairman, and the meeting separated.—Abridged from the Hull Rockingham.

SUNDERLAND.

Tuesday evening, the 23rd ultimo, a most extraordinary demonstration, in connexion with the movements of the League, occurred in Sunderland. Little more than a twelvemonth ago, when Mr. Bright and Mr. Moore visited the town, so trivial an interest was excited, that scarcely two hundred persons attended to hear them. On the present occasion, however, the Local Free-Trade Association, anticipating a considerably increased attendance, prepared the floor of the Athenaeum Hall for the reception of electors (the gallery being appointed for ladies), and opened the adjoining lecture-room and model-room for the accommodation of non-electors. Seven o'clock was the time named for the commencement of business; but long before six great numbers of persons were gathered about the building, anxious for admittance; and, in order to prevent confusion, electors were allowed to take their places. By some mistake, the door for the admission of non-electors was opened for a short time, and several hundreds rushed through the model-room into the floor of the hall, which soon became densely crowded. At half-past six, the non-electors' door was again opened, and so great was the pressure of the people upon the staircase outside the building, that a battlement of masonry was thrown into the street, and a large stone, six feet long, three wide, and nine inches thick, fell upon a sailor named Snowden, who resides in Silver-street, threw him down, and crushed one of his feet in a dreadful manner. By this time, the whole of the apartments in which it was possible either to see or hear the speakers, were crammed almost to suffocation. The gallery, which was intended for a hundred, was crowded with thrice the number; and the floor of the hall, in which seats had been placed for five hundred, was densely packed with at least a thousand men. Altogether there could not be fewer than two thousand persons within the building, and we are informed that at least twice that number went away from the physical impossibility of obtaining admittance. We thought ourselves fortunate in getting in at all; but, situated as we were, to take a note of the proceedings was utterly out of the question. Soon after seven Robert Burdon Cay, Esq., the Mayor of Sunderland, Mr. Cobden, and Colonel Thompson, with great difficulty made their way to the platform, and were received with loud cheers. The Mayor having, in brief and appropriate terms, opened the business of the meeting, called upon Colonel Thompson, who addressed the audience at considerable length, and with his usual felicity of illustration and force of argument. Mr. Cobden followed, and, if we may be allowed the hyperbole, more than exceeded himself. Mr. R. R. Moore then delivered an eloquent address, in which he rendered due honours to the electors of the city of Durham, and concluded by asking whether, considering the crowded state of the meeting, it would be expedient to commence a subscription in aid of the League fund? The "Ayes" being declared to "have it," cards were sent up to the platform bearing the amounts of subscription, together with the names and places of abode of the several contributors. In this manner upwards of £150 was raised in a very short time; and it was then announced that the Local Association would, in the course of a few days, complete the good work so auspiciously begun. Thanks having been given to the Deputation and the Mayor, and thrice three lusty cheers for Free Trade, the meeting broke up. At the close of the proceedings a subscription was commenced by Mr. Cobden and Colonel Thompson, in favour of the sailor who had been injured by the accident above related.—Durham Chronicle.

The following subscriptions were announced by Mr. Moore:—5l. 5s. each—J. Mounsey, T. Thompson, Joshua Wilson, James Donkin, Vint and Carr, Dr. Ogden, a Lady, A. J. Moore, Dixon, Phillips, and Co., E. Mounsey, D. Junassohn, Thomas Mounsey, and the Mayor—68l. 5s.; A. G. Rahn, 5l.; 3l. 3s.—T. Pratt and Caleb Richardson—5l. 6s.; Workmen at Sunderland Pottery, 2l. 6s. 6d.; 2l. 2s.—John Peacock, T. Patterson, John Lindsay, J. C. Mounsey, and J. Clay—10l. 10s.; 2l.—Anonymous and J. Cropton—4l.; T. Adamson, 1l. 11s.; 1l. 1s.—A Free Trader, J. M. Chalmers, George Hardcastle, Williams and Morrison, William French, John Dennistoun, W. Coxon, John Murray, John Mounsey, jun., Mrs. Meadley, Richard Halcro, William Muschamp, George Harrison, jun., Joseph Potts, a Free Trader, John Sedgewick, E. C. Robinson, George Nesbitt, J. P. Kidson, Francis Marshall, John Hills, William Crosier, William Haddock, James Hills, Henry Binns, Wm. Tane, a Friend, Richard Haddock, Thomas Read, a Free Trader, and Edward Bowmaker—32l. 10s.; 1l.—Wm. Binns, Sampson Mills, J. Scorer, a Free Trader, Robert French, Wm. Ray, Alexander Wilson, William Wade, William Robinson, J. C. Carr, Thomas Wight, Thomas Walker, a Friend to the League, a London Shipowner, W. T. Moore, James Jopling, Matthew Kearney, John Bamlett, John Cropton, jun., X.Y.Z., W. C., William Attey, and John Weighill—23l.; John Hutchinson, jun., 15s.; D. H., 11s.; 10s. 6d.—S. F., W. D., and J. H., wife of J. H.—1l. 11s. 6d.; John Palmer, 10s.; 5s.—D. B. P., and Cash—19s. Total, 137l. 7s.—This sum, it was announced amidst loud cheers, exceeded by nearly 70l. the total collections of 1843.

TYNEMOUTH.

On Wednesday evening, the 24th ultimo, Colonel Thompson and Mr. R. R. Moore attended a meeting at the Assembly Room in the George Tavern, Tynemouth. [Mr. Cobden was unable to be present, having an engagement in Sheffield for the same evening.] The room was filled. Henry Micalfe, Esq., the member for the borough, was announced to preside; but illness prevented his attendance. The chair was taken by Mr. George Shotton, "an old sailor," as he subsequently called himself; and on opening the business, he explained the reason of Mr. Micalfe's absence, and stated his own regret at the circumstance, more particularly when he considered the inefficiency of the chairman thus imposed upon the meeting. After powerful addresses from the deputation, who were greatly applauded, the following subscriptions were announced:—2l. 2s. each, Messrs. Ogilvie and Son, William Brown, jun., Henry Dale, John Dair, Robert Pow, and Thomas Young. 1l. 1s., Messrs. Robert Forth, George Shotton, William Wignall, and Joseph Burrell—1l., Messrs. Edward Simpson, G. S. Tyack, and J. B. Dale—10s., Messrs. Michael Watson and G. Hall—5s., Messrs. Henry Wigham, B. C. Frederick Corder, Joseph

Owen, and John Buckham.—2s. 6d., Thomas Lilly.—Total 22l. 4s. 6d.

Mr. WILLIAM WINGWAVE moved:—"That the two gentlemen forming the deputation receive the cordial thanks of this meeting for the information which they have laid before us."

Mr. WILLIAM BROWN, jun., seconded the motion. The CHAIRMAN said, to his mind, as an old sailor, nothing would so much benefit the shipping interest as Free Trade, not only in corn, but in everything else. It might be said they carried corn now, but the quantity was limited that was carried in English ships. For his own part, he must confess that when he entered the room he was almost "wondering in his faith," although he agreed to take the chair, as their hon. member was unable to attend. He had not quite made up his mind whether to be a fixed-duty man, or a Free Trader. But he could say now, that he was a convert. (Loud cheers.)

The resolution was put and carried by acclamation. Col. THOMPSON returned thanks. Mr. MOORE moved the cordial thanks of the meeting to the Chairman. It rejoiced him to hear him say that he had been converted; and he trusted many others stood in the same position. Mr. M. then delivered a few stirring sentences suggested by contemplating the question in its peaceful aspect, as calculated to unite all nations of the earth, and as affording them the means of spreading many mighty truths, as far as the lakes, and the rivers, and the woods, and the great ocean afforded the means of carrying them. The CHAIRMAN briefly returned thanks, and the meeting separated.—Abridged from the Gateshead Observer.

JEDBURGH.

The great Anti-Corn-Law and Free-Trade demonstration of the inhabitants of the county of Roxburgh, to which, for ten days previously, the supporters of Monopoly looked forward with alarm, and its opponents with desire, and all classes with unwonted interest, took place at Jedburgh on Saturday week, and exceeded our warmest anticipations. The weather was highly propitious. There was a cattle fair at Jedburgh, which brought with it some bustle. From the parishes of Ednam and Sprouston, in the eastern extremity of the county—of Melrose, in the north—and of Castleton, in the west—and from all the intermediate distances, we observed persons who had come to the meeting. The towns furnished their quotas. The use of the Town-foot Secession Church had been handsomely granted for the meeting. Our estimate is that not fewer than 2000 persons were present. Unfortunately, several hundreds were unable to find admittance. On the platform were the Earl of Buchan; the Hon. J. E. Elliot; John Ord, Esq.; John Murray, Esq.; Walter Wilson, Esq.; Bailies Scott and Haddon; Messrs. Hilsen, Deans, C. Robson, J. and G. Wilson, C. Wilson, Crease, Lockie, &c. &c. The following reverend gentlemen were also present: Rev. Messrs. Nicol, Renton, Baird, and Williamson, of the Secession Church; Barr and Jarvis, of the Relief Church; Purves, of the Free Church; and Connell, of the Independents.

Mr. ORD stood forward and said, that as the duty of nominating a chairman to this important meeting had devolved upon him, he begged to propose the Right Hon. the Earl of Buchan, a nobleman whose liberal and philanthropic sentiments entitled him to the highest respect.

The Earl of BUCHAN having taken the chair, returned his thanks for the honour which had been conferred upon him by the committee of the Anti-Corn-Law Association of Jedburgh, Kelso, and Hawick, in requesting him to preside on this occasion. It was not his business to say much. This was the first time he had ever occupied the chair at any public meeting, and he hoped the meeting would overlook any imperfections which might occur. They were here not to listen to him, but to Mr. Cobden and the other gentlemen of the League. He would just say that he felt a sort of hereditary right to stand here when it was for the good of the country.

Bailie SCOTT, senior magistrate of Hawick, presented the freedom of the burgh of Hawick, in the name of the town council, to Mr. Cobden as a token of their respect.

Mr. COBDEN returned his thanks to the town council of Hawick for the honour they had done him.

The Noble CHAIRMAN requested that they would now favour Mr. Cobden with their serious attention.

Mr. COBDEN and the other members of the deputation then addressed the meeting at considerable length: they were listened to with great attention, and were warmly applauded throughout.

Mr. W. WILSON moved a resolution condemnatory of the Corn Laws, and pledging the meeting to support the League.

Mr. LOCKIE seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

Mr. DEANS moved, and Mr. GEORGE HILSON seconded, a vote of thanks to the deputation, which was carried with acclamation.

Mr. COBDEN acknowledged the compliment.

Mr. CHARLES ROBSON proposed that the cordial thanks of the meeting be given to the Rev. Mr. Nicol, and the elders and managers of his congregation, for the use of the church on the present occasion.

Bailie HADDON had much pleasure in seconding the motion, because he felt that the cause of justice, humanity, and religion ought to go hand in hand. (Applause.)

Mr. COBDEN proposed a vote of warm thanks to the Right Hon. the Earl of Buchan, for the manner in which he had discharged the office of chairman on the present occasion. (Great applause.)

The Earl of BUCHAN said he was proud of the honour of presiding over such a numerous and important meeting. In this county he was but a small proprietor, but so far as his interest went, it was at the service of his country, and he trusted it would never be devoted to any other cause than the public good. He begged to thank the meeting for the honour which had been conferred upon him.

The meeting, after giving three hearty cheers for the League, then very quietly separated.

The subscriptions are going forward. In addition to those formerly announced, the following have been reported to us:—Joseph Morrison, Esq., Kelso, 10s.; the Earl of Buchan, 5l.; Mr. Lockie, 2l.; and a large number 1l. each.—Abridged from the Kelso Chronicle.

MIDDLETON, NEAR MANCHESTER.—On Monday last a public meeting was held here in the large room of Messrs. Stone and Kemp's new building, which was kindly granted for the occasion, and was completely filled with an attentive audience of nearly 300 persons. Mr. Rushton, the president of the Middleton Association, occupied the chair. A resolution expressing unabated confidence in the League, and pledging the meeting to its support, was moved by Mr. Smith and seconded by Mr. Brown. The chairman introduced Mr. Prentice, one of the deputation from Manchester, as an old, long-tried friend of the cause, and most zealous advocate. Mr. Prentice then delivered an able speech in support of Free-Trade principles. The Rev. Edward Leighton briefly expressed his approval of the object of the meeting, and declared his conviction that the abrogation of these restrictive laws would tend greatly to advance the moral and physical condition of our fellow-countrymen. Mr. Falvey next addressed the meeting in a speech of great force and ability. Cards for subscriptions having been distributed through the room, the various contributions were announced by the secretary, namely:—Messrs. Stone and Kemp (in addition to 150l. at Edinburgh, and 50l. in London), 10l. (loud cheers); John Rushton, chairman, 2l. (cheers); E. K. Brown, 1l. 10s.; Jeffery Smith, 1l. 10s.; J. Wolstencroft, 1l.; Daniel Burton, 1l.; Theophilus Toase, 10s. 6d.; Clement Kemp, 5s.; a Friend, per John and Thomas Mellallieu, 2l.; Henry Mellallieu, 1l.; Samuel Mellallieu, 1l.; John Hughes, 1l.; John Lancashire, 1l.; John Thornley, 10s.; James Eastwood, 5s.; Edward Mansergh, 5s.; John Stringer, Joiner, 5s.; Thomas Ashton, Tonge-lane, 5s.; William Kent, 5s.; Robert Mellallieu, 5s.; 2s. 6d. each from John Booth, "a Friend," James Harrison, jun., Edmund Butterworth, Thomas Booth, Joseph Staveacre, James Kent, John Stringer, William Riddings, Adam Holden, Thomas Lees; and various small sums, making up 29l., which, with 10l. already paid at Manchester by Messrs. J. and T. Mellallieu of this place, gives 39l. as the present subscription, which is expected to be further increased to nearly double last year's amount. Mr. Hughes moved—

"The cordial thanks of this meeting to the deputation for their able addresses this evening, and for their zealous assistance to our cause."

This was seconded by J. T. Kemp, Esq., of London, in an appropriate address, in which he observed, in confirmation, that Corn-Law "protection" was no benefit to the agriculturist—that his father had been a tenant-farmer forty years, and had left off farming with less capital than he commenced. Agriculturists would not suffer by the repeal of the Corn Laws, but would share in the general prosperity of the country. The deputation having expressed their acknowledgments, three cheers for the chairman and the League were proposed by Mr. Prentice, and responded to most heartily. Mr. Wolstencroft, on behalf of the meeting, expressed its obligations to Messrs. Stone and Kemp for their liberality in allowing the use of the room, after which the company separated.

KIRKBRISTON ANTI-CORN-LAW ASSOCIATION.—On Thursday evening, the 19th inst., this association held their annual demonstration at the George Inn, and afterwards adjourned to the Sunday School-room, to hear Mr. T. Plint, of Leeds, and F. Schwann, Esq., of Huddersfield; Mr. John Parkin, head-constable, in the chair. The Rev. John Hughes moved the first resolution, in condemnation of all protection, in a most powerful and effective speech, his maiden speech on Free Trade. Mr. William Midgley, a fancy weaver, seconded this resolution. F. Schwann, Esq., supported it in an effective speech. The second resolution was moved by Mr. Stephen Leather, a fancy weaver, seconded by Mr. William Kaye, of the firm of Gaukroger and Kaye, and was supported by Mr. T. Plint, in a speech which occupied two hours in the delivery, and which was listened to with marked attention. The evening closed by announcing the following subscriptions in aid of the League Fund of £100,000. Messrs. Joah Sugden and Son, £5; James Lockwood, £3; Wm. Stockdale, £3; William Carter, £1; Wm. Kaye, 10s.; Charles Sutcliffe, 10s.; David Lockwood, 5s.; John Lockwood, 5s.; Sam. Beaumont, 5s.; Robert Pitton, 5s. It is with the greatest pleasure we add that a great number of half-crowns were subscribed; the whole amounting in one half-hour to upwards of £17, which will be further increased. The ladies come in for a large share of praise.

PAYNE'S-LANE, SALOP, Jan. 25.—Yesterday evening Messrs. Prentice and Masie, as delegates of the League from Manchester, attended a Free-Trade festival held in the long room attached to the Hotel. Punctually to the appointed time a very numerous and respectable company had assembled. The chair was taken by Abraham Darby, Esq., of Coalbrookdale, who is very extensively interested in the neighbouring ironworks. Messrs. T. Davies, C. Jones, E. Jones, Millington, Wear, and Dr. Davis, were the movers and seconders of the resolutions, which, briefly but clearly expressing the injustice and injury of monopoly and the advantages of unrestricted trade, were carried unanimously. The spirit-stirring addresses delivered by the deputation were listened to with eager attention, and the cheering with which they were interrupted marked the enthusiasm of the assemblage. At the close of the meeting subscription cards, which had been distributed through the room, were handed up, and found to amount to upwards of £34, being considerably more than the sum collected at the corresponding time last year. The whole business of the meeting passed off with the greatest satisfaction to all present; and it is to be hoped that this and the meeting held last evening at Coalbrookdale will be the commencement of a thorough agitation of the county of Salop, than which no place needs more enlightening.

HORBURY, NEAR WAKEFIELD.—On Thursday evening, the 25th instant, a meeting was held in the Primitive Methodist Chapel of this place, in aid of the League Fund, at which Mr. Race presided. The audience was addressed at considerable length by Mr. Thomas Plint, of Leeds, after which resolutions condemning the Corn Laws, approving of the League, and originating a subscription to its funds, were unanimously passed. Messrs. Rayner, George Foster, H. Briggs (Overton), and Robinson, took part in the proceedings. The sum of £18 13s. 6d. was subscribed at the close of the meeting.

SALENDINE NOOK, NEAR HUDDERSFIELD.—ANTI-CORN-LAW TEA PARTY.—A very numerous party partook of tea in the school-room of the Baptist Chapel of this place on Monday, the 29th instant. After the removal of the tables, the chair was taken by Mr. David Haigh, of Quarmby, who opened the proceedings in an appropriate speech. The first resolution, viz:—

"That this meeting consider the Corn Laws as an invasion on the rights of industry, a serious obstacle to the progress of knowledge, and a fruitful source of animosity, heartburning, and war between the nations of the earth," was moved by Mr. J. Sykes, and seconded by the Rev. Mr. Lomas, who, in an impressive speech, denounced the wickedness of limiting the food which sustains and comforts life. The second resolution, which was as follows:—

"That this meeting cordially approve of the object of the Anti-Corn-Law League, the total and immediate repeal of the Corn Laws, and resolve to aid its efforts to procure that great measure, by subscribing to the fund of £100,000."

was moved by Mr. Wright Mellor, and seconded by Mr. Henry Edwards, both of whom addressed the meeting in language at once convincing in argument, and determined in its force of condemnation of all restrictions on national exchange. The chairman then called upon Mr. T. Plint, of Leeds, who, in his usual manner, detailed the origin of the Corn Laws, their action in creating foreign tariffs, and the efficiency of Free Trade, as the only counter-form to foreign tariffs. He then answered several current objections to Free Trade, and concluded by exposing the injustice of a fixed duty. Although several of the principal manufacturers of the place and neighbourhood had contributed at the Huddersfield meeting, a fourth sum of £30. 11s. was raised at the meeting, a sum—considering the population and circumstances of Salendine Nook—more munificent even than the £20,000 of Manchester.

YEADON.—The meeting in this populous village was held on Thursday, the 18th ultimo, in the old Methodist Chapel. The place was filled at the hour appointed for commencing. Deputations from Leeds and Bradford attended, including Messrs. H. H. Stansfield, Thos. Plint, Sheen, J. Sprunt, E. Kenion, and Wm. Byles; besides whom, there were on the platform, William Ackroyd, Esq., of Otley; Edward Barrett, Esq., of Otley; R. Milligan, Esq., of Acacia; and many of the most influential inhabitants of Yeadon, Rawden, and Guiseley, engaged in trade. On the motion of Mr. William Dennison, Robert Milligan, Esq., of Acacia, took the chair. The Chairman having opened the proceedings, resolutions were moved and seconded in able speeches by Messrs. Dawson, Marshall, Stansfield of Leeds, Kenion of Bradford, Sheen, Dennison, Ryeacroft, Wm. Ackroyd, Esq., of Otley, and by Messrs. Plint of Leeds and Byles. Cards were handed up, and read out, and at nearly 11 o'clock, the proceedings terminated, about £40 having been subscribed. Thanks were very cordially voted to the visitors and to the Chairman previous to the breaking up of the meeting.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.—Yeadon.—William Kenion, 5l.; John Parkinson, 2l. 2s.; John Denison, 1l. 1s.; Joseph Hustler, 1l. 1s.; William Denison, 1l. 1s.; Joseph Denison, 1l. 1s.; Matthew Walkor, 1l. 1s.; Joseph Dawson, 1l. 1s.; Joseph White, 1l. 1s.; Wm. Hustler, 1l.; Jotham Harrison, 1l.; Wm. Wormald, 1l.; Michael Gill, 1l.; Richard Baldwin, 1l. 1s.; Abraham Denison and Brothers, 1l.; John Denison, 1l.; James Clapham, 1l.; Benjamin Dawson, 1l.; John Harrison, 1l.; Henry Bentley, 1l.; Joseph Riley, 1l.; Thomas Parkinson and Brothers, 1l.; Joseph Brown, 1l.; Joseph Long, 1l.; John Baitson, 1l.; Wm. Parkinson, 1l. 1s.; Wm. North, 1l. 1s.; John Cooper, 10s.; John Rawnsley, 10s.; Joseph Atkinson, 10s.; Joseph Fletcher, 5s.; John Goodhall, 5s.; John Ibbetson, 5s.; J. Waterhouse, 5s.; Samuel Long, 5s.; Tickets, 4l. 11s.; Small sums, 2l. 14s. 2d.—Total, 42l. 17s. 9d.

Guiseley.—Robert Parkinson, 1l. 1s.; Mrs. Robert Parkinson, 1l. 1s.; Wm. Riley, 1l.; Samuel Robinson, 1l. 1s.; William Smith, sen., 1l.; George Padgett, 1l.; James Brown, 1l.; Samuel Sladen, 1l.—Total, 8l. 3s.

Rawden.—John Walker, 5l.; smaller subscriptions, 7l.—Total, 12l.

Horsforth.—John Wade, 1l.

January 23d, 1844.—Total subscriptions, 63l. 0s. 7d.—Bradford Observer.

SWANSEA.—A public meeting, convened for the purpose of appointing a committee, and of adopting measures for the promotion of the fund of One Hundred Thousand Pounds, proposed to be raised in subscriptions for the furtherance of the objects of the National Anti-Corn-Law League, was held at our Town-hall on Monday evening week. On the motion of Mr. Jenkins, M.A., seconded by Mr. Jacob Lewis, the Rev. Daniel Davies, Baptist Minister, occupied the chair. The Chairman having addressed the meeting, resolutions in accordance with its object were severally proposed and seconded by the Rev. E. Jacob, Mr. Jacob Lewis, Mr. Jenkins, M.A., Rev. William Jones, Mr. Rutter, Mr. E. Paxton Hood, Mr. Valentine Clutton, and Mr. Rogers of Coleridge House. A vote of thanks to Starling Benson, Esq., Mayor, for the use of the hall, was carried by acclamation; as was also a vote of thanks to the respected chairman, for his very able, intelligent, and impartial presidency.—The Cambrian.

AGRICULTURE.

AGITATION AMONGST AGRICULTURISTS.

The meetings of lords, squires, land-agents, and farmers, to pass resolutions against the League, still continue; for what the recipients of rent do in one district they can do in another; but as the agitation proceeds its character is more palpably developed. It has now become plainly and avowedly a landlords' movement to coerce their own Minister. And this is felt by the ministerial journals, for they, though formally applauding the Pro-Corn-Law agitation, practically give it the "cold shoulder." But we leave the monopolists and their ministry to settle their differences as best they can—our business is to watch the effect of the new "dodge" upon the public. Having an intimate knowledge of the sentiments and tone of mind which prevail in the rural districts, we at once hailed the Pro-Corn-Law agitation with unmixed delight. We knew that, whatever were the objects of its promoters, it would expose before the farmers all the fallacies which landlords—when they condescend to speak at all—urge in support of their monopoly, and we are entirely satisfied that we shall not have long to wait the result of such exposure. The Pro-Corn-Law speakers have already done no slight service to the cause of Free Trade by putting forth the most silly and exaggerated statements, and proving to the most prejudiced the rotten foundation on which their plea for monopoly is based. Then we were aware that this agitation could not go on without disclosing the moving causes which actuate the landowners, and the indifference of the great body of the farmers; but, above all, we saw that in calling on the tenant-farmers to take the van—we had almost said to lead the forlorn hope—of the monopolist battle, the landed aristocrats were creating a power which they will find it difficult to control. Finally, we knew that when the upholders of the Corn Laws left their position of passive resistance to Free Trade, so many diversities of object and opinion, such various degrees of knowledge, or rather want of knowledge, and such a mass of prejudice, passion, bigotry, and ignorance, would appear amongst them, that the notion of their undertaking any combined political movement was out of the question. Already the accuracy of all these anticipations has been realized. During the past week a great "go" has been held in Sussex, and numerous little "goes" in a many other counties; and in each and all of these meetings their true character of a rent-and-landlord-begotten origin is placed beyond question, as is also the immediate purpose they are intended to serve. Thus, at Steyning, in Sussex, the Morning Post tells us that "the leaders of rank were numerous; two dukes, five earls, one viscount, and seven members of the House of Commons, were present;" and, as the enthusiastic editor adds, "This was something like a county meeting!" And no doubt it was, but it was like anything except a real tenant-farmers' meeting. Doubtless, many farmers were there, for where could "two dukes, seven earls, one viscount, and seven [landlord] members of the House of Commons" meet without compelling the attendance of a shoal of farmers, if it was the aristocratic will and pleasure that the farmers should come? Do the monopolists imagine the way in which these things are managed is not understood? We have been behind the scenes of the landlords' drama, and we know the pressure by which many of the tenant-farmers are made to act at aristocratic bidding. And at a similar meeting held in Oxford, the same authority (the Post), after enumerating a long list of lords and members of Parliament, squires, and parsons, who were present, says "the greater part, if not all, of these gentlemen are magistrates of the county." To be sure they are; this is just what we said from the first these Anti-League meetings would end in. But, to put the object of the movement beyond a doubt, we have the distinct enunciation of it by the Duke of Richmond, who said:—

"It is of great importance that we should not expend our fire in a desultory manner, but that we should have unity in our objects for the purpose of carrying them out more effectually. (Hear, hear, hear.) It appears to me also that these demonstrations which have taken place amongst the farmers of the country will induce the confidential advisers of our Sovereign to speak plainly out. (Immense cheering.) I think we are entitled to this—(hear, hear)—not in language of menace or threat—(no)—or even, perhaps, of any sort of reproach—but I think we are entitled to tell them that we think the uncertainty of their opinions is an evil of no ordinary magnitude. (Great cheering.) We want to know what we are going about. (Renewed cheers.) We want to know whether it is their intention to maintain that protection which is still left to us. (Cheers.) We only asked them to speak out, and I have no doubt they will speak out when they know the opinions of the great body of respectable farmers of the country."

Now, we beg our agricultural readers to mark well this passage. The object of the landed aristocracy was to have a rent-raising paragraph in the Queen's Speech. They see that the trading industry of the country has survived a period of prolonged and unparalleled distress; that the coffers of the Bank of England are gorged with gold, and that everything indicates that we are approaching one of those fitful gleams of "prosperity" which vicious commercial legislation has fostered; and hence they want to extract from the Minister a declaration in favour of monopoly which will uphold rents. Whether the ruse will succeed, or whether the Prime Minister will be too wily for them, will be known ere this meets the reader's eye. We should not be surprised if he pays them in their own coin, and that, instead of the rent-protecting declaration they seek, he may put them off with a pompous dialogistic sentence about the League. And the same objects are discerned throughout the arrangements; take, for instance, the traps for tenant-farmers, which are betokened by the following, which was one of the Steyning resolutions:—

"That no tenant-farmer is expected to subscribe more than £1 or less than 5s. per annum, and that landowners and proprietors be solicited to afford us liberal aid."

And we believe the managers have taken a very accurate measure of the zeal of the tenant-farmers in the cause of protection, when they fixed their subscriptions at 5s. This sufficiently proves the tenants are not the spontaneous actors in these farces. Another instance of their apathy, of which indeed scarcely a meeting passes without some complaint, occurred at Barton-upon-Humber, where the following is the monopolist account of the subscriptions; we again quote the Post:—

"A short discussion here ensued on the question of a subscription fund as suggested by Mr. Uppleby, which resulted in that gentleman's moving a resolution in accordance with his expressed sentiments on the subject. It was carried unanimously. This unanimity, however, was confined to the carrying of the resolution, for I did not perceive, though I believe some few names were put down for different amounts, that any money was subjected to the same process. There is, however, no doubt that, should any emergency arise immediately requiring a fund, there is no part of the country in which it would be more readily or plentifully forthcoming than in this district."

"Emergency arise," why, we thought it had arisen. Why are all the squires in arms? Whence all this noise and bustle! But perhaps the letter of Lord Worsley, which was read at that meeting, let the farmers at Barton a little into the secret of these protection subscriptions. Now, Lord Worsley, though an advocate of monopoly, is a shrewd man, and, as he had had some experience of the utility of monopolist tracts and lectures, he cautiously limited his promise of subscription to local objects, and offered the following as the result of his experience. He said, in a letter addressed to one of the managers of the meeting:—

"I cannot understand what need there can be for any further subscription than each member already pays. If I find money is wanted, and likely to be usefully and judiciously applied by the societies in this neighbourhood, I will readily assist them. In London we had an Agricultural Protection Society. I gave £20 to it, and £5 per annum. It appeared to me that the money was spent in paying a secretary a handsome salary, sending out lecturers and tracts which we published, and I do not believe that either produced any effect. When Lord Melbourne was in power this society, which was composed of Tories, with the exception of Mr. Handley, Mr. Edward Heneage, Mr. Cayley, Lord Beaumont, Mr. Gilbert Heathcote, my father, and myself, and perhaps three or four more Whigs, who, at the request of the Tory members, joined the society, that it might not wear a party appearance, met frequently. When Sir Robert Peel came into office, the attendance of the Tory members of the society became less and less frequent, and there was then, apparently, so little disposition on their parts to do anything, that most, if not all the gentlemen I have named above, withdrew from the society, which was shortly afterwards broken up, after having very uselessly spent a large sum of money."

Now, if tenant-farmers trust their money in the hands of these agitating land-agents after such an ingenuous confession of so eminent a protectionist, they must be gulls indeed. No, no; farmers will leave the subscribing part of the business to the landlords. That any considerable number of them, who are not compelled from their dependent condition to do so, will long lend themselves to delusion, even by giving their names to swell this shadowy agitation, we do not believe. But in contrast to the account of the uselessness of monopolist tracts and lectures—and where the principle of a law is unsound no degree of lecturing or pamphleteering will uphold it—let us take the account the monopolists themselves give of the success of the Free-Trade agitation.

Mr. Ellman, at Steyning, said that the money of the Marquis of Westminster "could be much better employed than encouraging the circulation of the insidious and blasphemous (!) publications of the League throughout the country." Now, this rabid fury of the monopolist is a tribute to the utility of the information diffused by the League. No one ever accused the monopolists of publishing "insidious" tracts or lectures; and, however ingenious the idea of calling the advocacy of a free interchange of man's industry and God's bounties "blasphemous" may be, it is not new; for we remember to have heard some twelve years ago a topping farmer in a south-western county say of a neighbouring gentleman—also a farmer—who advocated free trade in corn, "Oh, he must be an Atheist!" The same person, Mr. Ellman, also said, "tracts were distributed throughout the country, which were calculated to produce the effect of poisoning the minds of the labourers against their employers, and of the occupiers against the landlords." Now, the state of the rural body politic must be indeed diseased if any of the Free-Trade tracts can operate as poison; that they have proved phsyic to the monopolists in many instances we have no doubt. So the chairman, at the Oxford monopolist meeting, said, "They [the League] had been busily engaged, and, in some instances, too fatally successful, in creating variance between landlord and tenant;" and at the same meeting Colonel North said, "they had sent emissaries into every village, and into every cottage, to find the character of the peer or the squire from residents, with the purpose of picking a hole in them if possible." The result of inquiries in Dorsetshire has shown why peers and squires do not like inquiries to be made of "residents" in their own localities. Again, in Rutland, a Mr. Finch said, "they had employed able pens in behalf of their project, and their emissaries had been scattered over the whole face of the land. They had endeavoured to set tenant against landlord, and had scattered the seeds of dissension even amongst the agricultural body themselves." We have no doubt that the seed sown amongst the agriculturists is bringing forth fruit which will be bitter to those landlords who seek to obtain high rents out of the serfdom of a dependent, spiritless, and impoverished tenantry. But the grand offence of the League is, what Lord Villiers—Sir Robert Peel's son-in-law—called, "assuming a most dangerous and unconstitutional power, in raising large sums of money for the purpose of influencing the elections of members of Parliament." And this topic is that upon which almost every landlord, especially if himself a member of Parliament, is eloquently indignant. Here the shoe pinches; and this part of the subject served to disclose the seeds of disunion which are springing up amongst the monopolists themselves. For instance, Mr. Blackstone, M.P., at Oxford, thought the resolutions of a "too milk-and-water character;" and added, "other parties, as well as the Anti-Corn-Law League, might desire to diminish agricultural protection—it might be some Government—it might be some Minister;" and amidst the cheers of the meeting he called Lord Norreys and Mr. Harcourt, two of the county members, to account for voting for the Canada Corn Bill of Sir Robert Peel! And in Rutland, Mr. Heathcote, one of the county members, suggested that the funds of a protection society should be used for election purposes, "not only to oppose actual Leaguers, but those who had voted for the Canadian Corn Bill and the Tariff." Upon this one of his colleagues said such "observations were rather injudicious;" and Mr. O'Brien, M.P. for Northamptonshire, "remarked on the observation of Mr. Heathcote, as to the application of money to be collected, and expressed his abhorrence of any unconstitutional tampering with the elections. So strong were his feelings on the necessity of preserving the representation of the country without taint, that, rather than contribute one shilling for such a purpose, he would stand aloof altogether." Here, it is obvious, are the elements of a very pretty quarrel amongst the monopolists the instant they attempt a positive and active support of their monopoly.

But, perhaps, the gem of all the brilliant speeches on behalf of monopoly was that plea for protection so naively put forward at Barton by Mr. Maw:—

"The labour employed by the manufacturers was all done, let it be remembered, under shelter; and they could receive and execute their orders with the nicest calculation of the cost of any piece of goods, and the profit upon the same; whereas such was far from being the same with the farmer, who, when his land was prepared, and his crop was in the ground, was still exposed to many contingencies, both of season and market. He could not control the elements—he could not possibly say what the produce of his land would be, either as to quantity or quality; and it was on these accounts that to the farmer an adequate protection was essentially necessary. (Cheers.) If his crop were a good one it was necessary that he should have the market to himself, that its value might not be reduced below what was reasonable by competition; whilst, if his produce were deficient, he should at least be allowed to have some return for his labour, and the expenditure of his capital, before the foreigner was let in to compete with him—because this encouraged him to grow the greatest quantity of corn he possibly could, and to endeavour to keep the market supplied with home produce."

This is, in fact, the simple and naked plea for the Corn Laws really intended by all monopolists; only those, who have somewhat more tact than Mr. Maw, think it decent to throw some little drapery around their meretricious idol. Now, reader, having seen these samples from the sack of the monopolists, said we not well that the Anti-League associations would prove most useful auxiliaries to the League?

MONOPOLIST ESTIMATE OF THE FARMERS.

The following is a circular—verbatim et literatim—issued in the county of Norfolk. Can the landlords really imagine such childish trash can influence the more intelligent farmers of that county? Did the composers of that jejune circular ever hear of the story of the shepherd-boy and the wolf? The farmers are already beginning to suspect this constant cry of "wolf! wolf!"

"TO THE CLERGY, LANDLORDS, AND OCCUPIERS OF LAND, IN THE COUNTY OF NORFOLK.—The introduction of Free Trade into our country must be a source of evil to all, as it will speedily reduce wheat to 18s. per comb, barley to 12s., and other products of the soil in the same proportion; this being the case, the clergy will get but little tithes, the landlords less as rent, and the resources arising from the revenue will be so reduced, that the interest on funded property cannot be paid. Royalty must curtail its expenditure, and trade, in all its branches, will be so crippled, that England, as a nation, will cease to be Happy Old England."

"Mr. J. Barcham was deputed by the gentlemen attending the Subscription Room, at North Walsham, to issue these circulars, requesting the attendance of all persons interested in countervailing the very false statements so generally advanced by the Anti-Corn-Law League, in their unceasing endeavours to injure the agricultural interest; for this purpose a public meeting will be held at the Bear Inn, North Walsham, on Thursday, the 26th instant, at four o'clock in the afternoon."

"Antingham, Jan. 13, 1861."

A FREE-TRADE CONVERT.—It is rumoured, but we know not on what authority, that the name of Mr. David Barclay, M.P. for Sunderland, will swell the list of Mr. Villiers's supporters on his next motion for the total repeal of the bread-tax. We hope this may prove true, and that Mr. Barclay will also place the corn, coffee, and sugar duties in one and the same condemned category.—Durham Chronicle.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We have received several communications on the subject of the Agricultural "Protection" Meetings, for which we feel obliged. We shall thank our friends to continue these interesting communications, as they will afford us ample material for exposing the hollow and chimerical views which the "farmers' friends" are again attempting to delude their unfortunate dupes.

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any person forwarding 3s. 8d. by Post-office order, to the Publisher, 67, Fleet-street, London, will have one quarter's copies of the LEAGUE forwarded by post on the days of publication. Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with J. Gadsby, Newall's-buildings, Manchester; and the LEAGUE may be had by order of any news-agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

GREAT LEAGUE MEETING.

THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN.—THE USUAL WEEKLY MEETING OF THE NATIONAL ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE, will be held in the THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN, on THURSDAY EVENING NEXT, the 24th of FEBRUARY.

The Meeting will be addressed by the Hon. CHARLES PELHAM VILLIERS, Esq., M.P.; RICHARD CORDELL, Esq., M.P.; General Sir DAVID EVANS; and A. R. M. MOORE, Esq.

GEORGE WILSON, Esq., will take the Chair precisely at Seven o'clock.

Cards of admission to the stage and boxes may be had on application after Monday next, at the Central Office of the League, No. 57, Fleet-street.

The Cards of Registered Members of the League will, as heretofore, admit to the Pit and Galleries of the Theatre.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, February 3, 1844.

Sir Robert Peel makes up, in his own person, for the silence he preserves in the Queen's Speech. He has responded to the demand of his masters. The landlords have obtained a pledge against any change in the Corn Laws, as distinct as a Peel pledge can be; for some lurking ambiguity, or latent equivocation, is inherent in the very nature of the thing. After intimating that, should the agriculturists ever arrive at a preference of a fixed duty over a sliding scale, it would devolve on Lord John Russell rather than on himself to introduce such a proposition, Sir Robert Peel continued:—"The experience we have had of the present law has not shaken my preference for a graduated duty; and although I consider it inconsistent with my duty to make engagements for adherence to existing laws, under all circumstances, in order to conciliate support, I can say that the Government have never contemplated, and do not contemplate, any alteration in the existing law." Cheers from the agriculturists, according to the Times report, came (as did the thunder of old) to show that the offering was accepted, and the higher powers propitiated.

The Times, after noticing the silence of the Queen's Speech on the subject of the Corn Laws, says of the Minister's declaration, that it "will lull, if it does not extinguish, doubt and perplexity." Doubt may, but the agitation will not, be lulled thereby. Our breeze is not yet strong enough to move the weathercock; it must blow harder, and it shall. Sir Robert Peel contributes, by his declaration, towards that division of public men into total repealers and the supporters of the existing law, which is a step that must needs be made in the progress of the agitation. Sir Robert Peel has helped it on, and we should have been glad if Lord John Russell had assisted also. The deficiency was admirably supplied by Lord Howick. In the following passage of his speech, he puts the present state of the question in the true point of view:—

"Indeed, the controversy had been kept up so long that he almost doubted whether, even without that very significant speech which had fallen from the right hon. baronet that night, the time for a compromise had not passed, and that now that every one must take his part in this question either on the one side or the other. If the right honourable gentleman, and those who thought with him, were of opinion that it was wise to lay this stress on all the objections to a fixed duty, it would be idle, and worse than idle, to make such a proposition. Then the question resolved itself into this—were they to have the existing Corn Law, or was the importation of corn to be free? (Cheers.) That was the point to which the right hon. gentleman wished to bring the matter, and that was the question he wished to bring to issue. He (Lord Howick) adhered to the opinion from which he had never swerved, and which he had maintained at all times and at all places—in that House and on the hustings of a purely agricultural county; and when this question was brought to issue, his choice would be without hesitation, or one moment's delay, in favour of the free importation of corn." (Cheers.)

However they may dally with the subject, to this point must all public men come. Almost all the active mind of the community is there already; and when once the alternative is distinctly settled, the decision cannot long be delayed. As to what statesman shall be its official propounder, we need only say, that "if one will not another will."

MORE ARISTOCRATICAL MONOPOLY.—The (Conservative) United Service Journal says, "The overpowering aristocratic influence in converting the whole army into an article of monopoly, and will, unless checked, become a mere job for the benefit of the few at the expense of the many."

THE FUND.

| | Jan. 27 | Feb. 3 | Feb. 10 | Feb. 17 | Feb. 24 | Mar. 3 |
|-------------------|---------|---------|---------|---------|---------|---------|
| Bank Stock | 104 1/2 | 104 1/2 | 104 1/2 | 104 1/2 | 104 1/2 | 104 1/2 |
| 3 per Cent. Ann. | 94 1/2 | 94 1/2 | 94 1/2 | 94 1/2 | 94 1/2 | 94 1/2 |
| 4 per Cent. Ann. | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 |
| 5 per Cent. Ann. | 100 1/2 | 100 1/2 | 100 1/2 | 100 1/2 | 100 1/2 | 100 1/2 |
| 6 per Cent. Ann. | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 | 103 1/2 |
| 7 per Cent. Ann. | 106 1/2 | 106 1/2 | 106 1/2 | 106 1/2 | 106 1/2 | 106 1/2 |
| 8 per Cent. Ann. | 109 1/2 | 109 1/2 | 109 1/2 | 109 1/2 | 109 1/2 | 109 1/2 |
| 9 per Cent. Ann. | 112 1/2 | 112 1/2 | 112 1/2 | 112 1/2 | 112 1/2 | 112 1/2 |
| 10 per Cent. Ann. | 115 1/2 | 115 1/2 | 115 1/2 | 115 1/2 | 115 1/2 | 115 1/2 |
| 11 per Cent. Ann. | 118 1/2 | 118 1/2 | 118 1/2 | 118 1/2 | 118 1/2 | 118 1/2 |
| 12 per Cent. Ann. | 121 1/2 | 121 1/2 | 121 1/2 | 121 1/2 | 121 1/2 | 121 1/2 |
| 13 per Cent. Ann. | 124 1/2 | 124 1/2 | 124 1/2 | 124 1/2 | 124 1/2 | 124 1/2 |
| 14 per Cent. Ann. | 127 1/2 | 127 1/2 | 127 1/2 | 127 1/2 | 127 1/2 | 127 1/2 |
| 15 per Cent. Ann. | 130 1/2 | 130 1/2 | 130 1/2 | 130 1/2 | 130 1/2 | 130 1/2 |
| 16 per Cent. Ann. | 133 1/2 | 133 1/2 | 133 1/2 | 133 1/2 | 133 1/2 | 133 1/2 |
| 17 per Cent. Ann. | 136 1/2 | 136 1/2 | 136 1/2 | 136 1/2 | 136 1/2 | 136 1/2 |
| 18 per Cent. Ann. | 139 1/2 | 139 1/2 | 139 1/2 | 139 1/2 | 139 1/2 | 139 1/2 |
| 19 per Cent. Ann. | 142 1/2 | 142 1/2 | 142 1/2 | 142 1/2 | 142 1/2 | 142 1/2 |
| 20 per Cent. Ann. | 145 1/2 | 145 1/2 | 145 1/2 | 145 1/2 | 145 1/2 | 145 1/2 |

MARKETS.

CORN MARKET.

MARK-LANE, Monday, Jan. 29.—The supply of Essex Wheat was very small this morning, but there was a good show of Kentish. The best dry samples were sold readily at last week's prices, but those in inferior condition were disposed of with difficulty. There was a rather improved demand for free Foreign Wheat, at fully last week's rates. There was a good supply of English Barley last week, in addition to which, one cargo of Scotch and two of Foreign, arrived. There is no alteration in the value of Malting Barley; but Distilling and Grinding qualities being held at former rates, met a very slow sale. The trade in Beans and Peas was heavy, and former prices were barely supported for the latter. In addition to a fair supply of English and Scotch Oats, there was a very large arrival of Irish. Factors held with much firmness at former rates; but only a limited amount of business was done, and in some instances a decline of 6d. per qr. was acceded to.

| | Wheat. | Barley. | Oats. | Beans. | Peas. |
|---------|--------|---------|--------|--------|--------|
| English | 64 1/2 | 60 1/2 | 52 1/2 | 51 1/2 | 51 1/2 |
| Scotch | 30 | 10 1/2 | 8 1/2 | — | — |
| Irish | — | 30 1/2 | 54 1/2 | — | — |
| Foreign | 17 1/2 | 18 1/2 | 11 1/2 | — | — |

MARK-LANE, Friday, Feb. 3.—The arrivals of Wheat and Barley since Monday are moderate. There is a fair supply of English and Irish Oats. The declaration of Sir Robert Peel relative to the Corn Laws has caused considerable firmness in the trade here to-day. There is a steady trade in Wheat and Barley at fully Monday's rates; and, notwithstanding a large proportion of last week's supply of Irish Oats is still on hand, the holders are firm, and buyers are compelled to give former rates. There is no alteration in Beans and Peas. The duty on Beans advanced to 11s. 6d. yesterday.

| | English. | Irish. | Foreign. |
|--------|----------|--------|----------|
| Wheat | 65 1/2 | — | 18 1/2 |
| Barley | 60 1/2 | — | 7 1/2 |
| Oats | 54 1/2 | 7 1/2 | — |

A WEEKLY REPORT OF THE NUMBER OF QUARTERS, AND THE AVERAGE PRICE OF CORN AND GRAIN, sold in the several Counties of England and Wales (comprising the Two Hundred and Ninety Towns named in the Act of the 5th Vic., cap. 14), which governs Duty.

| WEEK ENDED JANUARY 30, 1844. | | | | | | | | |
|------------------------------|---------|-------|---------|-------|--------|-------|--------|-------|
| | WHEAT. | | BARLEY. | | OATS. | | BEANS. | |
| | Qrs. | Aver. | Qrs. | Aver. | Qrs. | Aver. | Qrs. | Aver. |
| | sold. | price | sold. | price | sold. | price | sold. | price |
| Weekly | | s. d. | | s. d. | | s. d. | | s. d. |
| Averages.. | 110,495 | 52 8 | 116,921 | 58 8 | 58,188 | 19 0 | 9405 | 29 6 |
| Aggregate | .. | 50 9 | .. | 33 10 | .. | 18 8 | .. | 29 10 |
| Averages.. | .. | 30 0 | .. | 6 0 | .. | 8 0 | .. | 11 6 |
| Duty..... | | | | | | | | |

| | Qrs. | Price. | Qrs. | Price. |
|--------|-------|-----------|-------|---------------|
| Wheat | 8780 | 53s. 0d. | Rye | 81 38s. 11d. |
| Barley | 4672 | 34s. 4d. | Beans | 1955 28s. 7d. |
| Oats | 27037 | 19s. 11d. | Peas | 1104 31s. 8d. |

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 30.

BANKRUPTS.

G. HILLER, Sub-atree, Bishopsgate-street, varnish manufacturer. (Rutherford, Lombard-street.)
J. TUBB, Basingstoke, Hants, draper. (Ashurst, Cheap-side.)
T. BALLS, Thames-street, iron merchant. (Tucker and Stevenson, Sun-chambers, Threadneedle-street.)
W. BUTCHER, Great Marlborough-street, commission agent. (Mayhew, Carey-street, Lincoln's-Inn.)
A. LEQUEURE, Chingford Mills, Essex, miller. (Adamson and Cooper, Ely-place.)
T. RODHAM, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, grocer. (Ingledew, Newcastle-upon-Tyne; Williamson and Hill, Gray's-Inn.)
J. LEECH, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, ironmonger. (Harle, Newcastle-upon-Tyne; Chisholm, Hall, and Gibson, Lincoln's-Inn-fields.)
T. BERRIDGE, Manchester, tobaccoconist. (Johnson and Weatherall, King's Bench-walk, Temple; Kershaw, Manchester.)
H. MURCH, Norton-under-Hamdon, Somersetshire, salt cloth manufacturer. (Nichollette, Bridport; Stogdon, Exeter; Brace, Essex-street.)

DIVIDENDS.

Feb. 22. F. Ford, Aldgate, draper.—Feb. 22. F. Gantier, Goulquaire, Crutched-Friars.—Feb. 22. J. Cumming, Tottenham-court-road, furrier.—Feb. 20. N. Wynn, East-street, East Green-wich, victualler.—Feb. 2. J. B. Rickette, Leadenhall-street, merchant.—Feb. 22. W. Hill and W. K. Wackerbath, Leadenhall-street, ship agents.—Feb. 20. F. Markby, Peterborough, Northamptonshire, brewer.—Feb. 21. J. L. Woodruff, Great Minster, Buckinghamshire, innkeeper.—Feb. 21. C. M. Nicholson, Mark-lane, corn merchant.—Feb. 23. J. Lockwood and G. Lockwood, Wakefield, Yorkshire, linen-draper.—Feb. 23. J. Bottomley, Delph, Yorkshire, woollen manufacturer.—Feb. 23. J. Pepper, Westons-under-Ledge, Gloucestershire, tailor.—Feb. 20. M. Marsh, jun., St. Helen's, Lancashire, chemist.—Feb. 23. J. Leary, jun., Liverpool, tailor.—Feb. 21. G. Dawson and J. Wainwright, Liverpool, merchants.—Feb. 20. W. Havelock, South Shields, draper.—Feb. 23. M. Dixon, Hesale, Kingston-upon-Hull, corn dealer.—Feb. 23. J. Wood, Beauvais, Nottinghamshire, miller.—Feb. 23. A. Brown, Kingston-upon-Hull, book-seller.—Feb. 23. J. Temple, Myton, Kingston-upon-Hull, brewer.

CERTIFICATES.

Feb. 21. R. T. Fletcher, Brentford, money scrivener.—Feb. 22. D. Johnson, Malden, Essex, corn dealer.—Feb. 22. T. Donkin, Cambridge, victualler.—Feb. 23. L. C. Leconte, Fenchurch-buildings, Fenchurch-street, merchant.—Feb. 21. R. Sharpe, Chesham, Bucks, draper.—Feb. 23. E. G. Beaulieu, Manchester, Walworth, Hants dealer.—Feb. 23. J. Brown, jun., Tydse, Monmouthshire, ironmonger.—Feb. 22. T. Thorpe, Chertsey, Surrey, plumber.—Feb. 23. F. Barry, Ely, Essex, miller.—Feb. 21. E. T. Gode, Titchhurst, Berkshire, cattle dealer.

THE OJIBWAY INDIANS.

(Hour and Price Charge).—GATLIN'S North American Indian Pictures, Engraving, and Lithography, 25, Strand, London, W.C. Each day of this week, at 10 o'clock, on each open from One to Three, and from Seven to Ten. Indians in the room from Half-past One to Three, and from Half-past Seven to Nine.—Admission, day or evening, One shilling; Children, One shilling.

MR. BEARD'S DAGUERRETYPE, or PHOTOGRAPHIC PORTRAITS.—These admirable and much-admired Portraits, in which further improvements have lately been effected, are taken by the Patentee, at 25, King William-street, City; 24, Parliament-street; and at the Royal Polytechnic Institution, 27, Regent-street. By whom, also, Licenses are granted for exercising the invention in provincial towns and districts.

CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE.—If the direct written testimony in favour of the purity and perfection of Barry's FARMY BRANDY, given after analysis, by three of the most eminent Chemists of the day, needed any confirmation, it will be found in the fact, that it is employed, in preference to Foreign Brandy, under high medical directions, in many of the principal hospitals, infirmaries, and other public institutions in the Kingdom; among which it may suffice to name Guy's, St. George's, and the Westminster Hospitals in the metropolis; and the Manchester, Bristol, and Brighton Infirmary, Distillery, No. 7, Smith-street, leading to St. John-street. Price, pale or coloured, in quantities not less than Two Gallons, Eighteen shillings per Gallon.

THE TOILET OF BEAUTY FURNISHES INNUMERABLE proofs of the high estimation in which GOWLAND'S LOTION is held by the most distinguished possessors of brilliant Complexions. This elegant preparation comprehends the preservation of the Complexion, both from the effects of Cutaneous Malady and the operation of variable temperature, by refreshing its delicacy, and sustaining the brightest tints with which beauty is adorned. "Rouge et Blush, London," is in white letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is genuine. Prices 2s. 6d., 1s. 6d., 1s. 3d., 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Medicine Vendors.

LOWDEN'S CELEBRATED COUGH PILLS, A safe and effectual cure for Coughs, Colds, Shortness of Breath, Asthma, &c. &c. They promote free expectoration, and hence prevent the accumulation of phlegm which causes a sense of choking; allay irritability, tickling in the throat, and relieve that sense of oppression, fulness, and difficulty of breathing, which might deprive the patient of rest. In Asthma and Coughs of long standing they are invaluable, and universally admitted to be the best known Medicine; in any case where they do not effect a perfect cure they afford such relief to the sufferer during the paroxysms or fits as to induce him hereafter never to be without them. Sold by Mr. Lowden, Chemist, 304, Fleet-street, London, in boxes at 1s. 1d., 6d., and 4d. also by one or more respectable Medicine Vendors in each town in the United Kingdom.

BIOUKRENE, or FOUNTAIN OF LIFE.—This invaluable Medicine proves efficacious in removing all Scrofulous and Scorbatic Diseases. It attacks the source of all eruptions on the skin; it purifies and nourishes the blood, invigorates the digestive organs, and effects an entire cure of Scrofula and Scurvy in all the forms which these diseases assume. This Medicine is free from those mineral preparations which cannot be taken without injury to the constitution. Its action on the system is remarkably mild and gentle, and will not interfere with the patient's ordinary pursuits.

"See a pamphlet entitled 'Health and Comfort to the afflicted,' which may be had, gratis, of Mr. William Bailey, North-street, Wolverhampton, and also by all other vendors of Bioukrene; which is sold by Sutton and Co., Bow Church-yard; Edwards, St. Paul's Church-yard; Hannay and Co., Oxford-street; and by all Druggists and Medicine Vendors. Bottles, 2s. 6d., 1s. 6d., and 1s.

VIOLENT PAINS, &c.—LEFAY'S GRANDE POMMADE cures, in most cases, by one application, the-douloureux, gout, and all painful affections of the nerves, giving instant relief in the most painful paroxysms. Patients who had for years been in a miserable existence, and many who had lost the use of their limbs from weakness, brought on by paralysis and rheumatism, to the astonishment of their medical attendants and acquaintance, have by a few rubbings been restored to strength and comfort, after electricity, galvanism, blistering, veratrine, colchicum, and all the usual remedies had been tried and found useless. Its surprising effects have also been experienced in its rapid cure of rheumatic pains of the head and face, paralytic affections, weakness of the ligaments and joints, glandular swellings, sore throat, chronic rheumatism, palpitation of the heart, and difficult respiration. It requires no restraint from business or pleasure, nor does it excite any eruption, and may be applied to the most delicate skin without fear of injury. Sold by the appointment of Jean Lefay, the inventor, by his sole Agent, J. W. Stirling, chemist, 85, High-street, Whitechapel, in metallic cases, at 4s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. each.—N.B. A Post-office order for 5s. will pay for a 4s. 6d. case and its carriage to any part of the United Kingdom.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH, MR. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANUM, price 4s. 6d.—Patronized by Her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. This valuable SUCCEDANUM for stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity, is far superior to anything ever before used, as it is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and in a short time becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary. It arrests all further progress of decay, and renders them again useful in mastication. All persons can use Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANUM themselves with ease, without the aid of a dentist, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 68, Berners-street, Oxford-street, price 4s. 6d., and will be sent by post to any part of the Kingdom.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. Thomas continues to supply the loss of teeth, and has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, which will be found very superior to all others, as they will never decay or become discoloured, and their perfect resemblance to nature defies detection even by the closest observer. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. The charges will be found less than most dentists.—Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 68, Berners-street, Oxford-street. At home from Eleven till Four.

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED WITHOUT SPRINGS, CLASPS, or WIRES, LOOSE TEETH FASTENED, and FILLING DECAYED TEETH WITH MINERAL MARMORATUM. MRS. LE DRAY and SON, Surgeon-Dentists, 43, BARNES-STREET, OXFORD-STREET, continue to restore DECAYED TEETH with their celebrated MINERAL MARMORATUM, applied without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing and curing the toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary. They also fasten loose Teeth, whether arising from age, neglect, the use of Calomel, or disease of the Gums. Irrecoverable, artificial, or natural teeth of surpassing beauty, fixed from end to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, at the following Paris charges:—

| | |
|----------------|---------|
| A Single Tooth | 40 10 0 |
| A Set | 6 5 0 |

Arranged on a principle yet untried, rendering it impossible to distinguish the artificial teeth from the natural ones; answering most satisfactorily all the purposes of the original teeth in mastication and articulation, imparting to the countenance a younger and improved appearance, protecting the adjoining teeth, and remaining perfectly secure in their places. Artificial Teeth repaired, remodelled, and brought to their former shape and appearance. Artificial Palates of the most improved construction.—At home every day from Ten till Six. N.B. Removed from 60, Newman-street, to 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

FRAMPTON'S PILL OF HEALTH.

Price 1s. 1d. per box. THIS excellent Family PILL is a Medicine of long-tried efficacy for correcting all disorders of the Stomach and Bowels, the common symptoms of which are costiveness, flatulency, spasms, loss of appetite, sick headache, giddiness, sense of fulness after meals, distension of the eyes, drowsiness, and pains in the Stomach and Bowels. Indigestion, producing a torpid state of the Liver, and a consequent inactivity of the Bowels, causing a disorganization of every function of the frame, will, in the most excellent preparation, by a little perseverance, be effectually removed. Two or three doses will convince the sufferer of its salutary effects. The Stomach will speedily regain its strength; a healthy action of the Liver, Bowels, and Kidneys, will rapidly take place; and, instead of listlessness, heat, pain, and jaundiced appearance, strength, activity, and renewed health will be the quick result of taking this Medicine according to the directions accompanying each box; and if taken after too free an indulgence at table, they quickly restore the system to its natural state of repose. Persons of a FULL HABIT, who are subject to headache, giddiness, drowsiness, and slugging in the ears, arising from too great a flow of blood to the head, should never be without them, as many dangerous symptoms will be entirely carried off by their immediate use. For FEMALES these Pills are most truly excellent, removing all obstructions: the distressing headache so very prevalent with the sex; depression of spirits, dulness of sight, nervous affections, blotches, and callosities of the skin, and give a healthy and juvenile bloom to the complexion. As a pleasant, safe, easy Aperient, they unite the recommendation of a mild operation with the most successful effect, and require no restraint of diet or confinement during their use. And for ELDERLY PEOPLE they will be found to be the most comfortable medicine hitherto prepared. Sold by J. Frampton, 229, Strand, London. Price 1s. 1d. and 6d. per box; and by the Agents of Medicine generally throughout the Kingdom. Ask for FRAMPTON'S PILL OF HEALTH, and observe the name and address of "Thomas Frampton, 229, Strand, London," on the Government stamp.

This day is published, price Eightpence
THE STATE AND PROSPECTS OF PENNY
 POSTAGE, as developed in the Evidence taken before the Postage Committee of 1815: with incidental Remarks on the Economy of the Post-office Authorities; and an Appendix of Correspondence. By ROWLAND HILL. London: Charles Knight and Co., 25, Ludgate-street.

Just published, price 4s.
THE METHOD OF NATURE. By R. W. MAN THINKING, an Oration. C. B. Meads, 18, Upper King-street, Bloomsbury-square; Simpkin, Marshall, and Co., and all booksellers.

REPEAL OF THE CORN LAWS.
 Price Threepence, or 2s. 6d. per dozen.
THE EFFECT OF THE REPEAL OF THE CORN LAWS would have upon Prices and Rents, briefly considered by W. J. GANNON. London: Edinburg Wilson, 18, Bishopsgate Within, Cambridge; Warwick and Co., 1, Hobson's place, and James Johnson, Sidney-street.

THE CORN LAWS.—The sentiments of every member of Parliament respecting the CORN LAWS will be found in M^r. DODD'S "PARLIAMENTARY COMPANION," for 1844, which contains a full Biographical Dictionary of both Houses, a Statement of the Polls, Population, &c., with Explanations of Parliamentary Terms and Proceedings. Royal 82mo., price 4s. 6d., in Morocco gilt. Whitaker and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

CHINA AND INDIA.
 This day, Parts I to 12, price One shilling each, to be completed in about fifteen Monthly Parts.

THE HISTORY OF CHINA AND INDIA.
 Pictorial and Descriptive: exhibiting a complete and familiar view of the People of these interesting Countries, and their Governments, from the earliest period to the present time. By MISS COMANS, author of the "Historical Library," &c. &c. Illustrated with Plates, executed in the new style of Tint, and superior Wood Engravings, from accurate local Drawings. London: Dean and Co., Threadneedle-street; and, by order, of every Bookseller in the United Kingdom.

THE CHEAPEST PERIODICAL IN THE WORLD.
THE FAMILY HERALD; or, Useful Information and Amusement for the Million, containing interesting Tales, Narratives, Moral and Familiar Essays, Allegories, Mosaic Extracts, Biography, Poetry, Discoveries in the Arts and Sciences, Hints for Housekeepers, Practical Receipts, Useful Advice, Salutary Cautions, Anecdotes, Epigrams, Riddles, and Fables. Published in Weekly Numbers at One Penny, and Monthly Parts at Fivepence. Sold by all Booksellers and Newsmen. This is one of the most popular of the Periodicals. Try a single number.

THIRTY YEARS FROM HOME.—A VOICE FROM THE MAIN DECK, or, Six Years in a Man of War. By SAMUEL LEECH. Being the Experience in Sea-life of a Man who was for Six Years in the British and American Navies; was captured in the British Frigate Macedonian, and afterwards entered the American Navy, and was taken in the United States brig Syren by the British ship Medway. With notes by BENJAMIN COLLINS, late of the U.S. Navy under Lord Cochrane. Complete for 6d., or in Numbers, published every alternate day, at 1d. each. Being the First Part and Number of "Dr. Lynton's Library for Home." London: J. Neale, 26, Tavistock-street, Strand.

Just published.
BRITISH AND FOREIGN REVIEW, No. XXXII.
 Contents:—
 1. Critique and Criticism in France.
 2. Dr. Arnold's Lectures.—The Church and State.
 3. The Musical Antiquarian Society.
 4. The Principles of Tariffs applied.
 5. Secret Diplomacy of Louis XIV.
 6. The Oxford Controversy.—Anglo-Catholicism.
 7. The Oregon Territory.
 8. Laing's Notes of a Traveller.
 9. Ireland.—Repeal of the Union.
 10. Note on the Law of Debtor and Creditor.
 11. Postscript on the Oregon Territory Question.—The President's Message.
 London: R. and J. E. Taylor, Red Lion-court, Fleet-street.

Now ready, Second Edition, price 4s. 6d.,
THE PAPAL AND HIERARCHICAL SYSTEM
 compared with the RELIGION of the NEW TESTAMENT. "A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land; the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means, and my people love to have it so, and what will ye do in the end thereof?"—Jer. v. 30, 31. "So clear and scriptural are the views put forth, and so truly Protestant, that the Author in writing and publishing the work has conferred an invaluable benefit, and at a most seasonable time, upon the Christian church."—Evangelical Magazine, Aug., 1843. "A reasonable and able discussion of a subject which will, ere long, command the rapt attention of the civilized world."—Nonconformist, Sept., 1843.

Just published, price One Shilling.
HYDROPATHY DEFENDED BY FACTS; or, the COLD WATER CURE shown to be as safe in Practice as it is rational in Theory. By A. COMPTON, surgeon, R.N., Ramsgate. CHEAP EDITIONS OF DYMOND'S ESSAYS.

Complete in 1 vol. at 3s. 6d., originally published in 2 vols. at 21s. The Seventh Thousand of this Edition.
ESSAYS ON THE PRINCIPLES OF MORALITY, and on the Private and Political Rights and Obligations of Mankind. By JONATHAN DYMOND. Author of "An Enquiry into the Accordancy of War with the Principles of Christianity," &c. In this work will be found some clear views on the popular questions of the day: the Education of the People, and the Connexion between Church and State. Price 1s.

ESSAY ON THE ACCORDANCY OF WAR with the PRINCIPLES OF CHRISTIANITY. By JONATHAN DYMOND. "No one can hope to overthrow the reasoning of Dymond without denying the truth of the book (the Bible) from which he deduces his arguments." Second Edition, with Additions and Corrections, price 4s. 6d.

THE WATER CURE. By E. S. ANDY, A.M., Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge, and Author of "A Journal, &c., in the United States." "Mr. Andy is already favourably known to the public as an author, and his present able work may be safely recommended as containing the best exposition of the principles of Hydropathy, as well as an interesting and convincing statement of facts." London: Charles Gilpin, 5, Bishopsgate Without.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, 26, UPPER KING STREET, BLOOMSBURY-SQUARE. Terms of Subscription, One Guinea per Annum. The Subscriber is entitled to the perusal of the best and newest works in all departments of Literature, with all the English and American Reviews, the Monthly Magazines, &c. A few Reviews and Magazines to be disposed of, secondhand, on moderate terms. Newspapers regularly supplied. Stationery of every description.

HENRY PENNY'S PATENT METALLIC MEMORANDUM BOOKS, ruled or plain, in great variety of sizes and bindings. The advantages of this invention are, that with pencil and paper prepared in a peculiar manner, the writer obtains all the effect of ink. The paper presents a beautiful glossy surface, over which the pencil glides without any difficulty, and the marks made by it are indelible. To be had at the Manufactory, 8, and 9, OLD BAILEY, LONDON, and of all the principal Stationers in town and country. The trade supplied direct, or through any wholesale stationer.

CAUTION.—In order to protect the public from imitations, the same, "St. Penny's Improved Patent," with the number of the book, is marked on the back of each.

In Shilling Parts and Threepenny Numbers, printed in music folio, MUSIC FOR THE MILLION. Vocal and Instrumental. Intended to foster the Art by the publication of Standard and Classical Music at the lowest price consistent with accuracy and elegance of appearance. Part VI., now ready, contains the "Try Green," by Russell; "Love's Call or Young Agnes," from "Fra Diavolo," the Irish Quadrille, as performed at Jullien's Concerts; "Glee," "Hark the Lark," an original Waltz; and the Laughing Catch. All with Full Piano-forte Accompaniments.

Parts I to V. are just reprinted, one shilling each. Any of the pieces may be had, also, in threepenny numbers. Davidson, Water-street and Tudor-street, New Bridge-street; of whom also may be had, MUSIC FOR THE MILLION, First Series, containing ninety-six pieces, including the celebrated Irish melodies, 7s. 6d. DIBDIN'S SONGS, the words of all the songs, and the music of 130, with Piano-forte accompaniments, in 1 large vol., 36s.; in 2 vols., 21s.; or in 9 Parts, 2s. 6d. each. CALCOTT'S MUSICAL GRAMMAR, by which the whole Theory of Music may be acquired without a master, 2s. 6d.

MARQUIS OF WESTMINSTER.
 HENRY GEORGE WARD, M.P.
 THOMAS MILNER GIBSON, M.P.
 THE BARON D'ARUNDEL, M.P.
 RIGHT HON. E. VERNON SMITH.
 EARL OF ARUNDEL, M.P.
 Great College-street North, Camden-town.—Proofs, 1s.; before letters, 7s.

THE COMPLETE WORKS FOR SIXPENCE.
THE LIBRARY FOR HOME.

Edited by Dr. LIVESY, F.R.S., F.S.A., &c. This Library will include the publication of valuable and expensive works of Voyages, Travels, History, Biography, &c., directed of all passages that can be deemed injurious to the youthful mind, and at a price which will render the volumes accessible to all classes of society. In other branches of literature, works of the imagination, including Novels, Romances, and some objectionable and extravagant notions of the older writers, have been presented to the public in a novel form, and at an exceedingly low price. The Proprietors hope that the public taste will sanction the experiment they are about to make, in a superior work of literature, and that the cheap and valuable editions of the "Library for Home," now in preparation, will find a place by the fireside and on the library table of every family in the United Kingdom.

The first work of the Series, "A VOICE FROM THE MAIN DECK, or, Six Years in a Man of War," is now before the public, and is completed in six numbers for sixpence; the second selected for publication is "OLIVER'S WEALTHY VOYAGE TO THE PACIFIC OCEAN." This work contains valuable information respecting the progress of colonization and civilization in the islands of the "Great Southern Ocean," interspersed with anecdotes and information of an interesting character. Originally published in America, it was reproduced in this country at a guinea; and in this edition will be given entire, with the statistical information brought down to the present date, in One Part, at Sixpence, or Two Parts at One Shilling.

The Library is printed uniform with "Murray's Colonial and Home Library," in a new type, on double crown paper, in a small octavo form, and is issued, for the convenience of the public, on alternate days, at One Penny each, and in parts, or volumes, every fortnight at Sixpence. Every work will be completed, with Engravings and Maps, in one volume at Sixpence when practicable, and will exhibit a triumph of cheap typographical labour, unparalleled in the history of Printing. London: John Neale, 26, Tavistock-street, Strand.

NEW PRESTON NEWSPAPER.
 On Saturday, February 10th, will be published the First Number of a Liberal and Free-Trade Newspaper, entitled—

THE PRESTON GUARDIAN, and LANCASHIRE ADVERTISER. This Paper will be earnestly devoted to the cause of Civil and Religious Liberty, the Rights of Industry, the Prosperity of Agriculture, and the Freest Freedom of Trade and Commerce.

The Repeal of the Corn Laws and the Abolition of all similar Monopolies, the Full and Free Representation of the People, the Repeal of the New Poor Law, and Cheap and Good Government, will be constantly advocated. The GUARDIAN will especially identify itself with every important interest in this locality. The prosperity of the Town and Trade of Preston, and the local interests of Chorley, Wigan, Clitheroe, Burnley, Padiham, Ormskirk, Southport, Fleetwood, Foulton, Garstang, Blackpool, Lytham, and other neighbouring places will receive unceasing attention.

