porty in our natural powers? Have we property in the work of our bands? If so, how happens it that articles, the fruit of my tolls, which I may consume directly or destroy at my pleasure, I cannot carry to any market in the world to exchange for articles which suit better my convenience? Because, it is said, this would injure national industry. But in what way? a hundred or a thousand exchanges of this kind could not injure national industry, for every article of foreign produce which I import, implies an article of national produce which I export. I know that commerce does not consist in the immediate barter between the direct producer and the direct consumer; but all this vast mechanism which we call commerceships, bankers, merchants, shopkeepers, accounts-can these alter the very essence of commerce, which is but the barter of one product of labour for another? Look close, and you will be convinced that they have no other destination, and no other result, than to facilitate and to multiply exchanges.

"Thus, if we have not the popular lever possessed by the English League, we do not require it. We want not to raise democratic passions until they become menneing. We attack not the interests of a body of hereditary legislators; all that we have to combat is an error, a false notion, a prejudice pro-foundly rooted in the mind, and which produces in its growth the poisoned fruit of monopoly. We do not attack any special or particular re-striction. As the labourer does not pluck up one by one the rushes which infest his fields, but drains off the injurious moisture which supports them, so we attack in the mind those principles of protection which are the aliment of monopolies. The task, no doubt, is immense, but do we not find powerful auxiliaries in the events which are taking place around Are not the United States about to emancipate their imports? Who has not read the message of Mr. Pre sident Polk, and the admi-rable report of Mr. Secretary The Zollverein suspends the meetings held for raising its tariffs. And what shall I say of the great measure of Sir Robert Peel, resulting from such re-iterated and decisive experi-And here let me exence? press the profound regret which the friends of commercial freedom have felt ut finding in its details defcots and faults adverse to the general spirit of its imposing plan. How is it that the great man who aspires to the glory of this reform has been unwilling that the world, and England in particular, should Why are wines an exception, as if to show that at the moment he rejected the decaption of reciprocity, he wished to retain some of its fragments?

" England, the United States, Germany, Italy itself, advance towards the new erawhich is opening for human-ity. Shall France be content for selfish interests to remain behind other nations.

"Let us proclaim the principle of liberty, and leave time to develop the results. Let us demand reform, and leave to monopolists the care of moderating it. Chere are persons who shun this asso-diation because they fear immediate freedom. Let them be tranquil: We are not legislessis; reform depends not on our votes; intallistage vill not spread immedials, privilegs vill lays something to take the ne so fera pas instantané-ment et le privilège a tont le temps de prendre ses me-Oe mouvement sore memo un avertissement pour lui, et l'on doit le considerer comme un des moyens tant cherchés de transition.

"Je ne puis me défendre d'une profonde auxièté quand je penso à ce qui va se déci-der bientôt dans cette enceinte. Ce n'est pas seulement l'affranchissement du commerce qui est en question. Il s'agit de savoir si nous entrerons, enfin, dans les mours constitutionnelles. Il s'agit de savoir si nous savous mettre en œuvre des institutions acquises au prix de tant d'efforts et de tant de sacrifices. Il s'agit de savoir si les Français, comme on les en accuse, trouvant trop longue la route de la légalité et de la propagande, ne savent poursulvre que par des moyens violents des réformes épliémères, Il s'agit de savoir s'il y a encore parmi nous du dévoûment, de l'esprit public, de la vie, ou si nous sommes une société assonple, indifférente, léthargique, incapable d'une action suivie, et tout au plus animée encore par quelques rares et vaines convulsions. La France a les yeux sur vous, elle vous interroge, et bientôt notro konorable président prochmera votre répouse!

most desirable means of transittop.

"I cannot escape from deep anxiety when I reflect on what is to be decided in this assembly. It is not merely freedom of trade which is in question. We are discussing whether we shall at length adopt constitutional habits—whether we shall give effect to the institutions acquired by such great efforts and mighty saorifices-whethor the Fronch, as they are accused of doing finding the path of legality and persuasion too long, seek only ephemeral reforms by violent means — whether there is still among us devotion, public spirit, energy, or whether we are a drowsy indifferent, lethargic society. incapable of continuous ac tion, and only to be unimated by rare and vain convulsions. France has its eyes on you, it interrogates you; and our honourable president will soon proclaim your reply."

SPANISH IDEAS OF FREE TRADE.

(From the Madrid Eco del Comercio.) The English League which commenced in the year 1839 with three individuals, proclaiming the freedom of trade, has gathered spolia opima. It is now generalised, and in complete and harmonious organisation throughout the United Kingdom, with funds at its command which maintain innumerable halls, public schools, and travelling orators who teach the true doctrines of political economy. The influence of these societies, and of the instruction which they have scattered, has penetrated to the very core of the English Government. Thus is explained the fact, that not only are the Reformers (Progresistas) its supporters, but the Minister, Peel, with his Tory" Cabinet (of which no less a personage than the Duke of Wellington is a member)-or, what amounts to the same thing, those who a short time ago were the causes of commercial prohibition or restriction, are at present those who defend in Parliament and the press that freedom which we desire, but which our Government despises and disregards, without considering that the march of enlightenment and the spirit of the age develop, more quickly than it would wish, the humane doctrine which teaches mankind to create wealth, to distribute it, to circulate it properly, and to consume it by means of internal and external freedom of trade.

The Custom-house Union or Confederation of the north assembles in order to correspond with the Convocation of the English Cabinet, or rather with the opinion of the English nation. France is disposed to discuss spontaneously this most seriously important affair. At Bordeaux there has just been formed an association of capitalists, commercial men, and celebrated writers on politics and political economy, presided over by the mayor of the city, who is appointed by the Crown, and having for the result of its first meeting, or at the very moment of its establishment, a subscription exceeding 50,000f., for the purpose of carrying on the preliminary labours. But let us examine, before going any further, the speech delivered by the mayor from his presidential chair, he having spoken the first, in order to make known the objects of the association.

In the most effective terms that the completion of his liberal conviction produced, he declared, that "he had accepted the presidency in order to record the sufferings of France, so long undervalued, the petitions which always remained without having any influence with the Government, the unknown general rights which resulted in no other reception than a cold disdain." Thus did this functionary declare himself, whose elevated position and nobleness of character gave to his words, at once firm and serious, a characteristic sanction, which produced the most lively sensation in the assembly. So says the the Indicateur, the Progresista journal of that commercial district.

Well, then, is not this question, which so much affects our position and our finance—which is so much discussed in this unfortunate nation, and which has so often occupied our own attention and that of the Guia del Comercio—is not this question, we ask, worthy of being brought upon the theatre of discussion? Will it not move the trade of Madrid, the capitalisis that exist in the court, and the numerous pro-prietors who hold immense tracts of uncultivated land, and who live on the Breasury and the rents of the Royal patri-mony, because their own are not sufficient to maintain them with decency, for want of production and consumption? Are these blind courtiers—these elections palading of monopolice and privileges—perchance ignorant of the fact that freedom of trade would in a short time produce them infinite riches and more means of luxury and oscentation than many wellmai more means of luxury and ostentation than many would known princes and monarche are able to raise? Know they not all the came time, that by constituting their, own hap all the control of their families, they would suggest the same time of their families, they would suggest the same time of the covernment largest many in the covernment largest many in the covernment largest many in the covernment largest many and the covernment largest many in the covernment largest many in the covernment largest many to the covernment largest many than the covernment coived systems, and to the ovil example of creating a set of idlars in order that half the Spanish people may be armed, and may be continually opproming and prying into the affairs of the other half, who vainly labour to maintain themselves and the former?

And will the Government of the country, which, one ought to suppose, is on the qui rive and dive to what is going on—which, one ought to believe, measures circumstances and events—which is acquainted with history—which is informed of facts—which has studied systems will this Government remain, as hitherto, paralysed, acting as if it does not perceive what has taken place in the United States of America, in Holland, in the Hanseatic Towns, and in all the nations and countries that have prospered by Free Trade? Will it choose to live, as hitherto, fenced in by its prohibitions, restrictions, limitations and monopolies, in everything resembling those barbarous lovernments, which make a monopoly of everything except the air they breathe, and turning its back upon the European enlightenment which pours down like a torrent upon the nation, and infiltrates of necessity the minds and conviction of all those who are able to read and make a right use of their reasoning powers? We shall see. Our cheeks glow with shame when we reflect that all are preceding us in the path of reform and perfection, and that the Spanish nation, after having been the first to receive the baptism of calightenment -after having known before all the influence that is possessed by entire freedom of trade in cherishing the general wealth, whose branches constitute agricultural, industrial, and commercial produce—after so many sacrifices have been made for the idea of harmonising the necessary reforms with the firm fixing of the crown upon the brow of Isabel 11.—it is sad, very sad and afflicting to think that we remain distaneed, and are the constant sport of the ambitious designs of foreigners, of those same kings who, in our days, grovelled in the dust, and who were rescued from their misfortunes and persecutions by those who now write these lines, and those who like us made heroic sacrifices and shed rivers of blood, in order that they may now abuse us, bind us hand and foot, and hinder us from being happy and independent. Ah! we cannot forget how the Journal des Débuts (the reputed organ of Louis Phillippo) would have insulted us (General Narvacz and MM, Mon and Martinez de la Rosa being in the Cabinet) with the disgusting, filthy, and repugnant words we are about to quote, and which it published with impunity;—"In Spain" (said the ribald writer) "there is nothing established but robbery." Shame! shame! a thousand times shame upon those who then ruled us!

We shall return to this all-important question, and prove that immediately an attempt is made to traverse Spain by internal communications for the conveyance of produce and goods from one extreme of one sea to that of another, Spain ill be the richest inition of the world by adopting absolute

The Courrier de Marseilles has the following remarks on the restrictions on French commerce :--

"The principles of commercial liberty have at last out-stepped the limits of theory, and entered into practical existence; confined till now within scientific bounds, to day they occupy the first place in political debates. Commercial liberty! This cry, uttered in a corner of England, was Commercial caught up from mouth to mouth, and the universal should resounded in the councils of the crown; a great statesman chose it as the motto of a new system of policy, under which are ranked the better part of the British Parliament.

6 England reduces her tariffs, lessens her entrance duties, and suppresses them almost entirely on raw materials. Is not the position evident at first sight, which this state of things will assign to British commerce over all the markets of the world, when it meets concurrence from the commerce of other nations? English commerce, by combining the prices of buying and selling, need not let any customs duties enter into its calculations; French commerce will have to calculate 10, 15, 25, and even 50 per cent, on merchandiso entering France; the former, therefore, can bid higher prices than the latter, and, therefore, command the market, choose the best quality and those best adapted to their wants, and thus maintain and increase their supremacy

"This motive is enough of itself to force all the nations of the globe to walk in the path that England has marked

Our tariffs pretend to favour our mercantile navy, and their first step is to prohibit foreign bottoms; they thus refuse the principal element of success to all commercial enterprise, cheap materials. Not content with obliging the owners to build their own vessels in France, the duty on the different articles necessary to their equipment, such as ropes, chains, anchors, &c., is so beavy that it almost amounts to a prohibition; and they do not stop here, for they impose a heavy duty on the muterials of which these articles are nemp, conton, iron, Drass, &c. our tariffs tie down our mercantile navy in the very cradle; but, if in spite of them, it yet breathes a little, and, with hands and feet tiad, still exists, our laws say—weigh anchor and we will protect you. And then those boasted protections in favour of the mercantile navy appear, consisting in taxes so heavy, that they most completely hinder a vessel leaving a French port unless she is certain of a return cargo; and if the voyage does not answer the expectations of the owner, his vessel lies idle, paralysed by the competition of foreign vessels, until the chances of commerce procure him a modest freight to enable him to stear homewards.

This is all that can be derived in the way of benefit from the navigation taxes. And of this profit, who pays the ex-penses? It is French industry, as they are obliged by law to import the raw materials in French vessels, paying double freight to what a foreign vessel would ask, or even a French vessel, if she was not iled down from her very birth by our tariffs, which alone are the cause of her inferior station. And what is the result? That the produce of our manufactories is dearer, and the consumption restricted both at home and abroad, that less materials are in requisition, and navigation lage; and thus protection proves a bar to our activity. "Is it not the same in the whole system of Remeli indicator? Would our woollen tissues require protection duties if the raw materials were not cut to the very consist anomals."

duties?

"The same may be said as regards our district."

"It is thus that the protection laws, desired by an other, are nextons to the interests they are and tand to relaid industry, and the protection of the protection." country
The Countries Argencies pleasees, that their Government, if they granted liberty of commerce to their subjects, that they would guarantee in return the disappearance of every motive of trouble and disturbance, and et they would establish a golden age and a reign of peace. Those political economists were regarded as Utopians, but events are now beginning to demonstrate that they were right. War retreats in face of commercial liberty. We have this day received accounts from America, in which political economists will find an admirable confirmation of the excellence of their principles, and in which they will see the au-nouncement of a signal victory which the application of those principles is on the point of giving to the cause of peace. The announcement in America of that great measure which put an end to the old system of political economy in England, and inaucorated in the world the era of commercial liberty, caused a real revolution in public opinion both at Washing ton and at New York. Warlike ideas were immediately laid aside, even by the most ardent adversaries of England. The Lugarge of the press, previously so menacing, became com-pletely pueille. The affair of the Oregon may consequently be considered, if not arranged, at least in a fair course of settlement. That, we repeat, is a victory of which the friends of commercial liberty may justly be proud. For our part, we find in those great events which have arisen on our Continent an additional reason to rejoice at this victory gained in America by commercial liberty.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

THE PREE-TRADE MIRROR OF PARLIAMENT FOR THE Ninth Week, ending Saturday, March 21.

The conduct of the protectionists is as little to be calculated on as the results of a protective law. After behaving, last week, with something like a show of deference to public opinion, they commenced, on Friday last, a new course of obstruction, which has had the effect of delaying the whole public business of the country. If the section "under the gangway" were composed of men having weight, character, and influence, it would be as indecorous as absurd to complain of pertinacions opposition. This is one of the "prerogatives" of a representative assembly; and it is frequently one of the last resorts, when liberty is struggling with despotism. But to justify an unavailing pertinacious opposition, certain important elements are requisite. There must be MIND and CHARACTER; reason must be able to point to a future, when its influence will predominate over mere numhers; and PAITH must assert its power, declaring that though now the car of a political Juggernaut may pass over the bodies of its victims, a time is coming when the idol shall "bite the dust," and the car supply materials for its

Nothing of this sort animates the opposition of the protectionists. Go where you will—at No. 17, Old Bond-street, or the Carlton Club, in the lobbies of the house—the language is, if protection be removed now, it is removed for ever. This, as Mr. Cobden told them, indicates in the protectionists a and lack of faith in their principles. If, like the Free Traders, they had faith, even as a grain of mustard seed, they would submit to the passing of the present measures, in the confident hope that truth and reason will/produce their natural reaction. But they have no such faith—no such hope. Their characters and their arguments have a common sympathy, and a natural relation.

For, after all, who are the leaders of the opposition to the measures of the Government? Lord George Bentinck is the only conspicuous member, connected with the aristocracy, who resists pertinaciously. Yet the public character of Lord George Bentinck, correct and respectable as it is, has nothing about it to conciliate public regard. He is favourably estimated in clubs and coteries; and he is admitted to have done something towards purifying the turf from associntions as disreputable as unprofitable. All men who keep betting books owe a debt of gratitude to the noble lord, who has sedulously laboured for years to elevate gambling into scientific process. And though, after eighteen years of sitence in Parliament, he has only now found his tongue, it only confirms the popular opinion that no man, at any period of his life, need despair of becoming noticed and noticeable. Lord George Bentinck is, in fact, a living type of ction; the great principle of which is, obtain adventhions advantages by any means you can, and assert your right to 80s, or to 5%s, by law, as sturdily as you urge the necessity of honourably acquitting obligations at Tat-

Who else of the aristocracy take a lead in opposition? Mr. Miles, wealthy as he is, respectable as he is, belongs not to the aristocracy. He is an off shoot of the commercial interest, more especially connected with the West India trade, when has sanctioned a free importation of blacks from the coast of Africa, and rendered traffic in bodies and souls, blood and tears, a legitimate source of commercial profit. Mr. Miles is not himself a bad man—by no means; he is kingly, worthy, and respectable. Yet he occupies a leading position as one of the "roodometers" of the House of Commons; he begrudges the free admission of Indian corn, lest it should lower rents, and give the people too many puddings. Then again we have Mr. Stafford O'Brien, a really live Lung man. There are a number of "O'Briens" really slove Jeing man. There are a number of "O'Briens"

130 of Commons, all more or less related; and spirit of western or southern Irish feeling to some king of the "O'Brien" tribe, who the bogs with bare legs. This foolish adto seent " is one of the absurdities of aristoat by Popo, laughed at in painting by Hoincouled by every man of common sense. Yet an important element in character—all other elements wing present. Of Mr. Stafford O'Brien, we can only say that he is a clever, smart young man, very gentlemanly in his manner, and very intelligent in his mode of expression, but all of whose speechus betray a latent con viction that, so far as protection is concerned, he feels himself on the wrong side of the box!

Who else have we on the side of protection? The great Mr. Peter Borthwick; the elever Mr. Benjamin D'Israeli; the amusing Colonel Sibthorp; and lastly, the droll Sir John Tyrrell? Nay, we have Mr. Bankes, who can perform the feat of speaking for two hours, without saying anything. Who else? Lord John Manners, whose "dream of life" is the abolition of the laws of mortmain, the change of monasteries for manufactories, the revival of the "Book of Sports," and the substitution of cricket for composure on Sundays. And, not to speak of Mr. Newdegate or the Marquis of Granby-darkling scintillations of protectionist light-we have Mr. Spooner, whose somniferous face is the brightest reflection of his colleague's beard, and whose incessant advocacy, in public and in private, of the currency crotchet, proves that the biggest bore in England may be made of "Brummagem" bra-s

Mr. Spooner was the lion of Friday night week. The resolutions which had passed through committee had to be reported-a process which, on ordinary occasions, is but the work of a few minutes. The chairman of committees appears at the bar; he reports that certain resolutions have been passed in committee, which he has been ordered to report to the house; and then the clerk at the table reads the resolutions seriatim, which are usually affirmed, without a word of remark. But the protectionists have taken the somewhat unusual course of objecting to the report of almost every resolution. Mr. Spooner led the way on Friday night week. His object, however, was merely to make that currency crotchet speech, which the house, on a former occasion, had unceremoniously "burked." Mr. Spooner is one of those men to whom Shakspeare's phrase of "most forcible feeble' strictly applies. Ilis manner is intensely energetic and redundant; his matter the most unimpressive and inconsequential that can be conceived. Mr. Muntz, his colleague, always receives far better attention in the house. Part of this is owing to his long beard, and his eccentric manner: but the greater part to a sort of sturdy honesty which seems to tower over even a gross deficiency in logic. The discussion on Friday night turned on "bronze," "buttons," "cheese," and "manufactured cottons;" and in the repeated divisions the Government were steadily supported by large majorities.

Before the business was commenced on Friday night, Sir James Graham obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide, temporarily, against the fever, a consequence of famine, now breaking out in Ireland.

So little progress having been made on Frinay night, the second reading of the Corn Bill was postponed, and ultimately fixed for Monday next, in order to allow the tariff to be proceeded with. The best way of exhibiting the nature of the opposition will be a selection of the "points" which have been raised during the debate.

On Monday night, Lord George Bentinck, with a somewhat sareastic view, inquired if the Government could reduce to any great extent the Custom House establishment, as a consequence of the reduction of duties. Sir R. Peel made an important reply:

"I hold in my hand (said he) an account, applicable to some of the principal ports of the empire, of the number of ships with cargoes from abroad arriving and entered. I am so desirous of affording every information, that I should rather wish to move for an account, applicable to all our ports, of the number of ships arrived and cargoes entered in different years; but at present I must content myself with the result in a few of the ports; and I will state what has taken place contemporaneously with repeal and reduction of customs' duties. The comparison is between the years 1842 and 1845, and it will be seen, that, both in the number of ships and the entries, there has been a considerable increase in the following six ports of the empire:

Ports.	Yoars.	Ships with Cargoes from Foreign Ports.	Number of outries.
London	1842	0370	484,000
	1845	7521	567,000
Liverpool	1812	3283	188,000
	1845	3900	220,000
Newcastle }	1842 1845	612	22,000 30,000
Dublin}	1842	961	21,700
	1845	307	30,219
Dundee }	1849	319	7,700
	1846	415	0,000
Olasgow	1848	280 418	22,000 30,700

My noble friend will see, therefore, that there has been an immense increase in the foreign trade of the country (loud cheers); that a much larger number of ships have arrived, and that there has been a vast addition to the entries. That circumstance alone, as I remarked, would prevent any decrease in the establishment of the custom house, because the greater the number of vessels the greater must necessarily be the superintendance. Therefore, though we may not have the same advantage in the customs as in the excise, there has, in fact, been a corresponding advantage of a more important description" (much cheering).

Mr. Plumptre raised a debate on the reduction of the duty on hops, which terminated in the following manner:

The next important item on which a debate of consequence arose was that of Silk. Mr. Bankes, the Dorset-shire Tory, and Mr. Brocklehurst, the Macclesfield Whigs combined on this occasion. There were, of course, a low jokes—such as they were. Mr. Wynn Ellis texed Mr. Brocklehurst with smuggling; Mr. Brocklehurst were the smuggling; Mr. Brocklehurst were the smuggling; Mr. Brocklehurst with smuggling; Mr. Brocklehurst were the smuggling; Mr. Brocklehurst were the smuggling; Mr. Brocklehurst were the smuggling; Mr. Brocklehurst were the smuggling in the smuggling in the smuggling is the smuggling in the smuggling in the smuggling in the smuggling in the smuggling in the smuggling in the smuggling in the smuggling in the smuggling in the smuggling in the smuggling in the smuggling in the smuggling in the smuggling in the smuggling in the smuggling in the smuggling that he was unable to convert a shoemaker into a million. Mr. Newdegate, in his usual somniferous tone, declared the if anything could rouse him it would be the wrongs of the silk weavers. These are the principal faceties. But the facts speak for themselves. In the following years these were the quantities of raw, waste, and thrown silk imported into the United Kingdom, in lbs.:

			We	ato Knu	bø.
1821 1822 1823	::	Raw. 1,864,513 1,993,764 2,051,895	an	d Hunk 105,047 64,921 62,302		Thrown 860,248 882,278 363,864	•	Total. 9,399,400 2,441,563 2,468,181
tt

The duty then being on raw silk, not the production of the British territories in the East Indies, 5s. 6d. per lb.; want silk, 4s. per lb.; thrown silk, not dyed, 14s. 8d.; thrown silk, dyed, 2l. 5s. 6d. But in the years, 1842, 1843, 1844, when the duty was reduced as follows:—On raw silk, 1 1 20; waste silk from foreign countries, 1s. 3-5d.; thrown silk, not dyed, ditto, 1s. 3-5d.; thrown silk, dyed, ditto, 2s. 1 1-5d.—the quantities stand as follow:

Raw. 1842 3,936,714 1843 3,649,747 1844 4,021,808	and Husks. Thrown. Total 1,494,693 figures that the protectionists and

Wagte Knuba

It was upon these figures that the protectionists endravoured to show that the silk trade had been injured sinthe modification of the duties. But, further, we not only now export large quantities of silks, but it is important to mark the countries to which we export them. France will be found, for a large amount, amongst the number. Although it be true that we import manufactured silks largely and progressively, yet this cannot thrust aside the evidence derived from the almost incredible increase in the quantity of ne silk imported. The truth is, that the imports consist chiefly of fancy goods from France or India, which have some pecaliar quality of taste or design to recommend them, and ever of these a large proportion (especially of Indian bandans after being printed in this country) is re-exported. These facts may be left to speak for themselves.

The only important speakers on the question of silk, were Sir George Clerk and Sir Robert Peel. Sir George Clerk, in answer to Mr. Bankes and Mr. Brocklehurst, pointed out that the silk weavers have from time to time been distressed; but is this true only of silk weavers? In 1812, in 1816, under the protective system, were not their sufferings tenfold greater than at present? Mr. Bankes had made a most unfair comparison between the rate of wages now and formerly; because silk weavers are paid by the piece, and beyoud all doubt the labour required to produce a yard of silk now is trifling in comparison to what it used to be, when the weavers employed the same description of loom as had been in use amongst the French refugees-therefore you must not measure the wages of the operative by this standard. Sir G. Clerk found, by the report of the factory commissioners for 1843, that there were loud complaints of the millowners for want of hands. When labour, then, was in such request, could it be ill-remunerated? Mr. Powell again states that a sufficient number of workmen cannot be found to do the necessary work.

Sir Robert Peel enforced similar views; and he was followed by that rather extraordinary person, Mr. D'Isneli, whose reputation is certainly not advanced by dabbling in statistics. Perhaps the most powerful answer which could be made to the speech of Mr. D'Israeli, is the following extract from the conclusion of that speech, followed as it is by the results of the division:

"The manufacturers had made no complaint—had fould no fault with the measures of the Minister, for the very same reason that honourable gentlemen opposite were equally indulgent. They wanted the bill for the repeal of the Com Laws to pass (loud cries of "hear, hear"). He trusted, however, that the manufacturers of England, and honourable gentlemen opposite, would show to the right honourable becomet that there was yet some sympathy with the working classes of this country, and that economical blunders would not pass without criticisms when there was not some great object to prevent persons from being critical (laughter and others)."

DOL

her for con

int

gai

of (

Jori

一百五五

Majority against the amendment .. -100 On Tuesday night the protracted proceedings were resumed—not, however, without an ebullition from Mr. Sulford O'Brien, unworthy of his intellect and of his position. It so happened, that on Tuesday, Sir Robert Peel was not in the house by 20 minutes to six, although five o'clock is his usual hour. Mr. Stafford O'Brien got up, and with an air which is certainly not common with him, complained that the Government were not introducing their "other metsures, which were to "accompany" the repeal of the Cors Law. It would seem that the honourable member for North amptonehire wishes Sir Robert Peel to introduce the bills for the relief of the agricultural interest which are to accompany the Corn Bill, before the house is called upon to dacide upon the great measure. He is in doubt, forecoth, as to the lattude which is to be allowed to the word "accompany." So then, the commerce of Great Britain is to be kept in party This special pleading appears worthy of an old half berister of a very low stamp. rather than House of Commons. Surely the Covernment nounced, and the majority have over themselves to accept, their solicins in the Mr. Stafford () Brisn sommains that only speed meaning hear hear solicins and (blind sections).

needless embarrassment in the progress of the first through the house. It is physically impossible for the Premier to proceed with three measures at once, unless, like Cerberus, he had three heads. It is a pity that so olevers man as Mr. Stafford O'Brien should be degraded to a service like this. If Mr. Peter Borthwick had the pluck, it would better suit his position.

The first of the petty divisions of Tuesday night took place on the article of French brandy. We have always watched with deep anxiety the reduction of the duties on articles of French produce, as it is our firm conviction that there are few national objects of such deep importance as binding the two countries together by the ties of mutual interest. The insensible and gradual extension of commercial intercourse between the two countries is of more value than all the parchment treaties that have ever been signed by the diplomatic agents of France and Great Britain respectively. Connect Lyons and Manchester, Bordeaux and Liverpool. Marseilles and Bristol, by the indissoluble chain of " the ledger," and war-parties and jealousies will be heard of no more, or only heard of to be laughed back into oblivion-Mr. Cardwell gave the statistics to the house of our export trade to France. They run:

The extension of such a trade as this, and its beneficial effect on both countries, is not a mere financial move; it is a political measure of the deepest importance. It means such a union of the two mightiest nations in the world as will enable them to dictate peace, civilisation, and good order to the rest of mankind. The ministerial measure was carried by 61 to 35.

The rest of the ministerial measures might have been ex preted to pass without opposition. But, no! on foreign cattle Mr. William Miles, as a matter of course, stood up to oppose the remission of the 11. duty. Colonel Sibthorp seconded the amendment, and took the opportunity of bringing the question of his jocose proposition to Sir Robert Peel to send Mr. Gladstone down to Lincoln to contest the city against him (Colonel Sibthorp) under the notice of the house, as immediately bearing on the topic under discussion. Sir R. Peel rose to demonstrate the fallacy of all these apprehensions of an inundation of foreign cattle. The right honourable baronet recalled to the recollection of the house tho predictions that had been hazarded on the subject of salt pork, when it was calculated, at the time of the tariff of 1812, that 100 sows in the Mississippi provinces would produce, in the course of a given number of years, 282,000,000 of pigs. Now, in the teeth of this it was found that the contract price of salt-pork per tierce of 320 lbs., which, in 1843, was 8/. 15s, 10d., was in the present year 6l. 12s. 11d. Was it not probable, looking at the result of the last three years, that a continuance and increase of the prosperity of the country would increase the demand, and therefore the price of meat? Considering, moreover, the advantages which the agriculturists would have in the increased facilities for fattening cattle, he felt bound to adhere to his original proposition. A solemn charge was made by Sir John Tyrrell against the Premier, proceeding by implication, perhaps, but still a charge; it was to the effect, that Sir Robert had been the cause of the disease which had affected the cattle of Great Britain for the last three years.

Mr. Peter Allix, one of the members for Cambridgeshire, made a most vigorous defence of the duty on clover seed. The measures of the Government, according to him, were to sholish the 50l. electors, to banish the rural gentry from their paternal mansions, and to extinguish the sun of England. It was impossible to witness a respectable-looking gentleman like Mr. Allix making such a speech, without a touch of sympathy for the idle fear, and a consideration for the stupid apprehension. Of all classes of men, country gentlemen are perhaps the most imbecile; and we have to humour some of them, just as a mother does a sick child who has the measles, or the scarlet fever. Yet in all these, discussions, it is impossible not to feel that there is a certain class of members in the house, who, when they come forward, affect us with feelings precisely similar to those with which we see a mummy neatly unrolled by Mr. Pettigrew, before the Asiatic Society. They are things of a hygone day, crustaccous formations of a preliminary era; they have nothing to do with the present, most assuredly will never be heard of in the future—they belong to the past. Of this class are Mr. Buck, Sir Charles Knightley, and some few others. Sir Charles Knightley, the representative of an ancient family, came forward on Tuesday night to inform the house that an iron steam-boat company was in process of formation, to establish a cattle traffic between London and St. Petersburg. St. Petersburg and Moscow were to be connected by a railway-branches of course were to be run into Central Asia, and the sheep and cows from the steppes and the wall of China, were to be conveyed bleating, lowing, and recalcitrating, to our markets, to the utter confusion of the British farmer.

All the talk on ruin proved useless—the division on foreign cattle was for Government-111, against 72; malority 80.

Tanned hides were the next article upon which it was thought advisable to divide the bonse. Mr. Lawson, the tanned hides, had been dismissed from their employment They had all and several attained an advanced period of life far beyond the usual span which is allotted to mortals; indeed, when they had reached the three-score years and ten of the Psalmist, they must have been in the full vigour of middle age, for they were now, all of them, "upwards of or e hundred years old." A very remarkable case of longevity; more remarkable still is it, that they should have met by accident in the service of the same currier.

Now, however, they were cast on the world, and, as Sir John Tyrrell feelingly remarked, at that advanced age it was searcely probable that they could turn their thoughts to the acquisition of any fresh skill. However, their longevity could not save them from the ruthless Premier. The division on tanned hides was for Ministers-130, against 74: majority 56.

The next question was that of timber. Mr. Mitchell proposed and withdrew an amendment on the subject. This is, however, merely preparatory to a six hours' debate on the subject, which is to come off on Friday, as Sir Robert Peel has arranged matters. Then the Premier will be able to fix the debate on the second reading of the Corn Bill for Monday. "Of course," said Sir Robert, "all this with the understanding that the speeches of the homourable members would be so shortened as-"

The remainder of the Premier's sentence was drowned in shouts of laughter. No wonder: the talk has been the most inexorable thing ever known. But a noticeable speech from Lord George Bentinck deserves attention. He broke out with a threat that the House of Lords will not pass the Government measures:

"As far as he (Lord G. Bentinek) was informed, there was just ground for hoping, that whatever might be the conduct of hon. members on that (the Ministerial) side of the House of Commons, however much they might abandon their principles and desert their party (hear, hear), there was another House of Parliament which would not so disgrace itself (cheers from the protection benches). If the other house should reject this measure, and there should be an appeal to the country, then, judging from the results in Gloucestershire and Northamptonshire, and, above all, in his own native county (renewed cheers), the party that had honestly stood by its pledges, and not broken faith with the constituency, nor taken part in breaking the faith of Parliament, would come back to the house greatly strengthened by that constituency, which had been so betrayed in the present session (hear, hear).

Then again Mr. Villiers spoke, with his usual terseness and ability.

Mr. VILLIERS said that the honourable baronet (Sir John Tyrrell) certainly was innocent of having produced the panic of which he complained when the last tariff was passed, for if he remembered rightly, the honourable baronet had addressed his constituents on the occasion, giving them the benefit of his practical knowledge on the subject, which was certainly calculated to allay their fears, for he assured them that he knew that American slicep were of that description that anybody could read the newspapers clearly through them (a laugh), and that more than half the pork would be choked on the voyage (a laugh). Now as they had not much benefit as yet from the tariff, he was not prepared to say that the hon baronet's information was not correct (laughter); if such was the case, why should be be so much alarmed now (hear, hear)? and if the anic was such an evil, why should be endeavour to produce it? and if it did exist, he asked who had produced it (hear, hear)? Why, he did not besitate to say the honourable gentlemen opposite; it was just such speeches as they had heard from the honourable member for Somerset and the honourable baronet that produced it (bear, hear). This was a matter worthy of notice; for if it was impossible to draw their attention to the great interest the people had in the abundance of the necessaries of life, and if nothing could induce them to withdraw their opposition on that groundlet them reflect upon the injury they were inflicting on the very interest which they pretended to represent (hear, hear). What is the effect of predicting every calamity to follow from this measure? Why, that it depreciates the produce of the articles in question (hear, hear), and at this moment there is not the least doubt that prices are kept down by the delay that is occasioned by the motions and speeches of hon, gentlemen opposite (cheers and "oh, oh"). Hon. gentlemen opposite may cry" Oh," but the fact was as he represented it; and he knew on the authority of persons in the trade, that a serious loss is being sustained by them owing to this measure being suspended (Oh). Well, honourable gentlemen will have the opportunity of knowing the fact soon, and it will be seen whether he or they were right (hear, hear). They knew perfectly well that the measure would pass (hear), and it will be seen then whether the price of foreign wheat would not rise higher than it was at this moment (hear, hear); he put it to the honourable member for Somerset, who treats every appeal on the score of general interest with indifference, to look at the enormous injury he is inflicting upon the farmers, and the dealers whose interests he affects to represent (hear, hear). He was bound to say that the honourable gentleman, the member for Somerset, puts the interest of the consumer entirely out of consideration, for he treats the measure as one of gratuitous mischief wantonly inflicted upon the producer, and assumes that there are no interests, no wants to be consulted or satisfied by its passing. Throughout his and the speech of the hon, member for Essex, not one syllable has been said as to whether the poor had access to meat now, or whether the reduction of duty might not give it to them (hear, hear), and that in face of the complaint throughout the agricultural districts, that the poor hardly ever touch meat from one year's end to the other (hear, hear). He did not mean that they did not have becon, still they hald a dear price for it; and that was especially enumerated by the hopourable "other" member for Knarrishdrough, was the bold, bad man who did the dead. Sir John Tyrrell accorded the motion that we have heard the labourer complaining that for 40 years the bond as a still continue of his speech, possessed the house of a still continue had be noticed the motion that we have never touched a morsel of meat owing to its speech, possessed the house of a still continue had be noticed the motion of a still continue had be noticed the motion of a still continue had be not the house of a still continue had be not the house of a still continue had be not the house of a still continue had be not the house of a still continue had be not the house of a still be not to the notice of t sit here in what was called a Christian assembly—an assem bly of gontlemen, who are not apt to underrate their own benevolence, and whose kind ours for the poor nobody win allowed to question (hear, hear); and to hear one after the other depicting the horrors of plenty, and endeavouring to raise the price of subsistence to the poor (cheers). Who could have supposed, after all the display of feeling last night about milliners and dressmakers, and the night before about the poor framework knitters, who were said to be starving, that to night the same gentlemen would be using the same exertions to deprive them of wholesome food; and if their wages were low, thereby to make their sufferings more intense (hear, hear)? Their condition was described to be actually bad, and had been so for years. To prevent food being cheap, therefore, was a positive evil to them as they were (hear). Really to hear the hon, member for Cambridge and the bon, member for Somerset, last night, one would suppose that the poor depended for life upon clover, and never desired to cat bacon (hear, hear). The honourable member for Essex was quite pathetic about protecting clover on account of the poor, and the honourable member for Somerset is horrifled at the abundance of bacon that might be poured into this country from America (hear, hear). He believed that the hon, gentlemen were confounding themrelyes with the poor when they talked about clover. It was they that were always living in clover (a laugh) -while the poor would be happy to exchange all the clover they had for all the bacon they could get (hear). The hon, member for Rutlandshire said he expected to have fair play at the hands of Free Traders, and he (Mr. Villiers) hoped the hon, member would give them credit also for common humanity, for that was their reason for advocating a change of system, to enable the poor to escape at least from scarcity of food (hear). The hon, member for Ruthandshire and turned to this side, to have his fews about this measure allayed; but really his own political economy ought to have done that for him without their help (hear, hear)-for when is the time that he says he apprehends this danger from removing the duty? Why, when the prices are low here—that is the time, he says, when swarms of cattle will come in, that is, when the market is bad; he does not want a duty when the price is high-only when it is lower than in other countries, Surely the honourable gentleman's own sense could as are him that unless the price was higher here than in other parts of the world, the cattle would not come here at all hear, hear). The honourable gentleman the other night wanted to know what would be the price of his wheat if the Corn Law was repealed, and now he wants to know what his cattle will fetch. Surely it is enough to console him for te night when he reflects that if the worst happen, it must be higher here than in any other part of the world, for its being so is the inducement for it to come (hear, hear). This, however, is particularly the time that the honourable member apprehends danger from the charge and why? Be cause he says the cattle have had the marcain, because mutton is unusually scarce, because people have less in this conetry than usual; this is the time, he says, that the consumer should be especially precluded from getting it elsewhere thear, hear). Really do let the honourable gentleman reflect upon the chance he would have of satisfying the consuming public of the justice of such a reason; and now, having, with his friends, eased their consciences by raising their voice against a plentiful supply, he did hope, for the credit of the house, that they would not press this singular motion to a division (hear, hear).