This Paper, containing twenty-two columns, will be considerably larger than any journal ever published in Preston. It will be printed on the best paper, with new type, cast expressly for the purpose, and with a powerful machine so as to admit the latest intelligence. To be published every Saturday morning, by J. Livesey and Son, at the GUARDIAN Office, No. 8, Chesapeake, Preston, where all Orders, Advertisements, and Correspondence will be received. Price 4d., or 5s. per quarter, and 4s. 6d. paid in advance. Its anticipated circulation will render it a most eligible medium for Advertisements, which are respectfully solicited.

THE WEEKLY CHRONICLE to its READERS and the PUBLIC, on the OPENING OF PARLIAMENT, February 1, 1844. On the day of session of Parliament, which, if it do not terminate the struggle, must at least be looked on as the herald of the advent of Free Trade—in which the pacification of Ireland must be placed in contrast with the possible alternative of civil war, and the threatened dismemberment of the Empire, in which the grand battle of civil and religious liberty will have once more to be fought, on the question of educating the people, and in which the Government must be called on, amidst its exultations on the state of the revenue, to say not only from what oppressive sources, and by what injurious expedients, the income has been derived, but in what manner it has been expended,—the Weekly Chronicle once more submits its claims upon the continued support of its old subscribers, and upon the more extended encouragement of a larger share of public patronage, from the accession of new friends.

The Weekly Chronicle is now printed on superior paper of the largest size, containing more reading matter than any other London weekly paper. Great care is bestowed on the condensation and arrangement of its general news and Parliamentary intelligence, of which it gives a much fuller and far more satisfactory summary than any of its contemporaries. And this it is enabled to do from the principles on which its contents are selected and arranged; for while the Weekly Chronicle will be found to give due attention to literature, science, the fine arts, the drama, and even to sporting intelligence, so far as this latter can be said to interest the general reader, neither sporting, nor any other feature of minor interest, are allowed to supersede the proper objects of a newspaper—those subjects of breathing, living import to the progress of society, and to the well-being of the people throughout the whole length and breadth of Home and Colonial England.

The Weekly Chronicle will, therefore, continue to scrutinize the conduct of men in office—to record political facts as they arise, whether within or without the walls of Parliament—to warn its reader of the coming event before its shadow is cast broadly across the public footpath; and in all other respects to fulfil its purposes as a newspaper, identified at once with a party, and with the people—with the party of Practical Reformers, and with a people seeking the common good of all.

The Weekly Chronicle has been the constant organ and advocate of these principles for many years; and has been thought to have done good service in critical times upon questions materially affecting the public welfare. It is the advocate of extended suffrage—of the ballot—of a shortened duration of Parliament—of Free Trade—of systematic colonization—of the education of the people on the principles of civil and religious liberty—of a readjustment of the revenue of the Church, and of other measures of a more radical character calculated to secure the union—of peace at home and abroad—of a repeal of the odious income-tax, with a reduction of the expenditure; and, not to extend the catalogue, it may be said that it treats all other public questions in a kindred spirit and tone; whilst its means of information may be judged from the fact that it was, among other instances of early intelligence, the first to announce to the world the visit of the Queen to France, and the determination of the Government to arrest O'Connell and his friends—both which facts were announced in the Weekly Chronicle for several days before they were communicated to the Government press.

Arrangements have been made for bringing down the news contained in the Weekly Chronicle to a much later date than usual, in some instances anticipating the average of last year by a week; and, to effect this, every department of the paper has been scrupulously revised and efficiently reconstructed. For the convenience of our friends, the three following editions are published; and, by attending to these directions, the substitution of any other edition for the one preferred, and for which the order should be distinctly given, may be prevented:—

1. An edition for exclusive circulation in the provinces on the Saturday, marked "Country Edition."
 2. An edition for circulation in London on the Saturday, and in the country on the Sunday, marked "Town and Country Edition."
 3. An edition for exclusive circulation in the metropolis and its environs on the Sunday, marked "Town Edition."
 The price is 6d., for which the Weekly Chronicle may be obtained of all respectable newsmen; and by post, paid in advance, at a subscription of 3s. per annum, 13s. the half-year, and 6s. 6d. the quarter.—Sold by all newsmen in town and country.

THE DIRECTORS OF THE NATIONAL LINEN COMPANY, in giving publicity to the Prices at which they are now selling IRISH LINENS, SHEETINGS, TABLECLOTHS, CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS, LONGCLOTHS, CALICOES, &c., and other Manufactures suitable for household purposes, beg to apprise families residing either in Town or Country, that samples can be forwarded for inspection previous to payment, by merely sending a reference. Prospectuses, containing full particulars of the various manufactures and lists of prices, can be had at their Warehouse, 104, Fleet-street, corner of Farringdon street, or by post. It will be found most convenient for carriages to set down in Farringdon-street.

MACINTOSHES SUPERSEDED.—Important to all classes exposed to the vicissitudes of the weather.—The NEW BRITISH WATERPROOFING COMPANY render goods of every fabric, either in the piece or made up garments, thoroughly impervious to the most depressing rains, and yet the escape of perspiration remains unimpeded. Books of Testimonials, with list of prices, may be had gratis, at their office, 18, Skinner-street, Snow-hill (late 343, Strand).

TESTIMONIAL.
 "Metropolitan Police-office, Whitehall-place, February 23, 1839.
 "Gentlemen.—The Commissioners of Police beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th instant, and to acquaint you in reply that one suit has been in the use of a constable whose tent is situated on Blackheath. He reports, that frequently during the month of January he was out in six hours' successive rains, and that, on the night of the 8th instant, it rained the whole nine hours he was on duty; and that when he took off his great coat, in the presence of the sergeant at the station, it was as dry inside as when he put it on. "I have the honour to be, Gentlemen, "Your most obedient servant, "C. ROWAN."

N.B. Every garment, &c., bearing their stamp, is warranted thoroughly waterproof.

PRESENTS.—J. LIMBIRD, No. 143, Strand, has on SALE an extensive assortment of gold and silver engraved pens, cases, silver fruit knives, ivory and pearl tablets, boxes of drawing colours, writing desks, dressing cases, houses, ebony, and other interesting novelties, albums, assay books, blotting cases, stationery cases, book companions, pipes, and prayer books, &c., and every article in stationery of the best quality and lowest prices.—At Limbird's, 143, Strand, facing Colborne-street, near Somerset House.

COTTON TWIST REDIVIVUS!
THE WEEKLY CHRONICLE, of Saturday and Sunday, the 3rd and 4th inst., will contain No. II. of a New Series of the LETTERS OF COTTON TWIST. FREE TRADE! PLENTY TO DO! HIGH PROFITS! GOOD WAGES! and CHEAP BREAD! Also, No. 21 of the celebrated Articles on IRISH HISTORY—the only safe Guide to a Knowledge of the Irish Policy, essential to the integrity of the Empire at this important crisis.—Office, 237, Strand.

MEMBERS OF THE NATIONAL ANTI-CORN LAW LEAGUE, residing in the Country, can be supplied with the MORNING CHRONICLE, clean and regular, for 14s. per quarter, "Evening Sun" or "Globe," 12s. 6d. per quarter; sent by post to any part of the Kingdom free of extra charge. Orders, pre-paid, to M. HALL, News Agent, 223, Strand. Agent for TAN LAMOU, &c.

TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT and others.—St. James's-park, Storey's-gate, Westminster. To LET Furnished, close to the Houses of Parliament, a compact HOUSE, suitable for a small Family. Particulars with Messrs. Trollope and No. 6, Parliament-street; or William Crabth Knight, builder, &c., 13, Alfred-place, Newington-causesway Southwark.

THE NEW PATENT INKSTAND by R. T. CLIFFE, is Superior in all respects to those recently patented. The ink is drawn from the surface of the reservoir, the sediment remains below. No variation of temperature affects the ink, and from its simplicity cannot be got out of order. Hyde and Co., agents, 61, Fleet-street, where may be had their Bank Sealing Wax, an article excelling all others in pureness of quality and brilliancy of colour.

HORSE POWER SUPERSEDED IN AGRICULTURAL OPERATIONS.
THE INVENTOR of a most efficient and economical SUBSTITUTE for ANIMAL and STEAM POWER, invites the attention of Capitalists to his important Discovery, particularly those interested in Agriculture. Farmers may now be placed upon an equality with Manufacturers, as regards producing cheaply, by means of Economical Motive Power, without displacing human labour. Such arrangements can be made with a respectable Capitalist as will secure him from loss under any circumstances. Prepaid letters, addressed Mr. Alexander, No. 18, Easy-row, Birmingham.

THE AMERICAN ROCKING-CHAIR, so much admired by all who have visited America, for the remarkable ease, pleasure, and comfort which it affords, is just imported, and for sale at the extensive Carpet and Upholstery Establishments of LUCK, KENT, and CUMMING, No. 4, Regent-street; Carpenters' Hall, 65, London wall; and WM. CUMMING and Co., 98, Hatton-garden. It is asserted with confidence that there is no piece of furniture in use in civilized society more universally sought after and approved of when known, by all ranks, ages, and conditions of people, than the "American Rocking Chair." The price is 41 5s., the purchaser to be at liberty to return it if not approved within a week. When their excellence becomes known, few families will be without one, as they are suitable for all, and particularly stout persons and invalids.—A liberal discount to the trade.

CABINET FURNITURE, CARPETS, and UPHOLSTERY.—THOMAS PAUL and CO. inform the nobility and gentlemen furnishing, that their CABINET STOCK comprises every kind of furniture, calculated for any description of residence, from the cottage to the mansion, and will be found 50 per cent. cheaper than at any other house in London. Independently of the great savings, every article is manufactured of the most seasoned and sound materials, so that parties furnishing (even for a foreign climate) are secure either from complaint or defective wear. References of many years' standing, together with the most ample warranty given where required. Their stock of Brussels carpets consists of a splendid variety, commencing at the extraordinarily low price of 2s. 3d. per yard, and those of new and elegant designs from 3s. per yard. THOMAS PAUL and CO., cabinetmakers, upholsterers, and carpet manufacturers, opposite the Mansion House, City.

THE NEW LIGHT.—A GREAT NOVELTY.
 The patent CAMPHINE LAMP gives a light of surpassing power, softness, and purity, without any kind of grease or dirt, smoke or smell. The lamp is simply and beautifully constructed, and can be fixed to any description of lamp, pedestal, or gas fitting. It is not easily put out of condition. The Camphine (also a patent) is 4s. per gallon, and is so pure that if split on any article of dress or furniture will not leave either mark or stain, while it consumes so slowly that, at the cost of three farthings for two hours, it gives a light equal to twelve mould candles, without any attention. It will be found far less expensive than any, and incomparably superior to all existing lights. To be seen burning at Rippon and Burton's (sole wholesale and retail agents for English Patent Camphine).—N.B. THE ONLY Patent Camphine Lamp has "Rippon and Burton, Wells-street, Oxford-street," conspicuously placed on its head. The public are cautioned against all not so marked.

A CUP OF COFFEE IN ONE MINUTE!
DUNN'S ESSENCE OF COFFEE, warranted to keep good in any climate.—This Essence of the finest Mocha Coffee, improved by a process of thirty years' experience, contains all the fragrant and exhilarating properties of the Coffee in the highest perfection. It is admirably adapted to persons travelling, Officers in the Army and Navy, and Families visiting watering-places. Manufactured by D. DUNN, Pentonville, London, Manufacturer of Chocolate Powder, Essence of Ginger, and other Spices, Herbs, &c. Sold in Bottles from 1s. to 4s. each; and may be ordered of any respectable Grocer in the United Kingdom. Directions.—Put about a teaspoonful of the Essence into a coffee-cup, add sugar and cream or milk, then fill it up with boiling water, and a cup of Coffee, of superior flavour, is instantly made.

EASE IN WALKING AND COMFORT TO THE FEET.—HALL and CO., SOLE PATENTERS of the FANNUS LUMIUM, or Leather-Cloth Boots and Shoes for Ladies and Gentlemen. These articles have borne the test and received the approbation of all who have worn them. Such as are troubled with Corns, Bunions, Gout, Chlains, or Tenderness of Feet from any other cause, will find them the softest and most comfortable ever invented. Hall and Co. particularly invite attention to their Elastic Boots, which are much approved; they supersede lacing or buttoning, are drawn on in an instant, and are a great support to the ankle. The Patent India-rubber Goggles are light, durable, elastic, and waterproof; they thoroughly protect the feet from damp or cold. Hall and Co.'s Portable Waterproof Dresses, Ladies' Cardinal Cloaks with Hoods, 18s. Gentlemen's Dresses, comprising Cape, Overalls, and Hood, 21s. The whole can be carried with convenience in the pocket.

PATRONIZED AND SANCTIONED BY HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN, H.R.H. PRINCE ALBERT, THE ROYAL FAMILY, AND THE SEVERAL COURTS OF EUROPE.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the Growth and for Preserving and Beautifying the Human Hair. Price 2s. 6d.—7s. Family Bottle (equal to 4 small) 10s. 6d., and double that also, 21s. CAUTION.—SPURIOUS COMPOSITIONS are frequently offered for sale under a FICTITIOUS name or the word "GENUINE." It is therefore imperative on purchasers to see that the words "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" are on the Wrapper of each bottle, and on the back of the wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 29,038 letters. All others are FRAUDULENT COUNTERFEITS. The principle on which "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" is prepared, is confined solely to the knowledge and practice of A. ROWLAND and SON, who are still at an immense expense in completing its preparation, and the amalgamation of its FULLY VERIFIABLE MATERIALS renders abortive any attempt to discover its component parts.

ROWLAND'S KALDOR, for Improving and Beautifying the Skin and Complexion. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included. ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, renders the Teeth beautifully White and preserves the Gums. Price 2s. 6d. per box, duty included.

CAUTION.—It is imperative on purchasers to see that the word "ROWLAND'S" is on the Wrapper of each article. For the protection of the Public from fraud and imposition, the Honourable Commissioners of Her Majesty's Stamps have authorized the Proprietors' Signature to be impressed on the Government Stamp, thus, A. ROWLAND and SON, 25, Abchurch-lane, which is affixed to the Kaldor and Odonto. Sold by them and by Chemists and Perfumers.

* All others are SPURIOUS IMITATIONS!!!

London: Printed (at the office of Palmer and Chappell, Orange-court, Fleet-street) by A. W. PAVLON, of Barton-on-Irwell, Lancashire, and of Fleet-street; and published by him at TAN LAMOU'S Office, 27, Fleet-street, Saturday February 3, 1844.

THE LEAGUE.

No. 20.]

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1844.

[3d.]

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND, £100,000.

All subscribers of £1 and upwards to the ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUND FUND, will be entitled to, and receive a copy, weekly, of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have forwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the Offices of THE LEAGUE, Newall's-buildings, Manchester, or 67, Fleet-street, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND, are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council respectfully request that their friends, in all places where committees for raising subscriptions to the £100,000 Fund have not been already formed, will proceed to their formation as soon as possible, and transmit their names to the LEAGUE Offices, Manchester.

"REGISTER! REGISTER!! REGISTER!!!"

The citizens of London, and, indeed, the whole country, are sufficiently familiar with these words. Since they were first uttered in Merchant Tailors' Hall, they have never been forgotten. The orations of Sir Robert Peel, whether against or for Catholic Emancipation; whether in corroboration of, or in reply to, those of Lord Stanley or Sir James Graham; whether in praise of the principles of Free Trade, or in deprecation of its practice, may fill many volumes; but these words will ever remain his most memorable speech. They evinced that he had detected the vulnerable point of the Reform Bill, and saw his way to the reconstruction of a great political party, even by means of the very measure which was the monument of its defeat and temporary dissolution. Subsequent events proved, in this instance, his sagacity, and rewarded it with a complete triumph over the authors of the Reform Bill. He must have enjoyed his success the more on that account:

"O, it is sport to see the engineer Hoist with his own petard."

And that which is sport for the partisan may be an enjoyment also to honest men, who seek objects independent of party, and which they are willing to see accomplished by any party whose policy is not so purblind as to involve the denial of justice to all industrial members of the community. If Sir Robert Peel have indeed—as his words would portend from the mouth of any other man—screwed his courage to the sticking-point of monopoly; if his profession of fealty and submission to the royalty of Richmond be indeed without mental reservation, he may rely upon being, ere long, "hoist with his own petard," and blown out of office by his own engineering.

"Brutus will raise a spirit as soon as Cæsar." Free Trade may prevail, as Toryism recovered, by heeding this same admonition of "Register, register, register!" The elections we have won, and those we lose, alike show its worth. Both call for future diligence; and they have both a higher importance, than what belongs to them as independent struggles, in their relation to that one great electoral fight, the aim of which looks far beyond each particular contest—to the attainment of a demonstrable majority in the entire constituency of the country. To this purpose, success and defeat are alike subordinate and subservient. Triumph is welcome, but defeat does not discourage. Towards this purpose we move onward through storm and sunshine. The League points to this demonstrable majority of the constituencies as "its being's end and aim." And for this we reiterate to all cities, boroughs, and counties, "Register, register, register!"

Our especial reason for advertising just now to this topic is to ensure the attention of our London readers to the work undertaken by the Metropolitan Anti-Corn-Law Association. The plan and objects of this body are as follows:—

"An aggregate meeting of the members of all the branches belonging to each particular borough should be immediately convened, a strict examination made into the state of the registration and of preparations for elections, and a report returned by the meeting to the committee of the result, accompanied by detail of what practical steps, if any, the branches in each borough, respectively, consider necessary to place it in a satisfactory position.

"A central Free-Trade Parliamentary registration committee-room should be taken by the branches formed, with power to add to their number, which committee should at once proceed to elect into their body such influential and active gentlemen of Free-Trade opinions as have distinguished themselves by attention to elections within the borough. They should constitute themselves into a Free-Trade Parliamentary Registration Society for the borough, elect an influential chairman, and a general committee of leading electors, engage a paid secretary, frame rules, fix terms of entry, enrol members, and hold weekly committee meetings for despatch of business. Circulars inviting co-operation and subscriptions, and enclosing list of office-bearers, committee, and rules, should be issued to every elector on the register.

"Branches should be organised in every parish or other parliamentary division of each borough, each being a complete society in itself, with rules, office-bearers, committee of management, and members; and from the metropolitan enrolment-sheets of members of the Anti-Corn-Law League the means at once are presented of forming societies in every parliamentary subdivision of the boroughs.

"The secretary of the central committee of each borough should, under its direction, analyze and digest, alphabetically, the whole register, prepare a complete set of canvassing-books, and record every information relative to deaths, removals, politics, and qualifications of claimants and voters.

"Meanwhile, as the formation of each branch society is complete, its committee should be provided with the printed register of the parish or district, and hold periodical meetings of the members, who should, from their local knowledge, make returns to the central borough committee of every information calculated to affect the state of the register; and to discover and induce to claim to be registered every qualified Free-trader. So soon as the canvassing-books of the parish or ward are complete, these should in like manner be revised and corrected by the local branch, returns made to the borough office, and these regularly posted up.

"Aggregate meetings of the office-bearers of all the branches within the borough should make a monthly report in writing to the central borough committee of the state of their business; and the committee, in return, should be prepared with a general report of the whole existing state of the association, and to submit for general consideration any matter which it may be desirable to discuss.

"The borough office should be open at all business hours, and a secretary in attendance, competent to afford every information on the subject of the registration, and every facility in the promotion of claims.

"Inspectors to collect such particulars as are not otherwise supplied, and to get claims signed, should be employed; the office-register and street canvassing-books should be punctually altered from time to time, according to the information; and the committee should charge itself with the responsibility of being prepared for an election at a moment's notice. The branches of each parish or ward will also be prepared to canvass within their respective districts all out-voters of the city of London, or of the counties of Surrey and Middlesex, according to the lists transmitted by the Free-Trade committees of that city or those counties.

"The business committee of the association are fully prepared to expect that in all these arrangements much assistance will be required from them. They are ready to devote all labour and time they can command to active co-operation with the various associations. Their secretary will vigilantly inspect the progress of business at each borough office, and attend and help to organize all the contemplated branches. The central office of the association will always be at the service of the borough associations, its officers will be ready to afford every facility in the execution of such duties as branches may not have the means to perform themselves.

"Such are the outlines of the plan recommended for your adoption.

"When its application shall have been extended to all the metropolitan boroughs, its operation will secure uniformity of action among all their representatives, and intelligent co-operation and public spirit in the whole body of their electors. Such an influential expression of public opinion would speedily become the key-note to that of the whole country, and give to the metropolis of this great empire a compact body of popular influence and political power worthy of its former history and present position.

"The task of executing such a plan is expensive, laborious, and difficult, and nothing can crown it with success but a thorough conviction in the public mind of the absence of all party objects in the members of this association, and an entire confidence in their singleness of purpose, aptitude for business, prudence in the management of right means, and assiduous energy in the pursuit of honest ends."

The zealous support of this plan will, it is hoped, be regarded as a public and indispensable duty by the citizens of London, and the inhabitants of the metropolitan boroughs. It falls to their portion, in the great division of labour required by our common cause. It is the first decided metropolitan movement for following up the splendid victory achieved in the return of Mr. Pattison. It is an appropriate response from the heart of the nation to the demonstrations of earnestness and liberality from its remotest provinces. It will teach the Premier-slave of the landlords better manners than were evinced in the vulgar insolence of his supercilious and jeering refusal to answer Mr. Pattison's question relative to the sugar duties. That reply was not not more wanting in personal courtesy than in due respect for the representation of the commercial as well as political metropolis of the empire. It will open the fair and not remote prospect of combining the representation of the city of London, that of Westminster, the metropolitan boroughs, and, we will add, the metropolitan county also, into one great protest against Monopoly, and on behalf of the practical, immediate, and consistent application of Free-Trade principles. People of the Metropolis, here is your work; a great and noble one, worthy of your position; and most essential to the progress of the League towards eventual and complete success. Be up and doing—forthwith, in all your wards and parishes—and may a blessing crown your exertions from that Providence which watches over the sorrows of poverty, the rights of industry, and the cause of justice.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

THE FREE-TRADE MIRROR OF PARLIAMENT FOR THE SESSION 1844.

First Week, ending Saturday, Feb. 10.

The present year commences a new era in the Free-Trade agitation. Hope within Parliament is lessened, as hope out of Parliament increases. The Anti-Corn-Law League turns away—"more in sorrow than in anger"—from "honourable members" to "worthy and independent electors;" and, in the full conviction that the victory is to be achieved "out of doors," they care less for that which passes within the walls of the Legislature, as compared with their interest in that which passes without.

Nevertheless, the proceedings of the House of Commons during the session of 1844 will not be without their interest. The House is, of course, the primary field for that discussion which ultimately affects all public opinion in this country. In the present state of opinion, every word, every look, every cheer, uttered within the House of Commons in relation to FREE TRADE, has significance and force; they are the degrees of the thermometer, working the fluctuations of feeling; they tell, far more than ever set speeches and debates, how "honourable members" are affected by the "pressure from without." It is our purpose, therefore, to watch the Legislature, especially the House of Commons; and, in a spirit of honest independence and perfect impartiality, to communicate to those whom the "standing orders" recognise as "outside barbarians" the reflection of every peculiar word, attitude, admission, or argument, which may illustrate how the triumphant work of FREE TRADE without is operating on the hopes, the fears, the sense, and the nonsense, of those within.

Beginning with the beginning, we commence with the opening of Parliament on the memorable 1st of February. That day was signalised by the declaration of Sir Robert Peel, that—against his own avowals and convictions—he had succumbed to the iron rule of the agriculturists; and that day was also signalised by the fact, that henceforth all the "Fixed-Duty" men may be crammed into Lord Stanley's vacant "Derby Dilly," while all the rest of the reflecting and unreflecting community are divided into "total repealers," and "sliding scalars." It is, therefore, not without reason that we notice this first night of the session, even though all our readers may be long since familiar with its statements and results. That night drew the great line of demarcation between the antagonist principles of what remains of monopoly and the now universally received doctrines of Free Trade; and as Sir Robert Peel will himself be found hereafter to have been one of the most effective indirect contributors to the triumph of Free Trade, it would be unkind and uncandid to omit all notice of the successful way in which he demolished Lord John Russell's argument for a "fixed duty."

Mr. Cardwell, the member for Clitheroe, seconded the address, and sung the song of triumph about "reviving prosperity." He was selected, of course, because he was connected with Lancashire, and was not unfamiliar with the causes and the consequences of manufacturing and commercial fortune and misfortune. Very well, indeed, he told his story—that is, in the way in which the House of Commons considers to be "very well." For the House of Commons is more solicitous about the manner and the style in which a member speaks, than about the cogency of his arguments, or the truth of his statements. Therefore, when the DOMINANT party is in distress, it always feels greatly obliged to the young or untied member who makes a successful effort on their behalf, and rewards him with whatever amount of "great cheering" it can command. Great cheering did not follow Mr. Cardwell's speech; but he made a very plausible kind of speech, delivered in a very plausible kind of way, and, though it was heard in quietness (for Peel had not yet spoken, and the agriculturists were, therefore, unsoothed), there was a considerable amount of cheering at the close, and everybody said it was a very respectable speech.

The most noticeable thing in it was the fact of his clogging the liberality of the Government for admitting "all nations" to participate in our free commercial intercourse with China. "Great cheering" from the Opposition benches followed this particular announcement, but there was a blank on the Ministerial. They dreaded more "Free-Trade" indications from the Ministry of their own choosing, and did not altogether like the idea that China should be more advanced than Britain. Mr. Cardwell felt this, and recovered himself with as much dexterity as if he were an old Ministerial stager. He told his auditors that all practical men of business attributed the return of prosperity to the revival of the HOME TRADE; and at the words "home trade" a rival cheer broke forth from the Ministerial ranks, which testified how dear to their hearts and feelings was the sound of "home trade" to the monopolists. But what if anybody had asked, "What do you mean by revival of home trade?" Mr. Cardwell talked fluently about revival of cotton manufacture, the improvement of the linen trade, the increase in the deposits of the Savings Banks, the decrease in the poor-rates, and the good prospects even for the iron trade. Is all this owing to the fact, that the agriculturists of Essex and Lincoln require more calicoes and woollens than ever they did? Or, is the home trade revived because all this little increase in our languishing manufacturing industry arises from increased demand within the limits of the British Islands? If so, to what department of the home trade are we to assign our trade with China? And if Chinese trade is not home trade, what on earth is the meaning of home trade? Let Lord John Russell answer; he told us what constitutes the true secret of revival of home trade, and of all trade; and, as that secret is the essence of free trade, it is worth while repeating the words of the noble lord:—

"I have made some inquiries with respect to the effects produced in poor families by the reduction of the price of bread this year, and I have been told that in some families it has occasioned a saving of a shilling every week in the consumption of the family; and if we multiply the numbers of families that must be in this condition, it will show an amount of some eight or ten millions saved, in the article of food; and can there be a ground for doubting that the application of the money thus saved to the acquisition of other objects which are the obvious produce of the bounty of Providence goes far to account for the improvement that has taken place." (Cheers.)

But though Lord John Russell uttered this "great truth," he had not the courage to stand upright upon it, and sling away the broken crutch of protection. Clinging with fatuous fondness to his "fixed duty," he laid himself open to the successful reply of Sir Robert Peel, who thus filled up the blank in Lord John Russell's Free-Trade principles:—

"If the noble lord intend it for revenue merely—if he think there is no claim on the part of the agricultural interest to protection in any shape whatever, then I retain my opinion that the noble lord will find it extremely difficult to resist the argument, that if this duty be laid on foreign corn for the purpose of revenue only, and not for protection, why not apply it to corn of domestic produce? (Loud cries of 'Hear, hear,' in which several of the Free-Trade members joined.) When the noble lord is defending his fixed duty on wheat, as a fixed duty imposed, not for protection, but for revenue, he will have the case of barley and of malt quoted against him (hear, hear); and would be told that with respect to other descriptions of corn, such as barley, we do raise a large revenue from our domestic produce, and that if you think it right to have a duty on wheat, not for protection, but for revenue, why not lay a tax on wheat ground at the mill, and not confine yourselves to taxes on the imports? (Loud cries of 'Hear, hear,') Why not pursue, with respect to wheat, the course you have taken with respect to barley, and subject both foreign and home produce to equal duties—provided you are sincere in enforcing your duty, not on account of protection, but really for revenue?"

This reply is complete; and it was really amusing to see these two statesmen taking each other by the beard, each smiting his antagonist "under the fifth rib," and at the same time using their daggers of sliding scale and fixed duty with fatal effect against the very "protection" which they seem to patronise. Well, let us be thankful even for mercies of a small size; if we cannot construct a Free-Trade statesman out of Peel or Russell singly, or alone, by lumping them both together we may manage to get one—somewhat after the fashion that requires nine tailors to make a man.

The great Free-Trade speech of the evening was Mr. Villiers's—far, though Mr. Hume spoke very well on the subject of Free Trade, he was too discursive and too lengthy, a circumstance which mars the effect of any speech. Nor are we now noticing other speeches, such as that of Mr. Milner Gibson, who reduced Sir Robert Peel to the hard necessity of speaking out a second time. But Mr. Villiers confined himself mainly to one subject—namely, the anomalous position of the Government; he spoke with even more than his usual spirit; and he was listened to with a gloomy silence on the Ministerial side, which showed how keenly the biting truth of his words was felt. In last Saturday's LEAGUE we gave that particular extract from his speech which told with withering effect; and though Mr. Gladstone got up, and denied that he was the author of the Free-Trade article in the Foreign and Colonial Review, and thereby enabled those around him to give breath to their pent-up agony in a sort of screaming cheer, the circumstance was in itself exceedingly trivial, and did not, in the slightest material degree, detract from the general effect and power of Mr. Villiers's speech.

Passing from Thursday night to Monday, we remark a significant notice given by Mr. Milner Gibson, the reading of which elicited "laughter and cheers."

Mr. Milner Gibson gave notice of a motion for the appointment of a committee to obtain information on the present state of the agriculture of the United Kingdom, with a view of obtaining returns of the quantity of land at present under cultivation, the amount of its produce, and the quantity used for agricultural purposes.

"If," says a mind of no common stamp, in a book recently published,—"if it be the one all-important problem in this country, 'how shall the whole land be made to yield the greatest increase?' what then will be said in favour of the splendid mansions of the aristocracy, in the midst of their vast parks, policies, and pleasure-grounds—of their game preserves, and fields covered with animals kept for pleasure, which absorb and withdraw from cultivation immense portions of the richest and finest land in the country, that would otherwise be devoted to the production of human food?" We hope Mr. Milner Gibson will follow up this subject with his accustomed spirit.

But Monday night did not pass without Free-Trade principles being uttered by the Government. Mr. Gladstone moved for a select committee to revise the standing orders relative to railways; and, in so doing, urged, as one reason for watching over these iron monopolies, that there was, at the present time, an unprecedented amount of capital seeking profitable investment. This confession is made by the President of the Board of Trade, in the face of a great commercial nation! Why does not the reviving home trade afford some vent for this pent-up capital? Yes, it does! People, in the eager hope that prosperity is coming, are rushing to invest their capital in cotton and railways, there being no less than sixty-six notices on the journals of the House of Commons for bills to permit the construction of between eight and nine hundred miles of railroad, in addition to the two thousand miles already made! This fact alarms the Government; the President of the Board of Trade is instructed to utter a cry of caution, lest this "unprecedented accumulation of capital" should rush onwards to ruin. "Beware," he says practically, and in effect, "beware; for, so long as the sliding scale exists, fictitious prosperity and real distress will follow alternately!" This is the rotation to which monopoly dooms a country whose commerce might command the world.

* "The Aristocracy of Britain, and the Laws of Entail and Primogeniture"—a striking, remarkable, and useful book.

But Sir Robert Peel was not satisfied with the performance of his President of the Board of Trade. He rose to enunciate another great Free-Trade principle, as memorable as the one that we should "buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market." Mr. Wallace, an honest, blunt-spoken man, who, however, sometimes speaks before he thinks, objected to the railway companies, that they were actuated by self-interest, and not the convenience or advantage of the public. Up jumps Sir Robert Peel. "Self-interest!" he almost shouted—"why, what would you have them to do? Is not SELF-INTEREST THE VIVIFYING SOUL OF ALL COMMERCE?" John Bright was sitting opposite the Prime Minister, and he looked at him as if marvelling whether or no the man were aware of the significance and greatness of the truth he had spoken. For the Prime Minister, in these remarkable words, spoken with great vehemence of enunciation and action, condensed a volume of Free-Trade argument. Yes! self-interest is the "vivifying soul" of all human action. Away, then, with your restrictions, your regulations, your swaddling bands! Let the healthful breezes of competition blow around every interest, and brace up the nerve and the industry of every man, be he cotton-spinner or corn-grower. Each individual turns on the pivot of self-interest; but, out of all these individual and conflicting self-interests, Providence intends that there shall spring one harmonious system, animated by one "VIVIFYING SOUL." "We thank thee, Jew, for teaching us that word!"

On Tuesday Mr. Cobden gave notice of the following motion:—

"That a select committee be appointed to inquire into the effects of protective duties on imports upon the interests of the tenant-farmers and farm-labourers of this country."

The object of such committees is, of course, to examine witnesses; and we shall now see whether the landlord majority will dare to hear the evidence of such men as Earl Ducie, Earl Spencer, Mr. Chawner, Mr. Lattimore, and the other intelligent agriculturists who are opposed to the principle of protection. At all events, whether they grant the committee of inquiry or not, they cannot evade the discussion which will involve the whole question of monopoly in corn, sugar, and other articles, as they affect the interests of farmers and farm-labourers. We are prepared to expect some manoeuvre on the part of the monopolists, to endeavour to get rid of this debate if possible, either by counting out the House, as they succeeded in doing upon Mr. Ward's motion for inquiry into the special burdens on land, or by moving some irrelevant amendment.

Mr. Sharman Crawford also brought forward the subject of the people's grievances, and told the House that "one of the monopolies of which the people seriously complained was the monopoly of the supply of corn, which they alleged was kept up for the purpose of protecting particular interests, which raised the price of food to the working classes, and at the same time prevented the demand for their labour, while, by the imposition of a heavy tax, injury was inflicted upon the commercial and manufacturing public." This is a proposition which nobody but a Wyndham or a Sibthorp—the "clowns of the ring" in the House of Commons—could have the hardihood to deny, after the statement of Lord John Russell, on the first night of the session, that the great difficulty of the Corn Law was the fact of its being a matter in which a majority of both Houses of Parliament were personally interested.

Respecting Mr. Sharman Crawford's motion, we may only remark, that a good cause was spoiled by too much being attempted. His amendment on the motion for going into committee of supply was literally a lengthy document, enumerating grievances affecting the entire social framework of the country; and the bare idea that the House of Commons was at once to sit down and entertain them all was to suppose that a revolution had taken place. And, though Mr. Sharman Crawford is not only a good but an able man, he is not an Atlas, and cannot carry a whole world at once upon his back. Let him learn a lesson from the story of "little David." When the shepherd-boy proposed to go forth against Goliath, they put Saul's armour upon him, and crippled his energy and power. Flinging it off, he ran out in his natural garb, carrying only a scrip and a sling; and with one little stone he brought the monster to the ground.

MEETINGS.

WEEKLY AGGREGATE MEETING OF THE LEAGUE AT COVENT GARDEN THEATRE.

On Thursday evening last, the third metropolitan meeting of the League for the present year was held at Covent Garden Theatre, every part of which spacious building was again filled to overflowing a few minutes after the opening of the doors, while hundreds, eagerly desirous of obtaining admittance to these now far-famed and interesting gatherings, were unable to get beyond the avenues. The reception of Messrs. Cobden and Villiers was enthusiastic in the extreme, marking the high estimation of the members of the League for the services of those gentlemen. To the great disappointment of the meeting, Mr. Moore, who had been advertised as one of the speakers, was prevented from addressing them owing to the circumstance of the previous addresses having exhausted the allotted time. The speeches of Mr. Villiers and Mr. Cobden, high as the reputation of those hon. gentlemen stands, were of a more than usual degree of excellence, combining the most brilliant eloquence, with the most cogent argument, probably ever presented to any assembly.

W. Hutt, Esq., M.P.; Dr. W. Drury; S. Coleby, Esq.; G. Ridout, Esq.; George Wilson, chairman; Hon. C. P. Villiers, M.P.; Richard Cobden, Esq., M.P.; Thomas Milner Gibson, Esq., M.P.; Sir Wm. Baynes, Bart.; R. R. Moore, Esq.; George Moffatt, Esq.; Richard Moffatt, Esq.; John Potter, Esq., Manchester; Richard Baxter, Esq.; F. Ricardo, Esq.; R. L. Tweedale, Esq.; F. H. Toone, Esq.; John Egan, Esq.; R. W. Cole, Esq.; J. T. Norris, Esq.; John Williams, Esq.; P. Wells, Esq.; M. B. Sampson, Esq.; S. Lees, Esq.; Manchester; J. E. Parry, Esq., North Devon; J. B. Smith, Esq., Manchester; C. W. Squarey, Esq., Salisbury; A. T. Squarey, Esq., do.; Crosby, Liverpool; Bridges Harvey, Esq.; J. Brotherton, Esq.; Cowden Clarke, Esq.; General Sir De Laey, Esq., K.C.B.; W. A. Wilkinson, Esq.; Samuel Lucas, Esq.; Ralph Ricardo, Esq.; William Leaf, Esq.; J. P. Burnard, Esq.; — Foster, Esq.; John Lyon, Esq.; Jos. Ivimey, Esq.; Richard Napier, Esq.; J. Coppock, Esq.; Dr. Cooke Taylor; D. Dewar, Esq.; P. A. Taylor, Esq.; — Keeling, Esq.; Thos. Hodgkin, Esq.; J. D. Cummins, Esq.; A. Patteson, Esq.; P. H. Leighton, Esq.; Arthur Adams, Esq.; John M'Leod, Esq.; Joseph Fletcher, Esq.; — Andrews, Esq.; — Hemmant, Esq.; Leeds; Alexander Morris, Esq.; George Moore, Esq.; Thos. Harbottle, Esq., Manchester; Charles Lattimore, Esq., Wheat-hampstead, Herts; J. B. Scott, Esq., Manchester; W. Easton, Esq.; — Bow, Esq., Broughton, Manchester, &c. &c.

Upon the motion of W. LEAF, Esq., seconded by S. LEES, Esq., the minutes of the previous meeting (having been read by Mr. Saul) were unanimously confirmed.

The CHAIRMAN then came forward amid loud cheering, and said:—Ladies and Gentlemen, another week has rolled away, opening up and developing events which, although perhaps possessing no particular or striking character, will, notwithstanding, have an important influence upon this question at some future day. (Hear.) Parliament has been opened, and her Majesty's speech has been read in both Houses. I do not know whether any one here present expected that it would contain an announcement that the Corn Laws were to be abolished or were not (laughter); but, if he did, certainly he is doomed to great disappointment. (Hear.) The Premier stated, in his place in the House of Commons, that it was not his intention to make any alteration in the Corn Law; and the ministerial journals said that the announcement was received with loud cheers from "a great majority of the House of Commons." (Laughter.) Now, gentlemen, that such should be the fact, and yet that fact not by any means overwhelm us with astonishment or dismay, no one who has paid the slightest attention to this question, can for one moment wonder. We never expected Sir Robert Peel, as a great statesman, was going to put forth his hand to heal the wounds that monopoly will inflict and has inflicted on the industry of this country. We never conceived, that situated as he is,—placed in power by the very party who now tell him that they will remove him from his place the moment he abuses the confidence they have reposed in him,—we never supposed that when he was pledged to maintain their interests intact, watched and guarded as he is on every hand, all his "speeches learned and conned by rote," to cast into his teeth, if any change should take place,—under these circumstances we never anticipated that Sir Robert Peel could at the present time come forward and abolish the Corn Law. Gentlemen, the right hon. baronet has consented to serve his party, a faction which a single word from him could shatter into a thousand fragments in a moment; he has agreed to become the instrument of a party which distrusts him, and which places no reliance on his word, as you may gather from the protection journals, and the speeches made at the protection meetings; and yet he consents to be the tool of this party. (Hear.) Gentlemen, it will not be long, I trust, before another party will rise up in this country, which, strong in truth, will be able to put aside the monopolizing factions which have ruled it for so many ages. (Cheers.) Monopoly is a hard task-master: it spares neither young nor old, rich nor poor; it will not suffer Sir Robert Peel to escape its venom if he consents to serve it and become its willing instrument, any more than it will spare you who are its most unwilling victims; it has no respect for talent, however great and commanding; it exacts from all, high and low, rich and poor,—all who contribute to swell its enormous gain—and it makes no restitution on account of the poor and the defenceless according to the principles of mercy. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, the monopolists—the rent leaguers—have, no doubt, been well satisfied with the declaration in Parliament of the Premier, and yet they have, notwithstanding, turned their attention to us, and have had their field-day in the country. We have had the tenant-farmers' farce acted over and over again during the present week: we have seen how suddenly that respectable body have become conversant with literature; how anxious they are to engage in correspondence with their brother tenant-farmers in all parts of the kingdom. At the same time we have remarked that they have no complaints to make at these meetings; we have heard of "special burdens on land," but there appears to be no burden which the farmers complain of,—neither rent, tithe, tenure, nor anything, we might naturally conclude, affected them; all the expressions we have heard at these meetings are denunciations against the National Anti-Corn-Law League. (Laughter.) Why, gentlemen, the thing is very well managed—extremely so; it is well dressed up for stage effect; but it will scarcely pass muster for all that. (Hear, hear.) The hand is the hand of Esau, whose ever else may be presented for examination. Why, strip any one of these meetings of its false colours, and see what it is; take the speakers from the platform, remove the landlords, lawyers, parsons, land stewards, bailiffs, auctioneers, and those interested in maintaining the question, and then present the real tenant-farmers, and give us really the names of those among them who have set the wheels in motion which has governed the movement which is now existing in this country. Gentlemen, we know better. We have had letters from all parts of the country, giving us accurate information relative to these proceedings; we know the real extent of these boasted meetings. Nine out of every ten of them are scarcely worth notice in consequence of the paucity of numbers and character of the individuals attending them. I have a letter in my pocket which I will not trouble the meeting by reading, but which gives an account of a meeting in Lincolnshire, at which it was stated in a London morning paper that about one hundred tenant-farmers were present. Now, the writer of this letter, who was himself present, says that he counted the persons in the room, who altogether amounted to forty-nine. Of this number two were clergymen, five lawyers (laughter), six publicans, four butchers, one banker, two reporters, and the writer of this letter, all, of course, set down as "tenant-farmers." (Loud laughter.) The speakers were gentlemen who had taken an interest in the meeting held the previous day in a distant part of the country; the chairman was a gentleman who then moved the first resolution, and here took the chair on this the following day. (Laughter.) There was a general change in the persons, and it transpired in the room, from some one of their party more indiscreet than the rest, that it was thought better that this arrangement should take place, in order that it might appear to be another meeting. (Renewed laughter.) Gentlemen, that is a fair sample of the Anti-League meetings of which you see such glowing descriptions in the newspapers. (Hear.) The landlords and squire are not satisfied with the majority in the House of Commons, nor with their still greater preponderance in the House of Peers; but they are obliged now, in acknowledgment of the power of the League, to prepare against the next general election. (Hear, hear.) They know well enough that, deprive their agitation of the name of a political question, and let the counties, like the boroughs, the landlords are in a minority. (Hear.) Gentlemen, since we last met there has been an election for the borough of Devizes. Now, I dare say most of you are aware under what circumstances that contest took place. Sir Francis Burdett, the member for North Wiltshire, died; Mr. Sotherton, the representative for Devizes—anticipating no opposition to his return for that division of the county, and knowing that the borough which he then represented was as close and compact as any in the kingdom (hear)—preferred vacating his seat for Devizes, and standing for North Wiltshire. A requisition was consequently got up to Mr. Bruges, requesting him to stand for the latter place, and signed, as it was said, by nearly two-thirds of the electors. The writ was moved for in the House of Commons, and the earliest possible day appointed for the election to take place. Well, now, under ordinary circumstances, it would have been one of the most absurd things in the world to talk of contesting Devizes; but not so under the present state of things. Mr. Temple, a gentleman well known in his profession, of which he is a leading member—a Queen's counsel—looking at the state of affairs at Devizes, said, "Stop, gentlemen, not quite so fast! You, Mr. Bruges, may have a majority of electors pledged to support you; you may, moreover, have made your arrangements under the expectation of being elected without opposition, and of returning thanks to the electors upon your success; but you shall contest this borough notwithstanding. (Loud cheers.) Two-thirds of the electors may be pledged to support you at the hustings and the poll, but, if there are twenty good men and true in Devizes, I will take the responsibility of meeting you at the day of nomination, and explaining my opinions in reference to the question of Free Trade to the constituency, and abiding the result." (Cheers.) Gentlemen, Mr. Temple stood for Devizes, and lost, as he expected; but then good seed has been sown there; monopolists have learned that, if we contest such a place as Devizes, most assuredly we shall not suffer those boroughs to escape us where we are much more likely to have support than in this close, compact borough in the middle of North Wiltshire—Devizes. (Loud cheers.) Gentlemen, we shall contest all boroughs. (Loud cheers.) The Monopolists may have a Devizes vacant next week, and next week a Mr. Temple will be found to contest that borough on the principle of Free Trade. (Cheers.) We know what was the case at Durham, at Walsall, and at Stockport on the first election; and yet time rolled on, and the electors of Durham in three months, and those of Walsall in six months, returned to the charge, and sent to Parliament advocates of Free Trade who had been rejected at the previous elections. (Loud cheers.) Gentlemen, since we met last a number of meetings have taken place in some of the smaller towns of Yorkshire and Lancashire, where considerable sums have been received for the League fund. I shall not name those meetings to-night; but there is one, however, which, with your permission, I will just allude to. On Monday last a public meeting was held in the Town Hall of Birmingham, to receive a deputation from the Council of the National Anti-Corn-Law League; the meeting was open to all; it was held in the middle of the day, in the magnificent Town-hall of that borough; and some 4000 people attended. Mr. Cobden, Col. Thompson, and Mr. Moore addressed the meeting, and upwards of £850 were collected in the room towards the great League fund. (Cheers.) Birmingham has, therefore, taken up her fair position and joined the other towns which are now allied together, composing the "National Anti-Corn-Law League." (Cheers.) This is another proof of our progress. Last year our subscriptions from Birmingham did not amount to one-third of the sum which they do at this time. (Hear.) This year in all probability that town will contribute £2000 to the League fund. We point to this as a proof of our progress; we show everywhere an independent local effort which is springing up in support of the League. We would not deceive ourselves, over estimating our own strength and under estimating the power of those who are banded together by class interest against us; but this we know, that the time is gradually approaching when the commerce of this country shall be unfettered, and the labour of the people receive its just reward. (Loud cheers.)

The CHAIRMAN then called upon

Mr. VILLIERS, M.P., who, upon coming forward, was received with enthusiastic and prolonged cheering, said—When I see the number in which you have collected in this great building, further to consider and to mark your unshaken interest in this great matter about which we are assembled, I do agree with the Chairman that there is little reason for dismay at the new and would-be threatening attitude which our opponents have recently assumed. (Hear, hear.) I agree with those who see only advantage to our cause in their proceedings, for if that cause be based on truth, why should we fear its general discussion, which our opponents are inviting to it? (Hear.) I bear them no ill-will; but, if I did, I should certainly not rejoice the less at their proceedings (hear); for if it be true that those who are doomed by Heaven are by the same power made foolish first, I think this recent move gives evidence of their doom (laughter), for I think they are really doing what they ought most to avoid. They are disclosing what it were much their interest to conceal; they are making themselves known to the country (laughter); they are showing thousands who were ignorant before who they were, and what they were, for whom these great sacrifices of the commerce, the industry, wealth, and greatness of the country have been, and are yet being made (laughter); they are showing what qualities of public spirit, of high feeling, and intelligence they possess to entitle them to hold exclusive privilege for legislation (hear, hear), and what confidence they deserve for disinterestedness in that duty amongst those who dream of their possessing it before. ("Hear," and laughter.) They seem to forget how much of their power has root in the imaginations of men, and how they profit by the confusion which exists in some men's minds between what is great and what is good, and between the rich and the respectable. (Hear, hear.) Their extreme good fortune, and perhaps the defect of our constitution, give them a league ready formed in the two Houses of the Legislature. (Hear.) With this it seems they are not satisfied. In humble imitation of the League, which has been formed in self-defence, they have descended, as the Chairman said, into the field of public agitation, and have now fairly entered the lists of those whose course they have hitherto pretended to condemn. (Hear.) But I doubt much if they have the qualities for success. (Laughter.) The drone has not the properties of the other bee (hear); and I doubt their energy in such a struggle. They are strong in rank, strong in language (a laugh); and, unless monopoly has failed them more than we imagine, strong also in pecuniary means (hear); but strongest of all, I believe, they are in their imagination, if they fancy that they can, by mere bluster, and by no better weapon than vulgar diction, dissipate a power which has arisen from necessity and sense of wrong, and which receives its strength and spirit from that indomitable love of justice which did, and I trust in God ever will pervade our nation. (Loud cheers.) It is dangerous to prophesy, still I do predict that they will fail. (Hear.) They will, I know, puff themselves indignantly (a laugh); they will have to pay enormously (hear), and they will talk largely (laughter); and they may attempt some farther wrong upon the people; still I believe—for want of honesty of object, for want of faithfulness in their agents, for want of unity of purpose—they will first disagree and then disappear. (Cheers, and laughter.) Why is it now that they quit their post to agitate? Because I suspect they begin to mistrust all around them, and all whom, if their cause was decent, one should think, would rest attached to them. (Hear.) They mistrust the Minister they have made (cheers); they mistrust the members they have named (hear, hear); they have not really any faith in the farmer, though he occupies their land at will; and they do not expect, as in their hearts, perhaps, they know they do not deserve, much gratitude from their much bepraised but ill-fed, ill-housed labourer. (Cheers.) They feel the time is come when they must turn out themselves (laughter), and their flatterers tell them that, if they will but show themselves and speak, the League will vanish, and the tide of public feeling will recede. ("Hear," and laughter.) And these great men may now be seen sitting like the Danish King before the sea, declaring that the ocean's wave shall not roll on. (Cheers and laughter.) It is really a diverting scene to see these dukes and barons, in their waggons and their windows, teaching their tenants (what it seems their tenants have to learn), what good they have done them (cheers and laughter); how the Parliament has protected them (hear); how many friends they have (laughter); how prosperous they are (laughter); and what vast advantage will accrue to them from putting down the men who venture to dispute these things. ("Hear," and laughter.) It is wonderful that it should not strike these lords, that if these men had really been so favoured that they should not before have known it, and that it should require such especial screwing (as we know it has) to make them meet to hear it (laughter); but perhaps these lords had heard, what the League had certainly discovered, that these tenant-farmers were in the predicament that the enemies of monopoly had always said they would be, and that what had been predicted had occurred, that after this foolish law had injured every other class it would visit those for whose benefit it was pretended to be passed (hear, hear); and the fact is so. The League of late has been listened to by the farmers because they found they had been deceived, and they were puzzled to reply to the question which was put: "What good has the law done for you?" And vainly will these lords preach to them of their profit in this law unless they can prove what they say. (Hear.) The fact is, the landlords found that the whole machinery by which they maintain monopoly was getting out of sorts (laughter), and they deemed it necessary to put it in repair for work before the session. (Hear.) The party they most suspected was, it seems, the Steward of the State, him whom they call first Minister. (Laughter.) They would not, it seems, let him discover their mistrust of him himself, or learn for himself the conditions of his service; but they have in every market town and village posted him as one little to be trusted, accusing him of having wished the public good, and calling upon all faithful men to watch him for the future. (Laughter.) The members, too, who are named for counties by the few great families resident within them, have been summoned before their lords, and been cautioned for the future against the corrupting influence of this Minister. (Hear, hear, hear.) A purpose of these meetings, too, has been to lecture the farmers, and to direct them what to do in future. I see in Hertfordshire some lord has desired the farmers to show their teeth (laughter); and in Essex, I think the labourers are charged in future to speak out (laughter); though how the farmers showing their teeth will raise the price of wheat one does not see (laughter); and whether the labourers might not find some better use for their mouths than that of speaking out, I think is questionable. (Great laughter.) However, the object has been to put the whole concern in better trim, and, judging by the first night of the session, one would think they had succeeded (laughter):—it seemed to work well. All the cracks through which a little public good could have leaked out seem to have been stopped with care (laughter); and they say they are satisfied. I think it is some foreign writer who calls the British constitution the finest taxing machine in Europe (laughter); he should have mentioned its merit also for monopoly, and seen it lately in all its glory. It seems that, if by the action of monopoly the people are prevented paying taxes indirectly to the state, there is what is called a vigour in the constitution to extract the deficit directly from their income (hear, hear); and if the country just escapes convulsion from the double action of taxes and monopoly, there is assurance in the Minister to congratulate the country on its healthy state, and revival of its business here. But if the people venture to cry out against monopoly as the cause of their privation and increased taxation, what is it the monopolists don't say? I have here, I think, some squire's speech that was given to me as I entered the theatre; yes, here it is; he is describing the objects of the League, which he says are like those of the Corresponding Society, in Pitt's time, which was originated by the bloody Jacobins of France; and these men (meaning the League) were the great-grandchildren of these bloody fellows. (Loud laughter.) They wished to destroy the landlord in order to pick the pocket of the tenant, and then to send the labourer to the devil. (Great laughter.) This is moderate, however, compared to what I have read, for I think at most of the meetings they have called the complaints against the Corn Laws as nothing less than blasphemy. (A laugh.) They have not the simplicity in their mode of expressing the same idea as the Brahmins in India were said to have shown when the Christian missionaries went first among that people: they did not denounce them as false teachers or blasphemers, as perhaps they might have been allowed to do; but they simply complained to the Government that men had come among them who would, if they succeeded, upset their rice-pots. (Loud laughter.) The Brahmins were paid by the people in rice, and they foresaw that if the Hindoos were to turn Christians, they should lose their pot of rice; and they expressed thus simply what they feared. (Laughter.) The only approach I have seen to this simple way of expressing the real ground of fear was in the circular which I think has been sent round in Norfolk, where the nobility, gentry, and clergy were invited to attend a meeting for the purpose of resisting the League, whose doctrines, it said, if successful, would reduce wheat from 18s. to 12s. a coomb ("hear," and laughter); in which, I expect, is what consists the blasphemy of the doctrine (laughter), but against which, I think, they will not get many to pray. (Hear.) I rather doubt if they will be able to resist it either; for they have a question to solve which I see is already puzzling some, namely, whether they can legislate against food without legislating against the discussion of the Corn Law? (Hear.) Some think not, I see, and consequently twenty-eight petitions were presented from the great men in Lincolnshire, praying of Government to stop the League. (Oh, oh.) Others think they can do without this, and that by their own sweet voices they can charm the plague away (laughter); in which they will succeed about as well as the clergyman, in a parish in the West, I heard of the other day, whom the wise people used to call up at night when the wind blew high, to read a chapter from the Bible to stay the storm. (Laughter.) However, gentlemen, whatever the views of these folks may be with respect to us, I believe we are here of one mind with respect to ourselves (hear), that the League is not to be put down, and to determine, in reply to their resolution not to abandon one iota of their protection, not to surrender one atom of our principle. (Very loud cheering.) Our proceedings are perfectly legal, and no Minister dares yet to stop free discussion in England. (Cheers.) What we have to do, in consequence of their proceedings, is to use fresh energy and exertion (hear, hear), and to avail ourselves of all the advantage which they have conferred upon us by exciting universal attention to our arguments. (Cheers.) Amongst the chief things that I have to thank them for, is for having cleared and narrowed the ground upon which we are respectively to take our stand. (Hear, hear, hear.) It was a difficulty which I always felt I had in discussion, that I never knew exactly what they intended to rest their case upon. It was sometimes one thing, and sometimes another; but luckily, as they have got more confident, they have got more clear (hear); and, now that they have an organ which they recognise as such, it is not difficult to discover their views and intentions. (Hear.) For this purpose I sometimes turn to the columns of the Morning Post (laughter), and on the day before this meeting I found an article announcing, as if to remove all doubt on the matter during the coming session, what it was that the landowners did claim; and this paper must be considered as of some authority, as I see that at all their meetings they pass a resolution of thanks for its past and faithful services. (Laughter.) Now I learn from this article what they consider to be the duty and interest of farmers and landlords. In the first place, they consider that the business of the farmer is to resist the hypothesis, that any supply from abroad is necessary (laughter); which is convenient no doubt. (Laughter.) Then it is said what the duty of the landlord is; and that too, is clear, for they say it is to take care of his own interest. (Laughter.) And then it is stated what the right of the agriculturist is; and that is to the monopoly of supplying England with food, provided they be able. (Laughter.) And the policy of the sliding scale is founded on this hypothesis: they say that in ordinary times the country wants no food from abroad, and ought not to have any. (Laughter.) Now this is all clear: it is the bold definition of their claim, unencumbered with any vague verbiage of protecting native industry, or of finding means of feeding some millions of people who rejoice in something short of good and wholesome food (hear); it is the bare enunciation of the claim to monopoly, and the mode of maintaining it. But it would not be just to say that they have not considered the consequences that we apprehend from monopoly, and say arise from it; they have considered them, and they have an answer to all objections. If we say that it tends to diminish the revenue, they point to the income-tax as the means of supplying the deficiency in case of need; if we say that it tends to injure the foreign trade, they say it is a blessing to do so, that it is overgrown, and that it should be curtailed (laughter); if we talk of the ruin it will bring upon the manufacturing districts, they have an answer to that, for they say that if they were all engulfed in one common ruin, England would be as great, if not greater, than she had ever been before ("oh," and "shame"): which views, I presume, satisfy their scruples, if they have any, as to the evil monopoly produces. They have also, it seems, considered the subject of agricultural improvement, and I must say that, very consistently, this journal always sneers at this; they say that the object of monopoly is to keep up price, that the effect of improvement would be to increase quantity, and, as that would be followed by fall of price, the same results which they apprehend from importation would then ensue from improvement. Now, what they want is to keep up price, and nobody ever has discovered a way of doing that but by limiting quantity; and, therefore, they see no interest to the landlord in anything that would occasion a fall of price (hear): then they have often said, what doubtless is true, that these improvements require money, that the farmer has got none (laughter), and that the landlord has something else to do with his than to lend him any. (Hear.) Indeed, a Conservative gentleman the other day, in Yorkshire, who made a speech on this subject, stated that the country gentlemen generally saved their loose money to provide for their younger children, after having provided for the eldest, and that they had none to spare for other purposes (hear): thus it is clear that the object of the law is monopoly in food, that its effects can only be felt by making it scarce and dear, and that this is to be accomplished by the sliding scale (hear); and that the Ministry whom the agriculturists will support is the one who would with most subservient support the sliding scale. (Hear, hear.) If I mistake not they have at length found a Ministry that will suit their purpose. I judge that from the good will the real organ of the Government seems now to have towards them; for it was only two days ago that the Morning Herald, which is in official communication with the Government, suggested to the monopolists the way by which they could best secure their monopoly and obtain the adherence of those who might be interested against it, namely, by instantly instituting a rigid system of exclusive dealing. ("Shame," and "Oh.") This was suggested only two days ago, and in effect is this, that if any unfortunate tradesman should venture to have or to express an opinion unfavourable to the sliding scale, he should have all custom withdrawn from him, and perhaps be ruined. (Shame.) He might be a good tradesman, a good man, working hard to rear his family, punctual in all his payments, a good citizen and a good neighbour; still, if he venture to think the scale an injury to commerce, or if, brought in contact with the misery and suffering of the poor, he thought the Corn Laws unchristian laws, this organ of the Government advises that he be marked for the purposes of persecution in his business. (Loud cries of "Hear," and "Shame.") Such is the way in which it is proposed to uphold the monopoly, with its objects and effects as I have described them. (Hear, hear.) This is the mode prescribed by the party who pretend to wish to uphold the morality of the people, to be more pious than their neighbours, who would build more churches if they could get more money, and who, if it were proposed to give the poor tradesman the protection of the ballot as the means of guarding him against this tyranny, profess to object to it on the ground that they desired to uphold a manly and independent spirit among the people. (Loud cheers.) If the system is attempted, I do trust there will be from one corner of the country to the other, one universal cry in favour of the ballot. (Loud cheers.) The Free-Trade party is a powerful one in the country, and they might retaliate; but I would never recommend so vile and odious a tyranny to be resorted to. (Loud cheers.) A man has a right to his opinion whatever it may be, and it is a violent invasion of that right to attempt to injure him in his business on account of his opinion. (Loud cheers.) I only trusted, when our friends heard of the odious practices to which our opponents were resorting, that such would have the effect of redoubling their energies in favour of the cause. (Cheers.) But I would never recommend any other course of influencing opinion save that of fair reasoning: by that means we have already made great progress, and by perseverance in it we shall succeed. (Hear, hear, hear.) Notwithstanding the twaddle spoken at these meetings, we have obtained from every public man of any note in the country the admission that Free Trade is just and wise, and would benefit mankind if universally applied (hear); we have now to conquer the scruples which men honestly and otherwise profess to have to their application. Many of these pretexts have already been exposed, so that they cannot be repeated. There is one, however, that appears to be peculiarly in favour this year, which it might be well to notice, though I did not scruple to say that, of all others, it is the most absurd, and is ludicrously inconsistent with the fact; that the debt presents an obstacle to the repeal of the Corn Laws. Now, in the first place, it is notorious that corn is not taxed at all for revenue, and pious peers turn up their eyes in the House of Lords, and thank Heaven that it never has been. (Laughter.) Well, then, it would not injure the revenue in that way; but many other things are taxed for revenue which people in general consume; yet as food must be paid for first, their means of consuming the articles that are taxed just depend upon how much people have left to pay for food; so that, in fact, it is just in proportion as food is cheap that these articles may be expected to yield more or less revenue. (Hear.) This is what Mr. Huskisson meant by warning the landlords in his last speech in the House of Commons, that they could not maintain the revenue and the Corn Laws together, that the circumstances of the people did not admit of it: he said, the people were exposed to great rivalry abroad, that their wages were reduced, that the cost of living here was very high, and that unless the people earned more or paid less for food, they could not consume taxed articles to the extent they had. (Hear.) And I suppose it seldom happens that any prediction of any public man was so speedily verified as this which fell from Mr. Huskisson; for shortly after he died there was a succession of good and bad harvests that did precisely illustrate the truth and justice of what he had said. I will just call your attention to it, that you may see clearly the effect of abundance and scarcity upon the revenue. The three years of good harvests were 1835, 1836, 1837, and the three years of bad harvests 1838, 1839, 1840; the price of wheat in the good years was 47s., and the price in the bad year was 67s. Now, the revenue collected during the three cheap years was £159,851,000, and the revenue collected during the three dear years was, notwithstanding the increase of the population by one million, only £159,210,000. But was the falling off owing to diminished consumption? That is proved by the decline in the customs and excise. In the cheap years the revenue from these sources was £117,000,000, in the dear years £116,300,000; and it is also shown in the particular articles which were less consumed: for instance, malt, spirits, tea, and sugar yielded in the cheap years £31,800,000, in the dear years £49,200,000; thus showing a clear connexion between the means of consumption and the high price of food. (Hear, hear.) But let me name another calculation which has been made, and has not been disputed, which is—what the increased population would have given to the revenue had they consumed in the dear years as much as they consumed in the cheap years. It is shown to have been £2,300,000. Now, what is worth attending to, is the annual deficit which Sir Robert Peel proposed the income-tax to meet: it was £2,334,000 (hear, hear, hear); so that the deficit was actually only £31,000 more than the deficit occasioned by the diminished consumption of the people in the dear years. (Cheers.) Now, I mention this to show you the justice of what we said at the time, and continue to assert, that but for the Corn Laws the income-tax need not have been imposed (hear), and that it was imposed because, as Mr. Huskisson said, it was impossible to maintain Corn Laws and public credit too without fresh taxation on income or property. (hear, hear); and I want you to see what is the connexion between the high and the low price of food, and the good or bad condition of a dense and crowded community like our own, and not to look at it merely financially,—when you will observe not only that the revenue always increases when food is cheap, and declines when food is dear,—but you will also find that crime, pauperism, disease, and mortality, all diminish in years of abundance and increase in years of scarcity. (Hear, hear.) And this is peculiarly important in order fairly to appreciate the advantage of getting rid of these Corn Laws (hear); for what is it that we call for when we ask for a repeal of the Corn Laws? Why, that there may be a constant good harvest. (Cheers.) We want that there shall always be abundance of food (hear), and that all those consequences which we observe to follow from a good harvest may be permanent and present among us. (Loud cheers.) And is there any doubt that this might be the case? Do our opponents deny it? No; it is their case that it would be so; it is their fear that there would be abundance (hear); they keep their law to prevent it; they know there is plenty to be had, and that we have by our manufactures the means of getting it. (Cheers.) I shall never forget my astonishment, at hearing a county member read a letter in the House, proving that a most prosperous trade would and might be carried on between this country and the United States, and detailing facts furnished him by a merchant that left no doubt in any body's mind of the fact, and hearing him use this information not to recommend the trade being thrown open, but as a threat to Sir Robert Peel of what might happen if he was to persevere in the principle of the tariff. ("Hear, hear;" "Oh, shame!") Why, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said last year, that whenever the harvest was good, the Treasury was replenished from the Exchequer. (Hear.) Mr. Gladstone said, that if we were to have a trade in food, it would give great employment to our people in producing articles to exchange for it; and Sir Robert Peel said, that if we were to reduce the price of provisions the people would not feel the income-tax (cheers); and thus it is that while the evil of a growing population deteriorating in condition is universally recognised, the remedy for the evil is as well known; but to enrich a section of the community it is refused to be applied. (Hear.) And I ask if it is not something like a mockery for those men who do these things to pretend to have any sympathy with the sufferings of the people, to pretend to be solicitous for their wellbeing, or think that the public wanted to be cautioned about maintaining public faith. (Cheers.) Why, when was it that the people wanted to cheat the public creditor? (Hear, hear, hear.) The people want only to be allowed to pursue their industry unshackled, which, by its effects in adding to the resources of the country, is the best security for the creditor. (Cheers.) The people do not want to be dishonest or idle (hear); they only implore those who govern to let them be the contrary. (Cheers.) The Duke of Richmond, the other day, said at the Sussex meeting that the advocates of Free Trade, after they had succeeded in their object, would seek to defraud the public creditor. The Duke of Richmond had not the slightest ground for this calumny. (Cheers.) The creditor is much more likely to be in danger from persons of his class than the honest and industrious classes who call for their trade to be set free. (Cheers.) They are the people whom I should fear most if I was the public creditor. (Hear, hear.) This charge, moreover, comes with a bad grace from the Duke of Richmond, considering that the only time that the public faith was ever questioned, was when a measure of this kind was proposed by a Government of which he was a member. (Hear, hear.) There was a contract made with the creditor, at the time the debt was incurred, that the transfer of stock should never be taxed; but when the Duke of Richmond was in the Cabinet the proposition to tax the transfer was made. I do not say it was his plan, but it was considered by men in the City to be a breach of faith. He is the last man, therefore, to bring this charge against those who have never offered the slightest ground for it. (Cheers.) But the manner in which these great people are talking of the commercial and productive classes seems to me to provoke inquiry into the relative merits of the different classes as regards their importance to the country, and no man can doubt in whose favour the decision would be given. (Hear.) To the enterprise, skill, and industry of the productive classes the greatness of this country is entirely owing (cheers), and an attack upon them by those who have inherited their property, who live idly, and who do nothing to add to the greatness, wealth, or power of the country, is, to say the least of it, most unreasonable. (Cheers.) I wish the aristocracy of this country had more to point to of which the country could be proud, during the undisputed rule they have had for a century and a half in this country; but they have engaged the nation in more foolish and fruitless wars than any sovereigns before them; their schemes of policy have all been proved to be wrong, and they have wasted the resources of the country more than all their possessions put together could redeem. (Hear, hear.) They are now making most fearful experiments upon the temper and endurance of the nation, by maintaining this monopoly; they are doing it with their eyes open, and the community are perfectly alive to what they are doing, and should any confusion ever arise springing from want and the necessities of the people, there will be little doubt as to whom the blame must attach. (Hear, hear.) It is certain that scarcity will again occur, and that when it does the population will be increased and the destitution more extended. (Hear.) Since the Corn Laws have been passed, every five years there has been a crisis arising from scarcity of food, and upon each occasion the danger to the peace and order of the country has been greater. (Hear.) We were never nearer confusion than in 1842; and I leave you to judge what will be the effect of the next dearth that may arise, when the people will be more numerous, their intelligence perhaps greater, and impatience for political power much more intense. (Hear, hear.) I say, let any man reflect upon these things, and if he has any stake in the country, if he has those within his home for whom he cares, and if he has any sense of public duty, let him say whether a responsibility does not attach to him individually to leave nothing untried, and nothing undone, to procure the removal of such a cause of present evil and future danger as these laws. (Loud cheers.) If any man mistrusts his own judgment, or those who are prominent in this matter, let him see the authorities by which our opinions against these laws are fortified; let him mark the conclusion to which every man who has thought most on the condition of this country as to the danger with which it is threatened, and see if they do not point to the increasing numbers of the people, and their want of employment; and let him then say if any sane or sober man can justify any obstruction deliberately being cast in the way of the people getting employment or honestly exchanging the product of their labour for food. (Cheers.) However, the landlords have declared the issue upon which this struggle shall be taken, that is—monopoly or no monopoly: I say no monopoly, and no surrender (tremendous cheers); and I believe that the people will succeed because they are neither powerless, spiritless, nor slavish. (The hon. gentleman sat down amidst loud and general cheering, which was continued most enthusiastically for some minutes, the whole audience rising, and waving their hats and handkerchiefs from every part of the house.)

Mr. CONNEN, on presenting himself, was received with most enthusiastic cheering, and waving of hats and handkerchiefs, which prevented the hon. member for several minutes from proceeding; silence having been at length obtained, he addressed the meeting as follows:—Mr. Chairman, Ladies, and Gentlemen,—Since I last had the pleasure of meeting you here, I have had the honour of addressing many large assemblies of my fellow countrymen; but I can assure you I return to this magnificent gathering with increased surprise and gratification at the ardour and enthusiasm that I see to prevail in the Metropolis. I am told that we are favoured this night with the attendance of many visitors who are neither very well informed, nor, of course, very much convinced on our question. Now, will you, who sit on the front form in our seminary, condescend to make a little allowance if I give to these young pupils a lesson in the elementary principles of Free Trade, and endeavour to send them away as efficient missionaries as doubtless you have been in our cause. Well, then, I hope our good friends the reporters will spare their fingers that they may not convict me of tautology. We will begin at the beginning. Now, we are "Free-Traders;" and what is Free Trade? Not the pulling down of all custom-houses, as some of our wise opponents the dukes and earls have lately been trying to persuade the agricultural labourers; I should think it would do with nobody else. By Free Trade we mean the abolition of all protective duties. It is very possible that our children, or at all events their offspring, may be wise enough to dispense with custom-house duties altogether. (Cheers.) They may think it prudent and economical to raise their revenues by direct taxation, without circumventing their foreign trade. We do not propose to do that; but there are a class of men who have taken possession of the Custom-house, and have installed their clerks there, to collect revenue for their own particular benefit, and we intend to remove them out of the Custom-house. (Cheers.) Now, I want to impress on our new friends, these students in Free Trade, to remind them of that which I have frequently dwelt upon, and which cannot be too often repeated, that this system of monopoly is analogous in every respect to that which existed 250 years ago under the Tudors and the Stuarts, when sovereigns granted monopolies to the creatures of their courts for the exclusive sale of wine, leather, salt, and other things, and which system our forefathers, at great labour and heavy sacrifice, utterly extirpated. One by one these monopolies were abolished; and, not content with destroying the existing monopolies, they passed a law which became as it were a fundamental principle in our constitution, that no sovereign, thenceforth or for ever, should have the power of granting a monopoly to anybody for the exclusive sale of any necessary commodity of life. Now, what I want to impress on our young learners is this, that that which sovereigns cannot do, a band of men united together—the selfish oligarchy of the sugar-hogshead and the flour-sack—have got together in the House of Commons, and by their own acts of Parliament have appropriated to their own classes the very privileges, the selfsame monopolies, or monopolies as injurious in every respect to the interests of the people as those monopolies were which our forefathers abolished two centuries and a half ago. (Cheers.) There is no difference whatever in the effect of a monopoly in the sale of sugar held by a few men, the owners of those specks of land in the West Indies (for "specks" they are compared with the South American continent, the East Indies, Siam, China, the Indian Archipelago, and those other countries from which sugar might be supplied); there is no earthly difference in its effect on the community, whether a body of men in London take to themselves a monopoly in the sale of sugar, or whether Queen Victoria granted that monopoly to one of the noblemen of her court. (Loud cheers.) Well, our forefathers abolished this system; at a time, too, mark you, when the sign manual of the sovereign had somewhat of a divine sanction and superstitious reverence in the minds of the people. And shall we, the descendants of those men, be found so degenerate, so unworthy of the blood that flows in our veins, so recreant to the very name of "Englishmen," that we should not shake off this incubus laid on us as it is by a body of our fellow citizens? (Loud cheer.) I believe some of our visitors here to-night are of what is called "the agricultural interest." They are probably curious to know why it is that we, professing to be Free Traders in everything, should restrict the title of our association to that of "THE NATIONAL ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE." I will explain the reason. We advocate the abolition of the Corn Law, because we believe that to be the foster-parent of all other monopolies; and if we destroy that—the parent, the monster monopoly—it will save us the trouble of devouring up all the rest. (Cheers.) We have had now, for more than twenty years, a succession of cabinets every one of them claiming the merit in the eyes of the people of England of being Free-Trade Administrations; from the year 1823, when Mr. Huskisson proposed his extensive changes in our commercial system,—when he became installed, as it were, the very lion of the aristocratic coteries of London, as a Free Trader—a Free Trader in silks and ribbons, French lace, and the like—from that time to this we have never wanted a Government willing to take the credit to themselves of being free traders. Why, if I wanted an argument to convince you that we are right in the title that we have taken, and the direction we have given to our agitation, I would show it in the conduct of Sir Robert Peel two years ago. He then boasted that he had propounded the largest measure of commercial reform of any Minister in this country; he brought in his tariff with an alteration of 500 or 600 articles therein. I looked over it again and again, expecting to find corn there, but was disappointed. The right hon. baronet was asked why corn was not there? and his reply was, "It has always been customary in this country to treat corn differently from every other item in the tariff." ("Hear, hear, and laughter.") In that significant reply of the Prime Minister do we find a justification for the title of our agitation, and the direction in which we carry it. You will have reform enough in colonial-asses, caviare, fiddlesticks, and other equally important matters; and you will have all those items very diligently attended to. Do you look after corn, and corn will take care of all the rest. (Loud cheers.) Thus have I told our new visitors what "Free Trade" means, and why we almost exclusively advocate the repeal of the Corn Laws, instead of taking a wider basis. Now, what are the objections alleged against the adoption of Free-Trade principles? First of all, take the most numerous body—the working class—by far the most important in the consideration of this question: probably nine-tenths of all the population of this country are dependent on labour, either the hard work of hands, or the equally hard toil of heads. I say, take their case first. We are told this system of restriction is for the benefit of the labourers. We are informed by the earls, dukes, and the squires, that the price of corn regulates the rate of wages; and that, if we reduce the price of corn by a free trade in that article, we shall only bring down the rate of wages. Now, I see a good many working people in this assembly, and would ask them whether, in any bargain ever made for labour in London, the question of corn or its price was ever made an element in that agreement? (Loud cries of "No, no.") Why, look at your hackney-coach and watermen's fares, and at your ticket-porters' charges. Your own corporation, in their by-laws and acts of Parliament regulating the wages of a variety of labourers in this metropolis, have been strangely oblivious of this sliding scale of corn, when they have fixed a permanent rate of wages. I think I have heard lately something about women who "Stitch—stitch—stitch!

For three halfpence a shirt."

(Cries of "Shame.") I want to know whether the wages of those poor creatures are regulated by the price of corn? (Cries of "No, no.") Why, I thought I had settled that matter, as far as regards the working man, at the time Sir Robert Peel brought in his Corn Bill two years ago. I then moved an amendment to this effect:—"Resolved, That before we proceed to pass a law having for its object to raise, artificially, the price of bread, it is expedient and just that we should first of all consider how far it is practicable to raise in proportion the wages of labourers in this country." I was determined I would stop that gap for the monopolists for ever; and accordingly I brought on my amendment; and was then informed by Sir Robert Peel,—"It is quite impossible we can fix the rate of wages in this country. Parliament has no power to settle the rate of wages; that must be settled by the competition of the world's market." (Hear.) I forced the monopolists to a division on this matter, determined that it should not be a sham motion, and we accordingly had a division. The right honourable baronet and all his friends walked out at one door, and I had some twenty or thirty who accompanied me out at the other. We had not been back again in the House five minutes before this body of innocents were busy passing a law to prevent the price of their corn being settled by "the competition of the world's market." (Loud cheers, and cries of "Shame.") I should not be surprised some night, perhaps when my friend Mr. Villiers brings forward his next motion, in going down to St. Stephen's, to see a bit of paper fixed to the door of that place with something of this kind written upon it: "Corn and cattle dealers to be found within. No competition allowed with the shop over the water." (Loud cheers and laughter.) Now, the first and greatest count in any indictment against the Corn Law is, that it is an injustice to the labourers of this and every other country. My next charge is, that it is a fraud against every man of capital engaged in any pursuit, and every person of fixed income not derived from land. I will take the trader. I am a manufacturer of clothing, and I do not know why in this climate, and in the artificial state of society in which we live, the making of clothes should not be as honourable—because it is pretty near as useful a pursuit as the manufacture of food. Well, did you ever hear any debates in the House to fix the price of my commodities in the market? Suppose we had a majority of cotton-printers (which happens to be my manufacture) in the House: and if we had a majority I have no doubt we should find Sir Robert Peel quite willing to do our work for us (laughter): he is the son of a cotton-printer, and I dare say he would do it for us as well as any one else. (Renewed laughter.) Let us suppose that you were reading the newspaper some fine morning, and saw an account of a majority of the House having been engaged the night before in fixing the price at which yard-wide prints should be sold (laughter); "yard-wide prints, of such a quality, 10d. a yard; of such a quality, 9d.; of such a quality, 8d.; of such a quality, 7d." and so on. Why, you would rub your eyes with astonishment! You would clear your spectacles, if you wore any, and you would doubt your own senses! The very boys in the streets leading to Parliament, and the cabmen and omnibus-drivers, would hoot and hiss us out of the metropolis! Now, did it ever occur to you that there is no earthly difference between a body of men, manufacturers of corn, sitting down in the House and passing a law enacting that wheat shall be so much, barley so much, beans so much, and oats so much? (Loud cheers.) Why, then, do you look at this monopoly of corn with such complacency? Simply because you and I and the rest of us have a superstitious reverence for the owners of those sluggish acres, and have a very small respect for ourselves and our own vocation. (Cheers.) I say the Corn-Law Monopolists, who arrogate to themselves power in the House of Commons, are practising an injustice on every other species of capitalists. Take the iron trade for example, a prodigious interest in this country. Iron of certain qualities has gone down in price during the last five or six years from £15 10s. to £5 10s. per ton. Men have seen their fortunes—say, I have known them—dwindle away from £300,000 till now they could not sit down and write their wills for £100,000. Well, did any man ever hear in the House of Commons an attempt made to raise a cry about these grievances there, or to lodge a complaint against the Government or the country because they could not keep up the price of iron? Has any man come forward there proposing that by some law pig-iron should be so much, and bar-iron of such a price, and other kinds of iron in proportion? No; neither has this been the case with any other interest in the country. But how is it with corn? The very first night I was present in the House this session, I saw the Prime Minister get up, having a paper before him, and he was careful to tell us what the price of corn had been for the last fifty years, and what it was now. Why, he is employed for little else but as a kind of corn steward, to see how the prices may be kept up for his masters. (Cheers and laughter.) What are the grounds on which this system is maintained? The farmer is put forward, the interest of the farmer and the farm-labourer is put forward as the pretext for maintaining this monopoly. Why, I have heard the admission made at the agricultural meetings by landlords themselves, that there are twenty farmers bidding for every farm, and that they excuse themselves to the farmers at these very meetings that they let their land at the full value, and they cannot help it. It is not their fault because there are these twenty farmers bidding for every farm that is vacant. (Hear, hear, hear.) Now, I would ask you, or the merest tyro in this question, if there be twenty farmers bidding for every farm, and the law can raise the price of the produce of that farm, do you think that one out of those twenty farmers will get the benefit of that rise of price? Will not the other 19 take care that it is brought down by competition to the ordinary profit of stock in this country? (Hear.) The farmers have been too long deluded by the mere cry of "protection." We read of it now in every meeting—"protection to the farmers." It is destruction to the farmers. (Hear.) The word should be changed from "protection" to "destruction," and it would be better expressive of the effect of the Corn Law on the farmers. (Cheers.) With respect to the farm-labourers, our opponents tell us, that our object in bringing about the repeal of the Corn Laws is, by reducing the price of corn to lower the rate of their wages. (Laughter.) I can only answer upon this point for the manufacturing districts; but, as far as they are concerned, I state it most emphatically as a truth, that for the last twenty years whenever corn has been cheap wages have been high in Lancashire; and on the other hand, when bread has been dear wages have been greatly reduced. Now, I distinctly put this statement on record, and challenge any one to controvert it. (Hear.) Wages may possibly be affected by the price of food in the agricultural districts, and rise and fall in proportion; but if they do it is simply for this reason—that they have reached their minimum, or the point at which they verge towards what you might call slave labour, when a man gets in the best of times only as much will keep him in health. When corn rises equal food must be given to the labourer to eat, just upon the same principle as farmers or others give an equal quantity of corn to their horses in dear years as they do in periods of cheapness, in order that they may be maintained in health, and be equal to the amount of labour which is wanted of them. (Hear.) But whenever the value of labour rises and falls in the agricultural districts with the price of food, it must be because those wages have previously sunk to that point which is next in degree to the wages which slaves obtain for their labour. Now, let me be fully understood as to what Free Traders really do want. We do not want cheap corn merely in order that we may have low money prices. (Hear.) What we desire is plenty of corn, and we are utterly careless what its price is, provided we obtain it at the natural price. (Cheers.) All we ask is this, that corn shall follow the same law which the monopolists in food admit follow labour; that "it shall find its natural level in the markets of the world." And now what would be the process of this equalization of prices? I think I can give you the rationale of it. The effect of free trade in corn will be this: It would increase the demand for agricultural produce in Poland, Germany, and America. That increase in the demand for agricultural produce would give rise to an increased demand for labour in those countries, which would tend to raise the wages of the agricultural labourers. The effect of that would be to draw away labourers from manufactures in all those places. To pay for that corn more manufactures would be required from this country; this would lead to an increased demand for labour in the manufacturing districts, which would necessarily be attended with a rise of wages in order that the goods might be made for the purpose of exchanging for the corn brought from abroad. (Hear.) Whether prices would be equalised, according to the opinion expressed by my Lord Spencer, by a rise in the price of bread abroad to the level at which it is here, or whether it would be by a fall in the prices here to the level at which they now exist on the Continent, would not make the least earthly difference to the Free-Traders; all they ask is, that they shall be put in the same position with others, and that there should be no bar or hindrance to the admission of food from any quarter into this country. (Cheers.) I observe there are narrow-minded men in the agricultural districts, telling us, "Oh, if you allow Free Trade, and bring in a quarter of corn from abroad, it is quite clear that you will sell one quarter less in England." Those men, fellow-countrymen, who utter such nonsense as this, are a sample of the philosophers who are now governing this country. (Loud cheers.) What! I would ask, if you can set more people to work at better wages—if you can clear your streets of those spectres which are now haunting your thoroughfares begging their daily bread—if you can depopulate your workhouses, and clear off that 2,000,000 of pauperism which now exists in the land, and put them to work at productive industry—do you not think that they would consume some of the wheat as well as you; and may not they by millions be, as we are now, consumers of wheaten bread instead of the poor miserable dietary they now have? (Tremendous cheers.) Mark me: these philosophical men, so profoundly ignorant of what is immediately around them, but who meet us at every turn with prophecies of what is going to happen in future, will tell us forsooth that Free Trade will throw their land out of cultivation, and deprive their labourers of employment. Now, we put against the prophecies of these selfish, ignorant beings the predictions of the most eminent and skilful in agriculture in this land; I will take my Lord Ducie, who confessedly stands at the head of the arable farmers of this country, and my Lord Spencer, who is admitted to be the first of the grazing farmers of England; I will take the biggest headed and shrewdest farmers and tenants in every county; and if the monopolists will give me a committee of the House of Commons, which I intend to move for, they shall be examined before it; and these practical men will, every one of them, predict what I have also predicted (although I claim to be no authority), that, with free trade in corn, so far from throwing land out of use or injuring the cultivation of the poorer soils, free trade in corn is the very way to increase the production at home, and stimulate the cultivation of the poorer soils by compelling the application of more capital and labour to them. (Loud cheers.) We do not contemplate deriving one quarter less corn from the soil of this country; we do not anticipate having one pound less of butter or cheese, or one head less of cattle or sheep; we expect to have a great increase in the production and the consumption at home; and all we contend for is this, that when we, the people here, have purchased all that can be raised at home, they shall be allowed to go 3000 miles—to Poland, Russia, or America—for more; and that there shall be no let or hindrance put in the way of their getting this additional quantity. Now, we are met by the monopolists with this objection:—"If you have a free trade in corn foreigners will send you their wheat here, but they will take nothing in return. (Laughter.) The argument employed, in fact, amounts to this, if it amounts to anything—That they will give us their corn for nothing. (Hear, hear, hear.) I know not what can exceed the absurdity of these men, if they be honest, or their shallow and transparent knavery, if they be dishonest, in putting forward such an argument as that. If there be a child here I will give him a lesson that he may go home and laugh to scorn those who thus talk about reciprocity, and they shall be able to make fools-caps and bonfires of the articles in the Morning Post or Herald. Now, I will illustrate that point. I will take the case of a tailor living in one of your streets, and a provision-dealer living in another, and this busybody of a reciprocity-man lives somewhere between the two. He sees this tailor going every Saturday night empty-handed to the provision-dealer, and bringing home upon his shoulder a side of bacon, under one arm a cheese, and under the other a keg of butter. Well, this reciprocity-man, being always a busybody, takes the alarm, and says, "There is a one-sided trade going on there, I must look after it." He calls on the tailor, and says, "This is a strange trade you are doing! You are importing largely from that provision-dealer, but I do not find that you are exporting any cloths, or coats, or waistcoats in return?" The tailor answers him, "If you feel any alarm at this, ask the provision-dealer about it: I am all right at all events." (Laughter.) Away goes the reciprocity gentleman to the provision-shop, and says, "I see you are doing a very strange business with that tailor; you are exporting largely provisions, but I do not see that you import any clothes from him: how do you get paid?" "Why, man, how should I?" replies the provision-dealer, "in gold and silver to be sure!" Then the reciprocity-man is seized with another crotchet, and forthwith begins to talk about the drain of bullion. (Laughter.) Away he flies to the tailor, and says, "Why, you will be ruined entirely! What a drain is, the precious metals is going on from your till! That provision-dealer takes no clothes from you: he will have nothing but gold and silver for his goods." "Ay, man," replies the tailor, "and where do you think I get the gold and silver from? Why, I sell my clothes to the grocer, the hatter, the bookseller, the cabinetmaker, and one hundred others, and they pay me in gold and silver. And pray, Mr. Busybody, what would you have me to do with it? Do you think my wife and family would grow very fat on gold and silver?" (Laughter.) Now, if there is any little girl or boy in this assembly, I hope they will go home, and for exercise write out that illustration of reciprocity, and show it to any of their friends who may be seized with this crotchet respecting reciprocity and the drain of gold, and see if they cannot laugh themselves out of their delusions. (Cheers.) Well, now my friend, Mr. Villiers, has alluded to the subject of revenue. I need not go into that point, for he has completely exhausted it; but it was a most imprudent pretence which the monopolists set up, and set up in the face of the income-tax, levied upon us, as it were, to be a scourge of thorns to remind us of our sins of ignorance, and our neglect of our interests. To think of their having the impudence to put it out to us, with this fact, not staring in our faces, but visiting us in our pockets; to think that this should ever be advanced again—that the monopolists keep up the revenue—is to me the most monstrous piece of impudence I ever heard of in my life! Now, we want the farmers to understand precisely what the National Anti-Corn-Law League is, and what its objects are. We are not going to allow the landlords to carry off the farmers with the old stale watchword and thereabout arguments again. Why, they had not any thing new to offer them, and, therefore, they have started this about the revenue; their agitators are all the old hacks over again; there has not been even a young aristocrat come forward to show a modicum of talent in support of the system. There they are! the same men and the same arguments, and the whole being summed up in "protection." That word "protection," reminds me of another word that was used by a character in the "Vicar of Wakefield," I mean Mr. Jenkinson, who, if ever he wanted to take in anybody, had some talk to them about the "cosmogony" of the world; and with that word he took in poor Moses with his green spectacles, and actually imposed upon poor Dr. Primrose himself in the same way. Now, this "protection" is, to my ear, very much like the "cosmogony" of good Mr. Jenkinson; and I think the men who use it, have just about as honest objects in view as Mr. Jenkinson had. (Cheers and laughter.) I do not like to turn these meetings into sordid assemblies, for we are too majestic a body to sordid any person; but I do like, if possible, to extract a little amusement out of our opponents in this matter; and certainly, when I look through their speeches and read what they have been saying, I must confess I have had more laughter about these statements than this question has afforded me ever since we began our agitation five years ago. We are going to prepare a pamphlet—I am not sure whether it will not grow into a volume—of elegant extracts from monopolists' speeches! There shall be separate headings to the several extracts. One head shall be "argument;" another, "wit;" a third, "humour;" a fourth, "manners;" and a fifth, "morals;" and you shall see choice specimens of every one of them. There is one worthy gentleman, who, in speaking of the League, has given such a bouquet of flowers of oratory, that I think we ought to put him as frontispiece to this volume. (Laughter.) This gentleman in the course of about twenty lines manages to apply about as many abusive epithets to the League;—We are more "Jacobins," "Jonathan Wilds," and "Jack Sheppards." We are a "scratch pack of bounds," and he condescends to explain that that phrase means the odds and ends, or a pack collected from the whole county. The elegant gentleman winds up with the choice appellation of "ragamuffins" (loud laughter); that is the effusion of Sir Charles Knightley; and I think we must have his portrait for a frontispiece to our volume. (Renewed laughter.) I observe one noble lord has inquired very innocently, in alluding to our agitation, "What does all this bobbery mean?" (Laughter.) Now, they have let us into a secret in this agitation of theirs. We did not think—I am sure I did not—that there was so much titled ignorance or coroneted vulgarity in the land as I find there is. (Loud cheering.) I confess I did not expect to find the strongest argument come from such a source, but had hoped to meet with something like decency of manners! Why, who would belong to such a set? If that is the best language they can put on in public, what sort of talk must it be with them in private! (Loud cheers and laughter.) And then for violence—why, we were charged with violence at one time; and I really believe we used to be somewhat violent. Five years ago, when we began, we were small and insignificant, and very poor; fighting our way up in the world. We were really almost compelled to make a noise to attract a hearing. All small things, you know, are generally very noisy; it is the order of nature. See how the little dog barks at the stately steed as he goes along your streets; but the horse takes no notice of him. There was some excuse for us; our cause appeared a desperate one. Now, they must have an excuse, too, for their violence, and I suspect it is the very same we had—they feel their cause to be a desperate one. (Hear.) But I want, in this stage of our agitation, to impress on our friends the necessity of taking warning by the spectacles which our opponents now present, and that we should resolve not to imitate their bad example. Why, we have got up in the world; we can pay our way. (Cheers.) We have the nobles and the gentlemen of the land in our ranks, and we ought to be very decorous. We can afford to be condescending even. I should not wonder if we soon begin to ballot for members, and not admit people unless they happen to be "of the superior kind." Our opponents, I presume, intend to spend their money in something like the same way as we have expended ours,—that is, in giving lectures and distributing tracts. How I should like to attend one of their first meetings! Fancy a meeting like this! An orator introduced to deliver a magnificent—magniloquent I should say—lecture in behalf of starvation! Only think of his exordium and his peroration, with such an inspiring topic! We have heard much boasting of these meetings; we have been told that they are "farmers' meetings;" but we have not seen the names of any farmers who have made these vulgar speeches of which I have been speaking. Now, as having something like an hereditary right to identify myself with farmers, I do rejoice to say, that, in scanning over all the proceedings of these monopolist gatherings, I have not seen a single instance of vituperation, or anything approaching to vulgarity of language, on the part of the bona fide tenant-farmers. The monopolists of corn—the landlords—are the monopolists of all the vulgarity of language! (Cheers.) There have been one or two individuals paraded, who have been called "farmers," and who have made long speeches; but I have taken pains to inquire a little of their whereabouts, and I find that they are all auctioneers and land-valuers; and it is a remarkable fact, that I have never met with an orator at the meetings I have attended in the agricultural districts, but he has always turned out an auctioneer or a land-valuer. (Laughter.) The land-valuers are a body of men—I mean the land-valuers and auctioneers—who represent the landlord in his very worst aspect; they are persons that have an interest in this system which causes perpetual change and a constant rise in rent; for the more changes there are, or the more failures there are, the more valuing there is for the valuer, and the more selling there is for the auctioneer; and if you had a system by which prices were steadied, and leases were granted, the land-valuers and auctioneers would not be known in the land; in fact, they are a tribe hardly to be met with in Scotland at the present time. Now we expect our opponents will meet us fairly in this matter. We have avoided, although we have been often pressed to do so, interfering with any of their meetings. I hold it to be unjust in this country, when meetings are held avowedly upon one side of the question, to make a demonstration, that any body should go and interfere with such a meeting, or attempt to put counter resolutions. (Hear.) I say I hope they will deal fairly with us, but, judging by their conduct in past times, I do not expect they will. I know that monopolist money has been paid for the hire of men to attend and interrupt our meetings ever since we began our agitation. ("Hear," and loud cries of "Shame.") I am now suffering under a hoarseness from an encounter of this kind in the great Town-hall of Birmingham on Monday last. When I arrived in that town I found huge yellow placards posted all over the walls, the coat of which a printer there told me must have been many pounds, professing to emanate from the O'Connor Chartist agitators (hisses and groans), calling upon the working men to "assemble in all their might, and upset these mill tyrants, and drive them out of the town." Now it is remarkable that there was no printer's name to these placards, which there is every reason to suppose were imported from a distance. (Hear.) The Town-hall was thrown open. A fair public meeting had not been held in Birmingham for six years previously; and I was glad of an opportunity of making my first experiment upon the good sense of the working people of that district. (Cheers.) The magnificent building of which I have spoken was crammed, and four-fifths of the audience were working men; for it was in the morning of holiday Monday. About fifty men, however, of another description, were packed in the centre of that meeting. A most notorious individual was placed in the organ-loft by the side of us, who acted as fugleman to the rest. Their object evidently was to prevent the deputation of the League from being heard. While my friend Colonel Thompson—who is even hoarser than I am myself—was speaking, they kept up a continued clamour. (Cries of "Shame.") When my turn came I appealed to the 4000 working people, and asked them whether they would allow themselves to be tyrannized over by a handful of men, who, with liberty on their lips, had despotism at heart? (Loud and prolonged cheering.) In less than five minutes the most disorderly among them were removed from the hall; and the remainder, when they saw two or three of their number carried out by the working men, showed—what such fellows will always show—that they were as great cowards as they had previously shown they were bullies. (Renewed cheering.) They were as peaceable as mice in a church for the rest of the meeting; and I will venture to say, it is the last appearance of that body in the Town-hall of Birmingham. (Loud cheers.) I know that monopolist money in former times has been so spent and taken by men who have degraded the name they have borne—that is, men of a political party seeking for liberty. I reverence men in their honest efforts in seeking for freedom in any form; but I say that these persons have degraded the sacred name under which they have pretended to work. They have been for the last three years doing nothing but trying to help the aristocracy in maintaining the Corn Laws. (Hisses and groans.) I say look at their organ of the press, and perceive the character of its leading articles for the last two years. Has it been advocating the object for which it professed to be established to promote? No. The staple of its articles are just the counterpart of what you will find in the Morning Post. Look at its leaders—who are they? Men who are ever found trying to thwart us in our honest, single-minded effort to pull down this giant monopoly. Well, then, I say those men who have been hitherto paid for this work—though I admit that some of them have been fools enough to do the work for nothing—as they have been paid, I suspect that some of the money that has been raised recently by the monopolists will find its way into the same channel, and that there may be further attempts made of the kind I have alluded to. But I think a body that had the tenacity to come into this theatre with such an object would look twice before they made the essay. There may be an attempt made even to interrupt the orderly proceedings of these most important gatherings; for if these meetings continue, and are carried on with the same numbers, order, and decorum they are now, speaking a voice that is felt throughout Europe (hear),—yes, I know they are felt throughout Europe, and one of the first things inquired for when intelligent foreigners come here is to have an opportunity of seeing such unparalleled demonstrations (loud cheers),—I say, if these meetings continue, do you think it will be long before their influence will be found in another place whose locality will be nameless, not far from Parliament-street? Then, I say, fair play. Let every man follow his own bent in this free country—free at all events to hold meetings like this. Let every man attend his own meeting, call together his own, and promote whatever legitimate objects he pleases. We will neither intrude into the meetings of others, nor allow intrusion into ours. (Loud cheers.) If a meeting be held to take the sense of a district, it is the duty of every man to attend; and the votes should be taken to see what the sense of the majority of that district may be. Now, I give notice to the monopolists, that in all my meetings in their counties I invite all comers to oppose me; I will consider their doing so no intrusion. Talk of their meetings! Why, I have been in every county in which they have held them, and I have no hesitation in declaring, that for every hundred they have had gathered together I have had a thousand on every occasion. (Cheers.) Take their largest number—in Essex, where it is said they had 600 gathered—we had 6000 at Colchester! Ay, and I promise them that, when the weather comes that is favourable for open-air meeting, I will visit their counties again, and take the opinion of their population. (Loud cheers.) I call my meetings in the same place where their own high authorities always convene theirs—in the county towns, such as Winchester and Salisbury. I there gather ten times the number to hear me as at these recent meetings, where, perhaps, they may have ten dukes, fifteen earls, or a dozen members of Parliament. But when I have taken the sense of such meetings in favour of Free Trade, what have the Monopolists said upon the subject? That we have carried our resolutions merely by "the rabble of the towns." (Hear.) Now, mark this fact: I have observed in every instance that their own organs of the press declare that I am indebted to "the rabble of the town" for carrying my resolutions. But, now it is this same "rabble" which they pretend to tell us is opposed to the Anti-Corn-Law League! (Hear.) They throw it in our teeth that we are not supported by this very rabble, which they formerly said was our whole support at our open-air meetings. (Laughter.) They go down to Birmingham and hire fifty, certainly of the dirtiest and most unintelligent fellows they can find, and try to get them to break up the meeting, and then boast that "the rabble of the town," as they condescend to call them, are against us. (Loud cries of "Hear.") Now I will not disguise from you my opinion, that the time is approaching when it will require every effort on the part of Free Traders to carry out the objects which we have in view. I am not one who would, and I never did, underrate the power or the importance of our opponents. There is much work for us to do, but the work shall and will be done. (Immense cheering.) There are men now brought out by this very agitation in every borough and large town that I have visited—new men—not the old hacks of party, but persons drawn out with a solemn and earnest conviction, with a craving after justice and truth in this matter, who are diligently at work in every part of the kingdom; and though we were to be taken off this scene in which we have been, and are now most prominent, and were unable to continue its effort, the question has gone past that time at which it can recede, and it only requires that you should continue to disseminate the knowledge which you have, and increase the interest which is felt in London upon this subject, that this question will ultimately be brought to a triumphant issue. It cannot be carried pro or con by such insignificant boroughs as Devises. Give us the large constituencies,—give us, as we will have when another election comes (and you cannot carry this question without a dissolution), every borough in South Lancashire, and the West Riding of Yorkshire, give us Birmingham, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Leeds, Hull, Bristol, and all the large constituencies; give us Liverpool, ay, and give us London (tremendous applause).—and there is no Minister to be found who can maintain office to carry on a system of monopolies upon the strength of a mere numerical majority of the House of Commons, and by the aid of the representatives of such places as Devises or St. Alban's; there is no Minister who would dare to do it, though the monopolists would be glad to find their tool, if they could, in the full and united expression of opinion of the great constituencies of this kingdom; and from the moment that you are right in the Metropolis—and we are right in all the large towns—that moment the Corn Laws are repealed! (Loud cheers.) Now you have work to do in London. I observe that your beaten candidate, who I thought was silenced for ever, at one of his meetings, either himself or his chairman denominated those who voted for Mr. Pattison at the last election as "the rabble of the City." (Renewed laughter.) Now it so happens that I am entitled to register myself as a voter for the city of London, but have neglected so to do; but I intend at the next revision to register, in order that I may have the honour of joining that rabble which rejected Mr. Baring. (Cheers and laughter.) Now, gentlemen, be diligent in disseminating knowledge on this question. The repeal of the Corn Laws will be carried when men understand it. And when you understand it, if you are honest men, you will feel it; if you feel it at least as I have, you will not be able to be quiet without doing something to put down this great injustice. I exhort you each in your several circles to spread abroad light on this subject. Knowledge is the power—knowledge alone—by which we shall bring this foul system to the dust. (The hon. member concluded amidst the prolonged and enthusiastic cheering of the assembly.)

The CHAIRMAN then said, I have now the pleasure of calling upon General Sir De Lacy Evans.

General Sir De Lacy, on advancing towards the platform, was greeted with loud acclamation. He said:—Ladies and gentlemen, I dare say you are aware that it is not unusual with gentlemen of the medical profession occasionally to recommend to their patients a change of air, even to a worse air, and I believe it to be most undoubtedly upon that system that your chairman has recommended you to hear me on this occasion. (Cries of "No, no," and applause.) I am quite sure you will perceive that no person ever presented himself, at least in my own recollection, before such a great meeting as the present, under such a complete disadvantage as I do at this moment. After two such splendid speeches—speeches not merely eloquent but powerful in their reasoning, and convincing in every part and every passage—that I, a tyro, should be called upon to offer my humble observations to your attention, places me, I confess, in a very awkward position. But, however, I will not apologize, because, having been requested to address you by your excellent chairman, I feel it to be a duty incumbent upon me, however imperfect my observations may be, to offer a few remarks to the meeting. ("Hear" and cheers.) Gentlemen, when two parties are contending, either against each other or upon any great principle, you will very easily, after a very short time, discover a very manifest difference in their mode of contest. You will perceive that the one party, who may be absolutely right and have an honest cause, commences and continues upon the same principle and system, and arguing upon the same basis; while, upon the other hand, the opposing party, who may not have a good cause to support, will shuffle, will evade, and change their system of tactics, and assume various guises throughout the contest. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) Now, gentlemen, with regard to the party to whom we are opposed on this occasion; this has been made manifest. Not long since it was the fashion with our opponents to treat the supporters of Free Trade, and the Anti-Corn-Law League in particular, with contemptuous epithets and with derision—as a body not worth their consideration. That, however, has been materially changed, and now, gentlemen, soon after this you will have perceived that their advocates have adopted another tone: they have recommended to the agriculturists not to fear foreign competition, and to defy the Anti-Corn-Law League, if they will but go to school again and study agricultural chemistry, the art of sub-soiling, and the improvement of stock on their farms. (Laughter.) This was the system of tactics adopted last year by our opponents. In pursuing this system the First Lord of the Treasury was particularly distinguished, and, I believe, he recommended his friends in the county of Stafford to avail themselves of his offer of superior bulls (shouts of laughter), and other modes of improving their stock. (Hear, hear.) And with this description of argument the session passed away, and they were comforted and consoled under the advancing progress of the League. But, gentlemen, the League still continued to advance, and has carried its operations into the "bowels of the land"—into the innermost recesses of the agricultural districts. (Hear, hear.) The consequence is that at length they have taken the alarm—the tocsin has been sounded throughout those districts—and we now hear of agricultural dinners, and very violent speeches and great jokes, and great lords attending and expressing themselves in a manner not exceedingly polished with reference to the Anti-Corn-Law League. (Applause.) Well then, gentlemen, instead of continuing this system of comment upon the operations of the League, they have actually commenced to imitate or parody its proceedings. They have now commenced subscriptions, and they are determined to address the people on this subject. I confess I see no ground for alarm whatever in this altered state of the question: I believe that great advantages would arise to the further progress of this great cause by the contest which will now take place in point of argument between meetings of the agriculturists and those of the League. (Hear, hear.) I will not presume to test your patience by entering upon the fallacies—the obsolete fallacies—on which the changes will be rung at these meetings. (Hear, hear.) You have heard from Mr. Cobden (as he modestly termed it) the A B C of this great question, but which was indeed a summary of the great principles on which it rests. Gentlemen, among these fallacies one is the allegation of the heavy taxation under which this country suffers, and, therefore, the impossibility for the agriculturists of this country to compete with the lightly-taxed foreign producers. Why, gentlemen, if that be possible, it only offers a stronger reason why this country should not be subjected to additional taxation for the benefit of a particular class. (Hear, hear.) And then, gentlemen, with regard to our independence of foreigners. Is there anything on which we are independent, or on which we ought to be independent, unless it should be deemed advisable that we should hermetically close our ports and refuse all social intercourse with the rest of the world? (Hear, hear.) Is what consisted either the intellectual greatness or commercial prosperity of this or any other country, but in the general intercourse with the whole world, and in the very opposite of the present system. (Cheers.) Well, then, some tiemen, the old story about agricultural distress, of course, will be and has been adverted to; but if anything could prove the cause of Free Traders to be correct it is that of the agricultural distress, in other words, the distress of the farmers. If it be true that the farmers are in distress,—farmers. If it be true that I believe it is,—why, then, is it not clear that the system of protection does not benefit that class? They contend that the manufacturers make great fortunes, that many shopkeepers and artisans make a very handsome competence. Is not that a further proof, supposing it to be the case,—and to certain extent undoubtedly it is,—is not that a proof, I say, that the system which they now pursue is not beneficial to the farmers, whatever it may be to the landowners? (Hear, hear, hear.) Then there is the old topic, the right of protection. That also has been alluded to so ably that I feel it would be very presumptuous in me to dwell further upon it; but I would just merely say, that if the agriculturists have really a just right to protection, and to the happy expedient of the sliding-scale, by which that protection is to be attained, on what ground can it be contended that any other trade, or any other branch of the trading community, are not equally entitled to it with the landowner? (Loud cheers.) That has also been so admirably touched upon, that it would be absurd for me to dwell on it. But, supposing this to be the case, supposing that the right to protection is to be acknowledged as the proper course to be adopted, why, then, I say it cannot but be allowed that every branch of trade and of commerce is equally entitled to it. (Hear, hear.) Then, what is the consequence? Why, we should be entirely confined to the home trade; you would no longer have any maritime commerce; your three millions of tons of shipping would soon begin to rot in your harbours; your power of maintaining your colonies would cease; your intercourse, even with those colonies, would be precarious, as is the case with Spain, Portugal, and other countries which formerly had colonies, but which now, for the most part, have left them in consequence of this very system recommended by the great landowners of this country. (Hear, hear.) Then, gentlemen, as to the "wooden walls" of England: on what is it that these "wooden walls"—which, though a soldier, I, for my own part, must confess are the best practical defence of this country—on what is it that they rest? Why, on the great commercial trade of this country, which foreign trade alone promotes. (Cheers.) The agriculturists have lately found an ally on the other side of the Atlantic—a most appropriate ally indeed—we have seen this in the message of the Governor of Pennsylvania to the representatives of that state. You have all of you heard of Pennsylvania (laughter), and of the admirable letters of Mr. Sydney Smith with regard to the non-payment of their debts by the people of that state. (Hear, hear.) The Governor in that message certainly adopts, most distinctly and completely, the language of the monopolists of this country. He says that it would be quite impossible for Pennsylvania to abandon, without a struggle, the policy which she has preserved for the last half century of standing up for her own interests: that, to be sure, requires a little explanation. The message is a long one; but it appears that Pennsylvania produces iron and coal in considerable abundance, and the Governor recommends that the Pennsylvanians should insist that all the other states of America should be put under contribution to Pennsylvania, and should not admit the introduction of iron or coal from any other place than Pennsylvania. (Laughter.) Now this is a complete exemplification of the monopolist system of this country (cheers); and I do think that this new ally of the state of Pennsylvania is not a very creditable one to the monopolists of this country. (Hear.) The Governor continues to say Free Trade is a very benign thing, but quite impracticable. Now, gentlemen, is this merely a theory, and not practicable? Why, it does not rest upon theory or even upon argument, because the small approximation made to Free Trade a few years back proves the case as completely as possible—for instance, in the articles of coffee and wool. It is not twenty years since relaxations in the duty took place in the article of coffee. A monopoly in coffee was given to our West India planters, and we were not allowed even to drink coffee grown in our West India settlements; and Mr. Huskisson, after great efforts and difficulties, within twenty years back obtained some relaxations from the landlords in the House of Lords and the House of Commons in that article, and reduced the duties very considerably, indeed to about one-half. (Hear.) What has been the consequence? That by the reduction of the duties alluded to the consumption has been increased three and four fold, and the duty, which was 1s. 6d. per pound at that time, is now only 6d., and the revenue arising therefrom instead of being £450,000 is now £900,000. (Cheers.) That is a practical view of the case. (Hear.) The same took place with regard to wool. There were protective duties to a high amount placed on wool, but some relaxations were obtained by great effort, and these landowners, who were especially interested with regard to wool, gave way; and now the consequence is, that the consumption of wool has been largely increased; the revenue has also been largely increased by the reduction of duty, and that which of all things they apprehend with regard to corn (for they say corn will be so cheap they will not have a remunerating price), although the consumption has been trebled, the price has been reduced; so that no loss has been sustained by the consumer, and the public at large have derived most manifest advantage from this partial approximation to Free Trade. (Cheers.) Another, and a very striking proof, or case, exists with regard to the alteration which has taken place with reference to our trade with France; and that touches on the subject of reciprocity. There are one or two able men who have thought fit to write a good deal in support of the crotchet of reciprocity, but I do think the case with regard to France, if there was no other argument, sets aside the question: it is this, that we commenced within the last twelve years, I believe in 1831, a reduction in the duties on imports from France, and, in order to give the exemplification with better force, the French Government have rather increased the impediments to force trade against us; but, notwithstanding the increase of duties on the part of the French, the relaxations made by the British Cabinet have had the effect of increasing our trade within twelve years from £600,000 per annum, in respect of imports, to £3,000,000 (loud cheers), being fivefold; and one of the most extraordinary advances in trade under such difficulties purely attributable to the slight approximation to Free-Trade principles which have been adopted by the Government. (Cheers.) There is another practical exemplification of it, and a very grievous one it is. The proprietors of the sugar plantations in the West Indies, unfortunately for those who consume sugar, have had a great many seats in the House of Commons, and I believe some in the House of Lords, and they have been a powerful body, to whom the Ministry found it convenient to be extremely polite. (Hear, hear.) And with regard to sugar, they have actually refused those relaxations which have been applied for by the advocates of Free Trade, and what is the consequence? The quantity of sugar introduced into this country for consumption, taking some sixteen or eighteen years back, and comparing it with the present time, the quantity now consumed is about the same, and the duty rather less; and, during that period, the population of the country has increased some six or seven millions. (Hear, hear.) What is the inference from this, but that in consequence of maintaining the monopoly of sugar, and continuing the differential duty of 150 per cent. against foreign sugar in favour of these monopolists, one-third less sugar is consumed by nearly every one of the humbler families of this country. (Hear, hear.) You may be well assured of this, that the great landowners are not under the necessity of diminishing such consumption, and it entirely falls on the great body of the working people, who are absolutely, in consequence of this fact, obliged to consume one-third less of that agreeable commodity than they did twenty years ago. (Cheers.) These four articles alone contain a complete illustration and proof of the case. [Some slight interruption occurred at this point of the hon. member's address.] The gallant general continued:—Gentlemen, I feel I must claim your indulgence: I feel the difficulty of following the two great and able gentlemen who preceded me. (Hear, hear.) I have only one or two observations further:—(One of these agricultural orators, I don't know whether he was a clerical or a legal gentleman, but it was the same who said some time back that some six or eight millions of the population of this empire rejoice in subsisting on potatoes (laughter); this same individual, within the last week of his orations, says:—"Does cheap corn contribute to produce happiness? I doubt it (he says); for if it did that country, namely, Poland, in which, of all the countries of Europe, corn is cheapest, would undoubtedly be the happiest, but, unfortunately (he continues), it is well known that the Poles are the most miserable and most wretched in their condition of any of the people of Europe." Now, gentlemen, it is not cheap corn that the advocates of Free Trade contend for: it is abundance of corn and abundance of employment to enable them to purchase corn, which is the thing sought for; so that I think it was rather an unhappy allusion on the part of the speaker to the condition of Poland, for if there be one thing more true than another, it is this—that the miserable condition, both materially and politically, of the people of Poland is directly attributable to the dominion of the landocracy, such as that which now, though to a much less extent, undoubtedly oppresses the energies and commerce of this country. (Loud cheers.) I will not detain you further than to add, that I am one of those, of whom I dare say there are many in this meeting, who have felt with regret that a certain degree of apathy existed in the public mind on political subjects during the last few years (hear, hear): knowing, however, that it is attributable to the disappointment felt by a great portion of the public as to the results of the efforts made for Parliamentary Reform. (Hear, hear.) But, gentlemen, there is now a great organized body formed; they have made progress in this great cause, and there is not the least doubt but they have justice on their side. It is no theory, but a positive fact that they advocate; and I do venture to think, whatever the efforts of the 30,000 landlords of this country may be, that the farmers and labourers will, ere long, discover and become instructed on the real merits of this question; and that they will find this is a contest to retain rack-rents, and not a contest for the benefit of the farmers or their labourers. (Hear, hear.) I do venture to think that, however authoritative these great dukes and lords may be, and however bullying they may be in their tone, the middle classes of this country will, on this occasion, maintain with constancy and vigour the great contest in which they have engaged, and that it ultimately must and will triumph. (The gallant general sat down amid loud cheers.)

The CHAIRMAN: We have a little exceeded our time this evening, but I am quite sure that the highly intellectual trend which we have had will render any apology from me needless on this occasion. (Loud cries of "Moore" from all parts of the theatre.) Mr. Moore was announced to address this meeting along with the other gentlemen who have addressed it so ably to-night; but you are well aware that the most difficult thing in conducting public proceedings of this description is to know when such speakers should leave off, what length of time each should occupy, and how much should be assigned to each, in order that the subject might be well expounded. (Applause.) Mr. Moore will, therefore, have the goodness to delay his address until this day fortnight, the earliest possible day he can appear in London, and on that occasion I hope those gentlemen who are so anxious to hear him will avail themselves of the opportunity. (Cheers.)

The next weekly meeting will be held in this theatre as usual, when Mr. Fox and other speakers will have the honour to address it.

The immense assemblage then retired.

METROPOLITAN ANTI-CORN-LAW ASSOCIATION.

A meeting of the chairman and most influential members of the Metropolitan Anti-Corn-Law Association took place on Monday at the Central Office, 68, Cheap-side, for the purpose of taking into consideration a plan of operations suggested by the parent committee, to be immediately acted upon. There was a numerous attendance. P. A. Taylor, Esq., took the chair. Amongst the gentlemen present were Ralph Ricardo, Esq., W. A. Wilkinson, Esq., George Beacon, Esq., T. F. Gibson, Esq., &c. &c.

The CHAIRMAN said, that, after having prepared the way for the National Anti-Corn-Law League, the Metropolitan Association had for a time receded from the ground which had since been so ably filled by the League, but that great body had recently, at least to a certain extent, changed their mode of action, directing their energies to increasing the number of their friends in the House of Commons through the medium of a strict and close attention to the registration. It was now the duty of their associations to attend to this business in the metropolis, and, with a view to carry out this object most effectively, the parent committee had prepared a plan which he would now lay before them. Their able chairman, Mr. Francis Place, was absent, he feared, from indisposition; and their secretary, Mr. Sidney Smith, was now in Wiltshire, assisting, with other of their friends, in the return of a Free-Trade member for Devon. (Hear, hear.)

The plan of practical operation, which was embodied in a report, was then read. (Report extracted in page 1.)

The CHAIRMAN said that the exact mode pointed out might not be the most proper to be adopted in every district, but their friends in the different localities were the most competent to judge how far the details were applicable in their own neighbourhoods. In the city of London they had collected the names of the most influential persons and friends of Free Trade in the several wards, and earnestly invited their co-operation in their own wards in bodies, and tendering them every assistance in their power. (Hear, hear.) By attending vigilantly to the registration, they would be prepared at any moment to enter into a contest to return for the city of London four Free-Trade members. (Hear.) They had undertaken (what was never before attempted) to complete an alphabetical list of all the voters in the City. This effort involved much labour and expense; but they, notwithstanding, anticipated a successful termination to their labour in a few weeks. (Cheers.)

Mr. COATES, in commenting upon the working out of the plan, said that there were thousands of individuals in the Tower Hamlets and other districts who inhabited rooms and portions of a house, of which the landlords paid the taxes, who were entitled to a vote if they resided in one place a twelvemonth. That fact should be generally known, and, if it were, he was sure that their movement would have many more supporters amongst the poorer classes, who were chiefly affected by the pressure of the Corn Laws. (Hear, hear.) He congratulated the committee on the very efficient plan they had suggested. He feared, however, some collision between the registration societies already existing and the new associations proposed. He thought it advisable, if possible, that they should be amalgamated and act together. (Hear.)

After some further observations from members present, Mr. SOUTH MORAN moved that the plan now read be adopted, printed, and circulated without delay amongst the metropolitan constituencies.

Mr. TODD seconded the motion, which was agreed to unanimously.

Thanks were voted to the chairman, and the meeting separated.—Morning Chronicle.

BIRMINGHAM.

BIRMINGHAM, Monday Evening, Six o'clock.

One of the most important meetings held in this town during the last six years has just terminated. In my last communication I informed you that a highly respectable committee had been appointed for the purpose of making arrangements to receive a deputation from the League, and raise subscriptions for the support of that body. Since that time several efforts have been made to procure the attendance of these gentlemen, but, owing to their various engagements, they could not attend before the meeting of Parliament. Last week, however, it was communicated to the committee that Messrs. Cobden, Bright, Colonel Thompson, and Mr. Moore would attend a meeting to-day, if one could be conveniently held. The committee accordingly lost no time in posting the town, and on Friday large bills, announcing the meeting, were circulated, and great interest existed to hear these gentlemen, who have so eminently distinguished themselves as the advocates of Free Trade, which we are so deeply interested in in this borough. The Tories and their agents were not, however, idle. Some gentlemen, said to have arrived in Birmingham from an adjoining town, issued large counter posters, denouncing the League, the factory tyrants, and calling upon the men of Birmingham to attend on Monday at the Town-hall and do their duty. This bill, however, although it had no printer's name attached, betrayed fully the source from whence it emanated, and the committee accordingly made arrangements to meet the threatened opposition. This morning another bill, of which the following is a copy, appeared, and it was fully expected that the meeting would be finally upset by clamour and confusion:—

"MEN OF BIRMINGHAM."

"It has ever been the policy of the agents of the League to impugn the motives of the Chartists, and assail their conduct as stimulated by the Tories for factious purposes."

"We, the Chartist Committee, elected at a public meeting held at the Hall of Science, to watch over the interests of the people's cause, deem it our duty, therefore, to repudiate all sympathy with either Tory tyrants or factory tyrants, believing that every class who deny us, the working men, a voice in the government of our country are enemies, whatever they may pretend. Fellow-workmen, we are slaves, and neither the Tories nor the League will make us freemen. Poverty and misfortune follow us from the cradle to the grave, though the industry is ours which produces the endless wealth possessed by our oppressors. Shall we allow our wives and children to sink in misery? Shall we allow our judgment to be warped by loud pretensions from the holy struggle for substantial justice? That justice which will give to every working man a power, through the laws of our country, to protect his industry, both from plundering nobility and the tyrannising, griping master. Go to the Town hall, and demand for every speaker a fair hearing. No factious opposition, no disturbance; demand fair play; and listen patiently, and judge for yourselves. We have appointed Mr. Mason to represent our opinions; truth and justice must triumph. The Charter, and no surrender."

At eleven, George White, one of the leading Chartists, entered the organ gallery, and was received with loud cheers by about twenty or thirty of his friends in the body of the hall, and hissing by others. A scene of confusion ensued, and it was fully evident that a party had taken possession of a portion of the hall, determined on interrupting the proceedings. In a short time after, W. Smith, Esq., C. Geech, Esq., C. Clifford, Esq., Mr. Cobden, M.P., Col. Thompson, and Mr. Moore, entered the gallery and were received with loud cheers and hissing. Mr. Smith said he had been appointed by the committee to take the chair on that occasion, and he would put it to the meeting to say whether he should do so or not. An immense show of hands was exhibited in favour of Mr. Smith taking the chair, upon which he did so. Mr. White moved that Mr. Saunders, a working man, should take the chair, but only a few hands were held up, and Mr. Smith proceeded to address the meeting in a very powerful speech, amidst the hissing and hootings of a few, and the counter cheers of the meeting. At the conclusion of his speech Colonel Thompson came forward, and was received with groans and hissing by the same party. He, however, obtained a hearing, and laid it on the party who had misled themselves for the occasion. At the conclusion of his speech it became evident that the opposing party were only a handful, that the thousands assembled were favourable to the meeting, and that it only required perseverance to enable the promoters of the meeting to carry their object. Mr. White, finding he could not be heard, left the hall, amidst great confusion, after which Mr. Cobden addressed the meeting at great length, and with his usual ability. It was attempted to put him down by hissing and hooting, but the party from whom the interruption came being clearly so small, Mr. Cobden demanded to know, would the assembled thousands be trampled upon by some dozen men sent in for the occasion? A general burst of indignation was raised at the interruption, and the people in the body of the hall at once proceeded to eject by force a few who disturbed the meeting. This done, Mr. Cobden resumed, and fresh interruption arising, the parties were put out of the hall, until the place became as perfectly silent as possible, and the proceedings were carried on without the shadow of interruption till the close, when a subscription of £850 was raised in half an hour, after which the meeting broke up. The hall was densely crowded, and the town has given, by this day's proceedings, the most unqualified support to the League.—Morning Chronicle.

Earl Spencer has declined to accede to the modest request of the Spalding Association for the Protection of Agriculture, to resign his office as President of the Royal Agricultural Society in England.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE £100,000 FUND.

Subscriptions received during the week ending Wednesday, February 7, 1844.

N.B. As the subscription list is made up from Wednesday to Wednesday, contributions received on Thursdays and Fridays are not published in the LEAGUE of the Saturday immediately succeeding, but are included in the list of the week following.

| | | | | | |
|---|---------|--|--------|--|--------|
| Richard Wyles, Court-street, Faversham | £1 0 0 | John Frost, 3, Holt Town, Manchester | £1 0 0 | Henry Javan, 8, Upper Copenhagen-street, Islington | £0 2 6 |
| Rev. J. H. Rook, Partridge-lane, do. | 0 2 6 | Peter Newton, Mount-street, Ancoats, do. | 0 0 0 | H. Baker, 3, Lawrence-lane, City | 1 0 0 |
| C. Horns, Coal Exchange-quay, do. | 1 0 0 | A. Orpen, do., do. | 0 0 0 | Anderson, Hober, and Co., Hambro' | 1 0 0 |
| S. Brown, Preston-street, do. | 0 2 6 | Small subscriptions at Newton's Works, Ancoats, do. | 0 5 6 | Per Mr. { G. and T. Thorp, Clapham Rise | 1 0 0 |
| T. Barrow, West-street, do. | 0 2 6 | Jonathan Thompson, Peru-street, Bradford | 0 5 0 | Tracy, { John Taylor, carpet warehouse, 80, St. | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Denham, Osprings-road, do. | 0 2 6 | Henry Crowther, do., do. | 1 0 0 | John-street-road | 1 0 0 |
| Edward Frost, do. | 0 5 0 | Thomas Law, Chapel-street, do. | 1 0 0 | Henry Morley, 17, Grosvenor-street, Eaton-square | 1 0 0 |
| H. Boulding, (a sacrifice to principle,) do. | 0 5 0 | Wm. Jones, Store-street, Manchester | 10 0 0 | A Friend to the Cause | 1 0 0 |
| Literary Institution, Tanners' Arms, Tanner-st., do. | 1 1 0 | Diethelm and Gaddam, Pool-street, do. | 10 0 0 | Mr. Baddington, St. John-street | 1 0 0 |
| E. Watson, West-street, do. | 1 0 0 | Joseph Flockton, 26, Oxford-street, do. | 1 0 0 | Augustus Lines, 3, Irongate Wharf, Paddington | 1 0 0 |
| A Friend, per H. Bolden, do. | 1 0 0 | Hay, Nish, and McKend, 27, Oxford-street, do. | 1 0 0 | S. K., 40, Henry-street, Pentonville | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Hills, sen., Standard-road, do. | 1 0 0 | Jas. Pearson, 93, Great Ancoats-street, do. | 1 0 0 | Colonel Salway, Egham Park, Surrey | 10 0 0 |
| Vincent Hills, Abbey-street, do. | 0 10 0 | J. Boardman, Queen's Arms, Bradford, near do. | 1 0 0 | T. C. | 0 10 0 |
| John Dwyer, West-street, do. | 0 10 0 | T. Parkinson, 81 A, Market-street, do. | 0 2 6 | James Grant, 71, Cheapside | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend, do. | 0 5 0 | J. Boden, 18, Great Ducie-street, do. | 0 2 6 | George Enoch, 12, Park-place, Regent's Park | 0 5 0 |
| No Monopoly, do. | 0 10 0 | Small sum | 0 1 0 | Wm. Lestowgon, 24, Eagle-street, Red Lion-square | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend, do. | 0 5 0 | J. Lister, 24, Frederick-street, Regent's Park | 0 2 6 | Mr. Brady, 9, White Conduit-street | 1 0 0 |
| A Free Trader, do. | 0 5 0 | J. B. Simonds, 9, Great College-street, Camden-town | 1 0 0 | A Small Farmer | 0 2 6 |
| J. Waterman, West-street, do. | 0 2 6 | John Webber, 1, Brewer-street, Golden-square | 1 0 0 | Edward Jeffries, Hillmorton, near Calne | 1 0 0 |
| George Baker, Abbey-street, do. | 0 2 6 | William Bowerman, 28, New-street-square | 0 2 3 | Captain Duberley, Gainea, St. Neot's | 50 0 0 |
| A Wellisher, do. | 0 2 6 | William Saunders, Chapel-street, Islington | 0 2 6 | A. K., Hackney-road | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend, do. | 0 2 6 | Contribution from Chester in postage heads | 0 1 0 | M. Green | 0 2 6 |
| Richard Ladd, West-street, do. | 0 2 6 | Mrs. Nelms, Maldstone | 1 0 0 | A Lancashire Witch | 0 2 6 |
| A. B., do. | 0 2 6 | A Free Trader | 0 1 0 | A Juvenile | 0 1 0 |
| X. Y. Z., do. | 0 2 6 | Rev. Robert Ashton, Putney | 1 0 0 | Mr. Pearson's weavers, Bolton | 1 1 0 |
| A Friend, do. | 0 5 0 | J. Crosthwaite | 0 10 0 | E. Beck, Isleworth | 0 10 0 |
| Geo. Higginbotham, Ashton-under-Lyne, near Man- | 20 0 0 | O. H. | 0 2 6 | William Scholes, Hightown, near Leeds | 1 0 0 |
| John Purdom, Hawick, N.B. | 1 0 0 | Archibald Black, 18, Queen-street, May-fair | 2 0 0 | Michael Spedding, Batley, near | 1 0 0 |
| John Barlow, pawnbroker, Wallgate, Wigan, Lanca- | 1 0 0 | Rev. James Edwards, Brighton | 1 0 0 | Matthew Parker, do. | 0 10 0 |
| shire | 1 1 0 | Richard Warwick, Wyddington House, Cheltenham | 1 0 0 | Thomas Lee, Hick-lane Mill, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Adam Gee, Heywood, Lancashire | 1 1 0 | Thomas Heath, 44, Holywell-street | 0 2 6 | John Ward, Batley Carr, near | 0 5 0 |
| E. Binney, 52, Pall-mall, Manchester | 2 0 0 | H. Wilkinson, 15, Manchester-buildings | 1 1 0 | George Robinson, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Thos. Maddock, tanner, Knutsford, Cheshire | 1 0 0 | Thos. King, West Mill, Colinton, near Edinburgh | 1 0 0 | Peter Hepleston, Batley | 0 5 0 |
| James Hall, Hall's-place, do. | 1 0 0 | Thomas Brown, Ironmonger, Maryport | 1 0 0 | Widow Sheard, Wilton Arms, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Go on and prosper | 0 3 0 | Daniel Harrison, Price-st., Birkenhead, near Liverpool | 1 0 0 | George Wainwright, do. | 0 1 0 |
| Wm. Webb, Esq., Mayor of Hereford | 5 5 0 | George Watson, grocer, Whitehaven | 1 0 0 | John Burnley, of Batley, for the men in his | 2 0 0 |
| Mr. Harrison, Bye-street, Hereford | 1 0 0 | Richard Thompson, 3, Mersey View, Birkenhead, near | 1 0 0 | employ | 2 0 0 |
| Edward Abley, High-street, do. | 0 5 0 | Liverpool | 1 0 0 | F. Harcourt, Three Tuns, Oxford | 1 0 0 |
| John Benbow, do. | 0 5 0 | George Taws, 171, Hilton-street, Dundee | 1 0 0 | C. Wood, 18, Poppin's-court, Fleet-street | 1 1 0 |
| H. A. Weston, do. | 2 2 0 | John Long, Orme's-green, Harrow-road | 1 0 0 | R. Burnett, Piazza, Covent-garden | 1 1 0 |
| Josh. Wontner, do. | 2 2 0 | William and Mitchell, 24, Wadour-street | 1 0 0 | J. Lowe, 68, Fleet-street | 1 1 0 |
| T. N. Webb, High Town, do. | 1 0 0 | H. Jackson and Son, 66, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell | 12 6 | R. Williams, 44, Ludgate-hill | 1 1 0 |
| Mr. Addison, do. | 1 0 0 | Wm. Hart, 17, Great Garden-street, Whitechapel | 0 2 6 | Mr. Kirk, Fleet-street | 1 0 0 |
| Mr. Gibson, Widemarch-street, do. | 0 5 0 | Henry Revell, 28, Burton-crescent | 1 0 0 | Mr. Gurney, Farringdon-street | 1 1 0 |
| Wm. George, Bye-street, do. | 0 10 0 | Joseph Turner, batter | 0 5 0 | R. R. | 1 1 0 |
| R. Jennings, High Town, do. | 0 5 0 | William Davison, chemist | 0 5 0 | Mr. Davis, Pulpit Office, Glasshouse-yard | 1 1 0 |
| R. W. | 0 5 0 | Miss Biesley | 1 0 0 | P. Repton, Stonecutter-street | 1 1 0 |
| Mr. Spoxl, Castle-street, Hereford | 0 5 0 | Anonymous | 0 2 6 | Mr. Grant, 3, Clemmington-court, Wood-street | 1 1 0 |
| William Keay, Bye-street, do. | 0 2 6 | A Friend | 0 5 0 | Mr. Clark, engineer, Whitefriars | 1 1 0 |
| Robert Keay, New-street, do. | 0 2 6 | Robert Busby | 1 0 0 | Mr. Patton, 16, Penton-street, Pentonville | 0 3 0 |
| Quentin Keay, do. | 0 2 6 | A Friend | 0 10 0 | Mr. Kent, 10, Waterloo-place | 0 5 0 |
| Wm. Hoven, Bye-street, do. | 0 2 6 | John C. Busby | 1 0 0 | M. C., of Bath | 0 5 0 |
| A few Friends, do. | 0 6 6 | Anonymous | 0 2 6 | G. N. E. Nelson, 10, Water-street | 1 1 0 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 10 0 | Miss Snowdon, Bondgate-street | 0 2 6 | Mr. Ashton, Cogers' Hall | 1 1 0 |
| Wm. Muer, Stewarton, Ayrshire | 1 0 0 | T. A. Short, Chapel-lane | 0 2 6 | W. H. Bennett | 0 5 0 |
| Peter Cairns, minister, do. | 2 0 0 | Edward Thew, sen. | 0 5 0 | W. Allingham | 0 5 0 |
| Wm. Black, do. | 1 0 0 | Small sums | 0 5 0 | T. Middleton, 3, Loman-street, Southwark | 1 1 0 |
| John Chesp, Girsenti, do. | 1 0 0 | Thomas Roblow, 30, Upper Marylebone-street | 0 10 0 | W. Turton, Sheffield | 0 5 0 |
| J. A. Snodgrass, do. | 0 5 0 | Pence collected at the Coach and Horses Inn | 0 12 0 | H. Longford, 7, Grange-place, Bermondsey | 0 5 0 |
| W. Newman, do. | 0 5 0 | W. G. | 0 5 0 | A. Gurney, Brill House, Somers-town | 1 1 0 |
| James Wylie, do. | 0 5 0 | W. Crosby, paper hanger, 89, Edgware-road | 1 1 0 | J. Gurney, 10, Prince's-place, Commercial-road | 1 1 0 |
| John Black, do. | 0 2 6 | J. Wessell, 11, Welbeck-street, Marylebone | 1 0 0 | C. Wood, jun., 18, Poppin's-court, Fleet-street | 1 1 0 |
| William Stevenson, do. | 0 2 6 | R. Hopkins, 43, Charlton-street, do. | 1 0 0 | C. James Wood, 19, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Hugh Muer, do. | 0 2 6 | A. Smith, 13, Welbeck-street | 0 2 6 | E. W. Wood, 19, do. | 0 3 0 |
| Andrew Clark, do. | 0 2 6 | Jas. Miller, Constitution-street | 10 0 0 | David Relf and James | 0 7 6 |
| John Coskie, do. | 0 6 0 | W. Taylor, Scotstown-park, So. Queen's-ferry | 10 0 0 | Baillie Boath, manufacturer | 1 0 0 |
| Small sums, do. | 1 4 6 | Alexander Watson, Cassell's-place | 5 5 0 | Joseph Ritchie, bootmaker | 1 0 0 |
| Binn, Dean, and Co., Dukinfield, near Manchester | 25 0 0 | W. Muir, merchant | 5 5 0 | Andrew Lawson, manufacturer | 1 0 0 |
| Matthew Binn, Brownsfield Mill, Great Ancoats- | 30 0 0 | G. Berry, do. | 5 5 0 | John Moffat, do. | 1 0 0 |
| street, Manchester | 30 0 0 | John Veitch, Cassell's-place | 5 0 0 | Rev. Andrew Murray | 1 0 0 |
| Theophilus Trotter, Lydney, Gloucestershire | 1 0 0 | John Crabbie, 27, Pilgrim-street, Leith-walk, | 5 0 0 | A Friend | 0 5 0 |
| Headin T. Leech & Bister, Urmastone, near Manchester | 1 0 0 | Edinburgh | 5 0 0 | John Yeaman, banker | 0 5 0 |
| Wm. Nicholson, Exchange Arcade, do. | 2 0 0 | R. Laurie, 21, Claremont-crescent, Edinburgh | 5 0 0 | James Anderson, auctioneer | 0 2 6 |
| G. Bedford, Tib-lane, do. | 1 0 0 | W. Girdwood, Eastfield | 5 0 0 | James Barry, brewer | 0 7 6 |
| Callender, Bickham, and Co., Mosley-street, do. | 200 0 0 | Jas. Marshall, Thomson's-place | 3 3 0 | James Stuart, shoemaker | 0 2 6 |
| Thomas Vaughan, printer, Ross, Herefordshire | 0 2 6 | John Smith, merchant | 3 3 0 | George Simpson, mason | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Bliss, accountant, do. | 0 2 6 | David Callender, Lochend-road | 2 2 0 | Wm. Roberts, town clerk | 0 10 0 |
| Thomas Cooke, druggist, do. | 0 2 6 | David Thom, 23, Pilgrim-street, Leith-walk, | 2 2 0 | Wm. Law, druggist | 0 2 6 |
| John Rudge, Edgecross-street, do. | 0 2 6 | Edinburgh | 2 2 0 | John Craig, ironmonger | 0 2 6 |
| A Friend | 0 2 6 | Baillie Gillon | 2 2 0 | John Yeaman, merchant | 0 2 6 |
| A Repeater | 0 2 6 | C. J. Henderson, 11, Smith's-place, Leith- | 2 2 0 | James Burns, shoemaker | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums | 0 2 6 | walk, Edinburgh | 2 2 0 | John Steele, merchant | 0 10 6 |
| A. K. Saunders, Market Lavington, Wilts | 3 0 0 | R. Philip, Old Wharf | 2 2 0 | John Ireland, salesman | 0 2 6 |
| W. Smith, do. | 1 0 0 | Wm. Moffat, Tolbooth-wynd | 2 2 0 | James Anderson, baker | 0 5 0 |
| Wm. Tucker, M.D., do. | 1 0 0 | George Kidd, Nor. Br. Colour Works | 1 10 6 | John Morrison, innkeeper | 0 5 0 |
| R. Willett, sen., Fiddington House, near do. | 3 0 0 | W. Richardson, bookseller, 100, Kirkgate | 1 2 6 | Alexander Lowson, grocer | 0 2 6 |
| Miss Ellen Saunders, do. | 0 10 0 | John Innes, 2, Queen-street | 1 1 0 | Wm. Cable, merchant | 0 5 0 |
| Henry Gauntlett, do. | 0 10 0 | Convenor Adamson, Duke-street | 1 1 0 | Thomas Foad, manufacturer | 1 0 0 |
| Rev. N. Hobbs, do. | 0 10 0 | John Kay, teacher, 98, Constitution-street | 1 1 0 | Small sums | 0 14 0 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 5 0 | Jas. White, 30, Charlotte-street | 1 1 0 | Fred. Wm. Froggett, 14, Gibson-square, Islington | 1 0 0 |
| H. J. Wolstenholme, Holywell | 1 1 0 | R. S. Crabbie, 11, King's-place, Leith-walk, | 1 1 0 | Per S. Gaw- (Rt. Dobbing, 25, York-place, City-road | 1 1 0 |
| M. S. Kenrick, do. | 5 0 0 | Edinburgh | 1 1 0 | thorp. { Mrs. E. Dobbing, do. | 1 1 0 |
| J. P. Eytan, do. | 2 0 0 | Rev. G. D. Cullen, 7, James-place | 1 1 0 | A Friend | 0 10 0 |
| James Eytan, Mold | 1 1 0 | John Palmer, 75, Kirkgate | 1 1 0 | Thomas Worrall, Sheffield | 1 0 0 |
| Robert Eytan, Flint | 2 2 0 | Jas. Dick, Soap Works | 1 1 0 | J. Mitchell, Cheshire Cheese, Grosvenor-row, Chelsea | 1 0 0 |
| Captain A. Francis, Halkin, Holywell | 1 0 0 | John Dalziel, baker | 1 1 0 | G. H. Jacques, 8, Kennington-terrace, Vauxhall | 1 0 0 |
| Charles Garland, do. | 1 0 0 | Peter Brash, Soap Works | 1 1 0 | J. H. Robinson, 25, Aldersgate-street | 1 0 0 |
| Rev. E. Hughes, do. | 0 10 0 | David Couston, corn merchant | 1 1 0 | John Robinson, 28, Gloucester-street, Liverpool | 0 2 6 |
| John Lloyd, do. | 1 0 0 | Russell and Ewan | 1 1 0 | Mary Robinson, 4, Smart's-buildings, High Holborn | 0 2 6 |
| Live and let Live, do. | 0 10 0 | George Walker, 2, Kirkgate | 1 1 0 | Edward Field, 29, Wilsted-street, Somers-town | 0 2 6 |
| Richard Cooper, Bradwall-road, Sandbach, Cheshire | 2 0 0 | Richard Lyall, 37, Bridge-street | 1 1 0 | Robert Coulson, 19, Whiskin-street, Clerkenwell | 0 2 6 |
| Thos. Smallman, Middlewich-rd., do. | 1 0 0 | John Black, 35, Mitchell-street | 1 1 0 | J. Brown and Friends, printers, High-street, Dept- | 1 0 0 |
| John Kennerby, North Union, do. | 0 10 0 | F. Fulton, 21, Charlotte-street | 1 1 0 | ford | 1 0 0 |
| William Dean, do. | 1 0 0 | George Imbach, 27, Elder-street, Edinburgh | 1 1 0 | Wm. Whitridge, 24, St. Paul's-place, Ball's-pond, | 1 1 0 |
| Nam. Stringer, Top of the Town, do. | 1 0 0 | Walter G. Cassels, merchant | 1 1 0 | Islington | 1 1 0 |
| John Bayley, Chapel-street, do. | 1 0 0 | Thomas Callum, 21, Charlotte-street | 1 0 0 | Eastington Association, near Stroud | 20 0 0 |
| James Lea, High-street, do. | 1 0 0 | David Spence, 10, Kirkgate | 1 0 0 | H. Fenner, 13, Park-place, Regent's-park | 1 0 0 |
| Wm. Billington, do. | 1 0 0 | Robert Innes, ship builder | 1 0 0 | Wm. Tatham, Oxford-terrace | 0 10 0 |
| Thomas Bostock, Market-place, do. | 1 0 0 | Thomas White, dyer, Tolbooth-wynd | 1 0 0 | Edward Smith, 6, King-road, Cambridge-road | 0 2 6 |
| John Shaw, High-street, do. | 0 10 0 | John Hume, 15, Mitchell-street | 1 0 0 | Caleb Collins, draper, Brighton | 2 0 0 |
| John Jones, do. | 0 10 0 | John Scott, 5, Dock-gates | 1 0 0 | Phenezer Tindall, 14, Cockhill, Ratcliffe | 2 0 0 |
| Edward Fox, Top of the Town, do. | 0 10 0 | G. Petrie, foreman, Edinburgh Ropery Co. | 1 0 0 | Mark Morgan, High-street, Newport, Isle of Wight | 1 0 0 |
| John Stringer, do. | 0 10 0 | Robert Marshall, Mitchell-street | 2 0 0 | R. Palmer, Belvoir-street | 5 0 0 |
| Thos. Stringer, do. | 0 10 0 | Thomas Callender, 8, Duke-street | 1 0 0 | C. Bedella and Co., Oxford-street | 25 0 0 |
| J. Crocker, 100 A, King-street, Manchester | 5 0 0 | R. Walker, Newhaven, by Edinburgh | 1 0 0 | D. Orange and Co., New-walk | 20 0 0 |
| Thomas Bryce, Leigh, Lancashire | 1 0 0 | Robert Murray, Soap Works | 1 0 0 | The Workmen of Orange and Co. | 1 0 0 |
| Evans and Nicholson, Pool Fold, Manchester | 50 0 0 | Alexander Brown, do. | 1 0 0 | Edward Ridley, draper, Market-place | 5 0 0 |
| Wm. Foster, a t Jan. Carlton and Co.'s, Mosley-st., do. | 1 0 0 | Robert Robb, do. | 1 0 0 | Higginson and Coleman, Talbot-lane | 5 0 0 |
| G. Lowe, Rock House, Hill-street, Hastings | 2 0 0 | William Herd, do. | 1 0 0 | C. B. and H. M. Robinson, Gas Office | 5 0 0 |
| A Friend | 0 5 0 | Jas. Couper, 17, Couper-street, North | 1 0 0 | H. Gill, St. Nicholas-square | 3 3 0 |
| W. L. Yates, Castle-street, Hastings | 0 10 0 | James Moyes, 33, Bridge-street | 1 0 0 | R. Rozzell, Newark-street | 2 0 0 |
| T. Ross, jun., do. | 0 10 0 | Alexander Miles, 27, Sandport-street, North | 1 0 0 | W. and G. Baines, Market-place | 2 0 0 |
| A Friend, per T. Ross, do. | 0 10 0 | James Sutherland, 44, Constitution-street | 1 0 0 | Rev. C. Berry, Narborough-road | 2 0 0 |
| J. B. Kelland, High Wickham, do. | 0 10 0 | Charles Morrison, Shore | 1 0 0 | Stone and Paget, Welford-place | 21 0 0 |
| F. Bennetts, St. Andrew's-terrace, do. | 0 5 0 | Anthony Laird, 22, do | 1 0 0 | John Whitmore, High Cross-street | 6 0 0 |
| J. Kinny, jun., Castle Hotel, do. | 0 5 0 | James Cochrane, 3, Mitchell-street | 1 0 0 | R. J. Smith, New-walk | 5 0 0 |
| T. Ross, Pelham Cottage, do. | 0 5 0 | John Black, 47, Couper-street, North | 1 0 0 | Thomas Sunderland, King-street | 5 0 0 |
| Thos. Mann, High-street, do. | 0 5 0 | Alexander Mann, 21, Bernard-street | 1 0 0 | John Bailey and Son, Charles-street | 5 0 0 |
| John Wimbie, Court House-street, do. | 1 0 0 | W. S. Robertson, Timber Bush | 1 0 0 | W. and J. Eames, Newark-street | 5 0 0 |
| Chas. Stanley, Castle-street, do. | 0 5 0 | James Wilson, at Alex. Gillie's, 4, Armfield, | 1 0 0 | Edward Weston, King-street | 5 0 0 |
| Robert M'Leelan, 12, Waterloo-place, do. | 0 2 6 | Newhaven, by Edinburgh | 1 0 0 | Parker, Kent, and Co., Clarence-street | 5 0 0 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 2 6 | Robert Hampton, 15, Dock-street | 1 0 0 | Charles Spencer, High Cross-street | 2 0 0 |
| John Howarth, St. George's-road, Manchester | 1 0 0 | James Gains, 8, Springfield, Leith-walk, Edin- | 1 0 0 | John Travis, 164, Belgrave-gate | 2 0 0 |
| Rd. Cheetam, 3, Bouners-place, Higher Ardwick, do. | 1 1 0 | burgh | 1 0 0 | Charles Gould, Crescent | 2 0 0 |
| | | W. Young, Silverfield | 1 0 0 | John Flower, New-walk | 1 0 0 |
| | | John Todd, fisher | 1 0 0 | S. Coleman, Duke of York, Oxford-street | 1 2 0 |
| | | W. Ford and Sons, merchants | 1 0 0 | Henry Green, 23, Rutland-street | 2 0 0 |
| | | T. Rider, Fife-place, Leith-walk, Edinburgh | 1 0 0 | Thomas Turner, Sharnford | 1 0 0 |
| | | J. Smeal, 5, Couper-street | 1 0 0 | John Kind, Whetstone | 1 0 0 |
| | | H. Webster, St. Andrew-street | 1 0 0 | Thomas Paget, surgeon, High-street | 2 0 0 |
| | | John Duncan, 76, Shore | 1 0 0 | Thomas Hodges, Redcross-street | 1 0 0 |
| | | Henry Kemp, merchant, Musselburgh | 1 0 0 | W. Weston and Son, Bond-street | 1 0 0 |
| | | James Euston, jun., skinner, do. | 1 0 0 | John Perry, North Gates | 1 0 0 |
| | | Robert J. Simpson, clothier, do. | 1 0 0 | R. M. Cook, draper, London-road | 1 0 0 |
| | | James Monro, Market-street, Fisharrow | 1 0 0 | Thomas Bradley, Humberstone-gate | 1 0 0 |
| | | John Wallace, Sandport-street | 1 1 0 | W. Brown, 4, Nelson-street, London-road | 1 0 0 |
| | | James Cree, merchant | 1 1 0 | Thomas Johnson, maltster, Southgate-street | 1 0 0 |
| | | | | T. and C. Inchley, Wellington-street | 1 0 0 |