TRADE OF THE PAST AND PRESENT YEAR.

(From the Economist.)

The general result of the official tables of trade and mayigation show that the commerce of the country in 1845 for exceeded that of any other year on record, not even excepting 1814. The consumption of all the great articles of importation has considerably increased; and the amount of our exports, though not much in excess of 1344, shows a great increase on previous years. Our foreign shipping shows an increase of no less than 792,254 tons inward, and 629,131 tons outward, oven when compared with the trade of 1814.

The comparison which these tables furnish for the last three years of the quantities of the chief articles of trade consumed in each year is as follows:

PRODUCE	ENTERED FO	DR HOME CONST	'MPTION,
	1843,	1844.	1845.
Bugarcwt.		4,159,983
Coffice 1b.		31,391,297	31,318,695
Tea lb.	40,301,407	41,300,251	41,183,125
Butter cwt.		150.965	240 110
Cheesocwt.		219,806	958,446
Graingrs.		2,533,031
Plour, &c owt.		710,808
Cattle No.		B,007
Wine gid.		7,077,151
Timber louds DUTY THEF.
Wool 1b.			76,828,159
8flb lb.		4,500,530
Cotton owt.			0,142,176

The comparison of the total value of the chief articles of manufacture exported is as follows: 1843 .. 44,812,000 | 1844 .. 56,642,305 | 1845 .. 51 471,050

The comparison of the navigation of the kingdom during anno muo nči

-	Hhlps entered	Ships entered
•	inwards.	out vards.
	• Tons.	Tona.
1817	3,025,422	3,753,360
	4.991.994
1045	A DOU FULL

Such are the general outlines of the results farnished by hese annual accounts—results which have fully confirmed the hopes entertained at the beginning of last year. In summing up the prospects then before us, there appeared an unusual combination of circumstances to contribute to our pros-regret that it is not now in power to congratulate the country on similar prospects.

Abroad, as well as at home, there are many offenmentances which cannot fell to exercise an injurious effect one general trade; and upon the employment of are some portion of our people.

In the first place, the failure of the list huvest, and the consequent high prices of provisions throughout upons, have sheady been found to exercise a more injurious and upon the consumption of all other articles. Upon these confidences are dependent for the specific of between yors and style per cent. of our whole experts. In INLE, out of the entire amount of 58,581,2021, which our exports reached, our Continental trade took no less than to the value of 25.021,1851. Of conton goods and yarn alone, our texports to the Confinent are equal to 12000,000l, a year-being nearly one half of the whole of our foreign trade in those goods. It is impossible, then, that any material cause of depression should exist in those countries, without being immediately and injuriously felt in our manufacturing districts. If, then, we look to our great markets in the East the prospects are not much more promising. In British India, the enormous expend ture which must attend the war into which we have entered, has already cut off from that branch of our commerce a considerable portion of its pecuniary dependence. In China, the same complaint still exists, and even in a more aggravated form of the inadequacy of returns for our shipments; and the heavy losses now being anstained on the limited imports from that market, being in reality a reduction of the profits apparently made on our exports, will at least offer no inducement to extend transacfronk to that market. Again, in the important markets of South America, our prospects are by no means more succouraging. The war which has so long interrupted our trade in the f.a Plata, still continues. Our relations with Brakil are more unsatisfactory than ever, with no chance bliatever of an improvement as long as we pursue our present policy. We say it, on the best possible authority, that no treaty either of amity or commerce will be concluded with that Government as long as we persist in maintaining the Act passed at the close of last session, assuming for our Courts of Admiralty a jurisdiction over Brazilian subjects and ships, and as long as we persist in the exclusion of their angar. Again: those markets are so dependent upon the Continent of Europe for the consumption of their produce, that they cannot but be affected by the depression which, less or more, in felt in every Continental country. The Visited States and British America alone offer to us at present any good prospect of an increased trade. The former market will, however, be in some measure unfavourably affected by the greater or lesser probability of hostili-At present we are not disposed to consider that an important element in the business of this year. The probability of a modification in their tariff, of which we elsewhere give an outline, appears to us a full set off against that risk. The great demand for American produce, for European consumption, cannot fail to induce a larger import of goods in return; and this being generally their cheapest market, we may reasonably expect an increase of our exports to that quarter.

The activity and prospects in the British American timber trade, must, if not suspended by the deferred operations of the new proposed timber duties, lead to an increase of our exports in that quarter.

Turning from our foreign to our home markets, we find matters little more encouraging. Ireland is a large market for the manufactures of England, and the failure of their potato crop and the high price of food must materially reduce their demand, not only for clothing but also for other articles of consumption. All these causes acting together, cannot but diminish demand in our manufacturing-districts, and the employment of large classes of our own people, which diminished employment must again act prejudicially upon our own internal consumption. But the circumstance at home, which in our estimation most threatens to interfere with our recent prosperity, is the disturbance which has already been created in the capital of the country, for the present and future construction of railways, and which every day, for an indefinite period, must rather aggravate than ameliorate. This is by far the most alarming feature in our future prospects, and one which we freely admit it is extremely difficult to deal with. The rapid conversion of the floating capital now available for the trade of the country into fixed capital in railways, and that for a considerable period, entirely improductive even of interest, must cause its abstruction from other pursuits to an extent which we frankly own to be the subject of the greatest solicitude. We think there can be no doubt that the inconvenience recently experienced in all branches of commerce, oven with regard to money matters, has been greatly aggravated by the suspension of transactions since the proposed changes in the tariff were known. And it is to be expected that a favourable reaction will take place, as soon as these measures have been so far passed as to enable business to be resumed at the new rate of duty, which we hope may be the case before this reaches our readers. For some time, at least, an up usual activity may be expected, while exhausted stocks are being replenished, and provision made for the spring trade.

We must not, however, lose sight of the fact, that at this time we are committed to an expenditure of capital to the amount of nearly seventy millions for the construction of railways, independent of the numerous schomes now before Parliament : - that an absorption of capital in this one channel is at this moment going on, at the rate of little less than two millions in each month—all of which must remain unproductive for a considerable time to come. That a large portion of the schemes at present before Parliament will pass in the course of the session, there appearse little doubt. The struggle then which will take place among all these undertakings, to obtain the requisite capital to carry them into operation,—the attempts to raise by loan a portion of their capital, and the repeated calls, month after month, from the shareholders, who, having embarked so much, will make the greatest efforts to continue their payments to avoid the sacrifice of those already made; all these circumstances present an amount of future embarrassment, which we own it difficult to see the end of.

Suppose that for three years consecutively we received no returns for one-half of our exports, what would be the consequence? We all know what effect was produced, in 1837, by the interruption to the regular returns for the credits given to the United States. The abstraction of floating capital from other purposes, for the construction of railways now in presecution, will be about equal in amount to the half of our experts in three years. But then the common reply is, that the one is expended in the country—the other out. Such is not the case. If one man manufactures goods to the amount of one hundred thousand pounds, the whole of their cost is, in the first instance, expended in wages and in other ways in the country; if he experts those goods, and his capital is not replaced by remittances, it is so much entirely abstracted from the available capital of the country; motwithstanding their whole cost went in the payment of wages and otherwise. So, precisely, if another man expends a similar sum in the construction of a railway, the whole money is expended in wages and materials in the country; but the capital itself is unverreplaces to the country. The most that can be said, even after it is paying a good dividend, is, that so much floating capital has been converted into so much fixed capital. The same, however, might be said if the manufactured goods which had been exported were sold in Brazil, and the money invested there in a mine, yielding a revenue to its owner in England. As regards the effect upon the available capital of the country, there is not the eligitest difference between making a railway at home, or exporting manufactured goods, selling them in a foreign country, and there investing the money in some security bearing interest to the owner at home.

There can, therefore, be no doubt that capital must be come scarce, and the rate of interest higher during a constderable period to come; and that the general trade of the country must feel the inconvenience which must necessarily attend such circumstances. There is every reason to be-lieve that imports generally will be received on a considerable scale during the year, and therefore the circumstances to which we have advorted, will probably be felt rather in producing low and unremunerating prices than in any very great diminution of the extent of the trade.

The present measures which are before Parliament, willno doubt, lay the foundation for great future prosperity, and they will have an important effect, even in the present year, in assisting to avert other obvious dangers to which we are exposed; but we must not expect their full benefits for some time to come.

NEW DUTIES,-The House of Commons having passed the following resolution, substituting new rates of duty on the articles therein expressed, viz.—Resolved, that in lieu of the duties of Customs now chargeable on the articles undermentioned, imported into the United Kingdom, the following duties shall be charged-viz., buckwheat, the quarter, 1s. maize or Indian corn, the quarter, ls.; meal, the cwt., 4½; rice, the cwt., ls.; ditto of and from a British possession, the cwt., 6d.; ditto rough and in the husk, the quarter ls.; ditto, rough and in the husk, of and from a British possession, the quarter ld:" the Commissioners of the Customs' Department have received intimation from Mr. Cardwell, secretary to the Treasury, stating that he has been commanded by the Lord Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, to desire that they will admit the said articles at the new rates of duty specified in the said resolution, until the 1st day of August next, or until Parliament shall otherwise determine; taking, in each case, bond from the importers, to pay the duties hereafter chargeable, in the event of the duties imposed by the said resolution not being sanctioned by Par-This communication, accompanied by a copy of the order of the Government, has been transmitted to the principal officers of the revenue at every port throughout the kingdom, with instructions to take care that the directions contained therein be duly obeyed. The new duties, subject to the provisions mentioned, will be put into operation forthwith, or are even now in force throughout the united empire, with respect to the articles specified. The following is the copy of the new form of bond arranged for the purpose :know all men by these presents, that we (parties names) are held and firmly bound unto our Sovereign Lady Victoria, by the grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great-Britain and Ireland, Queen Defender of the Faith, in the sum of (double the amount of the difference of duty) pounds of good and lawful money of Great Britain, to be paid unto our said Lady the Queen, her heirs and successors, to which payment, well and truly to be made, we bind ourselves, and every of us, jointly and severally, for and in the whole, our heirs executors, and administrators, and every of them, firmly by these presents. Sealed with our scale, dated this Majesty, and in the year of our Lord 1840. Whereas, by an act of Parliament made and passed in a session of Parliament holden in the 5th and 6th years of the reign of her present Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled "An Act to Amend the Laws for the Importation of Corn," it was amongst other things enacted that there should be raised, levied, and paid, to her said Majesty, upon all corn, meal, or flour, entered for home consumption in the United Kingdom, from parts beyond the seas, the several duties specified and set forth in the table annexed to that act, which said duties by the act of the 8th and 9th Victoria, chapter 00, section 8, are to be raised, levied, collected, and paid, in such and the same manner in all respects, as the several duties of customs mentioned in the said act are directed to be raised, levied, collected, and paid. And whereas, a resolution of the House of Commons was passed in the mouth of March 1846, that in lieu of the duties of customs now chargeable on the articles undermentioned, imported into the United Kingdom, the following duties shall be charged (the general rates above mentioned are here specified, and need not be repeated). And whereas the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty, a Treasury, by Mr. Cardwell's letter, have directed the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs to admit the said articles at the new rates of duty specified in the said resolution, until the first day of August next, or until Parliament shall otherwise determine, taking, in each case, bond from the importers to pay the duties heretofore chargeable, in the event of the duties imposed by the said resolution not being sanc-tioned by Parliament. And whereas (quantity) quarters of (article, with each particular of importation, &c., specified) have been imported, which said (quantity again) quarters of (articles again) the said (parties names) intend to enter for home consumption, upon payment of duty, under the said resolution, upon bond being entered into, with the condition hereinafter mentioned. Now the condition of this obligation is such, that if there shall be, on demand, paid to the collector and comptroller of Customs, at the port ofdifference of duty between the duty charged by the said act of the 5th and 5th Victoria, chap. 14, and the duty paid under the said resolution, or the difference of duty charged by the said act and the duty which Parliament may otherwise direct to be levied upon the said articles, then this obligation to be void, otherwise to be and remain in full force and virtue. The bond then concludes in the usual form .- Times. March 16.

COLONEL THOMPSON.—It is now certain that Mr. Leader will sit for Westminster only until the end of the present Parliament. We carnestly trust that Westminster will again right itself in public opinion. Some electors, we ballete, ontertain thoughts of Colonel Thompson. We could carnessly wish to see him returned as member for that ancient contains and the father of the Free Treat members. nearly wish to see him returned as member for that ancient constituency. As the father of the Free Trade movement as a consistent Radical Reformer—as a man of high integrity indefatigable energy, and great political angulty his would confer honour upon any borough, and deserves to be returned by the most indicential in the empire. We would not part the prospects in any other place; but is cartainly strikes in most forcibly that Westminster is the proper size for Coll Prompson; and plat Collogal Thompson is the plate man for Westminster. Nonconformal, LIVERPOOL ANTLMONOPOLY A880. CIATION.

The annual meeting of the members and friends of the Liverpool Anti-Monopoly Association was held on Monday eventing, 5th inst., at the Concert hall, Lord Nelson at. The chair was occupied by William Brown Esq. The hall was well filled, and upon the platform we observed the following well filled, and upon the platform we observed the following gentlemen:—C. Holland, Esq., C. E. Rawlins, jun., Esq., James Mellor, Esq., Thomas Bolton, Esq., Richard Sheil, Esq., Daniel Mather, Esq., John Finch, jun., Esq., G. Crosfield, Esq., Charles Robertson, Esq., Samuel Tonkinson, Esq., F. Boult, jun., Esq., Bamuel Bulley, Esq., Isase B. Cooke, Esq., John Taylor Crook, Esq., Lawrence Heyworth, Esq., the Rev. John Robberds, and C. E. Rawlins, Esq.

The CHAIRMAN, in opening the business of the evening, said it was usual with the council of the association once a year to make a report to those gentlemen who supported that association, and to state to them what their proceedings had been for the past year. It had been delayed on that occasion rather later than usual, in consequence of the great quantity of labour that had devolved on the officers of the society in attending to the registration through the months of December, January, and February, and that must be the excuse to the members for not bringing before them the report at an earlier period. It would not probably be out of place for him (the Chairman) to take a short review of passing events since they last met. They then had great sources of congratulation; but on the present occasion they had still greater sources of congratulation in the measures which had been laid before the country and before the world by the Prime Minister (cheers). He and his Cabinet had placed before the world, in the fullest sense of the word, a full and unqualified adhesion to freedom of trade. It required no little moral courage on the part of Sir R. Peel to perform that duty to his country and to mankind, when the consequence was that it threw from him many of those old friends who had been his supporters for years—when it shivered a party at one time all but omnipotent, and when he ventured to throw himself on the mercy of his opponents To their immortal honour, instead of seeking to embarrass his measures by petty struggles or vexations divisions, they came holdly and fearlessly to his resons. It was incumbent on them not to forego their principles, and therefore Mr. Villiers found it necessary to bring forward his annual motion for the total and immediate repeal of the Corn Laws. Seventy-eight of their friends supported him on that occasion; but others, not less sincere, were afraid of periling the great measures of the administration by leaving Sir Robert Peel in the minority; the consequence was that they voted with the Premier, and enabled him, by a large majority, to carry the first stages of his measure. be a matter of very serious regret to them all, that instead of the House of Commons being an arena for the discussion of the officies of the nation, it had been made an arena for vituperating and abusing the Minister, who honestly and conscientiously did his duty to his country (loud applause). Nothing but honest and conscientious motives could have induced him to place himself in the perilous situation in which he had, and therefore they ought to give him credit for sincerity and truth (hear, hear). It was understood that, although he was perfectly safe as regarded his measures in the Commons, he might be defeated in the Lords; but be fore he alluded to the Lords, he (the chairman) would just allude to what had been said by one of their former representatives, who had been quoted as an authority by their opponents. Mr. Huskisson was advocating one of his Free Trade measures, and there was a great deal of opposition wit, when Canning got up, with all that cloquence, and all that force of reasoning of which he was capable, and said, Is it not doctrines and aspirit such asyours, which have, at all times, been at work to stay public advancement, and roll back the tide of civilisation—a doctrine and a spirit actuating the little minds of men, who, incapable of reaching those heights from which alone an extended view of human nature can be taken, console and revenge themselves by calumuiating and misrepresenting those who have toiled to those heights for the benefit of mankind?" He (the chairman) had adverted to the sentiments of Mr. Canning, and he might probably advert to what Mr. Huskisson had and amongst the last words of his life. He said, "It was in unalterable conviction that they could not uphold the existing Corn Laws with the existing texation, and increase the national prosperity, or preserve public contentment; but that those laws might be repealed without affecting the landed interests, whilst the people would be relieved from their distress he never had any doubt whatever." He (the chairman) was the more disposed to bring this under the observation of the meeting, because Mr. Huskisson had been arrayed against them as a protectionist. Now, he begged to ask them if there was one word of protection in what he had just quoted, or rather if there were not the very condemnation of it. It said that when the Government measure was the House of Lords, various amendments were to be proposed. One, that they should have a permanent and fixed duty; another, that they were to have a permanent and fixed duty, but the proceed to go towards the payment of the poor-rates with the view of relieving the landed interest of part of their mistaken burdens (cheers). Another, that the present sliding scale, as proposed by the Prime Minister, should be avaidable of the proposed by the Prime Minister, she present shding scale, as proposed by the Prime Ministry, should be made permanent. Another, that they would pass the present intended law, on condition that the subject should be taken up again three years hence and discussed. He (the chairman) was quite sure that not an individual who heard him would be willing to submit to any seek conditions. It therefore behaved them, in public and in privals, and by every means in their newer to convince the Lords, and by every means in their power, to convince the Lords, and to show Sir Robert Peel, that if they did attempt to force such measures on the country they would gain nothing by the movement. For the sake of peace and harmony they might submit to the Cern Laws being reprieved for three years, but if they must have a new Parliament, those caleria would be led to instant execution (loud cheers). A reversel genileman of the name of lateman—the Rev. H. Yateman—thade a flower speech the other day in Donate tree man—thade a flower speech the other day in Donate tree were the high sheriff took the chair. He (the chairmen was wilking to suppose that the press must either have his represented or misunderstood the reversel genileman, for he could not suppose that one of his alone could not suppose that one is a reversel genileman, for he could not suppose that one of his alone could not suppose that one of his alone could not suppose that one of his alone only suppose that one of his alone only suppose that one of his alone on the public. He will that the United States for suppose of the Salar suppose that one of the suppose that the press must be supposed to the public of the salar suppose that one of the suppose that the press must be supposed to the public of the salar suppose that one of the suppose that the press must be supposed to the suppose that one of the suppose that the press must be supposed to the suppose that one of the suppose that the press must be supposed to the suppose that one of the suppose that the press must be supposed to the suppose that the press must be supposed to the suppose that the press must be supposed to the suppose that the press must be supposed to the suppose that the press must be supposed to the suppose that the press must be supposed to the suppose that the press must be supposed to the suppose that the suppose the suppose that the suppose that the suppose the suppose that might submit to the Corn Laws being reprieved for three of a

olidia

fred erale Olide

tain c

Biner

Sione, Sind a Many

Sec.

-Binon

der i band

ing el

SOLDA SOLDA

verend gentleman to sand forth such statements to the pub hope the policy of their Free Trade measure baths with mose. The effect of their Free Trade measure baths with mose. The effect of their Free Trade measure bad caused the tierman confideration—the Zollverein—to pause in their tarde measure bad caused the tierman confideration—the Zollverein—to pause in making any alteration in their tariff unfavourable to England: France was establishing Froe Trade clubs, and Russia, and contemplated some rise in her duties, had been arrested in her progress, and the evident tendency now was downwants (applause). Before he sat down he begged permission to correct an error which he made on the last occasion that he addressed them-an error, however, which made altogether against his own argument. He stated that the North American colonies and the British West India islands had a commerce more important than they really had. Instead of the exports to these places being 9,400,000, and falling off to 8,800,000, the exports in 1835 were 0,500,000. and had fallen off to 5,500,000, being one million in favour of what their opponents seemed to value so much-protection (loud cheers.) The chairman then called upon the honorary sceretary to read the report.

Mr. C. E. RAWLINS said, when he looked around the platform, he missed the presence of one man on the present occasion whose name had always been associated with human progress and improvement-he meant Mr. Rathbone. A note, however, had been received from him that afternoon, saying that a prior engagement of long standing had prevented him from having the pleasure of attending the meeting (hear, hear). Mr. Rawlins then proceeded to read the report, a voluminous and interesting document, containing an able sketch of the history of the course of Free Trade during the last year of success and triumph. We have only room for the following extracts:

"The year 1815, the fourth of the existence of the Anti-Mono-poly Association, and the seventh of that of the Anti-Corn-Law League, has been distinguished her program as the Corn-Law league, has been distinguished by a progress more than usually rapid in the attainment of the object which has united us together, namely perfect freedom of trade.

"In contributing to this result we, as the council of your association, have endeavoured faithfully to exercise the trust you reposed in us, to the fullest extent of our power.

"In addition to the ordinary means of agitation, by the distri-believe to the ordinary means of agitation, by the distribution of tracts, and the assembling of public meetings, we underteek, in March last, the care of the registers for the borough, the Liverpool polling district for South Lancashire; and we have also been in communication with the Council of the League, relative to voters having qualifications in other districts or countries but residing in our care. ties, but residing in our own.

"Finding that the purity of the register greatly depended on the thorough honesty of the men who were returned to serve in our parish affairs, we issued an address to our fellow-towns men last Easter, entreating them only to elect men who would faithfully a liminister their trust, without using it for the benefit of any political party whatever. The call was at once responded to not be result of the poll was the triumph of our candidates. A further effort ought again to be made this year, to place the very on an equality with respect to parties. More than this we neither ask nor desire.

"The results of our registration labours have been very suc-Borovou Register.-We have made a thorough revision of the brough register, and by objecting to a large number of bal votes, dead votes, and false duplicate votes (a work which that its next decision upon an election shall be in accordance with the undoubted opinions of the community at large, on the Subject of Free Trade.

"County Register.—South Lancashire.—We have improved this district of South Lancashire, by placing on the list 43 new electors, 300 of whom were induced to purchase qualifications in shares. All these names were objected to by the newspolist party, and struck off by the revising barrister. We mosopolist party, and struck off by the revising barrister. We successfully appealed, however, against his decision to that of the Court of Common Pleas. The court not only restored the names, but Chief Justice Tindal characterised the desire for qualifying as a county elector, by a bona_fde investment of property, as highly commendable. The same efforts have been made in other districts of the county with equal success. We have thus secured the return of our townsman William Brown, Eq., and the Hon. C. P. Villiers, by a working majority of 3000 votes.

"South Christing.—For the Birkenhead polling district we placed on the present register 109 voters, and are in possession of 311 claims for next register, of whom 344 qualified by share property at our instigation. The total number of Free Trade property at our instigation. The total number of rree trade claims now ready for the coming register on the whole division, is upwards of one thousand, which will render the county perfectly safe on a contest after next December.

"In both counties we successfully objected to a large number of supplies to the counties we successfully objected to a large number.

"During the past year our members have very greatly increased. In 1842 they numbered 340; in 1843, 271; 1844, 404; We have to regret the retirement of Thos. Thornely, Esq.

by his own special wish, from the responsible office of president, which he has filled from the commencement of the association. which he has filled from the commoncement of the association. He has, however, consented to age as one of the vice-presidents, should the members continue to desire his services. Our thanks are due to Mr. Thornely for the attention which he has invariably given to the interests of the association, and his consistent advocacy of its objects both in and out of Parliament.

"It is deeply to be regretted that so hold and comprehensive asheme as that proposed by Sir Robert Peel should be defaced by the evidence of a still lingering prajudice in favour of the sibing wale. It is opposed to his experience of the sliding scale of 1828, which he altered because it did not accommodate itself to the wants of the community, and to that also of his own scale of 1828, which, as Sidney Herbert confessed, 'would not slide, when it was required. It is inconsistent with all the Premier's new convictions in favour of entire freedom of trade; and, show all, it is unjustifiable in the prospect, to which no one has oftener pointed than Sir Robert Peel himself, of an impending sear-tive of food. Alluding to the destruction of the position crop in Ireland, he declared, 'that at an early period of the antenn he was of opinion that it was impossible to meet the emergency without a suspension of the duties of corn and provisional a had spirit was fast spreading itself among the people. Many were then destitute of provisions, and the difficulty to be most was, how to deal with the evil, without waiting its further financian he looks forward to the month of May with the greatest apprehension. And yet, in the face of an impending famine among large massos of the people this year, which deficiency of earl phatoes, or a decay in those preserved, may probably remaining large massos of the people this year, which deficiency of heal phatoes, or a decay in those preserved, may probably remaining large massos of the people this year, which deficiency of heal proteins on the effect of limiting the supply of food, or at all events, of end as people, threatened with, nay, in some parts, actually sufferned a people threatened with, nay, in some parts, actually sufferned as people, threatened with, nay, in some parts, actually sufferned as people, the sufferned way and dissensation between different comilier, which all must regret, and to remove the sufferned way and dissensation between different comilier and parts. "It is deeply to be regretted that so bold and comprehensive of morality, by diminishing those temptations to crime which arise from poverty and distress "-can that law be just," which has a tendency to limit the abdudance of food, on which these blessings depend; so that the soundance or man, on when those blessings depend; and which will be productive of appalling ovils in proportion as it effects its own object? If this scheme of a new sliding scale be not abandonal new, and if one-half the evils which may fairly be anticipated should arise, we believe it cannot survive the three years of its destined existence. Like outnot survive the three years of its destined existence. Like a kindred measure of compromise with injustica—the apprenticeship system in the abolition of negro slavery—it will assuredly be annulled by the indignant voice of the people.

"What the agricultural interest (meaning thereby the real cultivators of the soil) have really most to fear, is a delay in the final settlement of this question. There will be no readjustment of routs and leases while the change is in process. All the disadvantages of a sudden ropeal are thus insured to the farmer, without any of its corresponding advantages to himself or the community. The evil may not be felt during 1816, because scarcity throughout Europe, preventing under any circumstances extensive importation, may prevent its operation. But during 1817-8, stocks of foreign com, prevented by the sliding scale from gradual importation, will, in all probability, accumulate in foreign ports, and, on the sudden fall of duty in 1849, be poured on the market, unnaturally lowering the price, to the great injury of the English producer.

"On these two grounds, then, first, injustices to the consumer by the centinued imposition of a duty for three years longer on by the continued imposition of a duty for three years longer on the importation of food, unjust under any circumstances, but more essentially so in the face of impending scarcity; and, secondly, that protracted ropeal, especially when accompanied by a sliding scale, will be a serious injury to the home producer—we must express our strong disapproval of this part of Sir R. Peel's scheme. Peel's scheme.

"On the motion that the house should go into committee on the measure, Mr. Miles, M.P. for East Somerset, moved addrect negative; but, after three weeks' debate, the amendment has been lost by a majority of 97 votes.

"When in committee, Mr. Villiers moved his amendment for the total and immediate repeal; but the peculiar circumstances induced many strong advocates for this mode of settlement to vote against him, lest it might endanger Sir R. Peel's measure in its subsequent stages.

"Seventy-eight members, however, have asserted the principle, which, in its simple unity and justice, has been the secret of the success of the league. But, failing this, they have now determined to give their strenuous support to the Ministerial measure,—a determination to which we accord our most anqua-lified approval. inted approval.

"National revolutions have generally been bought with the price of blood; they have too often resulted only in the substitution of one despotism for another; they have almost always been confused, in their affects, to a single country. We are on the eve of a revolution precisely the reverse. It has been peaceful in its operation; it will be world-wide in its blessings. All honour be to the League that has prepared us for the change. This League was born in contempt—it rose, amidst success and contamely, into appular favour—it has triumpled suidst the se-In the league was born in contempt—it rose, amidst sneers and contumely, into popular favour—it has triumphed amidst the acclamations of its once most vielent opponents. We cannot agree with those who look upon the past existence of the League as an evil, only justified by a still greater one. It may be, that gentle and peaceful agitation is as necessary to the sububitity of the political atmosphere as to that of the material world; nex, that its severest storms have the same utility in the economy of the one as of the other. It so, the League has proved not an evil, but a good. It is certain that it has used its vast influence for high and noble numbers. In all respects it has been as infor high and noble purposes. In all respects it has been an in-tellectual agitation. Its magnificent bazaars, rightly considered, have been expositions of the triumph of mind over matter. Its tracts—and lectures have embodied—the soundest decrines of moral and political science. With the knowledge of the true principles of international intercourse, it has infused an intense love of international peace. It has awakened the most generous constinues of the assignable bears. If it has a graded the away of the particular of the particular bears. emotions of the national heart. If it has curbed the power of the aristocracy, it has purified the press, and exalted the people. On every suitable occasion it has repudiated the dectrine of physical force. It was not the League, but a minister of the physical force. It was not the League, but a minister of the Crown, who, while acknowledging that its agitation was 'not of force, but of reason,' said, that if reason were not yielded to, 'some day force might be added.' The League has never for a moment lost sight of the efficiety of its weapons or the justice of its cause. And when it has fulfilled its mission—when its mighty organisation shall have ceased to exist with the enormous wrong which called it into being, the names of its leaders -no less wise than powerful -Cobden and Bright, and Wilson and Villiors -will long be remembered as benefactors to their country and mankind.

Mr. Rawlins concluded by moving the adoption of the re-

Mr. J. T. CROOK, one of the treasurers, said their worthy secretary had moved that the valuable document just read be adopted by that meeting, as the report of the council of the Anti-Monopoly Association, and it gave him great pleasure to second the proposition that it he printed and distributed amongst the members, for he was fully convinced that a document of that nature would be instructive to the world. He hoped, however, that they would allow him to include in it the treasurer's accounts, as being highly important also. It was well they should be published, because, though the League might be dissolved after the Corn Laws were totally repealed, the Liverpool Anti-Monopoly Association remained until Free Trade in everything was obtained (loud cheers). Mr. Crook then read an abstract of the accounts, from which it appeared that the balance in hand was only 421. 3s. Od. be motion was then put and carried unanimously.

Mr. Thos. Borton moved the thanks of the meeting to the council of the association. In doing so, he congratulated the meeting on the prospect of Free Trade in corn. He much regretted that anything in the shape of a sliding scale should be extended for three years, and should have wished instead of that, something like a permanent duty of 4s. (No, no). He believed that Sir Robert Peel could not have carried on his Government had he tried for total and immediate Lord John Russell himself could not form a Government with any chance of carrying such a measure; he would never have been able to secure such a majority as Sir Robert Peel had gained for his-97; and they must all agree that Sir Robert had proposed the most liberal measure he could get his party to consent to adopt; and when all could not be got that was wanted, it was best to take the next best they could get. For his own part, he thought that a very small fixed duty would be necessary upon wheat, if only to pay the landing waiters' charges (cries of "no, no; no duty whatever.") Mr. Bolton then took a short review of the corn trade since the year 1815, and again reminded the meeting that if all things were admitted free of duty, the expenses of Government could not be paid (cries of "Put a direct tax upon property." Much cheering.) He would just remind them that an inquiry was going on before Parliament as to the charges upon landed property, and there was one thing he should like to learn from that inquiry, and that was, why the people of England should pay 40 per cent, more for their food than the people of other parts of the world (loud charges)?

cheers ?

Mr.D. Mathen seconded the motion, and he hoped the meeting would direct their serious attention to that part of the report which had been read to them, with reference to the repeal of the Corn Laws. He would remind them that it was not a total repeal they were going to have, neither total nor immediate; and he hoped they would never cease to think the question until that interested in getting the total and immediate repeal. They must not think of pring satisfied with a sliding scale, or even a shilling duty (cheers) For so long as that one shilling remained, there was a chance that some future minister would mise it to two shillings, and another night make it three. Suppose the Pake of Richmond were to come in to-morrow, what would be not do. They are thou to go for total and immediate feebal. They could register cotton and other articles without a duty, and what matter if they were not registered, so that they had plenty to put into their bollies, what was the use of reportering it (laughter and choors). As to the sliding scale, it was all sliding nonsonse (laughter). The Premier and all the Ministers had been converted, because the people were going to be starved, and yet they elapped on a daty of 103 . to 1 is. That was like knocking their own arguments on the head. He could not see the use of their proposing anything of the kind. Sir Robert Peel lad ample means of passing the measure if he chose. He was delighted to find Mr. Cobden and Lord Morpsth had voted for the total repeal. Lord J. Russell had objected to it because he thought it would put Ministers in a fix; but Lord Morpeth did not think so. He was the man who would stand by them, but they could not put the slightest trust in Lord John Russell (cheers).

The CHAIRMAN said that, as they had elected him to the office of President for the next year, he would endewour to discharge his duty faithfully; but unless the Council were sustained with large funds, he was afraid they would not be able to get on so satisfactorily as might be wished (hear).

Mr. LAWRENCE HEYWORTH proposed the next resolution, which was to the effect, that while they stendily adhered to their object of total and immediate repeal of the Corn and Provision Laws, and of all differential duties, and on this occasion renewed their determination never to dissolve their association until protective duties were annihilated, they nevertheless approved of the policy which induced Mr. Villiers and the 78 members who voted with him, after failing in their endeavour to carry into effect their great principle in the House of Commons, to give their hearty support to the modified but still comprehensive measure proposed by Sir R.

Mr. RICHARD SHELL seconded the motion.

The CHAIRMAN begged to make one observation. He thought, from the remarks made by several of his friends. that they did not sufficiently understand the embarrassing position in which the Promier now stood. He had a difficult position to sustain. He was, as he (the Chairman) believed, as honest a Free Trader and as much disposed for total and immediate repeal as any man could be (cheers). But he also believed that it was a matter of policy on his part to frame his measure as he had framed it, in order that be might have a reasonable hope of getting it through the House of Lords; and unless he had so framed it, he would have had no hope of carrying it through at all. He appealed to the meeting, as men of business and reflection, whether it was not better to sustain the measure Sir Robert Peel had brought forward, than to be thrown into ten years' further agitation (hear)? With this view he hoped that on every proper occasion they would express themselves firmly and resolutely, and sustain the measure of Sir R. Poel until they got it fairly through the House of Lords (hear, hear)

Mr. C. E. RAWLINS reminded the meeting that Mr. Bolton was the first mayor of Liverpool who thought it consist ent with the duties of his office to call a town's meeting at such a time and such a place as would suit the convenience of the working classes of this town (hear).

Thanks were voted to the Chairman, and the meeting broke up, after giving three cheers for Free Trade.

REGISTRATION APPEALS.

PARIENTS P. LUCKETT.

Mr. Wellsby for the Appellant; Mr. Grove for the Ro spondent.

CHIEF JUSTICE TINDAL .- I think the information derived by the overseers is to be thrown overboard. What the overseers thought proper to say-indeed, what they came forward to say, though they came forward as a hody corporate, is of little weight, for a few overseers are not to be listened to when we are explaining a written instrument. We are to give that written instrument a reasonable construction, and not by considering any other instrument of the same nature. When there was a column following the first name, that was to be filled up with the following name. It seems to me, certainly, that this construction must follow, that you must supply the name of Joshua Pariente as it appears in the preceding column. You find the numbers two and three in the margin, and Haynes's name and Pariente's name are put in the same subject matter of rating; there must have, therefore, been some some in Parlente's name being put there. It must have had some meaning, and I conceive it could have had no other than than that of supplying the blank in the column in the same way as Haynes's name, and applying it to the same subject-matter to which they are both rated. Therefore they ought to be restored.

Mr. JUSTICE MAULE .- With respect to the first rate, it is conceded that the person rated has done all to could him to come within the 80th section of the 2d William IV, chapter 45. That section gives this benefit to the claimant upon his doing all that is required without anything being done in compliance with it. Then with respect to the subsequent rates, the question is, whether the claimant is rated? That is to be decided by looking at the rate. without looking to anything that was said by one of the overseers; for the overseers said they put his mame on the rate in consequence of his claim, but without any intention to rate him for anything. They might have done all they did without any intention to rate him; they might have had an intention to do as much, and he would have no right to complain against them for not doing what they had done; yet they might have had no intention to confer any franchise which he wished to have. Whatever their intention was, they have done their duty when they might not have had an intention to do it. It is lucky for them to have done what they did, though they might have had an intention of omitting to do what they were bound to do, though it was done fore conscienties; they may have this consolation, they have not done the mischief they intended to do. The opinion of a witness with respect to what is the proper effect of a written instrument, is clearly admissable; and it seems to me the whole thing is otherwise beyond doubt, for the construction of the document is very plain. The barrister seems to have been actuated by an auxility to do justice between the parties, and has done something he ought not to have done. The rest of the court concurred. Decision reversed.

And the second second section of the second		[Laure Old Di
Jest Published; M.R. COBDEN'S SPEECH in the House of Commons on Friday, February 27th, 1016—Revised. Price One Penny, 16 Pages.	*Jeasop, T. and Sons, Pond Works 50 0 0 0 A Friend, per Edward Smith 90 0 0 Drabble and Sanderson, Spring-street 10 0 0 Birks, Thomas, Pond-street 10 0 0 Abti, Curry 10 0 0	6 Kidd, Edward, Temple-backs 9 Jenkins, Jaipes, Bedminster Tan-yard 10 9 Jackson, S. P., Ashley-place 9 Sanders, Thos. R., jun., 9, Berkeley.sq. 10 9 Jones, George, Lower Redland
MR. BRIGHT'S SPEECH in the House of Commons mose on Tecchary Night, Feb. 17. Frice One Penny. MR. GIBSON'S SPEECH in the House of Commons on Monday Night, Feb. 16. Price One Penny. Labour Office, 47. Plact-closes, London; J. Gadeby, Newall's Buildings,	*Parker, 8. and Son, Broom Grove 10 0 0 *Thompson, Gorden, M.D., Norfolk-st 10 0 0 *Applelay, Cherles, The Mount 8 0 0 Wall, James, The Hills *Hutton, W. and Son, High-atreet 5 0 0 *Hawksworth, J. W., Arundel-street 5 0 0	*Brittan, M., Albion Chambers 16 *Visgor, Harman, Pyle House 10 *Bomerton, W. H., Broad-street 5 *Tuckett, Francis, Frenchay 5 *Itaks, Joseph, Charlotte-street 5
where may be had, THE GOATACRE MEETING. Just published, price One Pouny, or is, per 100, VERBATIM REPORT OF THE MEETING OF	*I.asder, R., jun., Independent Office & 0 0 *Nanaon, E. and J., Bridge-street & 0 0 *Peace, Charles, Eagle Works & 0 0 *Kpear, Messrs. & Jackson, Saville Works & 0 0 *Mappin, Josh., Norfolk-street & 0 0	*Estlin, John B., 47, Park-street *A. B., per George Thomas *Butter, W., Castle-street *Wetherman, John, jun., 2, 6t. George, 4, 2, 2, 2, 3, 4, 4, 4, 4, 4, 4, 4, 4, 4, 4, 4, 4, 4,
AGRICULTURAL LABOURERS AT GOATACEH, printed in a frest form, it pages. Seld at the Janesu Office, 67, Picet-street, Loudon; and by J. Gadsby, Yewali's Buildings, and 5, Old Miligate, Manchester. Upwards of 100,000 copies have been printed. Any of the above may be had at 6s, per 100,	*Wostenholm, G., Rockingham-strect 5 0 0 *Walker and Wall, Exchange-strect 5 0 0 *Carr, John, Paradiae-squaro 5 0 0 *Stevenson, J., Allen-street 3 0 0 *Smith, Wm., jun., Bank-street 2 8 0 *Frith, Poter, Arundel-street 2 0 0	*Greening, Charles, 12, Nelson-street 2 *Davis, James, Stapleton-road 1 *Chick, George B., Milk-street 1 *Warren, T. and A., 46, Redeliff-street, 1 *Harris, Ehenezer, 7, Dighton-street 1 *Collins, T. P., Bridge-street
DAWN ISLAND. By MINE MARTINHAU. Written expressly for the Great Banar. Price 2s. 8d. "The gerting up is superb: equal to any spesimen of typographical ar that ever met our eyes." Bentinel. FREE TRADE TRACTS, selected by the Council of the League, is, in sloth.	*Leader, Robert, Pitmoor 2 0 0 *Ashton, Richard, South-street 2 0 0 *Hobson, Josh, Arundel-street 2 0 0 *Roebuck, Jonathan, Baville-street 2 0 0 *Roberts and Mettam, Barker Pool 2 0 0 A Friend, Townhead-street 1 0 0	*Wetherman, J. W., Small-street *Nash, Arthur, Castle street *Thomas, Thomas, 2, Kingsdown Parade *Kidd, Richard, Tomple-backs *Tothill, H. do ! le Ray, J., Quay
JOHN HOPKINS'S NOTIONS of POLITICAL ECO- NOMY. By Mrs. Masser. Recommended by Mr. Cobden. 1s. 8d. TWENTY TRACTS AND SPEECHES ON FREE TRADS. By Mart Duers, Messer. VILLIERS, CORDEN, BRIGHT, GIROOS, O'COMMELL, M'CULLAGE, BAINES, &c. 1s. sticked. 18mo. size.	Moora Sannel, Woodside . 1 0 9 *Ballans, J. N., Angel-street . 1 0 0 *Frost, Sanuel, Broad-Jane . 1 0 0 *Liddell, E., Bauk-street . 1 0 0 *Brookes, W. and Soit, Rockingham-st. 1 0 0 *Davenport, Brothers, 102, Rockingham-st 1 0 0 *Thompson, E., Union-street . 1 0 0	*Rogers, W., Moorfields *Hodges, H., Cheltenham Road *Withers, F., Carey's lane, Old Markotst. 1 *Bompas, George, M.D., Fishponds 1 *Knowles, W., 15, Park-place, Clifton 1 Armstrong, Rev. Geo., H, Clifton Vale. 0 Wilmot, James, Castle-street
 Several members of the Council of the League are desirous of making complete their sets of the Anti-Cara-Law Circular, which was printed in Manchester, prior to the commencement of the League paper. They are deficient of the following numbers:	*Meggit and Roberts, Duko-street . 1 0 0 *Atkin, Henry, Howard-street . 1 0 0 *Linley, J. and Sans, Wicker . 1 0 0 *Parker and Linley, Union-street . 1 0 0 *Parker, David, Charles-street . 1 0 0 *Parkes, David, Charles-street . 1 0 0 *Brown, James, Division-street . 1 0 0	Ditchett, H. Wills, 6, Bathurst-terrace. 0 10 Bowden, Samuel, 3, St. Jamos's square 0 to Paun, George, Dolphin-street 0 to Scull, H., 17, Milk-street 0 to Knight, J., 17, Hotwell-road 0 to Greening's, J., W. and C., 12, Nelson st. 0 to H. M., 140, Thomas-street 0 to
70, 93, 103, 107. Any reasonable sum will be paid for the numbers, or any of them. They may be addressed to the care of Mr. Gadaby, Newall's	*Smith, Josephus, 144, South-street 1 0 0 *Steer, W., Castle Folds 1 0 0 *Itali, J., 51, High-street 1 0 0 *Derby, John, 10, Cavendish-street 1 0 0 Turner, John, Harvest-lane 0 8 5 Innocent, Jokn, Campo-lane 0 5 0	W. S. Phillips, Richard, 43, West-street 0 8 Howe, Richard, Friars 0 5 Baker, John, 11, Newfoundland-street 0 4 A. R. M. 14, Queen.square 0 4 Small Sums 115 buildings, Manchester, and should be accompanied by a letter from the senders, which shall be promptly replied to, with payment.	Omicron	*Akroyd, James, and Son 200 0 *Lister and Morris 20 0 *Baldwin, John Clay House, near 20 0 *Tamb, R. Kershaw 20 0 *A Friend, per John Crossley 10 0
CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE QUARTER OF A MILLION FUND. Subscriptions received during the week ending	Hall, B., Bright-street 0 4 0 Morforth, J., at S. Front's, Broad-lane 0 4 0 Smith, H., Occupption-road 0 4 0 Taylor, Brothers, Burnt-tree-lane 0 3 0 Davy, J. S., Bridgehouses 0 2 6 Ryalls, John do 0 2 6 Beckett, Alfred, Oborne street 0 2 6	#Ambler, John, Peel House Mile, Luddenden Foot, near
Wednesday, March 18, 1846. N.B — As the Subscription List is made up from Wednesday to Wednesday, contributions received on Thursdays and Fridays are not published in the	Beckett, Alfred, Oborne street	*Waterhouse, T. P. 1 0 *Turner, Rev. W. 1 0 *Hebblethwâito, Thomas, Green Mount 1 0 *Garter, John, King Cross-street 1 0 (*Shaw, Elias 9 9 *Holland, Thomas, Penkhull-street 2 0
LEAGUE of the Saturday immediately succeeding, but are included in the list of the week following. As the regulations of the Post Office require that the Christian Name of the party to whom Post Office Orders are sent should be given in full, subscribers are respectfully requested to procure their Orders in future for George Wilson, League Offices, Manchester, or Abraham Walter Paulton,	Symmons, S., do	*Warrington, John, Brampton
*Howard, Charles, Hyde, near Manchester 100 0 0	Small Sums 0 6 6 *Lupton, Arthur, North-street 50 0 0 *Hammond, Measure, and Son, Lowfold 20 0 0 *Taylor, Measure, Wordsworth and Co., Holbeck, near 20 0 0	Wood, Enoch, Lower-street . 1 0- Williams, John, do 0 2 Bristol, Levi, Poolhead 0 2 *Bootham, William 1 0 *Walker, John, Innkoeper . 1 0 *Long, Joseph, do 1 0
*Perr, Curtis, and Madeley, Store street, Manchester 30 0 0 *Walmisley, Henry, Fallsworth, near Manchester 20 0 0 *Westall, R. and J., White Ash, near Blackburn 20 0 0 *Barton, Thomas, Ardwick 20 0 0 *Owen, John, Carpenter's lane, Mauchaster 20 0 0 *Oill, Win., New Cannon-street do 10 0 0 *Horton, John, Prior's Lee Hall, near Shiffnall, Salop 10 0	*Newton, Messrs., and Taylor, Water-in 5 () •	*Denison, John Bancroft
*Dean, John, Silverwell House, Bolton 10 0 0 *Fox, W. J., London 10 0 0 *Robinson, John, Woodbrook, Saddleworth 6 0 0 *Whitchessi, Thos., David, and Poter Hollymount, Rawtenstall 10 0 0 *The Free Trade Labourers of Pontofreet 5 3 0	*Wickstead, Ray, Chas, Blenheim-square 2 2 0 Dickinson, R. C., Cookridge-street 2 2 0 Dickinson, T. S., do 2 2 0 Hetherington and Thompson, Steander 2 2 0 Foster, Messrs, and Davy, Hunslet 2 0 0 Asquith, W., Bagbie 1 1 0 *Collett, Messrs, & Brown, Basinghall-st 1 1 0	*Hateson, John, imkeeper 10 *Itbitson, John 10 *Denison, William, sen. 10 *Wormald, William 10 *A Friend, Esholt 10
Hotherwater Aucods Vale, Manchester & 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	*Brisy, Joseph, St. Paul's-street . 1 1 0 *England, G. W., Commercial-street . 1 1 0 *Mortimer, Messrs, and Co., Mortimer st 1 1 0 *Neill, John, Pack-street . 1 1 0 *Kirk, John, Meadow-Jano . 1 1 0 *Wood, John, Cubourg-street . 1 1 0	*Wallare, William
*Workmen at Aberdein, Gordon, and Co.'s, Montrose. $2.5 5 *A. E., per Wm. McCall 1 0 *Sheen, Wilson, 66, Russell-street, Hulme, Manchester 1 0 0 *Cos., Mrs. Eliza, 165, Chester Road, do do 1 0 0 *Duckworth, Mason, and Armstrong, Cooper's-row, Gregson-street, do 1 0 0 *Alldred, Joseph, Union-street, Auconts do 1 0 0	*Smith, John, 10, Briggato 1 1 0 *Parkinson, J. spirit merchant, Yeadon, nr 1 0 0 *Parkinson, Thomas, do 1 0 0 *Riley, Joseph, Bentham Park 1 0 0 *Gaunt, Jonas, and Son, Wortley, near 1 0 0 *Gilston, James, Briggato 1 0 0 Scales, Rev. Thomas, York-placo 0 10 6	*Small, Robert *Kirkland, Wm. and Sop, saw mills *Smith, C, and R. *Mylles, Robert, Cupar Angus *Smith, Henry and Co. *Saunder, Thomas
*Wilkinson Miss, 78, Stock-st., Chretham hill-rd., do 1 0 0 *Collison, Thomas, and Son, Sharp-street do 1 0 0 *Rawatone, James, New Zealand-road, Stockport 1 0 0 Wakefuld High. Heatterland.	Naylor, Jacob, Elmwood-terrace	*Halkot and Adam 2 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Pickering, Wm., Sherbourne Hill, near Durham 1 0 0 *Brown, W., Front of Schove Hill, Lewis 1 0 0 *Davis, Ebenezer, Priory Crescent, Southover, do. 1 0 0 *Lees, T. B., Padfield Brook, Glossop 1 0 0 *Collier, Thomas, tea dealer, do 1 0 0 *Criffith, Rev. Wm., jun., North Shiehls 1 0 0 *Coventry, A., Bedford-street, do 1 0 0	*Landale, David	*Steven, George, fronmorger 2 0 0 *Moon and Langlands 2 0 0 *Smilton, James 2 0 0 *Ritchie, P. D., Dundee and Liverpool Shipping Office 1 0 *Leask, Alexander 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
Thillpeon, John, True street, do 1 0 0 Clifton, John, Delph, Saddleworth 1 0 0 Downtirst, James, 11, Broughton-street, Salford 1 0 0 Chambers, John, draper, Presion 1 0 0 Hates, Edw., Over Darwen, noar Blackburn 1 0 0 Miller, Afred, Staleybridge 0 10 0	*McDonald, Archibald 5 5 0 *Wotherspoon, William, and Son 4 0 0 *Beveridge, Mrs. George, Dysart 4 0 0 *Heron, Robert, and Co 3 0 0 *Greig, Peter 8 0 0	*Bett, William *Rough. George *Fenwick, James, carver and gilder *Brown, John. coal morehant *Marshal, Robert, Dundee and London Stoam Shipping Company
Couper, Sidney, High-street, Lewes 0 2 6 Butes, Mr., North street do 0 2 6 Cuulman, Proderick, Hancook-street, Manchester 0 2 6	*Ireland, James, and Co. 2 0 0 *Kny, T. and J. 2 0 0 *Kny, T. and J. 2 0 0 *Sharp, James 2 0 0 *Sharp, James 2 0 0 *Sharp, James 2 0 0 *Sharp, James 2 0 0 *Sharp, James 2 0 0 *Sharp, James 2 0 0 *Sharp, James 2 0 0 *Sharp, James 2 0 0 *Sharp, James 2 0 0 *Sharp, James 2 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	*Gray, Dr. 1 0 0 *Hpankio, Jamos, and Co. 1 0 0 *Registory, David, druggist 1 0 0 *Steven, Alexander, shipbuilder (*Tatlow, Joremiah, tape manufactarer 2 0 0
Padilam, Halm, James, Old Road 500 0 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	*Russell, John, spirit dosler . 1 0 0 *Anderson, Thomas 1 0 0 W *Handerson, Robert 1 0 0 *Stenhouse, Andrew 1 0 0 Galloway, James, Baker-st., Clairtown . 0 10 0 Smith, John 0 8 0 Williams, Andrew, Lochty Bleschfield 0 8 0	/irksworth. Mobeth, Isaso, baker 0 1 6 Gratton, W 0 0 6 Hudson, Thomas 0 0 0 0
Norton, C. B. Norton, William Norton, Henry O Carron of Carry O Carron of Carron o	Rigney, Martin	apiotou, J. A., 2, Tariston-street Lloyd, Rayner, 31, Schoolerset Syers, J. M., Church-road, Sampley, Old Swan Oorkguiters in thou Employ of Malcolm MoEnchan, I., Copper from Sharr, Charles, M. Physiocheterset Spain, Charles, M. Physiochet
Variantion. (* Figurali, George Vones and Philipps AVarren, E. B. Swilliams John	Ferguson, John 6 4 0 Stewart, Robert 0 4 0 Whyte, Thomas 0 4 0	Print Charles, M. Diverbarrent Permission Unit Description

	Company and the Company and March to the Company of
	C. Buruley, Thomas		10 0) (O George Thomas £250 O E. S., por Geo. Th
	*Thornton, Benjamin *Crowther, Win., and Sons		10 0		O Joseph Euton John Wetherman,
	*Hwaine, J. and E., and Co.	•) (William Totall
	*Fillison, J. and F., Birkensbay, nea	r ''	8 0) (Nalah and Co 100 0 James Davis
	*Burnley, Firth, and Co. *Gomersall, J., Rawfolds, pr Clockhe	ator	4 0 12 0
	*Knowles, Houghton and Co. *Hammond, William	••	1 4		William D. Wills 100 0 George B. Chick
' namal	*Taylor, Joshua	••	1 0		J. S. Fry and Bons 100 0 T. and A. Warren
Gomersal, near Leeds,	4.3.chnaton.Josiah	• •	1 0	Č	Charles Tothill and Co. 50 0 Henry Shule Nasl
•	Ross. Thomas "A Friend," per Wm. Crowther	• •	0 10	(James Jonkins 50 0 T. P. Collins
	Porritt, Bamuel	• •	08		The state of the s
	Smith Josiah Ellis, Benjamin	••	0 4		Bamuel Lang and Bons 50 0 Arthur Naish
	Riecle, John	::	0 4	Č	Barnes, Staples, and Co. 50 0 J. Cox
	Kershaw, Samuel Howarth, Henry, Birkenshaw, near		0 4	O	George Jones 50 0 A Friend
	(Sundries	••	0 6		Robert Charleton 25 0 Thomas, Fripp
13	(*Sattersfield, Messes, J. and Son *Senior, Matthew, and Sons	• •	1 4		W. H. Somerton 25 0 Thomas, nor R.
10 m	*Sattersfield, William, jun. *Sattersfield, Messis, John and Son.	• •	1 0		Philip D. Tuckett 25 0 Rev. Grouge Art
4.1.2.2.1.1.2.2.1.1.2.2.1.1.2.2.1.2.2.1.2	*Sattersfield, William, son. *Sattersfield, Jerembah		0 12 0 12	0	Daniel Wheeler 25 0 8. B.
enhill in the town- of Heckmondwicks	Walker, James	• •	0.12	0	James Hall 21 0 H. Senll
11. 11. 11.	*Sattersfield, George *Sattersfield, John, jun.	• •	0 6	0	A Friend per G. Thomas 10 0 Several small Subs
d o	Oddy, Chris., sen		0 6	0	William Butler 10 0
Kilper ship o	Ritchardson, John	::	0 4	0	Received since the Meeting,
, M	(Barby, John	••	0 4	0	Thomas Reynolds 25 0 William Knowles
	(*An Enemy to Monopoly, per Mr. Ho * Hindle, W. James	rve	y y 0 1 0	0
	*Jubb, George, Thurgoland *Poles, William, Wentworth	• • •	1 0	0
. '	Biram, B. do	••	0.10	0	LEICESTER SUBSCRIPTIONS.
	Beardshall, W., jun. do Cooper, Henry do	• •	$\begin{array}{cc} 0.10 \\ 0.8 \end{array}$	0	The following gentlemen have signified their i
	Henderson, Joseph do	• •	0 6	0
Danular	Stone, Erasmus, jun. do	::	0 5	0	Richd Harris and Sons. 500 0 W. K. Eames
Ramaley - District.	Hague, Charles do	• •	0 5 0 5	0	John Biggs and Sons500 0 Rev. O. Legge, LL
	Firth, John do Mann, James do	• •	0 5	. 0	T. Stokes and Nephews 200 0 E. Newton Brewin and Whotstone, 200 0 Hiffe and Breward
	Pallding, Francis do	••	0 8	Ŏ	J. Ellis and Son
	Cooper, Henry do	••	0 5	0	Whetstone and Gittens., 50 0 Mr. Clarkson
	Green, Thomas do Fallding, Joseph do	••	0 4	0	D. Orange and Co 50 0 Charles Bowmar N. Corah and Sons 50 0 J and J. Harvoy
	Buck, W. do Small Sums	• •	0 2	6	Charles Billson 50 0 T. and W. Archer Thomas Biggs 50 0 Joseph Swain (Stevenson, Robert	••		0	Alfred Burges 50 0 T. Thompson and
	Gildon, John, South-place		1 0	0	N. Westermann 50 0 field
	Barber, C. H., High-street Mountain, John, Market-placo	• •	1 0	0	R. Carter and Son 50 0 Geo, Vicars and So Joseph Underwood 50 0 Samuel Baines
Boston.	Howdon, W., engineer Baker, W., Wormgate	• •	1 0 0 10	0	R. Marston and Co 50 0 W. and G. Baines Frishy and Chawner 50 0 Robort Palmer
	Shurp, T., Witham Town Smith, J., fellmonger	••	0 5	0	C. Bedells and Co 50 0 DONATES
	Willson, A. Mounta'n, H., musician		02_	.,6_	Fleiding and How б	Hull and Shenton 25 0 J. Whitmore John Baines 25 0 S. Kirby
"l'erke (i. '	ph.and Sons, Champion Hill, Camberw Addle-street, City	ull 2 1	20 0 10 0	0	R. and G. Toller 25 0 C. B. Robinson Jos. Cripps 25 0 T. Paget
- "Ivimey, Jose	ph, 26, Chancery-lane and H., 6, Lawrence-lane, Cheapside	1	0 ŏ 5 0	0	Higginson and Coleman 20 0 J. and G. Thorp
TITLE TOTAL		• •	5 0	0	T. Sargoant and Sons 20 0 W.E. Hutchinson
Baird, John,	Brompton, Kent		5 0 5 0	0
The Operati	casrs. W. and Co., 98, Hatton Garden ves of Warwick Works, Carlisle, p	. 4 er	4 0	O	THE QUARTER OF A MILLION I
Volckman, W	Vand C. Stratford Fagor	• •	4 0	0	The Council have, we believe, determi
TOMBING A	. D., 16, Park-terrace, Brixton pk, Regent-place, Birmingham		2 0	0	advertising upon a somewhat extensive
STOREST AND A STOREST	ur Dover			. O	promised subscriptions to the League Fur
Thom, Wi	arket-st , Hanley, Staffordshire Potteri n., merchent, Methyon, near Porth	ng i		0	continue the same at intervals, in order to Davy, Edwar	d. Crediton Devenships	•	1 1	0	progress of the fund towards completion.
""KIMW. JOIN	1, 19, City road Flost-street]]	0	this effectually, they seek the assistance of
	13 Finaluse ganasa	.]		n O	committees and treasurers, who have
	978., and Swift. St. John's st., Smithfiel 8x., 13. Camomile-street, Bishopsystess	d. 1		0	quested to send a list of all the subscrib
Paull, Edwar	d 15 Chamaide	. i	1 1	0	the present period, and to continue the si
Grave, Arthu	rG W 41 Demonts 540	. į	Ö (0	time to time till all have appeared.
		. 1 . 1		0	These lists, it may be well to state, are Harding Jan	108) Ough street G	. 1		0	tain only the gross amounts promised, and reference whatever to the instalments, which
Ei-dell, J. By	lug Rupdott atract Water and	. į	0 1	0	bo forwarded separately.
Polland, Win	Changland W. M. M. Permer, Bermondsey.	: i	l 0 (n	A few additions to the list of treasure
Aitken, Rich	ard, Mitcham Common	. ;		0	been made since last we published it,
Hogg Richar	d New Districts August 1 as m	. 1 . 1		n	subjoin:
Costoraliteo	and her animas thomas! Coreford' Glot	۱. ا	0 (0	Andover-James Baker, Esq., Prospect House.
*Milla, Wm., N *Chandler, Th	lidhurst omas, per Paul Anstie, jun., Bath-road	i	0 (, Ashton-under Lyne—Thomas Mason, Esq.
Bridger W	00.11	. 1	0 0	,	Aylesbury—J. P. R. Payne, Esq. Alawick—Thos. Duncau, Esq.
Smith, Thom	190, 111gh-street, Lowes 194, 48, Shepherd-street, Sheffeld Syke Works Treeston	. l . 1	. 0 (Ayr—J. Kinrosv, Esq.
"Hainsay Robe	the comment of the control of the co		0 0		Annan-Alex. Dounic, Esq.
Hawkey Charl	A STATE OF THE OWNERS OF	់ រ៉	0 () [Amersham—E. West, Esq. Beaminster—Mr. Jos. Tite, Clenham Mill.
otter, Thomas	, Garden street, Bury, Lancoshire н, Horseshoe-alley, Wilson-st., Finsbur	, 0 y 0	10 0		Bath-Admiral Gordon, R.N., Nelson-place, No
	Brook, Abrohom	. 1	0 0	- [cent. Barneley—J. S. Parkinson, Esq., Linen manufacti
i	Brook, William	. 0	8 0	1	Belper-Mr. J. W. Hanceck.
·	Brearley, Robert, jun	Ö	8 0) [Bromsgrove—W. A. Greening, Esq. Bridgewater—William Browne, Esq.
D	Thompson, John Dean, William	0	4.0		Burton on Trent-J. N. Hanson, Esq.
	Vewsome Ramual	0	4 0		Bristol-George Thomas, Esq., Great George street.
i	Ox. David	0	4 0		Burnley-Geo. Holgate, Enq., jun.
, , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , ,	meard, Mrs. Ann	ŏ			Bridport.—J. P. Stephens, Esq. Barnard Castle.—Mr. Wm. Raine, Horse Market.
Those nor	nes marked with an asterisk are rous	0	3.0	1	Brighton—Isaac Gray Bass, End.
eriptions.	while will all designing are rough	wed	l sub-	1	Bury-James Kay, Esq., woollen manufacturer. Boston-Mr. Robert Stevenson.
h Leans v.	ERRATA.				Bolton—John Deon, Esq., Silverwell House.
BI Outpool to Table 1999	TESUIDES Ellio Disertante de la			1	Clackbacton Clac Andrews 23

In LEASURE No. 126, for S. Ellis, Birmingham, H., read & Wood, Moore at., Birmingham.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO THE, 250,000% LEAGUE

FUND IN BRISTOL.

The Committee of the Anti-Corn-Law Association have pleasure in informing the friends of the cause that the following sums were promised at the fee findesting, held on the lith instant, at the public rooms, Broadineed; and that these and further subscriptions, towards the cabove-named task, will be received con behalfor George Thomas, Esquiros Reading Street;

ł.	George Thomas	£250	Λ	E. S., per Geo. Thomas £10	œ
i	ł Joseph Euton		ă.	John Wetherman, jun 10	ă
ļ	Edward Thomas.	250	้ก	A. N. L. 10	ŏ
ı	I William Toolill	200	ň	A. N. L 10 Pratten and Waterman 8	ă
	Edward Kidd	100	0	A. B., per Geo. Thomas 5	ŏ
	Nalah and Go.	100	0	James Davis	ŏ
	James Charleton	100	ō.	Edward Holsall 5	ŏ
	Edward Kidd Naish and Co. James Challeton Thomas Sanders William D. Wills	100	ŏ	George Chick 5	ŏ
	William D. Wills	100	ň	George B. Chick 5	ŏ
	H. O. Wills	100	Ö	Rev. John Burder 8	Ö
	H. O. Wills J. S. Fry and Bons	100	ŏ	T. and A. Warren 5	ŏ
	Alfred Thomas	100	ō	Ehenezer Harris 5	ŏ
	Alfred Thomas Charles Tothill and C	o. 80		Henry Shule Nash 5	ŭ
	Robert Bruce	20		George Bendon	ŏ
	Robert Bruce James Jonkins Harman Visger S. P. Jackson	50	0	T. P. Collins 5	ö
	Harman Visuar	60	11	l Diobard Doug	ŏ
	S. P. Jackson	70	0	J. W. Wetherman 5	ö
	Samuel Lang and Son	H. 50	o.	Arthur Naish 5	ŏ
	Thomas, Pripp,&Thom		ö	Thomas Thomas 5	ŏ
	Barnes, Staples, and C	Co. 50	i)		ö
	A Friend, per G. Thon		0	1 A. W	ŏ
	George Jones	50	ò	A Friend	ŏ
	Win. Terrell and Sons	50		The Workmen of Messrs,	v
	Robert Charleton	25	a l	. Whattan Malou and
	W. H. Somerton	25	0	Thomas, per R. Phillips
	Francis Tuckett Philip D. Tuckett Joseph Rako Duniel Wheeler John B. Estlin	25	0	Thomas, per R. Phillips (foreman) 3 1 Rev. George Armstrong 3	n
	Philip D. Tuckett	25	io l	Rev. George Armstrong 3	3
	Joseph Rako	95	o l	Henry Wills Ditchett 2 1	ŭ
	Daniel Wheeler	25	0	8. B	n
	John B. Estlin	2.	δl	George Plan	ä
	James Hall	21	o l	H. Scull 2	ñ
	A Friend per G. Thom	as 10	0	Several small Subscriptions	•
	A Friend		Ò		t
	William Butler	10	Ö	The state of the s	• •
i			- •	the Meeting.
	Joseph Ramadla	4000 BD	nce o		_
	Thurse Possells		21	William Francisco	0
	Thomas Reynolds Henry Turkett	. 2-1 ·1)-1	1	William Knowles 5	0
	Thomas Rankin & Soi	. 2.1	::1	Thomas Balo 21	0
	100 Zanaman manama	. 2.J	., .

LEICESTER SUBSCRIPTIONS. The following gentlemen have signified their intention of bscribing the amounts which appear attached to their reective names:

ı	· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	٠.	I	L	м
	Richd.Harris and Sons500	0	W. K. Eames 9	()	(
l	John Biggs and Sons 1,500	0		ł)	11
ŀ	T. Stokes and Nephews 200	()
ı	Brewin and Whetstone, 200	0
	Joseph Fielding	Ø	William Bates
	J. Ellis and Son	0
ı	Whetstone and Gittens., 50	0	Mr. Clarkson 1
ı	D. Orange and Co 50	0	Charles Bowmar 1
l	N. Corali and Sons 50	0	J and J. Harvoy i l	Charles Billson ., 50	0
ı	Thomas Biggs 50	0
I	Alfred Burges 50	0		5
l	Stone and Paget 50		J. Burton and G. Small.	•	•
l	N. Westermana 50			5	,
ľ	R. Carter and Son 50			5
ı	Joseph Underwood 50	0		5
l	R. Marston and Co 50			5
l	Frishy and Chawner 50	0		,
ŀ	C. Bedells and Co 50	Ü
l	Thus, Sunderland 25	0	bonations.
l			J.W. Noble, M. H		,
	Hull and Shegton 25	0	J. Whitmore
١	John Baines	ö	S. Kirby 10
ı	R. and G. Toller 25	ő	C. B. Robinson 10
l	Jos. Cripps 25	ö
ı	Higgingon and Coleman 20		T. Paget 10 J. and G. Thorn		ï
١					- (

THE QUARTER OF A MILLION FUND.

The Council have, we believe, determined upon lvertising upon a somewhat extensive scale the omised subscriptions to the League Fund, and to ntinue the same at intervals, in order to show the ogress of the fund towards completion. To do is effectually, they seek the assistance of the local mmittees and treasurers, who have been reested to send a list of all the subscribers up to e present period, and to continue the same from ne to time till all have appeared.

These lists, it may be well to state, are to connonly the gross amounts promised, and have no orence whatever to the instalments, which should forwarded separately.

A few additions to the list of treasurers have n made since last we published it, which we dover-James Baker, Esq., Prospect House. iton-under Lyne—Thomas Mason, Esq. esbury—J. P. R. Payne, Esq. wick-Thos. Duncan, Erq. -J.Kinrosa, Esq. ıan—Alex. Dounic, Esq. ersham—E. West, Esq. uninster—Mr. Jos. Tite, Clenham Mill. h-Admiral Gordon, R.N., Nelson-place, Norfolk-cres nsley – J. S. Parkinson, Esq., Linen manufacturer. per – Mr. J. W. Hancock. msgrove-W. A. Greening, Esq. gewater-William Browne, Esq. ton on Trent—J. N. Hanson, Esq. stell—George Thomas, Esq., Great George street, rice.

Index. Geo. Holgate, Esq., jun.

Iport. J. P. Stephens, Esq.

nard Castle...Mr. Wm. Raine, Horse Market.

Ighton...Isaac Gray Bass, Esq.

Ighton...Isaac Kay, Esq., woollen manufacturer.

Iton...Mr. Robert Stevenson. Boston—Mr. Robert Stevenson.
Bolton—John Deon, Esq., Silverwell House.
Cleckheston—Geo. Anderton, Esq.
Cambridge—Chas. Newby, Esq., on, Regent-street.
Crediton, Devon—Edward Dayy, Esq.
Crayford, Kent—Henry Could, Esq.
Carlisla—L. Forster, Esq., Caldewgate.
Coline—Mr. T. T. England.
Cliorley—Mr. James Wallwork.
Carmarthen—Henry Norton, Esq.
Cingelen le-Frith—J. Carrington, Esq.
Congleton—J. Broadhurst, Esq., Jun.
Congleton—J. Broadhurst, Esq., Jun.
Devolucity—Semuel Oram, Esq., Market-sireet.
Derby—Messrs. Boden and Morley.

Dundee—Edward Baxter, Eag.
Donagster—Mr. Rebort Miner.
Danbur—James Wilson, Eag., Belhaven.
Dartmouth—Noah Clift, Eag.
Darlaston—Charles Green, Esg. Dunfermline-Mr. R. Robertson, Draper. Edinburgh-Messrs. Arch. Thomson and Co., Execo. Mr. Samuel Maunder.
Execo. Mr. Samuel Maunder.
Eynsford, Kent. Mr. II. Rogers.
Falkirk. John Smith, Lag., Writer.
Forfar. Mr. Win. Sturrock, Gateshead. Geo. Crawshay, Esq.
Garstang. Dr. Bell, Chapel street.
Glasson. John Karrbon, 1862. Glossop—John Kershaw, 16sq.
Glossop—John Kershaw, 16sq.
Gloucoster—Samuel Bowly, Leq.
Horsbam—Junes Agute, Esq., North Parade.
Halifax—Mr. Thomas Denton, Old Market. Hinckley—Mr. Thom. Payno.
Hinckley—Mr. Thos. Payno.
Holywell—Thos. Mather, Esq., Glyn Abbot.
Hastings—Mr. Thos. Ross, Jun.
Hazel Grove—Mr. T. Wharmby
Huddersfield—Foster Shaw, Esq. Hundersheid -r oster maw, Esq.
Hull-Joseph Jones, Esq.
Hawick, N.B.—Mr. George Easton, Idle, near Bradford, Yorkshire—Mr. Wm. Russell.
Inverses—Donald Frazer, Esq., jun. Jedburgh-Geo. Hilson, Esq., Manufacturer. Kendal-Geo, Charnley, Esq. Kelso-Mr. Alexander Dodds, Grocer. Knaresborough-Mr. Thos. Addyman, High street. Keighley J. Craven, Esq., worsted spinner, Kirkaldy - Mr. Robt. Bryson, Knutsford - Hanry Long, Esq.
London - A. W. Paulton, Esq., at the offices of the League 67, Fleet street. Luton-James Waller, Esq., morchant. Leek-Thos. Birch, Esq. Lancaster—George Jackson, Esq. Leicester—J. D. Harris, Esq. Leighton Buzzard - Thomas Price, Esq., Newtown, Leominster - Mr. J. V. Chilcott, Leoninster—Mr. J. V. Chilcott, Landport, &c.—Mr. Thos. Ross.
Lishfield—Dr. Rowley, M.D.
Liverpool—Jas. Mullineaux, Esq., John Taylor Crook, Esq.
Leeds.—Samuel Birchall, Esq., woolstapler.
Maesteg, near Bridgend, Glamorganshire.—Mr. Jos. Crayne.
Mauchester—Mr. James Jones, at the offices of the League,
b. Newalls-buildings, Market street.
Maidenhead—Mr. Thomas Woodcock, draper.
Maidstone—Richard Nelmos Esq. 109 Wook street. Maidstone -- Richard Nelmes, Esq., 109, Week street. Maldon-O. W. Digby, Esq. Middleton, near Manchester-Mr. Daniel Burton. Montrose-Mr. John Muckart. Mottram-Mr. Saml. Oldham. Mitchain and Tooting, Surrey - Mr. Richd, Aitken, Newcastle-upon-Tyne-George Crawshay, Esq., and Mr. Daniel Liddell, Carliol-street.

Nantwich—Mr. Philip Barker. Newcostle-under-Lync-Mr. Elias Shaw. New Mills—John Yates, Esq. Oldham—John Platt, Esq., Hartford Tronworks. Ossett, near Wakefield -Mr. Frank Fearnside.

Ossett, near Wakefield -Mr. Frank Fearnside.
Potteries, The.—Francis Wedgwood, Esq.
Poole—G. R. Penney, Esq.
Pontefract—Mr. W. Kidd. news agent.
Pateley Bridge—Mr. R. Hurker.
Plymouth—Jno. Symons, Esq., Kinterburg-st.
Reigate Mr. Thomas Dann.
Ranagate—Mr. Henry Scott, 57, Queen-street.
Salisbury—Jno. Lambert, Exq.
Sevenocks, Kent—John Clark, Esq.
St. Columb—Mr. W. Brown, 3, Fuir-street.
Scarborough—Isaac Stickney, Esq.

St. Columb—Air. W. Brown, 3, Fair-street.
Scarborough—Isaac Stickney, Esq., Merchant.
Sheffield—William Hargreaves, Esq., Merchant.
Skipton—J. B. Dewhurst, Esq.
Southport—Richard Johnson, Esq.
Stockport—Mr. J. Heginbotham, Millgate.
Sirhowy, Monmouthshite—Rev. Richard Jones.
South Shields—Mr. James Bell.