| | | | | | |
|--|---------|--|--------|------------------------------------|--------|
| Mr. Geo. McMurray, Warrington | £1 0 0 | Samuel Biggin, Scotland-street | £1 0 0 | J. G. Wadsworth, Hodge Print Works | £1 0 0 |
| | 0 0 0 | | 0 0 0 | | 0 0 0 |
| Mr. R. McLellan, Drummore | 1 0 0 | T. and W. Badger, Copper-street | 1 0 0 | Richard Halstead, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Mr. D. Lindsay, Ashfield, nr. Dromore | 1 0 0 | M. Wag, Slemaker, Jericho | 0 5 0 | Geo. Halstead, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Mr. Hens, Warrington | 1 0 0 | Jos. Ellison, Slemaker, Allen-street | 1 0 0 | Robt. Archer, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Rennie, Tetley, and Co., Leeds-road | 50 0 0 | Samuel Peace, Meadow-street | 1 0 0 | John Chorlton, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Robt. Montee, Kirkgate | 20 0 0 | Workmen at J. Nowill and Sons, Meadow-st | 1 0 0 | Richard Howarth, do. | 0 6 0 |
| Mrs. and Misses Tordoff, Belle-vue, Manning- | 5 5 0 | J. A. Riddon street | 1 0 0 | Joseph Tinker, do. | 0 6 0 |
| ham, near | 1 0 0 | W. Corran, James-row | 2 0 0 | Arch. Herd, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Robt. Pearson, Kirkgate | 1 0 0 | W. Lucas, Royd's-mill | 2 0 0 | Geo. Roylo, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Jas. Montee, do. | 0 5 0 | A Friend to Free Trade, per H. Hinde | 5 0 0 | Job Holt, do. | 0 5 0 |
| H. B. Byles, do. | 0 5 0 | A. M'Turk, 21, James-street | 2 0 0 | — Willis, do. | 0 5 0 |
| David Smith, tailor, Eccleshill | 1 0 0 | The Secretaries, H. Hinde and R. J. Gainsford | 5 0 0 | Thos. Howard, do. | 0 5 0 |
| H. W. Crossley | 1 1 0 | George Wostenholme, Rockingham-street | 5 0 0 | Thos. Halstead, do. | 0 3 6 |
| Fair Play | 20 0 0 | Dr. Thompson, Norfolk-street | 10 0 0 | Jon. Halstead, do. | 0 3 6 |
| G. Armitage and Co. | 20 0 0 | S. Thornhill and Son, Newcastle-street | 3 0 0 | Henry Halstead, do. | 0 3 6 |
| Edward Smith, Wicker | 200 0 0 | James Barton, West-street | 2 0 0 | Jas. Schofield, do. | 0 3 6 |
| T. Turton and Sons, Spring Works | 50 0 0 | Parker and Linley, Carver-street | 2 2 0 | Jas. Swann, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Mrs. T. B. Turton | 5 0 0 | Wood and Atkinson, Rockingham-street | 2 0 0 | John Tomlinson, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Mrs. Joseph Turton | 5 0 0 | J. Sidebotham, grocer, Glossop-road | 1 0 0 | Jas. Matley, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Mrs. William Turton | 5 0 0 | Alderman Moorhouse, Devonshire-street | 1 0 0 | John Ramsbottom, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Mrs. Matthews | 5 0 0 | S. White, 11, Regent-street | 1 0 0 | James Goddard, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Naylor, Vickers, and Co. | 50 0 0 | John Dickinson, West-street | 1 0 0 | Aaron Bardeley, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Anti-Ferrand | 25 0 0 | T. Hudson, do. | 0 5 0 | George Schofield, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Jessop and Sons | 25 0 0 | R. Braithwaite, Rockingham-street | 0 5 0 | Wm. Nuttall, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Twigg, Brothers, Kilnhurst Potteries, near | 10 0 0 | A. B. C., per W. Atkinson | 0 5 0 | John Moss, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Rotherham | 1 0 0 | W. Adam | 1 0 0 | Alex. Chadwick, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Moses Radon, Norfolk-lane | 1 0 0 | W. Smith, Portobello | 10 0 0 | John Wagstaff, do. | 0 2 6 |
| D. Doncaster, Uppertorpe | 5 0 0 | Joshua Ingle, Rockingham-street | 2 0 0 | N. Tinker, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Joseph Hobson, Arundel-street | 5 0 0 | Hunting and Son, Regent-street | 1 0 0 | John Jackson, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Charles Milner, Fargate | 5 0 0 | John Bingham, 202, Allen-street | 1 0 0 | George Ashby, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Fisher, Orchard-place | 20 0 0 | John Walton, Cornhill | 0 5 0 | David Ramsbottom, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Charles Fisher, do. | 2 0 0 | James Brown, Division-street | 5 0 0 | John Walker, do. | 0 2 6 |
| Wm. Hargreaves, Kyre-lane | 20 0 0 | George Radon, Fargate | 1 0 0 | John Garlick, do. | 0 2 6 |
| F. H., 62, Byre-street | 1 0 0 | George Tucker, York-street | 2 0 0 | Block-printers, do. | 8 6 9 |
| M. and R. Brady, Leavy Greave | 5 0 0 | David Johnson, Campo-lane | 0 5 0 | Small sums | 213 0 |
| R. Daff, Boot and Shoe Inn, Pinstone-street | 1 0 0 | H. Howson, Snig-hill | 0 5 0 | | |
| T. P. G. Osborne, Portmahon | 1 0 0 | Crookes and Roberts, Porter-street | 2 0 0 | | |
| Charles Appleby, Willey-street | 10 0 0 | S. Meggitt, Duke-street | 0 10 0 | | |
| A Mother, per E. Smith | 10 0 0 | W. Tomlinson, Angel Inn, South-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| Walker, Wall, and Co., Nursery | 20 0 0 | Thomas Barry, brewer, do. | 0 10 0 | | |
| "Cobden for ever" | 0 10 0 | John Shaw, Owlerton | 0 10 0 | | |
| John Charlton, 57, Charles-street | 1 1 0 | J. Cadman, Devonshire Arms, South-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| James Johnson, Holy-green | 0 2 6 | W. A. Goodall, do. | 1 0 0 | | |
| Bolton and Co., Market-street | 1 0 0 | Joseph Cutts, Hermitage-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| Crowley and Pearson, Kellam Works | 10 0 0 | J. Chamberlain, Fargate | 1 0 0 | | |
| George Johnson, 13, Porter-street | 2 0 0 | T. Brown, 12, South-street | 0 5 0 | | |
| Samuel Hancock, Peacraft | 1 0 0 | L. Hillier, 12, do. | 0 5 0 | | |
| J. S. Hancock, do. | 0 10 0 | W. White, Brook-hill | 0 5 0 | | |
| George Latham, 20, Gell-street | 1 0 0 | Cornelius Atkinson, South-street | 0 5 0 | | |
| T. S. Naylor, 202, Brook Hill | 1 0 0 | Jas. Ashmore, do. | 0 5 0 | | |
| Robert Thompson, Granville-street, Park | 0 5 0 | W. Underwood, Porter-street | 0 2 6 | | |
| Robt. Holborn, Brook-hill | 2 0 0 | G. Y. Bramall, do. | 0 2 6 | | |
| E. and J. Greaves, Park | 5 0 0 | Thomas Goodwin, do. | 0 2 6 | | |
| Wm. Greaves, South-street, Park | 1 0 0 | Charles Bellamy, Devonshire-street | 0 2 6 | | |
| Thomas Sheldon, Trafalgar-street | 1 0 0 | James Turner, near Lead Works | 0 2 6 | | |
| Wm. Burrell, Snig-hill | 1 0 0 | A Friend, per G. Johnson | 0 2 6 | | |
| Aaron Hatfield, Pepper-alley | 5 0 0 | Samuel Foote, South-street | 0 2 6 | | |
| A. Hatfield and Son, do. | 10 0 0 | Charles Peace, Eagle Works | 5 0 0 | | |
| Geo. Gray, Milton's Head, Allen-street | 1 0 0 | P. Ashberry, Bowling-green-street | 5 0 0 | | |
| Joseph Mappin, Mulberry-street | 5 0 0 | Drabble and Sanderson, Spring-street | 5 0 0 | | |
| John Nicholson, Thomas-street | 1 0 0 | George Smith, 68, Russell-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| Workmen at Roberts and Smith's, Kyre-street | 1 11 0 | Brown and Flather, Soily-street | 0 10 0 | | |
| Henry Hall, the Mount | 2 2 0 | R. Alexander, Sheffield Arms, Meadow-street | 0 2 6 | | |
| W. Atkinson, Angel-street | 1 0 0 | W. P., per W. Hoole | 0 5 0 | | |
| Wm. Holdsworth, Snig-hill | 1 0 0 | John Armitage, Allen-street | 0 5 0 | | |
| Alfred Osborne, 19, Smithfield | 1 0 0 | George Barnaley, Cornhill | 0 5 0 | | |
| John Hughes, Russell-street | 1 0 0 | Samuel Parker, Parker's Wharf | 10 0 0 | | |
| Josephus Smith, 141, South-street | 1 0 0 | Thomas Robinson, Fig-tree-place | 1 0 0 | | |
| Roberts and Mettam, Barker-pool | 5 0 0 | Spear and Jackson, Saville-street | 5 0 0 | | |
| Wm. Bagshaw, 37, Spring-street | 1 0 0 | J. Osborne, Sussex-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| James Biggins, Attercliffe | 0 10 0 | J. Nowill, Meadow-street | 2 0 0 | | |
| Clerks at Green-lane Works | 1 0 0 | W. Nowill, jun., do. | 1 0 0 | | |
| Workmen at do. | 2 12 3 | James Taylor, Burgess-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| Joseph Morton, Infirmary-road | 0 10 0 | Merrill and Jarvis, Holly-street | 2 0 0 | | |
| Joshua Jervis, Sportsman Inn, Bridge Houses | 1 10 0 | Wm. Troth, Moorfields | 1 0 0 | | |
| P. Frith, Arundel-street | 5 0 0 | Wm. Lister, West-bar | 1 0 0 | | |
| J. Littlewood, 91, Broad-street, Park | 1 0 0 | Isaac Read, Lambert-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| E. Shurt, Wellington Inn, Conlpit-street | 0 10 0 | Joseph Dickinson, West-bar | 1 0 0 | | |
| Jos. Burgin, 63, West-street | 1 0 0 | Alfred Hobson, 95, Edward-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| Benjn. Hobson, Stubbing House, nr. Greenaiside | 1 0 0 | G. K. Moorhouse, Farnival-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| John Turner, Harvest-lane | 1 0 0 | J. W., at do., do. | 1 0 0 | | |
| John Dixon, Castle-street | 1 1 0 | W. Binney, Mulberry-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| J. Sellers, Colliery Railway station | 1 0 0 | W. Layland, 11, Love-street | 2 0 0 | | |
| John Needham, Harvest-lane | 0 10 0 | Thomas Hobson, cutler, Hallam | 0 5 0 | | |
| C. Wardlaw and Son, 31, Malinda-street | 1 0 0 | Working men at Paul Ashley's, Watson's-walk | 2 8 7 | | |
| John Pitt, Waingate | 1 0 0 | John Martin, Mill-sand | 2 0 0 | | |
| A Working Man | 0 2 6 | Samuel Hague, Eldon-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| P. Beaumont, Canal-office | 1 0 0 | J. and J. Stevenson, Arundel-street | 5 0 0 | | |
| T. Smith, Westfield-terrace | 1 1 0 | A Friend, per J. Stevenson | 1 0 0 | | |
| George Holmes, 80, West-bar | 1 0 0 | A Friend, do. | 0 5 0 | | |
| James Johnson, 54, Broomhall-street | 1 0 0 | T. Fisher (Shaw and Fisher), Suffolk-road | 2 2 0 | | |
| Jonathan Crookes and Son, Eldon-street | 1 0 0 | T. Ibbotson and Co., Charles-street | 2 2 0 | | |
| A. B. C. | 1 0 0 | Miss Wilkinson, Suffolk-road | 1 0 0 | | |
| Broadhead and Hall, Eldon-street | 0 10 0 | Michael Hunter, Wicker | 5 0 0 | | |
| John Pitt, Trafalgar-street | 0 10 0 | Mark Oakes, Attercliffe | 1 0 0 | | |
| Joseph Hall, 66, Eldon-street | 0 5 0 | E. W. Richardson, do. | 1 0 0 | | |
| George Dalton, Wellington-street | 0 5 0 | Jonathan Robbuck, Saville-street | 5 0 0 | | |
| J. Howarth, 121, Fitzwilliam-street | 0 5 0 | John Wilson, Sycamore-street | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thomas Cawton, Spring-lane | 0 2 6 | Knowles and Brown, Rotherham | 10 0 0 | | |
| Hawcroft and Pearson, Eldon-street | 0 2 6 | W. Hoole, Malinda-street | 5 0 0 | | |
| V. Woodfin, Wellington-street | 0 2 6 | J. C. Simpson, Gibraltar-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| H. Taylor, 105, Fitzwilliam-street | 0 2 6 | Fenton and Shore, Division-street | 5 0 0 | | |
| Joshua Purder, 154, do. | 0 2 6 | W. Jackson, surgeon, Bank-street | 5 0 0 | | |
| John Shennar, Eldon-street | 0 2 6 | Thomas Watson, Fargate | 1 1 0 | | |
| Charles Ward, Rockingham-street | 0 2 6 | John White, Workhouse-croft | 1 1 0 | | |
| John Driver, 25, Charles-street | 1 0 0 | W. Peich, 40, Smithfield | 1 0 0 | | |
| John Parkin, 88, Wicker | 1 0 0 | A. Hill, Slemuth, Infirmary-lane | 1 0 0 | | |
| C. E. Smith, Fir vale | 0 10 0 | A Friend | 1 0 0 | | |
| Henry Askin, Howard-street | 1 1 0 | Jos. Outram, Black Swan Inn | 1 0 0 | | |
| S. S. Middleton and Co., Charles-street | 1 1 0 | Charles Unwin, West-bar | 1 0 0 | | |
| Gasley and Worsley, West-bar | 5 0 0 | R. Eaton, Sheffield Banking Company | 1 0 0 | | |
| T. Goodwin, Wentworth-terrace | 1 0 0 | J. H. Barber, do. | 1 0 0 | | |
| Workmen at John Watson's, Arundel-street | 0 10 1 | A Friend | 1 0 0 | | |
| W. Jervis, grocer, Snig-hill | 2 0 0 | John Walters, Carver-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| J. Newton, do., West-bar | 2 0 0 | A Friend | 0 10 0 | | |
| W. Harrison, Townhead-street | 1 0 0 | H. Hall | 0 10 0 | | |
| Samuel Frost, Broad-lane | 5 0 0 | George Trickett, Loxley | 0 10 0 | | |
| Workmen at S. Frost's, do. | 1 0 0 | C. Hutchinson, West-bar | 0 5 0 | | |
| Joseph Ashforth, Bridge-street | 5 0 0 | Friend to Working-men | 0 5 0 | | |
| Horatio Greaves, Burgess-street | 5 0 0 | S. Smith, King-street | 0 5 0 | | |
| Charles Fox, Cheney-square | 2 0 0 | F. Carr | 0 5 0 | | |
| T. Miller, cabinetmaker, Scotland-street | 0 5 0 | Friend to the League | 0 2 6 | | |
| John Russell, 13, Howard-street | 1 0 0 | T. Deakin, Infirmary-lane | 0 2 6 | | |
| W. Jackson, 13, Howard-street | 1 0 0 | Well-wisher to the League | 0 2 6 | | |
| W. Whitworth, 5, Castle-street | 1 0 0 | A Friend | 0 2 6 | | |
| H. Jackson, 34, Charlotte-street | 0 2 6 | Complete Suffrage, Wife and Seven Children | 0 3 0 | | |
| W. H. Jackson, 36, do. | 1 0 0 | Samuel Butcher, Kyre-lane | 20 0 0 | | |
| Thomas Birks, Pond Brewery | 20 0 0 | W. Leadbeater, Allen-street | 1 0 0 | | |
| H. Wilkinson and Co., Norfolk-street | 20 0 0 | Small sums | 0 18 2 | | |
| John Arnold, Wellington-place | 1 0 0 | William Allen, The Lodge | 5 0 0 | | |
| W. Thompson, Uppertorpe | 2 0 0 | Isaac Priestman | 5 0 0 | | |
| J. and J. Elliott, Hollis Croft | 3 0 0 | W. C. Copperthwaite | 2 0 0 | | |
| J. Hawkey, do. | 4 0 0 | W. and R. Hartley | 5 0 0 | | |
| W. Howe, do. | 1 0 0 | An Advocate for Free Trade | 2 0 0 | | |
| G. and J. Oxley, do. | 0 5 0 | John Hopkins | 10 0 0 | | |
| Natli. Greaves, Portobello-street | 2 0 0 | An Enemy of Monopoly, and a Friend to Purity of Election | 5 0 0 | | |
| J. S. Taylor, 70, Norfolk-street | 1 1 0 | Samuel King | 2 0 0 | | |
| W. H. Gibbs, Howard-street | 0 10 0 | Ann and E. Priestman | 2 0 0 | | |
| W. C. Hutton, Surrey-street | 1 1 0 | J. F. Stackhouse | 1 0 0 | | |
| W. Hoyland, Church-street | 10 0 0 | A Friend to Free Trade | 1 0 0 | | |
| W. and J. G. Parker, Kyre-street | 2 0 0 | M. C. Frankland, Norton, near | 1 0 0 | | |
| J. Collins, Howard-street | 0 2 6 | Charles Smithson | 2 0 0 | | |
| A Friend, per W. Hoyland | 0 5 0 | T. J. Thompson, Old Malton Abbey, near | 5 0 0 | | |
| J. and W. H. Charles, Kellam Works | 2 2 0 | Peter Shaw & Son, Micklehurst, near | 20 0 0 | | |
| Samuel Ackroyd, Uppertorpe | 1 0 0 | Wm. Newton, New Buildings, Sta- | 1 0 0 | | |
| Zaccheus Dyson, do. | 0 10 0 | ley, near Manchester | 1 0 0 | | |
| Henry Fish, do. | 0 10 0 | Moses Slater, Carrbrook, near Ash- | 1 0 0 | | |
| W. Lawrence, do. | 0 5 0 | ton-under-Lyno | 1 0 0 | | |
| Thos. Nowill, Netherthorpe | 1 0 0 | | | | |

| | | | | |
|---------------------------------------|--|----|----|---|
| Melbourn, Wiltshire. | J. L. Phillips | 8 | 0 | 0 |
| | J. F. Smith | 8 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Fowler | 8 | 0 | 0 |
| | Wm. Simpson | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Cochran | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Hezekiah Hayward | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Edward King | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| | William Gillet | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| | Robert Simpson | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| | Robert Simpson | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Nottingham, Second Remittance. | John Henson, Clinton-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Joseph Rollett, "Sir Isaac Newton," Glass-house-street | 1 | 10 | 0 |
| | John Burton, Messrs. Heard and Hurst's, Houndgate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | William Cartledge, Postern-street | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| | Wm. Hollins, Plesley Works, near Mansfield | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Thornhill, Warsop-gate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Searesfield and Co., Stony-street | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| | H. G. Rideout, Houndgate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Booth and Taylor, Pilcher-gate | 8 | 0 | 0 |
| | Booth and Taylor, Pilcher-gate | 8 | 0 | 0 |
| Bury, Third Remittance. | John Openshaw, Bolton-street | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| | Edward Mucklow, Bolton New-road, near | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Robt. Shaw, Bolton-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Henry Smith, Georgiana-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Wood, Messrs. Walker and Co.'s | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Miss Butcher, Fleet-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Squire Diggle, Messrs. Walker and Co.'s | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Wm. Johnson, Garden-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | George Booth, King-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Wm. Warburton, Bury-bridge | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Todmorden, near Rochdale, 6th Remit. | A Friend | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | A Repeater | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Small sums | 0 | 0 | 6 |
| | David Oliver and Sons, Wood Mills, near | 15 | 0 | 0 |
| | Mrs. Samuel Oliver, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Mrs. Oliver, Mutton-hole, near | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | Miss Ada Oliver, do. | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | Miss Jane Oliver, do. | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | Miss Helen Oliver, do. | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | Miss Eliza Oliver, do. | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| Rochdale. | Wm. Moore and Sons | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| | Timothy Iveson, saddler | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | A Friend, per Chas. Walker | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| | George Elliott, Regent-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | A Conservative Friend, per John Milnes | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| | Misses Sarah and Rachel King | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| | Misses Sarah and Rachel King | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| | Misses Sarah and Rachel King | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| | Misses Sarah and Rachel King | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| | Misses Sarah and Rachel King | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| Oley, Yorkshire. | F. H. Fawkes, Farnley Hall, near | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| | W. Ackroyd, Westbourne Lodge | 40 | 0 | 0 |
| | Wm. Gill, Burley Hall, near | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| | A Friend | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| | Peter Garnett | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Cousins, Branhope Hall | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| | Thos. Duncan, worsted spinner | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| | Robert Barker, tanner | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| | Wm. Musgrave, currier | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| | J. Spence, surgeon | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Dundee, 8th Rem. | Edward Barrett, attorney-at-law, Grovo | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | John Craven | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Sheraton, Farnley, near | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | M. G. Forster, leather dresser | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Robert Ferguson, draper | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Thomas Hunter, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Miligan and Bennett | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Chippindale and Hodgson | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Chippindale and Hodgson | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Chippindale and Hodgson | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Burgownie, Perthshire. | James Miller, brewer, Hawkhill | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Low, sen. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Baxter | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Peter Brown | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | William Fife, Keath-bank | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Baxter, Ash-bank | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Grimsdell, Oak-bank | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| | David Rattray, Bramble-bank | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | David Grimsdell, Lorny | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Morris, Eastmill | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Jedburgh. | Thomas Mitchell, ironmonger | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | William M'Nardie | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Thomas Blackie, Keath-bank | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Lawson, manufacturer | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Alexander Nelson, merchant | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Alexander Simpson, Oak-bank | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Gibb, Ash-bank | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Cameron, Plackmill | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | William Procter Milton, of Rattray | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Charles Robb | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Greenock-Continued. | A Friend to Free Discussion | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Misses Robinson | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| | Adam Waugh, carrier | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| | Dalgleish and Mercer, manufacturers | 0 | 4 | 0 |
| | Mrs. Sharp, innkeeper | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| | The Right Hon. the Earl of Buchan, Dryburgh | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| | George Turnbull, of Brae (2nd subscription of) | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| | Thos. Halliburton, farmer, Tusbislaw, Selkirk | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Riddle, farmer, Cappuck | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Lom, merchant, Lilliesleaf, Roxburgh-sh. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Greenock-Continued. | Small sums | 6 | 10 | 0 |
| | Provost Baine, merchant | 50 | 0 | 0 |
| | Andrew Ramsay, do. | 25 | 0 | 0 |
| | Robert Steele, shipbuilder | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| | Scott and Mackenzie, printers, Bank-street | 6 | 6 | 0 |
| | A. R. Johnston, merchant, Holmescroft | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| | James Stuart, do., Beltrees | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| | Robert Baine, banker | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| | Duncan Ferguson, merchant, Mount-park | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| | William Macle, sugar refiner | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| Greenock-Continued. | Robert Macle, do. | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| | Wm. Panton, merchant, Ardrossan | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| | Adam Fawcett, sugar refiner | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| | Alan Fullerton, banker | 3 | 3 | 0 |
| | James Arbuckle, tanner | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| | G. Allan and Sons, Clyde-forge, Pt. Glasgow-rd. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| | Thos. M. McFarlane, tanner | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| | William Marshall, do., Pt. Glasgow-road | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| | D. A. Campbell, distiller | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| | Robert Thorne, wine-merchant | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Greenock-Continued. | Neil Campbell, merchant | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| | John Rodger, jun., do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| | Andrew Anderson, banker | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| | Andrew Lindsay, merchant | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| | Matthew Orr, rope and sail maker | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| | Thos. O. Hunter, merchant | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Hunter, fish and oil merchant | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| | James C. Buchanan, merchant | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| | Thomas Lamb and Sons, wrights | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | Robert Morton, baker, Hamilton-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Greenock-Continued. | James Duff, brassfounder | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | J. Duncan, Clyde Shipping Co. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | Thomas Anderson, slater | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | Wm. Thomson, Hlland | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | John McIlvann, shoe merchant, William-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Robt. Bruce, M.D., Cathcart street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Bannatyne, fish curer, Brougham-st. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | William Baird, coal merchant | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | William Truelove, grocer, Cathcart-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | Charles Sattie, smith, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Greenock-Continued. | John Graham, merchant, Grey place | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | Thomas Hamilton, do., George square | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | William Service, writer | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | James Watson, merchant, Oak-bank | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | George Arbuckle, West Blackhall-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | James Mackie, M.D., Hamilton-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | John Speirs, M.D., do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | Alexander M'Gowan, M.D., do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | Alexander M'Gowan, M.D., do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | Alexander M'Gowan, M.D., do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Robert Cowan, draper, Hamilton-street | Robert Cowan, draper, Hamilton-street | 41 | 1 | 0 |
| | Robert Little, merchant, West Street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | William Thom, grocer, Hamilton-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | Newblagging and Gardner, ironmongers, Wil- | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | liam-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| | John M'Millan, ship chandler, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | J. Hercus, merchant, of T. Hamlin and Co.'s | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Geo. Dalgleish, do., at do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Geo. Allan, tobacconist, Dalrymple-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John M'Lean, cooper, Charles-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Greenock-Continued. | John Stewart, shoemaker, Cathcart-square | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Wm. Wallace, wine merchant, Highland-close | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Robert Houston, dyer, Crawford-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Buchanan, cooper, Charles-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Geo. Fleming, housewright, Sugarhouse-lane | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Robert Aitken, tallow chandler, Charles-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Robert Hutcheson, surveyor, Hamilton-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Anthony Duffy, rag merchant, Vennel | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Adam Lyle, cooper, Nicholson-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Harley, joiner, West Blackhall-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Greenock-Continued. | Robert Cassels, grocer, Hamilton-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Ker Gray, town clerk | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Robert Baird, painter, West Breast | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Kean, broker, Vennel | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Miller, merchant, West Quay | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | W. S. Anderson, M.D., 44, Nicholson-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Robert B. Findlay, clothier, Union-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Fraser, clothier, of Connor, Fraser, & Co.'s | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John M'Gregor, Nelson-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Thomas Blair, shoemaker, West Burn-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Greenock-Continued. | C. P. Hunter, Viewbank | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Thos. Lang & Co., merchants, Clyde-crescent | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | D. and P. Sinclair, painters, W. Blackhall-st. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | George Allan, jun., smith | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | A. Brown and Co., joiners, Virginia-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | William Allison, builder | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Matthew Paton, joiner, Bogle-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Charles Paterson, shoemaker, Cathcart-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Collin M'Millan, clothier, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Clark, watchmaker, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Greenock-Continued. | Wm. Liddell, writer, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John A. M'Farlane, grocer, W. Blackhall-st. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | William Houston, manufacturer | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | William Anderson, grocer, Cathcart-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Thomas King, writer | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | A Lady | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | W. Curtis, wine merchant, Manse-lane | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Colin Lamont, banker | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | J. G. Bankier, bookseller, Hamilton-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Kerr, do., do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Greenock-Continued. | James Scouler, confectioner, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Rev. Wm. Auld, Mount Park | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Rev. Sutherland Sinclair, Shaw-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Reid, of Nellie, Fleming, and Reid's, | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | worsted spinners | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Archibald Black, merchant, Shaw-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Henry and John Reid, merchants | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Black, jun., writer, Shaw-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Geo. Brodie, spirit dealer, Shaw-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John M'Loskey, clothier, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Greenock-Continued. | Wm. Kelly, grocer, William-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Rt. Brown, do., Shaw-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Jessamine, merchant, at Campbell, | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Anderson, and Co.'s | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Wm. Calder, coal merchant, East Quay-lane | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | William Boyd, merchant | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John Russell, plumber, Rae-end-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | John More, joiner, Cross-shore-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Graham, merchant, East Breast | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Barclay Henry, surgeon, High Vennel | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Greenock-Continued. | John Martin, merchant, Shaw-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | Walker and Moody, clothiers | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| | James Turner, jun., writer, Hamilton-street | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | John Tierney, spirit dealer | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | Joseph Orr, sailmaker, West Quay-lane | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | John Calder, hatter | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | Hew M'Ilwraith, writer, William-street | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | John Morrison, bookbinder, do. | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | David M'Leod, blockmaker, West Breast | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | Andrew Lusk, grocer, Hamilton-street | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| Greenock-Continued. | Archibald Gilmour, Burns Tavern | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | Wm. A. Orr, ship chandler | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | Charles Auld, M.D., Hamilton-street | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | John Todd, cooper, West Burn-street | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | Rev. James Jeffrey, Mount Park | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | Alexander Ritchie, Crawford-street | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | James Baird, 17, West Burn-street | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | Robert M'Vicar, smith, Rae-end-street | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | Lochart S. Cassels, grocer, Cathcart-street | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| | J. G. Stevenson, bookseller, W. Blackhall st. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Greenock-Continued. | Rev. Thomas Finlayson, Ford-place | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| | Michael Ryan, East Shaw-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| | William Allison, 31, Vennel | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| | James Lang, joiner | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| | Alex. McCulloch, fletcher, Cathcart-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| | R. Baxter, at McLean's, cooper, Charles-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| | J. Gilchrist, accountant, Regent-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| | Geo. Logan, merchant, Shaw-place | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| | Rev. Robt. Wilson, Ann-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| | Alex. Stuart, of Beltrees | 0 | 9 | 6 |
| Greenock-Continued. | Alex. Mann, superintendent of police | 0 | 7 | 6 |
| | Jas. Scott, fletcher, Hamilton-street | 0 | 6 | 0 |
| | Andrew More, joiner | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | Wm. Kerr, meal merchant, Hamilton street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | Jas. Wyse, confectioner, Hamilton-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | Michael McLarty, hatter | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | Alex. Cairns, pawnbroker, Market-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | John Fleming, artist | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | Jas. McKelvie, clerk, St. Andrew's-square | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | Gilbert Cowan, 51, West Stewart-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Greenock-Continued. | A Friend | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | Geo. Hamilton, master of works, Cross Shore- | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | J. McAlister (of McAlister and Thomson's), | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | smith, East Breast | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | Arch. Stewart, George Inn, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | John Stewart, spirit dealer, Shannon's-close | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | R. Muir and Son, shoemakers, Shaw-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | Dan. Taylor, cork cutter, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| | John O'Neill, clothier, William-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Greenock-Continued. | Thos. Niven, baker, Cathcart-street | 0 | | |

| | | | | | | |
|--|---------------------|---|----------------------------------|---|---------------------------|-------|
| Berry Brow and Armitage Bridge, near Huddersfield. | Joseph Vickerman | 1 0 0 | John Walker, Henley Cot | 1 0 0 | A. Dixon and Son | 1 0 0 |
| | Thomas Shaw | 1 0 0 | Mrs. Robert Milligan, Acacia Cot | 1 0 0 | Wm. Atkinson and Son | 1 0 0 |
| | J. and R. Tinker | 1 0 0 | Mrs. Forbes, do. | 1 0 0 | George Anderton | 1 0 0 |
| | Abraham Dawson | 1 0 0 | Miss Forbes, do. | 1 0 0 | R. and C. Goldthorn | 1 0 0 |
| | Richard Brook | 1 0 0 | Miss Harvey, do. | 1 0 0 | Jas. Butcliffe, Broadbent | 1 0 0 |
| | David Beaumont | 1 0 0 | Miss Caroline Thompson | 1 0 0 | Birkbys and Kitsons | 1 0 0 |
| | Benjamin Brooksbank | 1 0 0 | Joseph Briggs, manufacturer | 1 0 0 | Thomas Bentley | 1 0 0 |
| | Henry Naylor | 1 0 0 | William Thompson, do. | 1 0 0 | A Friend | 1 0 0 |
| | Benjamin Batley | 1 0 0 | Richard Sykes, Waggon and Horse | 1 0 0 | Thornton, Brothers | 1 0 0 |
| | William Varley | 1 0 0 | James Pearnley, Cragg Bottom | 1 0 0 | Joseph Butterworth | 1 0 0 |
| | Daniel Lee | 1 0 0 | John Lawson | 1 0 0 | George Stead | 1 0 0 |
| | Thomas Shaw, jun. | 1 0 0 | David Asquith | 1 0 0 | Rev. James Scott | 1 0 0 |
| | John Shaw | 1 0 0 | Joseph Asquith, sen. | 1 0 0 | James Sugden and Son | 1 0 0 |
| | William Crosland | 1 0 0 | Joseph Asquith, jun. | 1 0 0 | Thos. Harrison | 1 0 0 |
| | Edward Taylor | 1 0 0 | Wm. G. Thompson | 1 0 0 | John Austwick | 1 0 0 |
| | Robert Hirst | 1 0 0 | Richard Clayton | 1 0 0 | J. Berry | 1 0 0 |
| | Joshua Shaw | 1 0 0 | Edmund Hustler | 1 0 0 | Thos. Wooller | 1 0 0 |
| | Rowland Shaw | 1 0 0 | Robert Hustler | 1 0 0 | Benjamin Bentley | 1 0 0 |
| | George Shaw | 1 0 0 | John Holdin | 1 0 0 | Miss Booth | 1 0 0 |
| | George Oldfield | 1 0 0 | John Hollings | 1 0 0 | George Humble, jun. | 1 0 0 |
| Godfrey Brook | 1 0 0 | William Parkinson | 1 0 0 | John Robson | 1 0 0 | |
| James Naylor | 1 0 0 | William Rigg | 1 0 0 | John Langbottom | 1 0 0 | |
| Allen Oldfield | 1 0 0 | Joseph Woodward | 1 0 0 | Thomas Armitage | 1 0 0 | |
| Benjamin Atha | 1 0 0 | Thomas Pratt | 1 0 0 | John Tetley | 1 0 0 | |
| A Friend | 1 0 0 | George Thompson | 1 0 0 | Edward Stead | 1 0 0 | |
| John Oldfield | 1 0 0 | Alfred Thompson | 1 0 0 | George Hirst | 1 0 0 | |
| James Lockwood | 1 0 0 | Jeremiah Thompson | 1 0 0 | James Wilson | 1 0 0 | |
| James Wagstaff | 1 0 0 | William Shires | 1 0 0 | James Hartley Scott | 1 0 0 | |
| Joseph Shaw | 1 0 0 | William Greave | 1 0 0 | James Yates | 1 0 0 | |
| John Bottomley | 1 0 0 | The Workmen at Larkfield Mill | 1 0 0 | William Yates | 1 0 0 | |
| Richard Poole | 1 0 0 | James Stables | 1 0 0 | John Fox | 1 0 0 | |
| Thomas Gledhill | 1 0 0 | James Baldwin | 1 0 0 | Charles Collins | 1 0 0 | |
| Matthew Riley | 1 0 0 | John Yeadon | 1 0 0 | James Barker | 1 0 0 | |
| Joseph Schofield | 1 0 0 | A Friend | 1 0 0 | Carvers and Brearley | 1 0 0 | |
| Nathan Gledhill | 1 0 0 | A Manufacturer | 1 0 0 | H. H. Wright | 1 0 0 | |
| Joseph Hinchliffe | 1 0 0 | Benjamin Hardaker | 1 0 0 | J. B. Greenwood | 1 0 0 | |
| Mr. Batley's men | 1 0 0 | David Nicholls | 1 0 0 | William Marsland | 1 0 0 | |
| Measrs. Wrigley's men, Dungeon | 1 0 0 | David Richardson | 1 0 0 | Samuel Sugden | 1 0 0 | |
| Small sums | 1 0 0 | George Bingley | 1 0 0 | Wm. Deamally | 1 0 0 | |
| John Campbell, M.D. | 1 0 0 | John Hutchinson | 1 0 0 | Joseph Hill | 1 0 0 | |
| John Oliver | 1 0 0 | John Riley | 1 0 0 | Joseph Brooke | 1 0 0 | |
| Thomas Shaw | 1 0 0 | Samuel Pratt | 1 0 0 | R. F. Brooke | 1 0 0 | |
| Wm. Tipping, at Mr. Mason's | 1 0 0 | William Outhwaite | 1 0 0 | Abraham Roberts and Co. | 1 0 0 | |
| Taylor and Rockliffe, Haughton, | 1 0 0 | Anonymous | 1 0 0 | David Fox | 1 0 0 | |
| near Manchester | 1 0 0 | John Walker, jun., Joiner | 1 0 0 | Birkbys and Kitson's Men | 1 0 0 | |
| R. A. Thicknesse, Beech-hill | 1 0 0 | Joseph Bentley | 1 0 0 | John Garstide and J. W. Moor | 1 0 0 | |
| James Black, Standishgate | 1 0 0 | John Booth | 1 0 0 | A Friend | 1 0 0 | |
| A Friend | 1 0 0 | Walter Ross | 1 0 0 | Joseph Oldy | 1 0 0 | |
| Robt. Bone, Great George-street | 1 0 0 | James Mitchell and Co. | 1 0 0 | William Broadbent | 1 0 0 | |
| Thos. Hawett, surgeon | 1 0 0 | Thomas Smith | 1 0 0 | Busby Blakelock | 1 0 0 | |
| H. R. | 1 0 0 | Robert Stuart | 1 0 0 | A Friend to Freedom | 1 0 0 | |
| Rev. C. Middlehurst, Standishgate | 1 0 0 | William Rycroft | 1 0 0 | Wm. Roberts, cardmaker | 1 0 0 | |
| James Leech, grocer, Scholes | 1 0 0 | William Ibbotson | 1 0 0 | Wm. Pickard | 1 0 0 | |
| Robert Leather, King-street | 1 0 0 | Thomas Wadsworth | 1 0 0 | Edward Stead | 1 0 0 | |
| Thos. Rawson, Schofield-lane | 1 0 0 | John Hartley | 1 0 0 | David Holdroyd | 1 0 0 | |
| Rev. B. Millard, Great George-street | 1 0 0 | Thomas Ravensley | 1 0 0 | James Roberts | 1 0 0 | |
| Wm. Fairhurst, grocer, Scholes | 1 0 0 | James Wade | 1 0 0 | Thomas Pickles | 1 0 0 | |
| John Riddlesworth, Queen-street | 1 0 0 | John Yeadon, Little London | 1 0 0 | William Clayton | 1 0 0 | |
| Mrs. McKerrrow, Wallgate | 1 0 0 | William Baldwin | 1 0 0 | George Fielding | 1 0 0 | |
| John Mc Muldrow, Great George-street | 1 0 0 | John Walker, sen. | 1 0 0 | Benjamin Woodcock | 1 0 0 | |
| Edwin Collier, Chapel-lane | 1 0 0 | Benjamin Briggs | 1 0 0 | William Herring | 1 0 0 | |
| Thos. Weddall, do. | 1 0 0 | Small sums | 1 0 0 | John Gomersall | 1 0 0 | |
| Thos. Fairclough, Wigan-lane | 1 0 0 | William Kenion | 1 0 0 | John Knowles | 1 0 0 | |
| Jas. Fairhurst, King's Arms | 1 0 0 | John Parkinson | 1 0 0 | John Sykes | 1 0 0 | |
| Joseph Gore, Wellington-street | 1 0 0 | John Dawson | 1 0 0 | William Sellers | 1 0 0 | |
| John Lund, Scholes | 1 0 0 | Joseph Hustler | 1 0 0 | William Peel | 1 0 0 | |
| James Taylor, Standishgate | 1 0 0 | John Denison, Bancroft | 1 0 0 | Small sums | 1 0 0 | |
| Wm. Brockbank, do. | 1 0 0 | Matthew Walker, innkeeper | 1 0 0 | Daniel Gaskell, Lupset Hall, near | 1 0 0 | |
| Thos. Woods, do. | 1 0 0 | Joseph Dawson | 1 0 0 | James Mickelthwaite, Tamny Hall | 1 0 0 | |
| Margaret Alexander, Rodney-street | 1 0 0 | Josh. White, Eahol | 1 0 0 | Joseph Holdsworth, Belle Vue | 1 0 0 | |
| John Part, Standishgate | 1 0 0 | William Hustler, sen. | 1 0 0 | William Shaw, Portobello | 1 0 0 | |
| Thos. Rigby, Scholes | 1 0 0 | Jotham Harrison | 1 0 0 | George Craven | 1 0 0 | |
| E. Wardle, auctioneer, Standishgate | 1 0 0 | William Wormald | 1 0 0 | Thos. Clayton, Northgate | 1 0 0 | |
| Thos. Mitchell, card maker, Halifax | 1 0 0 | Michael Gill | 1 0 0 | Joseph Thornton, Kettlethorpe Hall, near | 1 0 0 | |
| Small sums | 1 0 0 | Richard Baldwin | 1 0 0 | John Holdsworth, New Wells | 1 0 0 | |
| W. L. N. | 1 0 0 | Abraham Denison | 1 0 0 | Henry Briggs, Overton, near | 1 0 0 | |
| T. B. S. | 1 0 0 | Joseph Denison | 1 0 0 | Robert Scott, Wood-street | 1 0 0 | |
| Henry Johnson, Acomb, near | 1 0 0 | James Clapham, New Mill | 1 0 0 | Caleb Crowther, M.D., Kirkgate | 1 0 0 | |
| John Swale | 1 0 0 | Benjamin Dawson | 1 0 0 | Charles Morton, Normanton, near | 1 0 0 | |
| Charles Robinson | 1 0 0 | John Harrison, New Mill | 1 0 0 | John Nettleton, Westgate | 1 0 0 | |
| Henry Richardson, Clemonthorpe | 1 0 0 | Henry Bentley | 1 0 0 | James Holdsworth and Sons, Wood-street | 1 0 0 | |
| William Cropper, Dringhouse | 1 0 0 | Thomas Parkinson | 1 0 0 | Daniel Haigh, Cheapside | 1 0 0 | |
| Four Friends | 1 0 0 | Joseph Brown | 1 0 0 | A Friend, No. 3 | 1 0 0 | |
| James Dillon, St. Sampson's-square | 1 0 0 | John Bateson | 1 0 0 | Joseph Rhodes, jun., manufacturer | 1 0 0 | |
| James Pratt, King's Staith | 1 0 0 | Wm. Parkinson, jun. | 1 0 0 | Workmen at the Tammy Hall | 1 0 0 | |
| Robert Lyons, Lendal | 1 0 0 | William North | 1 0 0 | Thomas Nichols, Northgate | 1 0 0 | |
| Henry Lyons, do. | 1 0 0 | Joseph Riley, West-house | 1 0 0 | John Oyston, Kirkgate | 1 0 0 | |
| A Friend | 1 0 0 | John Appleyard | 1 0 0 | Thomas Wood, Alverthorpe, near | 1 0 0 | |
| Geo. K. | 1 0 0 | George Teale | 1 0 0 | Simon Pickard, draper | 1 0 0 | |
| Wm. Winspear, St. Helen's-square | 1 0 0 | James Greenwood | 1 0 0 | Ebenezer Walker, Westgate | 1 0 0 | |
| Ellis and Birks, do. | 1 0 0 | Wm. Sheard | 1 0 0 | Thos. Holdsworth, King-street | 1 0 0 | |
| T. F. | 1 0 0 | John Parkinson, jun., grocer | 1 0 0 | Christ. Todd, Oil-mills | 1 0 0 | |
| W. H. | 1 0 0 | Wm. Ibbotson | 1 0 0 | James Kershaw, Westgate | 1 0 0 | |
| John Johnson, Messgate | 1 0 0 | John Marshall, New Mill | 1 0 0 | Thos. as Ledger, Northgate | 1 0 0 | |
| Charles Gibson, Parliament-street | 1 0 0 | John Rawnsley, sen. | 1 0 0 | George Willis, Market-p ace | 1 0 0 | |
| Thos. as Forth, Pavement | 1 0 0 | Joseph Atkinson, butcher | 1 0 0 | George Heald, Thornes, near | 1 0 0 | |
| A Friend | 1 0 0 | Joseph Wilkinson, Barhouse | 1 0 0 | Wm. Kendall, Westgate-moor | 1 0 0 | |
| Ditto | 1 0 0 | Thomas Denison, Moor-lane | 1 0 0 | George R. Smith, Westgate | 1 0 0 | |
| Ditto | 1 0 0 | Wm. Livingstone | 1 0 0 | John Gilderdale, Cross-square | 1 0 0 | |
| Mrs. Hamilton, Church-street | 1 0 0 | John Hatterley, Quarumby | 1 0 0 | Wm. Padgett, Fruit-market | 1 0 0 | |
| James H. Tuke, Castle-gate | 1 0 0 | John Haigh, sen., do. | 1 0 0 | John G. Wood, Cross-square | 1 0 0 | |
| John Pole, High One-gate | 1 0 0 | Mrs. Henry Walker, Lindley | 1 0 0 | Wm. Scarth, Westgate-common | 1 0 0 | |
| William Briggs, Parliament-street | 1 0 0 | Ely Scott, New North-road | 1 0 0 | Thomas Perkin, grocer, Kirkgate | 1 0 0 | |
| A Friend, Pavement | 1 0 0 | John Brook, Marshhouse, near | 1 0 0 | George Lee, Westgate | 1 0 0 | |
| John Caxson, do. | 1 0 0 | George Hanson, Crossland Moor | 1 0 0 | Francis Cardwell, druggist | 1 0 0 | |
| Wm. Walker, Clarence-street (2nd subscrip.) | 1 0 0 | James Mellor, Salendine Nook, near | 1 0 0 | A Friend, No. 1 | 1 0 0 | |
| James G. | 1 0 0 | Titus Calverley, do. | 1 0 0 | A Friend, No. 2 | 1 0 0 | |
| Edmund Richardson, Pavement | 1 0 0 | An Operative | 1 0 0 | Charles Locke, Snapethorpe Colliery | 1 0 0 | |
| Rob. Henry Noddings, 6, Mount-parado | 1 0 0 | Richard Dewhurst, Aspley | 1 0 0 | Thomas Haigh, grocer, Westgate | 1 0 0 | |
| Thos. Allis, Oswaldwick, near | 1 0 0 | Mrs. Richard Dewhurst, do. | 1 0 0 | A few Friends at Mr. Jacques's, Volunteer Inn | 1 0 0 | |
| Michael Charlton, St. Sampson's-square | 1 0 0 | Miss Sarah Dewhurst, do. | 1 0 0 | John Pickard, Kirkgate | 1 0 0 | |
| T. R. H. | 1 0 0 | Miss Ann Dewhurst, do. | 1 0 0 | John Marriott, Quebec-street | 1 0 0 | |
| Edward Calvert, 68, Mickie-gate | 1 0 0 | Richard Dewhurst, jun. do. | 1 0 0 | Abraham Ginn, corn-miller | 1 0 0 | |
| A. and H. Stanfield, do. | 1 0 0 | David Ainley, Golcar, near | 1 0 0 | John Holmes, Stamp-office-yard, Westgate | 1 0 0 | |
| Caleb Fletcher, Clemonthorpe | 1 0 0 | W. H. Roebuck, 21, John-street | 1 0 0 | Samuel Marshall, Westgate | 1 0 0 | |
| John Candler, Retreat, near | 1 0 0 | Richard Fawcett, at R. Abby's, Market-place | 1 0 0 | John Hampshire, Kirkgate | 1 0 0 | |
| Robert Smithson, Skelder-gate | 1 0 0 | Mrs. David Haigh | 1 0 0 | W. Bykes, grocer, do. | 1 0 0 | |
| Michael Varvill, Mickie-gate | 1 0 0 | Rowland Hall | 1 0 0 | Wm. Ask, do. | 1 0 0 | |
| Frazer Varvill, do. | 1 0 0 | Mr. Young, New-street | 1 0 0 | John Burton, St. John's | 1 0 0 | |
| Edward Snowden, Shambles | 1 0 0 | William Atkinson, Market-place | 1 0 0 | W. T. Dade, Drury-lane | 1 0 0 | |
| Joseph Swale, Lawrence-street | 1 0 0 | Smith and Morton, Longwood, Cherry-tree | 1 0 0 | John Wilkinson, Kirkgate | 1 0 0 | |
| James H. King, Walm-gate | 1 0 0 | James Oakes, Colne-bridge, near | 1 0 0 | Thomas Austwick, Cross-square | 1 0 0 | |
| Thomas Agar | 1 0 0 | John Littlewood, Honley, near | 1 0 0 | Wm. Scowby, Fruit-market | 1 0 0 | |
| Summers Varvill, Tanner-row | 1 0 0 | Booth Hepponstall, in Newsome-cross | 1 0 0 | Wm. Glover, Ship Inn | 1 0 0 | |
| Charles Epworth, Proctor's-court | 1 0 0 | George Binns, Lindley, near | 1 0 0 | Wm. Gill, Northgate | 1 0 0 | |
| A Corn-Law Repealer | 1 0 0 | James Lockwood | 1 0 0 | For Falvey | 1 0 0 | |
| Henry Wilberforce, Walm-gate | 1 0 0 | William Stockdale | 1 0 0 | For Falvey | 1 0 0 | |
| Thomas Swale, Lawrence-street | 1 0 0 | Joah Sugden | 1 0 0 | John Gully, Ackworth Park, near | 1 0 0 | |
| Michael Varvill, Mickie-gate (2nd subscription) | 1 0 0 | David Sugden | 1 0 0 | Luke Howard, Ackworth Villa, near | 1 0 0 | |
| Mr. Featherstone, Pavement | 1 0 0 | William Carter | 1 0 0 | Joseph F. Tempest, Ackworth Mount, near | 1 0 0 | |
| Edward Anderson, Stone-gate | 1 0 0 | Francis Middlehurst | 1 0 0 | Rev. C. E. Armstrong, Hensworth, near Pon- | 1 0 0 | |
| A Friend | 1 0 0 | Samuel Beaumont | 1 0 0 | terfract | 1 0 0 | |
| William Wood, Foss-gate | 1 0 0 | David Lockwood | 1 0 0 | Willoughby Wood, Campall Hall, near | 1 0 0 | |
| William M'Cabe, St. Saviour's-gate | 1 0 0 | John Lockwood | 1 0 0 | George F. Linney, Ackworth School, near | 1 0 0 | |
| T. J. Hart, Collier-gate | 1 0 0 | Robert Pitton | 1 0 0 | Small sums | 1 0 0 | |
| H. Thompson, Friends' School, Lawrence-street | 1 0 0 | J. T., a Free Trader | 1 0 0 | William Atley, Sana-street | 1 0 0 | |
| A Friend | 1 0 0 | The Misses Sugden | 1 0 0 | P. Brown, Villiers-street | 1 0 0 | |
| A Friend | 1 0 0 | William Midgley | 1 0 0 | J. M. Ogden, Bridge-street | 1 0 0 | |
| Mr. Briggs, tea dealer, Pavement | 1 0 0 | Stephen Leather | 1 0 0 | J. Campbell, Lambton-street | 1 0 0 | |
| Samuel Walker, Stone-gate | 1 0 0 | Richard Barnshaw | 1 0 0 | W. Braithwaite, High-street | 1 0 0 | |
| John Clemensha, Fisher-gate | 1 0 0 | Thomas Beaumont | 1 0 0 | W. Wade, do. | 1 0 0 | |
| A Friend | 1 0 0 | James Binns | 1 0 0 | Charles Murray, Sana-street | 1 0 0 | |
| A Friend to Free Trade | 1 0 0 | John Stringer | 1 0 0 | J. W. Ord, High-street | 1 0 0 | |
| A Friend (2nd subscription) | 1 0 0 | Joseph Rollinson | 1 0 0 | W. Henderson, draper, High-street | 1 0 0 | |
| A Repealer | 1 0 0 | Edmond Dyson | 1 0 0 | Anon. | 1 0 0 | |
| Joseph Mason, attorney, Monk-gate | 1 0 0 | William Haigh | 1 0 0 | J. Spoor, High-street | 1 0 0 | |
| A Corn-Law Repealer | 1 0 0 | Job Townend | 1 0 0 | James Joplin, Frederick-street | 1 0 0 | |
| John Bacon, Church-street | 1 0 0 | | | Mr. Wilkinson, chemist, High-street | 1 0 0 | |
| Small sums | 1 0 0 | | | | | |

| | |
|--|--------|
| J. Richardson, draper, do. | £1 1 0 |
| D. Loupoda, Norfolk-street | 5 5 0 |
| Thomas Pratt, Union-street | 5 5 0 |
| W. Catling, grocer, High-street | 0 10 0 |
| R. Wrightson, 141, do. | 1 0 0 |
| J. H. | 0 10 6 |
| A. Wilson, D'Arcy-terrace | 1 1 0 |
| J. Leadbitter, chemist, High-street | 0 5 0 |
| Anon. | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Newbitt, Tatham-street | 0 2 6 |
| Henry Wilson, High-street | 2 0 0 |
| G. Turner, King-street | 1 0 0 |
| F. Marshall, 500, High-street | 1 1 0 |
| W. Robinson, High-street | 1 0 0 |
| Free Trader | 1 0 0 |
| X. Y. Z. | 1 0 0 |
| "A Friend in need is a Friend indeed" | 0 5 0 |
| J. Yallowley, High-street | 0 2 6 |
| Geo. Matthews, do. | 0 5 0 |
| Anti-Ferrand | 0 2 6 |
| James Vint, Ryhope-lane | 1 1 0 |
| Charles Drury, High-street | 1 0 0 |
| W. T. Bell, do. | 1 0 0 |
| M. Kearney, Paine-lane | 1 0 0 |
| W. Meers, High-street | 0 5 0 |
| Benjamin Firth, Victoria Mill | 5 0 0 |
| Samuel Leppington, Brookfoot | 5 0 0 |
| John Rayner, Clifton | 1 0 0 |
| David Goldthorpe, do. | 1 0 0 |
| Thomas Blackburn | 1 0 0 |
| Joseph Blackburn | 1 0 0 |
| Samuel Pyrech | 1 0 0 |
| William Parker | 1 0 0 |
| Richard Wheatley | 1 0 0 |
| William Field | 1 1 0 |
| John Pollard, Ballife-bridge | 1 0 0 |
| J. Woodhead, Bramley-lane, Lightcliffe, near Halifax | 1 0 0 |
| Samuel Goldthorpe, Clifton | 0 10 0 |
| Charles Mann | 0 10 0 |
| Joseph Noble | 0 10 0 |
| Abraham Henson | 0 2 6 |
| John Burgess | 0 5 0 |
| A Friend | 0 5 0 |
| Richard Greenwood | 0 5 0 |
| Mr. Poynder | 0 5 0 |
| Thomas Jessop | 0 5 0 |
| Christopher Brook | 0 5 0 |
| Luke Noble | 0 2 6 |
| John Washington, Lightcliffe | 0 2 6 |
| Samuel Sunderland, Bramley-lane | 0 2 6 |
| Small sums | 0 6 0 |

Additional remittances have been received from Edinburgh, Glasgow, Stockport, Bolton, Hull, Dumfries, &c. The lists of names, and amounts of subscriptions, will be published next week.

Gains, St. Neot's, Feb. 4, 1844.

DEAR SIR,—I beg to enclose a cheque for £50, as my subscription for the present year.

In the two Cambridge papers will be seen full reports of the Anti-League meeting at Huntingdon. The subscription of £830 is large—they expect it to reach £1300; but, they ask themselves, "What is to be done with it now the Minister has declared to stand by us?" I should have been satisfied with a 5s. duty to end in none; but, Sir Robert Peel's declaration to stand by the sliding scale, like the Duke of Wellington's declaration against all reform, has narrowed the question, by throwing aside the fixed duty, and proving the just policy of the League in adhering, from the first, to a total repeal.—I remain, Sir, your most obedient servant,

JAMES DUNERLY.

To G. Wilson, Esq., Anti-Corn-Law League.

London, January 20, 1844.

SIR,—The benefits resulting from commercial freedom, or the right to buy and sell, respectively, in the most advantageous markets, though long advocated by writers on political economy, have, till lately, been scarcely understood or appreciated by the people. It remained for the Anti-Corn-Law League to simplify this foundation principle by its incontrovertible demonstrations, that the United Kingdom is almost as heavily taxed for the purposes of protection of divers minor interests as for the exigencies of the state.

Previously to 1840, the popular belief was, that we must unavoidably pay extravagantly for the necessities of life, because we were a highly-taxed nation. This fallacy is now at an end, and the disastrous results of "protection" in enhancing the costs of the necessities of life, without increasing the national revenue, has been demonstrated.

But, while the vast injuries resulting from the artificial value for corn have been unanswerably proved, the evils accruing from the same unjust principle in regard to colonial produce have been comparatively untouched—take for example sugar, one of the great staples for production of revenue. Heavily taxed as this article is, yielding an annual revenue of upwards of four millions sterling, the direct taxation is only less onerous than the tax for "protection," the direct duty being 25s. 2d. per cwt., the indirect duty (say the difference in price between similar qualities of foreign and colonial sugar) being about 20s. per cwt., equal upon the deliveries of the year to nearly four millions sterling; as palpable an inroad upon the comforts and pockets of the people as though extracted for the necessities of the state. The same vicious principle disfigures the tariff of 1842 in respect to coffee and other articles; but, costly as are the evils resulting from this system in their effects on the price of the many important commodities that come within its operation, they constitute perhaps the lightest portion of the grievance. The protective system drives nations from us; debars us of the right of consuming the cheaply-raised produce of some of the most fertile portions of the globe, and of transmitting our manufactures in exchange; it cramps alike the productive powers of the agriculturist, the energies of the manufacturer, the operations of the merchant, and the honest exertions of mechanics and labourers.

To your exertions, and those of the other talented and zealous leaders of the Anti-Corn-Law League, the nation is indebted for the illustration of the power of public opinion, as now demonstrated on this question. A few years since no statesman would have ventured to take office upon other than the avowed support of the protective system, both home and colonial; now, it may fairly be questioned whether one could be found to assume office pledged to the support of that pernicious system which it is the great aim and object of the League to destroy, and in furtherance of which I beg leave to enclose £100 as my subscription to its funds.

Your very obedient servant,

GEO. MOFFATT.

Geo. Wilson, Esq., Manchester.

ANTI-CORN-LAW ASSOCIATION.—HUDDERSFIELD, Feb. 6.—At a meeting of the Committee of the Huddersfield Anti-Corn-Law Association, held on the evening of Tuesday, Feb. 6, it was resolved:—"That, in consequence of the declarations recently made by Sir Robert Peel and Lord John Russell upon the subject of the Corn Laws, an immediate communication be sent to the Council of the League, assuring them of the unalterable determination of this committee never to compromise the fundamental principles of the Anti-Corn-Law League, nor to relax its efforts until the total and unconditional repeal of the Corn Laws is obtained. Signed, FRED. SCHWANN, Chairman."

WAKEFIELD.—On Friday last, one of the most enthusiastic meetings that was ever held in this town took place in the Music Saloon. Long before the hour (seven o'clock,) for the business to commence, the large room was densely crowded in every part, and numbers had to go away unable to gain admission. G. Craven, Esq., chairman of the association, was unanimously called to the chair. After a short but lucid speech, he called upon Mr. Charles Morton, who moved the first resolution, which was to the effect that the National Anti-Corn-Law League were entitled to the cordial support of the meeting for the advantages they had endeavoured to obtain for our trade and commerce. Mr. T. Holdsworth briefly seconded the proposition. Mr. Plint, of Leeds, ably supported the resolution, which was put and carried unanimously. Mr. Briggs, of Overton, moved the next resolution, which was, "That a subscription be made on behalf of the Great League Fund." Mr. Shaen, of Leeds, seconded the motion. Mr. Falvey, from the Anti-Corn-Law League, supported the last resolution. The chairman then announced subscriptions from the following gentlemen:—Daniel Gaskell, Esq., 50l.; Joseph Holdsworth, Esq., 20l.; Wm. Shaw, Esq., 20l.; James Micklethwaite, Esq., 20l.; George Craven, Esq., 10l.; Thomas Clayton, Esq., 10l.; from Ackworth, including 25l. from J. Gully, Esq., and 10l. from Luke Howard, Esq., and several smaller sums, 50l.; Messrs. Henry Briggs (second donation), 5l. 5s.; C. Morton, 3l.; Charles Watson, 3l.; Joseph Rhodes, 2l.; John Nettleton, 2l. 2s.; Christopher Todd, 1l. 1s.; Thomas Nichols, 1l. 1s.; James Kershaw, 1l.; Daniel Haigh, 2l.; a Friend, 2l.; John Flatman, 2l.; a Conservative, 1l. The total subscription at the meeting amounted to about 224l. Votes of thanks were then given to the chairman and the deputation, and the meeting broke up.—Leeds Times, Feb. 2.

DONCASTER.—In accordance with the announcement by hand-bills, a tea-party was held on Tuesday week, in the Concert-room, High-street, in this town, which was very numerous attended, by far the greater number present being females. This is the third of these occasions, and in the present instance there was no apparent decrease in the numbers. Four long tables were arranged the whole length of the room, and in the recess was a raised table for the chairman and speakers. The tables were presided over by about forty ladies, who performed the due honours of the tea table. The walls of the room and the front of the raised table were decorated with evergreens; and opposite to the chairman were some flags containing appropriate mottoes, among which were the following:—"Victoria, our beloved Queen." "The fair rose of England, the white rose of Yorkshire." "They cause him to go naked and without clothing, and take away the sheaf from the hungry." "The bread of the needy is his life; he that defraudeth him thereof is a man of blood." "Free Trade, the international law of the Almighty." "No monopoly." Willoughby Wood, Esq., occupied the chair. The meeting was first addressed by the chairman in some pertinent and able remarks. Mr. Chadwick, of Arksey, succeeded him in a humorous speech. Colonel Thompson next addressed the meeting, and was followed in an effective speech by Mr. Thomas Plint, of Leeds. The other speakers were Mr. Johnson and Mr. Hastie. A vote of thanks having been given to the chairman, it was announced that the subscriptions now raised in Doncaster amounted to £30, and it is believed that that sum will be increased to £100, nearly £30 more than was raised last year. After three cheers for the total repeal of the Corn Laws, the meeting separated.—Doncaster Gazette.

BINGLEY.—A deputation from the Bradford Anti-Corn-Law Association, accompanied by Mr. Murray, from the League, and Mr. Shaen, from Leeds, visited Bingley on Monday night, the 29th ult., for the purpose of diffusing information on the subject of the Corn Laws, and receiving any subscriptions which might still remain ungathered. The meeting was held in the building some time ago occupied as the Court-house, and was tolerably well attended by the inhabitants, especially by the working men. On the platform were John Smith, Esq., Morton; Thomas Smith, Esq., Morton; Robert Milligan, jun., Esq., Harden; Rev. J. A. Savage, Wilsden; Rev. Atherton, Bingley; Messrs. T. Jowett, W. Anderton, J. Sharp, and R. Whitley; and the gentlemen of the respective deputations. The Rev. Mr. Savage presided, and addressed the meeting. The meeting was also addressed by Mr. Murray, Mr. Shaen, and Mr. J. Yates, of Bradford. The chairman then read an excellent letter from Walter Milligan, Esq., who was not able to be present owing to the state of his health, in which he expressed his warm interest in the cause, and confirmed it by signifying his intention of subscribing 10l. in addition to 25l. already contributed by the firm of Milligan and Jowett at the Bradford meeting. The result of the subscription was as follows:—Milligan and Jowett, 10l.; Wm. Anderton, 10l.; the Chairman, 5l.; John Smith, Esq., of Morton, 5l.; in addition to 10l. given at Morton; Jonas Sharp, 5l.; R. Whitley, 1l.; Wm. Leach, Harden, 10s.; Rev. W. Atherton, 5s.; Josh. Waddington, 2s. 6d.; Wm. Hollingdrake, 2s. 6d.; seven men in Milligan and Jowett's employment, 1l. for the League; collected in hats, 4s. 2d.—Bradford Observer.

KEIGHLEY.—A meeting was held at Keighley, on Tuesday evening, the 30th ult., in a large room at the Hare and Hounds Inn. Many of the more influential tradesmen of the town were on the platform, including Messrs. John Brigg, John Craven, Samuel Clapham, Jos. Craven, S. Hall, Butterfields, — Gibson, J. Town, F. Smith, Esq. Messrs. A. Prentice and Murray, of Manchester, and Wm. Byles, of Bradford, attended as a deputation from the League. Mr. Joseph Craven was unanimously called to the chair, and, having briefly opened the proceedings, called on Mr. W. Byles, who stated the reasons which had induced the Bradford Anti-Corn-Law Association to convene the meeting. The meeting was then addressed by Messrs. Murray and Prentice; after which the chairman announced the following subscriptions:—Messrs. Butterfield, Brothers, 50l.; Messrs. J. and J. Craven, 50l.; Mr. S. Clapham, 20l.; Mr. John Brigg, 20l.; Mr. Proctor Hall, 10l.; Mr. Josh. Town, 10l.; Mr. Wm. Lund, 10l.; a Friend, 20s.; F. Smith, 20s.; a Stranger, 5s.; collected in hats, 3s.—Ibid.