Stourbridge - Mr. E. Baylie, Strood - Mr. John S. Cobb. Swallham and West Norfolk -Arthur Morse, Esq., Swall-

Swansea—Mr. Joseph Rutter. Stroud—Mr. T. Parsons. Stirling, Robert Smith, Esq. Sunderland-Mr. Edward C. Robson, Frederic street,

Bishopwearmouth. Stockton-on-Tees - J. B. Clepham, Esq. Shepton Mallett-- W. Richardson, Esq., Woodbourne Cottage. Staloybridge—Henry Bayley, Esq. Sudbury - Colonel Addison. St. Austell - The Rev. Jas. Copc. Todmorden—W. Haworth, Esq., North View. Tewkosbury—Mr. Benjamin Harris. Thetford—Mr. Henry Brown Warminster—Mr. H. Bastings Wednesbury-Bonjamin Round, Esq. Wareham-J. Pike, Esq., Merchant, Westbury-N. Overbury, Esq.

Wigan-Thomas Taylor, Esq., Spinner, and Mr. Thomas Wall, Bookseller. Wirksworth-Mr. B. Street, White Lion Inn. Wakefield-Charles Morton, Esq., Whitwood Colliery.

Whitchurch-Mr. Richard Thomas. Weymouth-Mr. Charles Pope. Westbromwich-J. Spittle, Esq. York—Thomas Hwales, Euq., Lawrence street, Yarmouth—Mr. John Fish, Denes.

Mr. W. E. GLADSTONE.—We understand that a requisition was forwarded to this gentleman on Saturday last, signed by many of the leading members of the Conservative and Liberal parties in Wigan, requesting him to allow himself to be placed in nonlination as a candidate for the brough, in the place of the Hon. Mr. Lindeny, who has resigned. It is generally expected that Mr Gladstone will accept this invitation, and that he will be returned without opposition.—Liverpool-

The Duke of Newcastle has addressed another letter to "his countrymen." His grace's plea for doing so is the "encouragement" he received on the former occasion. The subject of the present letter is the downfall of our syrical transfer. ral aystem. It is a "very melancilly and gentlemanlike" production, and is well calculated to "raise the waters," in the eyes of the British yeomanry.

A GLANCE AT THE HOUSE OF COMMONS. By Rieben.

Last Monday was a cold, ill-tempered day. Towards four o'clock, as the Lords and Commons of England. not already within the walls of Parliament on railway committees, come down Parliament-street and passed Westminster Hall, some to the entrance to the House of Commons, and others to the doorway of "another place;" some riding in the storm, with spurred and borded grooms after them, as if they were going to "mother place," further off than the House of either Lords or Commons; some cabbed and covered up, with outside tigers holding on their laced buts, and laced hats refusing to be held on; some coming along the foot-payement on such conveyances as nature gave them, of whom the Prime Minister was one; but even he, stepping out to escape the coming storm, which had wathered wind, rain, ball, chimney-pots, tiles, plaster, glass, straw and dust, and was about to harl them on the heads of every man, woman, child, and member of Parliament within reach - a kind of atmospheric Ferrand; even the Prime Minister, seeing what was to come, walked faster than his usually solid, grave, dignified pace. Such, at four o'clock on Monday afternoon, was the weather in Westminster, as the collective wisdom of the nation was collecting through the different channels of the West-end, but directly through Parliament-street.

It is at all times a sight worth seeing, that of the arrival at the doors of Parliament of the picked men of the nation. How oddly they come! how oddly they look! Now the fall man, now the short one. Now a venerable grey beard; and now a beardless bread-andbutter looking boy boys I should say; for the number of Parliamentary voiths astonishes the stranger more than anything he will see or hear in the house. Now there is the dark-featured, strong-bodied borderer, Sir James Graham; and now the tall, sprightly Sydney Herbert, of Wiltshire. A Lord Something, of brief stature, with hunch back and white gloves, is followed by some other ford, whom every on-looker at once declares to be a fine specimen of an Englishman. But both are Englishmen, and what of it ? Both have votes in the house, and both are the nominees of one duke.

But Monday was a day upon which the members passed into the house almost without criticism -an uncommon thing, certainly; but it was a day upon which country stragglers in London, who usually form fourfifths of the line of critics on the opposite pavement, could not keep their places, as the wind and Westminster Abbey raved and roared over that particular part of the street, as if they would close and grapple, and the one throw the other down. They did come to blows. but the Abbey only shook jitself, and tossed the storm into the street below -in which, while I was there, on my way to the House of Commons, to try to obtain an entrance to the Speaker's gallery, it seemed to be playing a kind of overture to the performances which were afterwards to be witnessed within the house, as if in anticipation of who were to speak, and of their manner of speaking.

There was the bitter gust, whistling from all points of the compass, insimuating itself into every street, lane, alley, and spider's hole; now buffeting the lords on the back who might happen to be passengers, and then smiting poorer men in the face, biting the very noses of the cabmen as if it would be satisfied if it could bite a nose off. Now whizzing round the cold bronze of Canning's statue, now rushing upon the pavement opposite, as it it would take the official papers out of Sir Robert Peel's pocket, and then whistling among his feet, as it it would trip him up, because he held the papers fast, The secwling cloud which gave forth this gust, and which, to look at, was enough to make ordinary mortals feel that nothing but bitterness could come out of it,this weather-sour fraction of discontented nature played in the overture an epitomo of what Mr. Ben D'Israeli had been, and was again to be that night.

Again the wind would cease, and all nature would seem to be empty for a space—as empty as some gambler's pocket; then, in a moment, the storm was high again, raised as suddenly as a gambler "raises the wind." Once more it would be dead still, and again it would move and stop, and rush on and turn the corners and come back again, and wheezle inharmoniously, as if it were fore-shadowing even at greater length and with more precision than an overture foreshadows an operate performance, the inharmonious sentences of the forthcoming speeches of the new orator, Lord George Bentinck.

Again the gale would recommence loudly, and continue loud yet unstable in its noise, softening where it was expected to be strong, bursting with strongth where one expected to hear it soft, as if it were already recchoing George Bankes, who was not yet on his feet.

The rain came on and poured, as if the tempest had taken the Thames from its bed to carry it away, and the Thames was not willing to go any farther. I listened no longer to the elemental strife. It had been announced that the Speaker was at prayers, which announcement opened the doors of the committee-rooms as a knife cuts the straw band of a potato sack, and straightway there came rolling out upon the street dozens and scores of railway witnesses, engineers, attornies, barristers, clerks, and reporters. I went to look for some member who might oblige me by obtaining a Speaker's order, and though not fortunate enough to see one for nearly an hour and a half, a gentleman who has more than once been kind enough to put himself to some trouble to obtain this favour for me did to again.

The time was not lost. Indeed, I know of no other spot in London, or out of it, where an hour or two may be more agreeably, usefully—I might say philosophically—employed than in the lobbies of the House of Commons, through which the members are passing in and out, and in again every minute; and in which persons are standing in rows waiting to see their own member, or some one known to them, to get an order, or to deliver a message, or a letter, or a petition, or some papers which are to crain, as a silkworm is crammed with mulberry leaves, some George Bankes or Lord George Bentinek, who is to spin a silk-yarn speech, and has not got the material all at hand from which to make the speech.

Standing in the lobby for an hour or two with a companion, such observations as the following were exchanged:

"That gentleman carrying the black leather box in his hand, who is he?" "Do you mean that genteel man, slender, rather young, with light coloured hair?" "Yes." That is a member of the Government, Mr. Cardwell. He will perhaps speak to-night if he is not too hoarse; but he has got a bad cold. He is a good speaker, and has the promise of a statesman in him."

"Some of those men standing near that door are weavers, or pretended weavers, from Spitalfields. The silk question is expected to come on to-night if there is not too much debate on the items of the tariff before silk. We shall very probably see Lord George Bentinck, or Peter Borthwick, or D'Israeli, or George Bankes, or perhaps old Spooner of Birmingham, or Souire Newdegate, of Warwickshire, come and speak to them; they have sent into the house for somebody. I heard of a lady some time ago; she is the wife of one of the members of a borough, not over sixty miles from here; she has a certain kind of regard for the poor, and visits them in their own houses. Her chief object is to teach them not to waste anything, and particularly not to waste the skins of the potatoes; to show, that though a lady, she can eat a potato with nothing but salt to it, and very little of that; she cats a potato at their dinner tuble, with just the least thing in life of salt to it; and to show that poor people may cat the potato skins, she cats the potato with the skin on it. Now, those kid-gloved lords - here is Lord George Bentinck; that is he in white gloves; rather a goodlooking man when his hat is on; he is well whiskered, which shows favourably as he stands now; but he has an indifferent head, so far as the intellectual or moral power of it are indicated, which you can see when his hat is off. Those lords in kid gloves, hunting after the Spitalfields weavers, remind me of the lady who cats the skins of the potato; she, submitting to a kind of gastronomic martyrdom for five minutes out of the twenty-four hours; they, opening their mouths to be crammed with the statistics of the silk-trade and the sorrows of poor men, for this night only.' The lady could no more digest a meal of potato skins, day after day, than could those men who have suddenly become the weavers' advocates take in, understand, and intollectually digest, the statistics of the silk trade. It is a mere sham. The only thing in their favour is, that they have not intellectual capacity enough to know when they are blundering, as we shall hear if we get into the house tonight, and the house should get as fur through the tariff as the article silk."

"What reason have you for saying those are not real weavers?"

them pretended weavers, because they pretend to represent the weavers, and they only represent a few, and these not the most intelligent or most industrious. Moreover, they are not working men at present. They are in the pay of the corn monopolists to get up opposition to the Free Trade scheme of Sir Robert Peel. At the meeting held lately at Bremhill, in Wiltshire, where so many labourors and their wives attended, and told how poorly they were paid, how poorly fed, poorly lodged, and poorly clothed, one of these pretended Spitalfields men attended from London, sent down by agents of the monopolists here, and endeavoured to draw the attention of the poor people there from the question of large loaf or little loaf, to that of machinery. He insisted that it was the threshing mills that had caused the misery of Wilt. shire; and the blockhead said that, not knowing that threshing mills were very little in use. But the people shouted-" No, it ben't the machines; it be the Com Laws that make little trade, little wages, and little loaves of bread. Don't come to tell we that we have nothing to do with the Corn Laws; we has more to do with 'em than any body, for we live on bread, and get nothing but bread!" And they at last drew him from the platform, and told him that they were determined to act peacefully, and not to be led by the like of him into mischief, to break machines, and get themselves hung, or transported. So the man decamped But within a few days, he was at a meeting at Birming. ham, and in a few days after at a meeting at Macelin. field-always in the character of a working man, and instigating the working men to follow after some other object than that which they were met about, the Corn Law. The purpose of the monopolists in paying the travelling expenses and the wages of this man to get up a crusade against the threshing-mills rather than the Corn Laws was plain enough. They were so well bepared to make use of such a perversion of the popular excitement, that two of the least discreet of them did make use of it, though it had never occurred Mr. J. Benett, one of the members for Wiltshire, and a leading protectionist member, had been so well prepared for what had been expected to follow the employment of such agents of the Central Protection Society at Anti-Corn-Law meetings, that he could not resist the temptation of standing up in the House of Commons and accusing the League of sending persons to Bremhill to incite the Wiltshire labourers to break machinery! And the Duke of Richmond's brother, in imitation of John Benett, said the same thing, and something worse, in the House of Lords. Now there, before us, in the lobby of the House of Commons, are some of those menspeaking to, and feeding, and cramming, as they would pigeons with peas, the members who are getting off the parts of poor men's friends for a night or two, that they, the said members, who are getting off the parts, may, under cover of this new disguise, continue to pick the national pocket and the weaver's cupboard.

"Why have those weavers, or pretended weavers, or whatever they may be, not given information to the monopolist members before this time? This does not seem a convenient place for such business."

"No doubt they have before. But they have come now to get into the gallery, and have perhaps brought something which was forgotten before."

We read of an animal which can be schooled to betray its fellows into a snare, by lavishing a spurious affection on them. This animal is not without excuse; it finds that its new masters have fed it better than it was fed before, and it is willing to lead as many of its kind as its arts can compass into the enjoyment of the same advantages with itself. Moreover it is not a man; it is only a four-footed beast. But there are men, the Pariah dogs of mankind, who for a bellyful to themselves will betray their fellows into the hands of those who have starved, will starve, and can only live by starving them.

Pots, pans, tin kettles, where are you all, that such dogs can go along the streets without one of you at their tails?

After passing a policeman, who asked me if the order I had was for the Speaker's or for the stranger's gallery, and being directed by him up a particular stair when I had said the Speaker's gallery, I went up that stair and another, and along a narrow passage, through abarrier, which was lifted to admit me along the passage still further to another barrier, where the order was asked for and delivered up; then through some place wider than a mere passage, with a table in it, a chair and a stove; then through a door-way into the region of the bude lights, beneath which I could indistinctly see the Opposition benches well filled with Opposition members. A voice was speaking, which I knew to be the somewhat thin, but clear and melodious voice of Sir R. Peel. In a few minutes I got a front seat. After Sir Robert Peel, Mr. Plumptre, of Kent, rose to arge that the excise duty should be taken off hops of home growth, and that the import duty on hops of foreign growth should not be reduced. All that was said by him, and by those who followed, has been before the public since Tuesday morning; and if it had not been so there was nothing in it requiring notice from me. A division took place on this question of hops, at least I read next morning that a division took place. All I know of it is that the Speaker ordered strangers to withdraw, and that two officers of the house pushed the strangers out into the place before mentioned, where stood one table, one chair, and a stove. It seemed to be the desire of most of them to famale as near the door as possible, to be the first or the other and some of that

cople

∟'em

hing

the

stove and burned their fingers. In this way five or six or seven minutes passed over, and the green door was opened again, and we got to our seats; some to the front, who were behind before, and some to the back seat who were in front at first.

The clerk at the table read a number of articles from the tariff list, which, with the exception of straw plait, did not cause a remark, and that very little, until the article of silk was named. Shoes, for instance, in their different varieties, were specified, but met no opposition: which was attributable, I believe, to the fact that the 240 opponents of the tariff are corn growers and not shormakers; and partly also to the fact that the shoemakers have not gone up to the monopolist corn growers as a few of the silk weavers have done, to deliver themselves into the hands of the bread taxers, for the bread taxors' own sakes.

On the silk subject, Mr. Bankes, who moved that silk be omitted from the tariff, evinced much sympathy with the meetings of the weavers. I know a place not far from Kingston Hall, where working men would meet, but dare not (in the parish of Sturminster Marshall, Mr. Bankes's own property), where they do not earn onehal' of the wages of the silk weavers, poorly paid as the weavers often are. It is an odd thing for the squire of Kingston Hall to come to Parliament as the weavers' triend. I have the authority of the medical gentleman who relates the circumstance, to publish the following:

"It is, as I may say, within the shadow of Kingston Hall that I was sent for some time ago to see the family of a working man, some of the children being ill. I was sent for as medical officer of the Poor Law Union. I am not that now; but I was then. I found the family without bedding, and almost without covering of any kind, even to lie on the floor with. I saw the husband at work in the fields, and he told me he had no money, and had none to get. His wife said the some thing. I inquired of his master, who farms a large breadth of land, near Sturminster Marshall, and he said the man was a very industrious and sober man, that he thought the family was only so poor because they did not manage well, but that he was not so badly off as he said; he had 8s. a week'; this was pay day, and he had a month's wages to get—32s. I then returned, and asked the man why he had imposed on me, saying, they had no money to get anything for the children that were ill, and had no money to receive, when, in fact, he had 32s. to get that very evening. The man said it was more than he knew of if he had 32s., or any number of shillings to receive.

"I thought this very strange; and as I had time to make the inquiry, I made it. Going back to the farmer's house, I said, it is within a little of the time of paying your men : if you please I will just stay and see that man convicted of a falsehood with my own eyes; he still says he has no money to receive, and has not received any.

What can the man mean?

"Why" said the farmer, he is a very good, industrious, quiet man, himself-a very good man, but they don't manage at home, some way. Our people hereabout are always running out of provisions before they get their money; and, you see, we are obliged to get credit for them. Nobody would trust them if we did not go security. So I dare say the man has some shop debt to pay with part of his wages. But come into the parlour Sir; come in and take a glass of wine; you cannot stand all that time at the door.

"I saw the drift the matter was taking, and resolved to get to the bottom of it. I did not go in. I stood to see the men paid; and when the farmer was at last obliged to tell me that he sent his men to the shopkeeper, his brother-in-law, who paid them, I said I would go there. I did not know then, but I soon afterwards discovered that a messenger had been sent to the shopkeeper, to put him on his guard as to me. I was pressingly invited into the parlour to a glass of wine, or any thing else, as at the farm-house. I declined. The result was, that the man had nothing to get; instead of 32s. to receive, he was about 15s. in debt, and had been so for a long time, after paying his month's wages.

"All the men were obliged to deal there. All were led into debt just enough to bind them to that shop. They could never get clear, consequently they had to take any articles of provision, of whatever inferior quality, at whatever extravagant prices they were offered at, and could not refuse. Moreover, they were bound to the employer by the same means, obliged to bear any insolence or oppression because they could not leave him : this debt of 16s, was as a chain upon their necks. The man said to me after leaving the shop, " Now I have got 32s., or the worth of 32s., for my month's work? And he said he would have left that master if he could have got rid of this shop debt; but he had not been able to pay it, and he forced he never would resorted to the usual custom of sending round to the farmers a message requesting they would not employ this man. They, as is usual, in such cases, did not give him work. He was soon glad to go back and beg the pardon of this one, and seek to be taken on again, for his large family of children, and himself and wife, were starving. But no he could get no work there; he must go into the workhouse. So to qualify the family for the workhouse, they must sell their furniture. That was sold and the money spent; and as they were about to go to the union, the farmer came and said- You need not go; I require a hand, and will give you work.' Had the man refused to take this work, he would have been proceeded against as a rogue and a vagabond, for refusing to maintain his wife and family. And this was his punishment for having dared to leave one mustor to look

His account of losing his furniture was, that had ones resolved on secking work with another that had been and been the him.

Now this took place within the shadow, not liverally, but almost literally, of Kingston Hall, Mr. Bankes's residence. And in that part of Dorset, it is a custom notorious to everybody, that men are thus compelled to work for any master, for any wages, bearing any oppression that may be offered to them.

Next to the oddity of Mr. Bankes coming out of Dorset -- and, of all places, out of the north-eastern parts of Dorset, to be a poor man's advocate in London, is that of Lord George Bentinck, who followed him in the debate, lumenting the increase of female prostitution, which would follow, he said, the increased importtation of French silk dresses. But of this, no more for the present.

AGRICULTURE.

HUSBANDRY RECOVERING FROM "PROTECTION."

The practical and rational tone which all discussions on agriculture amongst farmers are now assuming, fully bears out all we have said as to the direct and immediate value of Free Trade to the business of husbandry. Lords and squires may whine and cant about their fears for farmers, or their sympathy for labourers, and may asseverate that the cultivation of land will go back, and the demand for rural labour fall off, in consequence of a Free Trade in corn, but nobody believes them. Their ery of" wolf" has been too long continued to excite any other feeling than that of pity and contempt towards such purblind politicians. Farming land become worse cultivated! Rural labour less in demand! Why, the very propositions excite a smile with those who know what is the present state of English farming, and the actual demand for agricultural labour. The land is not now half cultivated. The amount of labour employed is scarcely sufficient for a system of half cultivation. there is an abundance of labour seeking, longing, begging for employment; there is capital to any amount ready to be employed in farming wherever land can be obtained on lease, free from obsolete rules, and landlord-imposed burdens. Hear what the farmers say upon this subject. Our readers are probably aware of the character Norfolk has attained for improved farming-and justly, for the average cultivation of Norfolk is high, very high, as compared with other counties—yet in Norfolk land is not nearly as well cultivated as it ought to be with a view to profitable farming; and there is generally believed to be in that county a superabundance of the agricultural population; that superabundance, however, is only apparent, for the general adoption of very moderate improvements amongst the Norfolk farmers would demonstrate that there is no superfluity of labour. And the farmers are aware of these things. A striking illustration of this is to be found in a very interesting discussion at the North Walsham Farmers' Club, which we find reported in the Mark Lane Express. The subject of discussion was, "On increasing the demand for labour"—a topic ovidently suggested by the supposed superabundance of rural labour to which we have alluded.

The following extracts form, incidentally, complete answers to the Parliamentary harangues of the monopolists, the self-styled "farmors friends," the professing patrons of the agricultural labourers. The first speech we find reported is that of Mr. Gower, who said:

oannot speak definitely, and will merely affirm that the are rage is low, considering the nature of the soi', which is generally speaking, suitable to almost any rotation. I would carnestly impress the members with the belief that capital employed in labour is a most profitable investment indirectly, as well as immediately, for by increasing the means of the labourer, it enables him to buy more of the farmer's produce. I would suggest the following alterations in farm practice-green cropping and stall feeding. It is an underlable fact, that double the quantity of stock may be maintained by feeding them in open yards, or, what is still more preferable, in covered boxes or stalls, and the extra manure thus made would amply repay the extra labour,"

And he referred to his own practice, thus teaching by example:

"I would beg to refer you to our report of last year for a system of cropping. I have begun in carnest to carry out that system, and shall have a piece of tye after wheat ready for soiling at the end of next mouth, which I intend to follow by tares, thus seeming a succession through the summer, and I think I may say that by this plan I shall employ two men and two boys extra for 26 weeks."

He then mentioned some of the obstacles to good farming which our readers will recognise as amongst the evils we have designated as landlord-

"Another important improvement and source of increased employment for the labourer is the better management of our fences, which have hitherto been great obstacles to good farming, as it is very evident, they injure the crops in their vicinity, and are nurseries for weeds which are continually fouling the land. When we consider the fact, that in overy 100 acres of land there are 10 in fences, it will be seen how desirable it is to do away with bull of them. I may be told that the landlord may object to trese alterations: but I believe this will rarely occur, as I am bound to say my experience has taught me the gratifying fact, that the landlord will always appreciate the efforts of the tenant to provide full employment for the poor. I am aware this question opens a wide field for discussion on the restrictive chaises of leases, and I do hope the enlightened spirit of the age will tend to simplify these. I do not intend to enter into this subject; but surely is would be sufficient security for the handlord if the tenant be restricted from taking two white straw crops in succession, except when the land has laid more than one year in grass, and if he be required to consume the produce upon the farm."

We suspect Mr. Gower spoke rather in the spirit of prophecy than of the actual system, when he said landlords will not oppose the removal of obstacles to good farming. Landlords will not object to remove the obstacles their prejudices offer to good farming when they find they cannot otherwise keep up their rentals. Till then, we doubt.

Mr. Cubitt, who is himself a capital farmer, said: "I am aware that I am in the presence of many farmers whose example I might well follow, but I'll defy any practical man to go through the eastern part of this county -yes, even this far famed county of Norfolk—without sceing thousands of acres most slovenly cultivated for the want of additional labour. To improve the condition of the labourers we must endeavour to keep them fully employed at fair wages, without which all other attempts will be perfectly futile; and I cannot but think it would be to the interest of every farmer in this county to allow each of his Jabourers a few rods of land for the growth of vegetables. Such a system judiciously carried out would tend more than any other to improve the character and the morals of the agricultural abourers, and I think it would assist in destroying the influence of that greatest of all his enemies--the village beer shop. But there is another point worthy of attention. It ought to be the duty of overy employer to watch over the interests of his labourers, and he has various opportunities of adding to their comforts with but little pecuniary inconvenience to himself; and depend on it, if a farmer expects to have good and faithful servants, he must first teach them that he feels interested in their welfare, and he will then achieve an object of no small importance to his own indi-

Mr. Cubitt then adverted to the question of the demand for labour, saying :

"I conscientiously believe that if all the land in this county was properly and profitably cultivated there would at the present day be a very great insufficiency of agricultural labourers. I shall commence with the root culture, and I challenge any practical furmer to ride through the more fer tile districts of this county without seeing a great annual loss in the turnip crops, arising from ineffectual tillage and the want of manual labour, a loss amounting on some farms to many tons per sere, which would more than repay the proper cultivation of the whole crop (manuring excepted). A heavy crop of turnips cannot now be grown where land has been long cultivated with that plant (as in Norfolk) without great care and trouble."

This points to the fact we have more than once mentioned, that there is a too close and bigotted adherence to the four-course system in districts where the farming is far above the average.

Amongst many other useful and practical suggestions, Mr. Cubitt thus mentions the importance of stock-feeding, and the landlord-imposed obstacles to its extensive adoption:

"Every farmer has become aware of the advantages of hox or stall-feeding, but I regret that that excellent system is not likely to become general amongst tenant farmers without the assistance of their landlords, for the majority of farm buildings in this neighbourhood are now one of the chief obstacles to good farming, being not only dilapidated, but constructed in such a manner as to tend more to the destruction than the preservation of the manure. In feeding cattle, I would recommend every farmer to make himself acquainted rar, grower, who said:

Of its amount of agricultural libour in East Norfolk I with cut hay, straw, chaff, or other provender; it makes excellent food in addition to turnips, is generally relished by all descriptions of stock, and enables him to keep an in-

And he afterwards, with reference to the same subject, added:

" I would call your attention to the unprofitable manner in which our artificial gruses are consumed. Where artificiel grass is required for fattening purposes, it might be cut up and mixed with a portion of boiled linseed; and at the early part of the scason it is advisable to cut and mix dry provender with green food. This plan, more than all others (of mixing our grasses) would prove a great saving, and increase the demand for labour."

Mr. Mott, who stated himself not to be a farmer, gave a very interesting account of some contrasts in farming he had met with in Dorsetshire. After giving some detail of the Rev. Mr. Huxtable's management of a farm of 230 acres, on which he pays 12l. a week for labour, Mr. Mott observed :

"We ought all to be much indebted to Mr. Huxtable for making these experiments, for they plainly show that capital may be applied, and labour profitably employed, from an improved system of farming; and I think you will all allow that these experiments on grazing are of the greatest value just now, when, from the depreciation which may take place in the price of corn, the attention of the farmer must more than ever be directed to that which is the most important and the most profitable."

Can we have more direct testimony to the fact that protection has provented the farmer from directing his attention " to that which is the most important and the most profitable?" And in the following reference to the Blackmoor Vale, we learn the more ordinary aspect of the state of Dorsetshire farming. Mr. Mott said :

"In the Vale of Blackmore (a few miles from Mr. Huxtable's) a friend of mine has some farms quite saturated with water, which he proposed to one of his tenants to drain, either finding all the labour himself and charging five per cent, or fluding the tiles if he would find labour. Both propositions were declined, as the farmer was perfectly satisfied to go on as he had done for the last twenty years. Now, I would ask, Is such a man fit to be a farmer? Do you think such a man, even if our worst fears are realised, can possibly be benefited by such a system? Would be not reap thirty per cent, by laying out his five per cent.? In other words would not the demand for labour be profitably increased Protection certainly has not benefited, and never can benefit such a man; and I fear he is by no means a solitary instance. But mark the consequences: Here is a man, with the labourers around him calling (as Mr. Huxtable lms justly observed) for labour and for bread; and he refuses to employ them, even when it might be done profitably to him self. The labourer is willing and auxious to work, but there is no one to hire him. A large supply and no demand; and what is the consequence? The labourer is half starved, and the land is half-cultivated. His miserable cottage and poverty stricken appearance in many parts of the county too plainly show that the rate of wages is generally very far below the average of the best cultivated districts. It is evident that such a state of things must continue wherever such a mise-rable system prevails. The land must be uncultivated, the tonant impoverished, the labourer degraded, until the agriculturist becomes persuaded, by the success of repeated ex periments, that capital may be safely invested, and that alteration in his practice may be profitably made in order to increase the demand for labour.

How much more of this is really attributable to the landlord than the farmer, we shall not now stay to distinguish; but in truth, monopoly-hopeless, helpless reliance on monopoly,-is the great cause of the backwardness of English agriculture.

AGRICULTURAL AUTIVITY. PLAX CULTURE:

Already agriculture gives signs that the incubus of "protection" is being loosened. Even now, with a prospect of reversionary Free Trade, farmers are making up then, minds "to do comething." They have ceased toregard the dreary and mindless orations which the Nowdegates, the Lord George Bentineks, and that sort of men persist in inflicting on the House of Commons, Many and various will be the resources which farmers in different localities will find to be within their reach when they have fully learnt to depend upon their own exertions, rather than an Act of Parliament, for profit. Now, besides the improvements which may be made in the existing system, there is a new branch of husbandry of almost universal application, which is attracting very much of the attention of the more intelligent gentlemen and farmers; we allude to the culture of flax. The persevering advocate of flax growing, Mr. J. Warnes-who pleasantly enough ealls himself a protectionist, from advocating the culture of an unprotected article as the means of redomption for "protected" farmers, we presume is now in London making another vigorous movement to bring the advantages of a flax crop before the agricultural community. He foels that this is the time when farmers are prepared to adopt how plans, and to seek from their own skill that protection which monopoly neverafforded them. That gentleman has favoured us with two letters, which have been addressed to him on the subject since the publication of his letter, a few weeks sluce, in The LEAQUE; they show that men of the right sort are considering the subject. The first letter is from Mr. George Hope, the well-known Froe Trader, of Fenton Barns. It is as Fenton Barns, 11th March, 1816. Sin,-I notice in THE LEAGUE that you purpose publishing a volume on the cultivation of flax, &c. If I will be able to get the book through any Ediuburgh bookseller, you may put me down for a copy. Some 10 years ago I grew nine imperial acres of flax, but the difficulty of obtaining labour in this part of the country made it two years before I could turn it into each. In the end I had to put up a simple machine, driven by a horse, to sid the scutching, or I would not have got it done at all. The flax was sold at Perth and Dundee, where it fetoled the very top price, if I remember right, 60%, per ton. I also sold the seed at a high price; the quality being excellent, it was re-sold for sowing. I found the trouble of personal superintendence greater than I could afford, in the cleaning of the flax, but were it made a trade and aided by machinery, the cultivation of it would pay the farmer handsomely, as, after deducting all expenses, it left a clear profit of 10t. per induction of the could be considered as a cons deducting all expenses, it left a clear profit of 10t. per imperial acre, which was certainly good, considering I was a novice at the business. Your efforts to call the attention of the community to this source of industry, entitle you to their warmest thanks; accept of mine, and believe me, Sir, respectfully, your most obedient servant,

John Warnes, Esq. George Hope.

This is practical and decisive testimony to the advantages of a crop of flax; it also points to the only difficulty in the way of a very general adoption of flax growing, viz., the deficiency of men skilled in the preparation of the fibre for market. To remedy this is the point to which Mr. Warnes is now directing his efforts. Of his plans for that purpose we shall say a word or two presently.

The following is the second letter we have referred to; it is from a gentleman of Manchester, Mr. C. Rigg:

Office, Dickinson-street, Manchester, Feb. 18, 1846. Dear Sin,—Your obliging letter of the 16th i.st., and interesting accompaniments, reached my hands this morning; the receipt of which I hasten to acknowledge, and thank you, most cordially, for jour polite attention to my

Although I am neither a grower of flax nor a manufacturer of linen—yet, from the experience of a long life devoted to commercial pursuits—a sincere love for my country, and my kind-and being not an inattentive observer of what has been enacted around me -I have always regretted that flax cul ture has never been made a prominent national object. In Ireland, in the days of Isaac Corry, it was so made; but, unfortunately, the linen trade was strangled by protection. And why? Because the protectionists were bats and moles, similar to the bats and moles of our own day, and could not (or would not) see the difference between encouragement regards the beneficial effects which would result to agriculture, and the linen manufacture, no object can be of more national importance than the growth of flux.

With the exception of a portion of wool, all raw materials for our textile fabrics, are drawn from abroad. Our climate is unfavourable to the existence and labours of the silkworm. Cotton is a plant of other regions; but for the culture and growth of flax many large tracts of land in the United Kingdom are pre-eminently favourable. In fact, flar will grow in ordinary seasons, and come to perfection, on most soils of the United Kingdom, if properly attended To show that it is not a very coy plant, it will grow to a considerable height from seed put between the folds of an old and much worn wetted blanket (in a similar way that eress and mustard are reared on ship-board, for salad.)

I am fully persuaded, from all I have read, heard, and seen, relative to the flax plant, that by the aid of chemical science, and with proper management, its cultivation will repay all and every outlay and attention bestowed upon it; and beyond this, that it will yield to the cultivator larger profits than those derivable from the growth of corn; or, indeed, from any other vegetable substance whatsoever.

Whenever the time arrives-and may it soon arrive !-that flax growing and the linen manufacture meet with the cucouragement their importance demand, in a national point of view-it may then be truly said that agriculture and manufacture go hand in hand; and foreign countries will soon learn, and understand, the value and effect of this union.

With very few exceptions, neither agricultural nor manufacturing skill, capital, and industry, have ever been brought to bear with sufficient power on the culture of flax, and the manufacturing appliances have brought to gigantic growth both the silk and extent fabricants.

growth both the silk and cotton fabrics—the raw materials of which are brought to us from foreign climes. And how does it happen that we are such large importers of linen cloth, as well as of flax, which could be grown at home; and which, in the preparation for the loom, would give em-population?

If the landowners and the occupiers of land will but respond to the call of the manufacturers of homo-grown flax, properly prepared, and suitable for the loom and the twine croft, our merchants (among whom the writer presumes to class himself) will soon turn back the tide of linen imports, but he overwhelming flow of British exportations. by the overwhelming flow of British exportations.

Believe me, dear Sir, your most faithful and obdt. servant, To John Warnes, jun., Esq., Trimingham, Norfolk.

That flax is a highly profitable cropseems to be generally admitted; but a notion has got into the heads of the landowners that it is a scourging crop, and therefore its growth is almost universally prohibited by the agreements under which the tenant farmers of England hold their farms. This notion is, however, altogether erromeous. When the land is in good heart, it has been found that not only does a crop of flax not exhaust the soil, but that in fact it is a very good preparation for wheat. Mr. Warnes, and other flax-growers of Norfolk, have found that their wheat and barley crops, after flax, are at least as heavy as when they fall in the usual routine of the four-course system; that when flax culture is carried on in connection with lineaed-feeding (as it ought always to be), there is no crop which affords such an abundant source of reproduction. The manure made from boiled linseed is as superior to oilcake ma. nure as ollcake manure is to the ordinary straw-yard manure. Instead, therefore, of flax exhausting the soil, there is no more ready way of increasing the fertility of the soil than by growing linseed and consuming it upon the farm. And here again we meet with an instance of the benefit to the farmer of the access to cheap grain when the corn trade is free. Not only is the feeding properties of boiled linseed and chaff greatly increased by the addition of a certain portion of barley, rye, or maize meal, but the cattle, being induced by the admix. ture to eat more than they would of linseed alone, become fat more quickly. This is the grand point for the farmer. Quick feeding is profitable feeding; slow feeding, the reverse. Flax, then, will furnish the means, not merely of keeping up, but of increasing the fertility of the land. But then the full profit of the crop depends upon the preparation and sale of the fibre. The mode of preparing the stalk is by steeping it in water so long as to separate the woody portion from the fibre without injuring the tenacity of the latter. Some skill and observation, the results of experience, are required for conducting that operation. The stalks having been then dried and bleached, are scutched—that is, beaten either by hand or machinery to separate the woody parts from the fibre. This part of the work also requires some skill; at all events, some instruction from those accustomed to These operations may be either carried on by each grower upon his own premises, or the grower may sell the stalks of his flax, after he has beaten out the seed, to flax dressers, whose business it is to prepare the fibre for market. And the latter, we think, is the plan which will best suit the business of the farmer, and most tend to promote the growth of flax. The best practical means of providing for both are those suggested by Mr. Warnes. He says men are wanted who understand the growth and subsequent preparation of the fibre for market; and the way to supply that want is to establish a society for training workmen in the art. This must be effected by an extensive co-operation amongst those who would promote the improvement of agriculture and encourage new means of profitably employing our rural population. For the latter object, flux dressing has peculiar advantages; it is performed under cover, in the winter season, when other work is scarce; and women and boys may earn good wages at the employment. A society being formed, a committee might hire a farm in a central situation, where the growth and preparation of flax would be the primary objects. To this establishment, conducted of course by persons skilled in the art, men. would be admitted for the purpose of learning the business, so that in a very few years skilled flux dressers would be found in every district. In order to render such a model flax farm complete, the best modes of using the seed for feeding should be in constant operation; and thus men, alive to the full value of the flax culture, would be regularly furnished to all farmers or landowners who might wish to adopt it. This is one of the directions agriculture will take from the impulse Free Trade must afford, and is a signal instance of the utter folly of supposing that agricultural activity and rural skill can be promoted by a system which prevents farmers from relying on their own industry for success.

WHY IS THE DELUSION KEPT UP FOR THREE YEARS?

It is plain that farmers have got over their scar of Free Trade-that like men of business they are preparing to accept the benefits, and guard against the difficulties of a new order of things. This is obvious from the Mark Lane Express review of the present state of the corn trade:

"Though the opposition to Sir Robert Peel's new Corn Law has not been carried on so vigorously this week (several of the amendments, of which notice had been previously given, having been withdrawn), still it is very probable that the final settlement of the measure may be delayed for some the final settlement of the measure may be delayed for some weeks longer, and the trade be kept in a state of suspense. The wants of the millers have now become so pressing that they can no longer do without old wheat; and it is prely clear that, when the liberation of bouded does take place, a very extensive demand may be reckened on. We are, consequently, disposed to think that, happen, what may the present value of bread stuffs will be maintained; and we fell confident that, within a comparatively short period after the release of the lock wheat, any slight depression which may thereby be occasioned will be recovered. Judging free its obliged them to accode to the terms of sellers. A rise under such circumstances is much more likely to be maintained than one caused by speculation; the upward movement having, in the present instance, been wholly produced by the applies felling short of the quantity required for actual and immediate consumption."