OLDHAM.—On Tuesday last, the Oldham committee of the Anti-Corn-Law Association forwarded their second remittance to the great League Fund, which, with the former payment, makes the very handsome sum now remitted £769 4s. A third remittance will be forwarded in a few days, and it is ultimately expected that the subscriptions will exceed £1000. Last year the amount paid in to the £50,000 fund from Oldham was only 600 guineas.—Manchester Guardian.

ACKWORTH.—A meeting of the friends of Free Trade was held at this village on Thursday evening last, at seven o'clock. John Gully, Esq., in the chair. Willoughby Wood, Esq., of Campsall Hall, moved the first resolution, showing the progress of the Anti-Corn-Law League, its fitness to accomplish the object it seeks to attain, that all monopoly was an injustice, and that its removal would be a great boon to the country. The motion, approving of the Anti-Corn-Law League, was seconded by Mr. Simeon Haggas, and carried unanimously. Josh. F. Tempest moved the next resolution, which was to raise a subscription in aid of the League Fund, and was seconded by Mr. George F. Linney, and carried unanimously. Mr. Charles Morton, of Normanton, then came forward, and in a speech full of dispassionate reasoning and sound argument, showed the bad effects of all monopolies, and the fallacy of the arguments advanced in favour of their continuance. After thanks being moved to the chairman for his attendance, by Mr. William Sewell, the subscription list was opened, and a committee appointed to carry forward the object of the meeting. The amount already subscribed, deducting all expenses, is £40 4s., which is no mean sum for an agricultural village.—Ibid.

BARNARDCASTLE.—On Friday evening, the 26th ult., a public repeal meeting was held in the Union-hall, Barnardcastle. The company was very numerous, consisting chiefly of operatives, to whom great praise is due for their active exertions in all our Corn-Law movements. Mr. James Knapton was called to the chair; who, in opening the meeting, stated that the Barnardcastle Association was at present in a very prosperous condition, its patrons almost daily increasing, and that their zeal in the cause (considering the late depression in trade) was proved from the very liberal contributions he had the pleasure of presenting from the various manufactories in the town, amounting to £22. Addresses were also delivered by Messrs. Atkinson, Winter, Cully, Rodgers, and Cardwell, bearing chiefly on the operation of the present Corn Laws on the working class, and on the object of the great League Fund. At the conclusion subscriptions were collected, amounting to £25, being nearly double that of the previous year.—Tyne Mercury.

BRISTOL.—On Monday evening last a meeting of the Bristol Branch of the Anti-Corn-Law League was held at the public rooms, Broadmead. George Thomas, Esq., presided and addressed the meeting, which was also addressed by Gabriel Goldney, Esq., a gentleman of Conservative politics, who, in the commencement of an excellent speech, stated that he rose, in obedience to the call made upon him, to express his utter detestation of the opprobrious epithets which had been applied to the Anti-Corn-Law League by the Conservative press of the City. He could give no stronger proof that the question was not a party one than by his uniting, as he did, with gentlemen from whom he materially differed on political subjects. After a short speech from Harman Visger, Esq., the Chairman, in the course of a few additional observations, said he knew there were many gentlemen in the City of the same political sentiments as Mr. Goldney, who yet, like him, were opposed to the Corn Laws, and who, though they had not come forward like him, would still aid in raising the League Fund of £100,000. (Hear, hear.) The arrangements for holding a large tea meeting for that purpose were not yet completed, and it would probably be some time before it could be held, but such a meeting would certainly take place; before that, however, another meeting similar to the present would be convened. (Hear, hear.) The Chairman then left the chair, and the meeting broke up.

SOUTHAMPTON.—An Association for the Diffusion of the Principles of Free Trade has lately been formed in this town, and on Tuesday evening a public meeting was held in connexion with the association, at the Long Rooms, a place capable of accommodating upwards of 1000 persons. At the hour for commencing the meeting the room was filled with a respectable audience, and, although the public were admitted indiscriminately without tickets, but one hand was held up against the Free-Trade resolution. The chair was taken by F. Cooper, Esq., who introduced to the meeting Mr. A. L. Saul, of the Anti-Corn-Law League. Mr. Saul proceeded to deliver an able and argumentative address, exposing, in a lucid manner, the evils of monopoly, and combating with effect the assertions of the opponents of Free Trade, as to the effect of a repeal of the Corn Laws on the working classes. After Mr. Saul had concluded, Mr. Richard Andrews, the eminent coach-builder of Southampton, addressed the meeting in a speech replete with humour and sound sense, during which the room rang with alternate peals of laughter and the loudest plaudits. Mr. Andrews proposed a resolution, approving of the formation and objects of the association, which was ably seconded by Dr. Evans. Mr. Ekless, yeoman, of Bursledon, was then called for, and spoke at some length. He gave a graphic description of the proceedings at two meetings of "Farmers' Friends," held at Fareham and Winchester, to oppose the League, and at which he had created confusion in the ranks of the landowners and their tools, by proposing a total repeal of the Corn Laws as the best measure for the benefit of the farmer. The meeting was also shortly addressed by Mr. W. Lankester and other gentlemen. At the close a working-man put some questions, which were answered by Mr. Saul entirely to the satisfaction of the audience. Votes of thanks were given to Mr. Saul and the chairman, and the meeting separated.

ANTI-LEAGUE MEETING AT DORCHESTER.

A meeting was held in the Town Hall, Dorchester, on Saturday the 3rd of February, to "take into consideration the best constitutional means to be adopted for defeating the further progress and ruinous intentions of the Anti-Corn-Law League." The meeting was called for twelve o'clock, but, such was the interest excited, that, at half-past twelve, not a single person beside the writer of this notice was present. When the proceedings commenced, there were, including clergymen, lawyers, surgeons, &c., 68 persons in the room, and the number increased afterwards to about 120. We speak confidently on this head, having taken the trouble to count, though, from what we have heard, we have no doubt the Monopoliist organs of this neighbourhood will give a very different statement.

JOHN HAYNE, Esq., of Fordington, was called to the chair. He stated that they had met for the purpose of forming a society for the protection of agriculture. In the course of events they had often to observe that out of evil comes good; thus, the Anti-Corn-Law League had been of great service in uniting the agriculturists, and binding them together in opposition to further changes of the Corn Laws. (Cheers.) The League had attempted to sever the link that united landlord and tenant; but, finding the farmers too wide-awake to be duped, they had attempted to work on the labourers, and set them against farmers and landlords both. He held in his hand a newspaper containing an account of an Anti-Corn-Law meeting lately held at Newcastles.

J. WHITTLE, Esq., of Toller: A revolutionary meeting you mean.

MR. HAYNE: At this meeting the gallery gave way. (This announcement was received with a shout of exultation, accompanied by a few cries of "Hush, hush.") He merely mentioned this fact on account of the remark it called forth from a speaker at the meeting, who considered that it was emblematic of the downfall of the Corn Laws; but he (Mr. H.) thought it might more correctly be viewed as an omen of the downfall of the League. (Cheers.) He was an importer of corn to some extent himself, and he held in his hand a sample of wheat which had cost him 31s. per quarter at Dantzic. The freight and other charges amounted to 3s. 9d. For this wheat he could easily get 58s. or 59s. per quarter, whilst he could obtain for wheat grown in Fordington-field, a sample of which he also held in his hand, only 49s. A fixed duty of 8s., therefore, would be no effectual protection. After some further unimportant remarks, he said they had assembled in self-defence, which was the first law of nature, to frustrate the machinations of that vile unconstitutional body, the Anti-Corn-Law League. They wished well to the manufacturing interest, but the Anti-Corn-Law League they set at defiance. (Loud cheers.)

MR. WHITTLE: Can you tell us anything about American flour, Mr. Hayne; how will that affect us?

MR. HAYNE: Oh, that's settled now—it's done, and we can't help it. Our best plan is to stick to things as they are.

Several resolutions were then moved and seconded, denouncing the League, and demanding continued protection for agriculture.

When one of these resolutions was put, a gentleman, sitting at the table taking notes, was observed to hold up his hand against it. His name having been requested, he gave it as "Rev. Francis Bishop, of Warrington," adding, at the same time, that he was "a member of the Anti-Corn-Law League." This announcement occasioned great uproar. The above-named Mr. Whittle exclaimed, in a state of great excitement, "Let us serve the League as he deserves," intimating by his gestures his rudely meaning too plainly to be mistaken. There were, however, some gentlemen in the room, who cried "Shame" at the proposition, and caused even the proposer to hold down his head.

J. F. HODGES, Esq., a wine merchant of Dorchester, came forward and said that he thought a few remarks on the merits of the general question of Free Trade would not then be out of place, especially as they had a deputation from the League present.

MR. BISHOP begged to offer a word by way of correction. Though, as he had stated, a member of the League, he had come to that meeting entirely on his own responsibility. He was, however, quite willing to discuss the question, and would merely then add that he had the interests of agriculture quite as much at heart as any gentleman in that room. (Laughter.) Gentlemen might laugh—the idea, perhaps, was new to them—but he would presently prove that the members of the League were the farmers' best and truest friends.

MR. HODGES then resumed, and spoke at some length in favour of the principle of protection, stating, in the course of his remarks, that he was glad they had a member of the League present, for they would show him that they could give a reason for their opinions, and that they were willing to discuss and defend them manfully, and in the spirit of fairness and justice.

MR. BISHOP rose and declared his willingness to accept the last speaker's offer to discuss the question before the meeting, but he was immediately met with great clamour and confusion, and cries of "We won't hear the League," &c. "Gentlemen," said Mr. B., "is this your fairness?—is this your manliness?—is this your justice? (Great confusion.) I cannot believe, gentlemen, after what has passed—after the challenge to discuss the question that has been given, after my acceptance of that challenge—I cannot believe that here, in an assembly of Englishmen, I shall be denied that hearing to which I am so unquestionably entitled. (A few cries of "Bravo," drowned by the hissing and hooting of the great body of the meeting.) Am I to understand, then, that you will hear only one side? (A voice: "This is not the place for a clergyman.") Tell your clerical friends behind you that," said Mr. B. "The last speaker has said that you were glad to see a member of the League. Am I to understand that you are glad to see but afraid to hear him? (Great confusion.) I appeal to you, Sir," said Mr. Bishop, turning to the chairman, "to obtain me a hearing."

THE CHAIRMAN said he must leave it to the meeting.

MR. BISHOP: I appeal to you, Mr. Hodges, to quiet your friends.

MR. HODGES: I've not the meeting under my control.

MR. BISHOP: But make the attempt: if you are so anxious for a discussion, try your powers of persuasion on your friends, or I shall think your courage has all oozed out at your fingers' ends.

THE CHAIRMAN then intimated to Mr. Bishop that, as it was market-day, it would be most inconvenient to protract the meeting; he had therefore decided, in accordance with the wishes of the great majority present, that Mr. B. could not be heard.

MR. BISHOP said that he thought the decision a most extraordinary and unjust one, but, of course, he could not do otherwise than abide by it.

One or two other resolutions were then simply proposed and seconded, a committee formed, and a subscription talked of, but no names were named at the meeting.

The proceedings have excited considerable interest, and we hear the matter will not be allowed to drop yet, since we understand it is Mr. Bishop's intention to give a lecture in Dorchester on the Corn Laws, especially in reference to their bearings on the interests of the farmers.

DEFEAT OF THE ANTI-LEAGUERS.—On Saturday the farmers of Dorsetshire met at Richmond, and were to have carried out the Anti-League policy, but the connoisseurs of the scheme reckoned without their host. The Earl of Zetland, whose intention to be present was generally known, attended, as did also several persons of importance connected with the landed interest. A resolution was moved by the officers of the meeting, word for word similar to the Derby resolution; but the noble earl made an excellent Free-Trade speech, and showed that the sliding-scale did no good to the tenant-farmer. As his whole property is landed, the Yorkshire farmers began to consider that all the fears of the monopolists were not to be taken as gospel, and the meeting was adjourned, without the putting of the first resolution. Of course the whole string fell through, and the conveners of the meeting retired to meditate on the fate that awaits those whose estates are encumbered with wives' pin-money and daughters' settlements.—Chronicle.

MR. JONES LOYD ON THE ANTI-LEAGUE MOVEMENT.

TO J. W. SUTHERLAND, ESQ.

DEAR SIR,—I beg to acknowledge your circular letter, inviting me to attend a preliminary meeting of the landed proprietors, farmers, and others of the eastern division of the county of Surrey, with the view to the formation of a general "Society for the Protection of British Agriculture, in opposition to the mischievous designs of the Anti-Corn-Law League," and further requesting, "that in the event of my being unable to attend, I would oblige the committee with my views on the subject."

Having been prevented, by my absence from home, and by the late period at which your letter reached my hands, from attending the meeting in question, I proceed to comply with the latter part of your request.

The prosperity of British agriculture is a cause in which I should gladly enlist myself; it is, I am convinced, indissolubly connected with the wellbeing of the community at large, for no great interest of this empire can suffer alone. The prostration of agriculture must inevitably involve a corresponding depression of every other important interest of the country. This consideration, as well as motives of a more immediately personal and selfish character, would lead me cordially to co-operate with you in the formation of the proposed society, could I bring myself to believe that the agricultural interest is at this moment menaced with any real injustice, or that the measures by which it is supposed to be protected are really efficient for that purpose, and not inconsistent with the equal justice which is due to other classes of the community.

The maintenance of the present Corn Laws is usually meant by the expression "protection to British agriculture;" and if this is the purpose to which the efforts of the proposed society are to be directed, I must at once declare that my views on this subject are directly opposed to those of the meeting which you represent. I cannot acquiesce either in the policy or in the justice of any attempt to protect my own individual interest as a landed proprietor, or to uphold the welfare of that class in general, by laws which restrict the free supply of the food of the people, and which are intended to compel them to purchase in a dearer market the necessities of life, which it is apprehended they might otherwise obtain from a cheaper source. To whatever extent the present Corn Laws, by producing that effect, protect British agriculture, it is clear that they must do so at the expense of the British consumer, that is, of the people at large. They are made to pay more for their food than would otherwise be necessary; and the sum thus taken from them is supposed to go to the benefit of the agriculturist, or, more correctly speaking, of the landed proprietor. The difference between the natural price of an article of general consumption, the supply of which is subjected to no legislative restraint, and the higher price of a similar article, the supply of which is restricted by protective laws, is a tax imposed upon the whole community; and the amount of that difference either goes into the pockets of the producers of the protected article, or is altogether lost, being productive of benefit to no class. As a landed proprietor, I am naturally anxious to protect my own interest by all just means; nevertheless, I shrink from the responsibility of seeking protection through this channel. There seems to me to be injustice involved in it, against which protection is indeed needed, not, however, to the British landowner, but to the British people.

Protective laws, in proportion as they are effectual for their intended purpose, must necessarily give the character of monopoly to the protected trade; and monopoly, it has been most justly observed, is the parent of scarcity, of dearth, and of uncertainty. The injury thus inflicted by these laws upon the British people as consumers seems to me to admit of no question. But I would submit to you, whether, as a preliminary step to any further proceedings, it would not be well for us as landed proprietors to examine carefully whether these laws, thus at once offensive and injurious to other classes, are really productive of the benefit to our particular interest which has been usually ascribed to them. The agriculturist is a dealer in the produce of the soil; and the prosperity of his, as of every other trade, must be dependent upon the prosperous condition of his customers. The whole mass of the population constitute the customers of the agriculturist; and, therefore, whatever improves the general condition of the people, whatever increases the demand for their labour, and thereby causes a rise of their wages, must promote in the most effectual manner the prosperity of the agriculturist. Our population is annually increasing at a fearful rate; if a corresponding increase of employment be not found, that population must ultimately become a charge upon our land, and thus prove ruinous to our interests as landowners; but if, by the removal of obstructions which protective laws create, the extension of our trade, and the consequent demand for labour, be made to keep pace with the increase of our population, then the number and resources of those who constitute the customers of the agriculturist will progressively increase.

It is in this extension of the market for our products, and in the improved condition of those who are our customers, we shall find the best security for the present wellbeing, and the only safe ground of hope for the further progress of agricultural prosperity. In this manner it is, by a system of free competition, and equal exemption of all interests from pernicious interference, that the welfare of each class is indissolubly bound up with the general prosperity of all. Protective laws necessarily array the different classes of the community in jealous hostility with each other; they diminish the general wealth of the country, by interrupting the natural distribution of its labour and capital; they tend to diminish both profits and wages, thus impoverishing the markets in which the products of agriculture must be sold; and the benefit which they confer on the protected trade is in all cases apparent rather than real, securing to it a fitful and transient, not a steady and permanent prosperity.

Prices forcibly raised above their natural level by fiscal protections are naturally fluctuating and precarious; they constitute a very inadequate compensation for the real and permanent wealth which we might otherwise find in the improved cultivation of our land, augmenting the supply, whilst the simultaneous increase of the population and wealth of the empire extends the demand for, and by legitimate means raises the price of, all agricultural produce.

To relieve British agriculture from the odium which must ever attach to the appearance even of injustice; to substitute for the debilitating influence of artificial protection that steady and healthy vigour which can arise only from free competition and self-dependence; and to save the landowner from the danger to which he exposes himself, by seeking a delusive protection in measures which, by impoverishing his customers, are really undermining the foundation of his own prosperity—these are the avowed, and I know no reason for supposing that they are not the real and only designs of the Anti-Corn-Law League. I cannot concur with you in designating them as mischievous designs. They seem to me to be founded in reason; they would, I am confident, be found to be really protective and beneficial to our interests; and they are supported by a weight of argument and authority which, in my judgment, will render all attempts to resist them utterly hopeless.

Under these circumstances I would submit to your calm consideration, whether we shall not better prove our discretion, as well as our regard for what is justly due to others, by adopting their views rather than by resisting them. They are calculated to establish the interests of agriculture upon the sound and durable basis of reason, of justice, and of freedom, and in them alone I believe that true and effectual protection of our interests is to be found. In the laws, upon which too many of us at present rely, I can place no confidence; what is unjust and baneful to the rest of the community cannot be permanently beneficial to us. Our present interests are placed by these laws in a precarious, because in an artificial state; our native energies are weakened by unnatural protection; and the laws, which we so blindly and so fatally embrace, by undermining the general prosperity, are endangering that which has raised British agriculture to its present condition, and the permanence of which can alone preserve it from the most ruinous relapse.

I have the honour to be, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

S. JONES LOYD.

CORN LAWS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MORNING CHRONICLE.

SIR,—I hope you will continue to give ample reports of the speeches delivered at the Anti-League or Protection Societies, as it is of the greatest importance that publicity be given to the arguments used in favour of protection. Nothing could be more advantageous to our cause than the establishment of these Protection Societies. The League have been hitherto engaged in combating the arguments of the monopolists as expressed occasionally at some agricultural meeting, in their newspapers, or in Parliament; but now that these Protection Associations take their stand on what we consider the fallacious grounds for protection adduced in the speeches at these meetings, we have a tangible point of attack. The League are prepared to meet them, not by answering the abuse lavished on that body, but by the force of reason. Their arguments, with our answers to them, will be circulated amongst the electors in the district where the meeting has taken place. Thus the farmers will be enabled to judge for themselves; and if they do so the result is certain. In corroboration I may mention a fact which has come within my own knowledge. There is an estate to the west of Perth upon which all the tenants, amounting to about thirty, advocate the principle of free trade, with the exception of one farmer. This man attended the meeting at Perth, and was so thoroughly convinced by what he there heard that not only did he return to his home a convert to the cause of Free Trade, but he was found next day busy at the work of conversion among the neighbouring farmers. I do not think the English farmers will again be so easily driven to the poll as they were at the last election, after being betrayed as they have been; getting, instead of their high protection, a tariff, a lower sliding scale, and the income-tax; the latter, perhaps, is, besides the land-tax, the only burden which can with truth be said to press more especially on the land. The arguments brought forward at these meetings in favour of protection are, generally speaking, the very ones we should use against it. At Northampton, for instance, it was stated as a fact, "that the farmers obtain less interest for their money than any other class of her Majesty's subjects." That they do so there is no denying, and that hundreds have, within the last 20 years, been ruined, and fallen back to the condition of common labourers, or been compelled to emigrate, is another fact which cannot be denied; but all this was and is taking place under a protective law, said to be maintained for their own exclusive benefit. It is impossible to name any trade which has thriven under protection in the same proportion as it does when free, or comparatively free. Take the silk trade for example. Now, have the exports increased, even to France, from which competition was so much dreaded, since the duties have been reduced? On the other hand, have the West India colonies benefited by protection, notwithstanding the twenty millions received by the proprietors—a sum double what they expected? It has been proved before the import duties committee that at this moment we sacrifice at least three millions by the maintenance of the sugar monopoly. I cannot believe, when the case is once understood, that this country will much longer submit to such a sacrifice of revenue, in addition to the large sum already paid, or persist in depriving the lower classes of such a blessing as cheap sugar. That such is the opinion of the West India proprietors is evident from the fact that they are now turning their attention to improved methods of cultivation. I met at the meeting of the Highland Society a gentleman, who came for the express object of procuring information, who assured me that he found that, by the use of agricultural implements and machinery, he could produce sugar two-thirds cheaper than by the present system. It is an impression but too prevalent amongst the farmers, that protection and high prices are synonymous terms, forgetting that under the last corn bill the duty on oats and barley is but trifling, and that wheat comes in most disadvantageously for them at 4s. duty, or, may be, less—causing a fluctuation in the price, that I have sold wheat of crop 1842, immediately after the harvest, at 45s., having to compete with the influx of foreign grain; whilst, by storing it, as the corn-dealers are now doing, for seven months, I got 68s. But really, when we are told at such a meeting as the one at Northampton, "that the Corn Laws were as much the right and property of the farmer as were his title-deeds the property of Lord Spencer"—for "farmer" read "landlord," they and the farm-labourers being always made the scape-goat—what are we to think of the ignorance on the subject displayed by those who cheered such an assertion? Is it possible that they have never read or heard of the manner in which the Corn Law was passed in 1815, when the landowners, commanding a majority in both Houses, called upon the Government to bring in a bill, the object of which was to keep up their rents to the war prices, by preventing the importation of foreign corn, and consequently raising the price of the people's food—that this iniquitous bill was hurried through Parliament, as stated by the speakers of that day, with the most indecent haste, time being refused for the re-signing of petitions which had been rejected on a point of form; and that such was the feeling against it, that the Houses of Parliament were surrounded with troops and artillery, and even the Government of that day, uncertain whether it would be safe to force it through Parliament, employed spies to ascertain the temper of the people, so that it has been truly said that the law of 1815 was carried at the point of the bayonet? Are we, then, to be told that the farmers have a prescriptive right to the Corn Law, when it is a fact that at the time of its passing they were opposed to it, a petition from Wiltshire being signed in the shortest possible time by 25,000 people, as they said, and said with truth, that it was a question of rent, and therefore the landlord's question?

Your obedient servant,

KINNAIRD.

Rosale Priory, Jan. 31.

The following letter, addressed by Colonel Gore Langton to the electors of East Somerset, whom he has represented for upwards of thirty years in Parliament, will be perused with interest by our readers.

TO THE CONSTITUENCY OF THE EASTERN DIVISION OF THE COUNTY OF SOMERSET.

"GENTLEMEN,—I cannot refrain from now expressing to you my opinion on the subject of those demonstrations into which it is sought to lead you, in opposition to the principles advocated by the Anti-Corn-Law League.

Satisfied that such demonstrations cannot prevent the speedy triumph of Free-Trade principles, I would caution you against meetings not having for their object the enlightenment of the public mind on a great question, but calculated to excite the passions and prejudices of class against class, which may continue to distract and disturb us when the occasion that elicited them shall have wholly passed away.

"If we look at the proceedings which have characterized similar meetings in other counties, we see little to imitate, but much to shun—assertion without proof, declamation without argument, and personal invective without dignity or moderation." The public are too intelligent not to recognise the real promoters of these demonstrations, nor are they to be deceived by the appearance of tenants-as if to swell the numbers of the assembled. The landlords, as a body, are ardent supporters of the Corn Laws; I firmly believe they take a short-sighted view of their interests. In this matter they are opposed to Lord Spencer, and other large landed proprietors—men the direct representatives of the landed interest, since to great agricultural experience they unite the ability to take a comprehensive view of the complicated relations of society.

"In order to explain some of the phenomena which have attended these demonstrations, we must reflect that, under the operation of the Corn Laws, rents have risen, while the capital of the tenant has been yielding less and less profit, and the condition of the labouring class has evidently been deteriorating. Hence the exertions of the landlord contrasting with the apathy of the peasant, the suggestions of the zealous steward meeting on the part of the tenant no active consent, but a cold and passive acquiescence.

"Gentlemen, no one more laments than I do the necessity for such bodies as the Anti-Corn-Law League; but experience has taught us that attention to class-interests is the predominant feature of the Legislature, and that no measure of great and general concern can be carried without such aid.

"Our rulers seem wholly free from any animating predilection for justice, and incapable of seeking for rules of conduct in an enlightened anticipation of our future history.

"It must ever be borne in mind that a repeated refusal to remove the crying injustice of monopolies gave birth to the League. The able and intelligent leaders of that powerful body found a large field for the amelioration of man lying before them; they entered on its culture, the harvest is now ripening, and they have the satisfaction to think that by their hands was planted in the once sterile soil the germ of great and permanent good.

"I am, gentlemen, your obliged and humble servant,

"WM. GORE LANGTON.

"Grosvener-square, Feb. 8, 1844."

AGRICULTURE.

A TOUCHSTONE FOR MONOPOLISTS.

The advocates of the Corn Law loudly proclaim that the monopoly they seek to uphold is not a landlord's question. So said the Marquis of Salisbury to his tenants, in language sufficiently plain to those unhappy dependents. So lords and squires have asserted in most of the agricultural districts; and tenant-farmers have been evoked to meet, to subscribe, and to petition for the maintenance of the Corn Law, upon the express ground that it is essential to their prosperity and that of their labourers. Yet, despite of all this noble and worshipful assertion, notwithstanding all this meeting and subscribing and petitioning, a feeling of deep dissatisfaction pervades the minds of the occupying tenants. Doubts and anxieties prevail amongst them, and, even where they applaud their landlords' abuse of the League, they don't find their doubts resolved or their anxieties relieved. On the contrary, half of them would gladly make an end of the matter, and would accept Free Trade as a far less evil than the present state of uncertainty. Not one tenant-farmer in ten believes, whatever may be his wishes, that the free trade in corn can be long postponed. Moreover, farmers have many old and rankling grievances—for instance, insecure tenures, game laws, and the like—which they are beginning to see are closely connected with the Corn Laws; and assuredly all these evils have their root in a system which could not exist for a year after the repeal of the Corn Law. However, the landowners have got up societies in all directions, and have subscribed considerable sums of money, which are to be employed in teaching the farmers that they have a large interest in the monopoly of grain. It is known that the monopoly was created with the avowed purpose of keeping up rents, but lecturers and tract-writers are now to be engaged to show how the Corn Laws have kept up farming profits and agricultural wages.

Now, all this looks very plausible; but how does it happen that the noble and right honourable and worshipful proprietors of land, who have not merely majorities in Parliament, but may be said to form the Parliament, do not resort to the shorter and simpler process of a Parliamentary committee? Why should they have recourse to such cumbrous machinery as rural meetings and county subscriptions, to effect that imperfectly which they might do effectually by a select committee of the House of Commons? That the present is a period of agricultural distress is admitted. There are all the ordinary symptoms of such distress; landlords are throwing back their ten, fifteen, or twenty per cent. upon the tenants' rents; dissatisfaction with the corn and provision laws is loudly expressed amongst certain of the agricultural classes; farming labourers are turned off, and the poor-rates in the rural districts have fearfully increased; and destruction of agricultural capital through depreciated prices is a constant theme with the Pro-Corn-Law speakers. All that occurred in 1814, in 1821, in 1833, and in 1836, has happened now; yet then we heard the most urgent demands for Parliamentary inquiry—demands which were in each of those periods instantly complied with—but now not a whisper of such an inquiry has been heard. Why is this? How is this change to be accounted for? Never was there a time, if the views of the Protectionists are sound, when it behoved them to take the most effective means to demonstrate the soundness of such views; never were charges against the Corn Laws so strenuously or so perseveringly urged as at present; and never were those charges so widely believed to be just and true as now. Never before were the motives of the upholders of the restrictive system so seriously impugned. And the ground taken against the Corn Laws is somewhat different from that occupied on former occasions. Free Trade is no longer a commercial, a manufacturers', or a consumers' question; all that has been conceded. The dispute has now been narrowed to the single point of whether or not the tenant-farmers and farm-labourers have been gainers by the Corn Laws. That those classes have been most grievously injured by restriction, and the system which restriction has induced, has been boldly and broadly asserted by the Free Traders, and not a few of the most eminent agriculturists have re-echoed that assertion.

If there be no truth in that assertion, if it be made in error or in ignorance, what so fit an instrument for its exposure as a Parliamentary committee? Yet not a syllable has been heard in favour of such an inquiry at any of the numerous "protection" meetings. This strange neglect has, however, been supplied by Mr. Cobden, who, on Tuesday night, gave notice in his place in the House of Commons, that he should shortly move—"THAT A SELECT COMMITTEE BE APPOINTED TO INQUIRE INTO THE EFFECTS OF PROTECTIVE DUTIES ON IMPORTS UPON THE INTERESTS OF TENANT-FARMERS AND FARM-LABOURERS IN THIS COUNTRY."

This motion will prove the touchstone of the landlords' honesty. If any member who has taken part in the "protection" meetings shall vote against this motion, he must be set down as a dishonest politician—a brawler who asserts that which he does not himself believe. Let the tenant-farmers who have been made cats-paws at these meetings mark well the conduct of their landlord-leaders; let them observe how they treat this motion; let them remember that the obstinate refusal of the landowners in Parliament to investigate the question of the Corn Laws has done as much to make converts to Free-Trade opinions as all the exertions of the League. And here is an offer to meet the Protectionists upon their own ground. Dare they refuse the investigation? Can they not call farmers, ay, and labourers, from every rural district in England, and show by their evidence what protection has done for the industrious capitalists and workmen in husbandry? But what if they refuse the challenge? How many tenant-farmers will then continue to march under such leaders? We shall not be surprised, even after all the out-door bluster of the landowners, if they should meet this motion by silent votes; but, if they do, their silence will be self-condemnation. To obtain such a committee of inquiry at this time would be most important to that most helpless, that non-represented body of men, the English tenant-farmers. They could, before such a committee, state their own grievances; they could show how they are urged on to effect permanent improvements and scientific farming with yearly holdings; how they are vexed and annoyed and plundered by game and gamekeepers; they could show how, in the fluctuations of price which have occurred under the successive Corn Laws, they have borne the brunt of the loss, while their landlords have merely thrown back a trumpery, compassionate per centage. Yet much of this may be effected in the debate itself, and for that purpose every intelligent farmer who understands the extent to which he suffers from the Corn Laws, and all other persons well versed in the subject of his intended motion, should furnish Mr. Cobden with facts and data illustrative of the evils inflicted upon the tenant-farmer by monopoly, and by the existing system of land-renting. And whatever be the fate of the motion much good will result from it; for should it be successful the tenantry of the country will have the opportunity of disclosing the real operation of the Corn Laws upon their business; or, on the other hand, should it fail through the opposition of the Pro-Corn-Law majority in the House of Commons, farmers and farm-labourers will understand the real value of all the ardent professions of anxiety for their welfare which have been of late so profusely dealt in by the landed aristocracy. Either way this motion will prove the monopolists' touchstone.

THE LANDLORDS' CRY FOR AID.

The meetings in favour of the Corn Laws, which have been everywhere got up by the landowners, have during the past ten days presented little of novelty. There has been the same vulgar abuse of the League—the same confident reliance on rural ignorance and enforced servility—the same reckless disregard of facts and experience—and the same "plentiful lack" of argument, which hitherto have been the characteristics of all these monopolists' gatherings. The Protectionists have obviously staked their all upon this throw; forgetful of the cautious reserve which the more wary upholders of aristocrat-produced scarcity and landlord domination have for some years past maintained, the most obsolete bigotries and audacious pretensions have been put forward—nakedly, broadly put forward—as reasons for maintaining the monopoly of food. This is plainly the last struggle of the landed interest, and it will no doubt be carried on with the unscrupulous desperation by which it has commenced; yet this is of all symptoms the most hopeful for the Free Traders and the nation. Men believed that the landed aristocracy had learnt something by the experience of the last twenty years; yet it has now been disclosed that, like the Bourbons of old, "they have learnt nothing, and they have forgotten nothing." They demand as their inheritance—and they say they will be content with no less—the subjugation of the whole industry of the British nation beneath the yoke of a landed oligarchy.

We have not space this week to notice any of the so-called arguments which have been used; but incidents have occurred at two of the monopolist meetings which are worthy of being recorded. At the St. Alban's gathering, in Hertfordshire, which was industriously proclaimed to be for the purpose of forming a society for the protection of tenant-farmers, Mr. Welford and Mr. Lattimore, who appeared as tenant-farmers, for the purpose of proposing an amendment on the first resolution, were refused a hearing, though their proposition was strictly within the terms on which the meeting had been convened. Mr. Welford, who moved the amendment, stated explicitly, that he was favourable to the formation of a local society for the protection of the tenant-farmers, but that he did not think the original resolution (a mere Anti-League absurdity) adapted to effect that object, and he moved the following amendment:—

"That the tenant-farmers require security against expropriation so repeatedly made upon their property by the Legislature; and considering the deception recently practised upon them by the measures of the present Government, whom they assisted to advance to power,—under the guidance of the landlords,—they have at length arrived at the conclusion, that a final settlement of the laws relative to the important interests of agriculture, is absolutely necessary for their future welfare and existence. And this meeting therefore declines again to embark in any political agitation under the direction of landlords, until the owners of the soil have proved the sincerity of their professed desire to promote the welfare of the tenant-farmers, by giving them the protection of secure tenures by leases at corn-rents, relieving them from the injuries sustained by game preserves, and meeting them fairly in carrying out and ensuring to them the fruits of permanent improvements.

Much interruption was offered to this gentleman, and violent irritation was displayed by the landlords present,—and they had mustered strongly,—at what they deemed an unwarrantable attempt to make the farmers really act for themselves; but all regard to form and decency was disregarded in preventing a hearing by mere clamour, as soon as an officious and official local attorney stated, as a point of order, that Mr. Welford had been the chairman of Mr. Cobden's most successful Anti-Corn-Law meeting at Hertford. At a later stage of the proceedings, Mr. Lattimore, who was well known to all present as a very eminent farmer, was also refused a hearing.

The second incident occurred at the Cambridge meeting of monopolists, where Lord Hardwicke (one of Sir Robert Peel's Court menial-officials) threatened the conductors of the Morning Post with his high displeasure, on account of their "attempts to write down the Ministry." This shows that even Sir Robert Peel's poor spirit writhes under, though it dare not recoil against, the ultra insolent dictation to which he is now being subjected by the landowners. On the other hand, at most of these meetings the part taken by the Morning Post is formally approved, and votes of thanks to its proprietors are usually recorded. Here we have the elements of discord between the landed oligarchy and their submissive but crafty man-of-all-work.

LANDLORDS AND LABOURERS.

Of all the pretences by which the squires at their Pro-Corn-Law meetings try to bolster up their failing monopoly, that of its being beneficial to the labourer is the most impudent. True it is that now the labourer's interest is usually alluded to parenthetically, or merely used to round an oratorical flourish in favour of artificial scarcity, for the most obtuse landed proprietor begins to perceive that the case of the labourer tells strongly against high prices, and, perhaps, even more against fluctuating prices. But, though the subject is touched cautiously and tenderly, all the aristocratic speakers assume that they are the peculiar protectors of the agricultural labourers. Now, as one fact is worth a thousand assertions, we will quote a brief passage from the letter of a "Renting Farmer," which appears in last week's Dorset County Chronicle. The object of the writer seems to have been to correct the following statement made by another correspondent of the same journal in a previous week, which was to the effect—"that the labourers have not forgotten that, at the riots of 1830, they were promised, and for a time received, higher wages, and abatements were made by some landlords for that purpose; but when our fears had subsided, and peace was restored, the price of labour was again lowered;" and the Renting Farmer fairly enough thought this sentence contained an imputation on his order,—that the farmers had reduced wages while actually receiving abatements of rent to enable them to pay higher wages,—and he vindicates the farmers in this manner:—

"Now, for my own part, I was not so fortunate as to receive any abatement for the purpose. I received, in the very midst of the riots, a note from an influential member of my landlord's family, desiring me to raise the pay of the men, sending me, at the same time, the scale of wages they had adopted, and saying, moreover, that no doubt my landlord would do what was right to protect his tenants. I did raise the wages of the men, and at the expiration of a month went to my landlord to know how far I might expect his support; he would make me no direct promise, but said he would not be worse than his neighbours; however, I received no abatement, and, of course, the men were lowered again. I know of no instance where the allowance made and promised at the time of the riots was not withdrawn before the wages of the men were lowered by their employers."

This vindication of the farmers seems to be complete; but how stand the landlords? We know that this interference with the rate of wages by landlords was almost universal in the south and west of England, and that the withdrawal of the allowance as soon as the crisis had passed over was as general. Let landlords abstain from making laws which occasionally take the rent out of the farmers' capital, which ought to have been employed in payment of wages—for the labourer has no law of distress in his favour, and the rent must be paid—and no such inter-farmer with the wages of the peasantry as that of 1830 will ever be necessary. At this moment a large proportion of the rents received by the landowners are directly abstracted from that fund which ought to have been used by the farmer in payment of wages. This is entirely owing to the operation of the Corn Laws, and yet farmers and farm-labourers are asked to agitate, subscribe, and petition to uphold these laws!

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"B. D.'s" lines on true heroism are equally creditable to her poetic powers and Christian feelings. We gladly give them insertion:—

"Enough hath the world heard
Of heroes and glory,
Till our hearts loath the word
Of renown and its story;
Till our spirits wax weary
Of rapine and slaughter,
And earth groweth dreary,
As if demons had wrought her!

"Enough of pomp's splendour
Our dim eyes have blinded;
That faith we surrender,
That worship is ended!

"We stand by the altar
Of justice, and swear it,
Our hearts shall not falter
Our lips shall declare it!

"On the brows of the glorious,
In deed and endeavour,
Be the wreath which victorious
Shall crown them for ever!

"The noble in spirit,
Whom 'self' cannot darken,
We bow to their merit,
To their words will we hearken!

"They, in whom the pale mourner
For bread when he pineth
Spite of sneerer and corner,
His guardians divinely!

"With that proudest of honours,
That purest of fame,
Ye of hope are the donors,
And we bless while we name!

"Yea! the heart-broken mother
Shall smile through her sorrow,
And trust yet another
And brighter to-morrow!

"When pale famine no longer
Her loved ones shall slay,
But the gaunt fiends of hunger
Be scared from their prey.

"For the want-wasted maiden
Who weeps at her toil;
And the old man time-laden
With woe's heavy spoil;

"For such are they striving,
That patriot band!
Link by link strongly riving
Despair from the land.

"Whilst we watch them with blessing,
And hail them from far;
And when dark thoughts are pressing
Look up for one star!

"Truth's star, whose calm beaming
Though the proud may condemn,
For a nation's redeeming
Conducts us to them.

"20th Dec., 1843."
"P." proposes that Robert Peel's income tax should be announced into "income tax, Peel's Rob. Act."

"A Reader."—The correspondence to which he alludes was refused insertion until paid for as an advertisement, and the money was paid.

"T. D."—The laws against forestalling and regrating, of which the case of William Margate is an illustration, were violations of economic principle, forming part of that system of our ancestors which in modern times is regarded as sheer absurdity.

A correspondent has sent us a reply from Times past to Times present. It is a whimsical illustration of the necessity of a good memory to a certain class of public writers named in a well-known proverb:—

TIMES VERSUS FIXED DUTY.

The following extract from the Times of the 23rd of January, 1844, deserves notice:—

"Above all, it must be obvious to the mind of every man that a diminution of the fund set apart for the parochial clergy, that the difference might be pocketed by the avarice—those avarices to whom we owe the Game Laws, the Corn Laws, and the utter corruption of the Poor Laws—would be, of all arrangements in this world, the most preposterous, iniquitous, and odious. This point is put with great force and perspicuity by Mr. Buller with regard to the Corn Laws, which are dwelt upon in his letter at considerable length, and in a strain of reasoning with which we generally coincide, although the hon. gentleman appears more tolerant of the medius terminus of a fixed duty on foreign corn than we should expect of one who felt the bearing of the main, the twofold (and to us incontrovertible) argument against the existing tax on corn, viz., the impolicy and injustice of any tax whatever. The peculiar grievance of the present impost may be that it is uncertain, deceitful, and ill-framed, even for its ostensible purpose; but as to a 'fixed' duty, it is neither more nor less than a fixed evil—a fixed discouragement of manufactures—a fixed robbery of the consumer by the producer—a fixed bounty upon foreign industry, to the detriment of British—a fixed aggravation of the burden of the Poor Laws—a fixed monopoly of subsistence against the hungry multitude."

The following extract, from the writings of one of the first of our living philosophers, deserves attention:—"On these grounds it would seem to me that some knowledge of the principles of political economy—of jurisprudence—of trade and manufactures—is essentially involved in the notion of a sound education; a moderate acquaintance also with engineering—agriculture—draughtsmanship, is of obvious utility in every station of life; while, in a commercial country, the only remedy for that proverbial short-sightedness to their best ultimate interest, which is the misfortune, rather than the fault, of every mercantile community upon earth, seems to be to inculcate broad principles of free interchange and reciprocal profit, and public justice, on which the whole edifice of permanently successful enterprise must be based."—View of Views on Scientific and General Education," by Sir John Herschel, Bart., F.R.S.

"A Carpenter's Son."—The communication is respectfully declined.

Several correspondents very eagerly inquire when London will be canvassed for its subscriptions to the League Fund; it is gratifying to find such a general eagerness to volunteer service in the good cause, and such an impatience to begin work. So soon as the Council is relieved from the heavy pressure of the provincial collections, its entire attention will be devoted to the metropolis.

"A Composer" is thanked; the hint shall not be lost sight of.

"Odorous."—The cry of slave-grown sugar is one of the most important manifestations of conscious hypocrisy exhibited within our memory.

"J. A. L."—The constituency of Lambeth should declare its sentiments on Free Trade to its members in a form admitting of "no mistake."

"A Friend to Just Law."—The times are not ripe for such a discussion.

"A. R. S., of Philadelphia." is well able to preach Free-Trade doctrine himself, and needs no assistance.

"R. S. T."—The balance is lost to the public in the circuitous process of trade-interference consequent on discriminating duties.

"F. W."—The crimping drummer-boys from union workhouses is a shocking practice, but after the exposure it has already received we trust that the authorities will be ashamed into its abolition.

"A Free-Trader" sends the following song, which was sung at a late meeting of the Anti-Monopolist electors of Salisbury:—

Ye loyal sons of England, who strive for better days,
Press onwards in your object, though opposed in various ways?
Let union be your watchword—in union there is strength!
Your foes shall be defeated, and overcome at length.

(Chorus.)

For Monopoly must have its fall, and never rise again,
The happy day is drawing nigh to break the tyrant's chain.

Free Trade with all the world we very soon shall see,
If steadfast we press forwards—against Monopoly;
We find the League is very strong, although as yet but young,
And with great vigour carries on what they at first begun.

(Chorus.)

The very soul of commerce is freedom thro' the world,
Nor will we rest until we see its banners wide unfurled;
Protective laws abolished—Free Trade with all mankind,
The world our common market-place, where'er we feel inclin'd.

(Chorus.)

The conquest is quite certain, and very near at hand,
To banish all Monopolies, and purify the land;
It is our right as Britons—the mistress of the waves—
To shout with all our voices, we will no more be slaves!

(Chorus.)

For Monopoly must have its fall, and never rise again,
The happy day is drawing nigh to break the tyrant's chain.

"R. D."—Under consideration.

The following remarks on the demand made by the monopolist for the protection of native industry sufficiently expose the hypocritical folly of that delusive cry:—The amount paid for wages in producing corn is easily estimated. The quantity of corn grown in the United Kingdom is from 50 to 60 million quarters, requiring 17 to 20 million acres of land.
Now, the manual labour on the best cultivated land is not more than 20s. per acre; making the total amount of wages not to exceed £20,000,000 in producing corn. The export of manufactured goods averages about £50,000,000; of which more than one-half, perhaps two-thirds, is manual labour, or equal to an export of £30,000,000 of British industry; and a relief to this amount to the remaining labouring population.
This must be apparent to the commonest apprehension; yet, in spite of this great fact, which only requires to be stated, are the landholders crying out for the protection of British industry to deceive the poor and ignorant.

"A Ten-guinea Leaguer" will soon see an answer to his question: publicity is not desirable until work is done.
At the request of a correspondent we republish the following letter from the Chelmsford Chronicle:—

"I am quite satisfied that amongst the rural population they ALL have a sufficiency of bread, and whatever may have been said by Mr. Cobden and others on that point is entirely groundless."—Extract from Mr. R. Baker's speech at the late Protection Society meeting at Chelmsford.

"Sir,—The above extract I have copied from your paper of last week, and, being myself present, I believe it to be a correct version of what Mr. Baker said. Now an assertion like this should be well considered before it is given to the public. Mr. Baker has an extensive acquaintance with agricultural matters, both as farmer and land-surveyor, agent, &c., and he has a fair claim to, and no doubt is considered, good authority. At the meeting I said 'No, no!' to the statement, and I could refer your readers to various districts, especially in the northern parts of this county, where the wages and earnings of the agricultural labourers are inadequate to find, for themselves and families, sufficiency of bread. But a fact is better than a long speech, and the following agreement, between a labourer and his master, is a startling one:—

"Oct. 11, 1842.—I, John Drury, do undertake the care of four horses and one riding horse to feed and clean, at four o'clock in the morning, and to do any sort of work, and plough my acre of land per day, for the sum of seven shillings per week, excepting the three weeks in harvest time, for which I am to have two shillings per week extra. I also hire the cottage and garden I now occupy, at four guineas per annum.
—Witness my mark, JOHN DRURY.

"Great Mapledred."

"Earnest, prit pay, la."

"This man serves his master" at 1s. per week LAST this year.
Drury is a married man, about 30 years of age, and a useful ploughman, with a wife and child, and, being ill some time since, he applied for relief to the Hated Board of Guardians, when the original document was shown to the board.
It seems to me to be a mockery to talk of protection as necessary to the well-being of agricultural labourers; at all events John Drury must be an exception.

"Yours, &c.,

"HENRY DIXON.

"Witham, Jan. 3, 1844."

"W. W." is thanked.

"S. R."—The bad advocate of a bad cause to whom he alludes is unworthy of notice.

The following pithy remark has been sent us by a reverend friend in the north of England:—

"Law is—law! and Crime is—crime."

"What crime can be more wicked than that which destroys the food of man, and tends to raise the price of that which escapes?"—Lord Hardwicke

"His lordship, an ardent supporter of the Corn Law, here condemns as the most wicked of all criminals the incendiary—the poor, ignorant, starving, desperate incendiary: nor do I intend to deny his guilt, or even to palliate it—although, perhaps, I might, on the inspired plea that 'Oppression maketh (even) a wise man mad.' But wherein differ incendiaries in the barnyard and incendiaries or combustion in the bonded warehouse? Does not the one as well as the other destroy the food of man, and tend to raise the price of that which escapes? I have, of late, repeatedly read of bonded corn having heated and been destroyed: it might have fed many a poor family, and at a price not raised either by accident or by crime: but the Corn Law prevented this use of it, and caused its destruction! Who, in this case, are the criminals? and what cloak or palliation have they for their
'most wicked of all crimes'?"—ÆQUUS.

"Poems by Elliott and Jones;" "Life in a Sick Room;" "Miss Breiner's Novels;" "Miss Lamont's Travels;" "The Architectural Annual;" "The Life of William Taylor of Norwich;"
"Dymond's Essays;" "Antigua and the Antiguans," and several other works will be noticed at the earliest opportunity. In the limited space allotted to reviews it would be impossible for the editor to enter into any lengthened discussion of controverted topics; we shall, therefore, only notice such works or parts of works as we can conscientiously recommend, and, as a general rule, we shall abstain from pronouncing censure, except in very flagrant cases.

The following letter has been sent us by a farmer: it needs no comment:—

"Sir,—I am an old Tory and a large farmer, and therefore you may suppose I am not very fond of the League. I, however, hate selfishness and oppression, and monopoly, and

The employer's name, although given by Mr. Dixon, is omitted here for obvious reasons.—[Ed. C. O.]

therefore I read the LEAGUE paper, to see what they had to say in favour of their plan. I find it full of plain truths, and am sure it will do much good and correct much evil. I heard the tenant of a noble landlord say at our market ordinary, that from 15 acres of wheat, as well managed as land could be, and I know he is a good farmer, he had thrashed only 18 quarters, the hares and pheasants having destroyed all the rest. Another said he had ploughed up six acres, which were entirely destroyed. This is in one of the midland counties, where the owners of the soil are as liberal and as honourable as in any part of England, and the two tenants
I have alluded to live under two of the very best even of these good ones. They are not, however, alive as yet to the necessity of feeding the people at the cheapest possible rate.
We cannot let you have it all your own way, at present, Mr.
Editor, but write on a few more years and we shall do better without protection than we have done with it. There is a great national debt to be provided for, as well as old prejudices to conquer, and all cannot be done at once. Give us a fixed duty of 8s. a quarter, to diminish one every year, till it is all gone but 2s., and you will have all the farmers on your side. Don't you think it would be better to meet us in this way than to disturb the country by the agitation, and be longer before you get anything? Move by degrees: we have been so long accustomed to this that we cannot relish being hurried. Yours, &c., "A FARMER."

The manuscript pamphlet, "by a Member of the University of Durham," is received with thanks; but the subject of it has been already so ably answered that it leaves nothing more to be said.

We have still a very great accumulation of unanswered correspondence, which we regret our inability to reply to this week.

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any person forwarding 3s. 3d. by Post-office order, to the Publisher, 67, Fleet-street, London, will have one quarter's copies of the LEAGUE forwarded by post on the days of publication. Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with J. Gadsby, Nowall's-buildings, Manchester; and the LEAGUE may be had by order of any news-agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

GREAT LEAGUE MEETING.—
THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN.—THE USUAL WEEKLY MEETING OF THE NATIONAL ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE, will be held in the THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN, on THURSDAY EVENING NEXT, the 15th inst.

Several Members of Parliament, W. J. Fox, Esq., and others, will address the meeting.

GEORGE WILSON, Esq., will take the Chair precisely at Seven o'Clock.

Cards of admission to the stage and boxes may be had on application after Monday next, at the Central Offices of the League, No. 67, Fleet-street.

The Cards of Registered Members of the League will, as heretofore, admit to the Pit and Galleries of the Theatre.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, February 10, 1844.

In fulfilment of the pledge given to the country that every borough as it became vacant should be contested on Free-Trade principles, the friends of the Anti-Corn-Law League in Devises selected Mr.
Christopher Temple to oppose Mr. Ludlow Bruges for the representation of that borough, and he polled 67 votes, while the Monopolist polled 202. It is needless to say that the League is not dispirited by a result which every one anticipated; on the contrary, it rejoices in having planted the Free-Trade banner in a new locality, and gathered round it a nucleus of staunch supporters, sure to win over new recruits by the diffusion of sound knowledge. In Stockport, in Walsall, and in Durham, the Free-Trade candidates, when first they appeared at the poll, were defeated by large majorities, but the principles of truth which they planted had too much vitality to be destroyed by a single severe season;
they germinated in silence, they daily acquired fresh strength and vigour, and when next the Free-Trade reapers appeared in the field they garnered the harvest of a triumphant majority. Salisbury and De-vizes may yet furnish parallels to Stockport and Durham; but, whether such redemption comes or not, the Monopolists have learned that they will not be allowed to ride roughshod over the constituencies without opposition, and that the votes of the electors are not to be given as a matter of course to any nominee of a confederacy for degrading the farmer, starving the labourer, driving the merchant or manufacturer to bankruptcy, and sending the operative to the workhouse.

At Devises, Monopoly laid aside not merely the forms of decency, but those of law; the Monopolist candidate, in the teeth of an act of Parliament, was the Recorder of the borough, and, though we see from an announcement in the papers that a clumsy effort has been made to remedy this illegality, we know that the trick would be scouted in a court of justice, and perhaps by a committee of the House of Commons.

The decent exhibition of hanging Messrs. Cobden, Bright, and Smith in effigy, firing cannon at the figures, and then burning them on a pile, and the violence displayed to prevent the Free-Trade candidate from obtaining a hearing on the day of nomination, were quite in accordance with the claims of the Monopolists to be regarded as "the friends of order;" just as the unoccupied houses and closed shops in every street in Devises aptly illustrate the nature of the prosperity derived from Monopolist protection. These signs of decay will continue to be silent but powerful lecturers for the League, and we are not without hope that their effect will be powerfully felt whenever a new vacancy affords opportunity for another election.

THE FUNDS.

| | Jan. 5 | Jan. 6 | Jan. 7 | Jan. 8 | Jan. 9 | Jan. 10 |
|----------------------|---------|---------|---------|---------|---------|---------|
| Bank Stock | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 |
| 5 per Ct. Cons. Ann. | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 | 97 1/2 |
| 5 per Ct. Cons. Ann. | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 |
| 5 per Ct. Cons. Ann. | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 | 102 1/2 |
| Long An. R. 1860 | 12 1/2 | 12 1/2 | 12 1/2 | 12 1/2 | 12 1/2 | 12 1/2 |
| Cons. for Acc. | 87 1/2 | 87 1/2 | 87 1/2 | 87 1/2 | 87 1/2 | 87 1/2 |
| Ind. Bds. and 10000 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 |
| India Stock | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 |
| Belgian | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 |
| Chilian | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 |
| Colomb. & Ven. | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 |
| Danish | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 |
| Dutch 5 per Cent. | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 |
| Dutch 3 per Cent. | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 |
| Portuguese, conv. | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 |
| Spanish 5 per Cent. | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 |
| Do. 3 per Cent. | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 |
| Peruvian | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 |

MODERN JANUS.—Sir Robert Peel, who has been described as the modern Janus with his double face,—one looking upon the doomed days of monopoly, the other upon the coming era of Free Trade,—is somewhat characteristically situated as regards his town residence in Privy Gardens. The premises occupied by him stand in two parishes, partly in St. Martin's and partly in St. Margaret's, for both of which he is rated, and for either of which he is enabled to vote. Our readers will judge how far his geographical position is analogous to his political one.

MARKETS.

CORN MARKET.

MARK-LAWS, Monday, Feb. 5.—The supply of Wheat was good from Kent, and short from Essex, this morning. The condition of the samples was much improved by the frosty weather of the last few days. An advance of 1s. to 2s. was readily obtained on English, and of 1s. on the best qualities of Free Foreign Wheat. There was a moderate supply of Barley: the finest samples of Malting were disposed of without difficulty at former rates; but other descriptions met a slow sale, and last week's prices were barely supported. The trade in Beans and Peas was very dull at last week's rates. About eight cargoes of Irish Oats arrived since Friday, with several of English and Scotch; which, together with what remained of our late arrivals, made rather a full market. An endeavour was made to obtain an advance on the prices, but without success, and there was no activity in the trade. S. H. Lucas and Son.

Currency per imperial measure.

| | | | |
|---------------------|------------|------------------------|------------|
| Wheat, English, Red | 45s to 55s | Peas, Maple | 28s — 30s |
| Do., do., Old | 52s — 61s | Malt, Pale Suffolk and | |
| Do., do., White | 60s — 64s | Norfolk | 54s — 58s |
| Do., do., Old | 60s — 64s | Chevalier | 60s — 62s |
| Dantzic | 57s — 62s | Brown | 58s to 60s |
| Stettin | 50s — 57s | Oats, English Feed | 20s — 22s |
| Barley, Malting | 34s — 35s | Do. Short | 21s — 23s |
| Do., do., Old | 32s — 34s | Scotch Feed | 21s — 23s |
| Grinding | 28s — 32s | Do. Potato | 23s — 25s |
| Beans, Tick | 26s — 27s | Irish Feed | 19s — 20s |
| Harrow | 28s — 30s | Do. Short | 20s — 22s |
| Pigeon | 32s — 34s | Do. Black | 19s — 20s |
| Old Harrow | 33s — 34s | Do. Galway | 17s — 19s |
| Peas, White | 28s — 30s | Flour, town made and | |
| Do., Bollers | 31s — 33s | best country marks | 45s — 50s |
| Grey | 20s to 28s | Norfolk and Suffolk | 40s — 44s |

Account of CORN, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 20th of Jan. to the 3rd of Feb. 1844, both days inclusive.

| | Wheat. | Barley. | Oats. | Beans. | Peas. |
|---------|--------|---------|-------|--------|-------|
| English | 5838 | 5187 | 4829 | 1191 | 1111 |
| Scotch | — | — | 2020 | — | — |
| Irish | — | — | 18391 | — | — |
| Foreign | 1481 | 770 | — | — | 660 |

MARK-LAWS, Friday, Feb. 9.—There is not much English Wheat fresh up since Monday; it is taken off readily at the prices of that day. Foreign Wheat is held firmly at former rates, but there is not much business doing. There is a good supply of English Barley; though not brisk, the trade is as good as on Monday. The supplies of Oats are short, and Monday's prices are fully maintained. No alteration in other articles. The duty on Wheat fell to 19s. yesterday. S. H. Lucas and Son.

Account of Corn, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 3rd of Feb. to the 9th of Feb., both inclusive.

| | English. | Irish. | Foreign. |
|--------|----------|--------|----------|
| Wheat | 3010 | — | — |
| Barley | 6399 | 380 | — |
| Oats | 2333 | 1470 | — |

A WEEKLY REPORT OF THE NUMBER OF QUARTERS, and the AVERAGE PRICE OF CORN and GRAIN, sold in the several Counties of England and Wales (comprising the Two Hundred and Ninety Towns named in the Act of the 5th Vic., cap. 14), which governs Duty.

WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 5, 1844.

| | WHEAT. | | BARLEY. | | OATS. | | BEANS. | |
|-----------|---------|------------|---------|------------|--------|------------|--------|------------|
| | Qrs. | Aver price | Qrs. | Aver price | Qrs. | Aver price | Qrs. | Aver price |
| Weekly | | s. d. | | s. d. | | s. d. | | s. d. |
| Averages | 108,378 | 52 6 | 106,808 | 33 2 | 57,527 | 15 11 | 10372 | 29 8 |
| Aggregate | | | | | | | | |
| Averages | .. | 51 2 | | 33 0 | | 18 8 | | 29 8 |
| Duty..... | .. | 19 0 | | 5 0 | | 8 0 | | 11 6 |

| | Qrs. | Price. | Qrs. | Price. |
|--------|-------|----------|-------|---------------|
| Wheat | 6278 | 53s. 5d. | Rye | 35 33s. 4d. |
| Barley | 7314 | 34s. 6d. | Beans | 1391 28s. 6d. |
| Oats | 23903 | 20s. 2d. | Peas | 1113 30s. 8d. |

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 6.

BANKRUPTS.

- H. TISOR, Hertford, carpenter. [Thompson and Co., Salters' Hall; Nicholson and Longmore, Hertford.]
 F. HILLMAN, Cambridge-terrace, Edgware-road, ale merchant. [Appleton, Fenchurch buildings.]
 N. T. SMITH, Jun., Lime-street, London, ship owner. [Clayton and Cookson, New-square, Lincoln's-inn.]
 T. LANGRIDGE, Tonbridge Wells, Kent, auctioneer. [Manning, Craven-street, Strand.]
 T. WHITE, Regent-street, Marylebone, lace dealer. [Ashurst, Chesham.]
 R. HONE, Garnault-place, Spa-fields, stationer. [Cattlin, Ely-place, Holborn.]
 J. HARDLEY, Newport, Isle of Wight, miller. [M-Leod and Stanning, London-street, City.]
 C. SUTTON, Southampton, grocer. [Olderhaw, King's Arms-yard, Moorgate street.]
 M. OOSTON, Davies-street, Berkeley-square, watchmaker. [Ashurst, Chesham.]

- J. MOORE, Tamworth, Warwickshire, draper. [Ashurst, Chesham.]
 T. GREGORY, Poulshot, Wiltshire, miller. [Austin, Devizes.]
 C. REESBY, Stamford, Lincolnshire, miller. [Jackson, Stamford; Smith, Birmingham.]
 R. CHAPMAN, Scorton, Yorkshire, innkeeper. [Close, Farnville-inn, Hunton, Richmond; Teale, Leeds.]
 J. & G. EWART, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, auctioneers. [Brookebank and Farn, Gray's-inn-square; Brown, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.]
 G. WALTON, Stockton-on-Tees, wine merchant. [Dimmock and Burbey, Hise-lane; Stevenson, Darlington.]
 S. BILLINGTON, Birkenhead, Cheshire, woollen draper. [Minshall, Liverpool; Vincent and Sherwood, Temple.]
 M. TILDESLEY, Porto Bello, Staffordshire, timber dealer. [Phillips and Bolton, Wolverhampton.]

DIVIDENDS.

- Feb. 27. H. Molyneux, Lombard-street, watchmaker—March 2. W. C. Thornton, Cleckheaton, Yorkshire, machine maker—Feb. 29. J. M. Knight, Rugby, Warwickshire, ironmonger—Feb. 29. W. Atherton, Manchester, flint glass manufacturer—Feb. 28. J. Raleigh, Manchester, merchant—Feb. 28. J. Raleigh and T. G. Smith, merchants—Feb. 29. W. Rabey, Redruth, Cornwall, leather seller—Feb. 29. J. Gage, Delverton, Somersetshire, carpenter.

CERTIFICATES.

- Feb. 27. B. Reynolds, Mitcham, Surrey, silk printer—Feb. 27. R. Parker, Rotherhithe, Surrey, linen draper—Feb. 27. J. Smith, Darent, Kent, carpenter—Feb. 27. S. Wealey, Long Buckby, Northamptonshire, baker—Feb. 28. J. Atkins, Shore-ditch, Middlesex, tobacconist—Feb. 28. T. Gore, Broadstairs, Kent, baker—Feb. 27. M. Allen, Waltham Holy Cross, Essex, apothecary—Feb. 29. T. Kimber, North Cerney, Gloucestershire, farmer.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.

- J. HOWIE, Midtown, Cragie, horse and cattle dealer—R. KERR, Thornhill, Dumfriesshire, tanner—C. MALPINE, Glasgow, ship smith—R. P. M'BRAIR and D. JOHNSTONE, Jun., Glasgow, ship owners—A. OPPHEIM, Edinburgh, looking glass manufacturer—G. F. ROBERTSON, Greenock, merchant—J. WILSON, Glasgow, ship smith.

THE TOILET OF BEAUTY furnishes innumerable proofs of the high estimation in which GOWLAND'S LOTION is held by the most distinguished possessors of brilliant Complexions. This elegant preparation comprehends the preservation of the complexion, both from the effects of Cutaneous Malady and the operation of variable temperature, by refreshing its delicacy, and sustaining the brightest tints with which beauty is adorned. "Rogee, Eau de Cologne" is in white letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is genuine. Prices 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d., quarts 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Medicine Vendors.

WORTHY OF REMARK.—The fact that many of the principal Hospitals in the kingdom—among which it is sufficient to name Guy's, St. George's, and the Westminster, in the metropolis, and the Manchester, Bristol, and Brighton Infirmary—have adopted BETT'S PATENT BRANDY, in preference to Foreign, affords a sufficient guarantee to the consumers of Brandy of the extreme purity of the article; the consequence being, at the same time, balled in his attempt to distinguish between its flavour and that of Fine Cognac. Price, pale or coloured, in quantities not less than Two Gallons, Eighteen Shillings per Gallon, at the Distillery, No. 7, Smithfield bars, leading to St. John-street.

BIOUKRENE, or FOUNTAIN OF LIFE.—This invaluable Medicine proves efficacious in removing all Scrofulous and Scorbatic Diseases. It attacks the cause of all eruptions on the skin; it purifies and nourishes the blood, invigorates the digestive organs, and effects an entire cure of Scrofula and Scoury in all the forms which these diseases assume.

This medicine is free from those mineral preparations which cannot be taken without injury to the constitution. Its action on the system is remarkably mild and gentle, and will not interfere with the patient's ordinary pursuits. * See a pamphlet entitled "Health and Comfort to the Afflicted," which may be had, gratis, of Mr. William Bailey, North-street, Wolverhampton, and also by all other vendors of Bioukrene; which is sold by Sutton and Co., Horse Churchyard; Edwards, St. Paul's Churchyard; Hannay and Co., Oxford-street; and by all Druggists and Medicine Vendors. Bottles, 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH, Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM, price 4s. 6d.—Patronized by Her Majesty, the Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. This valuable SUCCEDANEUM for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity, is far superior to anything ever before used, as it is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and in a short time becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary. It arrests all further progress of decay, and renders them again useful in mastication. All persons can use Mr. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM themselves with ease, without the aid of a dentist, as full directions are enclosed.—Prepared only by Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 68, Berners-street, Oxford-street, price 4s. 6d., and will be sent by post to any part of the kingdom.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. Thomas continues to supply the loss of teeth, and has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, which will be found very superior to all others, as they will never decay nor become discoloured, and their perfect resemblance to nature defies detection even by the closest observer. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. The charges will be found less than most dentists.—Mr. Thomas, Surgeon-Dentist, 68, Berners-street, Oxford-street. At home from Eleven till Four.

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED WITHOUT SPRINGS, CLARPS, or WIRES, LOOKS TEETH FASTENED, and FILLING DECAYED TEETH WITH MINERAL MARMORATUM.—MONS. LE DRAY and SON, Surgeon-Dentists, 42, BERNERS-STREET, OXFORD-STREET, continue to restore DECAYED TEETH with their celebrated MINERAL MARMORATUM, applied without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing and curing the toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary. They also fasten loose Teeth, whether arising from age, neglect, the use of Calomel, or disease of the Gums. Incurable, artificial, or natural teeth of surpassing beauty, fixed, from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, at the following Paris charges:—

| | |
|----------------|---------|
| A Single Tooth | 20 10 0 |
| A Set | 5 5 0 |

Arranged on a principle yet untried, rendering it impossible to distinguish the artificial teeth from the natural ones; answering most satisfactorily all the purposes of the original teeth in mastication and articulation, imparting to the countenance a younger and improved appearance, protecting the adjoining teeth, and remedying perfectly secure in their places. Artificial Teeth repaired, remodelled, and brought to their former shape and appearance.
 Artificial Palates of the most improved construction.—At home every day from Ten till Six.
 N.B. Removed from 60, Newman-street, to 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

FRAMPTON'S PILL OF HEALTH.

THIS excellent Family PILL is a Medicine of long-tried efficacy for correcting all disorders of the Stomach and Bowels, the common symptoms of which are costiveness, flatulency, spasms, loss of appetite, sick headache, giddiness, sense of fullness after meals, distension of the eyes, drowsiness, and pains in the Stomach and Bowels. Indigestion, producing a torpid state of the Liver, and a consequent inactivity of the Bowels, causing a disorganization of every function of the frame, will, in this most excellent preparation, by a little perseverance, be effectually removed. Two or three doses will convince the afflicted of its salutary effects. The Stomach will speedily regain its strength; a healthy action of the Liver, Bowels, and Kidneys, will rapidly take place; and, instead of listlessness, heat, pain, and jaundiced appearance, strength, activity, and renewed health will be the quick result of taking this medicine according to the directions accompanying each box; and if taken after too free an indulgence at table, they quickly restore the system to its natural state of repose.

Persons of a FULL HABIT, who are subject to headache, giddiness, drowsiness, and slaying in the ears, arising from too great a flow of blood to the head, should never be without them, as many dangerous symptoms will be entirely relieved by their immediate use.

For FEMALES these Pills are most truly excellent, removing all obstructions: the distressing headache so very prevalent with the sex; depression of spirits, dulness of sight, nervous affections, blotches, pimples, and sallowness of the skin, and give a healthy and juvenile bloom to the complexion. As a pleasant, safe, and easy Aperient, they unite the recommendation of a mild operation with the most successful effect, and require no restraint of diet or confinement during their use. And for ELDERLY PEOPLE they will be found to be the most comfortable medicine hitherto prepared.

Sold by T. Prout, 279, Strand, London. Price 1s. 1d. and 2s. 9d. per box; and by the Vendors of Medicines generally throughout the kingdom.

Ask for FRAMPTON'S PILL OF HEALTH, and observe the name and address of "Thomas Prout, 279, Strand, London," on the Government stamp.

THE CORN LAWS.—The sentiments of every member of Parliament respecting the CORN LAWS will be found in MR. DODD'S "PARLIAMENTARY COMPANION," for 1844, which contains a full Biographical Dictionary of both Houses, a Statement of the Population, &c., with Explanations of Parliamentary Terms and Proceedings. Royal 82mo., price 4s. 6d., morocco gilt. Whittaker and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

THE MUSEUM; the most splendid Penny Periodical ever published, will APPEAR on SATURDAY, Feb. 10 (this day). The front page alone, containing a beautiful View of the extended NEW BRITISH MUSEUM, and a series of thirty-four Gorgeous Classical Designs, in addition to ten other spirited and well printed Engravings in the Number, will be acknowledged to be worth a hundred times the cost of the publication. Sixteen quarto pages for a Penny. Office, Craven-yard, Drury-lane. May be had of all booksellers.

MR. BEARD'S DAGUERRETYPE, or PHOTOGRAPHIC PORTRAITS.—These infinitely and much admired Portraits, in which further improvements have lately been effected, are taken by the Patentes, at 85, King William-street, City; 54, Parliament-street; and at the Royal Polytechnic Institution, 209, Regent-street, to whom, also, Licenses are granted for exercising the invention in provincial towns and districts.

CHINESE COLLECTION and GRAND DISTRIBUTION (admission free), value £5000, on the principle of the Antiquarian, in prizes, consisting of Chinese curiosities and Parisian novelties, on April 8, at the Chinese and Parisian Magazine, 7, Old Jewry. Every subscriber will obtain a handsome prize, consisting of Chinese jars, pictures, &c., or a splendid package of French ingenuity and taste. The division will take place under the highest patronage. The prizes are now on show at the above establishment. Tickets, 5s. each, may be obtained by applying to Messrs. T. Agnew and Sons, 14, Pall-mall; or at the retail branches of the Chinese and Parisian Magazine, 44, Poultry, and corner of the Old Jewry, Chesham; also of Hewitt and Co., 18, Philip-lane. W. Ancier and P. Ledoux, rue de Lombardes, Paris, will supply the Parisian articles, and the indefatigable exertions of the proprietors for the last ten years will furnish a magnificent collection from the Celestial Empire. TAYLOR, Brothers, and HEWETT, Chinese and Parisian Magazine, wholesale department, 7, Old Jewry, Chesham.

TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT and OTHERS.—TO LET, on moderate terms, a FURNISHED, COMPACT HOUSE, adjacent to Storey's Gate, St. James's Park, Westminster. Particulars with Messrs. Trollope and Son, Parliament-street; or, William Grubb Knight, builder, &c., 12, Alfred-place, Newington-causeway, South-west.

KINAHAN'S CELEBRATED L.L. (or Lord.)—Lieutenant's WHISKY (seven years old), is now universally admitted to be the purest, most delicious, and wholesome spirit ever imported—20s. per gallon; sealed bottles, 8s. 6d. each, can be had at a large number of the most respectable retail houses. A liberal allowance is made to the Kinahan's XX Dublin Stout, Bass's Pale Ale, Burton, Scotch, and Castleblinham Ales, in finest condition. Whisky well suited to the Trade (12 months old, and 2 years old), at very moderate prices. KINAHAN and CO., 25, KING WILLIAM-STREET, STRAND.

SUPERIOR WATERPROOF WRAPPERS, and OUTSIDE GARMENTS of all kinds.—An extensive variety of the above, also of BIRDIE'S well-known VENTILATING FRACK (in line of the Macintosh), always kept ready, guaranteed to exclude any description of rain whatever. Those who require real good, efficient, and respectable garments at the lowest price possible consistent with true economy, or who wish to avoid disappointment and vexation, will not regret the attention now confidently invited. First-rate Cloth of every description made to order at equitable charges. W. Berdoe, Tailor, &c., 69, Cornhill (North side).

CABINET FURNITURE, CARPETS, and UPHOLSTERY.—THOMAS PAUL and CO. inform the nobility and gentlemen furnishing, that their CABINET STOCK comprises every kind of furniture, calculated for any description of residence, from the cottage to the mansion, and will be found 50 per cent. cheaper than at any other house in London. Independently of the great saving, every article is guaranteed of the most seasoned and sound materials, so that parties furnishing (even for a foreign climate) are secure either from complaint or defective wear. References of many years' standing, together with the most ample warranty given where required. Their stock of Brussels carpets consists of a splendid variety, commencing at the extraordinarily low price of 2s. 3d. per yard, and those of new and elegant designs from 2s. per yard.—THOMAS PAUL and CO., cabinetmakers, upholsters, and carpet manufacturers, opposite the Mansion House, City.

THE NEW LIGHT.—A GREAT NOVELTY.—The patent CAMPHINE LAMP gives a light of surpassing power, richness, and purity, without any kind of grease or dirt, smoke or smell. The lamp is simply and beautifully constructed, and can be fitted to any description of lamp, pedestal, or gas fitting. It is not easily put out of condition. The Camphine (also a patent) is 4s. per gallon, and is so pure that if spilt on any article of dress or furniture will not leave either mark or stain, while it consumes so slowly that, at the cost of three farthings for two hours, it gives a light equal to twelve mould candles, without any smoking. It will be found far less expensive than any, and incomparably superior to all existing lights. To be seen burning at Hippon and Burton's (the wholesale and retail agents for English's Patent Camphine),—N.B. The ONLY Patent Camphine Lamp has "Hippon and Burton, Wells-street, Oxford-street," conspicuously placed on its head. The public are cautioned against all not so marked.

A CUP OF COFFEE IN ONE MINUTE!
DUNN'S ESSENCE OF COFFEE, warranted to keep good in any climate.—This Essence of the finest Mocha Coffee, improved by a process the result of thirty years' experience, contains all the fragrant and exhilarating properties of the Coffee in the highest perfection. It is admirably adapted to persons travelling, Officers in the Army and Navy, and Families visiting watering-places. Manufactured by D. DUNN, Pentonville, London, Manufacturer of Chocolate Powder, Essence of Ginger, and other Spices, Herbs, &c. Sold in Bottles from 1s. to 4s. each; and may be ordered of any respectable Grocer in the United Kingdom. Directions.—Put about a teaspoonful of the Essence into a coffee-cup, add sugar and cream or milk, then fill it up with boiling water, and a cup of Coffee, of superior flavour, is instantly made.

LOWDEN'S CELEBRATED COUGH PILL.—A safe and effectual cure for Coughs, Colds, Shortness of Breath, Asthma, &c. &c. They promote free expectoration, and hence prevent that accumulation of phlegm which causes a sense of choking, allay irritation, tickling in the throat, and relieve that sense of oppression, fulness, and difficulty of breathing, which nightly deprives the patient of rest. In Asthma and Coughs of long standing they are invaluable, and universally admitted to be the best known Medicine; in any case where they do not effect a perfect cure they afford such relief to the sufferer during the paroxysms or fits as to induce him henceforth never to be without them. Sold by Mr. Lowden, Chemist, 206, Fleet-street, London, in boxes at 1s. 1d., 7s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; also by one or more respectable Medicine Vendors in each town in the United Kingdom.

PATRONIZED AND SANCTIONED BY HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN, H.R.H. PRINCE ALBERT, THE ROYAL FAMILY, AND THE SEVERAL COURTS OF EUROPE.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the Growth and for Preserving and Beautifying the Human Hair. Price 2s. 6d.—7s. Family Bottles (equal to 4 small) 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. CAUTION.—SPURIOUS COMPOSITIONS are frequently offered for sale under a FICTITIOUS name or the word "GENUINE." It is imperative on purchasers to see that the words "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" are on the Wrapper of each bottle, and on the back of the wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 20,000 letters. All others are FULS DULENT COUNTERFEITS. The principle on which "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" is prepared, is confined solely to the knowledge and practice of A. ROWLAND and SON, who are still at an immense expense in completing its preparation, and the amalgamation of its FULS DULENT MATERIALS renders abortive any attempt to discover its secret parts. ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for Improving and Beautifying the Skin and Complexion. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included. ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, renders the Teeth beautifully White and preserves the Gums. Price 2s. 6d. per box, duty included. CAUTION.—It is imperative on purchasers to see that the word "ROWLAND'S" is on the Wrapper of each article. For the protection of the Public from fraud and imposition, the Honorable Commissioners of Her Majesty's Stamps have authorized the Proprietors' Signature to be stamped on the Government Stamp, thus, A. ROWLAND and SON, 25, Abchurch-lane, which is affixed to the Kalydor and Odonto. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers. * All others are SPURIOUS IMITATIONS!

London: Printed (at the office of Palmer and Clayton, Old Bailey, 10, Old Bailey) by A. W. FAYRE, of Barton-on-Irwell, Lancashire, and published by him at Ten LANCET Office, 7, Strand, Saturday February 10, 1844.

THE LEAGUE.

No. 21.]

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1844.

[8d.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND, £100,000.

All subscribers of £1 and upwards to the ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUND FUND, will be entitled to, and receive a copy, weekly, of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have forwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the Offices of THE LEAGUE, Newall's-buildings, Manchester, or 67, Fleet-street, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND, are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council respectfully request that their friends, in all places where committees for raising subscriptions to the £100,000 Fund have not been already formed, will proceed to their formation as soon as possible, and transmit their names to the LEAGUE Offices, Manchester.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE METROPOLIS.

The demonstration of your opinion which is afforded by the weekly meetings at Covent-garden Theatre would, in reference to any common question of legislative improvement, and under ordinary circumstances, be sufficient to ensure the result which you desire. Public expressions much less unequivocal and decided have heretofore often been held adequate to prescribe the policy and duty of a Government, and to determine the conduct of Parliament. But we do not live under ordinary circumstances, and the Corn Law is no common question. The ruling class believes that both its interest and its influence are at stake. It has resolved on continued resistance. Its powers are mustering for a desperate struggle. The Prime Minister has sworn allegiance to its authority, and submits to vassalage as the condition of office. Recent events in Ireland have inflated the insolence of those who believe that nations are to be ruled by the strong hand of coercion rather than by the councils of wisdom. And there is every indication that the zeal and enthusiasm you so frequently evince at your meetings must be followed up by deliberate, unflinching, and arduous exertion.

One mode of exertion was pointed out and recommended in our last publication. You are invited to strengthen the hands of our Metropolitan Association for the completion of the Register. The mode is sufficiently described in the circular issued by that body, by which, throughout your several wards, parishes, and districts, you can co-operate. It is of the utmost importance that you should give the requisite time and attention to this matter. Leave no adherent of monopoly on the electoral list who is not legally entitled to be there. See that no friend of Free Trade, who is duly qualified, be omitted in that muster-roll, where, if his name be not found, it will matter comparatively little where else it is to be found when the day of conflict shall arrive. For you may be assured that, at the next election, not merely will this or that seat be in question, but the entire metropolitan representation. This is the sort of contest for which you must be prepared, and for which your preparation cannot too soon commence. On this point, as on the Corn Law itself, there will be no compromise. You must fight for the whole field, with foes who will aim at your total rout. Never forget this. Ensure your position in the registration. Your brilliant success in the return of Mr. Pattison leaves no other alternative for a future election than that of Aut Caesar, aut nullus. We need not expatiate on the results of a complete return of Free-Trade representatives for the cities of London and Westminster, the metropolitan boroughs, and the metropolitan county. They would obviously be such as to compensate, and more than compensate, for any exertions and sacrifices that may be needful. We believe this great event to be in your hands. You can reach it by diligence in the registration. Its loss, by indifference or negligence, would be worse than disgraceful: it would be deeply criminal. Be up, then, and doing; sleep not on your posts; belie not the fervour of your expressions in this great cause; consider the magnitude of the prize; and obey the call of the mightiest interests for which a people ever asserted the claims of justice and humanity.

We invite you, also, to the continuance and extension of those voluntary subscriptions of which so many have come unsought to our office, as the columns of this paper have testified from week to week. It has not been deemed judicious to pursue in the metropolis the mode generally adopted in the country, of subscribing at public meetings. In your own course and method, London will doubtless supply its proportion to the fund of £100,000; the realization of which is no longer a question. We confidently await the time for putting down, by the decisiveness of fact, the sarcasms levelled by monopolist journals at metropolitan liberality. Such imputations can last but for their day; and you can make that day a very short one. On such a matter as this, we feel that suggestion is sufficient, and may well supersede any attempt at the language of persuasion.

The monopolists have not been routed from their strongholds in Devises and North Wiltshire. Who expected they would, with no time to agitate the question? Compulsion or bribery may gain votes extempore. Instruction and conviction are a slower process. And what have they won? According to his proposer, the "consistency" of Sir Francis Burdett will be emulated by Mr. Sotherton. So they are where they were. And is there no fear of losing anything? What, then, is the meaning of the novel phenomenon of labourers' names to a requisition to a candidate secure of success, and some 200 labourers marched with music to the hustings, at an uncontested county election? This smock-frock procession greatly delights the Morning Herald, whose reporter describes it as a portion of a cavalcade that, "for its extent and respectability, has never been equalled on any former occasion in this county." The labourers may thank the League for their unaccustomed importance. It has made them something in their superiors' eyes, and will make them more. To free, nominally at least, and then enlist their slaves, has often been the resource of a faction in civil warfare. The usual and rational construction put upon it is, that it is the resource rather of reckless desperation than of conscious strength. So we construe it in this case; not only with reference to North Wilts, but to all the cant about labourers at Agricultural Anti-League meetings. The symptom is one amongst many of fierce and unscrupulous resistance to those rights of industry which we are associated to obtain. There is a strenuous conflict before us. "Protection" shall remain as it is," say these champions; which is equivalent to saying—"Trade shall never be better than it is," though worse it may be; and, if the system be unchanged, worse it needs must become. People of the Metropolis, are you content with this? Can all the dictation of all the squires in Christendom reconcile you to such a prospect, or induce your submission? If not, then for your own sakes, as well as for that of the millions whom "Protection" robs and starves, place yourselves in the van of the Free-Trade army; lead the march, and on to victory!

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

THE FREE-TRADE MIRROR OF PARLIAMENT FOR THE SESSION 1844.

Second Week, ending Saturday, Feb. 17.

The regular Free-Trade campaign has not yet opened in the House of Commons; but there are "notes of preparation," foretelling the approach of a warm and hearty struggle. Meantime a great debate is going on respecting Ireland, and though that is not precisely a Free-Trade subject, it has a kindred affinity with it. Ireland is a stupendous example of the moral and physical evils which are as natural an issue of injustice as Death is the fruit of Sin; and there is this especial sympathy between the kindred wrongs of Ireland and of England, that both have their primary origin in that abuse of the power which exclusive possession of the soil puts into the hands of short-sighted men. In the voyage of Columbus, the cry of "Land!" was the cheering sound which bespoke a new world, and a new destiny for the human race. In the narrow circle of Britain, the cry of land carries us back to that "limbo of vanity"—the dark and dreary world—the old world of the feudal system; and the "tight little island," which, as large-minded and universal Sir John Herschel has demonstrated, is so geographically placed as if it were intended by Providence to command the old world and the new, is shut up by the squires within Bishop Berkeley's wall of brass, and its inhabitants, like ferocious beasts, cause starveling rats, doomed to prey upon one another.

Nor can we pass by the debate on Ireland—that country which quaint old Sir John Davies said was called Ireland because it was the land of fire—without noticing another bond of sympathy between its condition and that social state of England which the Anti-Corn-Law League is labouring to ameliorate. Sir James Graham made a speech on Tuesday night; and in that speech the Anti-Corn-Law League had its share of interest? But who is Sir James Graham? A very clever, tall, stout man, with a somewhat small voice, and a very unscrupulous spirit. In days when he was a Radical, and even something more, he wrote on "Corn and Currency;" he made speeches on Pensions and Monopolies; he talked of the "Birds of Prey" that gorged themselves on the carcasses of the public weal, and he warned the aristocracy that when the spectacle was witnessed of a whole people stretching forth their hands for food, then would titles and honours be swept away. But Sir James Graham is now Home Secretary in a Monopolist Administration; and is not unsuspected of a design to oust Sir Robert Peel from the premiership, if Sir Robert Peel had dared to defy the squires, and venture further in the direction of Free Trade. Not even the tremendous verities of the Christian faith can exclude hypocrites from the Christian Church;—how, then, can we exclude an occasional political adventurer from taking a share in agitation for the public good, when there is the temptation of Downing-street in view? Sir James Graham ostentatiously avowed himself, on Tuesday night, the friend of Lord Lyndhurst, another very able man; and though we abhor the poor schoolboy trick of citing scraps of Latin, which even the cicer often but dimly understands, there is a strong temptation to say of these two able men, Sir James Graham and Lord Lyndhurst—arcades ambo—Arcadians both, equal at singing and answering one another.

But Sir James Graham, on Tuesday night, picked up a dirty, secondhand snowball, and threw it askance at the Anti-Corn-Law League. With an air of ostentatious pomp, he told the House that the most "sagacious of living men" had called his attention to an observation by the most "profound of thinking women." In plain words, he gave the House to understand that the Duke of Wellington had taken him by the button, and, with book in hand, had shown him an observation by Madame de Staël. Unfortunately for the credit of the exclusive information of Sir James Graham, and for his extraordinary familiarity with the most "sagacious of thinking men," the Duke of Wellington quoted—or rather misquoted—the phrase, in a speech which he made last session in the House of Lords. He was defending the Government from the imputation of "doing nothing" with Ireland; and he told their lordships that, so far from disbelieving in the allegation of a conspiracy, he was of opinion with a French writer, "on conspire sur la place." That is to say, that now-a-days conspiracies were not hatched in private but in public; not in the secrecy of a collar, but in the publicity of the marketplace. Sir James Graham pompously repeats this, as a very striking and profound thing; and he paraphrased it by saying that now-a-days conspiracies were got up in Concoction Halls and in Theatres; plainly intimating that he would crush the Anti-Corn-Law League, if it were in his power; only in England even an unscrupulous Home Minister is sometimes compelled to let

"I DARE not wait upon I WOULD,
Like the poor cat I' the adage."

Unfortunately for the most sagacious of living men, and the most astute of Home Secretaries, it turns out that Madame de Staël said quite the reverse of what they attribute to her. The Morning Chronicle quotes the phrase correctly:—

"On ne conspire pas sur la place publique, said Madame de Staël, ridiculing Napoleon's horror of political crowds and assemblies, and intimating that whatever assembly or discussion was public became thereby innocent. What Madame de Staël meant, and what Sir James Graham so ludicrously misquoted and misapplied, was, that if you drive the people from the place publique then they will conspire."

All this is not unimportant, when viewed as interpretations of the spirit which actuates the Administration. There is, in the House of Commons, a nice-looking young man, of goodly presence, with a head which reminds one of Othello's description of the "curled darlings of the state," who is a sort of semi-Puseyite, or philosophical youngster of "Young England." His friends call him "Aby Baby Cochrane," and he passes for clever! He, on Wednesday night, told the House of Commons that Sir R. Peel had all but extinguished the Anti-Corn-Law League—an assertion which but ill comports with the horror about that odious and dangerous association, the Anti-Corn-Law League, which, on Tuesday night, was uttered in the House of Lords by Lord Beaumont—"a foolish lord." In truth, every thing concurs to show that the existence of the League inspires fear, alarm, and hatred; and the words of Sir James Graham on Tuesday night are an indication that, if the squires will venture on the experiment, there is not wanting in the Home-office a man ready for their work.

But of this they are afraid. Therefore they will attempt a diversion. In the House of Commons they have an individual ready for their purpose, and who, like a thorough-bred scavenger, has a true taste for the flavour of night-soil. The character of William Busfield Ferrand has been summed up by Punch—that judicious punster, who never ventures to break a joke on anything on which public opinion is not well-defined. Punch proclaimed "homage to native talent." Mr. Catlin, in addition to the performances of his Ojibbeways, had secured Mr. Ferrand, warranted to "throw the hatchet" farther than any Indian could do. Mr. Cobden has, as we intimated last week, a notice of a motion, the point and purport of which is to inquire what interest the farmers and the farm-labourers have in the monopoly of corn. To escape such a discussion, the squires will move all Downing-street, Whitehall, and the Clubs; and as a mountebank, with his drum and his tumbling, was frequently engaged to drown the voice of Whitfield when preaching in the open air, so have the squires inspired Ferrand with the idea of shining once more in his own peculiar style. He is to fling up "devil's dust," and "throw the hatchet" in the House of Commons, in order to divert attention, if he can, from the motion of Mr. Cobden. Let him be treated with the silent contempt which is his fitting due. Serious attention to his statements will degrade the man who pays it. Deliberately and publicly and repeatedly insulted by Sir Robert Peel and Sir James Graham, in the House of Commons, he yet fawns, screeches, yells, when the Home Secretary speaks—a bullfrog voice and a rhinoceros skin render him a fitting instrument for shabby work. Here is the motion of which he has given notice: let the reader judge if it be not what we have described it, a ruse to divert attention:—

"That the committee be also directed to inquire into the effect produced upon the wages of the manufacturing operatives by the immigration of agricultural labourers into the manufacturing districts, at the requisition of the mill-owners; also, if the representations which had been made to those labourers, to induce them to immigrate, were true, and if the agreements entered into with them had been fulfilled; and also, the effect which the increase of machinery had produced upon the manufacturing operatives."

Our comments may appear severe; but to those who are aware of true characters and motives, we will not be charged with exceeding the limits of that severity which the interests of truth and justice demand. For that assembly of the "first gentlemen in Europe," and which really does contain many estimable and worthy individuals, nevertheless manifests that its majority is animated by that corporate spirit, which knows small scruple and little shame. Gentlemen as they are, the majority sitting on the Ministerial benches will resort to the use of means from which any individual gentleman would shrink. There is no device which they will not adopt in order to prevent, obstruct, or suppress a discussion unpleasant to their ears; and even when all their manoeuvres are foiled, and the discussion cannot be staved off, then, if any man with blunted feeling and reckless spirit is to be found, ready and willing to create a diversion, they will shower down upon him that approbation in public which in private they would not bestow.

And as if to illustrate, by the force of contrast, the class spirit which pervades the Legislature, the Qui Tam Penalties Bill has this week made its appearance in the House of Commons. The informer, in these actions, sues for penalties of which the law assigns him a share; he, therefore, proceeds, qui tam, that is, as well for our Lady the Queen, as well for himself. Some shrewd fellows have discovered that betting at horse races may be included within the operation of the statutes which prohibit and punish gaming; and they have thrown the "sporting world" into a state of tremor. The point is a doubtful one; but, as the Attorney-General observed, nobody likes to go to law on a doubtful point, when penalties of half a million are at stake. His Grace of Richmond therefore introduces a bill to discontinue the actions; it comes down to the House of Commons; the son of a Cabinet Minister is employed to manage it; the brother of the Prime Minister (Colonel Peel), who also has a Ministerial office, is a party deeply interested, for though, as he naively confessed, he had not been served with a writ, he was in daily expectation of one, and so all the "sporting characters" assembled in great force to support the bill. Well and ably did Mr. Milner Gibson, on Wednesday night, expose this partial attempt at legislation; and no small amount of moral courage is required for such an effort in the face of such an assembly, with such a personal interest in the matter. His speech was altogether an admirable one; he exposed the partiality which leaves poor men at the mercy of fine and imprisonment, if they should unwittingly offend against some obsolete statute, and yet hurries into the Legislature to fling a broad shield over the delinquencies of the privileged class; and with cutting effect he told those privileged classes, that, as they placed great reliance on penal statutes for promoting morality amongst the humbler orders, they must not attempt to escape by a side-wind from laws which Blackstones declared to have been passed to promote morality amongst them. His speech shamed the Government; they could not refuse to support the bill in which their own supporters, not to say some members of the Administration itself, have a deep and vital interest; but, anxious to escape the obloquy of the thing, and to prevent all further discussion, they offered, through the Attorney-General and Sir James Graham, a compromise, stating that they were willing not to discontinue, but merely to suspend the actions for three months, and meantime to have the gaming laws revised.

Some additional Free-Trade notices have been given since our last; and an important return was ordered on the game—not the gambling—laws. It is thus recorded:—

"GAME LAWS.—(On the motion of Mr. Bright, an address was ordered for a return of the number of persons convicted of offences against the game laws, either at petty sessions, quarter sessions, or assizes in England and Wales, during the year 1843, specifying the punishment or penalties inflicted in each case, and also specifying in what county and upon whose property the alleged offence was committed.)"

The game laws—foul and atrocious as they were in their operation—have been much improved within the last ten or twelve years; but enough of them still remain to remind us of the time when Gurth wore his iron collar, and, as a bond thrall, kept his master's swine. The stern Norman Conqueror, who "loved the red deer as if he had been their father," converted vast tracts of England into his chosen and sternly-guarded pleasure spots; and left to the Commons of England those "Forest Laws," against which it required centuries to struggle. The game laws were the dregs of the forest laws; and we, who talk with humane horror about the tyranny of the Amceers of Scinde, in retaining fertile tracts as "hunting grounds," can turn homewards, and show the foot-prints of our own Amceers, both in our laws and on our soil.

For the rest, we may notice that, though the Government refuses to give us a sound commercial policy for Britain, they are busily engaged in framing and ratifying a code of enlightened commercial law for Hong-Kong and China; and the following notice is on the paper:—

Mr. Wallace.—"On the motion that the House resolve itself into a Committee of Supply, to move, That the surplus revenue be applied to the reduction of taxes bearing on the working classes; and that a reduction of the duty on tea appear to this House as that which would give the most general relief."

The motion of Mr. Milner Gibson, for an address respecting the deficiency of agricultural statistics in the United Kingdom, which was fixed for Tuesday last, has been postponed by the discussion on Ireland.

MEETINGS.

METROPOLITAN WEEKLY AGGREGATE MEETING OF THE LEAGUE.

The fourth weekly metropolitan meeting of the League was held on Thursday evening last, at Covent Garden Theatre. It has become now almost needless to repeat, upon each succeeding occasion, that that capacious building was crowded to excess: were its dimensions twice as large as they are, there is little doubt that it would be as compactly filled as at present, with an orderly, but most enthusiastic assemblage of the friends of Free Trade. The Council of the League are every week unwillingly compelled to refuse tickets for admission to many hundreds of eager applicants, anxious to witness the soul-stirring scene, and partake of the intellectual enjoyment, which are the characteristics of the Covent Garden meetings. The declaration of the intention of Ministers and Parliament to support the existing monopolies has evidently had the effect of strengthening the determination of the friends of repeal to labour more zealously and perseveringly to effect their overthrow; and every fresh meeting appears to increase the interest of the League audiences, and add to the intensity of their enthusiasm in favour of the rights of industry.

In the absence of Mr. Wilson (the Chairman), the meeting was presided over by the Hon. C. P. Villiers, M.P. The speakers, as will be seen by the report, were J. Hume, Esq. M.P., whose appearance was hailed with the loudest applause; W. D. Christie, Esq. M.P. for Weymouth; and W. J. Fox, Esq., the surpassing eloquence of whose address called forth the most enthusiastic cheers probably ever heard within the walls of that or any other building. Every allusion to the recent attack made by the Government, in Ireland, upon the freedom of discussion, and the right of the people to seek the repeal of laws which they believe to be oppressive, was warmly responded to by the meeting, and the announcement of the name of Mr. O'Connell as one of the speakers for the ensuing week was received with loud acclamations. The following, among other gentlemen, were upon the platform:—

Hon. Charles Pelham Villiers, M.P., Chairman; Joseph Hume, Esq. M.P.; W. J. Fox, Joseph Parkes, W. A. Wilkinson, Ralph Ricardo, J. P. Burnard, W. D. Christie, Esq. M.P., P. A. Taylor, Dr. Cooke Taylor, T. F. Gibson, S. G. Hall, — Patterson, W. J. Cole, — Preston, W. S. Burton, Henry Keeling, William Clay, Arthur Pattison, W. T. Hodgkin, Pennoek Tiger of Beverley, Jabez Johnson of Manchester, — Wakley, Esq., John Bell, Esq., Charles Williams, Esq., Dr. Simpson, Thomas Mason, Esq., Thomas Ruston, Esq., Joseph Phelps, Esq., George Kidout, Esq., Jeremiah Wynn, Esq., Sir Valentine Blake, M.P., John McLeod, Esq., J. Cox, Esq., Dr. Hitchman, Summers Harford, Esq., F. Roe, Esq., M. Thackeray, Esq., J. Dyke, Esq., W. A. Thomson, Esq., William Edgar, Esq., George Lambert, Esq., Thomas Bateman, Esq., John Thompson, Esq., J. Anderson, Esq., George Osborne, Esq., Richard Lloyd, Esq., Samuel Drewell, Esq., William Reynolds, Esq., Thomas Harbottle, Esq., Manchester; W. J. Scott, Esq., Manchester; C. O. Boyce, Esq., John Yardley, Esq., John Hurt, Esq., — Grant, Esq., R. Harrison, Esq., Mark Perkins, Esq., J. D. Gaskell, Esq., — Joy, Esq., Sir William Baynes, Bart., F. H. Poone, Esq., W. Roberts, Esq., John Chadwick, Esq., F. B. Cheer, Esq.; N. Overbury, Esq., Westbury, Wilts; R. Overbury, Esq., ditto; W. H. Birchall, Esq.; H. Birchall, Esq., Leeds; M. H. Bassett, Esq.; Michael Stocks, Esq., Halifax; Henry Edwards, Esq., — Fullerton, Esq., Joseph Robinson, Esq., R. W. Cole, Esq.; James Harmer, Esq., ex-Alderman of Farringdon Ward, whose appearance was received with considerable cheering; Professor Key, T. Sheppard, Esq., &c. &c.

The CHAIRMAN (who, upon coming forward was received with loud cheers,) said:—Our esteemed friend, Mr. Wilson, who commonly presides with so much judgment and ability at these meetings, is, as I regret to learn, unavoidably detained in the country, and he has in consequence made a particular request to myself to occupy his place in the chair this evening. (Hear, hear.) I am little used to the discharge of such a duty, and I feel somewhat incompetent to the task; but with out reference to this feeling, and without consulting my own convenience, I have complied with his request —(hear)—because I am always unwilling to advise others to do what I would not undertake myself (cheers); and I do now venture to express my opinion, that the time is come when every man friendly to this cause ought, in any and every way within his power, to come forward and aid, countenance, and mark his cordial concurrence in the efforts and objects of this great, useful, and necessary association. (Loud cheers.) The objects of the League are, as we know, identified with the welfare of this kingdom (hear, hear); but the sinister interest to which it is opposed is unfortunately identified with the majorities in the Legislature and the Ministry now in power. (Hear.) The difficulties of the League are, therefore, great (hear), and the reason for extraordinary exertion on the part of themselves and of their friends is obvious. (Cheers.) We live in times when every advantage is taken of the ignorance or apathy of the people with regard to their own interests (hear, hear, hear); and there is no hope or chance of just, wise, or good government, but by the vigorous expression of enlightened opinion. (Cheers.) To produce this result, and thereby to check the sordid abuse of legislative power, the efforts of the League are earnestly and unceasingly directed. (Hear.) The gross misrepresentation of its objects by its opponents proves their fears of its progress, and marks their disappointment at the steady and legitimate mode in which it proceeds. (Hear, hear.) The object of the League has always been clear and definite, and, as I apprehend, continues to be so. That object is, as you know, to disseminate among the people, and make manifest to the whole nation, the justice, wisdom, and advantage of those doctrines affecting the trade and industry of the country, which the greatest and the most enlightened minds have propounded (hear, hear, hear); the truth of which the commonest understandings have admitted; and the immediate application of which, as now called for by the wants of the country, has been advised by men of the greatest practical experience, of the most cautious views, and most extensive information, that have ever lived in the country (cheers); and whatever the monopolists, or the Ministers under them, may choose to style it, I venture to say that this object is one that claims the sympathy and support of every just and sound-hearted citizen. (Cheers.) Since the last meeting, I understand that the word which is now so much in fashion with authority, and from which so much is expected in staying the cries of our injured fellow subjects in Ireland (immense cheering)—I mean conspiracy (laughter and derisive cheers)—has been applied to the meetings in this theatre. (Renewed laughter.) How far the word is justly so applied to these gatherings I do not know; but certainly, considering the purpose for which it is alleged that we associate, it is no wonder that anger and alarm should be felt at our proceedings; for it is upon the high authority of him who is said to have given this hint that the doctrines that we seek to establish are those of common sense (laughter); and certainly anything more fatal to our opponents or more dangerous to those who have obtained power through the ignorance, the delusions, and the divisions of the people—who have everything to apprehend from their wisdom, and nothing to gain by their improvement—than the prevalence of common sense it is difficult to conceive. (Cheers and laughter.) If any fresh nervousness is now exhibited on their part at the proceedings of the League, it may justly be excused as springing from a conviction in their minds that its doctrines are progressing, and that the time is at hand when that sound feeling which is termed common sense will again prevail in the country. (Laughter.) In this I verily believe they are right; and everything which the other League—which, I presume, has something else than common sense in view—has done will aid it (hear, hear); for common sense requires something more in answer to the serious charge brought against the law which is in question by this agitation, than vulgar personality, which is the staple of their oratory (cheers)—something more is necessary to justify a law charged with being passed for the very purpose of producing scarcity in a Christian land (hear); which experience has shown to be attended with all the evils of scarcity, which evils are annually shown to be aggravated by the augmenting wants of increasing numbers (hear, hear), and which law, with its objects and effects thus described,—upon the authority of those quite competent to disclose the fact, whose names stand high in public view, such as those of Russell and Fitzwilliam (cheers),—is, as they say, maintained by those who, invested with legislative power, are directly and pecuniarily interested in their continuance. (Hear, hear.) I say, when common sense sees that coarse invective is all that is offered in reply to these grave and serious imputations, it will justly conclude that there is no other answer that can be given; and when that fact is manifest, then will it be clearly seen that the doctrine we maintain—which is, that industry should be allowed to reap the fruit of its own toil wherever it can be honestly employed (great applause, in the midst of which Mr. Hume entered and was loudly cheered), that capital shall receive its natural profit without the mischievous meddling of the law (hear, hear), and that the idle and unproductive should be confined at least to what is their own (hear, hear),—then, I say, it will be seen that this doctrine is that of common honesty as well as common sense; and the conspirators who have combined to make this truth manifest to the nation, despising now the censure of unjust authority, will then receive the hearty and honest acknowledgments of a grateful people. (Loud cheers.) Believing that these results ought and will legitimately follow from the efforts of the League, I shall always most cordially give them any aid which it may be in my humble power to offer. (Cheers.) A veteran in our cause has just entered the theatre—one who has fought as zealously in the cause of political as of public economy—one who, among a few, has always stuck to his guns, and who, I believe, while a wrong or a grievance remains unredressed in the country, will be ever heard calling for justice. I will not interpose another moment between you and our excellent friend, Joseph Hume, Esq., whom it is now my pleasing duty to introduce to your attention. (Great and general cheering.)

Mr. HUME, on advancing to the front of the stage, was greeted with several rounds of applause, which, having subsided, he spoke as follows:—Gentlemen and ladies. —My hon. friend who has just addressed you has stated one truth at any rate respecting myself—that I have been for many years an anxious labourer in promoting the great object for which the Anti-Corn-Law League has been established. (Hear, hear.) Gentlemen, I cannot but look back with great satisfaction, and many of you will do so, I trust, with equal satisfaction, when I tell you the progress that has been made in this great question—the numbers who have come to be converts to the cause—when I assure you that out of a House of six hundred and odd members, a measure of mine, simply to produce and have a fixed duty on corn, with a view of bringing down annually that amount for 8 or 10 years successively, until we should have Free Trade—that of the entire House at one period, only 14 years ago, I received only 13 supporters. ("Hear," and laughter.) I mention this because it is important to know the progress which has been made in public opinion. My opinion has never altered; on the contrary, every hour of my experience tells me that the principle on which the League is constituted, the objects which they desire and which they have in view, are based upon such immutable principles, that the more every man examines them, the more will he be convinced of their vital importance. (Applause.) I am sorry I was rather late in reaching the council-room, and that I have interrupted the meeting; but I could not deprive myself of the pleasure of being in the House of Commons to see a veteran, also, as a redresser of grievances, enter the House and take his seat there this evening. (Loud cheers.) I can assure you one of the reasons of my attending this night, and accepting the invitation of the Council, was to express my opinion of the principle on which public meetings have recently been assailed, and on which proceedings have been brought to bear against those men who have been placed on their trials. (Applause.) I was anxious to be present, because the same principle which has been applied there may also be applied here. (Ironical cheers.) There is no public meeting, in my humble opinion, that may not be assailed on the same principle if the parties have the courage to dare it. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) I am, therefore, desirous to appear, in order to express my desire to contribute in every way in my power to forward the agitation in behalf of Free Trade, and the repeal of the Corn Laws in particular. (Hear, hear, hear.) I think it behoves every man whose service can in the smallest degree forward that great cause, when the least danger is threatened,—when there is any chance of interference in the manner which we have seen other public meetings interfered with,—then and there I think every individual ought to step forward and support the cause. (Applause.) Since I last had the pleasure of attending here, a very important change has taken place in the country. Formerly we were met by the common and general assertion, that those laws which maintained monopoly in the food of man were necessary, not for the landlords, but for the labourers—the working-men:—"For them, and them alone, we require these laws to continue, and the prices to be maintained, in order that we may give adequate wages, and keep a greater number employed." (Hear.) Since then the curtain has been withdrawn; the truth has now oozed out, a League has been formed against the Anti-Corn-Law League, and the principles publicly avowed in the resolutions, and much more in the speeches at these meetings, are, that they must have these laws continued in order to maintain their rents and keep up prices. (Hear.) We have now, therefore, made a most important step in the progress of this reform, because we can now fairly test them and bring them to book, and ascertain what right they, (the landlords) have to obtain pre-eminence of protection for the employment of their capital beyond that which any other class or any other man in the country has a right to. (Applause.) I consider, gentlemen, the principle most important—I consider these proceedings most favourable—because I know of no honest man who can now in the House of Commons stand up and say that these laws ought to be continued. (Applause.) I say no man who has benefited—(and we have the assertion that the larger portion of the members of the House of Commons are interested in their own behalf to maintain high rents and high prices)—I repeat no man who has benefited by is likely to vote for a non-continuance of these Corn Laws (loud cheers); it is, therefore, a question for the mass of the people to consider and solve—it is for them to determine how long they will permit such an injustice (for injustice it is) to continue. (Hear, hear.) I say, also, that another most important change has taken place. The Prime Minister of England (Sir Robert Peel) is a convert undoubtedly to Free Trade—(laughter)—although, in 1840-41, he denounced Free-Trade principles and all those who endeavoured to bring them before the public, and explain how the Corn Laws acted against the community, and on what sound principles commerce ought to be conducted. I am one of those who came in for a full share of vituperation. I have been the humble means, with my hon. friend who has just sat down and a few others, of exposing, by evidence the most incontrovertible, and by the testimony of men, I will say, more capable than any other men in the country, of expounding the true principles of Free Trade, and showing the bearings of these laws on the industry and prosperity of the country,—I have undoubtedly been one of those who have exposed and laid bare the abuses and sufferings which arise from bad legislation, and I came in for my full share of vituperation from the opponents of the measure for having brought forward a one-sided question. (Hear, hear.) I was quite delighted, in 1842, to find Sir R. Peel come forward and avow the principles of Free Trade as his own, expounding them, in an able manner, such as would have done credit to any man breathing, and declaring that the time was come when no prohibition should exist. At that time he vaunted, and took it as a matter of the utmost importance to his own character, that he should be the man who would wipe from our statute-books the word "prohibition." (Hear, hear.) There are three or four—there were many other articles with high duties that could not be imported—but very few were actually prohibited. Sir R. Peel declared in the House of Commons in his place, in proposing a variety of alterations, he trusted that the word prohibition would be expunged for ever from the statute-book. I hailed his proceeding with great satisfaction, and (believing him to be a man of his word, and one who would continue to carry out the principles which he held to be sound, and which he thought to be right,) I did so because I heard him declare that he would not be a Minister, or act as a Minister or leader in the House of Commons, or be dictated to by any man; that he would exercise his own discretion, and do that which he thought best for the good of his country. He, therefore, declared in the face of the country and the world his adherence to Free-Trade principles, and expounded the great and important question, that it was the interest and the duty of every man and every state, in enacting laws so to frame them as to enable the people to go to the cheapest market to buy, and to the best market to sell. (Cheers.) These were the principles which Sir R. Peel expounded, and on them, if consistent, he would have taken his stand. How mortified and disappointed I have been to find that the man who had the power—who could have done what he pleased by the situation which he holds—has allowed himself to be dictated to by the landed interests of this country. (Hear, hear.) The Duke of Richmond has told him that he must not move—if he does, they must move him out. (Laughter and cheers.) The same Minister has been told, also, at one of the late Anti-League demonstrations, that he must not proceed: the country gentlemen had placed him in power, and if he did not support them, they would not support him. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) This is the state, gentlemen, to which the question has now come. No question was ever brought more fairly before the public than that of Free Trade is at this moment. We know our relative position—we know our situation, and what is it? The laws proclaim that every man has a right to equal protection for his person and for his property. (Hear, hear.) I do not say that all have that protection, but that is the constitution. The commonwealth of this country, and the principle on which it is founded, lays it down as a broad maxim; and so every man in speaking boasts of the equal laws of England and their superiority over those of every other country in the world. Is it not, therefore, fair on the whole to boast of this (though, I am sorry to say, we boast of a great many things which we do not possess). We are very much tickled at the idea of free-born Englishmen, and the privileges which they have; but if you come to look at them you will find they are pared down so very much, that they may be put within a very narrow compass. ("Hear, hear," and laughter.) You will find, if taken by a fair rule, and if you look at what we suffer, I believe we may say, that we have all the requisites to make men happy, and the country powerful—but that our wealth is so interfered with, and our privileges have been so narrowed, that we are actually in a state of great misery and suffering when we ought to be one of the happiest countries in the world. (Hear, hear.) The situation, therefore, in which we are placed is most important at this period. The League proposes to destroy monopoly, and so do all those who advocate the repeal of monopolies as I do, not only in corn, but in every other article; and I know no reason why any Englishman should be born to be a slave or deprived of his civil rights so long as he has not violated any of the laws of the constitution under which he lives. (Hear, hear.) On that ground I consider we are entitled to have equal protection and equal rights. I know no reason why I, because I am a landowner, should have my capital protected when you, as a merchant or manufacturer, are amerced or fined to support it. (Applause.) Many persons have attempted to throw difficulty into this great and important question. They said "You must provide food for the maintenance of your people; you cannot trust to foreign importation. The time may come when the foreigner will shut their ports against you, and then your people will starve; therefore, it is fit and proper that you should depend on your own markets, on your own fields, and on your own supply." (Cheers.) This, to say the least of it, was plausible enough. We get rid thus of the other plausible argument of the landowners, that the law was for the maintenance of the agricultural labourers, and not for themselves. (Hear.) Good, simple men, they would not take the least advantage of it; it was only for the labourers, and the people who work for them. (Derisive cheering.) The question now is altered; it is simply this:—Are we any longer to bear it when we see misery and suffering to its present great extent—when we see that we have not food enough for the mouths which we have—when we see parties unfortunately dying from destitution and want; and does it not become a question for every man, I don't care who he is, the humblest individual in society—to direct his attention to see what is the cause if he can, for there must be some cause for the existing necessity and distress? (Cheers.) There is no want of gold, there is no want of silver, there is no want of everything which man can desire if he only have money to buy it. The question then comes—why cannot every man—why cannot the industry of England, now earn the means of maintenance as formerly? There is the question. We want no nation of paupers; we want no charity establishments; we have the means, and the inhabitants of this country are anxious by their labour, and by the sweat of their brow to earn the means of purchasing food and other articles necessary for their subsistence. And therefore, I say, what is it? Is there any cause existing to produce this extraordinary state of things? I have no hesitation in saying that it is not a question of to-day. My opinion stands 30 years back; year after year pointing out that unless some measures were taken to meet the competition of other countries and to enlarge the field of our commerce and of our manufactures, as the population and the wants of that population increased—unless that was timely done, the period must arrive when distress would overwhelm us, and when we should suffer all that misery and disruption consequent on the decline of the resources of a great country. (Hear, hear.) That period has come—it arrived some years ago—and it followed upon the very causes which were foretold as clearly as they possibly could be: that if the ports were not opened—that if our trade was not freed from all the restrictive trammels and prohibitions which have hitherto impeded it—the time would come when you could not give employment to the numerous hands who are seeking work in addition to an annually and hourly increasing population. (Cheers.) The question then was, what were the means of selling and disposing of the labour of the additional population, and would these means be increased, or would they not? I say they have increased, but not in proportion to meet the increasing population and the growing demand for our exportations. What is the reason? If it was from any calamity which Providence had inflicted upon us, or from causes which we could not avert, all that we could do would be to bow in resignation to the visitation. But when I—speaking for myself—when I believe that a great portion of the evil at present suffered by the industrious population arises from bad legislation, and from the measures of that Parliament which it has the complete power over and means of removing—I say, for any man to continue these laws which are productive of so much distress, is acting a base and infamous part. I am not one of those who conceal their opinions. I have ever pointed out what is necessary to be done to enable a population to live by its own labour—I have ever been averse to all those eleemosynary means which tend rather to destroy than to elevate a population—I have been anxious to see the idle punished, or made to work; but I have been unwilling to see the industrious preyed upon by those who do not work, and yet abstract from them the means of working. (Applause.) On that ground I have been as great an enemy to public taxation unnecessarily as I am to the impost of the Corn Laws; because we have been subjected in this country, unfortunately, to two grievous evils—we have had inordinate establishments, and a large expenditure extracted from the pockets of the public; that, you may say, arises from mistaken views of our importance in the scale of nations, or various reasons might be given; but that we should be subject to taxation, not to go to the State, but into the pockets of individuals, is a doctrine and a system that I think ought not to be submitted to. (Loud cheers.) It is, therefore, against that unjust, and, I will say, impious system—for it is alike against the laws of God and man—that I am glad to see my countrymen strive in a manner which must ultimately give the deathblow to monopoly. (Loud applause.) Now, I assert that we have had the power to avert, and might have avoided much of the evil we have gone through. Even now the time is not gone by when we may at least remedy it. I admit we cannot prevent the past evils which have taken place, and which are now going on (cheers); but the future are within our power, and to prevent them the League has been established. That is their object, that is their business; they want nothing for themselves. It is in order to obtain for the whole community that benefit and intercourse which commerce gives to this country in such a pre-eminent degree. (Cheers.) In order to make the matter fully understood, although extremely simple, and I may be supposed to make the explanation unnecessary, I will just put the view I take of it in a mode which I should hope every individual here—even those who have not directed their attention to it—may be able to understand. We are, strictly speaking, a commercial and manufacturing country; we owe our standing in Europe, we owe our position in the world to manufactures and commerce; we have a fertile land, probably, taking it for its size, more productive than any other spot which could be pointed out. What would it be—what would all the produce of the land be, whether in corn or in cattle, or in any other produce, if we had not customers to buy it, and to give our prices, and raise them higher than they are in any other part of the world? I, therefore, start with this position, which no man will deny, that commerce and manufactures have been our great "stay" for many years. (Hear, hear.) What is it that we ask? Commerce is only a barter and exchange for the produce of the labour of one man for the produce and labour of another. One man makes more of one article than he can use, and he exchanges the surplus of it for that which another man has but does not want. This proceeding takes place between man and man—it is the whole principle of commerce—it is on that its prosperity depends. We have had the means of creating that which man requires in the way of manufactures. We, in this island, have had greater power and greater facility than any other country in the world; and it is on that account that we are enabled to minister to the wants of the whole world to a greater degree than any other country; on that account also we stand higher with the wealthy amongst nations; and thus the importance of the country has been induced by the profits arising from these exchanges. (Hear.) If I have made myself understood, is it not clear that any law which should shut out any one article, or which should prohibit our selling in any market the surplus for which we have no use; is it not clear that such laws must tend to restrict the limits of, and cramp all, our commercial proceedings? (Cheers.) The law limits our power and reduces the demand for labour and the amount of wages. Want and destitution follow—want of employment and want of wages, as every one knows, is the consequence. (Cheers.) The operation is very simple, and no one need find any difficulty whatever in comprehending it. It is on that ground that I join with the Anti-Corn-Law League. I join with them in demanding that all restriction should be removed from food: first, because we have not food enough for the people, though our people have wherewithal to purchase it, if you will allow them; their industry is unrivalled, their produce is more than they can consume, our warehouses are loaded,—our ships are ready to carry them away. What, then, in the name of common sense, can induce any man, if he reasons on the principles of sound sense, to say, "No; your goods shall not go—your ships shall not be employed—you shall not bring corn back to the people—we will rather let them starve than allow it." (Cheers.) That is the operation which has been going on for several years to a greater or less extent. (Cheers.) Undoubtedly we are told that this is a very fine doctrine, but that you cannot always command it, and that other people will not take what you have to sell. I deny the position, and I say that every man will take that which he can get cheaper and better than anywhere else. (Hear, hear.) I ask him not to take what I make or produce if I cannot produce a better or cheaper article than any other person can. I will not go myself and buy bad articles at one place, if I know of another place where I can get them better and cheaper. (Hear, hear.) If I judge for myself, and you all judge for yourselves; you all act on that principle, whether you go to a butcher's, or baker's, or any other shop; you all consider what you should buy and pay for, and you will reason fairly on the subject with reference to yourself. (Hear, hear.) Apply the same rule to the subject of the Corn Laws. There is not one rule for one man and another for a state: the same principle operates throughout; and it is on that account, I believe, that the common sense of this country will not longer permit any party, dominant as they are, and possessed of the monopoly of political power at the present moment, to exercise an unlimited advantage over them. We have a House of Commons, and that House of Commons is undoubtedly hostile to our movement at the present moment. I do not believe that any power will produce any change in the present House of Commons. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) I had hopes from the Minister, I have no hopes now. (Loud cheers.) He has shown himself far below the standard which he took up on assuming office. He has allowed himself to be overborne by the party he declared he would not truckle nor yield to. (Hear.) He has shown himself so obedient to them that I can scarcely hope he will recover that high standing and bearing for which I have given him credit. (Hear, hear.) What, then, is the situation which we are in? Are we to suffer, or is the country to go on in the same way? Is the destitution and misery that reigns around to be continued? If you take up the Times, or any other of the morning papers, you will hear that there is a great strife with a variety of people as to this refuge for the destitute, or that benevolent society. (Hear, hear, hear.) I think I cut out of one newspaper, three or four days ago, at least thirteen or fourteen advertisements, and all for the relief of destitution in the metropolis. (Hear.) Is that the way free-born Englishmen are willing the people should live? Is such a state of things to continue? (No, no.) I, for one, believe that it will continue until we have another House of Commons. (Loud applause.) I do not believe parties who have been witnesses to so much misery arising from misrule; I cannot hope that they will do anything; I can scarcely hope they will do anything, although I did hope, and have held my expectation to the last moment.

(Hear, hear.) But when I hear the declaration that nothing is to be done—that we are to stand fast as we are—that we are not to allow the least deviation—that we are to have no alteration in the tariff laws, or anything to promote trade—when I see no means taken to produce employment, which is what we want—when I see that no means are taken to extend the commerce and trade of the country—when I see all this determined by the language of those who have the political power—I repeat, I am almost without hope. (Hear, hear.) It is true you are in a very strange situation in this assembly now, as countenancing the meetings of the League, because you are all liable or may be liable—(The conclusion of the sentence was lost amid the shouts of laughter which greeted the honourable member's observation.) We were informed only a few days ago that this great and important League was scattering blasphemous publications, undermining the morals of the community, and doing that which would endanger society (laughter); and therefore, said our opponents, "We will raise an Anti-League to put down this League." Gentlemen, these are very strong words, and, I admit, the man who can see his fellow-man suffering all that we see so many thousands suffering—at a time, too, when he is conscious it is to benefit himself and to improve his own estate—the man who would allow such things to go on will allow himself to say and do anything. (Cheers.) It is on that ground I do express deep regret in addressing you on the present occasion. (Hear, hear.) I believe the present House of Commons will not be changed until the people shall really see their own importance. (Hear, hear.) They have the power at this moment, even in the limited electoral districts of this country, of completely changing the face of things. (Loud cheers.) They may send Free Traders into the next Parliament in sufficient numbers to carry out all the great, important, and benevolent questions which they have in view; and I cannot believe that such will not be the case. (Cheers.) I do hope that such means will be taken constitutionally—constitutionally through our electors. Indeed, I cannot believe the electors will continue much longer blind to their own interest, and return to Parliament a majority of those who are our worst enemies. (Cheers.) I say, our enemies, because you are for Free Trade, and they are opposed to it, and their policy tends to the very reverse. (Loud cheers.) Gentlemen, I can only tell you that the country once boasted, and does boast now, of sending out fifty millions of exports during the year, and much more. The manufactures and produce of the United Kingdom, and of the country, are exported to this extent; and you must bear in mind that one-half our population has been brought up depending upon those manufactures and on that trade. See what would be the consequence if you were to resort to what the country gentlemen tell you—"Depend upon our home trade—what is foreign trade without it?" There would be fifty millions a year which we are now exporting—the produce of our manufactures, of much employment and wages, and of the means of supply sacrificed—and yet we are told that foreign markets ought not to be compared with the home markets. (Hear, hear.) Gentlemen, I differ entirely from this principle. If we are to be narrowed within the limits of our own Isle—if we are only to supply ourselves—I should be sorry certainly to live to see any approach to it. (Hear, hear.) I should be sorry to think of the day that England should be obliged to recede from her present limits—sufficiently narrow as they are—when, with her increasing and growing population, it is actually necessary to our prosperity and happiness to go on expanding, as we have the power of doing, and increasing the sphere of our commerce as a means of giving employment to our labourers. (Applause.) Let not any man be deluded by the cry that "the home-market is the best." Speaking of goods, any one of sense knows no difference between the home and foreign. If I have a bale of woollens to sell—if I could sell it better abroad I should not sell it at home—therefore, the home and foreign market is only one of sale in that respect. ("Hear, hear," and cheers.) Then, as to the extent of the object: I want the whole world, hitherto contributory to England, to enjoy my advantages of ingenuity and labour, and that we should draw back that which we require—food and raw materials—convert them into manufactured articles, and supply the whole world—thus carrying on the circle. (Hear, hear.) It is in this way we have grown great—it is in that way alone we can continue to hold our position; and I believe no measure adopted, or course followed, is so important as that which the League now contemplate. (Loud cheers.) It is the business of every man, from the beggar to the peer—and I will say that it is equally to their advantage—for I speak after due consideration. I believe in my conscience that the landed proprietors have suffered more, and that they will suffer more in their property by a continuation of these laws than had they been entirely removed. (Hear.) I believe that, if they dare to continue the present system much longer, they will still go on suffering. (Hear.) I was informed only to-day, that in Ireland the effect is so great, that with all the farmer's depending on the breed and supply of cattle, the demand has been so little, owing to our policy and the want of means on the part of the people to purchase, that the farmers are in a state of the greatest possible destitution. (Hear.) Will not that soon reach the landlords? It has done so already, and it will do so still more. (Hear.) I therefore say that it is as much to the interest of the peer as of the peasant or the manufacturer, supposing he has nothing but land to depend on. (Cheers.) The whole of the landed aristocracy, in my opinion, ought to come forward and remove every prohibition, and give the opportunity for fair play in the maintenance of the capital which exists in the country, and allow the industry, the ingenuity, and the activity of Englishmen to do their best without being trammelled, and without being interfered with by these restrictive laws. (Applause.) It is on that account that I am an advocate for Free Trade in the fullest extent—but more especially in corn (loud cheers); for it is necessary, to enable England to compete with other countries—affording the people a fair field and the same opportunities as regards food and everything else. (Hear, hear.) This is the object intended by the League: to put food forward as the most important requisite, and in this conviction I entirely agree. Let us have free trade in corn, and in twelve months we should have free trade in everything. In conclusion, I have only to express my hope that every person who now hears me will consider that I am giving this recommendation, not on my own behalf, but upon theirs; that each will consider the relative situation in which he is placed, and that it is important to him, in whatever position he may be, to have free trade in corn, as a commencement to free trade in every other article. (Cheers.) If it is the landed gentry—if it is the landowners whom I address—I tell them that these laws will ere long be so much preyed on by paupers in this country that their income will be worth but little. (Hear, hear.) If it is a capitalist, I would say to him, what is his capital worth now? See the millions that are lying in the coffers of the Bank; some thirty millions at this moment in London of bullion, or equivalent to bullion, that cannot be employed to bring more than two or three per cent. Let Free Trade take place—let the tram-mels be removed from commerce—and we shall have industry and enterprise, and all that is necessary to carry them out; and every man in the country will soon be benefited by the returns of profits derived therefrom. (Hear, hear.) Down even to the beggar, there is not a man who is not interested in this great and important question. (Hear, hear.) I do hope that the time is not far distant when we shall see one unanimous display of approval of our object, even from that party strong as they are (they are strong in wickedness, we in truth). I do hope, I say, that the time is not far distant when we shall see a glorious and successful termination to the grievous wrongs under which the country suffers. (The hon. member concluded by thanking the audience for the kind manner in which they had listened to him, and was loudly cheered on resuming his seat.)

The CHAIRMAN next introduced Mr. Christie, M.P. for Weymouth.

Mr. CHRISTIE, on coming forward, was received with loud plaudits. He said:—Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen, if anything can add to the honour of addressing this assembly it is to follow that veteran and venerable reformer to whom you have just listened, and to whom you have given so grateful and enthusiastic a reception. (Cheers.) I humbly join with Mr. Hume in suggesting to you, as a matter for thankfulness and congratulation, that against these meetings—which have now been held for rather more than a year—which during the last six months have been held monthly, and since the meeting of Parliament weekly—which, if they possess any feature more remarkable than their magnitude, are characterised by that extraordinary order which uniformly attends them—which are meetings of the citizens of a free country for the purpose of discussing a law which they believe to be injurious to the interests of the community—that against these meetings, so orderly, so intelligent, so befitting a country which boasts of its free institutions, no Government proclamation has yet been issued, no new-fangled law of conspiracy has yet put them down. (Loud cheers.) Two nights since, I heard Sir James Graham, the Secretary of State for the Home Department—putting on his most significant look—utter a sentence, on the words of which much study had evidently been bestowed, which, if it was not intended for mere clap-trap, and the significant look assumed for no other purpose than to raise a party cheer, or to insult by dark insinuation what he dare not openly attack, must have been intended as a warning for the Anti-Corn-Law League. (Cheers.) After saying that the altered circumstances of the time might require an alteration in the law of conspiracy, and quoting a maxim of Madame de Staël's, which he and the Duke of Wellington think most profound, he said: "Now-a-days Leagues hold their meetings in theatres, and traitors build conciliation-halls to disseminate sedition." (Ironical cheers and laughter.) All that I can say in answer to this is, that the Anti-Corn-Law League have not as yet frightened the Home-office with any sham military proclamation. (Laughter.) The Council of the League continues to address the people in terms plainly to be understood. The magical word "half-distance" has not yet appeared in its advertisements—Mr. Cobden heads no Anti-Corn-Law cavalry; and though, if Sir J. Graham would come here and look at us, I think we should present a very pretty little "group" for a Cabinet Minister to look on (cheers), my hon. friend who presides this day, and who must be supposed to have called us together, has been content that we should "group" here irregularly, and has not committed the dangerous indiscretion of ordering us to marshal ourselves in "troops" together. (Laughter.) But, gentlemen, I think further that it was not from Sir James Graham that this declaration against the League might have been expected. (Hear, hear, hear.) The League—without having, I believe, taken any particular trouble to ascertain Sir James Graham's opinions—have, hitherto, had good reasons for thinking that these meetings were honoured with his confidence and good opinion. (Hear, hear.) When, last year, the League began to hold its meetings in theatres, those who conducted the arrangements of the League unexpectedly found that the police force, which always attends at these theatres when devoted to the purpose of the drama, were not allowed to attend on occasions on which the League met here, by a special order from the Home Office. (Cries of "Shame," and hisses.) Mr. Wilson made particular inquiries of the chief superintendent of the metropolitan police, but the attendance of officers was still refused; and, up to this day, by special direction of the Home Office, we are without the presence of the police. (Laughter and applause.) From this, then, it seems to be inferred that Sir James Graham—he who presides over the Home Office—was satisfied with the legal and orderly character of our assemblies. (Hear.) So, gentlemen, if the Government—their heads turned with what they call their success in Ireland,—(it would be better for them to have waited and seen some of the results of their success, before they boasted of it, and indulged in unfeeling taunts against defeated conspirators, in the absence of that great man before whom they quailed when they granted Catholic Emancipation (tremendous cheering, and cries of "Bravo!"), with whom this very Sir James Graham, once the boldest of reformers, was seated for some years on the benches of the House of Commons,—a fellow-labourer in the service of the people,—consistently pursuing what he believes to be the interest of Ireland, from whom, however many of us may differ as to his projects and opinions (cheers)—whom the apostate baronet idly imagines he has humbled (loud cheers)—if, I say, they now prepare another indictment against the League, and endeavour to apply a law of conspiracy adapted to Madame de Staël's maxim, and to altered circumstances against the Anti-Corn-Law Association, why, we will call Sir J. Graham and the superintendent of the metropolitan police to our characters. (Laughter and cheers.) I hope that, if the League is to be honoured with a notice from the Home-office, the troops of the new Pro-Corn-Law Association will not altogether escape attention. (Cheers.) I must say, that, if there is any danger in the attitude assumed by the Anti-Corn-Law League, the opponent associations seem to me to present a more dangerous aspect; for, judging from some of the speeches which I have read, and judging from the significant hints and bold declarations, of which Mr. Hume has given you some instances, which have been made by noble dukes, and noble earls, and others, intended especially for the notice of Government, the Pro-Corn-Law Associations seem to take a much higher and more dangerous flight than we do. The Anti-Corn-Law League makes it its object to act on the House of Commons—it makes it its object to secure in that assembly a majority in favour of a repeal of the Corn Laws—it acts upon the constituencies, and endeavours to make them elect good members—it endeavours to make the constituencies act upon its members, and cause them to give good votes; but, judging from the tone that has been assumed by the Pro-Corn-Law Associations, they seem to aim their efforts directly and principally at the administrative Government. (Hear, hear.) They jump over the Legislature altogether, honour the Cabinet with their special superintendence, and aspire to keep the Government in order. (Hear, hear.) Now, gentlemen, although the Government does not favour us, and though noble dukes and earls, no longer (preserving, a proud and seditious "half-distance" from their tenant-farmers, but condescendingly combining with them), fulminate against us, I venture to believe that the object which the Anti-Corn-Law League has in view is one which, if rightly understood, ought not to be angrily received by a Government professing to derive its power from the people, and by the noble and wealthy of a land, in which we are fast arriving at the general understanding that wealth, and rank, and talents, are given to a few only to advance the happiness of all. (Cheers.) What is our object? Neither more nor less than this—to prevent man's chief article of food, that great necessary of life which he who can command all luxuries does not discard, but which is the poor man's stay and chief resource, from being made scarce and dear, in order that wealth may be added to the wealthy, or that one class among the poorer classes of the community may receive fancied assistance from the State at the expense of the rest, or that bread may yield an unfair and disproportionate assistance to the public revenues of the State. (Hear, hear.) That is our object. I do not know whether I ought to call it strange—for the ways of monopoly are strange and inscrutable altogether—but still, when our object is clearly explained, it does seem strange that the plea of regard for the poor man's interest, and the agricultural labourer, should be attempted to be set up against us. (Hear, hear.) We, however, question that. Better, we say, that the agricultural labourer should trust to the strength of his own strong arm, and to his share in the general increase of wealth which must follow from the unimpeded industry of all, than to the fallacious promises held out by protective Acts of Parliament, which, in whatever degree they may tend to increase his rate of wages, must, in an incalculably greater degree, diminish the general stock of profits, and the general wealth on which his rate of wages must ultimately depend,—which, to use a common metaphor, kill in their operation, the bird which lays the golden eggs that are promised, which may seem to benefit, but which must in reality injure—

"Spoil with false care what else would flourish wild,
And rock the cradle till they bruise the child."

(Loud cheers.) Gentlemen, there is no monopoly which does not attempt to put up some such plea of humanity for its support. Take the other prominent instance of sugar. We are not to repeal the duties on corn, because it is said we shall injure the poor agricultural labourer at home. We are not to diminish the duties on foreign sugar, because we may do hurt to the black slave labourer abroad. (Hear, hear.) But, gentlemen, with regard to corn,—and with regard to sugar also, but on that subject this is not the time nor the place to enter,—with regard to corn then, exclusively, I do say that if the name of humanity is to be introduced into this struggle, it is on our banners on which it must be written. (Loud cheers.) Consider, only, the tendencies of a law whose obvious working and whose obvious end is to raise the price of bread,—I care not for what pretext this law may be imposed,—no good that it can ever do can possibly weigh as a grain of dust in the balance against all the aggravations which it must administer to misery, in all the great variety of forms in which misery must exist in a densely-populated country like our own. (Hear.) Think of the vast amount of poverty to which the Legislature, imposing a tax on bread, must present itself in the odious aspect of standing between man and the full complement of food which the natural appetite of man requires, and then say whether ours is not a case which addresses itself to the best, the strongest, and the tenderest feelings of humanity. (Applause.) Yes, we have humanity on our side—as we have justice on our side—as we have reason on our side—and, notwithstanding the menaces of the Secretary of State, there is no cause, which, with these supports, will not in time in this free country prevail. (Cheers.) The Prime Minister has taken an early opportunity, during the present session, of declaring that he means to do nothing on the subject of the Corn Laws. He is satisfied with the present state of things. The new law has now been working for two years, and he is quite satisfied with the result. The Prime Minister may yet learn how much of the comparatively good working of his new law is owing to good harvests and other favourable circumstances, when, in a somewhat shorter space of time than I suppose is meant by Mr. Gladstone's celebrated phrase, "the revolution of ages," circumstances become changed and less plentiful harvests are yielded. (Cheers.) But when we consider the difference between the new sliding scale which Sir Robert Peel has enacted and the old one, it is impossible for any rational man to attribute the comparatively low price of corn and the smaller fluctuation of price during the last two years, than in the two or three years that preceded Sir R. Peel's entrance into office to any difference between the new law and the old. Essentially they are the same. We have, it is true, one lower maximum duty than we had; the duties which were formerly altogether inoperative have been done away with; we now slide evenly down from the highest duty to the lowest, instead of jumping occasionally, as we used to do; but all the same great principles and great irregularity of price, encouragement to speculation, &c.

ing back foreign corn in bond while the price is rising and the distresses of the people are increasing, and then, when the time of harvest comes, suddenly inundating the market with it, to the injury of the home-grower. (Applause.) And if, again, the time of high prices and scarcity of bread should arise, it will then clearly be seen that the new sliding scale is twin-brother to the old.

"And Duncie the second reigns like Duncie the first."

(Cheers.) Now, gentlemen, before I sit down, let me say a word or two about the House of Commons. The great and deeply-interesting questions which affect the sister-country have naturally excited first the attention of the Legislature. (Loud cheers.) Whatever time there has yet been to spare has not, perhaps, unnaturally been devoted to saving certain individuals of rank, and wealth, and station, from actions and penalties which they have incurred by inordinate betting on horse races (hear); and when from these penalties they have been freed, we suppose that many of them will be able to subscribe more handsomely to some of the new Pro-Corn-Law Associations. (Hear.) When our chairman presently introduces his annual motion in the House of Commons upon the Corn Law, it is too much to hope that the same promptitude and zeal will be exhibited in its reception. But I think we may hope that if ever again, before the total repeal of these laws, a time of high price and scarcity of bread arises, there will henceforward be no difficulty or delay in passing through the Legislature a bill to relieve the distress of the people, by suspending the operation of those laws which close our ports against the great corn markets of southern Europe and America. (Cheers.) Though other questions may, for a time, assume a prominence, the friends of Corn-Law repeal know that their turn must again soon come, and that the success of their cause is now ultimately certain. (Cheers.) If any one before doubted that a fixed duty was not altogether impossible, and that whenever the party opposed to those who now hold the Government comes into a position in which it can act, total and unconditional repeal must be granted, (Cheers.) Lord Morpeth's recent declaration would remove that doubt. He is a nobleman, as we all know, eminently without guile, and the last man who would utter an opinion which was not his sincere and genuine conviction. (Cheers.) He was a leading member of a Cabinet which, less than three years ago, proposed an 8s. fixed duty on corn, and he now comes forward to join hands with Mr. Cobden, and to declare that, if in another year the sliding scale is not given up, he will embrace the cause of total and unconditional repeal (renewed cheering); and if he, at the time of making that declaration, doubted as to the sliding scale being preserved for another year, Sir Robert Peel came in most opportunely to make a declaration of his determination to preserve the sliding scale, which would remove Lord Morpeth's doubt. Other great conversions and important declarations will follow that of Lord Morpeth's. I only hope,—and I trust it will not be thought presumptuous in me to express that hope,—but still, not being so closely connected with the Anti-Corn-Law League as many whom I see around me, being generally rather a distant observer of its proceedings than one who takes any active part in its operations, I hope, I may say not altogether inappropriately, that I trust there will be no irritating language employed, on the part of the leaders in the cause of total repeal, which may retard the conversion of other honourable and eminent politicians. (Loud cheers.) One common obstacle to a conciliatory mode of making and keeping converts I know, fortunately in this case, does not exist. There can be no apprehension on the part of the Anti-Corn-Law League of its honours being filched away by others; there can be no jealousy of new and conspicuous converts on the part of the veteran labourers in this cause. (Renewed cheers.) Its enemies have called the League a "great fact": its services will constitute it for ever a great era in the history of the country (cheers); and if it should be reserved for one who has not yet joined the ranks of total repeal, but who, in the responsible situation of leader of a great party, conscious that the eyes of the public are peculiarly upon him, feeling his honour to be the honour of his party, must naturally observe peculiar caution in any steps which he may take; if, I say, it should be reserved for the present leader of the Opposition, in a new House of Commons, as Mr. Hume has said, to grant as a Minister to the people of this country, the great boon of Free Trade to the people of his honoured name and his own services (loud cheers) in the cause of good government; why, come victory whenever and by whatever powerful hand it may, the general who shall have won the decisive battle will be honoured, but honour will be given also to those who pioneered the way and made the victory more easy (loud cheers); and no man—who, as he lays a larger meal before his children, desires thankfully to bless those to whom he owes it—can ever forget the skilful, eloquent, high-toned, persevering advocacy of Mr. Villiers (immense cheering), or those exertions of almost superhuman energy, and that remarkable union of a true, simple, manly character, with an intellect of extraordinary breadth, vigour, and acuteness which, in a short space of time that seems only as a day, have placed Mr. Cobden in the front rank of our public men (tremendous applause), and established him far beyond the reach of the calumnies and dark insinuations (hear), by which unscrupulous enemies have endeavoured to depress him. (The hon. gentleman sat down amidst great applause.)

W. J. Fox, Esq., upon coming forward, was received with prolonged and most enthusiastic cheering, which having subsided, he proceeded to address the meeting as follows:—If there hangs upon two honourable members of Parliament, who have addressed you this evening, the doom which used to be much more frequently on judges' lips than, happily, it is at the present day,—and if they are about to be "taken to the place from whence they came"—I trust that, upon reaching their destination, they will report to the assembly collected there that the Anti-Corn-Law League is still in existence (cheers and laughter); for it was announced in that House no longer ago than last night, that, since the declaration of Sir Robert Peel on the first night of the session, the Anti-Corn-Law agitation had "dwindled into insignificance." (Laughter.) Yes, it has, indeed, dwindled from a revenue of £50,000 in the year towards one of £100,000. (Hear.) It has dwindled from small local meetings to such gatherings as I now behold around me; and it has dwindled from the humility of petitioning the House of Commons into appealing to the masters of that assembly. (Loud cheering.) What a strange, imperfect, confused, and ignorant notion must any man have of the Anti-Corn-Law League, who supposes that the breath of members of the House of Commons, or of Ministers of the Crown, can cause it to shrink and shrivel up into insignificance! Why, the monopolist legislators take the League to be some petty intrigue, or paltry manoeuvre of party; something to which the members of their own body are much more accustomed than they are to the grand principles of truth and justice, and the great movement of National Opinion. (Hear.) And that man, too, of all persons, to be cited in this manner, whose breath has so often blown hot and cold upon subjects; who has aforetime denounced as destructive of the political constitution and the religious establishment of these realms, the very measures which he has subsequently submitted to introduce;—of all men, his words are not those before which such a body as the Anti-Corn-Law League is to stand appalled, or at whose command it can shrink into annihilation! Neither upon the will of Sir Robert Peel, nor any other leader of party, does the existence of this League depend, or the attainment of its great objects which are now advancing towards accomplishment. We abjure all party alliances! It has lately been made a boast that even rich Whig landlords are joining the Anti-League Associations. Let them do so: so much the worse for the Whigs, but not for the Anti-Corn-Law League. (Hear.) Our strength is in the principles we hold; it is in the certainty that Free Trade is written down as an important step in the progress of nations; it is in the fact that the claims of industry are founded on the principles of eternal justice. The right of industry to a fair market for its produce may be violated for a time, and be withheld by influence or by violence, but can never permanently be refused to the demands of humanity. (Cheers.) Their dicta—upon whatever side of the House they may be, or to whichever party they may lean—their dicta stop the progress of this League or prevent the accomplishment of its objects! Why, we may as soon believe that the progress of the coming spring will be retarded or prevented by the bellowing of the bull in Tamworth park. (Cheers and laughter.) But what monopoly cannot effect through the medium of ancient institutions and legitimate forms is, it seems, to be brought about by voluntary associations and combined exertions. Not content with the great Pro-Corn-Law League of the House of Lords, not satisfied with the supplemental Corn-Law League of the House of Commons, or with the committee of the Cabinet and its coerced spokesman, not content with all this, we find a number of little associations springing up here and there all over the country, and crying out, as it were, to these Leviathan powers,—

"Oh, let my little bark attend and sail, Pursue the triumph, and partake the gale!"