This, like all business views of the corn trade, shows how closely the farmer's interest is identified with a steady non-speculative demand, and how much he is injured by the fluctuations and uncertainties caused

We believe there are not two opinions amongst farmers as to the advantage of immediate over deferred Free Trade in corn. Hear what the Norwich Mercury. a journal deriving its agricultural intelligence from the best sources, says upon the subject :

"The corn trade, as might be auticipated from the political movements, has been in a most torpid state, and will probably remain so, until the great question of Free Trade be settled. There seems but one opinion, now that the result of the debate is known, as to the policy of having it immediate, instead of the deferred plan of the Government. We question, however, if those most interested in it—the tenants—will stir in the matter; and indeed there is but little encouragement to do so, after the great majority in the House of Commons against Mr. Villiers's proposition for total and immediate repeal, the debate on which proves, we think, that the souse of the house is exactly contrary to its Note. It is admitted now to be a sop to the upper house, a boon to the landlords, which we fear will be given AT THE TENANTS' EXPENSE.

ANTI-FEUDAL MOVEMENT.

It seems that the proprietors of entailed estates in Scotland have discovered that in retaining the fetters of feudalism on land, they are in fact restricting their own enjoyment of their own property. Landowners will become more and more aware of that truth, as soon as the delusions, kept up, perhaps, rather than created by the Corn Laws, have been completely dissipated. The following paragraph marks an important and hopeful movement amongst the Scotch landowners:

"THE LAW OF ENTAIL.—A meeting of the proprietors of entailed estates in Scotland was held in the Hopetoun Rooms on Thursday, for 'the purpose of considering the great national evils connected with the law of entail, and the propriety of an immediate application to the legislature thereupon. The meeting being a preliminary one, the representatives of the press were not allowed access to it. We have, however, been furnished with the following outline of the proceedings :- Sir David Baird, Bart., in the absence of the Marquis of Breadalbane (from whom a communication was made to the meeting) was called to the chair, and gave a lucid statement of the injurious effects of the law of entail in preventing free commerce in land, and particularly as preventing those improvements now rendered necessary to meet the expected competition of foreign corn, and the adjustment of rights between landlord and tenant. As was to be expected, when a subject of such momentous interest was brought before them for the first time, there were differ ent opinions stated by the proprietors present, as to the proper mode of following up the movement. We understand, however, that a unanimous resolution was entered into, remitting to a committee, of which the most noble Marquis of Breadalbane was to be chairman, and Sir David Baird, Bart., the convener, to consider as to the best mode of seeking t legislative remedy for the evils of the entail law, and to call other and more extended meetings as they might deem proper. The meeting, which was pretty numerously attended, lasted about two hours; and only one feeling was expressed as to the great national evil inflicted by the law in question; and subscriptions were entered into for carrying forward the magnetical and defeating the magnetical evil. forward the movement, and defraying the necessary expenses."—Edinburgh Witness.

The present state of the great mass of English landowners proves that the cumbrous machinery of settlements and entails has only preserved to aristocratic families the shell, and not the substance, of a large domain.

So general and heavy are the incumbrances upon the estates of the landed proprietors, that with the appearance and burthens of ownership they are little more than receivers and distributors of (nominally) their rents-In many cases, the political influence which the control of the property gives is by far the most beneficial part of the nominal owners' share of an estate. Hence the desperate struggles to retain monopoly and high rents by means of artificial scarcity. Indeed, the intensity of any landowners' protectionist ardour is a pretty good indication of the extent of his incumbrances. All the high-flying "farmers' friends," with very fow exceptions, are chin-deep in mortgages; to expect improvement of land in the hands of such men is to expect to gather grapes from thorns. There is nothing to be done with them but to deal with them as with other insolvents, that is, to sell the estates, and distribute the produce amongst the creditors. In most cases, with good management, a surplus would remain which might be really their own, and wherewith they would be far more happy and useful members of society.

AGRICULTURAL CORRESPONDENCE. . The following calculations, which have been forwarded to us by a correspondent, are said to have superiod some attention in a midland county. We see her in the see beginning, like other, men of bushage, to county nise and investigate the circumstances which affect their own business:

FREE TRADE o. PROTECTION.

No. 1.—100 acres of poor land, with protection, farmed under the old system. Wheat, 7a.; Barley, 3a. dd.; Onts, 2a. fd.; por bushel. The rent los. per core.

25 acres, fallow				~
95 " wheat, 4 loads per acro, 100 loads.	at 6	δø.	• • •	175	0	(
20 , saeds, beans, or tares, less expens	98_		• •	20	0	1
10 , outs, 4 grs. por acro; or, barley	, 3	Q m	H,,	100	0	(
100			٠.'	300
Year's rent, 100 neros, at 15s., "5l., rates and taxes, 25l.	0	0 (0	000
men. 50/.	15.	0 ()
Capital employed, 500%; interest 15 pr ct.	5	0 (0
No. 2.—The same, with Free Trade, supposit	() () () air	educ	od	tc 6s.; barley, 2s. 6d.; and outs, 2s. por bushel. Rent 10s.

per acre.	of mir.from r	VIDER (-1)	1401	t zon.
05 00000/6031	•	•	£	s. d.
25 , wheat, 100 loads, at 25s.	••	••	125 25	0 0 0 0
25 , oats, 4 qrs. ; or, barley, 3 q	19. ; 3/. 4 s.	pracre	80	0 0
100 Year's rent, 100 acres, at 10s., 50%; 1	rates		230	0 0
and taxes, 18/ Keep, three horses, 60/.; wages, men. 40/.	£ 68 two	0 0
Interest on 450/, capital employed, a	100	0_0_
137 per cent	62	0 0
Capital employed, with protection, Preo Trade	230 £500 450	•	oft,	£75 62
Capital less, with Prec Trade 15 per cent on 450%, £07 10 0 Profit 62 0 0	50	profi	t loss	13

No. 3.—100 acres of poor land, under protection, farmed on an improved system, with wheat 7s.; barley, 3s. 9d.; oats, 3s. On lease for 21 years, thorough drained. Rent, 11. ner acre.

Loss by Free Trade .. 5 10 0

25 acres, fallow, seeds, tares 25 ,, barley, 5 qrs.; 125 qrs. at 30s 25 ,, beans, seeds, or tares, 4t, per acre 25 ,, wheat, 6 loads; 150 at 35s.		•••	187 100 20 2	0
100	5 0	0	550	0	-
men, 100%	0 0
Interest on capital employed, 1000/., at 174 per cent 17	5 0	0			_

* This was 100/., and interest 12} per cent., 1254. The same, under Free Trade, supposing the price of wheat reduced to 5s.; barley, 3s.; oats, 2s. per bushel;

unt corn rents 10s, per acre.
05 0000 6:11		£	в.	d.
25 acres, fallow, seeds, tares, &c.	• •
25 ,, barley, 5 grs.; 125 grs. at 24s		150	0	0
25 , seeds, beans, or tares, 31. per acre		75	0	-0
25 ,, wheat, 6 loads; 150 at 25s	• •	187	10	0
100		412	10	0
Year's rent, at 15s./per acre, 751.; rates				•
and taxes, 151 £ 00 0	0
Keep, four horses, 60%; wages, four
nion, 100/ 100 0	-O ··
Interest on capital employed, 800%, at 201 per cent	0
412 10	0
Capital, with Free Trade £800 interest	•	l por	CO	nt.
" protection 1000 "	17	1	"

In favour of Free Trade ... 2) per cent.

In favour of Free Trade

The calculation is No. 3 is made, supposing the farmer to lose 500, in feeding stock for the sake of the manure; and I feel quite satisfied that if the system was carried out fairly, it would prove still more in favour of Free Trade principles.

A rise in the value of dorn increases the cost of producing; it therefore does not give the farmer the increased profit that might be supposed at first sight, especially when corn is consumed to a great extent in feeding stock; then the high price produces a loss upon the stock fed, much greater than the grain upon the corn sold. upon the corn sold,

A REAL INUNDATION OF FOOD (NOT FROM TAMBOFF) FREE OF DUTY .- ALARMING TO THE PROTECTIONISTS. -The East of Fife Agricultural Society's Show, which lately gratified the good people of that district by a very maga dinner, at which the principal speakers were Sir Raiph Austruther, Lord W. Douglas, Mr. Gillespie Smyth, &c. At, or after, this dinner, a statement was made of a very striking character, on which the editor of the Fife Herald has the following remarks:—"One of the most remarkable incidents of the evening was a statement of an extraordinary nature by Lord William Douglas, which, when made public, will most assuredly startle the country from one end to another, as it certainly did those who listened to it at the meeting. His lordship gravely stated that he had, on the previous day, received from his son, who is at present at Constantinople, a letter with the marvellous intelligence that, in a district where famine had for some time prevailed, the people had been providentially saved by a fall of manna which covered the ground to the depth of about two inches. (Pro di-gi-ous! exclaims our P. D. This, if it came near ourselves, would be far worse for the 'agricultural interest' than the repeal of the Corn Laws!) It was further stated that the son had partaken of this singular species of food. Lord William, however, does not anticipate that any phenomenon of this extraordinary description will visit this country, and ergo the lauded proprietors and the farmers, must trust to their QWD resources.

The general belief in the political clubs is, that the measures of the Government, for the immediate reduction and eventual abolition of the duty on foreign corn, will be carried in the House of Lords by a majority of from 25 to 80.—Observer of Saturday.

The net income of the property and income tax, as appears by a Parliamentary paper, published on Eriday, was in the year ending the beh April, 1844, in Great Britain, 0,872,7564, 128,656, and in the year ending the on April last, 0,808,004,188,184, and in the year ending the on April last, 0,808,004,188,184, and in the year ending the one last, 0,808,004,188,184, and the year ending the one of the property of t

REVIEW.

The Life and Correspondence of the Marquess of Wellesley. By R. R. R. Pearce, Esq. London: Bontley.

In these instructive and amusing volumes, Mr. Pearco has given a vory able summary of the life of statesman, whose reputation and rewards have been very inadequate for the services he rendered his country. This is in some degree owing to the fact that the most brilliant part of his career, his Government of India, was cotemporaneous with a war which taxed all the energies and engressed all the attention of the British nation, and that his less conspicuous, but not less useful services, as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, wore blended with discussions which had little attraction in themselves, and less importance in their consequences. Referring our readers to the work itself for the details of Lord Wellesley's laborious career, we shall merely regard him as an onlightened friend of education and Free Trade, at a time when neither of these great principles met favour from men in power.

As a patron of education, Lord Wellesley's most conspicuous exertions were his efforts to establish the college of Fort William in Calcutta. His proface to the regulations intended for that institution are as creditable to him as they are disgraceful to the monopolist who then ruled in Leadenhall Street:

"Whereas it has pleased the Divine Providence to favour the counsels and arms of Great Britain in India with a continued course of prosperity and glory; and, whereas, by the victorious issue of several successive wars, and by the happy result of a just, wise, and moderate system of policy, extensive territories in Hindostan, and in the Decean, have been subjected to the dominion of Circut Britain, and under the Government of the Honourable the English East India Company, in process of time a great and powerful empire Company, in process of time a great and powerful empire has been founded, comprehending many populous and opulent provinces, differing in language, manners, and habits, and respectively accustomed to be governed according to peculiar usages, doctrines, and laws; and whereas, the sacred duty, true interest, honour, and policy of the British nation require that effectual provision should be made at all times for the great great areas. times for the good government of the British curpire in India, and for the prosperity and happiness of the people in-habiting the same; and many wise and salutary regulations have accordingly been enacted from time to time by the Go-vernor General in Conneil with the benevolent intent and purpose of administering to the said people their own laws, usages, and customs in the mild and benignant spirit of the British constitution; and whereas, it is indispensably necessary, with a view to secure the due execution and administration of the said wise, salutary, and benevolent regulations in all time to come, as well as of such regulations and laws as may hereafter be enacted by the Honourable the English East India Company that the persons exercising high and important functions in the government of India should be properly qualified to discharge the arduous duties of their respective offices and stations; should be sufficiently instructed in the general principles of literature and science; and should possess a competent knowledge as well of the laws, government, and constitution of Great Britain as of the several native languages of Hindostan and the Deccan, and of the laws, usages, and customs of the provinces which the said civil servants respectively may be appointed to govern; and whereas, the early interruption in Europe of the education and studies of the persons destined for the civil service of the Honourable East India Company, precludes them from acquiring, previously to their arrival in India, a sufficient foundation in the general principles of literature and science, or a competent knowledge of the laws, government, and constitution of Great Britain; and many qualifications of constitution of Great Britain; and many qualifications of constitution of Great Britain; and many qualifications of the constitution of Great Britain; and many qualifications of the care of the constitution of the constitution of Great Britain; and many qualifications of the care of the constitution of Great Britain; and many qualifications of the care of the car extions essential to the proper discharge of the ardnous and important duties of the civil service in India cannot be otherwise fully attained than by a regular course of education and study in India, conducted under the superintendence, direction, and control of the supreme authority of the Government of these possessions; and whereas, no public institution now exists in India under which the junior servants appointed at an earlier period of life to the civil service of the Honourable the English East India Company, can attain the necessary means of qualifying themselves for the high and arduous trusts to which they are respectively destined; and no system of discipline or education has been established in India for the purpose of directing and regulating the studies of the said junior servants, or of guiding their conduct upon their first arrival in India, or of forming, improving, or preserving their morals, or of encouraging them to maintain the honour of the British name in India by a regular and orderly course of industry, prudence; integrity, and religion; the most noble Richard Marquess Wellesley, Knight of the illustrious Order of St. Patrick, &c. &c., Governor Coneral in Council, deeming the extrablishment of such an institution and system of discipline, education, and study, to be requisite for the good government and stability of the British empire in India, and for the maintenance of the interests and honour of the Honourable English East India Company, his lordship in conneil hath therefore enacted as follows.

The rules which followed were truly excellent, and show a thorough acquaintance with the deficiencies of the Company's government and servants, and with the exigencies of British India. But this accuracy and extent of knowledge was a great cause of the failure of the plan:

Both the college and its founder were, however, doomed to meet with the most severe disappointment. The Court of Directors, while professing to applaud the design and unequivocally sanction the principles on which Lord Wellesley had soled, for some reason never sufficiently explained, ordered the college to be abolished. The greatness of the expense was the excuse put forward; but the truth appears to be, that the men of mere facts, figures, and money-bage, were not responsed out of their predilection for the old routine of mere mercantile utility; they had not sufficiently entered into Lord Wellesley's enlightened and comprehensive views for tribling the obtainer of the natives of India.

and we fear we must add, that they were actuated by some until personal piques, because the governor-general had attempted to execute, on whi ale of such magnitude, so grand a design, without previous authority from Leadenhall

Lord Wellesley wrote in the strongest terms on the subject to Lord Dartmouth:

"I think it proper to apprise your lordship (and I leave it to your discretion to use the information as you think fit) that if the Court should altimately abolish this institution, it is my fixed and unalterable resolution to propose to Parliament, immediately after my return to England, a law for the restitution of an establishment which I know to be abso-Intely requisite for the good government of these possessions, Bo convinced was I of the necessity of this institution, that I am determined to devote the remainder of my political life to the object of establishing it, as the greatest benefit which can be impurred to the public service in India, and as the best security which can be provided for the welfare of our native subjects. The Last India Company can afford the expense of the institution. If, however, this proposition be contested, on just grounds, the public ought to indemnify the Company for the amount of the charge. Without such a system of discipline and study in the early education of the civil service, it will be utterly impossible to maintain our extensive empire in India."

His expressions to Lord Castlerengh are even stronger:

"I repeat to your lordship the assurance of my unqualified contempt and abhorrence of the proceedings and propen-sities of the court of directors, and of my determination to withhold any public reprehension of the wickedness of that graceless faction until I shall be embled to chim the justice of my king and country in my place in the House of Lords, before a tribunal with whom is righteous judgment.

Mr. Wilberforce not unjustly attributed the opposition which Lord Wellesley met to the hostility of the Court of Directors to the diffusion of Christianity in England. Those who have read the life of Henry Mortyn will be at no loss to understand the opposition which the monopolists of that day of fered to the presence of pious missionaries in India. Mr. Wilberforce writes:

"My DEAR LORD W., Notwithstanding your obliging permission to me to break in upon you to day, intimated to me last night by Mr. Welledey, yet knowing that just now your time and mind must be so fully occupied, it must name rully arise rather from your friendly disposition to comply with my request than by your own desire, I have resolved not to intrude on your lordship in person; but merely to send you a few lines, which cannot, like a conversation, draw on into a length that was unintended. That I may trespossion you as shortly as possible, I will confine myself to what requires immediate mention, and is, Indeed, Indispennable

"I know not whether your lerdship line heard of the un-reasonable clamour that has been raised by the Anglo In dians in the House of Commons, against all, even the most prodeut, attempts to convert the natives of India; and more especially against missionaries. Now let me hope -a hope which I share with, I am glad to say, a considerable number of men in the House of Commons, and with many more out of it that your lordship will to morrow use your just authority in putting to flight these vain fears. The rather because the abarmists are enemies of the system which your lordship certainly established, and which I trust you will confirm and revive—that, I mean, of diffusing useful knowledge of all sorts among the natives of India; and I confess for my own part that I have always held and still retain the opinion that education, the translation and diffusion of the Scriptures and advancement in general knowledge, would be fur the most powerful agents in the great work of Christianising the ma tives of India. Your weight, thrown into the right scale will make it preponderate.

I will only add, that your lordship can scarcely conceive tif I may judge of the House of Lords from the general condition of the members of the House of Commons) how ignorant their lordships in general are likely to be respecting India, and therefore how little they are qualified to ask ques tions in commutee. When your lordship can attend, I hope you will now and then look in, and there also prevent the examination from being repidered the excuse for condemning the population of India to ignorance and darkness so long as they continue under British rule. I remember my assurance. I break off, assuring your lordship that I am, my dear Lord W., your lordship's very sincerely, "W. Wilberronce."

Mr. Pearce dwells more brieflythan we could wish on the great measures of Free Trade established by Lord Wellesley in British India, which exposed him to much culumny and persecution from the monopolist Court of Directors, and were not appreciated by the incapable successors of Mr. Pitt. At a later period Lord Wellesley came forward as a firm oppo nent of the Corn Laws, and his conduct at this crisis is justly appreciated by his biographer:

"On the termination of hostilities with America and, the Continental war, the blockades which had disarranged the confinerce of the whole world, and committed havee on all regular trade, were removed. Commercial intercourse between nation and nation, it was hoped, would return to its former channels, and peace permit industry and enterprise to exert themselves without hindrance or limitation. A vast artificial system had grown up under the restrictions of rigid blockades and acts of non intercourse. From the year 1801 to the year 1811 the average price of wheat in England was 190s, per quarter. The handed interests were resolved, if possible, to keep up this scale of prices; and anticipating that the markets would soon be glutted with foreign corn, which could be sold at a much cheaper rate, they made preparations in the Legislature to regulate the corn trade by law. On the 10th of June, 1814, a committee of the House of Lords was appointed to investigate the circumstances of the Corn Trade: In seventeen days from that date they made their report, recommending restrictions on importation. The committee were, on the 27th of June, instructed to examine witnesses on the question, and make a second report. The result of the labours of the committee was, that they recommended that so long as the average price of wheat was under 80s. per quarter, the ports should be completely closed against supplies from other countries—that till the average price of wheat attained the pivot of 80s, foreign corn should be absolutely prohibited. This was considered by the agriculturists as a very reasonable proposition, -- His. per quarter for wheat being accounted a very "low figure." Some of the witnesses were of opinion that the porus should be abut against foreign grain till the price of wheat was life, per quarter; and out of sixteen agricultural witnesses examined before the committee, but four suggested a lower standard than 80n. The second report on the corn trade was presonted on the 20th of July, 1811; but the country had not yet felt the evils of peace, the session closed without any other legislative proceeding relative to corn than the repealing the 5 tth of George III. c. 69, by which a bounty was given on its exportation.

"The recommendation of the Lords' committee produced violent tuinults in the metropolis, in the large towns, and in the manufacturing districts. Public meetings were held to petition against its adoption, and the whole country was in a state of dangerous commotion.

"The average price of wheat in some months of the year 1814 was as low as 66s, and even 60s. The a riculturists became alumed. Ruin, they declared, was impending over British agriculture; and early in the session of 1815 a bill was brought into Parliament, giving effect to the recom-mendations of the committee of the previous session, and fixing 80s, per quarter as the point at which importation could be permitted; -positively prohibiting all foreign corn as long as prices were below that mark.

"The manufacturing population petitioned and remonstrated; but as acither Leeds, Manchester, Birmingham, nor the other great seats of commercial enterprise, were then represented in Parliament, their expostulations were unbeeded. Riots took place in many places, and a strong feeling of discontent and disaffection to the Government was manifested in different parts of Great Britain.

"The bill was warmly contested in Parliament, but the influence which the nomination boroughs secured to its promoters in the House of Commons enabled them to command decided majorities in its favour. At an early stage of the Corn Bill in the House of Commons a division took place on the proposition that 72s, should be substituted instend of 80s. The motion was negatived by an overwhelming majority; there being 35 votes for it; against it 164. On the 3d of March, the vicinity of the Houses of Parliament was thronged by a vast multitude in a high state of excitement. Several members were stopped and interrogated: some were roughly handled; and the houses of many of the advocates of the new regulations were visited by the populace. The military were called out; and it required great exertions to keep the streets clear. On this evening (the 3d of March) the gallery of the House of Commons was closed against strangers. Another attempt was made to mitigate the stringency of the law by making 74s, the standard instead of 80s. There were, however, but 77 votes in favour of the proposal, and 208 against it. On the 8th of May, on the bringing up of the bill, the advocates of Free Trade made another attempt to throw out the bill. -An amendment was moved that the bill should be read that day six months, and it was supported by many able speeches; but the amendment was lost, there being, 50 for it, 108 against it. A final effort was made to substitute a lower pivot price than 80s., leaving it to the house to determine what the precise sum should be: 78 members supported this motion, and 184 opposed it. On the 10th of March, the last attempt was made to arrest the progress of the bill; 77 voted for throwing out the hill, -245 for it. The Corn Bill passed the House of Commons by a majority of 168.

"In the House of Lords the measure passed with less difficulty. It was sanctioned by the Upper House on the 20th of March by a majority of 107;—there being 21 non-contents; among whom was the Marquess Wellesley. His lord-hip had, in his conflict with the Court of Directors while in India, exhibited a steadhist adherence to freedom of trade; and he opposed the Corn Bill of 1815, on the ground that it was wrong, on principle, to place restrictions on the supply of food, and that the general imppiness was best promoted by leaving commerce free. The arguments against prohibitions or restrictions on the importation of corn are most ably summed up in the well-known protest drawn up by Lord Grenville and the Marquess Wellosley."

Lord Wellesley lived to see the monopoly of the India Trade destroyed, and we feel our respect for his memory increased by having our attention directed to that subject, at a time when the still greater grievance of monopoly of food, which he so steadfastly resisted, totters to its fall.

CORN DUTIES -It will be recollected that, soon after Parliament met, Sir Robert Poel held out that so soon as the resolutions which he had to propose for the reduction of duties were passed in committee of the House, the new duties would come into operation; but subsequently, be stated that be was in error in making the promise, as the old duties must remain in force until the Bill for reducing them obtained the royal annotion. Technically, Sir Robert was quite right; but he has since departed from his own technical rule by agreeing that all the articles to which his new tariff applies, with the exception of wheat, barley, and oats, shall be admissible at the new duties from the date of the resolutions passed in committee being reported; and, as that has been done, the articles, with the above exceptions, and so admissible at the present moment. Indian corn, buckwheat, and rice, then, may now be imported and let out of bond at the nominal duty of one shilling; and a Treasury order to that effect has been issued.—Londonderry Journal.

FREE TRADE ORGANISATION IN MARYLEBONE. - A publie meeting of the electors of the borough of Maryleboue resident in St. Paneras, took place on Thursday evening the 12th inst., in the Bedford Saloon, Bedford Arms, Highstreet, Canden-town, for the purpose of forming an organisation in favour of Free Trade, and securing the return of two Free Trade candidates at the ensuing election, by a new and united Borough Reform Association. Joseph Ivimey Esq., of Ampthill-square, presided, and was supported by Messrs. Douglas, Dyke, J. Wells, Clarke, Vinco, Alldis, and other well known reformers of the district. Delegates else attended from Marylebone and Paddington; amongst them were observed Messrs. J. Williams, H. C. Wilson, W. Kennett, John Loveridge, Charles Nixon, J. Savage (Titchfield street), Thorne, Swaine, &c. &c.

Timi Works Worders.—It is remarkable that the majority in favour of Sir Robert Peel's message of total repedia the same almost to a unit as that with which the army Farliament rejected Lord John Russell's eight shillings duty! united Borough Reform Association. Joseph Ivimey Esq.,

RLYMOUTH FREE TRADE ASSOCIATION

(PESTIMONIAL TO MR. SYMONS, THE HOW. SECRETARY,—On the 11th inst., a large and highly influential meeting was held at the Plymouth Mechanics' Institute in compliance with a requisition from the respected Prosident, C. B. Cal. mady, Esq., for the purpose of taking into consideration a proposition which that gentleman had to submit. The company generally were unprepared as to the object of the meeting, which was that of presenting a testimoulal to Mr. Sy. mons, the honorary secretary of the Association, for his velued and zealous services; but when they were made acquainted with its purport, they welcomed it with their most cordial approbation, and the only matter discussed in electric to two was as to the most effective way in which it should be carried out. In the course of the evening one or two other matters were touched upon incidentally—the members congratulated each other on the progress of their opinions they excited each other to further exertion in the good cause they excited each other to further excision in the good cause—they declared that their work was not yet fluished, but only commencing; and it was evident that they are determined to proceed with decision in unshackling our trade, and in giving greater freedom to our institutions. This is scarcely to be wondered at; the protectionists compel the continuance of the League and of those other bodies that have sprung up in opposition to monopoly; and we question whether they will not yet have great cause to regiet the partial continuance of their unholy laws, even for the space of

The Chairman opened the business by saying that he had taken the liberty of asking their attendance in onler that they might take into consideration a proposition which he wished to submit to them with regard to the services of their excellent Secretary, Mr. John Symons (cheers). That was the sole object of this meeting; and he felt that they must be unanimous upon two points—that he had done his duty efficiently, and that he had also done it gratuitously (loud

After further enlarging on the valuable services of Mr. Symons, the Chairman called upon other gentlemento address the meeting—an appeal, which was responded to by W. Burnell, Esq.; Lieut. J. D. Haswell, R.N.; the Rev. W. J. Odgers; G. W. Soltau, Esq.; Mr. Frian, Mr. Blackwell, and other gentlemen zendously devoted to the good and prosperous cause, in behalf of which the Association was formed. The Rev. C. Aldrick, a clergyman of the Church of England, read an admirable paper, expressive of the change which his mind had undergone on this question, entirely through the reasoning and information promulgated by the League, and that Association. The opinious of the rev. gentleman were expressed with great vigour and with much firmness, and the candour of his remarks led to frequent and enthusiastic cheering.

By unanimous concurrence, a committee was named to consider the most appropriate method of expressing their bearty estimation of Mr. Symon's disinterested and incessant efforts to promote the efficiency of the Association and the success of the cause. It was suggested that some honourable token, expressive of their gratitude and esteem, should be presented to Mr. S. at a general tea-meeting, of which due notice would be given, and at which it was hoped that they might both congratulate their secretary, and themselves, and the great interests of this country, on the general recognition of their principles, and the ultimate success of their efforts in agitating Free Trade.

AN ACT FOR THE ABOLITION OF "HANSARD."-We have determined, for good reasons, to draw a bill, which we beg Sir Robert Peel, the Cabinet, and Parliamentary converts to Free Trade at large, to accept. We shall not trouble them with this little bill. Unlike little bills in general, it is calculated to give them pleasure, and no doubt they will gladly pass it. Here it is: "Whereas, it is expedient that on divers subjects, topics, and principles of legislation, Members of Paulianeant shall many retional conviction, or an after Parliament shall, upon rational conviction, or on other grounds or inducements which need not here be alluded to. change and alter their minds, speak and vote contraily to their former professions, and veer and turn about in such manner as to them shall seem good and convenient, and that without let, molestation, or hindrance. And whereas, when disposed to make such change, the fear and dread of being twitted with inconsistency, and subjected autoirony, sarcusm, and ridicule on account thereof, is a serious let. a grievous molestation, and a strong hindrance to the accomplishment of this their design. And further, whereas any record or document containing and setting forth their said former professions, and the speeches, declarations, or votes, which they have made or given in time past, doth belp and enable any evil or maliciously disposed person or persons so to twit and ridicule them, and overwhelm them with sarcasm and irony. And whereas during a late debate numerous and several hon, members have been, after this fashion, by that kind of persons, twitted, ridiculed, and sarcastically and ironically reviled to their great annoyance and dis-comfiture, and to the infliction on them of a heavy blow and a great discouragement, by reason whereof they are well night unable to show their faces.

"And lastly, whereas there existeth a certain record or document of Parliamentary Debates, commonly called Hansard, which unhappily hath furnished the means and occasion their of citing, quoting, raking up, and casting in their teeth their former speeches, votes, and declarations aforesaid; and which, if it continues to exist and be in being, will afford a like handle on future similar occasions which may be confidently expected to occur. Now, in order to prevent and render impossible hereafter for ever such injurious and vexatious revival of things nest to the disconference and vexatious revival of things past, to the discomfort and detriment of hon members, and in particular to the affixing on them of the odious sickname of Rat; and also for their encouragement in the due and fitting change of their opinious.

1.0

OUT

WO!

vigi

de)

الجاآ

"Be it therefore enacted; and it is hereby enacted. That the said record or document of Parliamentary proceedings called Hansard be forthwith, altogether, and entirely sep-pressed, discontinued, abrogated, and utterly shollshed; suf-ficient and reasonable compensation to the printers thereof having been rendered."—Punch.

"PROTECTION."—Sir James Graham's annual let of graining parks took place less week, and atthough the spending of land offered for competition was considered has been less year, the total rantal obtained exceeded that of less year by upwards of 1004. This, in the fice of the park year by upwards of 1004. This, in the fice of the park is now tariff! Who shall say has our country and the department of the park is now that the department of the park is now that the department of the park is not because the latest the department of the park is not become the latest the department of the park is not because the latest the department of the park is not because the latest the lates

Was lance Cal.

com.

neet.

nos

efer

ouki

two bera

lint

ar.

of:

REPRESENTATION OF OLDHAM .- On Monday evening a well attended and highly respectable meeting of the friends of Free Trade, convened by circular, was held at the King's of Free Trace, convened by circular, was near at the king's Arm's Inn, Town Hall Place, for the purpose of selecting a gentleman suitable to become a candidate for Oldham on Radical and Free Trade principles. About one hundred gontlemen were present, the greater proportion of them electors. Beloles Brierley, Esq., hat manufacturer, was called upon to preside. Jonathan Mellor, jun., Esq., sarnestly recommended the Liberals of the borough to be united above all things in this choice of a candidate to represent the borough in the their choice of a candidate to represent the borough in the room of General Johnson, who was expected to resign. He was extremely sorry to see the Radical and Free Trade party very much divided in their opinions as to the suitability of a candidate, but he denied that there was any truth in a rumour that had been circulated to the effect that he had identified himself. so far as support went, with the friends of Mr. John Cobbett.—William Simmons, Esq., hat manufacturer, introduced the name of John Whittaker Esq., of Higher introduced the mane of John Whittaker Esq., of Higher Humt, Ashton-under-Lyne, as a likely gentleman to be invited as a candidate, and after commenting in commendatory terms on the qualification of Mr. Whittaker, conditional and the invited to the invited to the conditional and the con cluded by proposing that he be invited to become a candidate. John Bentley, Esq., of Greenacres Moor, seconded the motion. John Philips Brierley, moved that the report of a and committee appointed at a previous meeting, recommending Lawrence Heyworth, Esq., of Liverpool, as a unitable gendeman for a candidate, be adopted.—Mr. James Butterworth, draper, of Greenacres Moor, seconded the motion. Mr. Rudeliffe, colicitor, secretary of the Free Trade committee, read a communication received from Mr. Heyworth by the Radical Election Committee, explanatory of his political views. Mr. Wrigley, the secretary of the Radical Election Committee, stated, by request of parties present, that that committee had twice determined that W. J. Pox, Esq., of London, was the most suitable gentleman to become a cardidate on thorough Radical and Free Trade principles. Mr. Radclisse real the communication received from Mr. Fox by the Radical Election Committee. Abraham Wild, Esq., of Marlam Mill, proposed that W.J. Fox, Esq., of London, should be invited to become a candidate. Mr. James Chadwick, of Lees Road, seconded the motion. On the suggestion of Mr. Bulley, the letters received by the Rudical Election Committee John M. Cobbett and James Holladay, Esqrs., were read. Mr. Wrigley stated that letters had also been received from Messrs. Sturge, Miall, and Vincent, but he had not them in his possession then. Mr. A.F. Taylor, of Haggate, Royton, observed that the friends of Mr. Fox had brought that gentleman forward solely with the object of uniting the Liberal party together. Mr. James Builey, of Oldham, remarked that he extremely regretted the divisions that had taken place in the Liberal party, but as it was very desirable that they should have a townsman as a candidate on Radical principles, he would at once propose that James Holladay, Esq., be invited to become a candidate. Mr. E. Barlow, publican, seconded the motion. The various motions being put to the meeting, and a show of hands taken, the numbers were; for Mr. Fox, 46; Mr. Heyworth, 7; Mr. Holladay, 4; Mr. Whit-taker, 1. The chairman declared Mr. Fox to have the majority, and in making the announcement pledged himself to do all in his power to secure his return. Jonathan Mellor, jun., Esq., recommended the propriety of each of the three Radical Election Committees appointing two or three persons from each to canvass the borough immediately, and ascertain which of the three Liberal candidates would have a majority, and that it should be arranged that the one who would be likely to obtain the greatest support should be then supported by the whole body of the Liberal party. Mr. Arrowsmith seconded the motion; and after some discussion, in which Mossrs. Bailey, B. Barlow, Taylor, and Dransfield took part, the motion was rejected on a show of hands, by a large majority against it. On the motion of Daniel Collinge, Esq., the following gentlemen were appointed a sub-committee to prepare a requisition to W. J. Fox, Esq., Messrs. Wrigley, S. Buerley, A. F. Taylor, John Holden, M. Scholefield, and J. Heap. The proceedings terminated by a vote thanks to the chairman.—Manchester Times of Friday.

TREE TRADE INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION.

A. W. Paulton, Enq...

Richard Potter, Esq.,

William Leavers, Esq.,

William Leavers, Esq.,

William Leavers, Esq.,

William Leavers, Esq.,

If Hull, Bsq., U

Richard Burnet

J. Matson, Esq.

TRUSTERS. DIRECTORS. Ramuel Hagrison, Haq., Dr. James Carlisle, John Gadsby, Esq., H. Hull, Esq., Uxbridge, Richard Burnet, Esq.,

Dr. Thomas I'rice, 7, Highbury-terrace, Islington.
George Thompson, Esq., 6, Waterloo place.
Captain Cogan, Upper Mill, Hammermitth.

Mesers. Prescott, Grote, & Co.

SOLICITOR.

Josh. Ivimey, Esq., 26, Chassery-lane.

SURVEYOR.

Mr. Frederick Farrad. Priory Ville. Peakham.

riory Villa, l'e

Prospectures may be obtained, graffs, on application at the Society's Office, Raai Temple Chambers, Whitefrian-street, Picot-street. The Rules Persons desirous to join the Society are requested to make application jamediately. Termina courses to join the course; and receiving subscriptions and the immediately.

The Society's Offices will be open for receiving subscriptions and the general transaction of business, every Tuesday and Friday ovenings, from to 9 o'clock.

PREE TRADE INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION. As the Econd Subscription is about to be called for, parties intending to avail themselves of the benefits of the Aspeciation are requested to sake application for theres immediately. Until the Becond Subscription is called in, sharves can be obtained on the same terms as those which have whiteheave it is a sire in a subscription of the same the same terms as those which have whiteheave it is a sire in the Offices, East Temple Chambers, fix to Nine o'Clock

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, March 21, 1846.

We once more beg to impress upon the minds of our readers that the time has not yet come when it would be safe to relax our exertions or abate our vigilance. The policy of the protectionists is to delay the progress of the measures now before Parliament until shear weariness of watching may prodoes popular apathy, and thus furnish an excuse either for rejecting the Ministerial proposals, or so sufficient them is to destroy their effect. It is now certain that the Bin for repealing the Com-

Laws will not reach the House of Lords in time to pass before the Easter recess, and monopolists hope that the protraction of a settlement will produce a kind of careless auxiety to get rid of the contest on any terms:

For even with goodness men get discontent, When times are out of joint and virtue spent;

These tacties, openly and avowedly adopted by our opponents, point out to us the course which we must adopt: Perseverance, steady and continuous perseverance, can alone ensure final success. Any sign of wavering on our parts would stimulate the monopolists to some great effort to disappoint our hopes, and dash away the cup at the moment it approached our lips. Let us then remember that "the end is not yet." The harbour is in sight, but it is not yet safe to drop the anchor; there are rocks and shoals to be passed, before we can reach sure holding ground. Our pilets are watchful, our officers are steady; let not our crew give way to premature indulgence of triumph. It may be that the resistance we have yet to encounter may be greater than even the monopolists themselves have yet ventured to anticipate; but we may be assured that its strength will be exactly proportioned to our state of preparation. If we exhibit such an array of force, spirit, and determination, as to render the issue certain, the struggle cannot be protracted; but if we appear supine and acquiescent, the monopolists will not fail to profit by the opportunity-"While men slept the enemy sowed tares;" let us, therefore, not sleep, " but keep our loins girt, and our lamps burning.'

The monopolists are avoiding the final issue; they see that now the cause of truth and justice would be sure to triumph, but they also know that popular excitement is in its nature transitory, and that a people is in most danger during a period of reaction. We must show them that the demand for "Free Trade" is no sudden challition of passion, but the result of deep-rooted conviction and strong principle. Truth is the same to-day that it was yesterday, but zeal in the advocacy of truth is liable to fluctuations. The Free Traders have hitherto been as remarkable for their steadiness as for their sincerity; they have only to maintain their position, and the overthrow of monopoly will be complete, speedy, and irretrievable.

THE FUNDS.

, I	SAT. Mar. 14	Mon. Mar.16	Turs. Mar.17	WRD. Mar.18	Tuuk. Mar.19	FR1. Mar,20
Bank Stock		2111	312	2124	11:3	•
3 per Ct. Red. Ann. 3 per Ct. Con. Ann.	898	953	699	961-5	96	957
34per Ct. Red.Ann. Long. An. Ex. 1800	107-10	••		io	ioa	•••
Cons. for Acet Exc. Bills, pm	96g 34	961 34-32	96}	96 35	96"	911-5
Ind. Bds, un. 10007.	40	34-176	33-30	.5.)	29	••
Venezuela 2 perCt. Do. deferred	133		•••	iöy	::	• •
Belgian 41 per Ct. Brazilian 5 per Ct.		нэ	H4	97] 83	::	••
Chilian	00	::		861	99	••
Danish Dutch 4 per Cent.		95	884 95	947	iii	943
Dutch 21 per Cont.	60			604		693
Peruvian	311	361 361	311	31	311	314
Portug. conv Russian 5 per Cent		::	:: }	109	:: 1	/ 58
Spanish 5 per Ct. Do. 3 per Ct. ex.dv.	261 361	26] 36]	2/3 30	20 361	28 36}	957 368

MARKETS.

CORN MARKET.

Monday, March 16.—We are to-day again moderately supplied with English Wheat, both coastways and by land carriage. Fine dry White Wheat forches is, more money than last Monday, but all other descriptions sell at the same prices as on that day. In Bonded Wheat the transactions continue to be to a very limited extent, without alteration in price. The arrival of Burley to this morning a market is not large; the best samples sell readily at last week's prices, but inferior qualities hang rather heavily on hand. Altogether there are shout $2,000 quarters of Oats in the return; of these about $000 are Foreign, and are being landed in bond. The trade is not very active, and it is impossible to effect an extensive business; but the prices obtained are rather higher than last week. Beans and Poas in fair show, with no alteration in value.

S. H. Lucas.

	BRITISI	I.	Per In	perial	Que	rter
Wheat, Essex,		Rod 54	to 60	White	68 1	to 66
Kout, & Sukolk		. 49	86		86	Čä
Lincolnshire & Yor	rkshire	47	. 04		54	62
Scotch					,
Usia. Lingolnshira & Yor	kahira Ka	rad			22	94
DittoD	Itto B	lack			28	25
DittoD	iuoP	olanda .		Now !	94	20
gootah Feed					28	20
Limerick					24	25
Limerlok DilloFine No	w 97 20	1	Õij	Pine	וסמ	n.
					4
Market Toursel.					21.	-
THE PARTY OF THE P	7 C31 7	State of the GH WAY	9 9 9 9 9 9 9 9 9 9 9	34.01	42.11		5-	11

		mily with home		200.00
Barley					OA.	88
Bans, Managan	iow al	33		ol	i ah	40
I AMERUN ISINGIA	. 13.3	117				70
1 510au		40
I TURBLY (III (F			Roller		n,	42
1 Uroy	.		. Manta .		30	34
I Plour. Town-made	1	nar aacl	tal ONO	lha .	48	88
Norfolk and Buffolk					. 43	46
	FORE	ION	_	BRR.
·		10111	Per In	BEE.	IN R	OND
Whoat, Dantzig, high mixe	d			10 66	54	60
Roatook			66	60	80	84
Atettin				86	20	δi
Hamburgh				57	50	Λ2
Odessa					4H	60
Odessa Polish					60	51
Russian		n
Ditto	lı	ard
Spanish	• • • • • •		04	60
Manquillo				9.5
Restor (init line	• • • • • •	• • • • • •	00	69		1
Barley, Grinding	• • • • • •	• • • • • • •	27	28
Distilling	• • • • • •	• • • • • • •		31
Danieli	• • • • • •			25
Bwedieh	• • • • • •	• • • • • • •		24
Straleund		• • • • • •	21	23
Dutch Feed			• • • •	23	90	91
Brew			98	27	23	95
Polands			9H	20	24	95
Black			. 4.1	7
Beans, Egyptian			7.1	36
Poug. While
I DIGO BOUCES			.(1)
C Clour, Caliba (B. Tresh., nor hi	n rrad a f	' 10hi 11.a	'14	20
- United Status	• • • • • • •		36	¥7	84	30
Dantzig			• • • •
Australian, per suck	01 280	109	• • • •

Account of CORN, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from Mar. 9 to Mar. 14, 1816, both days inclusive.

Wheat. English	Barley, 5577 6 80	Onto. 7584 13:8 5389	Beans, 1700	Poam. 769 10
Foreign 18530	io 110 1459 sucks	8000 ; 1635 barr	añio ∫ el∎.	1507

FRIDAY, MARCH 20. During the week 25,000 quarters of Foreign Wheat have arrived to this market. Of English Wheat there is not much fresh up. There is no alteration to notice in the value of either English or Foreign from Monday. The tradecontinues dull. Very little Barley has arrived; and what is on sale fully supports Monday's prices. Several vessels, with about 12,000 quarters of Oats from Ireland, are reported in time for today's rearket. This is a considerable proportion of what was on the way from Ireland; so that the quantity at present estimate very limited. From Scotland also but few slipments are now being made. The trade to day is dull; but Is, more money is asked than on Monday, and what sales are effected are at fully dd, over the prices of that day. There is no alteration in the value of the prices of that day. There is no alteration in the value of Beaus or Peas. The duty rose yesterday has cach on Barley, Beans, and Peas.

Account of CORN, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 10th of March to the 20th of March, both inclusive

		-Irish.	koroten.
Wheat	2160	••	25000
Barley	970 9170	11500	iio
	Flour 1990 e		1 (99)

LONDON AVERAGES for the Week onding March 17, 1846. | DONDON AVERTACES for the veesk ending sharen 17, 1940, Qrs. | Price. | Qrs. | Price. | Price. | Qrs. | Price.
IMPERIAL AVERAGES, Weeks onding Wheat, Burley, Onto, Ryo, Beans, Pens, b. d. s. 28th 951 6...29 7 21 5...33 4 31 2 35 2 7th March ...51 10...29 3 ...21 10...33 6...34 11...31 8 14th 951 3...29 4 ...21 9 ...31 2 ...35 2 34 9

Aggregate Average of the Six Weeks, Wheat, 54s. 7d.; Burley, 29, 11d.; Oats, 21s. 8d.; Rye, 33s. 5d.; Beans, 34s. 11d.; Pons, 34s. 10d.

Duty. Wheat, 18s. 0d.; Barley, 9s. 0d.; Oats, 6s. 0d.; Rye 9s. 6d.; Boans, 8s. 6d.; Pons, 8s. 6d.

Stock of Corn in Bond, Feb. 5, 1846.

Whoat, Barley, Oats, Ryo, Boans, Peas. Flour

Cwts. -115436 In London, 424256 13765 48060 Unit. King. 1061780 74467 82619 4767 4175 686814 MEAT MARKET.

The supply of Beef being inadequate to the consumption

The supply of Beef being inadequate to the consumption very much advanced the price this week.

PER BY THE CARCABR.

Prime Beef... 48 tol to 38 8d | Middl. Mutton 48 2d to 48 0d Middling do. 38 6d to 38 4d | Veal, from ... 58 4d to 18 8d Plain, or inferior Beef... 38 2d to 28 10d | Large, or inferior Mutton 48 8d to 48 4d | rior Pork ... 38 0d to 38 0d

* FRIDAY, MARCH 13.
BANKRUPTCY ANNULLED.
Henry Pearson Coles, of Suffolk, innkeeper,
BANKRUPTS
Joseph Scholosfield, Cheapside, cutler. [Mosses, Reed and angiord, Friday, street.

Langford, Friday street.
Miles Griffith and Philip Pearson, of New Bond street, tailors. [Messrs Wood and Fraser, Dean-street. Thomas Hubert, Hungerford Market, Strand, lighterman, Thomas Hilbert, Hungeriord Market, Strain, Agagerman, [Mr. Tribe, Bargo-yard chambers, Bucklesshury. J. E. West and H. Tennant, Loods, stock brokers. [Mr. H. Walker, Furnival's Inn, London.

A. Shipton and J. W. Jenkins, Painswick, Gloucoster, clothiers, [Mr. W. T. Paris, Strond, Gloucostershire.
Thos. Sutton. Jun., Atherstone, Warwickshire, draper. [Mr. Wentalaw Raids.]

Wratislaw, Rughy,
W. Hading, Stockport, cotton manufacturor. [Mr.J. Coppock, Cleveland-row.
D. Brondhead & A. J. Halero, Leeds, stock brokers. [Messes, Williamson and Co., Gray's Inn. London. SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.

R. Stevenson and Co., Chagow, sowed muslin manufacturors. J. Robertson, Glasgow, Iron merchant.

TUESDAY, MARCH 17. CROWN OFFICE.
MEMBERS RETURNED TO SHRVE IN THE PRESENT PAR-

Horough of Stafford.—The Hon. Swynfan-Thomas Carnogie, one of the Lords Commissioners of her Maleaty's Treasury. Horough of New Windsor.—Raiph Neville, Esq., one of the Lords Commissioners of her Najosty's Treasury. County of Mayo.—Joseph Milos M'Donnell, Esq., in the room of Mark Blake, Esq., who has accepted the office of Steward of her Migosty's Chilitere Rundreds.

SOOTOH SEQUESTRATIONS.
Peter Orr, Kilmathook, akingen
James Cowner, Ricondellou, flumer.
Honey Reid and John Reid, Greenook, drysalter,

THE PREE TRADE, or U.S. NUCOPIA FALTZES.

-Dedicated by permission to B. Gelden, 1241. M.P., But published expressly for the mencht of the discrete and. To be inadely apply for to E. M.J., No. 8, Rutland-street, Hampalead road, London. Price 2s. 6d.

COMPENSATION to the People for Aristocratic Food Laws and Unfair Taxation; or, the Influence of Aristocratics on the Condition of Nations. By J. M. Mariary are, Esq. London: Pister, Hon, and Co., and all Booksellers.

Now ready at all the labraries, in 8 vols., post 6vo, £1 lia. 6d.,

OVE, WAR, AND ADVENTURE.

Talce by H. Harrings.

Also in a few days, I vol., price 10s. 6d.

HELEN STANLEY,

A Tale. By Matrica M. Harr.

E. Churton, Library, 20, Holice street/

This day is published, in I vol., price the with a Railway Map, (HURTON'S ENGLISH COUNTY KALENDAR,

-Containing a concise description of each County, its Geographical Position, Population, Cities, Produce, Commerce, Fairs, Markets, and Railway Stations; with Lists of the Peres, M.P.s. Lord Lieutenants, High Sherifs, Deputy Lieutenants, Magistrates, County Officers, Legal Pungilonaries, Bankers, Stamps, Taxes, &c.

B. Churton, Library, 26, Holics atreet.

And dedicated to the Landiords and Tenants of the United Kingdom,

And dedicated to the Landiords and Tenants of the United Kingdom,

THE ORIGINAL PAMPILETS AND PUBLIC

LETTERS of MR. WARNES, on the CULTIVATION OF PLAX, Realize

Continued to the Continued

Oraning.

The Work will contain much additional information, be librerated by fine Work will contain much additional information, be librerated by fine work will contain make additional information, be librerated by fine fine and be found associated for distribution amongst Farmera of every grade, in suring, where adopted, proportionable benefits, to the smallest and to the largest occupier.

Product to be appropriated to the promotion of the Plax Cause. Price Profile to be appropriated to the promotion of the Plat Cause. Prige His Shillings, or Four Copies for a Guines. The names of Subscribers will be received at Trimingham, Norfolk, till the 23th of March, when the List will be published with the Hook.

CRABBS LAW OF REAL PROPERTY.
In 2 vols, royal ave., price 22 18a., boards,
THE LAW of REAL PROPERTY in ITS PRESENT cluding the very latest declaions of the Courts. By Groon Cavnu, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at law.
A. Maxwell and Son, 32, Bell-yard, Linsoln's Inni.

BRADY ON EXECUTORS.

No., price 9a. cloth,

TDLAIN INSTRUCTIONS to EXECUTORS and ADMINISTRATORS, showing their Duties, and how safely to ferform them; and "specially flustrating; by Forms adapted to every variety of case, all of which are properly filled up, the mode of complying with the Requisitions of the legacy-duty Office, in passing the Accounts and paying Legacy duty, obtaining a Return of Probate buty, &c. This work is in very general use in Attorney's Office. By J. H. Brank.
Tenth Edition.

Also, by the same Author, in 8vo., price 5a., boards, PLAIN ADVICE to the PUBLIC to FACILITATE the MAKING of THEIR WILLS.

A. Maxwell and Son, 32, Bell yard, Lincoln's Inn.

Now ready, published by O. Berger, Holywell street, Strand, and to be had of all Blooksellers.

TME LADIES' GAZETTE OF FASHION for April, price is, post free, is, 6d, contains a superfector Plate, and Spring Pashions in extraordinary and unprecedent variety, amounting to double the number given he my otherwork it large Plates, 70 Figures, Patterns of 50 Waking Breases, 50 Bonnets, Polisses, Children's Dressos, and endlass novelties; Descriptions, Tales, Poetry.

PERCY ANECHOTES at Half price.—A New Edition of the celebrated Percy Anecdotes, uniform with the Bret Edition, of which 190,930 copies were sold, and containing the same Engravings and Letterpress at half the price. Vol. 1., price 3s., handsomely bound, and Parts 1 and 2, price 1s. 3d. oach, are now ready.

NEW WORK BY GEORGE CRU (KSHANK On 31st March, price 1s., to be continued Monthly, No. 1, of U R O W N T 1 M E S.

Hustrated by Grone, Carlingham, London: Bradbury and Evans 20, Fleet-street.

TO INQUITERS ABOUT MESMERISM.
Now publishing, price 3s. 6d., in cloth boards,

INSTRUCTION IN ANIMAL MAGNETISM or MESMERISM; the result of 33 years' experience and observation. By T. P. F. Derver.

This valuum is far the express purposa of guiding novices—its spirit is very beautiful, and its instruction safe."—Harriett Martineau.
London: Cleave, Shoe lane; Manchester: Reywood; and all Booksellers.

Price One Shilling, by post, One and Sixpence WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, and AVOID. Addressed to the Nervous and Dyspetic. By R. J. Calverwell, M.D., Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, &c. Sherwood, 23, Paternooter row, and all Booksollers, or direct from the Author, 21, Arundel street, Strand.

CORNER'S NEW HISTORICAL WORKS, for School Rach Ristory, commencing with the earliest authentic records, is continued to the present time. farthfully pourtraying, also, the Mannors, Customs, and States of Civilisation of the People.

Round with Without

| Round with Without the Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Preland | three fine plates | and map | 3s. | 2s. 6d. | Rectland | three fine plates | and map | 3s. | 2s. 6d. | Prance | three fine plates | and map | 3s. | 2s. 6d. | Prance | three fine plates | and map | 3s. | 2s. 6d. | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions | Questions the Questions.

National Tableau of Public Interest, which has been Eight Months in Preparation.

FPHE Royal Family at Home, consisting of the Queen and Prince Albert careasing their Pour lovely Children. The Grouping and Colouring by Mailana Tusaud, the Models and Pertraiture by Mr. P. Tusaud, to how added to the Collection.—BARAAR, Baker-street, Portman-square.

"This is one of the best exhibitions in the metropolia."—Trams. Admirtance, 1s.; Napelson Roems, 5d. Open from 11 till 4; and from till 19

LITHOGRAPHY.

MESSRS. MACLURE, MACDONALD, and MAC-TESSIS. MACLURE. MACDONALD, and MACLike White the control of the

Vacancies for two Pupils; one in Writing, the other in the Artistical

TENDERS, STOVES, and FIRE-IRONS. - Bright the Philas, STOVES, and FIRE-IRONS.— Bright steel fenders, to 4 feet, from 30s each, rich bronged scroll do., which said burylar from fenders, 3 feet, is 64; wrongst from kitchen saiders, 5 feet, is 64; bright register stores, with bronged creaments, and two sets of bars, from Ms.; bed-room register stores, 2 feet, is; first from fire sharehold is 30 per set; handsome do., with sut heads, 6 66. The money returned for every article not approved of. Detailed established with burgarylangs, sent (per positive.

WILLIAM 8, BURTIN'M (late RIPPON and BURTON'S stock of passers) framework from money to liberally the largest in the world; and as no language can be amployed to give a certest iden of its variety and extent, purchasers are invited to call and inspect it.—30, Oxford-street seemer of Newman street). Betablished in Welle-street, 1890; with the americal attentions it that department which so materially affects the intro contour-with that department which so materially affects the intro contour-with, to thair, which both in quantity and quality is exiscipltable of most finiterial afternations. The will-like weak can be strong thouch, and he made to receive a most becautiful gloss, by artificial applications. It is to its extraordinary and valuable properties in these extraordinary and valuable properties in these OLDINIONS BALM OF COLDININA.

for its invigorating, nutritious, and regenerating qualities. 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle. No other prices are genuine.—Oldridge's Balm., 1, Wellington-street, the second house from the Strand.

1 LASS.—A Splendid Stock of GLASS LUSTRES
A Glam Chandellers, Planoforte and Table Eights, Engraved and Richly-cut Decanters, Wine-classes, Coblets, and every description of Table Class, at P. and C. OMERE'S London Warehouse, 44, Oxford-street, ober Berners street. Also, a very olegant and extensive assortment of Hohemian, Peench, and Venetian glass, just imported. Manufactory, Broad-street, Birmingham. Established, 1807. Wholesale and export orders executed on the lowest terms.

DE DE FEATTHER RS.—

Mired, por lb. - 1s. 0d. | Rest Pornign Grey Goose 2s. 0d. |
Grey Goose, - 1s. 4d. | Hest Irish White Goos 2s. 0d. |
Porsign ditto - 1s. 4d. | Hest Irish White Goos 2s. 0d. |
WEAL and SON, 106 (opposite the Chapel), Tottenbars Conrt Road.

THE DISSENTERS and GENERAL LIFE and FIRE ASSURANCE COMPANY.—(Instituted 1837.)—Empowered by Special Act of Parliament, 8 Vic. c. 21.—62, King William atreet, London-bridge, London, 21, St. David atreet, Ediaburgh; 6, King-street, Queen's square; Bristol.

Capital, £1,000,000,

TRUSTEES AND DIRECTORS.

George Bousfield, Paq.

Thomas Challis, Esq., Ald, Jacob G. Cope, Paq.

Thomas Piper, Paq.

John Dixon, Paq.

Peter Ellis, Paq.

Peter Ellis, Paq.

Hon. C. P., Villers, M.P.

John Wilks, Esq.

Hon. C. P., Villers, M.P.

John Wilks, Esq.

On the return of the Lady Day Quarter, the Directors beg leave to remind their friends and the public that in the Tire Department they receive risks of all descriptions, including chapels, school-rooms, mills, goods, and shipping in dock, farming stock, dec., at the same reduced rates as other respectable companies, at duals, dec., at the same reduced rates as other from other offices.

In the Life Department, they entinue to transact all business relating to life assurances, annuities, and family endowments, upon the most liberal terms consistent with sound principles and public security.

Lones are also granted on equitable terms to life assurers on life interests, or satisfactory personal securities.

To all agents and solicitors, surveyors and auctioneers, liberal allowance will be made.

By order of the Directors.

THOMAS PRICE, Secretary.

A LIJANCE BUILDING AND INVESTMENT

SOCIETY.

(On Meshau's Plan to terminate in 11 Years.)

Shares, £130. Monthly Subscriptions, 12s. per Share. Entrance, 2s. 6d. per Shiare.

In this Society there is no Nedeniption Fee. No Fine on Withdrawal.

No bidding for Shares. And other advantages.

The whole of the law charges, exclusive of Stamps and Registration Fee, Leascholds, £14s. Frecholds, £55s.

The First Monthly Meeting will be held at the George Hotel, Aldermanbury, City, on Monday next, the 25d March, from 7 to 9 o'clock in the evening, to curiot Shareholders and receive Subscriptions.

Rules, price £d., forwarded on receipt of ten postage stamps—Shares may be taken, sules and information, prospectuses, &c., obtained of the Monager, Mr. L. R. Messan, 6, Fleming street, Kingsland-road, London, or Feeretary, Mr. John Pocknell, 11, Artillery-place west, Bunhill-row; if by letter, post paid, with stamp for a reply.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN LANDLORD.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN LANDLORD.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN LANDLORD.

SECOND BRITISH BUILDING AND INVEST
MENT COMPANY. Enrolled.

Established on Macarthur's Simplified and Improved Plan.

Monthly Subscription, 10s per 8 hate.

No Redemption Fee.

Office, 3, Ivy Lang, 8t. Paul's, London.

Hours, 16 till 4.

Commenced in March, 1816.

TRESTERS.

William Anderson, M.R.C.S., 12, Chadwell street, Myddleton square.

William Farmer, 29, Charlotte-terrace, Barasbury-road, Islington.

James Staley, Tibberton square, Islington.

Thomas Sheppard, 5, Guinsford place, Barnsbury-road.

All letters should be directed to "The Second British Building and Investment Company," 3, Ivy Isne, St. Paul's, London.

The British Building and Investment Company was commenced on the 4th September, 1845, in 6ve months surelied 1500 Sharetholders, Issaued 2800

Shares, and advanced about £6000 to its Shareholders for the purchase of property. Such success is unprecedented in the annals of Building Societies.

At a Public Meeting, at which upwards of 1100 persons were present, held at the London Machanica Institution, on Tues tay, 17th Feb., 1816, Mr. W. Farmer, in the chair, the following Resolutions were carried unanimously: Moved by Mr. Beal, seconded by Mr. Laveloy,—That this meeting highly approves of the plan on which the Second British Building and Investment Company is established; and cordially recommends it to the public as being based on equal justice to all, and prividing for the members, desirous of purchasing property, the greatest advantages consistent with security to the whole body of members.

Moved by Mr. Alexander, seconded by Mr. Thomas,—That this meeting so skillers the conduct of the Directors, in waiving their right to receive or claim any advance from the Company during the first 12 months, as highly honourable, and deserving of the sincere thanks of the meeting.

"He had a man and advance from the Company during the first 12 months, as highly honourable, and deserving of the sincere thanks of the

THE PERFECT SUBSTITUTE FOR SILVER.—
The bigh estimate formed by the public during the twelve years WILLIAM S. BURTON'S (late RIPPON and BURTON'S) shemically purified material has been before it (made into every useful and ornamental article usually made in silver, poasessing, as it does, the characteristic purits and durability of silver), has called into existence the deleterious compounds of "Albata Plate," it lerins silver," and other so called substitutes; they are at best but bad imitations of the genuine articles manufactured, and sold only by him.

Table Spoons and Porks, full size, per Pattern.

Plattern.

12s. 0d. 28s. 0d. 8s. 0d.

28s. 0d. 28s. 0d.

Table Spoons and Forks, full size, per Francers. gattern. dozen. 12s. 0d. 28s. 0d. 38s. 0d. 38s. 0d. 21s. 0d. 21s. 0d. 23s. 0d. 25s. 0d. 2 artide, sent (per post) free.

WHLLAM 8. BURTON'8 (late RIPPON and BURTON'8) stock of general furnishing frommongory is literally the largest in the world, and sano language can be employed to give a correct idea of its variety and extent, purchasers are invited to call and inspect it.—19. Oxford-street (corner of Newman-street). Established in Wells et., 1820.

BRUSHES-NEW INVENTIONS.

THE TRIPLE HAIR BRUSH. One stroke of this No. even cut brush; to be had in four sizes, No. 7, Sa. 6d. No. 8, 7a. 6d. 9, 9s. 6d. No. 10, 11s. 6d.

THE DOUBLE ANTI-PRESSURE NAIL BRUSH, which does not divide the quick from the nail, no pressure being required, and thoroughly cleans and polishes the nails in a tenth part of the time of any other method. Price, in Bono, No. 1, 22. No. 2, 22. Od. No. 3, 32. Gd. No. 4, 52., and of all sizes and prices in Ivory.

THE NEW TOOTH-PICK BRUSH, which entirely enters between the interstices of the closest teeth; marks, full size brushes, No. 1, hard. No. 2, less hard. No. 3, middling, No. 4, soft. The Narrower Brushes, No. 6, hard. No. 6, less hard. No. 7, middling. No. 5, soft, at 18, each, or 10s, per dozen is Bone; and 2s. each, or 10s, per dozen is Ivory, the Hair warranted never to come out.

THE MEDIUM SHAVING BRUSH, between the usual Badger Rais and Reside West Parks and Reside West Parks.

Badger Hair and Bristle Brush, being a selection of the strongest Hair only from the Hadger Skin, in a variety of sixty, both in House and Ivory.

The above articles are the Investions of RobB and SoNr, 119 and 130, Bishnpagate-street, London, and being protected, any one imitating them will be proceeded as ansatz. Bishopegate-street, Londor will be proceeded against.

DEANE'S TWO-HOLE BLACK PENS were among the first brought out, and have maintained their pre-eminence ever aince. Besides being used by the Merchants and Bankers of London, together with the gentlemen of the Stock Exchange, these Pens are also patronized by Her Majestry Judges, and by a lerge analysis of the Gergy. Deane's Two-hole Hingh Pens are especially adapted for continuous willing, their elasticity affording an afrequence sent and their surprise in the state of the sent of the their states of the house will be the sent of the sent of the sent of the sent of the Mounteent, and Manufactories, opening to the Mounteent, and Wallem Street, London Bridge.

No process with the NUMBER ONE; ST. PALL'S CHURCHYARD.

As real go mess is not holped by units, ner injured by remark, as the LLACK THA (at 4s. of por 1s., sold by DAKIN and COUPPING, at 4s. of por 1s., sold by DAKIN and COUPPING, as its sopularity easily to its imminate executions.

Orders from the country forwarded Carriage Pres.

SELLING OFF CARPETS.

I UCK, KENT, and CUMMING, bog to interest the Anobility and Gentry, as well as their friends and the public, that they long scatalithed Warchouse, 4, 1kHGENT-FIREST, WATER, date to opposite Howell and James, and to 98, HATTON GAHDEN, GOLDON, where they trust that Patrenage will be sontinued which they tays and of 91k USE KLS, KIDDERMINSTER, and other Carpeting, it be said of Great Reduction. In addition to Carpeting, they have at their West & Establishment, a large Stock of Chintres, Damasks, Takenwest, &c. 42, was worthy of attention. A splendid Carpet, of British manufacture, 32-3 by 18, with a centre and berder, at less than cost prize.

MILLER'S PATENT SAFETY BEIN is warranted to afford an officient control over Horses in Saddle or Harness auder all circumstances. Manufactured and sold, wholesale and retail, by the Patentee, at 27, Lethian street, Edinburgh,

LUXURY IN SHAVING.

TOIN GOSNELL and CO'S AMBROSIAL SHAVING CREAM (Patronized by Prince Albert). This inostinable Cream passeases all the goed qualities of the Finest Naples Soap, without Gediagnes able smell juscparable from that article in a genuine state. It is of a white pearly silvery appearance, produces a creamy lather, which will not dry on the face, and emits in use the delightful flavour of the almost in Pots, price 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., &c

Performers to her Majasty, 12, Three King-court, Lombard-street, London, Manufacturers of Cembs and Bruskes of the best quality, and on the hoost approved principles.

ALANCE IVORY TABLE KNIVES, 10s. per dozen; dessert ditto, 9s.; carvers, 3s. 6d. per pair. White bone table knives, and forks, from 6s. 6d. per dozen. Table knives, with handles of par Nickel Silver, tables, 22s. per dozen; dessert ditto, 18s.; carvers, 5s. 6d. per pair, all marked Richard and John Black, and warranted.

They also solicit an inspection of their extensive and superior stock of Fender and Fire-froms, as well as every article in furnishing frommonger of the newson designs, at prices 30 per cent. under any other house. 2s, sirand, opposite Bomerset House. Established, 1818. Their book, with upwards of 200 engravings, 'gratis, or post free. The money returned for any article not approved of.

OUTFITS to AUSTRALIA, INDIA, and the COLO-NIES. Parties leaving England will find it to their advantage to purchase their Outfits at E. J. MONNERY and 60. 8, 163. Fenchurch-tree, City, where a large assortment of Shirts, Ctothing, Bosicry, Gauss-Meriao Under Shirts, & adapted for each particular colony, as well as for the voyage, is kept ready for immediate use, and at prices far more reasonable has usually charged for the same articles.

Bedding, Military Accontrements, Cabin and Camp Paralture of every description. Lists, with Prices affixed, forwarded by post.

STOOPING of the SHOULDERS and CONTRACTION of the GHEST are entirely prevented, and gently and effectually removed, in Youth and Ladies and Gentlemen, by the occasional use of the Improved Blastic Chest Expander, which is light, simple easily supplyed, outwardly or invisibly, without any uncomfortable restraint, or impediment to exercise. Sent per post, by Mr. A. Binyon, Sole Manufacturer and Proprietor, 40, Tavistock-atroot, Covent Garden, Lendon, or full particulars on receiving a postage stamp.

CREY HAIR.—The nourishing properties of ROW-TRE Y HATR.—The mourishing properties of ROW-LAND'S MACASSAR OIL are emburith successful in the presentent of Orey Hair, and in the restoration to its original colour. It is the only article that really possesses nutritious virtues for prosecting a luxuriant growth of flair, preventing it from fulling off, or turning grey, and for cleansing it of sour and all impurity.

(SP Beware of Spurious Initations!!!—The genuine article has the words "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL," on the wrapper.

Price 3s. 6d., 7s. Pamily Bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d., and double that size, 2is, perbottle.

Sold by the Propriotors, at 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by all Chemists and Perfumers.

PECIAL PUBLIC NOTICE—
At precisely 10 o'clock on Tuesday Morning, March 24th, 1846, the entire range of E. MONES and SON'S New Preiniscs, Minories, and Aldgate, City, will open for the transaction of business.

E. MONES & BON,
Tailors, Drapers, Clothiers, Hosiers, Hattors, and General Outliters.

March 16, 1846.

THE TWENTY-FOURTH OF MARCH,

The Twenty fourth of March! Its very mention speaks of a great event, and claims attention. This is the day on which will be display d. The mightless triumph ever known in trade. Precisely as the City clocks strike ten, MOSES and SON (those enterprising men) will open in the whole of its extent, Their costly, spacious new Establishment.

The Twenty-fourth of March! Its very mention speaks of a great event, and claims attention. When Wren beheld St. Paul's high structure rise, A beam of pleasure lighted up his eyes; MOSE's and SON will thus with joy behold. The portals of their noble pile unfold. The Twenty-fourth (and well, indeed, it may) Will be with them a memorable day.

With be with them a memoratic day.

The Twenty-fourth of Mhrch! Its very mention speaks of a great event, and claims attention.

Let ev'ry lip proclaim the Twenty-fourth—
In all directions—cast, west, south, and north;
(in that great day King Fashion's new-built mansion Will rise to view in all its vast expansion;
On that eventful day will be display d
Another mighty monument in trade.

The Twenty-fourth of March! Its very mention Speaks of a great event, and claims attention. The bells that shall proclaim the hour of ten Will tell of yast advantages opening thou, And millions of the public will have reason To view it as a most important season;—MOSES and SON regard the day as such— MOSES and BON regular and an all of Twill prove the birthday to you all of

The Twenty fourth of March! Its very ment on Speaks of a great event, and claims attention. lot crowds on crowds amomble to survey, And make the time a public holiday; Let not the memorable event be made An ordinary circumstance in trade; An ordinary circumstance in trade; Let thousands come from east, west, south, and north, To view the opening on the Twanty-fourth!

The Twenty fourth of March! Its very mention Speaks of a great event, and claims attention. MOSIES and SON from this important date Make nobler promises to small and great. Their mightier mart is nothing but a sign Of squething mightier in their trade's design. Let crowds, thes, pass their harts trade's design. And honour thus, the Twenty-fourth of March.

A new work, entitled "Habiliment Hall," with the directions are solf-measurement, may be had on application, or forwarded post first knowning to any amount can be had at five minutes period, the long prices.

Mourning to any amount can be had at five minutes action.

Mem's Suits, drees coat, vest, and irousers

Ditto, jacket, vest, and trousers

Ditto, jacket, vest, and trousers

Investatt. Any article purchased or erdered, if not appropriate changed, or the money returned.

Chesawu. M. MOSMS and SON. Tailors, wholesaway the dirapers, Outstiters, and observal warehouses, and for a continuous services. Moses and bor are obtained to money terminate the untrademanded with thus, or it's the case extensions many instances, and for obvious reasons with any other establishment in or wife of continuous continuo

Down the second of the second

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND.

All Subscribers of £1 and upwards to the LEAGUR FUND will be entitled to, and receive, a copy weekly of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

- Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have torwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the offices of THE LEAGUE, Newall'sbuildings, Manchester, or 67, Fleet-street, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council of the League would also suggest to their friends in the country the importance of transmitting their copies of THE LEAGUE newspaper, after perusul, to such parties (more especially furmers) as may be either hostile or indifferent to the question of Frae Trade.

By order of the Council, JOSEPH MICKIN, Secretary.

PLAIN HINTS TO ALL PARTIES.

We are afraid the people and the protectionists de not, even yet, quite understand one another. There is a mistako somewhere—a twofold and mutual mistake-pregnant with very serious consequences, to at least one of the parties concerned. On each side there is a disposition to take things for granted; and things taken for granted are apt to turn out unpleasantly. The people are too easy about the Bill-and the protectionists are too easy about the people. Agitation has had a lull, since Sir Robert Peel took the Free Trade business in hand; and the landlords flatter themselves they have seen the worst. They do not discriminate—they mistake/the quiescence of confidence for that of indifference—the repose of conscious power for lassitude and weakness-a momentary halt for a final retreat. Because we feel ourselves so sure of our revolution that we can afford to take it composedly, they fancy we are willing to let them off, and go without our revolution. As they have neither been tossed in a blanket, nor brushed into the Thames, they take heart and play their antics-and, "thank God," they have not been in a hurry—and don't mean to be in a hurry, for who knows but the chapter of accidents may turn up something to their advantage?

We warn both parties not to be too sure. The people will do well not to take for granted anything about the Bill that it is not in their own power to realise. It is anything but cortain that the Bill will To be sure, Sir Robert Peel has made a Government measure of it, and the Premier has got a reputation for passing his measures; but we have nothing that can be called a guarantee for the passing of this measure. Sir Robert Peel can give us no sort of assurance that his Bill will encounter, unharmed, the ordeal of that "other place" to which it will be forwarded some time between now and next Christmas. Sir Robert Peel's jurisdiction does not, in the estimation of some of our best and most modern political geographers, include that "other place." The Duke of Richmond, the other day, on catching the words "Corn Bill," "repeal," and "delay," as read from a petition, interjectionally speculated, "I do not say that it will pass at all;" and we, for our part, are not prepared to contradict positively the vatioinations of a prophet who possesses, we know not what power, of verifying his m prediction. We "do not say that it will pass ilf " i.e., that Sir Robert Peel's Bill will pass at We can only say, that we can't say. We only the Bill has a statute book, and there is no counting and measuring chances. We nover heard yet, on reliable authority, that a majority of lordly votes would so much as affirm the second roading-to say nothing of the dangers of the Committee, at which stage proxies go for nothing. It is quite certain that the opposition will be very numerous, very flerce, and very reckless—and will enjoy, in Lord Stanley, the leadership of a chieftain pre-eminently qualified for heading a mad party in a mad policy. It is also certain, that a meeting of the protectionist peers has just been held, the temper of which would appear to have been very much the same with that of the men who "thank God" for their own obstinacy, and hold themsolves "justified in resorting to any Parliamentary form to get rid of the measure.' On the whole, we advise the people to make sure of nothing-to believe nothing till they see it-and prepare themselves meanwhile to act on the instant. as occasion may require it.

To the landlords likewise we would offer a word in season. It may not be, indeed, a very hopeful task, advising Messieurs the protectionists to be rational. Yet there are degrees and individual diversities in all collective psychological phenomena; and it is just possible that the good seed of cautionary suggestion may fall, here and there, on good ground. Possibly it may not be altogether a waste of time to attempt interpreting, for the bene fit of protectionist honourable gentlemen and noble lords, the real significance of those indications of public opinion and temper which they are so dangerously bent on reading the wrong way. We warn them not to mistake the import of the present lull: -there are in it, and beneath it, all the elements of a storm browing-of such a storm as the oldest man among them has never been out in yet. That the country takes the present delay so quietly, is because the country has not the particle of a doubt but it will all come right by and by. We are not particular for a week or two, more or less, because we look on the eventful result as a fixed thing. It never occurs to us to doubt that what Sir Robert Peel, and Lord John Russell, and every man with a statesman's name and fame among the adherents of either of these party chiefs, are unanimously agreed on, is certain of coming to pass: -and if it were not, we have, behind and underneath our faith in Pool and Russell, an absurd, self-relying faith in our own strength and the inevitable course of events. Now, this is a decidedly dangerous temper of mind to take liberties with. When, for weeks and months together, the total repeal of the Corn Law has stood foremost among the certainties of the people's political creed; when popular expectation has become familiar with the total repeal of the Corn Law as with a thing that is as good as done; when the very certainty and nearness of repeal have already begun to suspend or relax exertions that seem to be no longer in requisition :then, we say, let all lords and men take care how they thwart so ripe a national purpose, so strong and self-collected a national will.