Very imitative bodies are these new associations! (Laughter.) Indeed, they have now taken to copy after us; we have left off petitioning Parliament, and therefore they are just going to begin; I hope the cast-off clothes will fit them gracefully. (Laughter.) They denounce our agitation. The Duke of Richmond says "agitation is immoral," and forthwith he puts himself at the head of another agitation! (Laughter.) On looking over the various resolutions and proceedings of these meetings, I have endeavoured to ascertain what their most prominent features are, and what they are driving at. Of the two things which stand out the most boldly in relief, one I find is hatred of the League. They do not know exactly what they are about to do, but they must "oppose the League;" they must "stop the League;" they must "put down the League;" and, to do all this, they begin by praising the very law of which they have heretofore been complaining; they announce themselves as supporters of the Ministry by whom they have just been betrayed; they show their consistency, scarcely knowing what else to drive at, by avowing their intention to uphold a law which they denounced, and to support a Premier whom they acknowledged they despise. (Cheers.) And then they declare that we are liable to the penalties of the law. Why, what have they done but put themselves in a position to shield us, if there be any impartiality in the administration of the law, from such inflictions? If we are an illegal body, much more so are they with their Corresponding Societies, making their conspiracies, not "constructive" but open and apparent to all the world. Not that I care about the word "conspiracy;" I should as soon as any other, or perhaps in preference, have addressed myself in the first instance to this meeting by the term "FELLOW-CONSPIRATORS." (Cheers.) I hold it no disgrace—when the pursuit of a lawful object by lawful means brings men under pains and penalties—the adoption of that or any other term whatever which may be applied to them. (Cheers.) I do say that, whatever may be the business of our meeting this evening, I should have felt ashamed of myself and of you if the privilege of free meeting and of free speech could be used here without an expression of sympathy with those who are to be punished for its use in the sister country. (Enthusiastic and long-continued cheering.) I say it is sympathy for our own sakes, not for theirs; for, of all men, I take him to have the least need of sympathy, who, even in a dungeon, if he is sent to one, will rule in the thoughts, hearts, and devotion of the nation he is serving. (Renewed cheering.) It is due to ourselves, and to the best and dearest right that the people of this country possess—the right of publicly meeting;—and if it be a great grievance, in numbers proportioned to the greatness of that grievance,—to declare their wrongs and to demand redress. That right should never be touched in any locality, or in the person of any individual without the protest—strong and heartfelt—of every one who values public freedom and the interests of a nation only preserved by the boldness of its speech and by its spirit of independence. (Loud cheers.) But to return to the Anti-League Associations. The crimination of the League seems to be their first great pervading object; this is the most intense feeling in their hearts, and the first idea to which they give utterance. But for what do they criminate us? Of all the petty, paltry charges ever scraped together, some of those that figure in the very head and front are the most pitiful. The first resolution of one great agricultural body sends paid lecturers about the country. They charge it as a crime upon us that lecturers are sent to teach public meetings. But even they have not the impudence to charge it upon us, that in some instances ruffians are sent to disturb public meetings. (Cheers.) They forget, too, that the great teacher and lecturer of the League is one who is not, and cannot be, paid by human agency; its greatest and most efficient lecturer is an invisible power, but most formidable in its results—a missionary—a lecturer from the council of Heaven to the heart of humanity—a lecturer that speaks secretly to the minds of those who listen, as well as with the voice of him who addresses an assembly—an undying power, but everywhere pledged to support Free-Trade doctrines, and cry down oppression—and the name of that unpaid lecturer is Love of Justice! (Loud cheers.) They complain, too, of our petitions, now that we have done with them. (Laughter.) The generous maxim of "nothing but good of the dead," seems not to operate upon them. A number of stories are raked up against us, amongst which is that of a man having forged many names to an Anti-Corn-Law petition. They do not accuse us of forging names to a requisition to a monopolist candidate to stand for a county! (Hear, hear, hear.) With rather an unadvised choice of illustration, they say that one man went into a churchyard and copied a number of names from the grave-stones, and appended them to a petition against the Corn Laws. (Laughter.) Why, if the rogue actually did this, there was some shrewdness about him; and had their own perception been morally acute, I think they would have abstained from selecting such a particular illustration of the charge; for in the grave-yards of this country, in those both of crowded towns and remote villages, how many senseless inhabitants are there that have been brought to that condition, indirectly, indeed, but not the less certainly, by the operation of these accursed Corn Laws? (Cheers.) Could the dead interfere in our transitory concerns, myriads of them would have a right to petition on this matter. They have been victims of the system which the living are yet enduring, and under which they are writhing; and were there a power to reach their dust,—could old thoughts, feelings, and reminiscences be gathered together, and they come from those graves to which so many of them have been carried with but limited rites and shortened ceremony—"the little bell tolled hastily at the pauper's funeral," could they be gathered together from their resting-places, and be assembled in the neighbourhood of that body which sits and legislates on life and death,—O! there would be such a crowd, that the avenues to the Houses of Parliament would be blocked up far and wide! It would require a little army of horse, foot, and artillery—with a Wellington at their head—to cut a passage through the multitudes; and, if this were done, the appropriate result would be—that of finding the chaplain of the House of Commons preaching a sermon on that occasion from the text—"Thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground." (Tremendous cheering.) Next in prominence to this most unwise disposition to vituperate the League, I find in the proceedings of these bodies an immensity of professions of attachment to the labourer. This is the stalkinghorse in every string of resolutions and in all their speeches. The good of the labourer and his worth seem to be their beings' end and aim. (Laughter.) It would appear from these statements as if landlords were only born that they might exercise love to labourers. (Renewed laughter.) One would suppose from such proceedings that they would never meet again at their festivities, but that after the toast of "Church and State," and its usual accompaniment of the song of the very next toast would be, "Our love to the labourer!" and if their description of his Arcadian state and rural felicity be true, this toast would be followed by the song in character of—

"A jolly full bottle!" (Laughter.)

"Such a beauty I did grow!" (Laughter.)

They love the labourer so dearly, that they take care the fine proportions of his form shall not be spoiled by too rich or ample living, or obscured by too great an abundance of clothing. They love upon the principle laid down by a curate whose faith was doubted as to its orthodoxy, and who replied that he could not be expected to believe very largely, he only believed at the rate of £80 annually, while the bishop believed at the rate of £15,000 a year. (Laughter.) So it seems at these agricultural meetings that great lords and landed proprietors love the labourer at the rate of their £30,000, £40,000, £60,000, £80,000 a year, while the poor labourer in return can only love at the rate of 8s. or 9s. a week. (Renewed laughter.) There has been nothing like their wonderful attachment since the days "when King Cophetua loved the beggar-maid"; but that potentate did not make the maid a beggar that he might love her, as the landowners' system has made the labourer to whom they profess this attachment. (Hear.) The affection has often been celebrated in song, of—

"The lass that loves a sailor:"

but what in the world is that to the affection of "the lord that loves a labourer!" (Laughter.) They love them so dearly that for their sakes they will even injure the rest of the community; they will degrade their own character; pervert their power and station, and abuse legislative duties. They love them so dearly that for their sakes they will take out of the pockets of the public any amount of rent which they can enhance by taxation on food. (Hear.) "The labourers must not be thrown out of employment;" they, we are told, must have work; and "if Free-Trade principles are to prevail," they gravely say, "why, the land will go out of cultivation, and the poor labourer will starve." Now what is the meaning of this statement? For love itself—even the love of the landlord for the labourer—must sometimes be subjected to analysis. The owner of 50,000 acres, who gets from them his £50,000 a year, says, if Free-Trade principles prevail, his land will go out of cultivation, and England will become a desert. Does he mean that the land itself will take wings, and fly away, if he will take no rent for it? Does he wish us to believe that the land will yield no produce to any body that will till it? There it is; and no alteration in the laws of the land can annihilate that soil, or blast the power with which Providence has endowed it of bringing ample return to the seed which man deposits therein. Why, let him throw it out of cultivation; and suppose there are 1500 labourers now upon any particular property; if it is altogether abandoned there would be nice squatting for those labourers. (Laughter.) I take it that they would be pretty sure to turn it to some account; and I think it would go hard but what they would manufacture bread and cheese out of it. If they had no capital to work with, why, then, as we are told that the hares and rabbits on some of the estates need a considerable reduction, they might live on the game till their harvests came round. (Cheers and laughter.) Then, with a little power of co-operation, these 50,000 acres would be covered with industrious people, who would get food for their support, and who would have some surplus to spare, I take it, to find themselves in clothing. This is what comes of the cant phrase, when examined fairly, of throwing land out of cultivation. If this were to happen, the labourer would think it the happiest day of his life when the landlord was crossed in love with him, and driven away from his estate. But as such a state of things progressed, and the comfort of this little society increased, it is much to be suspected that, after a time, the landlord would come back again; there would be a repetition of scenes such as have disgraced both Scotland and Ireland; there would be notice to quit upon those who had taken possession of the abandoned property; the horrors of a clearing would be witnessed such as have occurred elsewhere, in which whole families have been known to lie down in the ditches, and to have sought in vain a refuge from the pitiless elements, to which they were exposed by equally pitiless landlords, and the re-enactment of the old Sutherland tragedy would end the farce of "The Labourer's Love." (Cheers.) When did all this love commence, and what is the history of this most fond and affectionate care of one class by another? How old is it? Does it belong to those ancient times of our country, when the old cultivator of the soil was required by his lease to know his "team of oxen" and his "lean of men"—when slaves were fattened here and sold in Ireland to the detriment of the home market there, until it was glutted with the surplus produce? Was it in the fourteenth century, when pestilence had ravaged the country, and the number of those whose business was tillage of the soil was so reduced that they claimed, as they had a right to do, higher wages for their work, and when the "Statute of Labourers" was, therefore, passed—a law which some have praised even in our day—enacting that the labourers should be flogged to their work, and compelled to labour at the wages which they had had before this opportunity came? Was it in the fifteenth century, when it was the law that if a man had been twelve years in the occupation of husbandry he was to follow the plough-tail for the rest of his life, and not be allowed even to apprentice his children in towns lest they should be in a better position than himself, and the lord of the soil lose the service of his serfs? Was it even in the sixteenth century, when a man catching any idle stroller might force him to work, forcibly take him for his slave, feed him with the offal of his table, and brand him even, that he might be known to belong to his service? Was it in the period from that time till the era of manufacturing energy and enterprise—a period during which the wages of the labourer, as measured in wheat, fell more than one-half, while the price of that wheat more than doubled? Was it in times subsequent to that under old or new poor-laws, sometimes subjecting the labourer to the degradation of being paid his honestly-earned wages out of the parish funds; at others turning the screw upon him, and telling him that he was a late comer to nature's table, and for him there was no cover set, bidding him, even in his rags and starvation, be independent? Is it now, when he is gifted with 20d. a day should the weather be fine, and loses it if the rain comes down? Is it in the present day, when his life wears out in a miserable succession of toil, from week to week and month to month? Where can we find the origin, where trace the history and see the marks of that paternal care by which one especial class now affirms that it has the labourer of the country under its peculiar and fond protection? (Loud and prolonged cheering.) If such be the feeling of the landowners to the labourers, why do they not bestow more exclusively their attention on them; for it happens to be the habit of legislators of this class to meddle with any business rather than their own? They are very anxious about factories, where people are paid higher wages by far than any which are earned in the employment of their tenants; they are for making regulations about hours and schools; they are always prompt at interfering with silk, cotton, and woollen manufactures—with everything in the world; but, meanwhile, there is the poor labourer whom they love so well, the most unprotected and unprotected being in the community. Now and then, perhaps, having given him some 10s. prize for a twenty years' service in the same family, coupled, as it was of late, with an admonition from the right honourable and reverend chairman of the meeting, in distributing the prizes—that the successful labourer should "not listen to people who were given to change: for the Bible taught that there must always be poor in the land." (Cries of "Shame!") And what is this very assumption of being agriculturists, on the part of the proprietary? What is it but a section of the same cant that we find exhibited in the whole course of their proceedings? Why, the nature of a man's property, and the use that is made of it, does not affect his character or his occupation. Being the owner of a library does not make a man learned; as Mr. Cobden has pithily said, "a man is not a sailor because he is a shipowner," neither are proprietors of great estates entitled to claim the honourable appellation of "agriculturists;" they are not the cultivators of the ground; they are only the recipients of its bounty, taking the lion's share of the profit. (Loud cheers.) If this language were allowed in reference to other matters,—if we were to designate the personal qualities and occupations of people by the use made of their property,—it would follow that the noble member of this League, the Marquis of Westminster, was the greatest bricklayer in London (laughter); that the Duke of Bedford was the most distinguished dramatist and musician, and that the clergy of the Abbey Church in Westminster, some of whose property is devoted to much more questionable uses, were eminent professors of prostitution. (Cheers and laughter.) The real question, stripped of all mystification between the League and those by whom it is opposed, is this,—whether the landed proprietors are to absorb all power, whether they are to be not merely a great and influential class, but whether they are to be the nation, the entire nation; for this is really the object at which they are aiming. (Hear.) They acknowledge a Queen, but they name her Ministers; they dictate the measures, and even the language, of those Ministers. They acknowledge a Legislature, but they are one House, and possess influence enough to command the other House. They acknowledge the middle class, but they command its votes, and cherish in it only the most degrading habits of servility. They acknowledge the manufacturing class, but they cripple its enterprise and restrict its markets. They acknowledge the working class, and they tax their bones, sinews, and labour; they tax the very bread which is their daily support. (Cheers.) I grant that they were once "the nation." There was a time when the landed interest of England was the nation, and when there was no other known or recognized power. But what sort of a time was that? A time when the people of the country were mere serfs—when they were "property"—when they could be flogged, and branded, and sold. (Cheers.) There was a time when they were the nation—and where were then all the arts of life; where was literature and learning? The philosopher was in his cell, only showing himself to be the object of suspicion among the ignorant, and perhaps of persecution; or else sent for by the rich, that he might be bribed to give them magic aid to win the love of a lady's heart, or paralyze the might of an opponent's arm. There was a time when they were the nation—when they went forth in their mailed panoply, leading their followers to slaughter, from which good care was taken to preserve themselves as much as possible—when they rode almost unresisted over their helpless naked opponents, and were only capable of being put hors de combat, by being cracked, like lobsters, in their shells. (Laughter.) There was a time when they were the nation; and what a time was that for the towns! When every citizen who had anything to lose, had to fly from petty tyrants to the throne; to strengthen despotism with all his power, in order that he might have some resource against this overbearing oligarchy; and when, if there had been Rothschilds in the world, they would have had their teeth drawn to get at their treasures. (Cheers.) When they were the nation, no invention had enriched the land and made the metals and wood do the work of millions of human hands; no press had scattered knowledge over the whole face of the country, carrying intellectual light into hovels and cottages; no mercantile navy covered the sea, and sought the aid of every breeze that blew to reach some distant shore to bring back its freight of necessities and luxuries. When they were the nation, it was a land not worth living in; and to this time, were the natural effects of such enactments as the Corn Laws to have their full scope towards this period, would it turn back the wheels of time, and bring the nation so much nearer barbarism than it now is by the lapse and growth of centuries. (Loud cheers.) Proprietorship is not nationality! The peerage is not the nation! Brains and hearts go for something in constituting a people; our philosophers who think, our statesmen who act, our poets who sing, and our hardy multitudes who work,—these are the nation! (Loud cheers.) The members of the aristocracy take their place of true nobility in the nation when they co-operate with mind and heart, and, like some of the worthy friends of this association, give themselves to objects of patriotism and the promotion of public right. Such men redeem the class to which they belong, and shed a lustre upon others from their own inherent brightness. We regard all who toil—be it with thought, or with the strong hand—as members of the community—as those who help to build up a people, and to make a nation free, great, and prosperous! And surely, if we look at the position of the landowners of this country, there is so much in it which they cannot, by any change or chance short of tremendous and universal convulsion, be deprived of, that they might well be content therewith; "too happy, if their happiness they knew:" for it is certainly true, as has often been said, that England is the paradise of landowners; made so by the untiring labour, the indomitable energy, and the daring enterprise of its industrious children. (Cheers.) What would they have? Is not the land theirs from sea to sea—their even the bird that wings its flight in the air. We cannot till a field without their permission; we cannot build a house without their consent. They walk the earth as if they were the gods who had made it, and yet, not content with all this, they go on artificially to enhance the price of its produce to others; not satisfied with being the lords of the soil, they aspire also to be the lords of industry and the dolers out of the labourers' food. (Cheers.) Why are they not content? They have shuffled off from the land the burthens that once pressed upon it. They took their estates originally when the title was not honest industry, but the sword, rapine, and violence. They had them burthened with the support of Church and State. They found armies for the King when it pleased him to take the field for foreign conquest, or to repel domestic invasion; they have now turned into sources of emolument the very burthens that once hung upon the land, and they derive from the church, the army, and from our various institutions, resources for all their own offspring and their dependants; and yet, having done all this, they seek to weigh industry down to the ground with a heavier burthen than ever pressed upon the land. "Free markets" was the cry some centuries ago, when Wat Tyler and his peasant-companions were driven to insurrection by the extent of oppression of the monopolies of the landlords and corporations. "Free markets" was the cry of Wat Tyler. The dagger that struck him down still sticks in the arms of the corporation of London—a warning against violence to those who uphold that ancient controversy, and who raise as we do now the same cry of "Free markets" not in England only, but all the world over. (Loud cheers.) We demand that the markets should be as free as they have made those markets in which they hire venal tongues or traffic for venal votes. We demand free markets;—free as the air, unshackled as the billows of the sea, or as the thoughts in the soul of man! (Cheers.) They have had the lion's share of commercial prosperity; and yet what great advancements have been made! What have machinery, railroads, steamboats, or anything else done towards enriching the industrious that have not also raised the worth of the land and the rate of rents? (Hear.) There was an outcry—a putting forth, as it is called, of "a great fact"—in the newspapers the other day, namely, that the price of corn was now only the same as in 1791: "How, then," it was said, "could the farmer be expected to produce this in competition with foreigners when he has so many more burthens?" But in this statement the fact was suppressed, that although the price of corn may be now the same as in 1791, and the wages of labour no higher than at that period, the rent in this country has doubled, and more than doubled, since that time. (Hear.) And there is the real burthen that presses on the farmer, and which cripples him, as it does all other industry, from the power of a most successful competition with foreigners. Let them enjoy their prosperity; but let them not wound, limit, and restrain the untiring toil by which that prosperity is won. (Hear.) We fear them not—with their boast or their threatenings! Here are we in our own voluntary gatherings; and yonder, they in their set meeting, by royal mandate; here are we in our miscellaneous and multitudinous assemblages, and there are they in their exclusiveness. Here are we in our hired theatre, and there are they in their senatorial halls, and with yet stater buildings erecting, and to be paid for by a nation's toll, and at the expense of the privations of thousands. (Loud cries of hear, hear.) Here are we with rights, and they with might; we take up the gauntlet they have thrown down, and we hurl defiance in their teeth! (The whole assembly here rose, and continued standing for some minutes, cheering and waving hats and handkerchiefs.) We advance to the conflict which they brave—of opinion against power—breaking no law, even of their making; in the spirit of that peaceful morality which they profess to have made part and parcel of the law of England. We carry out this great question, and we will win for them deliverance from the curse that the oppressor brings on his own head—for ourselves emancipation from the disgrace of being plundered and enslaved; and for our country deliverance from the prospect of confusion, from the endurance of wretchedness, from anarchy, and desolation. (Cheers.) The age of feudalism is past, and the spirit of feudalism cannot again govern this country. It may be strong in the prestige of the past, and glitter in the splendour which it has won from the toils of industry; it may fortify itself in the bulwarks of institutions, it may surround itself with a servile multitude; but the spirit of feudalism must succumb before the genius of humanity. The spirit, the principle, and the power of feudalism must stand by, and make way for the fights of industry, and the progress of nations towards commercial, political, and intellectual liberty. (Mr. Fox sat down amid one of those prolonged and most enthusiastic bursts of cheering, with which he was repeatedly interrupted during the delivery of the above extraordinarily brilliant oration, of the effect of which upon the audience it would be difficult to convey an adequate idea to the reader.)

The CHAIRMAN then came forward and said:—Ladies and gentlemen, the proceedings of this meeting have now terminated. I am only sorry to detain you for one moment after the splendid oration with which we have been delighted; but a fact has just been communicated to me that I think right to announce to the meeting before it disperses, which is, that that distinguished public character, to whom our eloquent friend has made allusion in the course of his speech,—and who, from the cause that he represents, and the treatment that he has received, I venture to say excites more interest and sympathy than any other subject of the Queen,—I mean Mr. O'Connell (tremendous cheers,) has been applied to to attend the next meeting, and with that consistency of service and zeal in our cause which I gratefully acknowledge, he has expressed his willingness to take that first occasion to mark his unshaken anxiety for the redress of this great English wrong. (Loud cheers.)

Three cheers were then given for Mr. O'Connell, and the meeting separated.

GREAT MEETING OF THE LEAGUE, IN THE FREE-TRADE HALL, MANCHESTER.

MANCHESTER, Thursday.

The Free-Trade Hall was crowded to excess last night again, on the occasion of the periodical meeting of the League. Indeed, this spacious building was never so crowded before; and we are told that the applications for tickets was so great, that the building might have been filled had it been twice as spacious. The gentlemen announced to address the meeting were Mr. Cobden, M.P.; Colonel Thompson, and Mr. R. R. Moore; and the audience included persons who had come many miles to have an opportunity of hearing them. Mr. G. Wilson, Chairman of the Council, presided; and, in addition to the gentlemen announced to address the meeting, above stated, we observed Mr. Alexander Kay, Mayor of Manchester; Alderman Burd, W. Rawson, Mr. Alderman Brooks, Mr. Alderman Willert, Mr. Alderman Armitage, the Town Clerk, Mr. James Chadwick, Mr. W. Bickham, Mr. W. Evans, Mr. T. Woolley, Mr. R. Heald, Mr. J. Rawson, Mr. James Kershaw, Mr. A. Bauer, Mr. F. Cobden, Mr. S. B. Potter, Mr. W. Ross, Mr. J. Simpson, Mr. W. Morris, Mr. T. Barton, Mr. Oliver Wilcox (London), and Mr. E. Shawcross.

Mr. HICKIN, the secretary, having read the minutes of the last meeting, on the motion of Mr. W. EVANS, seconded by Mr. Alderman Brooks, they were unanimously confirmed.

The CHAIRMAN, on coming forward to address the meeting, was received with loud cheering. He proceeded to say that it would not be right to describe the meeting as one of the usual periodical meetings of the League; for as often as he had seen vast multitudes called together in that room, he did not recollect on any previous occasion to have seen, at so early an hour, pit, gallery, and platform crowded by an audience so respectable as that assembled. Having alluded to the circumstance which had drawn so many together, and eulogized the services of Mr. Cobden, Colonel Thompson, and Mr. Moore, who were about to address them,—[the mention of Mr. Cobden's name calling forth immense plaudits, the whole audience rising amidst cries of "Cobden," and cheering for a considerable time]—the Chairman went on to remark that their services would still be wanted. The battle had yet to be fought, which would issue in the triumph of Free-Trade principles. Anti-League associations were everywhere springing up, in places, too, where the squirearchy had not dared to show their faces during the visits of Mr. Cobden last summer. The farmers and farm-labourers had read and digested the tracts sent amongst them, and the speeches made at the outdoor meetings; and they would not now be found ready, as at the last election, to throw up their caps for monopolist candidates. The Chairman then ridiculed the pretensions of the getters up of these meetings to be called "tenant-farmers," and ably exposed the real character of the parties who convened, and the objects for which such r. stings were called. He repelled the calumnies uttered against the League, especially that it was a body confederated against property. They were confederated to destroy monopoly. They asked for free markets for their commerce, for they represented millions who possessed no property but that of their fingers and their intellect; and for this property they sought fair play. (The chairman concluded an able speech amidst loud applause.)

Mr. COBDEN on rising was enthusiastically cheered. He had just entered upon his speech when some interruption took place, which the chairman, however, succeeded in effectually checking. He then addressed the meeting in a speech of considerable length, and characterized by his customary clearness of statement, force of argument, and fallacy of illustration. (We give the honourable member's remarks on the several motions intended to be brought forward in the House of Commons by himself and other Free-trade members in the present session, as also his important remarks on the necessity of attending to the registry).—We are not going to repeal the Corn Laws this present session of Parliament. I don't think there is much prospect of the present Parliament repealing the Corn Laws at all. You may, perhaps, feel a little curious, a little anxious, as to what the course to be taken in the House of Commons may be. Well, gentlemen, there will be motions brought forward taking the Corn-Law question in detail before Mr. Villiers's motion is brought on. Mr. Ward will bring on his motion, inviting the majority of squires to grant a committee to inquire into the nature of these "special burdens" about which you hear so much. (Hear, hear.) Now, I predict that they'll either run away, as they did before, or else they'll vote against this inquiry. Well, Mr. Elphinstone will bring forward his motion upon the subject of the legacy and probate duties upon real property—(applause)—showing that these innocents, the landowners, who tell us that they have been laying the lash on their own shoulders, have been in reality getting off very lightly, for they have exempted their own real property from probate and legacy duty, from which they forgot to exempt personal property. (Hear, hear.) So that if you transmit your £100,000 in land you escape that taxation; but if you happen to transfer it down in money, they manage to deduct the taxation from it. (Applause.) Mr. Ricardo has given notice of a motion to discuss the policy or impolicy of treaties of commerce. We have some people here amongst us, I believe, who tell us that Free Trade would be a very good thing, provided we had Free Trade on the other side; but that, until other people are Free Traders, we must not be Free Traders ourselves. Now, gentlemen, when anybody tells you that, be sure you remember that this rule of reciprocity has never been applied in any other case: it is only when we come to talk of corn, that all these impediments are invented and surmised. You carry on commerce to the amount of £50,000,000 a year all over the world, and you have not one special reciprocity treaty to regulate all that trade. But when we propose to deal with the landowners' monopoly, then, forsooth, we cannot regulate our traffic until other countries have regulated theirs. (Applause.) Well, there is one motion of which I have given notice myself, which was to come on next Tuesday, and it is this: to have a select committee to inquire into the effects of these protecting duties upon the interests of farmers and farm-labourers. (Applause.) Now, gentlemen, when I gave notice of that motion, I ventured upon two predictions, and I don't often turn prophet. In the first place, I prophesied that they would not grant the committee; in the next place, I predicted that there would be a manoeuvre to try and get rid even of the discussion, by somebody moving an irrelevant amendment. I thought, for instance, that somebody would move an amendment that should raise up a dust about something else, so that they might fly from the discussion, and escape having their noses brought to the grindstone. (Applause.) Now, since I have been down here, I see a notice of a motion by the hon. member for Knaresborough (great laughter,) as an amendment to my motion, having about as much connexion with my motion as our old river has with the volcano of Mount Vesuvius. (Applause and laughter.) Now, gentlemen, if they will give me a committee to inquire into the operation of the Corn Laws upon farmers and farm-labourers, my first step will be to send a respectful invitation to Lord Ducie and Lord Spencer, to ask them to be examined before that committee. (Applause.) And the next thing I will do I will send a respectful invitation to the Duke of Buckingham and the Duke of Richmond, to ask them to be examined before that committee. (Applause.) And then, as all this evidence is taken down, it would be before the public in six months' time; you would hear what the best farmers in the country said about it, and what the best landlords said about it; and you would hear what the worst landlords and the worst farmers said about it; and the country would judge for themselves. (Applause.) But, if they won't grant the committee, it is very possible they will raise a dust as I predicted—a "devil's dust," it may happen—about it. (Applause and laughter.) I think we shall be able to pin them down to a discussion; for my advice to my friends in the House will be this: let the honourable member for Knaresborough make his speech when I have finished, and let all his statements, all his allegations, all his arguments pass unnoticed and unanswered (applause); let them go for just as much with the country as the country chooses to appreciate them at (loud applause); and then, I think, if nobody answers him, we shall manage to keep the discussion upon that point which is, of all others, the last point which the landlords in the House of Commons ever wish to have discussed. (Applause.) Well, when we have disposed of our motions Mr. Villiers will bring forward his motion, as he did last year, for the total and immediate repeal of the Corn Law. (Applause.) And he will have more supporters this time than he had last, gentlemen; and there will be some of those who voted against us last time that will be seized with a fit of prudence, and will determine to stay away. (Applause.) But what I wish to urge upon our friends is this,—that, before Mr. Villiers brings on his motion, it is advisable that the constituencies in every part of the country should memorialize their members, calling upon them to vote with Mr. Villiers; and, in every case where it is possible, I would have a majority of the constituency to sign that requisition. (Applause.) Now, I hope this labour will be especially undertaken in some of the neighbouring boroughs. Manchester, Salford, Stockport, Rochdale, and another or two, need not take the trouble of getting up any such requisitions. (Applause.) But there are Warrington, and Blackburn, and Clitheroe, and Wigan, where I should especially recommend our friends to be actively at work forthwith. (Applause.) And somebody, I think, suggests Bolton. Is there a screw loose at Bolton? (Applause, and a cry of "Oldham.") Oldham is all right. (Applause.) We've an odd kind of supporter there, to be sure; for he is always talking against us, and he always votes for us. (Applause and laughter.) Now I wish we had a majority in the House of that same sort. (Applause.) I don't care how much they abuse us, or what they say about the League, if they only vote for the total and immediate repeal. (Applause.) Now, ladies and gentlemen, your work is not done: it is just about beginning. (Applause.) I don't mean to say that there need be quite so much talking or noise in future as there has been; I don't think there will be any necessity for it. The time is now coming when we, people who make so great a show and parade of our labours, will become less important in this question, and when the real harvest must be reaped by those men who, in every borough, will content themselves to work strenuously and perseveringly, in secret and in private. (Applause.) This question must be carried in the registration courts. (Applause.) Now, let our friend there, or visitor rather,—who seems to have come here to a public meeting not with a very just notion of what a public meeting of this kind is,—let me tell him, if he has any political object to carry, he may do quite as much out of a public meeting, as by coming here and making a fool of himself in a public meeting like this. (Applause and laughter.) It is not in public meetings that this question will be carried. Why, what did Sir Robert Peel say, and what did his party do? Ten years ago, with a large majority against him, such as would have made it almost hopeless that his party would ever again get into power, he proclaimed from the Merchant Taylors' Hall, "Register, register, register!" His friends set to work; they watched the registration courts; they put men on the franchise whom they could depend upon; and they carried their cause, bad as it was, without a single public meeting or demonstration of any kind. And now, I say, let us, in a good cause,—having won our cause in meetings such as this,—let us show that we can imitate our opponents by attending to the registration courts; let us put men upon the franchise; let us extend the franchise to every man who is a Free-trader; and even where you find honest men, who want the franchise, but are not Free-traders, put every man you can upon the franchise. Teach yourselves the course by which you are to become enfranchised; learn when you must pay your rates; learn how you must defend your cause in the registration courts. Put yourselves to work in this way; and then this cause may be assuredly won, as the cause of our opponents was; and if it is not won in that way, I solemnly believe it never can be won at all. (Applause.)

The meeting was subsequently addressed by Colonel Thompson and Mr. R. R. R. Moore, in excellent speeches, and separated about a quarter after ten o'clock.

SUNDERLAND ANTI-CORN-LAW ASSOCIATION.—On Friday last, a meeting of this body was held at Donkin's Hotel. The following resolution was adopted on the motion of A. J. Moore, Esq., seconded by Mr. A. Phillips:—

"That this association has received, with strong feelings of regret and dissatisfaction, a letter from D. Barclay, Esq., in which he declares that he will only 'vote with Mr. Villiers, provided his motion be so shaped as to admit the consideration of the alternative of a moderate fixed duty.' And that this Association earnestly trusts that the motion of Mr. Villiers on the Corn-laws will be for their total, immediate, and unconditional repeal, without any reservation or qualification whatever; and that all protective and differential duties, especially those on coffee and sugar, will be forthwith abolished."

On Wednesday, an adjourned meeting was held, Mr. T. Hutchinson in the chair. A letter was then read from Mr. Barclay, acknowledging the receipt of a copy of the above resolution. —Sunderland Herald.

An Association called the Hull Free-Trade Association was organised on Wednesday last, for promoting Free-Trade principles in this locality. The society already numbers many of our most influential inhabitants. —Hull Rockingham.

The subscription in Kirkcaldy to the League Fund goes on prosperously. Somebody informed the Scotsman the other day that there was a prospect of obtaining no less than £50 from Kirkcaldy; we are happy to state that in eight days three times that amount has been collected—the amount subscribed on Tuesday evening week being £151 4s. 6d. Previous to commencing the subscription, the Kirkcaldy Anti-Corn Law Committee addressed and delivered to each of the electors of the districts of burghs, a packet of the League tracts. —Fife Herald.

CORN AND PROVISION LAWS.—Mr. Liddell has been lecturing during the past week in Weardale, on the Corn Laws, and distributing tracts among the people, and we are happy to say that the Free-Trade cause is making considerable progress in that district. —Tyne Mercury.

REPEAL OF THE CORN LAWS.—On Wednesday evening last, a lecture advocating the removal of all restrictions on the free importation of the people's food, was delivered at the Town Hall, Newport, by Mr. John Jenkins, A.M., a member of the Anti-Corn-Law League. J.S. Alfrey, Esq., mayor, took the chair, and introduced Mr. Jenkins to the meeting. There was a large number of the inhabitants present, among whom we observed farmers and gentlemen connected with agricultural pursuits in our neighbourhood. Mr. Jenkins addressed the meeting in a long and comprehensive speech. —Merlin.

TOTAL DEFEAT OF THE FIVE MONOPOLISTS.

The Pro-Corn-Law lairds of Fife (the leader of whom in the present case, Colonel Lindsay, of Balcarres, had publicly declared that he would have met Mr. Cobden at his Cupar meeting, if he had only known it was to take place!) held, or rather attempted to hold, a hole-and-corner meeting in the County Hall to-day, the result of which was only to render doubly sure the assurance afforded by the late meeting with the League deputation that the Monopolists are a miserable minority of the inhabitants of the county.

At about a quarter past twelve there were about 250 persons in the room, which was evidently more than the promoters of the meeting had calculated on, or felt disposed to make welcome. The feelings and opinions of the meeting were unequivocally exhibited even before the proceedings began. Colonel Lindsay and his friends on entering the room received no welcome but a little littering, while the appearance of J. M. M. Crichton, Esq., was the signal for a vehement burst of cheering.

On the motion of the Earl of Leven, seconded by Mr. Ainslie, factor for the Earl of Murray, Colonel Lindsay was called to the chair.

The COLONEL said that he felt it his duty to read to the meeting a letter from Captain J. E. Wemyss, of Wemyss, M.P., Lord Lieutenant of the County.

The letter objected to the holding of the meeting, inasmuch as it was convened by its promoters, not in their capacity as private landed proprietors, but officially as officers under the Land-tax Commission, which gave them no such right.

Colonel LINDSAY said, that, after the letter that had been read, he had no wish to do anything having even the appearance of disrespect towards the Lord Lieutenant; he would therefore dissolve the meeting, and —

Mr. CRICHTON rose to order amid great cheering, and maintained that the chairman could not determine the point of the legality or illegality of the meeting, without the meeting itself being consulted.

A singular scene followed. Colonel Lindsay attempted to stop Mr. Crichton, who was loudly cheered by at least four-fifths of the meeting, while the lairds seated at the table attempted to drown his voice by beating the floor with their sticks, and several of them got into an infuriated state, at the now evident exposure and defeat of their "demonstration."

Mr. CRICHTON nevertheless managed, in the midst of the confusion, ably to demonstrate the utter irregularity, incompetency, and unfairness of the course proposed by Colonel Lindsay.

The COLONEL, however, went through the form of declaring that he dissolved the meeting, and did "hereby," in his private capacity, convene a meeting (then and there to take place of all persons favourable to the present Corn Laws, and of none else!)

Lord Leven then moved that Colonel Lindsay do take the chair of the meeting of those favourable to the Corn Laws; and the colonel forthwith made his way back to the head of the table.

Mr. CRICHTON here again objected to the competency of such a proceeding as was intended, and after proceeding for some time, and meeting with no reply but calls to order from Colonel Lindsay (who told him he could not be heard unless he was one of "those favourable to the Corn Laws"), and a weak attempt at clamour from the lairds at the table, he asked if the chairman would allow him to read a protest (intended for the first meeting), and being refused he threw a protest to the reporters and left the room, amid great cheering, along with Peter Walker, Esq., of Muirhead, and some others.

Sir GEO. CAMPBELL, of Edenwood, said he had come to the meeting as a commissioner of supply, under the terms of the conveners' summons. He had intended to ask if the discussion of the question of the Corn Laws was to be allowed, if so, he would have expressed his opinions, and if not, he would have left the room. As the present, however, was a mere private meeting, and could not go abroad as a meeting of the county, he did not intend to interfere with it, and having thus accounted for his appearance there, would leave them. Sir George then left the room.

Resolutions in favour of the Corn Laws were then moved and seconded by Sir Ralph Anstruther, Mr. Balfour of Balbirnie, Mr. White Melville, Mr. Ainslie, and several others.

As for the real meeting, that is, four-fifths of those in the room, their only part in the proceedings consisted in keeping up a running fire of jokes at the speakers, and enlivening with roars of laughter the blunders of the orators, the solemn passing of the resolutions, and various other parts of the farce. A more comical burlesque, a more disastrous rout, it is impossible to conceive. —Second Edition of the Fife Herald, of the 8th inst.

SIR GEORGE WARRENDER AND HIS TENANTS.

It will be in the recollection of our readers that, at the late Anti-Corn-Law meeting in Edinburgh, Mr. Cobden stated, upon the authority of Mr. Watterston, a farmer present, that his father had paid £3000 out of his capital to his landlord, Sir George Warrender. The statement having been denied by Sir George's agent, led to the following correspondence from Mr. Watterston, which we extract from the Scotsman. The writer is one of the most intelligent and respectable farmers in East Lothian. Would that we had more of his order in England possessing equal spirit and independence!

"Mr. John Murray, 625, Castle-hill, Edinburgh, Agent for Sir George Warrender.

"Balgonie Barns, Jan. 20, 1844, North Berwick.

"Sir,—I was not a little astonished, on reading your letter of the 17th current in the Edinburgh Evening Courant of Thursday last, regarding my father's connexion with Sir George Warrender's farms, and at the reckless boldness you have displayed in denying the accuracy of the statement made by Mr. Cobden on my authority. My duty to that gentleman, and regard for my own character, demand that the whole truth should be plainly told. How you, at the time a subordinate clerk in Mr. Hugh Warrender's office, and subsequently in Mr. Gardiner's, have been able to arrive at such correct conclusions as to enable you to pronounce such decided judgment how my father lost his money, passes my comprehension.

"My father certainly was a tenant on Sir George's property previous to making his last arrangement with him; and, what is more, he had taught Sir George his letters, and regarded him almost with the affection of a parent; but how his having been one or twenty leases on the property previous to the last affects the question I leave you to tell. I, however, thank you for the admission that Sir George was justified in forcing from a tenant, by a high rent, all that he had previously acquired by a long life of industry.

"In the winter of 1812-13, a farm of Sir George's, immediately adjoining that of my father, of which the old tenant refused to renew the lease, was offered to my father, who also declined taking it, or retaining his own. Both were then advertised to be let—the one to be entered to at separation of crop 1813, the other, of crop 1815. When I explain that at that time my father was an old man of about seventy years of age, and his only son had chosen another profession, his determination is not to be wondered at. If Sir George wishes it, I will, by publishing Lady Warrender's letters, show how my father was subsequently induced to become tenant, and bring me home from the pursuit of my medical studies to assist him.

"You say that Sir George was offered £2800 for the farm, but the person who made this offer had not funds to stock it, and that Sir George knew well, and consequently would not let it to him. With the next highest offerer Sir George could make no bargain. So much for your statements 'that the increased rent was not proposed by Sir George Warrender or accepted,' because it was the highest he could get."

"Again, you say that 'a few years afterwards this tenant complained of the rent, and it was at once converted from the money rent of £2600 to 1100 bolls of wheat.'

"Now, Sir, the real fact is, that in 1815 Sir George was applied to do what is here stated was done, but from that time, up to my father's death, in December, 1822, no such conversion had taken place, although repeatedly urged to do so or cancel the lease. Sir George, however, some time before my father's death, upon taking about 100 acres of the farm into his own hand, altered the rent from £2600 to £3200. Some months after my father's death, the latter sum was converted into 1150 bolls of wheat, but I was kicked out before I was allowed to reap any advantage from it.

"You also say that there 'was an arrear of £2000, which Sir George in the first instance allowed to lie over unpaid, and ultimately gave up altogether.' This you repeat in various parts of your letter, while the real truth is—my father granted a bill at one day's date for the amount, and of which Sir George got payment in full; first, by a sum of £600 which he was bound to pay the tenant on his removal, for outlay on buildings, and the remainder by my having made over the whole crop and stock on the farm, when he paid me a small sum then due me, after discharging all obligations. You state likewise that these arrears 'were not so much occasioned by losses on the farm as by banking and other undertakings altogether different.' Now, Sir, the real fact is, my father was unfortunately a shareholder in the East Lothian Bank, but this was the only undertaking he had any connexion with except his farms, and the failure of that concern was the only reason why Sir George released me of the remainder of the lease.

"To a committee of the managers of the bank I exhibited my father's books, and proved to their satisfaction that he had paid Sir George Warrender above £9000 in eight years—more than the farm had produced, after deducting expenses of cultivation; besides this £9000, his loss by the bank was £4000.

"Had not Sir George forced himself into notoriety just now, by his letter to the Secretary of the Agricultural Society, Mr. Cobden should have had no information from me relative to the subject in dispute, and but for your officious interference this additional aspect might have been avoided.

"Neither I nor any other member of my father's family have ever been able to discover any cause of gratitude to Sir George, and certainly my being a tenant in the county at this time does not arise from any favour received at his hands.

"I now leave him to enjoy the satisfaction of having sent his first teacher and old tenant a ruined and broken-hearted man to his grave; and to the odium of using his and his mother's influence over an old man to inveigle him into a bargain to which he held him to his ruin, and by which his widow has been left in her old age dependent on her children for support.

"I am, &c.,

"JAS. WATTERSTON."

"To the Editor of the Scotsman."

"Balgonie Barns, Jan. 27, 1844.

"Sir,—As Mr. Murray, in the Advertiser of yesterday, attempted a reply to the statements contained in my letter to him, which appeared in your columns on Wednesday last, allow me to make a few remarks on the discrepancies betwixt his first and second letter.

"In his first letter he states 'that this rent at his request was at once converted from the money rent of £2600 to 1100 bolls of wheat.' He now admits that it was only after a portion of the farm was retaken by Sir George that 'it was ultimately reduced from £2900 to 1150 bolls of wheat,' while he does not deny that this 'ultimately' was not until after my father was in his grave, and that no advantage was ever reaped by the tenant from that conversion.

"In his first letter he also says that there was 'an arrear amounting to £3000, which Sir George, in the first place, allowed to lie over unpaid, and ultimately gave up altogether,' but he now admits that he got the whole stocking on the farm and part of crop 1823, as also £600 for buildings. This sum, however, he says formed no part of the original lease, but was subsequently agreed to by Sir George, and declares that all these were not sufficient to pay the obligations under the lease. I, on the contrary, affirm, that the property made over to Sir George cost my father far beyond any claims he had against him, and that he did not pay me one farthing of overplus that he was not compelled to do; and dread of the bank forced him to an immediate arrangement, by which he got payment of all claims then due; of the crop he got in the stack-yard almost nothing was thrashed out but what was sown upon the farm, the value of which, and the labour of ploughing, sowing, and harrowing it (I also having paid all expenses on the crop, and servants' wages up to Martinmas), were by both parties considered as being more than sufficient to pay all Sir George's claims, and the £400 which I subsequently got. I may mention also that the claim for £600 was cavilled at and denied by Sir George, until I produced his letter to my father agreeing to pay that sum for buildings erected on the farm. It was not likely Sir George Warrender was to put his hand in his pocket and pay the bank £200 on my account without an equivalent.

"Mr. Murray still insists that my father was a candidate, and a preferred one, for the farm, and that it was a gratuitous statement of mine that the offerer of £2800 had not funds to stock the farms. Let him name the individual who made this offer, and produce evidence of my father's having been a candidate either by a letter or offer, and the public can then judge whether he or I am to be believed. I beg to name as my authority Sir George and Lady Warrender, that Sir George would have no dealing with the individual alluded to, and Mr. Murray does not deny that the next highest offerer was off.

"Mr. Murray says he is not aware 'how I satisfied the bank that my father lost £9000 by the farm, and that I never proved this to the satisfaction of the landlord, or those acting for him.' I have again to repeat that I handed over the whole of my father's books (which were most correctly kept) to a committee of the managers of the bank, who made out the accompanying document, copies of which were sent both to Sir George and his agent at the time.

"The gentlemen of the committee being unconnected with either landlord or tenant were certainly likely to give an unbiased report: they had no interest in making it appear that my father's loss was greater than it actually was; and, if this document does not bear out my assertion as to the amount of loss by the farms, I would like to know what would satisfy Sir George and his agents.

"I beg to refer Mr. Murray to that highly respectable gentleman, Mr. Paul, who, as trustee and manager, wound up the affairs of that ruinous concern, for information as to the loss by the bank; but perhaps he will not be able to convince him of what he seems determined not to believe.

"If it had not been for the losses by the farm, and had my father been permitted by Sir George to follow his own wishes and to have retired at the end of his first lease, he would at his death have paid every farthing the bank could have demanded from him, and left his widow and family amply provided for besides.

"I do not think there is any occasion to take any farther notice of Mr. Murray's letter; but wish to confine myself simply to substantiate the truth of the statement made by Mr. Cobden, that my father actually lost £9000 on Sir George Warrender's property within eight years, and that during the blessed protection of the Corn Laws.—I am, &c., JAS. WATTERSTON.

State of the Produce and the Expenses of the Farms of Ewesford, Mireside, and Hallhill, from 1813 to 1821 inclusive. Prepared by the Committee of the East Lothian Bank.

| CROP 1814. | | | |
|--|-------|----|----|
| Expenses of management from January to August 1813 | £602 | 15 | 7 |
| Expenses from August 1813 to August 1814 | 1340 | 12 | 5 |
| Rent for 1814 | 1700 | 0 | 0 |
| | £3733 | 8 | 0 |
| Produce of grain, hay, &c. | £1905 | 14 | 2 |
| Turnips | 300 | 0 | 0 |
| Loss on crop 1814 | £1527 | 13 | 10 |
| CROP 1815. | | | |
| Expenses from August 1814 to August 1815 | £1032 | 6 | 4 |
| Rent 1815, including Mireside | 1830 | 0 | 0 |
| | £2862 | 6 | 4 |
| Pr. of grain, &c. | £2711 | 15 | 2 |
| Turnips | 300 | 0 | 0 |
| Profit on Crop | £149 | 8 | 10 |
| CROP 1816. | | | |
| Expenses from August 1815 to August 1816 | £1315 | 8 | 1 |
| Rent | 2600 | 0 | 0 |
| | £3915 | 8 | 1 |
| Pr. of grain, &c. | £1406 | 9 | 7 |
| Turnips | 290 | 0 | 0 |
| Loss on crop | £2308 | 15 | 6 |
| CROP 1817. | | | |
| Expenses from August 1816 to August 1817 | £1176 | 8 | 9 |
| Rent | 2600 | 0 | 0 |
| | £3776 | 8 | 9 |
| Pr. of grain, &c. | £2354 | 15 | 10 |
| Turnips | 327 | 10 | 0 |
| Loss on crop | £884 | 0 | 11 |
| CROP 1818. | | | |
| Expenses from August 1817 to August 1818 | £1339 | 0 | 1 |
| Rent | 2600 | 0 | 0 |
| | £3939 | 0 | 1 |
| Pr. of grain, &c. | £2949 | 8 | 4 |
| Turnips | 598 | 8 | 4 |
| Loss on crop | £291 | 3 | 5 |

| CROP 1819. | | | |
|---|-------|----|----|
| Expenses from August 1818 to August 1819 | £966 | 15 | 0 |
| Rent | 2600 | 0 | 0 |
| | £3566 | 15 | 0 |
| Pr. of grain, &c. | £1951 | 9 | 8 |
| Turnips | 289 | 2 | 0 |
| Loss on crop | £1316 | 3 | 9 |
| CROP 1820. | | | |
| Expenses from August 1819 to August 1820 | £1097 | 12 | 11 |
| Rent | 2200 | 0 | 0 |
| | £3297 | 12 | 11 |
| Pr. of grain, &c. | £2184 | 14 | 10 |
| Turnips | 300 | 0 | 0 |
| Loss on crop | £2602 | 18 | 1 |
| CROP 1821. | | | |
| Expenses from August 1820 to August 1821 | £845 | 4 | 0 |
| Rent | 2200 | 0 | 0 |
| | £3045 | 4 | 0 |
| Pr. of grain, &c. | £1526 | 2 | 7 |
| Turnips | 150 | 0 | 0 |
| Loss on crop | £1369 | 1 | 5 |
| Deduct profit on crop 1815 | £8559 | 16 | 11 |
| | 149 | 8 | 10 |
| Total loss | £8410 | 8 | 1 |
| Add paid Mr. Sawers's trustees for fallow | 560 | 0 | 0 |
| Total loss | £8970 | 8 | 1 |

The reason why expenses are calculated from January 1813 is, that possession was got at that time of a portion of the other farm, which caused them.

To the above state there should also be added the first cost of the whole stocking, all of which Mr. Murray acknowledges Sir George to have received, amounting to £1700—thus making the loss sustained nearly £11,000.

"To the Editor of the Scotsman."

"Balgonie Barns, Feb. 7, 1844.

"Sir,—I doubt not the public and you will join with me in thinking Mr. Murray's third letter, which appeared in Tuesday's Advertiser, requires very little notice from me; I will, therefore, take leave of him with a few very brief remarks. He says, 'Mr. Watterston's remark, that Sir George cavilled at and denied the claim of £600 for buildings is perhaps unworthy of notice; he was not himself on the spot at the time, and I suppose it was quite proper in those acting for him to require some evidence of a claim which was not in the fact.' I beg to refer him to Sir George himself (who was on the spot when the claim was cavilled at and denied) for information as to who cavilled at and denied the claim; it certainly was not his agent. The above extract, however, of itself sufficiently shows that an accurate count and reckoning took place betwixt the parties, and thus sets aside all his quibbling about words.

"His sneer against my father as a farmer, his wishing now to throw the losses from the farm to the farmer, his not applying to Mr. Paul, and his not producing any evidence that my father was a candidate for the farm, simply saying, 'But I am assured that besides his offer, viz., that of £2800, there were several offers higher than the sum at which the farm was let,' place the question in a nutshell, and as fully bear me out in all I have advanced, as if he had at once admitted it.

"His deductions from the document appended to my last are as easily set aside as the differing assertions he has made in every letter he has written, in no one of which he has stood to what he so confidently asserted in the immediately preceding one. He has been driven from position to position, and at last all but confesses the truth of my every statement.

"Can he not, in a plain matter of fact, tell the truth? What does he mean by six years' rent of the land retaken? Could he not have called them sixty or a hundred years? As he must mistake, it would have made a still greater difference, and been as true as the other. Then what must be thought of his veracity when he says the farm was, immediately after my removal, let at upwards of 1100 bolls of wheat. My successor only got 220 acres of the farm, which, at that rate, would give a rent of five bolls per acre. After this Mr. Murray may say what he pleases, but they must be very credulous indeed who believe him.

"Those who are curious in the matter, and who take an interest in the present discussion, will find some very apt illustrations of the accuracy of his agent's assertions in Sir George's parliamentary speeches in 1830.

"I now leave him, and hope that ere he again ventures before the public he will endeavour to know something more of the question he champions than he has shown he does of the present.—I am, Sir,

"Your most obedient servant,
"JAS. WATTERSTON."

TRAVELS OF ADAM BROWN.

A Scotch Farmer in Search of an English Farm.

EIGHTH LETTER.

In this letter Mr. Brown gives some account of his first arrival in Buckinghamshire; he speaks of the Chiltern Hundreds, and the Chiltern Hills, and of the Vale of Aylesbury. As Mr. Brown's letters were not originally written for publication, we have omitted the names of certain persons mentioned in this, not wishing to give any one offence.

WENDOVER, BUCKINGHAMSHIRE, Nov. 30, 1842.

MY DEAR FRIENDS,—Do you remember to have heard of members of Parliament accepting the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds? You are aware that by the law of England a member of the House of Commons, if appointed to certain offices under the Crown, must be re-elected if he desires to continue a member. If, on the other hand, a member seeks to be liberated from Parliament, he applies to the Government to give him this ideal office, the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds. Whether it was always what it is now I am not able to say, but I am able to tell you that the Chiltern Hills give name to the Chiltern Hundreds; that a hundred is an ancient division of a county, consisting of ten tithings; and that a tithing was the union of ten men and their families, each being bound to the king for the good behaviour of himself and the other nine. Probably the king appointed stewards to govern the hundreds, who continued to exercise such functions until the density of population and progress of other laws infringed on their office. Be that as it may, the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds is the only stewardship of the kind now existing; and it has been preserved only for parliamentary convenience.

The hills which give name to the hundreds are a high chalky ridge extending across Buckinghamshire, from north to south; they are in many parts covered with luxuriant beeches of natural growth, which are a source of profit to the landowners; and in other parts they are covered with a soft, downy herbage indigenous to chalky soils. I am now writing in the little town of Wendover, at the bottom of those hills, and this is what has led me to speak of them and the Chiltern Hundreds. I am thirty-five miles from London, and came by coach two days ago.

This place is not properly in the celebrated Vale of Aylesbury, though just at the verge of it. The vale is a tract of fine rich soil, superior to anything you or any one else ever saw who has not been out of East Lothian. It is so rich that, according to the Agricultural Survey, which I have just been consulting, the farmers scorn the use of manure of any kind; which statement is not altogether true now, though partly so; and it is so fruitful, or so cheaply rented, or the farmers are so wedded to old customs which they will not abandon, that they can afford to yoke four and five and six horses in a plough. I have seen no part of England that I should like so well to settle in as this, if my tenure were a safe one. Oh! the glorious revolution that might be effected here! But there is the tenant-at-will custom prevalent in this county, to which the landlords suicidally adhere. Rather than resign what they believe to be a political influence they will be content to perpetuate sluggish agriculture, and poverty and vice of every kind—direct consequences of the ill-regulated employment of the rural population.

From what I read and listened to before coming here, and from what I have seen and heard since, I believe this district of country is remarkable for the propagation of certain sentiments, to the effect that the surest dependence the farmer can have is the good-will of his landlord; that no other bond is requisite but the bond of friendship. I believe there are many excellent men among the aristocracy and gentry of England—far more of them who are open, generous, and strictly honourable men than we have in Scotland. We have some very so-so gentry in our own country. But, to say nothing more of them, it is I believe characteristic of the English landed gentry, and especially the old nobility, to exercise a kind of profuse generosity in certain matters. They do not look on their tenants in the light of parties to a contract, and as such equal in the eyes of the law to themselves: they look on the tenants as dependents on their bounty; they give a farm as a favour; and would rather indulge in the most romantic benevolence than admit, by a legal covenant, that a tenant has a right to be protected from the caprice of his landlord.

Were some of those noblemen to live for ever; or if, instead of taking a lease of their farms we could secure to them a lease of their lives for the period of 21 years; or if, when they died, they were always succeeded by men as honourable as themselves; or, if none of the young heirs were spendthrifts who mortgage their estates, and leave the tenantry to the mercy of the money-lenders and the agents, we might have less objection to a farm without a lease. But there are so many varieties of landlords, and so many chances that we might fall into the hands of capricious persons, especially in Buckinghamshire, that I would not like to risk them.

In this neighbourhood, for instance, there is a gentleman who, with his lady, is variable enough to have had, in one year, nine master gardeners, their term of service being somewhat less than six weeks each. In other years they have changed three, or four, or five. In the department of other servants the same uncertainty has prevailed, save as regards females. Some of these have been changed oftener, frequently without any period of service at all. A housekeeper is engaged in London, and, on her arrival, she is introduced to her duties, but is told next day that she will not suit; and another, who has been engaged in London to be ready as a reserve, arrives next day. The female servants are rather numerous, and are so continually moving, that the lady has entered into a contract with the proprietors of the stage-coach to carry them to and from London at a lower price than the usual fare, because of their number. She does not hesitate to pay them their wages in advance on dismissing them, nor their expenses. Even the town mansion, in one of the squares at the west end of London, is open to the servants dismissed from the country house, where they may remain until they get other situations. The miscellaneous collection sometimes gathered in this house is a very curious one, I am told. The reputation of the lady for caprice is so well known, that females, who never intend to stay in her service, go to her town agents and engage themselves. They get a journey into the country; and, on being paraded before her ladyship on the day after their arrival, or the next again, as is the custom, they walk awkwardly across the hall—a fatal fault—or assume some particular kind of airs which they know by report to be displeasing to her, and they are consequently paid a month's wages, and sent off by the coach next day. They return to London well pleased by their adventure. Others, who may be the very best of women, share the same treatment. And yet there is something not altogether to be despised in the character of this variable lady: the wages paid, and the asylum offered to such servants as are without a home in London until they get another place, are some small balance to the other side of her conduct.

She is, I am sorry to say, Scotch, and more sorry still am I to say that her Scotch relatives, on their estate, have worried and vexed their tenantry until nothing but the excessive competition for land would get them tenants at all. You remember the A—'s going out of our part of the country; they went to Perthshire, and took a farm under this noble family; and by some means or other they got into litigation with the Earl, and were well nigh ruined. And yet the Earl gives his tenantry leases, while his relatives in England do not. A nice pickle we would be in to hold und—those I have just spoken of in Buckinghamshire as tenants-at-will!

As I have not as yet advanced far into the vale I cannot venture to describe it; but I shall probably go as far as the Duke of Buckingham's estate before I write my next letter. His grace's residence is Stowe, a very fine place, as I am told.

I am just about to start for Aylesbury, a market town five or six miles distant, where I shall post this letter, after adding something to it, should I have time, or should there be anything remarkable to write about.

Yours faithfully,

ADAM BROWN.

P.S. I have arrived in Aylesbury, and have only time to say it is a snug little town. But oh! what a glorious country I have passed through! I have gone several miles out of my way to see some of the farms. The young wheat is finer than I ever saw it with us at this season, and Everything indicates a rich fertility: even the weeds and indolence of fields and farmers bear testimony to the easy production of the crops. I might add that the low rents are in keeping with these; but you know it is impossible for a farmer to say that any land is let at a low rent. Still I must tell you that other your rents are high, or the rents here are very low. And so the tale.

acres are called high rents here for land of the best quality; better, I hesitate not to say, than you and I have been, many years, paying £4 and £4 10s. an acre for. Our way of working a farm is, however, very different from their way of doing it here. They are eaten up with paupers here; and yet they do not employ an adequate number of hands to cultivate the land.

Mary, who has just joined me here from London seems very much interested in the lacemaking which is carried on in every cottager's house. The females of the family of a farm servant are all lacemakers. But I must stop; more of them hereafter.

A. B.

AGRICULTURE.

THE PECULIAR EXEMPTIONS OF LAND.

"It has always been the principle of this Court to show peculiar favour to the owners of landed property."—Mr. O. P. Cooper, Q.C., in argument, Court of Chancery, 10th Feb., 1844.

The above sentence was not uttered in any Anti-Corn-Law or Free-Trade discussion, but it was spoken in a proceeding so prosaic as the argument of a Chancery suit, and used simply as a settled axiom of that law by which the litigated question then before the Court must be decided. Nor is the fact that our laws show extraordinary favour to landed proprietors anything new to the professional reader, however it may startle the "unlearned" one. Thus we find in one of the ordinary text-books of the real-property lawyer—Cooté on Mortgage—that in equity, however stringent may be the terms in which land is transferred as security for a debt, it is regarded, under all circumstances, as a pledge only. "On this principle," says the writer, "rests the doctrine of foreclosure, and in the application of which the forbearance of equity on behalf of the mortgagor [that is, the owner of land,] seems to be carried to its utmost limits, even so far as, in some instances, to work a serious detriment to the mortgagee [that is, the lender of money on land]; for equity is ready to receive the excuses of the mortgagor, not only for the purpose of giving him time to procure money previously to the foreclosure, but also for the purpose of opening the foreclosure, even after many years quiet possession by the mortgagee, under an absolute decree of foreclosure, confirmed, signed, and enrolled!" And amongst the authorities cited by the learned author in support of his proposition, is the case of Edwards v. Cunliffe, reported in the first volume of "Maddock's Chancery Reports," p. 287, in which the period for payment was enlarged for the fourth time!!! Nor ought this to surprise any one who recollects that the owners of land have been exclusively the makers of law in this country. Yet, in the face of these notorious facts, we find the landowners and their advocates claiming to impose a tax upon the rest of the community to countervail the "peculiar burdens" which have been imposed on land. How "jolly green," as Boz has it, these gentlemen must think the public, when they ask belief for the assertion that landowners have laid special burdens on their own property. The very reverse is the fact. The favour to landlords, which we have proved by citation from unquestioned legal authorities is shown in particular instances, runs through the whole law of real property in England; and the notions our country gentlemen may have derived from a very respectable knowledge of that law, are quite consistent with the overweening claims to have their order supported at the public charge, which we have lately seen put forward at "protection meetings." The Corn Laws form but one—though one of the greatest—symptom of the deep-seated sore which exists in our social system, as connected with landed property; and the late revival of all the most extravagant demands of the owners of the soil seem to render it certain that no cure can be effected until that sore has been probed to the bottom.

With this view we shall, from time to time, have occasion to refer to the laws by which the title to land in England is regulated, as illustrative of the cause and consequences of the Corn Laws. Previously to the fall of the Roman empire, and to that period in which feudalism originated, so significantly distinguished as the "dark ages," the owner of land had an absolute, or technically, an allodial possession of the soil; it was his own unconditional property, like an ox, a vestment, or a piece of money; it was held of no one. Then came the irruptions of the barbarians, the Scythians, the Normans, and the rest; and with them came feudal tenures. The chiefs everywhere took possession of the land, and granted it in fiefs by the province or the county to their principal followers, who re-granted it in smaller portions to their sub-feudatories, who again subdivided it amongst their barons and knights, and they, for their own selfish gain, permitted its ancient possessors to remain upon it as cultivators, but in the character of serfs. In each successive grant various feudal services were imposed by the person making the grant to be rendered by him to whom the grant was made. For instance, every feudatory rendered to his immediate feudal superior, service in his foreign or domestic wars with specified retinue and equipments; on the knighthood of the lord's son, or the marriage of any of his children; and on certain other occasions the feudal tenant made to his superior indefinite money payments called reliefs; then the feudal superior had the wardship and marriage of his tenant's children in the event of the tenant's death during their infancy, which consisted in the appropriation to himself of the children's lands until they, by attaining to manhood, or, if females, by being married, filled up the fee with an adult male capable of bearing arms in the lord's service. Nor, when we look at the objects of this system, was it so irrational as has been sometimes supposed. The barbarians' object was war. They owed all they possessed, their rank, their lands, their means of subsistence, to plunder and violence; and they could only maintain or increase these benefits by being always prepared to commit or to resist violence. They not merely neglected the arts of peace and the cultivation of mind, but they despised them. Their business or recreation in the intervals of war was the chase, and in promoting such amusement the desolation they caused was little less than that occasioned by their wars. Cultivation of the soil was restricted to that which would supply the households and retinues of the feudal barons and knights, with a miserable pittance for the poor slaves who tilled the ground; manufactures were confined to the requirements of feudal wars, pomp, or amusements, and were carried on by the lords' menials; except the owners of land, men had no rights, they were mere beasts of burden.

From such barbarian darkness mankind was raised by commerce, and by commerce alone. Despite of all difficulties some men had surplus productions beyond their own consumption, and these they exchanged with each other. In the train of commerce followed mental elevation; the revival of letters took place immediately trade between different countries began to extend; yet at every step commerce and civilization had to contend with the discouragements of the lords of the soil, who preferred their own power to the social happiness of mankind. From that day to the present the history of Europe has been a succession of struggles by human mind and commercial enterprise against the obstructive power of the owners of the soil. Light has warred with darkness, and, though slowly, it has been certainly progressive. In some form or other, however, the owners of land, especially in this country, have retained their power over the community, and the sentiments and laws, which prevailed amongst the Norman despoilers of the Anglo-Saxon in the time of the Conqueror, exist amongst us at this day to a far greater extent than is commonly believed. Indeed, the actual law of real property originated in strictly feudal principles; the succession to, the tenure, and the forfeiture of landed property are wholly feudal. The student's first lessons in the law of real property are, that all land must be held of some one as lord; that males are preferred to females, and the eldest son to all other sons, because originally the lord required an adult male tenant to perform the feudal services with the least possible delay; that the fee cannot remain an instant in abeyance, because the lord would be without a tenant and his feudal service; and escheat, or return of the land to the lord where there is no heir, and forfeiture for crime, are founded upon the same reasoning. Until the last few years land was not subject to all the owner's debts, and even now the practical difficulties in affixing land with debts are considerable. Until a modern statute a person might have borrowed a million sterling upon his promissory note or other simple contract, and laid it out in land, which would have descended to his heir, who could not have been made to pay a shilling of his ancestor's debts.

And perhaps the prejudices, opinions, and habits of our landed proprietors bear even stronger marks of feudalism than our laws themselves. The lust of power, which in the days of the Plantagenets induced our nobles and great landowners to lead their dependents against their sovereign or their fellow-nobles, causes their successors to seek to influence elections by means of dependent tenants. The same love of selfish pleasure and disregard of the welfare of others, which caused the depopulation and destruction of seventy villages to make the New Forest for a hunting-ground, animate the game-preserving landowners at this hour.

It would be impossible to comprehend completely the recent furious demeanour of the landowners without some such considerations as we have suggested: it is an outbreak of suppressed feudalism, the last expiring effort of that anti-social system. The violent tirades against the League are not to be accounted for by mere apprehensions of falling rents, for nine out of ten of the landlord spouters show by their ridiculous exaggerations that they really do not believe their own assertions on that score. Doubtless fears on this head are felt by the most deeply-mortgaged landlords—and most of the proprietors who have their "sheepskins" at home are in the ranks of the Free-Traders—but the grand offence of the League is its unqualified assertion that every man has a right to the unrestrained and unconditional enjoyment of the fruits of his own industry. This is high treason against feudalism. Hitherto Free Trade has been advocated and applied by politicians so far only as it did not interfere with the prejudices or the power of the landowners. Huskisson was their slave, and only introduced freedom—so far as he did introduce it—into our commercial legislation after the manner of a slave, by outwitting his masters. The Whigs bow to the yoke of the oligarchy, and have always advocated "protection" to land. And Peel, after an exposition of the principles of Free Trade, which would fit him for the chair of the League Council, declares that corn is an excepted article, and that it has ever been the policy of the Legislature of this country to grant special protection to landowners.

Now, the League has shaken off these trammels; its members say, let the landowners have all the benefits which the fair enjoyment of the best kind of property can afford, but let them have no more; let them not keep up rents to pay mortgages or marriage settlements, or retain farmers in serfdom to win county elections, or desolate parishes by preserving game. Let them use their land as well as enjoy it. Let those who want full rents go the right way to get them either by improving their estates themselves, or by letting them to tenants upon such terms as will induce improvement. Nor do the Free Traders hesitate to say, that if Free Trade shall render the deeply-mortgaged landowner absolutely insolvent, let him do as better men have done before him—support himself by his own industry. On behalf of the industrious classes of this country, we say, the national industry shall be no longer taxed to support a class, though that class be successors to the power, if not the descendants from the loins, of the Norman marauders. We shall another week show how the peculiar exemptions of land, and the feudal system out of which those exemptions have grown, affect the modern relations of landlord and tenant, and the mutual sentiments, habits, and prejudices of those two classes.

THE LAIRDS OF EAST LOTHIAN AND THE LABOURERS.

An admirable exposition of the fallacies of the lairds, in their assertions that the Corn Laws benefit the labourers, has been widely circulated in East Lothian, as "The Petition of the Hinds and other Agricultural Labourers of East Lothian to the Association recently instituted for the purpose of Keeping up Rents, but professedly for the Protection of British Agriculture and the Benefit of Agricultural Labourers."

After expressing the petitioners' thanks for the warm interest expressed by the monopolist landowners at the Haddington protection meeting, they are made to say:—

"That we are not so rewarded at present you will readily believe, when we inform you that, after taking into account every allowance made to us, and converting the same into money, our earnings do not amount on an average to more than £24 2s. a-year, or 8s. 9d. per week; and that with this small sum we have to clothe ourselves and families, consisting of, say, five individuals; to buy coals, candles, soap, shoes, household utensils, &c., and to pay for the education of our children, and for medical attendance. In addition to all this, out of the same sum of 8s. 9d. per week, we have to supply ourselves and families with food."

Again they say:—

"It appears from the speeches delivered at your meeting that you fear our circumstances would be deteriorated by the abolition of the Corn Laws, and that we might be reduced to the condition of the peasantry of Silesia and other countries, who subsist chiefly on 'black bread.' What our present condition is we beg to explain, and leave you to judge what we could lose by any change. We do not sit down, as some members of your association seem to suppose, at boards plentifully supplied with wheat bread, and, although more scantily, also supplied with butcher's meat. This is not, and cannot be, our condition; for our whole earnings would not supply a family of five persons with these costly articles of food, even if they could subsist on one meal a-day. Wheat bread is never tasted by us except in the harvest-field; and the only butcher meat we ever see is a little pork on Sundays, being the produce of a pig fed by us, and which may weigh ten stones, thus affording about three pounds of pork each Sunday to be divided amongst five persons, and none for the other six days of the week."