If their lordships of the Upper House have it in contemplation to throw out this bill—or to "amend" it, which would come to exactly the same thing—they will do well to prepare themselves for very disagreeable consequences. In the event of the Peel measure not becoming law, there will be such a revulsion of public feeling as England has not seen yet—not even in those Reform Bill days which a few of their lordships may happen to retain in fresh remembrance. The people had never felt so sure of the Reform Bill as they feel now of the Free Trade Bill. The people had never felt the Reform Bill to be already as good as passed, as they have now, for upwards of two mouths, felt the Free Trade Bill to be as good as passed. There never was such a union of parties in favour of the Reform Bill, as there is now in favour of a Free Trade policy, that arrays on one and the same side all the first-class statesmen of the country, and the entire commercial and industrious public, without a shadow of distinction between Whig and Tory; or between capitalist and operative. There never was such unanimity for the Reform Bill, as that expressed and represented by the deputations from Lancashire that have visited London within the past two days. And there never was the same physical and social necessity for the Reform Bill which there is for abolishing a prohibitory food tax in the face of famine We tell the protectionists—as they were told not long since by Mr. Cobden-that there is opinion enough on this question to change the constitution of the country. Let them look to it, that this stupendous, but as yet quiescent, mass of moral force be not stimulated into active and antagonistic self-assertion.

Assuming that if it visibly came to be a question between protection and the "order," our protectionist peers would mostly be for letting protection go, and standing by their order, we beg to give them early notice that this is the question. The rejection of the Government measure by the House of Lords would bring us at once to the broad practical issue, -which is the stronger, the House of Lords, or the ompire minus the House of Lords? There would be nothing to break or divide the force of that reactionary movement which would instantly set in against aristocracy as a political power. It would be, the Lords against the country, and the country against the Lords. The case would be terribly distinet and simple, The Lords would stand ALONE. The sympathies of no one class or party in the country would be with them. They are, essentially, a class by themselves. No other class is mixed up with them. Lords are only lords. They have no merchants, no manufacturers, no middle class mon among thom. They are all landowners, and only landowners. If rumour be correct in stating that "the duke" has, in a quiet way, pressed on their lordships attention the dire possibility of a NEW REFORM BILL as the penalty of obstinacy, rumour has certainly done great honour to the duke's sagacity. No institution, or constitution, on the face of the earth could stand the stress of such a struggle as would commence in this country, from the hour in which the House of Lords should declare itself Non-content with the Bill for giving hunger and industry their own.

THE LANDLORDS CHIEF DIFFICULTY.

The progress of the great Parliamentary talkingmatch against time does not present any noticeable points. Since the house disposed of the political philosophy of those distinguished statesmen who rest England's "maritime supremacy" on bad ships and little trade, things have gone on rather heavily. A tedious succession of nobodies have duly mouthed, with dismal uniformity, their several and respective nothings; and we may fairly hold ourselves exonerated from the worse than Egyptian toil of endeavouring to make something out of nothing. Even the Free Trade speeches, excellent as they were in themselves, of Mr. Fox Maule and Mr. Hawes, can scarcely be regarded as having materially helped forward the business of the house and the country. In the present state of the question, "constitutional silence" seems, on the whole, the best contribution that our best friends can make to the public cause.

One speech of the week deserves, however, to be named, as standing out in relief from the general blank and negation of practical interest. Mr. Francis Baring, on Tuesday night, offered a really useful and timely sid to the progress of business.

Mr. Baring asked the protectionists a question which, it is evident, has stock by them over since, and which they will probably continue to ponder over, not altogether without benefit to themselves and the public in general. He " begged to ask them what THEY proposed to do with regard to this Corn Law?" Let us have your plan, gentlemen protectionists. You will not have Peel's Bill-you will not have the League's Bill-what will you have? Suppose you were in office to-morrow, what would you come down to Parliament to propose the day after to morrow? By your own admission-an admission which you have only begun retracting since its inconvenient consequences have suggested them selves - you must do something. By your own admission, the sliding scale of 1842 will not exactly do now. You have confessed, that with famine in Ireland, Sir Robert Peel would have been justified in suspending- or was, rather, bound to suspend-the sliding scale that won't slide. You would have indemnified him if he had suspended it. You have condemned him because he has not suspended it. You are ready to help bitm in suspending it nownt least, the other day you said you were. Well, then, if you come in, the sliding scale of 1842 goes out, for a while; and what do you mean to put in its place? You can never restore it - for its suspension would be its condemnation. Suspend the aliding scale, and you deny its self-acting powerthe only merit which it was ever pretended that it possessed. Suspend the sliding scale, and you must give as a new Corn Law of some sort or other;now do tell us, of what sort. "Condescend to be intelligible."

If the faction were bonest and in carnest, this would be decisive. It is plain that if Mr. Miles or Lord George were Prime Minister to/morrow with a working majority of Tyrrells and Finches, ho would by and bye begin to do exactly what his predecessor had done. The moment responsibility ceally pressed, he would show himself a perfect Peel for 13 rfldy. Tyrrell would turn traitor, and Finch himself would flinel. No help for it. The Peel premises, which are FACTS, would necessitate the Peel conclusion. The moment they began breathing official atmosphere, they would inhalo the ^o Free Trade influenza." It is only a question who shall do it, and when it shall be done; -- done it must and will be. The difference is only a little sooner, or a little later this year or next year -the spring or the autumn-by this Parliament and Cabinet, or by another in a time of comparative national quiet, or amid the crash of confusion of a political hurricane. , The protectionist Premier's three months' experience—one only wishes he could have it free of cost to the empire -would come to exactly the same thing as Sir Robert Peel's three years' experience: protection would go all the same-only some other thing squite as valuable would go with it.

TRELAND AND THE CORN LAWS.

It was with mingled feelings of regret and surprise that we felt ourselves compelled to animadvert last week on the advocacy of the Corn Laws by Mr. W. Smith O'Brien. Another Irish member has adopted the same course since our last publication, whose exhibition gives us no pain, as the very best of causes would have been dishonoured by his advocacy—and no surprise, for his career has been marked by the most perfect consistency. The right honourable Frederick Slaw, representative of the Dublin University, has been the unvarying supporter of Corn Laws and coercion bills-of protection and proscription-of prizes to landlords, and penalties to tenants-of ascendancy for one class and degradation for another-of the despetism of the few and the oppression of the many; so that it needed not the notorious disregard, of his arrogant pretensions by the Premier to explain his opposition to any and every measure designed for the general benefit of the Irish people.

So jumbled in his cranium meet The subjects, he must often doubt Whether, this year, twas bouled wheat Or bouled papists they let out.

There were, however, a candour about the Shaw system of policy, a simplicity in his theory of economic science, and a truthfulness in his exposition of his system of Government, which morit attention, if not approbation. Irish destitution is, in his view, a matter of periodical recurrence; and, therefore, be declares that relief must be unnecessary. Like the cels in the fable, the Irish are as used to be starved alive, as the fish were to be skinned alive; and, therefore, the application of a remedy is superfluous. In his opinion there has been a prescriptive right established for famine, and a vested interest created for fever; and if the two pestilences have been this year a little more destructive than usual, he deems that their excesses deserve no more reprobation from Englishmen than wholesale ejectments have received from Lord Brougham. It is only a question of the lives of a few thousand peasants, more or less; a matter far too trivial to interfere with the weightier matters that press upon the mind of a Dublin Recorder, or an English ex-Chancellor.

The representative of a University is generally taken as a type of the intellectual standard of the place of learning that has made him its choice. The Lord help Trinity College if its member be ever taken as a measure of its capacity! He says that fever in Ireland is to be attributed to want of employment, and not to want of food! There is not a child in an English Sunday School who could not tell him that employment is only valuable as a means of purchasing food; and that want of employment and want of food are perfectly identical. It would be time to despair utterly of Ireland if Mr. Frederick Shaw were taken to represent its intelligence, and Mr. Smith O'Brien its patriotism.

But Mr. Shaw supports his views by a reference to authorities; he quotes Mr. Justice Torrens, who declared at Omagh that " he had not been greatly struck by any appearance of starvation or misery." Rolling in a comfortable carriage over the excellent roads of the county Tyrone, and escorted by policemen, javelin-men, and the retainers of a high-sherill, it is not at all probable that such an amount of misery would be brought within the sphere of observation as would greatly strike the mind of Mr. Justice Torrons; and if, according to the theory of Descartes, magnitude of external object requires equal magnitude of mind to afford due susceptibility, we should not be at all suprised to learn that the effect of the striking on the mind of Mr. Justice Torrens was in something like an inverse ratio to the misery which he witnessed.

The next witness is Mr. Lefroy, the member for Longford; but he gives adverse evidence, for he allows the admission to coze out that "precautions are necessary,"—not such precautions as those with which the name of Lefroy is apt to be associated, against too great comfort in farmers, or too great respectability in tenants,—but precautions against actual famine, and the perilous counsels of starvation.

The letters of the unnamed clorgymon road by the learned Recorder must be taken, like all and nymous statements, as destitute of any weight from external evidence. Let us then glance at their in ternal value. A elergyman of the established church (we should be glad to know his name), residing near Formoy, declares, " My own potatoes are very good; and several persons whom I saw opening pits, told mo that theirs were very good, also." The excellent man!-quite content with hearsay for the supply of his poor neighbours, but resolved to have ocular domonstration for his own store! Now, in this very town of Fermoy, several meetings have been held, at one of which at least Lord Mountcashel (no great friend to Free Trade), was present, and took an active part in the proceedings, when resolutions proclaiming a terrific state of destitution in the town and neighbourhood, and a still more terrific prospect for the coming. summer, were unanimously adopted. Where, then, was this pious clergyman, whose own potatoes were very good! Why was not his voice raised to give hope in the midst of despair? How beautiful upon Kilworth mountains would have been the feet of the bearer of such glad tidings! The vale of the Blackwater would have rejoiced, and the dell of the Funcheon would have reflected its gladness! But this anonymous elergyman appears to be one of those who proclaim evil with the sound of a trumpet, and love to whisper announcements of good into such sympathetic ears as those of Mr. Frederick Shaw. There are so few Presbyterian elergymen in the south of Ireland, that the correspondent of Mr. Shaw, under this title, is sure to be identified, and to furnish a thome for laughter unextinguishable as that of Homer's gods. We say for laughter, because the ludicrous and the melancholy have a strange propinquity in their sympathetic associations. Democritus and Heraclitus have their representatives in every human bosom.

Si credas utrique Res sunt humano flebile ludibrium.

"The mournful laughing-stock" of the poet would be as perfectly exemplified in the presbyter's letter, if we could be quite sure that the extracts were not garbled; but on this point we have a doubt, and we give the unfortunate man the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. Shaw informed his hearers, or rather his readors (for we cannot believe that the speech before us was really spoken in a legislative assembly, and are disposed to believe that reporters have formed a conspiracy against recorders), that he was no political economist-a fact which it needed no ghost to tell us,-but he added that he was a man of common sense, and forthwith set himself to refute the assertion most satisfactorily. He compared the keeping of Irish corn at home for the support of the people to the case of a butcher keeping his meat to feed his family; and the mischievous reporters assert, that amid the collective wisdom of the British nation were to be found such arrant blockheads as those who could cheer the comparison. knows, that for every joint of meat the butcher exports from his shop, he imports other articles of consumption or the means of purchasing them; while for the quarters of corn exported from Ireland, the producing peasantry literally import nothing So far as Ireland is concorned, the whole question turns on the interest of the producers,-a very different interest from that of landlords, as the demand for a coercion bill proves, unfortunately. too well,-and we need go no farther than Mr. Shaw himself, to prove the consequences of the Corn Laws on the condition of Irish producers, when he tells us that they are subject to periodical visitations of scarcity, of which the present famine is but a slight aggravation.

lativ

far

chart

With

unto

Chat

Liter

Georg

corded often (

utteret

For th

MEL M

thing,

ject b

which.

ins 4 l

The up

Bot 1971

and the Hus po

Litte to

The sender

their wa

While we write, the copy of a petition for the continuance of the Corn Laws, from certain grand jurors of the county of Tipperary, has been placed in our hands. Now it is a singular but not inexplicable coincidence, that the petitions in favour of the Corn Laws from the South of Ireland have emanated from the landlords in the disturbed districts, while not one has come from a locality in which peace and order have been maintained without interruption. Of the three names that appear in the Parliamentary return, two, we believe, represent properties in other counties. We should like to know how these names happen to be influential for protection in Tipperary, and of no avail in Cork and Waterford? It is significant to find that Com Laws are most supported where coercion bills are most carnostly sought; and we leave our readers to ponder on the fact that those who are the most opposed to exchange of produce are also most averse to exchange of thought; and that the supporters of restriction on trade are also the clamourers for restriction on every principle that deserves to be considered a constituent of freedom.

THE AMERICAN FROM TRADE ENABRE.—We have the pleasure to announce the receipt by the League of a graillying present from America. Henry Gourdin, Esq. of Charleston, South Carolina, has presented to the Council the busts of the Hon. J. C. Calhoun and the Hon. George Macduffle, the Villiers and Cobden of America. These busts of the distinguished leaders of the Free Fresh and in America, and the advicates of peace, have been please in the Council, Rosen, augmented by the various partrills of their cotemporary laborators in the same good state in the Thinkstone of that they gon

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

THE PREE TRADE MIRROR OF PARLIAMENT FOR THE BESSION OF 1846.

Tenth Week, ending Saturday, March 28.

The new farce of Protectionist factique, the title of which 18 Never say Die, continues to be played nightly in the House of Commons with a most unsuccessful yet most persovering run. Sometimes the benches are crowded; more frequently they are empty, unless when a vote is required, and then a powerful majority musters, to give to the house and the country an emphatic declaration of opinion. But the minority receive each successive defeat in the same sense that the actor who was playing Richard the Third on a barn door, Bosworth Field, received an encore—he got up after he was killed, to gratify his audience by being killed over again. The whole thing would be very funny if it were as harmless as Richard's duplicate death. But when the bankers, the merchants, the manufacturers, the traders, of London, Liverpool, Manchester, Glasgow, and all our other great towns, are pouring into the House of Commons petitions complaining of the mischief which the unnecessary delay is causing, it is searcely possible to keep temper at witnessing the desperate conduct of a desporate faction. Had Mr. Villiers and his supporters pursued a similar line of conduct on any occasion during the last seven years, the section "under the gaugway" would have uttered frantic outeries, and branded their conduct with all the terms of a copious vocabulary. Even on occasions when the certainly modest request was preferred, of prolonging an Anti-Corn-Law debate for a day longer, in order to allow members who had not yet spoken an opportunity of expressing their opinions, there used to be vociferous shouts for a division; and the "gangway section," in particular, poured out such epithets as "factious," "indecent," "vulgar," and so forth. Now, they have had Two CLEAR MONTHS, and yet show no disposition to submit to the constitutional will of a majority. Let them beware of setting the precedent of a REVOLUTIONARY practice, the imitation of which, at some future period, may show how possible it is to "better the instruction" given by the protectionist faction.

Compare the conduct of the Anti-Corn-Law League, as (whibited by its supporters in the House of Commons, with that of the Miles and Bentinck clique on the present occasion. The Anti Corn-Law League invariably submitted to the expressed will of a majority. In so doing they acted most constitutionally, and proved how truly conservative are those reformers who rely on the force of argument and the power of truth. Their renewed discussions were certainly most distasteful to those who are now the "gangway" revolutionists. But though they persevered in bringing them on, they also allowed them to go off. The debates ran their constitutional course. They were commenced, and they were finished. Motions were made; speeches were delivered; a division was called for; and Mr. Villiers and his friends were defeated. Then, "strong in faith," and "hoping against hope," they submitted to legislative will, and turned to the country. With perfect and hamble reverence be it said, there is, though of course in a far inferior degree, an analogy between the course of the Anti Corn-Law League, and that of the first propagators of Christianity. The leading language of both was "submit to those who are in authority," even though they brand your doctrines as absurd, and your conduct as wicked. But contime your peaceful exertions until the moral atmosphere is charged with your doctrines. If Casar repulses you, retire respectfully from his presence; and continue your argument with the subjects of Cosar. Then, when you have triumphed in the country, return once more to the palace. Appeal again anto Casar. It may be that his heart will be opened; and that fact, experience, and truth, may lead him to kick his idol into the fire, and become a leader in your ranks.

What is the course of the section " under the gangway ?" Literally that of mero desporadoes. It would be absurdnay, a little too much of the ludicrous—to compare Lor George Bentinck to Milton's "Satan"; for it is not recorded in "Paradiso Lost" that he wore white kid gloves, a little soiled, though we have not the least doubt that he has often won bets at Epsom and Newmarket. Yet, on Friday night week, in his speech on the timber duties, Lord George uttered, in lisping accouts, a furious speech, the burden of which was, "Botter to reign in hell than serve in heaven!" for the sake of protection he would have war with France, war with the United States, war for Oregon, war for anything, war with everybody. He scarcely disguised his object by adopting the correct phrases about "thundering broadsides," "language not to be understood," (a blunder which caused a great laugh, and which he corrected by say. ing "not to be misunderstood") and other warlike epithele. The undeniable construction of the speech of Lord George Bentinck, on Friday night week, was aleasly this; Let us got this country into a desperate struggle with other nations, and then we will have a chance of at once thinning our surplus population, and of maintaining high rents for a long

The whole conduct of the protectionists is worthy of such a leader. They have no other idea thin that of cobursion charges, observer. Their spending they believe, will find their way, like so many, hopping toods, to the House of the Bys, Lord Stanley, and possible was the can of these partials Bys, Lord Stanley, and possible himse pinet the fraist with say being the can of the partials.

to his own pendance and his pride. So he is waiting in seratorial dignity for the expected opportunity of finding out a new way of paying old debts. He may be stimulated to try if he can upset the present political stage-coach, in order once more, to run his own "Derby Dilly" in its stead Never mind sommerce. Never mind trade. Never mind manufactures. Give us a row—the vernacular meaning of appealing to the constituencies. Let not our readers suppose this to be too strong. The madness of faction is much stronger. It touches, as the protectionists think, the interest of their breeches pockets; and so, with hord John Manners, they sing—

"Let trade and commerce, laws and learning, die, But give us still our corn nobility."

We are sorry that truth compels us to say that the lunguage and conduct of the Whig party gives some encourages ment to the protectionists. For, though they are heartily supporting the ministerial measures, their whole tone and temper, their language and their acts, amount to this :- Let us get the Corn Bill passed, and then an early occasion will arise, for a motion which will upset the Government of Sir Robert Peel. The protectionists take advantage of this, and they hope that by protracting the debate, the occasion will arise before the Corn Bill has passed. Meantime, Sir Robert Peel, conscious that by his inconsistency he line sayed the aristocracy from rain, and the country from the dangers, of an ultimate revolution, patiently, devotedly, detorminedly, perseveres, as if he had made up his mind that the present ministerial schemes were the fulfilment of his present mission, and that he will dignifiedly retire when what he himself has termed his "great undertaking," has been accomplished.

Of the debate, on Friday night week, on the timber duties (which terminated the initiatory discussions on the tariff) we are not disposed to take any notice. The leading point was the violent and inflammatory speech of Lord George Bentinck. Its characteristics were the practical speech from Mr. Warburton, and the sensible one from Mr. Charles Buller. If nonsense could ever comprehend sense, these two speeches might have been conclusive. But a division was necessary. For the Government measure there voted 232; against it 109, giving a majority of 123. Then permission was given to introduce the bill or bills embodying the tariff.

On Monday, Earl Grey, in the House of Lords, raised an important debate on the state of Ireland. The attendance of peers was numerous; and Earl Grey, who, as Lord Howick; in the House of Commons, used to support the motions of Mr. Villiers and Mr. Cobden with great power, clearness, and force of argument, did not lower his reputation on the present occasion. His speech contained many boldly uttered truths, which the House of Lords is not in the habit of hearing. But after a lengthened debate, the noble lord's motion was rejected by 61 to 17.

In the House of Commons, the second reading of the Corn Bill came on, when, as had been announced, an amendment was proposed, on which it was understood there was to be a week's discussion. On this occasion there was a slight change of performers. The amendment, that the Bill be read "that day six months," was proposed by Mr. Ellot Yorke, the brother of the Earl of Hardwicke, and one of the representatives for Cambridgeshire. It will be recollected that the Earl of Hardwicke held a situation in the royal household, which he resigned when Sir Robert Peel announced his measures. Now, so long as the Earl retained an official position, his brother, the county member, defended the Government, and got himself into much trouble with his constituency; and to do some of the farmers and landlords of the Cambridgeshire fens justice, they are about as troublesome a set of protectionists as may be found. The reason is at hand. They believe that if protection be withdrawn, the sea will not merely break down their dykes, but flood their low levels, sowing " wild oats" over their property. The Earl of Hardwicke having gone into opposition, his brother goes also, and makes up for his former advocacy of Sir Robert Peel by the bitterness of his present attack on him. "The right hon, baronet," said Mr. Eliot You fluent, flippant, schoolboyish speech, looked to posterity for his indemnity, and there was no doubt but that the future historian would give him his due. He would be represented as a man who had been trusted on account of his professions by a great party of his countrymen, but whom that party had been obliged to abundon on account of his subsequent withdrawal from every one of these professions. It would be said of him-

"He stood alone, a renegade Against the party he betrayed; I ke stood alone amidst his band, Without a trusted heart or hand,"

This sort of vituperation from the small fry of the protectionists must often remind Sir Robert Peci of the Fool in King Lear:—

"Lear.—O me, my heart, my rising heart!—but down!
"Look.—Gry to it, Nuncle, as the cockney did to the cels, when she put them i' the paste alive; she repped 'em o' the encombs with a stick, shd dried, 'down, wantons, down.'
"I'was her brother that in pure kindness to his horse buttered his hay."

Omitting all mention of the small arguments of the small seep who spoke on Monday night, we may mention that hir he Georgia, the Conservative member for Honiton, made a sensible speech in support of the Government. But the following descrives particular permeal. Mr. Fox Manie, shiest for M. For Manie, shiest for the Conservation is held to a vest agricultural property for the way of the same would allow him to introduce a see observations upon this question. He did so from feeling, it was right that those who were connected solely with the lauded property of the country, and who had nothing clse to look to, ought to state the grounds upon which they supported the proposition of her Majesty's Go-vernment. He could not say of that proposition that it had his outro and cordial approval, because it did not go to the extent he wished it to proceed. It fell short of that which he considered requisite to remedy the difficulties it was proposed to meet; but nevertheless, such as it was, he for one accepted it with gratitude, and he should endeavour to give it his most cordial support (hear, hear). He had listened to the honourable gontleman who proposed the amendment, and he confessed he felt some difficulty in accounting for the statement he had made with reference to the feelings this measure had created, not only in the breasts of land lords, but in the breasts of farmers and agricultural labourers on this side of the Tweed. It had been his duty, over since the measure had been proposed, to investigate the feelings which existed towards it in that country, and among that class to which he more immediately belonged; and he had no hesitation in publicly declaring that the result of that investigation had been this -- not only was there no panio among the landlerds, or among the farmers, but in spite of all that had been said, agricultural arrangements were proceeding with an incremed activity from day to day. He would state to the house, in reference to the observations which had fallen from the other side, a practical example of that which he had mentioned. When this proposition wes first made, a document was laid before a public meeting channeling from one to whom, however he might have sometimes differed upon the means he took to advocate this question, he had no hesitation in saying the country was under a very deep debt of gratitude for his exertions. He meant the honomable member for Stockport (bear, hear). The letter which that hon, gentleman addressed to the farmers of the kingdom, shortly after this measure was proposed, had been widely ennyassed in his (Mr. F. Manle's) county, at many of the largest markets there; and within ten days after the right honomable gentleman at the head of the Government had developed his measures, the furnicis, who he would not say were in the first instance anxious for it, but after having seen and heard the arguments in their support in that letter, they came to the conclusion, that instead of their being put off for three years, their interests would have been best consulted had the abolition of the Corn Laws taken place at once (hear, hear, hear). Such was his own conclusion, and he must say that he looked with regret upon the proposed measure of the Gevernment, because it contained provisions for maintaining the present Corn Laws for a further period of three years, and he also looked with regret upon the time which had al ready intervened since the right honourable gentleman had proposed this measure, and which he leared must yet intervene before even the measure of the right honourable gentleman could be carried into effect (hear, hear). - He could not but remember that on the 1st of November last the right honourable gentleman had proposed, on account of the appro-bended scarcity, both in Treland and in this country, to open the ports for the free admission of foreign grain. We had now arrived at nearly the end of March, and still there was no decided prospect of even the partial remedy of her Majes-ty's Government being carried through that house of Parlia-ment. He had certainly anticipated, and had hoped, before that house should separate for the Easter recess, that the measure would at any rate have passed that tribunal; but he regretted to think that, during the next week, they were to have mixed with that debate another subject of the deepest importance to a neighbouring country; and the experience which he had had of Trish debates forbade him to hope that the present measure would be read a third time in that house before the Easter recess (hear, hear, and a laugh) Under all the circumstances, he could not anticipate that before the end of May, at least, any advantage could be ex pected to accrue from it. He could not find fault with the length of time which the discussion of that subject had already occupied, for every one had a right fully to speak on so important a subject, particularly if he felt that his interests were affected. The landlords had stated that it was a question in which they were deeply concorned. He (Mr. P. Maule) must say he believed that in his county the interests of the landlords would be as safe after this measure should become law as they were at present; and he not only believed that the alarm which they expressed now was groundless, but he was surprised at the conduct of many of those who had (if he might use the expression) the very groundlessness of it under their own immediate eyes. He knew one noble lord who had withdrawn his proxy from the Government, and had given it to the noble duke who led the protectionist party in another place, and yet he know at the same time that ten days after the right honourable baronet had made his proposal known to the country the noble lord had let two farms upon his own pro-porty at an increased rental (hear, hear, hear). He stated the fact, because one fact was worth a bushel of arguments (hear, hear). One farm was renewed for a period of nineteen years. Previously the rent was 480% a year. Ton days after the right honourable baronet's proposal was made known, a rent was offered for the country nincteen years of 570l. per annum, being an increase of 90l. a year (hear, hear). Hitherto the rent had been puld half in grain and half in money; the whole increase of rent was conditioned to be paid exclusively in money (cheers). The other farm was let within a few days afterwards. He was not acquainted with the procise details, but he was within the mark when he stated that it had been let at an increased rent of 20 per cent. He had consulted nearly the whole of the land agents in the large county of Portly and they could not inform him of one single instance within their knowledge where the lease of a farm having expired the offers on it had not risen, and the increased offers had not been accepted by the landlords (hear, hear). He observed that a few days ugo a petition had been presented in another place from the county of Haddington against the proposed measures of the Government, and yet he knew that so far from having been depressed in value, a farm in that county had not many days sgo, been let upon a now lease at the enormous price of five guineas an acre. These facts concurred to make him think that if the whole agricultural interest of Scotland were fairly to consider the proposed measures, the result would be that they would look forward to the lease of the releasing of the releasing of the releasing of the releasing of the releasing of the releasing of the releasing of the releasing of the releasing of the releasing of the releasing of the releasing of the releasing of the releasing of the releasing of the releasing of the releasing of the releasing of the releasing the releasin the issue of the principles of Free Trade as to one which would enable them to stand the much improved condition would enable them to stand in a much improved condition with reference to the other classes of the community (hear, hear). He looked upon those measures of her Majesty's Government as calculated to spoth and calm the feelings of britation which might exist in our own community; hit he looked also into the course of commercial research as calculated to teach to a like greater extent, and to require peace between nations and throughout the world (bear, hear). Let them look to America, and he would ask to what did they attribute the changed tone of America? He attributed it, first, to the calm and dignified manner in which all parties in this country had treated the subject in dispute; but he equally ascribed it to those measures of freedom of trade and commercial liberty which had emanated from her Majesty's Government, and which he was sure would be found by all parties, whother extended to America or to any other country on the face of the globe, to be their best security for peace, whilst they would eventually secure to this country an abundant supply of all articles which entered into the food, and conduced to the comfort of the people (hear, hear).

The adjourned debate on Tuesday was marked by two or three good speeches. Mr. Hawes, member for Lambeth, gave an able and elaborate review of the whole influence and effects of Corn Laws and a protective system, demonstrating by figures and facts their inutility as well as mischief. Sir John Hanmer, also, descendant of a celebrated Speaker of the House of Commons—

("Illustrious age! how bright thy glories shone

When Hanner filled the chair, and Anne the throne") speaking as a landed proprietor, condemned the Corn Laws. Mr. Francis Baring, too, (he was Chanceller of the Exchequer in the Whig administration) warned the protectionists against the folly and madness of endeavouring to force on a dissolution of Parliament on such a question as this. But only conceive Mr. Shaw, the Recorder of Dublin, after denying that there was any famine in Ireland, from a failure of the potato crop, talking in this strain:—But the right honbaronet at the head of her Majesty's Government had changed his opinions, and in the words of the poet:

"Ban', ban'--Ca--Callban,

Has a new master-Get a new man."

(Renewed cheering and laughter from the protectionists.) No wonder they cheered and laughted. Mr. Shaw is a judge; and if he goes on in this style, he might possibly emulate that celebrated judicial wag, Lord Norbury, who could make a poor fellow burst out laughing, on whom he was passing sentence of death.

But there is one speech which was delivered on Tuesday night deserving preservation. Mr. Rashleigh, head of the ancient Cornwall house of Rashleigh, spoke in the following enlightened way:

Mr. RASHLEIGH should like to ask the First Minister of the Crown if he was prepared to agree to all the unconstitu-tional demands made on him by the Anti Corn-Law League on the apposite benches. There may be other anti-law lenguers, as well as Auti Corn-Law lenguers, and if this measure of the Government passed, it could be looked upon as nothing but a bonus to other agitators. The right hon. baronet below him (Sir J. Graham) smiled at that; but the Secretary for the Home Department had no right to smile (langhter) at the great question before them (ironical cheers and laughter from the Opposition benches). Honourable members opposite might smile, but they would not put him down by that course, nor would the important interest which he advocated be put down by the honourable member for Stockport, and the crew behind him (laughter, and ironical cheers from the Free Trade members). He held in his hand a speech of the right honourable baronet at the had of the Government, made in June, 1814, not twenty: one months ago, a portion of which he should read to the house, in order to show what a change had taken place in the opinions of the right honourable baronet within the short space of time which had clapsed since that speech was made. Here the honourable member read an extract from a speech delivered by Sir Robert Peel in 1844, in which the right honourable baronet miged, in very strong terms, the expediency of not applying the rigid rules of political econony, in all cases, to a state of society such as that which exists in this country. He (Mr. Rashleigh) declared it to be his opinion that it was the duty of the house and the country to call whon the right hon, baronet and ask him the reason for his tergiversation (hear, hear, from Colonel Sibthorp). He recollected the time when the motions of the hon, member for Stockport were treated with silent contempt in that house, and defeated by large divisions. That was the constitutional way of dealing with unconstitutional propositions (fronical cheers and laughter). It was some consolation, however, for him to think that the present measure would be treated in the other house in a manner very different from that in which it had been received here. He called upon the right reverend prelates to defend the altar tlaughter from the Opposition). Aye, the altar, the throne, and the cottage trendwed laughter from the same quarter) He did not know why honourable members opposite should laugh. He lived at some distance from their smoky regions; but their long chimneys were high in the horizon of his me-mory (ironical cheers). The right hon, baronet, the First Minister, in introducing the present measure to Parliament, had stated that the Cornish miners were now so well off, that they were able to invest a portion of their earnings in fea-thers, and actually enjoyed the luxury of a feather-bed. Even admitting this to be the case, it was no argument in favour of the right hon, barenet's measure, as it was much better to let well alone, than to run the risk of losing what we had by grasping after more. He should like the hon. member for Stockport to come down into the county of Cornwall. He would not poison or hang the honourable member, and he would be proud to show him the state of the peasantry in that country. He should not be able, perhaps, to place the honourable member in a feather-bed, because a feather bed was not exactly what the peasantry would pre-pare for him. He could tell the right hon, baronet, that if he determined to carry the reductions on copper ore into effect, he would soon min the classes whom he said now laid out their surplus carnings in feathers. He had a letter from a gentleman who had been in the habit of employing from 2000 to 3000 persons daily, and who expressed his entire disapprobation of the Government measure. He would not further occupy the time of the house. He might have used some hard language, owing to his want of experience in addressing the house: but he could excure honourable memhers that he was not ashaned of what he had said. It was painful to him to oppose the right hon, barquet; but be could not coment to be dragged through the muck and mire of expediency to support his new langled notions.

But for a few characteristic incidents, the continued debate on Thursday night would have been the duliest and drearlest in the interminable list of duli and dreary nights, First, there was shallow Mr. Bankes-a veritable "Justice Shallow"-testifying his deep sense of constitutional responsibility by inventing new pratuxts to delay the progress of the Corn Bill. He moved that a Select Committee be appointed, to which should be referred the consideration of the entire Law of Settlement. To this, Sir James Oraham and Bir Robert Peel replied, that there was already a bill in the House, the second reading of which would afford an occasion for discussing the entire question. This appeared so reasonable, that Mr. Colquinoun and Sir R. H. Inglis begged Mr. Bankes to withdraw his motion. The "Justice Shallow" of Dorsetshire consented, not, however, without betraying the spirit in which he has brought it forward. He would avail himself, he threatened, of every available opportunity of raising a discussion on the Law of Settlement, before the Corn Law Bill passed that House. The meaning of this is, that he will take every opportunity to delay the measure. This is the spirit of those who arrogate to them. selves all the loyalty, all the constitutionality, all the respect. ability, and all the responsibility, of the empire.

The resumed debate was taken up by Mr. Finch; and to those who have never heard Mr. Fluch, our description of him may appear coloured. Yet it is not so. The look of the man is quite enough. There is a pert conceit playing about his lips; and the atmosphere around his face is charged with a most prodigious amount of self-esteem. But he is excessively voluble; and he mistakes this for talent. His words roll out of his mouth, like potatoes pursuing one another out of a sack that a man is emptying; they run, here and there and everywhere, swift as the "arrowy Rhone," but not like it, to termination. He talked, and talked, and talked, and talked, until the Opposition benches became deserted, with the exception of Mr. Hume. But even Mr. Hume could not stand the chilling blasts of empty benches, though the fiery torrent of Finch was struggling with the frozen regions. He crossed over to the ministerial benches, in order to feel the comfort of having a shadow. Then on the Opposition benches there remained nothing but a HAT. The owner of the hat, Mr. Hawes, was ensconced behind the chair of the SPEAKER, enjoying a snug tete-a-tete. But the hat tried to supply the absence of its master. It stood on its crown, on the front opposition bench; and, like the kettle, in Mr. Dickens's tale of the "Cricket on the Hearth," leaned forward, so as to catch with open mouth the great points of the Finch Speech. Yet the hat was not like the kettle, for it showed symptoms of intelligence: now and then you might almost imagine that it raised itself up, as if muttering of Finch, as Pope did of Henley:

"How fluid nonsense trickles from his tongue." But the hat was at last released from its sufferings. Its owner approached the empty benches, and put it on his head.
There seemed a strong feeling of satisfaction in the hat as it felt itself over a head with brains. It needed all the comfort; for just before it was released, Mr. Finch had threatened that if ever the hat appeared there again, all alone by itself, he would punish it by a four hours' speech!

The rest of the night was worse than a halli scherif. Small men spoke; and they spoke small. There was one exception. Mr. Charles Buller rose; and he put some intelligence into the matter. But his speech was drowned by Lord George Bentinck, who reproduced his figures and "calculations." He did more. He compared ministers to pirates who had scuttled and ran ashore the good ship Protection, but he and his gallant crew will fetch her off the lecshore, and tow her into port. Marvellous impudence, did we not know that a training on Newmarket, and at Tattersall's, is the very best school for unblushing impudence. But something more transpired in the course of the night. Lord George has been trying to strike a bargain with ministers, that if they will postpone the Corn Law Bill till after Easter, the protectionists will support the Coercion Bill-if not, they will oppose it! This is the political morality of the uggles to live at the expense of the public. and has for a leader a qui tam hero.

The debate, it is understood, is to terminate on Friday (last) night.

THE PRESS AND FREE TRADE.—A meeting of peers, very numerously attended, took place yesterday (Wednesday), at the Clarendon Hotel, at which it was unanimously resolved to oppose, by every constitutional means, the progress of the Government Free Trade measures in the House of Lords.—Post.