"What our food really is we shall now explain for your information. In the morning a little porridge—for few of us can get as much as we desire—and, in winter, often without milk; for dinner we get potato soup, or potatoes and herring; for supper a few potatoes or a little porridge. Our wives sometimes indulge themselves with a little tea of the coarsest quality, often without sugar, and in winter without milk. Along with this tea they use coarse black bread without any butter for butter is too expensive to use except upon rare occasions."

They then say the labourers of the Continent prefer the rye bread of which the lairds would make a bugbear, and add:—

"In East Lothian the bread used by your hinds and other agricultural labourers is a mixture of barley, peas, and beans, ground into meal; and you will understand its appearance when we inform you that it is very like the rape and oil cakes used for feeding cattle and manuring the fields; and it is very indigestible coarse food."

They then ask the landlords to reduce their rents so as to enable the occupiers to make wages high, and they say:—

"We no doubt enjoy the pleasure and advantages of rising at four o'clock in the morning, inhaling the fragrance of the bean-fields, as has been so poetically said, and of continuing to labour incessantly, with short intervals for meals, till seven o'clock in the evening. We likewise enjoy the bracing effects of the northern blasts while holding the plough, or, as often happens, while working at draining or ditching during frosty weather; but, notwithstanding these circumstances, we would greatly prefer the creature comforts enjoyed by the families engaged in manufactures, with their weekly earnings of 12s., 18s., 25s., and even 30s. a week, to all these advantages, real and imaginary, combined as they are with our scanty earnings of only £24 2s. a year, or 8s. 9d. a week, as detailed in the following statement, taken for a fair average of years, and which all of you know to be correct:—

| HIND'S WAGES. | | |
|--------------------------------|----|---------|
| 9 quarters of oats, worth | .. | £29 0 0 |
| 1 do. peas and beans | .. | 1 11 0 |
| 2 do. 2 bushels barley | .. | 3 16 0 |
| 5 bolls potatoes | .. | 2 0 0 |
| Cow's keep | .. | 5 0 0 |
| Lint | .. | 1 0 0 |
| Carriage of 5 carts coals, say | .. | 0 15 0 |
| Harvest meat, 30 days, say | .. | 1 0 0 |
| Average yearly value | .. | £42 2 0 |
| Average weekly value | .. | 0 8 9 |

"Much has been said by your class regarding the destitution of the labouring classes on the Continent, but, as some of us read newspapers now-a-days, we recollect to have seen official statements, by Dr. Bowring and others, which clearly prove that the labourers and peasantry in foreign states, though nominally receiving smaller wages than ours, really procure a much larger supply of the necessities of life than we do in this highly-taxed country."

And after congratulating the lairds on the "sudden and favourable changes which have taken place in their opinions," they pray:—

"May it therefore please you, the landowners of the Agricultural Protection Association, to take this, the humble petition of the lands and other agricultural labourers on your estates, into your consideration, and grant us a moderate supply of wheat bread and butcher meat as above craved."

And the document concludes thus:—

"The following noblemen and gentlemen, landowners, who took part in the formation of the association, are requested, on the part of the petitioners, to act as a committee for the promotion of the objects stated in the petition, and for the purpose of presenting the same, and supporting its prayer, at the first meeting of the association, viz.:—Lord Elcho, Sir D. Kinloch, Sir George Warrender, Sir T. B. Hepburn, M.P., Sir George G. Scobie, the Honourable Mr. Charteris, Mr. Balfour, M.P., Mr. Aitchison of Drummore, Captain Hay of Belton, Mr. Hunter of Thureston, and Sir Robert Houston."

This is bringing the absurdities of the landlords to a practical test.

LANDLORD AND TENANT—IDENTITY OF THEIR INTERESTS.

It is a favourite topic of declamation with the squires, to allude to the observations of Free Traders on the relations of landlord and tenant, and to say that the League is endeavouring to create ill blood between those classes. No doubt this is a very convenient assertion for the landed gentry; but, as the farmers happen to understand the complete diversity of interests which exists between themselves and their landlords, we doubt whether these voluble gentry impose on any but themselves. However, we will present our readers with a passage from the writings of the agriculturists themselves, which is far more severe upon the landlords than anything we recollect to have proceeded from a Free Trader. A correspondent of the Mark-lane Express, the weekly organ of the monopolists, whose letters are always displayed in the largest type—the writer being a violent advocate for "protection"—in reference to the Anti-League meetings, says:—

"The Marquis of Chandos's clause in the Reform Bill, which added very greatly to their numbers, by enfranchising all tenants-at-will of £50 and upwards, neither contributed to their power nor their public spirit. They were still 'tenants-at-will,' and could only use their new and important privilege, in nineteen cases out of twenty, as it might please their landlords; hence they continued to be held as entitled to little consideration—time and taxable; grumbling, it may be, at market-dinner, but perfectly powerless to resist any measures that ministers and landlords might think proper. 'A change,' however, is coming over the spirit of their dream; they are rousing themselves, and 'shaking,' we trust, 'their invincible locks;' the sluggishness engendered by ignorance or hopelessness, or indifference, is passing away; landlords are perceiving this, and condescend to advise where they used to command; nay, so obsequious are some become, that they would 'rather not interfere with the meetings, as they would wish the tenants to act for themselves.' 'Kind souls! The enemy is at the gate, thundering for permission to ruin all rents on the one side, and their darling minister and party—whom they prefer to all other considerations (save rents), with God knows how many tariffs and Canadian crochets—on the other; hence they would rather not commit themselves—they graciously condescend to permit the tenantry to act for them; they know their value in the day of battle, and—they raise their rents when it is over.'"

This is from a "Protectionist." This is from the mouth of one of your own advocates, most mighty landlords. This is no League libel, but a statement—and we believe a very just and true statement—of a most ardent monopolist. And the same writer, a little further on, thus tells the farmers "how" they must fight their own battle:—

"With Free Trade or without Free Trade, to prevent the necessity of importation or compete with it when it comes, our own country must be made to yield as much more as it is possible. How, and by whom is this to be effected? Certainly not by tenants-at-will. Few will be such fools as to expend their time and money to obtain an extraordinary crop one year, in order that their rents may be raised the next. Such follies have been, we know, but tenants are not quite such credulous fools as formerly. Late events have shaken their faith in promises and pledges of all sorts and from all men. They have found to their sorrow that neither Governments, nor county members, nor 'liberal landlords,' are to be trusted overmuch. The present meetings, if leading to permanent associations, will bring this subject frequently forward. Leases must be asked for and obtained. 'The day of the landlords' weakness is that of their strength. Let them pass resolutions that England can grow any quantity of corn that may be required, if properly cultivated, and sufficient capital be expended in such cultivation; but that in order that such increased supply be obtained by such increased expenditure, the tenant-farmer must be protected by his landlord as well as by the Legislature, long leases being as necessary as Corn Laws for larger supplies.' Give a man secure possession of a bleak rock, says a great agricultural writer, and he will convert it into a garden; give him but temporary possession of a garden and he will turn it into a desert. Give the farmers long leases say we, encourage them by every means you can to improve your property, and then, and then only, will the landlords be safe, their rents secure, their motives appreciated."

And then, we may add, Corn Laws, and similar absurd iniquities, would be left to their fate by both landlords and tenants without a murmur. But, as the agriculturists and the monopolists themselves have in substance admitted the whole case against the Corn Laws, it is somewhat cool to expect the rest of the community to wait the result of self-reformation amongst the landed class, which is everywhere a work of exceeding tediousness.

CORN-LAW CRUDITIES.

"There are men who readily understand any single isolated fact, and make it part of their stock of knowledge, but whose stock of knowledge consists entirely of such distinct facts. These men cannot lay a number of facts together so as to draw some general inference from them."—Chambers' Edinburgh Journal.

The above sentence is singularly expressive of the state of mind of many acute persons connected with land upon the subject of the Corn Laws. They see isolated facts and peculiar circumstances which are detrimental to agriculture, and eagerly exclaim against their continuance; but, when they are asked to apply to the larger question of protection that reasoning which they use so justly in a more limited view of the requirements of agriculture, they lose themselves amidst a crowd of fallacies and absurdities. Thus, our readers will remember a passage upon the subject of farming covenants, which we reprinted from a letter of Mr. James Dean, a land-agent, in which he ably exposed the mischievous state of the law as applied to husbandry. This we used to illustrate our view of the evils arising from restriction. That extract has drawn from Mr. Dean a long letter, addressed to the Council of the League, and published in the Mark-lane Express, in which, amongst many crudities and errors, we find some useful remarks, evincing considerable acuteness in particulars, but absolute incapacity to grasp general reasoning. After stating that Sir Robert Peel ought either to declare explicitly that there shall be no further change in the Corn Laws, or that the Corn Laws should be repealed at the end of five years, with an abrogation of all contracts between landlords and tenants;—this Mr. Dean thinks would be "acting a straightforward part," and evidently seeing that the last branch of his alternative—his reversionary repeal—is the least improbable of the two modes suggested for a settlement of the question;—he says:—

"And why should he not now allow five years to the British farmers to make arrangements and otherwise regulate their affairs? The farmer would then carry on his improvements with steadiness, and at the end of five years would find himself on safe ground, unassailable by Anti-Corn-Law Leaguers or any other leaguers. Few men know more of England and the farmers of England than I do. Deal fairly with them; give them time and a fair field, and there are no difficulties they are not ready to encounter, and will as surely surmount, for their country's good. The situation of the landlords, too, would be improved beyond measure; instead of a poverty-stricken tenantry, beggared-out estates, and a starving peasantry—rents, though somewhat lower, would be equalised, leases would be granted, capital would circulate in the making of improvements, and peace and contentment would reign universal. And if to the measures herein proposed, Sir Robert Peel would add the compulsory enclosure of all open arable fields and common pastures, and the enfranchisement of copyhold lands within five years, then would full employment be found for all the labouring classes; and the increased and increasing produce of the land, by means of the improved husbandry now everywhere progressing, would render food plentiful and cheap; attended, too, with the farther advantage of not interfering with other interests to their prejudice anywhere."

Now, the natural exclamation on reading this catalogue of the benefits of Free Trade is, "Why postpone so much good for five years?" And the mere statement of such a proposition is enough to show its absurdity. But the fact is, this gentleman has experience and acuteness enough to see that, if the farmer had arrived at the haven of Free Trade, he and all those who work under him would be far better off than at present; but he has not the moral courage or the capacity for general views which are necessary for looking through the cloud of delusion and prejudice in which sinister interests and party politicians are at this moment trying to envelop the very simple question of Free Trade.

Since the above was written (and it has been several weeks in type) we have seen a subsequent letter in the Mark-lane Express from Mr. Dean, on "Farming Leases," which is a remarkable illustration of the views we have above stated. We shall make use of that letter on an early occasion.

A FREE-TRADE LECTURE.

We said when the Anti-League agitation first began in Essex that we hailed it as a most useful auxiliary to our own efforts in favour of Free Trade, and this has turned out to be the case in even a far greater degree than we anticipated. Whether the speakers deal in mere abuse of the League and the advocates of Free Trade, or whether, like Mr. O. Copland at Romford, they are ambitious of appearing argumentative, they alike expose the delusive system they seek to uphold. In the one case, all reasonable men are convinced that any system which requires such vituperation to be called in aid must be essentially unsound; in the other, by endeavours to grapple, or of appearing to grapple, with Free-trade arguments, the monopolists lay themselves open to detection and refutation—detection of misstatements, refutation of fallacies. The landlords were wise in their generation when they voted in silence for the maintenance of the Corn Laws, and it augurs well for the cause of commercial freedom that they are now driven to speak out upon the subject.

We have said that Mr. O. Copland is ambitious of being an argumentative advocate of monopoly, and, being a man of considerable fluency and apparently of some reading, he just contrives, by a mixture of dashing assertion and cautiously garbled quotation, having an unflinching reliance on the want of information in his audience, to make a case which might be somewhat plausible to those who never thought and never intended to inquire into the subject. The notice of a few of his recent statements at Romford, in Essex, will serve to show that the protectionists are indeed playing with edged tools, when they essay argument in favour of the Corn Laws. And, first, we must apologize to Mr. Copland for confounding him, as we did in our notice of his former speech, with the respectable solicitors of the same name resident in Chelmsford: they are men of education and intelligence, and, whatever might be supposed to be their interest as professional men in such a monopoly-ridden county as Essex, they are superior to those influences, and are Free Traders. With such men, Mr. O. Copland, the monopolist, has nothing in common; he stands out as the upholder of the greatest wrong and injury ever inflicted upon the English tenantry, and if he be an amateur advocate of the Corn Laws, and not, as we had been led to believe, an agent of the landowners, we can only say he has exhibited much perverse industry in a most unamiable and hopeless cause. But, be his motives what they may, there can be no mistake about his arguments. Take the following sample:—

"I will not, as I did at Chelmsford, go into figures to show you what the price of corn would be if a repeal of the Corn Laws were carried; but I will state one fact. I find that in the year 1826 the price of wheat at Dantzic was 15s. 11d., and oats 4s. 11d. (Hear.) Now I maintain 6s. or 7s. per quarter includes every expense of freight, insurance, and profit, if brought into the port of London; and thus at that time wheat could be sold here at 23s. Mark that, and see what you are to expect under a Free Trade."

That is the hardy assertion. Now, what is the fact? Why, that from the years 1823 to 1826, the price of wheat in Dantzic ranged between 21s. and 27s. a quarter; and it was at that low price solely because, from the state of our markets, there seemed no chance of selling it here. The wheat, which in the north of Europe is chiefly grown for exportation, had accumulated in the warehouses, and there was no expectation of an outlet. But the demand which arose for foreign wheat in this country in 1828, 1829, 1830, and 1831, had the effect of raising the price of wheat in Dantzic to the average price, during those four years, of 42s. 2d. per quarter. Now, this is more like what may be expected under a Free Trade than as represented by Mr. Copland. Can a man who thus misstates facts be taken to be an honest reasoner? Is it not plain that he has some sinister purpose to serve? And what must be a cause which requires such advocacy? Again, the following is a barefaced assertion, which is directly contradicted by recorded facts. He said:—

"But I think if I show you that as protection has decreased the price of corn has decreased, that is a strong proof that protection has not the effect they endeavour to show, and that with a repeal of the Corn Laws prices would be lower still. I find that, under the law of 1816, the price of corn was 67s. or 68s., and one return was 60s. In 1828 there was less protection given, and under that bill the price fell nearly 10s. per quarter; the return was about 57s. Does that not show you that as protection is reduced corn falls?"

Mark the facts, and see how they contradict this man's arguments. The price of wheat was, under the law of 1815, not only 68s. and 69s., but in one year, 1817, it rose as high as 117s. a quarter; but then, on the other hand, it fell to 51s. a quarter in 1821; to 42s. and 38s. in 1822; in 1823 it varied from 40s. 8d. to 50s. 8d. per quarter; in September, 1824, it was 55s.; and in March, 1826, it was again 55s. 6d. a quarter. And this while the Corn Law practically prohibited all importation. Now, under the law of 1828, though the protecting duty was nominally lowered, in November of that year the average price reached 75s. 3d.; and in 1829 and 1830 the small portion of dry wheat brought to market sold for from 70s. to 80s. a quarter; in August, 1830, the average was 72s.; in March, 1831, 73s. 5d.; and in August, 1832, it was 63s. a quarter. So, again, in August, 1838, the average was 72s. 11d. a quarter; in January and February, 1839, it was 79s. 8d.; in September, 1840, 72s. 8d.; and in September, 1841, 73s. 2d. What a complete refutation of Mr. Copland's argumentation do these figures present! The truth is, that any protection, be it nominally higher or lower, has no other effect upon the farmer than to aggravate the fluctuations of the seasons, and to delude him into following a will-o'-the-wisp, in the shape of imaginary high prices. Then he ventures to state taxation as a ground for monopoly; saying:—

"But it is an insult to say the English farmer can compete with the foreigner. Put them on equal terms, and I fear not the result; but, encumbered as you are with taxation, to put you in the race with the foreigner is a gross delusion and a gross injustice. It is impossible that you can compete with him, because you have around you a weight of taxation that the foreigner has not. There is the point of highway-rates. It is said the highway-rates are not a burden on the farmers. Now, if you came on the highway—if you came here—there is a toll-gate, and if you say, 'I pay highway-rates in my parish and ought not to pay this,' the answer is, 'You must pay or not pass;' but when the inhabitants of towns and of the manufacturing districts come upon our highways and byways, we have no toll-gates—we keep our roads in order, and we say they ought to keep the highways in repair for us. I admit the keeping up our roads improves the value of our land; BUT WHAT OF THAT? Are we fairly treated in having to keep our own ways and also the highways of the kingdom? I contend that the farmer always will have cause of complaint if we have Free Trade, till all these imposts, together with tithes, are made a national and not a parochial burden."

Now, this is one of the most impudent assertions of the landlord claim to plunder the public we ever met with. The farmer, of course, calculates all these rates, tithes, and so forth, and bids for his farm accordingly; therefore they form no burthen on him; and as the landlord bought or inherited his estate subject to these outgoings, the claim to have his outgoings paid by the public is really most audacious. Yet this is, in fact, what is always meant by special burdens. The landlords wish, like the old French aristocracy, to be exempted from all taxation. They do contrive to shift off a large share of the burdens they ought to bear, but they think the community should allow them to eat up their unearned rents undiminished by any taxation whatever. Then he said:—

"But it is ruinous to say that Englishmen, English labourers in particular, are to be placed in competition with those abroad, seeing that we have 38 millions of customs a year, and there is not an ounce of tea, or a bit of tobacco, or a pound of sugar, or scarcely any article that the labourer requires, but in some way he pays a portion of taxation to the country on it. Therefore your labourers cannot afford to live on such low wages as they could do if there were no taxation. I do not say there is no taxation on the Continent—I know that Mr. Cobden says they are all taxed as high as they possibly can be. But what I say is this—I admit that they are taxed, but I deny that they are taxed in an equal amount. With respect to Poland, I find that Mr. Porter, in Mr. McCulloch's great work, gives the gross taxation of that country at 25 per cent. on the value of the land, and as the land varies there from 3d. to 8d., that is about 14d. an acre. Would you call that taxation in this country?—would you not be glad to get yours reduced to that?"

What a funny reasoner this Mr. Copland is; his question really is, how would the landlords of England like to be taxed 25 per cent. on the value of their land?

Let us put this passage in contrast with another which seems to refute it entirely:—

"But does cheap corn produce happiness? I doubt it. If it did, where corn is cheapest the people would be the happiest; but we find that in Poland, where it is the lowest in Europe, there the labourers are in the lowest state of misery and want. Cheap and dear corn, in fact, are relative terms. If I have 6d., and the loaf is 4d., then I can buy it and have 2d. to spare; but if the loaf is 6d., and I have only 4d., then I cannot, because I want 2d. to enable me to do so, when before I had 3d. to spare."

Does not Mr. Copland suspect that he has here hit upon the cause of the lower wages of the ruder countries of the Continent? Does he not see that it is because there is no profitable employment for the people that wages are thus low? Then, to show that Corn Laws do not cause or increase fluctuations in the price of corn, he goes back some five or six centuries, "when there were no Corn Laws."

"But if I can show you that before any Corn Laws existed greater fluctuations took place than have done since, I think that is pretty good evidence that the Corn Laws do not produce them. Now, in 1288 the price of corn was 2s. per quarter; in 1291, only three years after, it was 48s. Does not this show a greater amount of fluctuation than any that takes place now? In 1299 the price was 6s. 2d., in 1339 it was 63s. per quarter. And, then, with the argument that fluctuations are produced by the Corn Laws, because if they existed when there were no Corn Laws, could they be attributable to them?"

This is inconceivably ridiculous. At the time he speaks of, half the country was wood and morass, and the imperfect tillage of the strong lands, the only land then in tillage, rendered the population entirely dependent on the seasons whether there was famine or abundance. Again, he says:—

"I find in the letter of a 'Hertfordshire Farmer,' who I think I am not far out in saying is Mr. Lattimore, a Free Trader, this passage on the result of the repeal:— 'We should become, one and all of us, convinced of the necessity of looking to the quantity rather than the high price of our grain, for profit."

"You are to look to the quantity rather than the price, and they think you have never yet produced one-half the quantity of corn you can grow, but repeal is to compel you to do it. He then says:—

"We should become less eager to grow wheat, and should, therefore, be certain to grow it more successfully, because the land would be better prepared for it."

"Thus, first, you are to get a less price; and secondly, you are to grow fewer acres of wheat—there is to be a reduction in price, and a reduction in quantity, and with that I should like to know how you are to get on."

This is not the argument of the writer referred to. He says, and says truly, that if prices were steady farmers would grow a greater quantity per acre. With a less price and fewer acres of wheat, farmers might and would have an increased quantity to sell, and would certainly, in a series of years, average larger receipts in money from their wheat crop than they do at present. But Mr. Copland found it convenient not to state the whole argument. Then he said:—

"But we are told that science is to do much for us as farmers—that is the great hobby on which the League trot. What science may eventually do for the advancement of agriculture, I do not know. What she may do, futurity has not unfolded; and no one would rejoice more than I should, if it should prove that by this aid we could produce two quarters for one; but I do say that science has been unwarrantably misused and insulted, when persons maintain that she has taught us this already. Let a farmer become acquainted with all the pleasing facts which agricultural chemistry reveals—let him study the nature and properties of the elemental bodies—let him learn the theories of chemical equivalents and combinations—let him investigate the nature of oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, and the other gases—let him acquire a knowledge of nitre; sulphuric, muriatic, and the rest of the acids—let him become acquainted with the nitrates, sulphates, and all the other salts—let him inquire into the properties of soda, potash, ammonia, and all other alkalies—let him make himself familiar with chemical analysis—let him comprehend the theories of fermentation, putrefaction, and germination—let him know that carbon, oxygen, hydrogen, and in some cases nitrogen, constitute the ultimate elements of most of the articles he produces. Let him search out all that the science of botany can unfold—let him know the difference between endogens and exogens—let him inquire how the roots of trees and vegetables derive through their spongioles nourishment for the plant—let him understand all the processes of nutrition, vegetable respiration, flowering, and fructification—let him learn that plants of the same kind will not grow well for succeeding years on the same land, owing to the excrementitious matter thrown off from their roots, which is injurious to a similar plant the following year—let him search far and deep into the revelation of these sciences, and when he has accomplished the object as a farmer, he will not be five pounds the richer man at the end of the year than he was at the beginning."

This is mere evasion or mystification. No one says farmers need to be or should be scientific chemists or botanists, but there are means within the reach of the plainest and most uneducated farmer, which will enable him to grow in many cases "two quarters of grain for one." They can understand the value of a lease; they could destroy the game; they could keep more stock; they could farm with a certainty of reaping the fruits of their industry or their outlay; but the Corn Law, and the system which it upholds, offer at present an insuperable bar to such beneficial alterations. He adds:—

"Now, if you have done all these things they recommend to others, how can you improve so that you can compete with the foreigners, because you have farmed well, and I do not think there is a single thing I can mention to the farmers by which they can get more money by their cultivation than they do now."

The very reverse of this is the truth. Even in Essex, which is comparatively a well cultivated county, one-half of the land is not half farmed, and the best farmers would be none the worse for steady prices.

HINTS FOR LANDLORDS.

UTILITY OF PIECE-WORK.—The following passage of the letter of Mr. Johnson Daniell, a Dorsetshire landowner, from which we extracted largely in a former number, shows the importance of enabling the agricultural labourer to work for himself, by giving him piece-work as much as possible:—

"For almost all these jobs are done 'by the piece'; this is best for both parties, the payer and the paid. No words need be wasted to prove this: all I would observe is, that it lightens at once the task to the labourer. Like the armour of the hero it gives him wings. He has a daily interest in his daily task. And it is quite a mistake to suppose that there is (among good labourers) anything like a general disposition to 'slight' their work. The agricultural labourer has, usually, a pride in his honest task. An awkward bank or a badly 'pushed' hedge is felt by him as a reflection. The zeal of art is not confined to the artist who arrogates to himself that exclusive name. The labourer is not thus and sinews only; he has the ambition suited to his sphere; he will put up your bank better than you can direct him yourself, and will criticise his own performance as if it were his memorial. In the homely seclusion of his own green valley or hamlet in fact it is so. 'Such an one put up this bank.'—I have heard with comments of praise or blame, long after the workman's body had reposed under its own green nameless heap in the village churchyard. 'Let not Ambition mock his useful toil!'"

And the same letter contains the following discriminating observation on the only real charity to the poor, namely, providing them with employment which is profitable to the employer:—

"For there is no charity like this. Cases of accidental or sudden distress, or grievous sickness, may be well met by the ready hand, and will be sought out by the willing eye; but we want something more systematic, which may benefit the poor always, without leaving them to their own resource (and in spite of the general outcry I maintain that the resource is invaluable) the workhouse. This charity benefits and degrades not; nourishes and does not oppress; nay, it has the effect appertaining to the wise laws of the creation in the system of life and nutriment—of providing means for its own continuance and extension."

The following letter was addressed by Sir George S. Mackenzie, Bart., of Coull, to the Secretary of a late meeting of the West Ross Farmers' Society:—

Edinburgh, Jan. 29, 1844.
"Sir,—Observing an advertisement in the Dingwall paper, calling a meeting of the West Ross Farmers' Society, for the purpose of supporting the Corn Law, I beg to express my regret that it is not in my power to be present. I wish also to make known to the meeting, that I shall be very sorry to find that the farmers of Ross give any support to a cause, which is purely a landlord's cause, and opposed to the true interests of the farmers. The cause is nothing else but that of high rents, in disregard of the farmer's prosperity and of the comfort of the labourer. Reason, common sense, and fact, are all against the present Corn Law; and it is vain for landlords to think that intelligent farmers will be much longer blind to their real interests. I lament I should stand opposed, on this question, to many highly valued friends; but having already submitted to a reduction of rent, and taken chance with my tenants of what might befall, and felt nothing the worse, while they were thriving, I am ready to submit, with perfect resignation and composure, to any further reduction which the abolition of the Corn Law may require; because I rely on drawing quite enough from my property to enable me to live comfortably. Whatever be the opinion of my own tenants on the Corn Question, they will give me credit for my sincerity in believing the Corn Law to be injurious to them, directly and indirectly; and that my opposition does not arise from any desire to serve myself at their expense, they will certainly believe."

"I am, Sir,
Your very obedient servant,
G. S. MACKENZIE."

"Mr. John Munro,
Secretary to the West Ross Farmers' Society."

Sir George Mackenzie is one of the most enlightened and amiable landlords in Scotland, and is the author of some valuable treatises on agriculture.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"L. D.'s" verses have great merit, but the point in some stanzas is not sufficiently apparent.
"Vox Populi."—Mr. Feargus O'Connor is so busily engaged in damaging himself, that we are unwilling to disturb him in so useful an occupation.

"J. A., of the rectory A. B."—We doubt whether the English people would pay the price of starvation for the luxury of Irish oppression, and their consent is necessary to the validity of the bargain he describes.

"A Rutland Farmer."—We are glad to welcome such a convert. "An Elector of Durham" states, in reply to Colonel Sibthorpe's assertion, that "there is not an agricultural labourer in Lincolnshire unemployed," the decisive fact that there are twenty-five labourers destitute for want of employment in the single parish of Bardney, within seven miles of the colonel's residence.

"K. M."—The Brazilian tariff is not prohibitory as yet.
"G. H."—The Free-Traders of Sunderland know well how they ought to deal with Mr. Barclay.

"G. H., of D."—It would be an endless task to expose the trickery of the pretended meetings of farmers held by the Rent League. His account of the assemblage at Doncaster is confirmed by many other correspondents, but we deem the hollowiness of the pretended movement so transparent as to require no further comment.

"A Free Trader."—Would any preacher of "Free Trade in the abstract" be satisfied with "a dinner in the abstract?"

"P. L.'s" lines are very spirited, but are liable to be misinterpreted.

"E. M."—The verses are good, but not quite up to the mark.

"A Man of Kent."—The question to be asked the farmer is:—Are they satisfied with their present condition, and do they find their pursuit under the existing laws as profitable as trades and manufactures?

"The Essex Letters" ought to be published in a local paper.

"J. H."—The utter folly of the pretext set forth by the advocates of reciprocity has been sufficiently demonstrated.

"A. M."—The subject of his letter is one which could not be discussed without needlessly exposing the League to misrepresentation.

"Y. N." will see a reason why his verses are respectfully declined in this day's paper.

"A Subscriber."—The truck system runs in the family; but, though Sir Robert Peel's brother has been fined for it, we fear that no law will reach the Premier's truck of the people's food for the landlords' votes.

"A Lady of Hendon."—We are reluctant to insert merely personal attacks; and, besides, the subject of her invective is really beneath notice.

"Vindex."—The persons who bring the Government into contempt are the Duke of Richmond and the other landlords who issue orders to the Ministers in the tone of masters, and enforce obedience with the rigour of Russian nobles directing their serfs.

"Bibliophile."—Mr. G. B. Whittaker's speech is not reported, and was probably passed over for sufficiently good reasons. Poor Mr. Baring's exhibition was so melancholy that we have not sufficient cruelty to notice it. His friends are much to blame for not keeping him under more restraint.

Buba.—Caducous.—A Leaguer.—J. G.—J. C.—A Nottinghamshire Farmer.—A Cornish Free Trader.—A Friend at Raigate.—J. S., Jun.—A Liverpool Subscriber to Fund and Paper.—A Member in Leith.—G. W. W.—A B.—A Tenant-farmer of Fife.—E. F. of Cambridge.—S. S., Jun.—and W. M.—are respectfully thanked for their communications, and their several hints shall receive due consideration.

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any person forwarding 3s. 3d. by Post-office order, to the Publisher, 67, Fleet-street, London, will have one quarter's copies of the LEAGUE forwarded by post on the days of publication. Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with J. Gadsby, Newall's-buildings, Manchester; and the LEAGUE may be had by order of any news-agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

We this week present our readers with a sheet embracing twelve additional columns, in order to make room for a quantity of interesting matter, which, for want of space, has lain over for several weeks.

GREAT LEAGUE MEETING.—The Weekly Meetings of the League will, in future, be held on the Wednesday in place of the Thursday Evenings as heretofore. The next WEEKLY MEETING of the LEAGUE will take place in COVENT GARDEN THEATRE, on WEDNESDAY EVENING, Feb. 21st.

GEORGE WILSON, Esq., will take the Chair at Seven o'clock. The meeting will be addressed by Daniel O'Connell, Esq., M.P., James Wilson, Esq., and other gentlemen.

Cards of admission to the Stage and UPPER ORCHES of BOXES may be had on personal application at the Central Office of the League, 67, Fleet-street, during Monday and Tuesday; no application by letter can be attended to.

To prevent inconvenience from the great pressure at the front entrances of the Theatre, the Council has resolved to limit the issue of Tickets of admission to the dress circle to the precise number that can be conveniently accommodated.

Each ticket will be numbered, and each number represent and secure the seat in each box to be occupied by the bearer of the ticket.

The Entrance to the Dress Circle will, in future, be at the Private Box-door on the Queen's Side, in Hart-street.

The Cards of Registered Members only, will, as heretofore, admit to the Pit and Galleries of the Theatre.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, February 17, 1844.

Mr. Alexander Cochrane, the "compromised" member for Bridport, and a leader in that anomalous party known by the name of "Young England," has made a most wonderful discovery, and announced it to an astonished Parliament and people, with all the pomp befitting one who has risen beyond reason and common sense to the sphere of imaginary revelation. He has declared that the League has begun to decline ever since Sir Robert Peel declared his determination to adhere to the sliding scale, but with true prophetic pride he omitted to state what were the evidences of this decline—an omission the more to be regretted as we are utterly unable to discover any symptom of decay, but, on the contrary, find every where increased energy, increased enthusiasm, increased exertions, and increased subscriptions. St. Pierre, in one of his tales, relates an anecdote of a blind Brahmin who denied the existence of the sun; this is but a faint type of the moral blindness which fails to discover the fresh accessions of moral influence daily added to the cause of Free Trade, and the rapid spreading of a resolute determination to resist the tyrant force and fraudulent rapacity of the monopolists. Mr. Cochrane's strange announcement was received by the House in mute surprise. During the last session of Parliament the party described as "Young England" exhibited signs of a mutinous disposition, and frequently teased the Premier, by demanding the same indulgence for their whims and crotchets that is usually conceded to spoiled and naughty children. There was a regular rebellion of the nursery, and Sir Robert Peel was sorely vexed and puzzled by the refractory children. His declaration in favour of the Corn Laws was the cake to soothe these querulous saplings of aristocratic stems; and Mr. Cochrane being the easiest pacified, has been engaged to soothe the rest, by dwelling on the size and value of the cake offered by the despised tutor.

We know not how the other boys will act; the Hon. Mr. Smythe is said to have bitter remembrance of a flogging given him for one of his naughty freaks, and Lord John Manners is supposed not to have forgotten that he was snubbed by his imperious teacher. "Young England," in fact, is not yet lulled into acquiescence with its pupillage. It is something, however, to find that one of these refractory youths has consented to go into training, and has already got over that squeamishness of conscience with which Doctors Pusey and Newman are supposed to have inoculated "Young England." Already he has shown that in hardihood of assertion he is a rival to the most veteran hack that sits on the Treasury bench; but he has one great defect—he has run into the opposite extreme of his former caution, and in his assertions shows a disregard not only of facts but of appearances. We suspect that his tutor would echo the advice which we respectfully offer, that is "that he should eat his pudding and hold his tongue."

THE PRESTON GUARDIAN.—We hail with great pleasure the appearance of a new ally in the cause of commercial freedom, under the title of the Preston Guardian. This paper has been established by Mr. Joseph Livesey, of Preston, whose name is a sufficient guarantee for the perfect integrity of principle which this new organ is especially pledged to maintain. The first number of the paper is before us; and the ability and precision with which its objects are enunciated, commend it to the warm support of every earnest friend of commercial freedom and political progress throughout the northern division of Lancashire. We believe an organ of this description is much needed there. Free from the bias of party, and pledged to the unflinching advocacy of the civil and commercial rights of all classes, we trust that it will speedily command a circulation befitting its promised usefulness and character, and become at once the reflex and guide of public opinion throughout the county and borough constituencies of North Lancashire.

PLYMOUTH FREE-TRADE ASSOCIATION.—There was a strong gathering of the friends of Free Trade at the Mechanics' Institute on Friday, the 10th inst., on which occasion Mr. Isaac Nicholls delivered an able and interesting lecture on "The Employment of Machinery, its effects on Wages and the Labour Market." G. W. Soltau, Esq., presided. Some discussion took place after the lecturer had concluded. Thanks were voted to the lecturer and the chairman, after which the meeting separated.—Plymouth Journal.

EARL SPENCER AND THE MONOPOLISTS.—It has been suggested that the noisy monopolists, who threaten to withdraw from the Royal Agricultural Society because the Noble President has declared himself a Free-Trader, are possibly amongst the defaulters from whom the £5000 of arrears are due. If so, we can understand their making use of such a pretence to avoid the payment of 20s. a year. And what makes the monopolists' outcry about Lord Spencer's declaration against the Corn Laws the more absurd is, that his lordship made the same declaration, almost in the same words, in his place in the House of Lords, in 1841. This is a sufficient mark of the fraudulent objects with which the squires have got up their present movement.

The introduction and establishment of extensive manufactures and commerce have every where been the era of public freedom, and of an improved system of government.—Mr. Cullloch.

For richer and for poorer, for better and for worse, trade and agriculture are joined together, and cannot be put asunder. The life of the one is life to the other; and the death of the one would be the death of the other.—The Rev. James Aspinall.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE £100,000 FUND.

Subscriptions received during the week ending Wednesday, February 14, 1844.

N.B. As the subscription list is made up from Wednesday to Wednesday, contributions received on Thursdays and Fridays are not published in the LEAGUE of the Saturday immediately succeeding, but are included in the list of the week following.

| | | | |
|---|-----|----|----|
| A Few Friends, per Charles Pope, Weymouth | £2 | 0 | 0 |
| William Hill, Hollingworth, Cheshire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Hampshire, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Tweedale, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Whowell, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Higinbottom, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Bond, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Echells, Woolley Bridge, Glossop | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Taylor, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 | 4 | 0 |
| David Lockhart, 184, High-street, Ayr, N.B. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Haddfield, Lancashire | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Joseph Fowles, Garmond, N.B. | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| George Byres, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Alexander Thomson, Cairncake, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Alexander Mitchell, Greens, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 | 8 | 10 |
| J. Burnley, Hackmondwike, near Dewsbury, Yorksh. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Michael Hallow, do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| T. Armitage and Sons, Smithies, do. | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Sykes, worsted spinner, Hackmondwike, do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Kelly, woolstapler, do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Fairfax Kelly, do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| R. Armitage, do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| W. H. Carr, Dewsbury Moor, near do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George Cardwell, Walkman-yard, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Cook, Hush, do. | 1 | 2 | 6 |
| George Scott, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Sykes, Green, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| G. Wharton, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| T. Crawshaw, Smithies, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thos. Barry, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Daniel Barry, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Ainley, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Wharton, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Benj. Porritt, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Matthew Firth, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Armitage, grocer, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Halliday, do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| George Rhodes, do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Peter Hartley, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Bond, Smithies, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Liveredge, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Morton, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Newcome, top of do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Watts, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Edwd. Walker, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| J. Tattersfield, Dewsbury-moor, nr. do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Matthew Morton, do. | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| Haml. Atkinson, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| R. Robertson, draper, Bridge-st., Dunfermline, N.B. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Inglis, grocer, High-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. C., an Keweenaw Monopoly, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Thomas Sanderson, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Authie, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Alexr. Roy, jun., Bridge-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| D. Dawar and Co., do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Robt. Lowe, Kigin-street, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Held and Davis, Bridge-street, do. | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| J. D. and Co., do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Rutherford and Co., Bridge-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| David Inglis and Sons, do. | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| Charles Drysdale, High-street, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Blair, Inglis-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Sanderson, Holland-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A. Heveridge, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| H. Turnbull, Bruce-street, do. | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| Henry Kidd, banker, do. | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| Rev. James Young, Queen Ann-street, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A. Warton, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| William Reed, Kigin-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Robert Brand, School End-street, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Alexander Pearson, St. Margaret-street, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Rev. Charles Marshall, Woodhead-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William Kinnis, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| For Mr. John Wilson, Bridge-street, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| James Gibson, Priory-lane, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Aitken, Reid-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Ralph Walker, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Alexander Roy, James-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Henry Crombie, Bruce-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| David Elder, High-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| David Williamson, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| K. Graham, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Alexander Shaw, Bruce-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Thomson, James-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Robt. Carmichael, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 | 15 | 0 |
| Dr. Brabant, Northgate-street, Devizes, Wiltshire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Paul Anstie, Market-place, do. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Peter Walker, Silk Mills, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Frederick Walker, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Rev. J. B. Bruce, Hillworth, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Richard Biggs, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Bawell, New Park-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Cunningham, Southgate House, do. | 3 | 3 | 0 |
| W. Cunningham, jun., do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William M. Stewart, Long-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Chandler, Bath-road, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Ozias Day, Northgate-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Ball, Brittox-street } 5s. do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Edward Sedgfield } 10s. do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Jas. Smith, Brittox-street } 5s. do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Josh. Burgess, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Ditto, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Ditto, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Ditto, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. Whitchelaw, Leighton Buzzard | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Free Trader, Dunstable | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George Campbell, Cunnock, Ayr, N.B. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Wilson & Co., Eagle Mill, Garratt-road, Manchester | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thos. Barker, shoe manufacturer, Nantwich, Chesh. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| John Hampson, solicitor, Norfolk-street, Manchester | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| George Young, High street, Belford | 0 | 15 | 6 |
| A Free Trader | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Ashton | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Johnstone Huntingdon, Lauder, nr. Dalkeith, N.B. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| David Lockhart, 184, High-street, Ayr, N.B. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| R. Alnacow, 17, Prospect-st., Boundary-lane, Manchester | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Smith, 15, Mosley-street, do. | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| James Hertz, at 57, do. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| James Edwards, at 57, do. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| James Greaves, 1, Wilton-terrace, Chesham, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William Wignall, 3, John-street, Hulme, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Harding, Balford, do. | 100 | 0 | 0 |
| Martin Murphy, 4, Snow-hill, Shude-hill, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William King, 10, Palace-square, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Horsfall, 9, Green-street, Dawson-st., do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| H. A. Butterworth, 47, High-street, do. | 30 | 0 | 0 |
| Isaac Gleave, 7, Liverpool-road, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Ingham, Droylsden, near do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Isaac Crowdon, Ardwick Green, do. | 20 | 0 | 0 |

| | | | |
|--|-----|-----|-----|
| John Rawson, Ardwick-green, Manchester | £50 | 0 | 0 |
| J. N. Rawson, Fountain-street, do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Haddfield, 44, Great Bridgewater-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Shorrocks, 44, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Wm. Marsden, St. Mary's-street, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Maltravers, Edward-street, Westbury, Wiltshire | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Nathaniel Overbury, Alfred-street, do. | do. | do. | do. |
| John Wilkins, Edward-street, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Rev. J. B. Watson, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend to Free Trade, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Zeal, Church-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Seagram, M.D., do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Jesse Gouldsmith, Parade, Trowbridge, do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| A Free Trader, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Curtis, Warminster-road, Westbury, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Lonsdale, Church-street, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Edward Gough, Alfred-street, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Richard Durand, Edward-street, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Joseph Martin, Church-street, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Wm. Maizey, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Joseph Hexton, Edward-street, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Neat, Warminster-road, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Wilkins, Edward-street, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Zenas Clift, Westbury Leigh, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Saml. Tacker, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Rev. W. R. Baxter, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Jones, Church-street, do. | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| John Taylor, Warminster-road, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Wm. Michael, Edward-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Reeves, Maristow-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Neat, Bratton-road, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Joseph Daniels, Alfred-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Benjn. Lane, Bratton-road, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Joseph Sims, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Reeves, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Haml. Dowling, Churchyard, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Richd. Clift, Westbury Leigh, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Robt. Byres, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Robt. Byres, jun., do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Rev. R. Harris, Warminster-road, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Stephen Taylor, Market-place, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Wm. Wheatland, Edward-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Hardy, Market-place, South Shields, Durham | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Edward Snowden, King-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Archibald Mitchellson, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Harper, Lowe-buildings, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Hewison, Thrift-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Matthew Alsitt, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| T. G. Jefferson, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| J. L. Hall, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Alfred Johnson, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Chas. N. Waver, Albion-terrace, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Matthew Hutchinson, Long-row, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| George Lawson, Shadwell-street, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Ray, Stanhope-street, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Henry Robson, Lowe-buildings, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Shepherd Skec, Winchester-street, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thomas Vint, Saville-street, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Sept. Oliver, Albion-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Alexander Allen, Thrift-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Wm. Hodgson, Laygate-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Hudson, Shadwell-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Wright, Oxle-terrace, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Jon. Keaveley, West Holborn, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Thomas Scott, King-street, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Stephenson Fletcher, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| William Robertson, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| James Williamson, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| M. Tweedell, Wellington-street, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A Friend, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thomas Eden, Wapping-street, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Lister, King-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Snowden, Long-row, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William Wake, Wapping-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| T. S. Dale, Shadwell-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William Carr, King-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Hogarth, West Holborn, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George Turner, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Holliday, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Fraser, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George Row, East Holborn, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Wardale, West Holborn, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. Lackland, East Holborn, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Peter Webster, West Holborn, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Jarrow Chemical Comp., Temple Town, do. | 25 | 0 | 0 |
| T. Bell, Don Alkali Works, do. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| South Shields Anti-Corn-Law Association, being balance of weekly subscriptions after paying local expenses | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Allon, Albion-terrace, South Shields, Durham | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Jas. Bell, Cornwallia-street, do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| R. Imeary, Lake Alkali Works, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Briggs, King-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. F. Kennedy, sen., do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Best, Market-place, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Jackson, Ocean-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Jos. J. Ayton, King-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| T. B. Oyston, Westco., do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Alderson, Ocean-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robt. Ekless, Green's-place, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| R. J. J. Mays, Market-place, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Dr. Emmery, King-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Scott, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Dr. Coward, Dean-street, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Matthew Markey, King-street, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| R. Campbell, Market-place, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William Shaw, King-street, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| James Rennoldson, Thames-st., do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Peveril Guest, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John C. Thompson, Market-pla., do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| T. D. Usher, Long-row, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 | 14 | 0 |
| Joseph Hallwood, 50, Spear-street, Manchester | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Taylor, 6, Hume-street, Arbroath, N.B. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Findlater and Mackie, 5, Ducle-place, Manchester | 25 | 0 | 0 |
| James Aitken, 8, Exchange-arcade, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Ben. Platt and Sons, near Hebbden-bridge, Yorkshire | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| John Farrar, spindle maker, near do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Swallow, 91, Market-street, Manchester | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Knowles, Old Oak, Presteign, Radnorshire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Broom, butcher, Tenbury, Worcestershire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend to the Cause, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Mr. Gwynn, builder, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. Carter, Teine-street, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A few Friends at Crow Inn, collected by Wm. Powell | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Small sums, do. | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| Geo. Stephenson, Mount-terrace, Taunton | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Rev. R. M. Montgomery, High-street, do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Beaton, Crescent, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| R. Ham, Castle-green, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| E. Gower, Shuttern, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Matthew Haviland, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Rev. John Jackson, Barrack-street, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Hendonwick, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Benjn. Cornish, High street, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Henry Stone, Tone House, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Rev. John Fanning, Upper Crescent, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Wm. Shaw Brooks, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Wm. Warren, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Samuel Clarke, Eastgate, Taunton | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Robert Nimes, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Lovell, Toneybridge, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| W. C. Cox, Tangier, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| W. A. Woodley, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Isaac Farmery, St. James's-street, do. | 0 | 7 | 6 |

| | | | | |
|---|-----------------|-----|----|----|
| A Friend, | Taunton | £20 | 5 | 0 |
| Ditto, | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| J. Young, North Town, | do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Dummett, Shuteen, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Stephen Mockeridge, Middle-street, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Hodges, North-street, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Ellis Oram, Hunt's-court, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A Friend, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Ditto, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Ditto, | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Robert Hillard, North-street, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Jacobs, East-street, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William Orchard, East-reach, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Barrett, High-street, | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Robert Bond, St. James's-street, | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Aaron Priest, East-reach, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Edwin Brap, East-street, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Andrews, North Currie, Somerset | .. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thomas Plowman, do., do. | .. | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| Henry Crease, do., do. | .. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. Bobbett, do., do. | .. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Roberts, 85, Market-street, | Manchester | 2 | 7 | 0 |
| John Powers, 30, do., | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Watson, 45, do., | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Liddall, 16, do., | do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| William Hulme, 25, do., | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Handley, Shude-hill, | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Jonathan Gent, 8, Prospect-street, C-on-M., | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Robt. Eastwood, 25, Bridge-street, do., | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George Jackson, 32, do., | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thos. Johnson Spetch, 20, Beech-st., Hulme, | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Jane Horsman, Ducle-street, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Jos. Herald, 24, New Richmond, Pendleton, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Nellid Bannatyne, 16, Bond-street, | do. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| F. R. Atkinson, Norfolk-street, | do. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| M. Frank, at Messrs. Nathan's, Loyd-street, | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A. Philip, do., do., | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thos. Forrest, 79, Market-street, | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Leigh, 37, do., | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Joshua Rouchetti, 43, do., | do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Robinson and Cook, 65, do., | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Charles Deeming, Saville-street, Oxford-st., | do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| W. H., per A. Nodal, | do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Robt. Oram, Lower Broughton, near | do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Edwd. Corbett, Pall Mall, | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend, | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| S. T., per J. E. Royle, 16, King-street, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| C. W., | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Albert Hanck, 68, do., | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Nield, Cross-street, | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Septimus Fletcher, do., | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| S. Barker, 27, do., | do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Wm. Keith, 20, do., | do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Small sums, | do. | 0 | 12 | 0 |
| Wm. Meldrum, Westfields, Blair Gowrie, N.B. | .. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Jer. Monkhouse, Galgate, Barnard Castle, Durham | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Workmen at { Mich. Sanderson and Friends, Bank | 1 | 0 | 0 | |
| at Messrs. { Hugh McKay and Friends, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | |
| Monkhouse { T. McDowell and Friends, Thorngate | 1 | 0 | 0 | |
| and Co.'s { Mark Keighley and Friends, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | |
| factory, Bur- { Wm. Hopkin and Friends, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | |
| nard Castle, { George Wigham, sen., do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | |
| Durham. { Wm. Geldert and Friends, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | |
| { Wm. Herriott and Friends, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 | |
| J. Knaption & Friends, Bridge-end, nr. Barnard Castle | 1 | 0 | 0 | |
| John Gibbon and Friends, Thorngate, | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Parkin, Bridgegate, | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Dowson, Newgate-street, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Henry Raine, Bridgegate, | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Blackett, Thorngate, | do. | 1 | 2 | 6 |
| Wm. Bayles, Bank, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Wetherill and Marshall, Bank, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Jacob Allison, Cotherstone, near | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George Middleton, | do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George Butterfield, jnn., Hall-street, | do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Small sums, | do. | 1 | 6 | 4 |
| G. and F. Loosley, 10, Long-alley | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| S. Nevill, 31, Grosvenor-street | .. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. H. West, brewer, Hackney-road | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Sadgrove, 2, Sidney-square, Mile-end | .. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| J. Harris Heal, 196, Tottenham-court-road | .. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A Friend | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Honourable Edward Bouverie | .. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| John Powle, Deptford | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Δολοφωκία | .. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| John Trap, 31, Budge-row | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| W. R. Shick, Suffolk-place, Hackney-road | .. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thomas Hill, 35, Lansdowne-terrace, Lambeth | .. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thomas Maughan, Stamford-hill | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Francis Homan, Lordship-road, Stoke Newington | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| D. Roberts, 7, Fitzroy-street, Fitzroy-square.. | .. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| J. S. Lendles, Honey-lane Market | .. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| J. Davies and Friends, 36, Appleby-st., Kingsland-rd. | .. | 0 | 8 | 0 |
| Miss Tapp, Back-road, Hounslow | .. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Miss M. A. Tapp, do. | .. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| William Clay, 23, Skinner-street | .. | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| Charles Hooper, Eastington Mills, Gloucestershire.. | .. | 40 | 0 | 0 |
| Charles Dixon, engineer, Gas Works, Chichester | .. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| W. W. Watson, Side, Newcastle-upon-Tyne | .. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Mr. Johnson, at Mr. White's, confectioner, Devizes | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Haughton, 34, Eccles-street, Dublin | .. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Dewsbury, 4th Remit. { Richard Clarkson, Moor End, second subscrip- | .. | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| per Richd. Clarkson. { tion, to make up £25 | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| { R. and I. Clarkson | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| { A Young Lady who is against Sugar Monopoly | .. | 0 | 2 | 0 |
| { From a hard-working Man | .. | 0 | 0 | 6 |
| { W. T., a Friend to the Cause | .. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| { Mrs. A. Hemingway | .. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| { A Young Lady | .. | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| { Thomas Robinson | .. | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| { Thomas Fisher | .. | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| { Labouring Men on the Moor | .. | 0 | 3 | 4 |
| { Rev. James Jarvie | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| { John Jack, baker | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| { Thomas Crosby, Kelso Mill | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wappenshall, { John Morris | .. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| near Wellington, { J. Tomlinson | .. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Salop. { H. Rimmer | Per C. C. Jones | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| { J. Mantle | .. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William Smead, Godalming, Surrey | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Charles Gamble, St. Helen's, Lancashire | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Sanford, jun., Upper Tooting | .. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A. G. Graves, 41, Dowgate Hill | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Hamond, 12, Grange-road, Bermondsey | .. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| An Old Guinea from a Lady | .. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| H. S. Fairfoot, 25, Lloyd-square.. | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Lieut. Col. G. P. Baker, 8, Grosvenor-place, Bath | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Olney and Son, Borough | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Jones, High-street, Wapping | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Bell, 22, Sandhill, Newcastle-upon-Tyne | .. | .. | .. | .. |
| Penny Weekly Subscriptions from the Workmen in the employ of Messrs. Maudslay and Field, engi- neers, Lambeth (fourth remittance) | .. | 3 | 3 | 8 |
| Mrs. Thomas Hodgkin, 16, Claremont-row, Islington | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Price, Baches-row, Hoxton | .. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| February and March Subscription from the Frequent- ers of Prosser's Barley Mow Brewery, King's-place, Commercial-road East | .. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Richard Watson, Kidderminster | .. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| A Free Trader, "God speed the good Cause" | .. | 0 | 1 | 0 |
| R. Scott and Sons | .. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend to a moderate Fixed Duty | .. | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend to a Total Repeal | .. | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| D. Armstrong, writer | .. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Geo. Dunbar, cabinetmaker | .. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Samuel Affleck, cooper | .. | 1 | 1 | 0 |

Dumfries—continued.

| | | | |
|--|---|----|---|
| Walter Duncan, druggist | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Dinwiddie, painter | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Two Commercial Gentlemen | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Payne, fisher | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Alex. Lookup, tanner | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Balfour, hatter | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Miles Leighton, merchant | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. McGowan, writer | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| R. M'Adam, jun., watchmaker | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Mr. Wightman, of Nunwood | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Mr. M'Adam, of Kirkland | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John M'Fie, of Boreland | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Mr. M'Kinnell, of Cloudeen | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Fra. Murray, baker | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James M'Colloch, M.D. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Geddes, joiner, Maxwelltown | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Brown, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Clerk, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Alex. M'Gubbin, joiner, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Little, of Maryfield | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Fra. Nicholson, grocer | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Goodall, writer | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Walter Greirson, draper | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Swan, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Bell, Irish-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| David Beridge, baker, Maxwelltown | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Hugh M'Gregor, confectioner | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Hugh Montgomery, draper | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Dickie, spirit merchant | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A Friend to Farmers | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| H. R. Douglas, clothier | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Halliday, ironmonger | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Jas. Turner, baker | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Joseph Hammond | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Sinclair | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Peter Murray, Portland-place, Maxwelltown | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| W. D. Dickson, grocer | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. McGavin, 3, Bank-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Hogg, draper | 0 | 19 | 4 |
| Millican and Dinwiddie, hosiers | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Christ. Harkness, writer | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| The workmen of Jas. Affleck, shoemaker | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Mr. Fraser and Friend | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Jas. Shaw | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thos. Moffat | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| David Dickson, Maxwelltown | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Jas. Gibson, hosier | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Affleck, shoemaker | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend (T. D.) | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Bell, ironmonger | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Geo. Thomson, tailor | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Coupland, hairdresser | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Geo. Bell, Edinburgh and Leith Bank | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Balance collected at the door of the meeting receiving Mr. Bright, after paying all expenses | 5 | 9 | 0 |
| Peter Mundell | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Wm. Turner, shipowner, English-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |

Carlisle, Second Remittance.

| | | | |
|--|---|----|---|
| Working Men at Mr. J. Dixon's Flour Mill, Caldowgate (being second contribution from this establishment) | 2 | 4 | 3 |
| Mr. Proctor, brazier, English-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Edward Castle, druggist | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A few Friends of Mr. Thos. Stubbs, Bonnell's-lane | 1 | 0 | 6 |
| Joseph Clark, Warwick-bridge | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Taylor, Willow Holme Mill | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Ivedale, brewer | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| George Ralph, draper | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Gilkerson, spirit merchant | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Ross, draper | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Weir, iron merchant | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Joseph Hope and Sons, spirit merchants | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Mr. Balman, Grey Goat Inn | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Jackson, solicitor | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Operatives at Warwick Works, per E. Calvert | 5 | 12 | 3 |

Small subscriptions

| | | | |
|--|-----|----|---|
| Wm. Gemmell, 54, St. Vincent-street | 40 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend, per Alexander Couper | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| S. D. M'Dowall Stewart, 31, Buchanan-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William M'Kewen, Royal Exchange | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A Friend | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Smith, 119, Main-street, Bridgeton | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Charles Craik, 21, Renfield-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| John Douglas, 14, Bedford-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Barclay, 66, Argyle-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A. B. Mills, at Mr. Campbell's, 162, New City-rid. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Andrew Robertson, 38, Gallowgate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Arthur Connell and Co., 11, West Nile-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Dr. John Black, Charlotte-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Stephen Mitchell and Son, St. Andrew-square | 4 | 0 | 0 |
| James Hamilton, 101, Brunswick-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Gemmell, 115, Candleriggs | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Beaton, 114, Tron-gate | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Robert Goodwin, 40, George-street | 3 | 0 | 0 |
| Dr. Thomas Lightbody, Bridge-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Turner, Thruval-grove | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Russell, 23, South Portland-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| A Hard-working Man, with Five Children | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Dalziel, 62, Queen-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Stirling and Son, do. | 50 | 0 | 0 |
| George Smith and Sons, London-street | 30 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Wilson, of Auchincled, St. Vincent-place | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| William Falconer, Montrose-street | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Richard, Virginia-street | 3 | 3 | 0 |
| Peter B. Henderson, Queen-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Ovington, Warwick, and Co., do. | 10 | 10 | 0 |
| A. G. Hunter, 32, Buchanan-street | 5 | 10 | 0 |
| Alexander Coghill, 24, Rope-work-lane | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Benjamin Mackay, 33, Canon-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Ross, 64, South Wellington-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. and A. Dennistoun, George-square | 200 | 0 | 0 |
| J. and W. Cruin and Co., 4, Corbrane-street | 60 | 0 | 0 |
| Sam. R. and Thos. Brown, Queen-street | 50 | 0 | 0 |
| Alex. Graham, Miller-street | 50 | 0 | 0 |
| D. and J. Anderson, South Hanover-street | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| James Davidson, jun., South Frederick-street | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| James Couper, Royal Exchange-buildings | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Ker, West Nile-street | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Wilson and Co., 2, Candleriggs | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| William Blackwood, Candleriggs | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Ewing, Paul, and Co., Ingram-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| William Barr, 100, Queen-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Mackay, 123, Candleriggs | 4 | 4 | 0 |
| Edward MacCallum, 191, Albert-terrace | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Turner and MacLellan, 67, Argyle-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| W. C. Shaw, 64, Argyle-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William Hunter, 4, Royal Bank-place | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Peter MacLeod, 65, Buchanan-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William MacGeoch, 113, Argyle-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Armstrong, 33, Tron-gate | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Lemon, 18, Saltmarket | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| D. MacAde, 93, Argyle-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William Rankine, 89, Argyle-street | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| Andrew Allison, 46, Clyde-street, Anderston | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| H. and W. Drummond, 131, Argyle-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| John Jameson, Queen-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Watson, 16, St. Vincent-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| William White, 73, Queen-street | 4 | 0 | 0 |
| Lewis H. Middleton, 74, Buchanan-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Robertson and Sons, Queen-street | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| William Robertson, Edwin-place | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| W. P. Paton, Virginia-buildings | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| The Rev. G. Rose, Veteran Chapel | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Smith and Sharp, 75, Argyle-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Joseph Jameson, 52, Clyde-street, Anderston | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William Smith, 41, London-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |

Glasgow.

Glasgow—continued.

| | | | |
|---|-----|----|---|
| Dunlop, Wilson, and Co., St. Vincent-street | 200 | 0 | 0 |
| Buchanan, Hamilton, and Co., do. | 100 | 0 | 0 |
| Charles Tennant and Co., Cochran-street | 200 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Bartholomew, Ingram-street | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Findlay, Prince's-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Brown and Downes, Gallowgate | 4 | 4 | 0 |
| Robert Bryson, Wilson-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Kettle, Virginia-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Clark and Drummond, Queen-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| John Loudon, St. Vincent-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| John Bogie, Renfield-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| John Laurie and Co., Montrose-street | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| James Paterson and Co., Virginia-street | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| John Watt, 163, Ingram-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Macgregor and Sons, Old Wynd | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Dr. Wm. Young, Kirk-street, Calton | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. and P. Wilson, 40, Brunswick-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Galt, 193, Tron-gate | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Alexander Miller, Croy-place | 4 | 4 | 0 |
| Robert Smith, North Albion-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Crawford, Glassford-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Wm. McEwan, Sons, and Co., Tron-gate | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| John Mair, 82, do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Melvin, 117, Union-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Samuel Higginbotham, Queen-street | 200 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Stevenson and Sons, Virginia-street | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| John Whitehead, Ingram-street | 30 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Stewart, Buchanan-street | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| George Ord, Virginia-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Ingles and Wakefield, do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Alexander Fleck, do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Kelly and Co., do. | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Harper, M'Farlan, and Glens, do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Duncan Hunter, do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Two Friends | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Salmon, Wilson-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| John Strathern, 15, John-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Orr, 18, South Frederick-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| D. and T. Bain, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. L. M'Phun, St. Vincent-street | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| Edward Collins, 48, Virginia-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Laurie and Pauls, 89, Ingram-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| James M'Arthur, 82, Glassford-street | 4 | 0 | 0 |
| Crailsheim and Herrmann, 93, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Rankine, 93, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. and D. Black, 21, do. | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| James Biggart, Dalry, Ayrshire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| David Dreggorn, St. Enoch-square | 3 | 3 | 0 |
| Bell and Bain, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| James Paterson, Howard-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Bell, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend, St. Enoch-square | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Andrew Paton, Moodie's-court | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| David Black, 28, Gallowgate | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert M'Luckey, plasterer, Larga | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Robert Harvey, 48, Stockwell | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Nisbet, 144, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Campbell, 13, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Alex. Macdonald, 19, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Robt. Proudfoot, 73, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James MacLaren, 76, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| J. and D. Anderson, 88, do. | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| Thomas Anderson, 77, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Robert Kennedy, 59, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| David Graham, 8, Stockwell-place | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Peter Robin, 464, Gallowgate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Couper, 35, Virginia-street | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| Hall and Crawford, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Martin and Co., 104, do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| William M'Kean, 11, Miller-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A. McD. Houston, Garngad-hill | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| James Aitken, Hill-street, Gallowgate | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| Thomas Horland | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Farquhar and Co., Gallowgate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Steinhous | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Peter W. Clark, John-street | 3 | 3 | 0 |
| Thomas Steel, Green-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| John Hattrick | 0 | 4 | 6 |
| George Gunniss, 7, Monteith-row | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Robb, merchant, Milngavie, Stirlingshire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Templeton, 131, West Nile-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| E. Wilson, Long-row, Campbellton, Argylesh. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Kerr, South Frederick-street | 25 | 0 | 0 |
| Dr. William Easton, Green-street, Calton | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Robert Dalgligh, jun., North Exchange-court | 40 | 0 | 0 |
| W. R. W. Smith, 11, South Frederick-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Andrew Buchanan, Blairbeth, Rutherglen | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Hall, 28, Main-street, Anderston | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John and Robert Tennent, Wellpark | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Miller, 45, London-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Cairns, 37, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Mitchell, 31, King-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Archd. Livingstone, 24, St. Enoch-square | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William Murchie, Howard-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| David Tweedie, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Neil McKinnon, Hyde Park-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Malcolm McLellan, 32, Hill-street, Garngad-hill | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A. H. McLellan, 32, do. | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| Wm. Govan and Son, Buchanan-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Andrew MacLure, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Paton, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Wright, do. | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| Wm. Macdonald, do. | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| Andrew Skirving, do. | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| J. G. Crawford, do. | 1 | 3 | 0 |
| Matthew Gilmore, Glassford-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| George Turner, Ingram-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Clapperton, 58, Miller-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Alexander Nalmsmith, 5, St. Andrew-square | 6 | 5 | 0 |
| J. and J. Morrison, curriers, 51, Great Hamilton-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Samuel Blackwell, 244, Gallowgate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Cowan, 38, Kirk-street, Calton | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Miss M. Browning, 22, Great Hamilton-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Three Friends to the Cause | 0 | 3 | 0 |
| Wm. Johnston, 14, Great Hamilton-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Wm. Service, sen., 34, London-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Lewis and Charles Park, Buchanan-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| J. L. Lancaster, 10, Queen's crescent | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thomas Steel, farmer, Bank-end, Levenshaw | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Andrew Bowman, 44, South Portland-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James McLean, South Frederick-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Couper, Gamkirk Works, 8, Argyle-st. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Robb, at Robt. Knox's, St. Vincent-place | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Charles Walsh, 53, St. Vincent-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alex. Mitchell and Co., 127, Brunswick-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert French, 86, Tron-gate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Moncur, 17, Park-lane, Mile-end | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Kaye, 34, Candleriggs | 8 | 3 | 0 |
| Daniel McDonald, 18, Glassford-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Muir and Co., 38, Queen-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| H. Bateson, 8, St. James's-street, Paisley-rid. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Child, 182, Tron-gate | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Hugh Dunlop, 150, Tron-gate | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Corran, 41, Bridge-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Brown, 180, West Regent-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Fleming, Watson, and Nairn, 32, Ingram-st. | 15 | 15 | 0 |
| James Marshall, Rothsay, Buteshire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Finlay, 78, Hutcheson-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| John Spiers, 90, Argyle-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| M. Adam, 46, Buchanan-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| E. Adam, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| George Ingleton, St. Vincent-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Wm. Freckleton, 185, Tron-gate | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| A. Campbell, 21, Argyle-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Henry Taylor Tertius, 4, Alston-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Peter Sinclair, baker, Maybole, Ayrshire | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George Crawford, West George-street | 3 | 3 | 0 |

Glasgow—continued.

| | | | |
|--|----|----|---|
| Matthew Blackwood, Arthurle, 55, Ingram-st. | 51 | 0 | 0 |
| W. Gilbert, of Liverpool | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Thallon, Gallowgate | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| Alex. Matheson, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Robt. Thom, 235, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Craig, 5, Duke-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| George Mackinlay, 217, Gallowgate | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A Friend | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| David Turner, 217, Gallowgate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A Friend to the League | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Ditto | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Ditto | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Robert Miller, 215, Gallowgate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Workers with George Anderson and Co. | 2 | 1 | 6 |
| Geo. Anderson and Co., Hill-st., Gallowgate | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| John Brown, West Bay, Helensburgh | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Hugh Kennedy, 52, Ingram-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Ross, 119, George-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thos. M'Clucky, Lennoxtown, Campsie | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thos. M'Math, 18, Norfolk-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Rev. James McTear, Argyle-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Marshall, 44, Kirk-street, Calton | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thos. Binnie, Pratt's-court | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Robt. Buchanan, 71, Argyle-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Michael Thomas, Chronicle Office | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Entwistle, Turner's-court | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| Wm. Hunter, 77, Argyle-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Hemple and Co., Turner's-court | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| Robt. King Service, 84, London-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Service, jun., 84, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Poynter, Low Green-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| W. and J. Fleming and Co., Stirling-square | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| Peter Smith and Son, Blackfriars-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Andrew Oswald, Stirling-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| David McMichael and Co., Stirling-square | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| J.H.R. Callender, 14, do | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Geo. Callender, 14, do | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Hedderwick and Co., Stirling-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Finlay and Neilson, Mitchell-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thos. Watson, Regent-terrace | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| H. L. Schwabe, Buchanan-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| Robt. Towers, Glassford-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| A. and J. Duncan, St. Vincent-place | 5 | 5 | 0 |
| William Steel, jun., South Hanover-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A. and D. J. Bannatyne, Gordon-street | 21 | 0 | 0 |
| Andw. Mitchell, Miller-street | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| Jas. Mitchell, do. | 10 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. McLaren, Sons, and Co., Candleriggs | 10 | 10 | 0 |
| Wm. and James Murray, Maxwell-street | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| J. and A. Anderson, Candleriggs | 40 | 0 | 0 |
| John Young, jun., Ingram-street | 21 | 0 | 0 |
| "From Carlisle, for the League," per R. Kettle | 0 | 6 | 6 |
| James Pollock, Queen Arcade | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Wm. Campbell, 89, West Nile-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Craig, 164, Argyle-street | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| A. Cree, 77, Buchanan-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thomson Aikman, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Geo. Brown (at Johnston, Galbraith, and Co.'s) | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Ure (at Inglis and Wakefield's) | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| John Brown, jun., 75, Virginia-street | 5 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Kadie (at J. and W. Wright's), Virginia-bdgs. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A. M'Kerracher, Virginia-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Andrew Gow, 35, Miller-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William Martin, 37, Gallowgate | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James More and Co., East Nile-street | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| C. and R. White, Gallowgate | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| R. Aitken, do | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Thomas Hamilton, do. | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| A Friend | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| J. Thornburn | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William Steel | 0 | 3 | 6 |
| James Macfarlane, Gallowgate | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Wm. Miller, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Mason, do. | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| James Parker, 117, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| K. and M. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Allan, East Nile-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Robert Allan and Sons, 109, Eglinton-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Anderson, 79, do. | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Alexander Barron, 61, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Cuthbertson, 12, Buchanan-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Gibson, Service, and Co., Virginia-place | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Duncan Morrison, Glassford-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Hugh M'Coll, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Daniel Stark, Tontine buildings | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| John Allan, Garthland-street | 2 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Hannah, Gordon-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| J. H. Kippes and Co., Chronicle Office | 4 | 0 | 0 |
| M. Hamilton and Co., 85, Candleriggs | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Archibald Riggs, 59, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William Cochran, 65, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| John Gould, 117, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Andrew Baird, 1, Ingram-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| A Friend | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| P. M'Laren, 95, Candlerig | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| James Graham, Montrose-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Thomas Paterson, 1, Ingram-street | 4 | 4 | 0 |
| James Muter, 55, Aboltsford-place | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Wm. Clark, 120, Brunswick-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| And. Miller and Co., 109, Candleriggs | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas White, 120, Brunswick-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Wm. Brown and Son, 120, do. | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| John Anderson, 1, Ingram-street | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Alexander White, 95, Candleriggs | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| David Sutherland, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Neil Murphy, 53, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| J. and F. Bell, 49, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| James M'Grigor, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| David M'Keigh, 11, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| W. Fulton, 91, do. | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Thomas Grant, 81, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| Hugh Morton, 105, do. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Macfarlane, 13, Miller-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| William Yule, 40, do. | 3 | 3 | 0 |
| David Yule, 40, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| William Pollock Yule, 40, do. | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Francis Orr and Son, Brunswick-street | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| P. S. | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| A. H. Young, 54, St. George's-place | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Thomas Macfarlane, 115, Hope-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| J. Panton, 98, West George-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| John Cairns, Wilson-street | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Hugh Macfarlane, 45, Stockwell | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| James Anderson, 62, Queen-street | 1 | 0 | 0 |
| Archibald Brown and Co., 102, Virginia-place | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| Alexander M'Grigor, George-square | 20 | 0 | 0 |
| Thomas Blahop, 6, Clyde-place | 0 | 10 | 6 |
| Alexander M'Arthur, 12, Bridge-street | 0 | 5 | 0 |
| George Caldwell, 38, Eglintown-street | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| John Torbet, 15, Nelson-street, Tradeston | 0 | 10 | 0 |
| Alexander Dobbie, 20, Clyde-place | 0 | 2 | 6 |