Special Exomptions in Favour of Land.—Besides all the great exemptions from taxation with which agriculture is favoured, and which are well known, there are many lesser ones seldom if ever noticed. For instance, in this town (Preston) grain has been permitted to stand in the market free from time immemorial; and when the Corn Exchange was erected in 1824, at an expense of 12,000t., the whole of the pavement area was reserved for corn without any charge, and has been so occupied ever since. For several days in the week, our large central market place is filled with carts, laden with hay and straw: but these all stand and sell, without a farthing of charge. Where can such indulgence and favours be found in favour of any of our manufactures? The rate for the improvement of our borough is usually divided into two, the "paving rate" and the "lighting rate." All the land included in Preston is contiguous to the town, yet it is free from the lighting rate, which is 6d, in the pound, the other being only 4d, though buildings pay for both in similations where the one gats as little benefit of the paving as the other may seem to do of lighting. These little matters show the spirit of former times, and how ladd the special favours.

IMPORTANT DEPUTATION TO SIR

(From the Morning Chronicle.)

It has seldom fallen to the lot of an English Muister to receive a deputation, so important, in whatever light it may be viewed as that which yesterday waited upon Sir Roben Peel from Manchester. This deputation, which was accompanied by Mr. Gibson and Mr. Brotherton, consisted of Mr. Thos. Bazley, the president of the Chamber of Commerce. Mr. J. A. Turner, president of the Commercial Association: Mr. Edwd. Tootal, and Mr. Wm. Stewart, three of whom alone are the employers of no fewer than ten thousand work. people, and to whom, therefore, at the lowest estimate, thirty thousand human beings look for their weekly substatence This deputation waited upon Sir Robert Peel, on the part of all the bankers, of fifty five members of the town council and of more than a thousand of the most influential manu. facturers and merchants of Manchester and its immediate vicinity, whose aggregate capital employed in the trate of the country exceeds thirty millions sterling, who are directly the employers of one hundred and twenty thousand persons, and on whom nearly four hundred thousand of the surrounding population rely for their daily food—to request the Minister to present their petition to the House of Commons, praying for an immediate passing of the measures now pending before Parliament. This petition originated and was completed within twenty-four hours, having received the signatures of eleven hundred and twenty two of such men as we have described, and of all shades of political opinion. High Conservative, moderate Whig, and ultra-Radical were unanimous upon this occasion. The ruinous disasten which appear to impend over them and the surrounding population, by the protraction of those debates in Parliament have sunk all other considerations. The pertinacity of a reckless minority, which impedes, by every vexatious contrivance, the progress of those great commercial questions, has levelled every distinction of political party in those great districts of trade, where merchants and manufacturers are threatened with the most serious embarrassment, and their numerous dependents with starvation.

It is two months to day since the great commercial reforms introduced by Sir Robert Peel were received by the nation with universal acclamation. Since then the news of their introduction has traversed the Atlantic, has carried ". message of peace" and future hope to the interior of the American Continent; and we have received back in this country assurances of friendship and mutual good offices. Yet it was only last night that the bill for the first of those measures reached the second reading in the House of Commons. Three weeks were occupied with a single debate; and several weeks more have been wasted under the pretence of protecting and defending the interests of silk manufarturers, timber merchants, and other traders, all of which are suffering the most severe losses by the delay, and whose on desire is for the speedy adoption of the ministerial proposals. Lord Worcester, Lord George Bentinck, Mr. D'Iaraeli, and Mr. Borthwick are the obstructives, who set up their authority as the guardian of commerce, in spite of the remonstrances of Manchester, Liverpool, and London. Majorities of ninety-seven, one hundred and two, and one hundred and thirty-three, against all their amendments in Parliament, and general consternation at their proceedings on the part of the country, appear to weigh but little with them. Their sport, for such it is evidently to them, they appear determined to have at whatever cost to the country.

The embarrassment which has been caused by the sus pension of all commercial transactions for so long a period, has been and is felt severely in all branches of business, and in all the large trading towns in the kingdom. In London and Liverpool it would be difficult to calculate the losses which have arisen from the monetary derangement consequent upon the interruption to the usual transactions of trade and exchange of commodities. But when we go to the manufacturing districts, difficulties and consequences of a much more serious character present themselves. There it is not alone the balance sheet of the merchant at the end of the year that is affected by the interruption to business; it is not there a mere question of profit or loss to the wealthy trader; there the stagnation of trade and the cessation of demand involve the very existence of millions of our tolling people, and ultimately the peace of society and the security of property. It is difficult for those at a distance to realise to themselves the extent of individual suffering and public danger which attend any material cessation of the usual demand for labour in those districts. The ministers who had the responsibility of the public peace in 1812, have not readily forgotten the alarm which existed in that year. The merchants and manufacturers who lived in the midst of that distress, are above all things solicitous to avoid its recurrence. For two months past they have been struggling against accumulating stocks, in the daily hope of confidence being restored to trails but he first form. sures. But week after week has only brought its disappointment, until at length a material contraction of production has been a matter of necessity which can no longer be post-

The deputation which waited upon Sir Robert Peel resterday furnished the Minister with facts, carefully collected from the official accounts of the town of Manchester at the condition of its population in 1841, the last period of a general stagnation of business, which afford atrong evidence of the sufferings then endured, and which must again be experienced in an aggravated form, if from a continued suspension of confidence no relief is afforded to trade. In that year, in Manchester and its immediate suburbs, there were bler untenanted buildings, usually containing about 27,000 per soms; there were 681 empty shops and offices; and 116 soms; there were 681 empty shops and offices; and 116 mills, engineers, and other works closed up, representing property, in the whole, which stood assessed in the town property, in the whole, which stood assessed in the town of Manchester was less than usually coded 100,0001. During that period the weekly consumption of coal in the town of Manchester was less than usually 1020 tons, of which 620 tons are calculated to have been used less in business, and 2000 tons less for priests domestic used less in business, and 2000 tons less for priests domestic faint idea can be formed of the sufferings of a population amongst whom such a change had occurred. Bei help amongst whom such a change had occurred. Bei help to the part of the sufferings of a population of the sufferings of a population amongst whom such a change had occurred.

Manchester was at that time, the condition of Bookpan, ton, and other surrounding towns, we inspitely wree it is scarcely necessary forms to dwall open the portaines of confidence for the success of distance show how insposed by the laythet that the transfer show how insposed by the laythet that the transfer should exist as long at those vital and the product of the laythet that the transfer should exist as long at those vital and the laythet laythet the laythet lay 다 아 아 alarm and dismay.

ure Life tables :

sels.

27, 23,199

29 23,45:

Years.

#4 ----

. . . .

....

1840

Years

1832

1810

1820 25,374 2,648,593 21 25,636 2,550,203 22 24,642 2,510,044

23| 24,54: | 2,506,760 24| 24,776| 2,559,587

1830: 23,721 2,531,810 31 24,242 2,581,961

Year, from 1820 to 1845.

Tonnage.

2,553,682 2,635,614

2,460,500 2,518,191 2,517,000

32 24,435 2,618,068 | 161,634

British.

Tons.

.036.816

2.108.492 2,203,026 2,250,173

2,340,300 2,464,020

2,756,53; 2,807,367

2,900,749 2,680,838 2,019,528 3,087,437 3,669,853

1,637,000

1,643,894 1,640,274 1,744,094 1,828,501

1,861,121

2, 58,240 2,197,014 2,498,792 3,624,680

Vessels.

10,762

10,989 11,678

11,740

11,644

12,890 14,348

14.119

13,964

15,984

9,544

9,7:34 10,158

10,216 10,614

12.9:14

British.

Vessels. Tons.

Custom House, London, 6 March, 1846.

incur any of the odium attached to them, by interposing any business whatever which can delay the final settlement of these questions, or fail to use every means in their power to bring them to a close. They have a powerful majority in Parliament—they have already exhibited forbearance enough to a mere obstructive minority—to whom further concessions will only be made at a severe sacrifice to the whole

We trust, therefore, they will use every means community. We trust, therefore, they will use every means which their influence and their majority place within their reach, to meet the prayer of the pelitions from Manchester and other parts of the kingdom, and thus avert that wide-spread distress, the approach of which is creating so much

FREE TRADE VINDICATED BY FACTS.

(From the Economist.)

In our last number we referred to a remarkable array of facts, produced in an official return to Parliament moved for by Sir Robert Peol, showing the operation of some of the chief Free Trade measures which have been adopted during the last twenty years. The first accounts relate to the ship-ping and navigation of the British empire. The following

ANACOUNT of the Number of VESSELS, with the Amount of their Tonnage, and the Number of Men and Boys usually employed in navigating the same, that belonged to several

174,514 1833 24,385 169,179 34 25,056 166,333 35 25,511 165,474 36 25,829

RETURN of the NUMBER and TONNAGE of VESSELS, distinguishing British from Foreign, employed in the Foreign and Colonial Trade, which entered Inwards and cleared Outwards from Ports of the United Kingdom, in each year from 1832 to 1815, exclusive of Vessels in Ballast.

4,490

4,701

6,749 8,766 8,355

7,439 5,851

5,600

7,247

7,895

Vessele.

3,447 3,035

4,438 4,912 5,733

6,472

Cloared Outwards.

Foreign.

6,772 S3,738, 6,618 918,776 6,205 956,591 6,774 1,026,063 7,200 1,075,823 9,286 1,361,040

Tons.

523,903

543,825

625,930

667,016

716,807 858,002 898,738

En'orod Inwards.

Foreign.

Tons.

618,911

732,896 740,828

882,101 869,519 1,037,234 1,200,935

1,297,840 1,997,840 1,041,380 21,858 974,392 10,674 1,005,894 1,143,897 1,353,795 20,859

37 26 037

38 26,009 38 27,745

1840 28,002 41 50,052

42 30,815 43 30,983

44 31,320 | 3,637,231

45 not yet completed

Men.

165,474 168,637

166,183 107,636 151,415

1/54,808

164,812 134,422

Ports of the British Empire, on the 31st December in each

Tonnage.

2,634,577 2,716,100

2,791,018 2,890,601

3,068,433 3,311,538

3 512 480

3,619,50 3,588,387

JOHN COVEY, Registrar.

Tatal.

Tons.

2,407,803 2,048,811 2,841,378

.1:32.367

3,215,519 3,501,254

,957,465

,105,207

,982,129 ,635,230

1,025,422 1,231,334

5.023,588

2,103,426

2.184.00m

2,405,517 2,578,018 2,016,302

302,020 3,543,456 3,691,574

,370,033

Total.

Vessels. Tons.

20,801 | 5,945,450 21,402 | 3,691,574 21,080 | 3,753,360 21,042 | 3,080,066 2),771 | 4,309,107

12,642

12,081 13,181

15,526

18,424

20,861

Vоявоїн.

14,627

15,479 10,438

16,531 17,603

18,113 19,639

23.114

Mon.

108,001

170,037

178,583

191,283 201,340

210,198 214,009

213,077

210,350

ister to it may Boben accom. of Mr. merce; iation ;

whom work. thirty sterice part of oune], manu. rediate ade of of the Com. S now i and ceived สนกป edicul uten g poineni, rof a con. lions, great their en of this \mathbf{n} d

the

loſ

15,197 2,731,08: 15,203 2,727,306 13,842 2,604,243 14,515 2,047,257

Statistical Department, Board of Trade, 9 March, 1846. G. R. PORTER; There is no class which has more pertinaciously clung to the principles of protection and restriction than the shipowners of this country, from the period when the cerebrated Navigation Act was finally passed by the 12th of Charles II.

That law exacted that no produce should be imported from the competition of foreign shipping, it appears that while the competition of foreign shipping, it appears that while the whole tonnage of that class has increased by 1,088,205 tons, and estaowners of this country, from the period when the celebrated Asia, Africa, or America, except in British ships, and established higher rates of duties on all goods imported in foreignships from other parts of Europe, than if imported in British ships. This law was retained without change until 1815, when the condition of our relations with the United States rendered it imposssible to maintain it against that country. The large trade which existed between this country. country. The large trade which existed between this country and the United States, while the latter were colonies of the British amples continued to impress after the independent the British empire, continued to increase after the independence of that country was established; but in regard to their shipping they lost the privileges which they possessed as colonies, and were placed on the same footing as foreign countries. countries. The consequence was, that American ships coming to England were obliged to sail in ballast, to return with a cargo, while English ships carried cargoes both ways. To obvicte the disadvantage to which American ships were thus account in the cargot to the accountries were thus account in the cargot to the cargot t were thus exposed in the competition with British, the Amerioan Government passed a law placing British ships under the same disabilities in entering American ports that American ships under tican ships were exposed to in entering British ports. The consequence of these mutual restrictions was, that all American produce was brought to this country in British ships, while all Emplish and American in American while all English goods were carried to America in American ships; the vessels of the respective countries passing one way in ballast, and thus exactly double the number of ships were required for the trade between the two countries; on in other words the product of seek country became. ships were required for the trade between the two countries; on in other words, the produce of each country became chargeable with double the expense for freight to the consumers in each respectively. This reciprocal folly lasted until 1810, when it was terminated by a treaty, by which such country coded to the other all, the privileges envised by its own ships.

No further allienties was made in the Navigation Act till self-our ships similar covalines with the privileges envision in that year (Presinct self-our lates) and parties to the country of the privileges of the country of the privileges of the country of the privileges of the their ships on entering our ports, which caused a great clamour amongst our shipowners. Mr Huskisson then saw that it was in vain to attempt to maintain our Navigation that it was in vain to attempt to maintain our Navigation Act any longer. ... To have negotiated with Pruesia alone, as we had already done with the United States, only left the same to be done with every other country, sconer or later, whose shipping was injured by our laws. Mr. Huskisson, therefore, in the same year, proposed the Reciprocity Acts of 4th-and oth George IV., authorising his Majesty, by order in council, to repeal all discriminating duties on the ships of those countries which should enter into treaty with us to admit our ships on similar conditions. Since that period we have concluded treaties of reciprocal navigation with we have concluded treaties of reciprocal navigation with-

Pruouia Denmark Hanover Oldenburg Mecklenburg Greece Bremen Hamburg

Imbook States of La Plata Columbia Holland Awoden & Norway Moxico

Brazil Russia Portugal, and prior to that time with the United States

From the time the Reciprocity Act of 1823 passed, to the present day, the shipowners have never ceased to assert that that act had brought ruin upon the trade. The "Cornkill Committee" have published their annual reports, ever complaining of the ruinous consequences of foreign competition, and at their instance numerous Parliamentary investigations have been made into their alleged distress. The object of the tables given above is to show how much truth there has been in these assertions, and to exhibit the real consequences of the measures of 1823.

The first table shows the quantity of shipping possessed at the end of each year from 1820 to 1844. In 1823 the whole registered tomage amounted to 2,506,780 toms. From that time to 1814, independent of replacing all the ships which were during that period lost at sea, we find the registered shipping amounted to 3,637,231 tons, showing an increase of no less than 4,130,471 tons, or rather more than 45 percent during the period. This fact is calculated to con-45 per cent. during the period. This fact is calculated to contradict the assertion which has constantly been made as to the ruinous diminution of the shipping trade. But the best test of the two principles-that of restriction or Free Trade -will be to compare the progress of British shipping for the last twenty years prior to the change of the law with the twenty years immediately succeeding it. In 1804 the registered tonnage amounted to 2,208,570 tons; in 1823, it had increased to 2,506,760 tons, or by 238,100 tons, being rather more than 10 per cent. The comparison may be thus stated:

Period from 1804 to 1823, under the Navigation Act and restriction policy.

Tons of Shipping.

804 . Tonnage.. 2,268,570
823 . . . 2,508,700

Increase of tons . . 238,100 or 10 per cent.

Period from 1821 to 1844, un der the Reciprocity Act and Free Trade policy. Tons of Shipping. 1823 .. Tonnago .. 2,506,760 1844 .. - .. 3,637,231

Increase of tons.. 1,130,471 or 45 per cent.

We have thus the astounding fact before us, that while British shipping of this country, under the protective policy, from 1804 to 1823, increased only by 238,190 tons, or 10 per cont; in a similar period, from 1823 to 1811, under a Free Trade policy, it increased by 1,130,471 tons, or 45 per cent; and yet the latter is the system which the practical men of the times have vehemently denounced as the rain of the shipping interest!!!

The next tables above show the number and tonnage of shipping entered inwards and outwards, distinguishing the proportion of British and foreign in each year since 1832. In this return there is an important misprint in the Parliamentary document, which represents this account to be "inclusive," in place of "exclusive," of ships in ballast, which we have corrected. A reference to the annual tables presented to Parliament will show that this is a mere error. We wish this account had extended back to 1823, when the law was altered, as the results would have appeared even more s riking than they are. As it is, we find the comparison be-racen the two be	priods to Hav	e neen vate	llows:

Entéred inwards Entered outwards	18: British Shipping, Tons, 1,936,836 1,637,083	Foreign Shipping, Tons, 561,047	184 British Shipping, Tons, 3,669,853 2,947,257	Foreign
Total tonnage	3,673,939 Cove	1,027,380 ARISON.	0,617,110	2,716,075
1432 1845	Britt Shipp Tou 9,573,9 6,017,1	ก) ing. ห. 30	Foreign Shipping, Tons, 1,027,380 2,715,075
Incres	180 3.043.1	 71	1 600 008

So that, after all we have heard of the prejudicial effects of 3,013,171. It has been attempted to account for this contradiction of the usual assertions with respect to the decay of the shipping interest, by saying, that the great increase of British shipping is caused by the repeated voyages of Con-tinental passenger boats, especially of those in the Channel. This, however, cannot be the case, because those vessels clear in ballast, and do not carry cargoes, and consequently are not included in those accounts. Who, then, has benefited most by the Reciprocity Act of 1823—the British shipowner or the foreign shipowners? If the law had remained seit was English ships must have been said from controlled from controlled from controlled. as it was, English ships must have been excluded from carrying goods to the United States, to Prussia, and, sooner or later, to all countries whose ships were excluded. It is, therefore, an easy calculation to determine which party has benefited most by the change which took place in 1823. Since 1832 only, foreign shipping with this country has inoreased by 1,688,296 tons; but our own shipping with foreign countries has increased by no less than 3,043,171 tons. Which party, then, has been most benefited by those treaties which rovided for both parties open ports in each other's country? provided for both parties open ports in each other's country? While this extraordinary increase has been going on, what has been the language of the abipowner? In 1894 their reports say—"The long-continued and still existing depression of the shipping interest—the partial productions and great aggravation of distress caused by continual changes in our national distress caused by continual changes in vigation system—the utter impossibility of the successful maintenance of an unrestricted competition with foreign navigation—the gross injustice of the imposition of possilar and exclusive burdens on maritime commerce, for purposes purely national, while exposed to that competition—the dealining quality and estimation of British tonings—the embarrace mone, decay, and ruin of the British shipowner-may now be viewed as incontrovertible positions." Such that been the language of this class, while they have been doubling their language of this class, while they have been doubling their property and their trade in shipping; and whenever a minister has proposed to respind the burdens of which they have complained, by reducing the duties on timber and provisions, he has met with no more inveterate opponent than the shipowner. The shipowners have generally pretended to a claim for protection, on the plea of supporting the colonial interests; but in their report issued in 1844, so forgetful were they of that interest, that they proposed to charge a duty on the registration of colonial built ships as a protection to them solves.

The next table in these returns is-

STATEMENT of the Brat or Diglared Value of British and IRIAH PRODUCE and MANUFACTURES Exported from the United Kingdom to different Foreign Countries and Colonial Possessions, in each Year, from 1827 to 1841:

	1
) 3	Total	SAME SAME SAME SAME SAME SAME SAME SAME
	Ceutral and South America, including Brazil	4.04.019 5.10.020 5.1
	Foreign West Indies.	200 200 200 200 200 200 200 200 200 200
	British North American Colonies and British West Indies.	4.00 (19) (19) (19) (19) (19) (19) (19) (19)
	United States.	4.000.00 4.000.
	. A Sig.	4 19 19 19 19 19 19 19 19 19 19 19 19 19
	Africa.	######################################
	South- ern Europe.	5.05.73 5.05.73 5.05.75 7.05 7.0
	نه ي	発見させらなるないでありまるいため 。
	М.н. em Eur	2012-1-20
	Year

Statistical Department, Board of Trade, 9th Match, 1816. G. R. PORTI R.

This table exhibits the gratifying fact that not with standing all the difficulties with which this country has had to contend, from bad laws at home, and hostile tariffs abroad, we have nevertheless been able to increase the amount of our exports, in actual value, from 30,860,376l in 1827, to 58,581,292l, in 1841; which has been accomplished entirely by the unprecedented progress which, during that period, we have made by the improvement of machinery, the application of ketence, and other means, all combining to a greater reconomy of production. The extent to which this has taken place will be best seen by comparing the official value, which being taken at the same fixed rates, represents the comparative quantity at any period, and the real or actual value, which has relation to the price at the time. In 1627 and 1843 the comparison of these two values was thus;

A Official Value. Real Value. /1827 Exports . 62,050,008 were of . 36,800,376 1843 . 131,833,391 were of . 52,720,709

While therefore the quantity of goods experted is considerably more than doubled in the period, yet so great has been the reduction of prices that the aggregate real value has increased little more than forty per cent.

The divisions of our exports to various countries, exhibited in this table, furnishes extremely valuable illustrations of some of the great arguments at present contended for in commercial legislation, and cannot fail to correct some of the most prevalent and popular errors. The increase to the various markets is thus shown:

de la company de
Exports to	11027		1811
Northern Europe	8,533,963	٠.	11,326,292
Bouthern Europe	5,915,201	·.	11/294/39-9
Total to Europe	14,178,961		25,671,100
Airea	671,188		1.615 0
ABIR	4,700,452		11,273,74
British North American Colo-	7,018,272	••	7,034,079
nies and British West Indies	4,080,572		5,522,238
Foreign West Indies	107, 100	••	1,173,031
including Brazila	4,001,310		5,430,508
Total	30,400,376		68,581,292

It will be observed that the largest actual increase has taken place to the Continent of Europe, being 11,142,2211, out of the whole increase of 21,723,9167. This fact shows how little inituance the hostile tarilly of the various Continental countries have had in restraining our exports, when met by relaxations of those restrictions which affected our imports. And this is even more remarkable if we examine the particular countries to which the greatest increase has taken place. The countries which have pursued the most taken place. The countries which have pursued the most stringent protective principles, and created the most hostile tariff against us during that period, have been France, Russia, Prussia, and Germany (the Zollvoroin), and Belgium. But these are also the countries in respect to the produce of which both the systematic reductions of our duties, and the accidental operation of our Corn Laws, have induced the greatest demand for this country. With respect to France, the admission of their silk manufactures and gloves, at the commencement of the period under review, and the subsequent reduction of the duties on their wines to the rates chargeable on those of Spain and Portugal, have led to a greatly increased importation from that country, which has been attended with a corresponding increase country, which ports. Their with regard to Bussia, Prussia, Cornany, and Beigium, first the great relaction, and finally the entire removal of the duty on wood, flax, and hemp, the reduction of the duty on timber, and the operation of the Com Law, which had to a large importation of grain for accornic consecutive years, have all tended materially to finerense the amount of our exports, in raturn for our increasing imports. The following table shows the progress of our exports to those countries during the period in question:

	1447,	1M J.
Exports to	£	£
Frame	440,952	2/1/10.20
Resemble	1 MPI 970	2.124 (929
Proposia	174,894	1416, 2114
Chermany	4./51.//18	6.151.524
Bolgium, included with Hol-	,, -,, -, ,,
Inn4, but to 1573	750,050	1,471,251
·	7.434.937	12,919,018

Here, then, we have an increase of exports amounting to nearly five millions and a half, merely as the result of relaxations in our own tariff, and in spite of the numerous hostile laws which these countries have enacted against bur commerce. We have in this fact the best answer to that class of politicians who have feith only in diplomacy and reciprocal treaties, and who deny that we can "light hostile turiffs by free imports." This school of politicians tell us that our trade with France can only be increased by negotiation and treaty. The facts before us form the best reply to their theory, and the whole proves incontrovertibly the truth of that rule, which directs a government to take care of its imports, with a feeling of full security that its exports will care for themselves.

The greatest relative increase in apparent in our exports to Asia. This is made up almost entirely between the trade to our own East India pessessions and to China, which are both very striking examples of the benefits of free and unrestricted commerce. Our exports to India remained almost stationary for many years prior to the entire opening of that trade to private enterprise, at the last renewal of the East India Company's charter, the effects of which may be dated from 1834. The progress of the trade to these two markets has been thus:

	J#27.	17:55.]×[1,
Exports.	E	ť	£
Linut Isrila and Gaylon	n'mayntr	2,574,500	7, HUG, HUS
China	610,637	812,852	2,300,617

The great reductions of duties on our goods into China is another strikin \(\epsi\) illustration of how far a country can "light hostile tariffs by free imports." The Chinese are making the experiment, and it is quite obvious that this free admission of British manufactures will compet us to reduce the exorbitant duties on their teas. Meantime they even succeed, to a great extent, in increasing their exports. Our imports from China have rapidly increased during the last three years, as a, mere necessity arising from our exports. Of tea our import has increased since 1842 more than 10,000,000 of lbs., and of silk the increase has been greater. It has been as follows:

			bales.	1				bales.
1413			1.951	. [1444			3,782
1813	••	• •	2,651	1	1815	• •	••	11,358

And in the present year it will be about 18,000 bales.

But while these tables speak so strongly in favour of Free Trade, they furnish evidence as strong against a reliance on the protection system. There is no branch of our trade for which sheld domestic sacrifices have been made as for that with our North American and West India colonics. For their encouragement this country has submitted to the greatest sacrifices. Canadian timber and West India sugar have been the greatest drains that the productive industry of this country has had to contend against. For the encouragement of these interests sacrifices amounting to many pullions a year have been almost cheerfully submitted to, under the impression that they formed the foundation and guarantee for our chief export trade. These returns show that during the whole of the period under review, our exports to these colonies have been stationary; the average of the the three first years being 5,051,709L, and of the last three years 5,026,980l; and it is for this trade that this country has been called upon to sacrifice a sum annually, which, prior to the reductions of duties in the last two years, was variously estimated at from 5,000,000L to 7,000,000L, in the direct price paid for sugar and timber, and independent of the indirect loss sustained by interfering with other great markets.

REVENUE.

The next table in these returns is a

SETTEMENT of the NET REVENUE of CURTOMS in each Year, from 1800 to 1800; the Amount of Duty received on Coun, and the REVENUE exclusive of the Duty on Coun; showing also the principal Duties of Customs repealed and reduced in each Year.

Years.	Revenue.	Duties re- received on Corn.	Revenue ex clusive of Corn.
1	r		£.
1800	21.581.007	1,000,838	20,135,139
1840	W1,784,409	1,150,000	20,027,803
1811	21 HUH MILL	588,340	21,330,504
1812	21 025 145	1,361,960	19 061,170
1813	21,033,717	758,290	20,275,424
1811	124, 147, 22	1 (1)14 143	21,100,439
1815	20,100,856	367,003	10,430,444

Note. Estimated Loss of Revenue by reductions, &c., in the fariff:

1811. Hee in the lusk, oil from the kingdom of the	£ 21,170
1812 Coffee, hides, indigo, olls, sords, timber, liquo- rice, mahogany, turpentine, and export duties
1813. Cork, wood, timber, and other articles	171,521
1841. Comes, surrants, wool, and other articles	161,089
1815 811717	,

1845. Sugar
Cotton wool
Coal, export duty
Alinov articles

2.21,300,000
080,000
118,000
320,000
2.418,000

reprints of the country, it has been found necessary to expect the empurity of from corn under the operation of the country, it has been found necessary to expect the empurity from corn under the operation of the country of the discrete from corn duties hitherto have avowedly the property of the property of the country
£4,930,944

798,0151. While the public have benefited by the reduction of the prices of commodities to an amount represented by import duties equal to 4,235,2441, the consumption of these and other commodities has so much increased as to leave a deficit of only 798,0151, to be supplied in other ways on account of these reductions. Besides this direct advantage, arising from the relaxations of duties, the country has had all the benefit of the increased amount of trads to which an extended consumption, import, and consequent export of our goods have led. The great evil of indirect taxes is, that they limit and interfere with the industry of the country, and the greation of the means for paying them. There is no indirect tax that does not in one way or other take much more from the packets of the people than it places in the Exchequer; and it is on this account that reductions of duties always yield so much more advantage to the public than they impose lows upon the state. The tables before us show that if we are directly taxed to the extent of 70%,0151, to make up a deficit in the revenue, the nation has a fund of at least 4,235,2441, arising from the reduction of duties, from which that direct tax can be paid.

The next table in the return is-

SILK. RAW, WASTE, and THROWN SILK, Entered for home consumption in the United Kingdom. Waste, Waste, Wante.

Years.			Raw.	and	Thrown.	All sorts Husks.
			The.	lhe.	175×.	184.
- INL1			1,501,235	20,234	5NO,505	2,119,974
1815		• •	1.000,500	27,071	377.H22	1,475,389
			- 11773;1 14	4.162	210,758	1,089,334
JH17	• •	• •	1,343,051	49,955	204,553	1,686,669
INIM	• •	• •	1,111,841	80,940	391,108	1,022,087
1410			1,146,007	71.331	331 125	1,449,553
1H20			1,622,700	04,483	300,053	2,027,836
1821	• • •		1,864,513	105,047	360,218	2,320,808
1822	• •		1,993,761	61,021	342,478	2,111,500
1823	• • •		2,051,895	52362	303,801	2,408,121
1824	•	•	3,414,520	133,257		4,011,018
1825	••		2.848.5/8	195,910	559,642	3 001 058
1820	• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •		1,001,169	(included)	249,345	2,253,513
1827	• • •	• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •	3,759,138	with raw	451.015	4,213,153
1828	• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •		4,102,550	in these	386,203	4,547,818
1829		::	2,710,962	(yeary.)	172,239	2,802,201
1830			8,771,000	485,013	110,338	2 WH XY5
1831	• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •	•	3,035,832	702,258	511.210	4.312,330
IH32	• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •	• ::	3,401,445	660 666	329,932	4,302,073
1835	• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •	• •	3 F: $4,705	654.381	204,307	4.701.043
IN 11	• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •	• •	3,346,750	1,009,932	165,009	4.522,361
1835		::	4,131,008	1.352.872	251,578	5,788,458
1436	••	• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •	4,372,501	1,508,721	294,938	6,200,160
1837	• •		3,730,427	875,781	213 368	4,819,576
	• •	• •	3,683,739	960,117	243,570
$44/444	• •	••	3,483,363	1,012,655	229,910	4,897,45
14144	• •	• •	3,860,080	745,243		4,755,058
1	• •	• •			288,981	4,895,204
11111	••	• •	3,200,885	1,370,314 1,434,003	267,333	4,456,532
3 -1 413	• •	• •			353 977	5,735,384
1	• •	••	3,619,717	1,495,457	334,635	5.150,030
	• •	• •	ा,तश्चा,स्याद	1,775,835	410,358	6,203,021

1812		3,936,714	1,434,003	3153 1177	5,735,384
1843		3,619,717	1,495,457	334,835	5.480.030
		न्,तद्रा स्वाद	1,775,835	410,358	6,203,021
Aggregate quar	atities	Abr	stract in Do	connial pe	eriods.
entered for	con-			· · · · · · · · - · - · - · - · -
Rumption. 1	la the
10 years 1811-18	23	15,214,215	585,966	3,608,872	19,409,023
Do. 1821-18	13:3	32,916,905	2,801,515		39,681,248
Do. 1834-18	43	37,425,114	11,024,815		50,007,118
Average annua	l con-	, ,			, sumption. I	n the		•
10 years 1814 18	23	1.521.421	58,501	300,897	1,940,902
Do. 1821 18	1.1	3,291,690	289,151	387,283	3,968,121
Do. 1834-18	43	3,742 511	1.192,481	205,719	5,200,711
Coasumption of	of the		,•	.,	.,,,
single year 18		4,021,808	1,775,855	410,358	0,208,021
		-, ,	-,	,	.,,

The alterations in the rates of duty during the period have been as follows:--

Thrown,__

					· W	ast	c,			not		T	ro	m,
		Kı	۱W.	K	m	υч,	80	,	(lye	t		dye
		pe	r]]	١.	. 19	er J	b,		pe	r Ib	•	1)	er l	lb,
To July 5, 1819.			. તે,		А.	- d			8.	d.		£	8.	d.
Bengal		4	3)		2	111	١.						8. 5
Other East India		63	3 }	. • •	:;	112	١,		14	7.		2	5	61
Italian, &c.		5	6)	• •	J	4	,			•				•
From July 5, 1819.			•
British Enst India		-1	01						• •				_	_
Other parts		5	υÌ	• •	4	U		٠.	I F	н	• •	2	5	σ
From Mar. 25, 1821.	• • •	•	,								•
All sorts		O	3		O	3			7	ß		2	5	ß
From July 5, 1825.		٠	•	••				• •	•	٠,	••	*	•
All sorts		Λ	3		n	4			7	a		0	7	Λ
From Nov. 15, 1825.	• •	٠,	.,	• •	"	"	•	٠.	•	v	••	v	•	v
All sorts		Λ	a		Λ	•				Λ		4	-	α
From July 5, 1826.	• •	U	.,	••	v	0		٠,	••	v	• •	U	7	O
					^	,		,	• ^	0-	٠.
All corts	• •	"	*	• •	U		. '	• •	- 29	,:JB,	∙)A,	11 11	,6s	ĸų.
From July 5, 1829.						ewt				_
All sorts	• •	O	1	• •	ı	U	I,	tici	l, 2°	1, 34	Ge	I, 3:	1)!	32(l
From May 15, 1840.			δp	or	cer	ıt. r	ule	lit	ton	al.
From July 9, 1842.
All sorta	• •	1	1-2	ωl	Co	1. 6	3.	10	d (13.1	Oil	18	0.3	-54
		٠.	1	or.	. le	103	1.51	1	ไย	03	.5	24	11	-5d
													o a
From March 19, 1845.											_			-

* Singles and train, organzine and crape.

* Singles and train, organzine and crape.

Great pains have been used to produce an impression that the whole increase of the consumption of silk has been of "waste, knubs, and husks." No doubt there has been an enormous trade created by the free introduction of these inferior parts of silk of which the country was entirely deprived under the high prohibitory duties which formerly existed, In the ten years prior to 1823, we consumed only 58,591 lbs. per annum of this raw material, at a duty of about 4s, per lb. In the single year of 1844, at a nominal duty, our consumption was no less than 1,775,8551bs. Taking even this small item of the silk question, it would not be easy to find a stronger example of the benefits derived from the free introduction of raw materials. When it is considered how much employment has been derived from the free introduction of even this refuse, and the valuable branch of trade which has been created from it, we can form some idea of how much even the revenue is indirectly benefited by the additional consumption of other articles which is promoted by relaxiby such duties.

But independent of this new branch of trade, we find that the consumption of thrown and raw allk has been considerably more than doubled during the period in question. Thus:

Average annual co. 1814 to 1820.	naumption.	Consumption
1814 to 1823, lbs. Rawellk 1,521,494 Thrown ailk 900,887		1844. 15 6. 4,081,506 410,358
otal raw and thrown 1,882,311	4	4,439,188

The next table in the return is-

An Account of the Drelard Value of British Silk Good 6 Experted from the United Kingdom, in each Year from 18, 5 to 1946, both inclusive.

-	Bett	K Blik O	oods exp	orted fro	m the Un	ited Kin	Mild's
Years	France	Other conn- tries in	United States	Mexic s. Ame- rics, and foreign	British Posses- sions in America and the West Indies.	Africa,
1820	£ 1,498	£ 49,477	£ 27,205	£ 60,518	£ 10,523	£ 14,490	IMAN
¥7	4,001	61,825	67,111 46,587	61,057 PO ,346	25,352 21,036	18,75% 31,138	216 111
20 1830	34,808	96,196	58,083 135,057	50,743 60,015	36,000 100,342	20,321 25,692	207,010 521,010
31 32 33		105,113	237,085 02,235 251,278	67,916 97,591 100,450	190,591 113,561 120,516	33,738 46,034 54,627	57×3014 520,691
34 35	00,346	113,804	200,300 537,040	106,191	102,487 116,421	53,974 48,980	737,401 037,198 973,786
36 37	48,100 43,144	82,460 81,097	524,301 109,629	75,026 73,325	122,000 113,514	61,495 70,963	0173622
34 30	44,628	66,463	318,500 410,003	00,075 96,041	111,100 175,217	114,178 75,030	777,2M) NDH,119
1810 41 42	117,350	72,314	274,150 306,757 81,243	140,074 107,001 9 0 ,08	102,110	04,122	7:12,114H 7HH,H:H
43		103,876	164,233 189,698	120,020	98,305 62,500 109,101	53,852 66,080 1,855	590,165 667,954 734,152
45		Particule	rspot ye	t ascertat	ned; —		761,123
- VIIII	5 m mte	Timbeck		Ar viiil	A COLUMNIA	GXPOFIA,

Custom House, London, 7 March, 1846. W. IRVINE.

Trades that exist only by the aid of protection cannot command a foreign market; for if their cost of production be so high that they cannot withstand foreign competition at home, when their rivals must incur the expense of transport to meet them, it is quite clear that they will be less able to do so in the neutral markets of the world when each party incurs the same charges. If, on the other hand, a producer can successfully compete in neutral markets, it must be clear that protection in the home market is a mere form and dead letter. All branches of industry, therefore, which subsist only by the aid of protection are exposed to much more serious reverses than those which are in such a natural state that they freely compete with other countries. When the silk trade of this country was dependent only on the monopoly it possessed, the slightest derangement of the home market, by a change of fashion or otherwise, at once deprived it of its whole reliance, and involved all connected with it, both masters and operatives, in the most severe distress; while other trades under similar circumstances could fall back upon their extensive foreign markets, and by a comparatively slight reduc tion of prices induce so much greater a demand there is materially to mitigate the temporary depression of the home market.

As soon as the silk trade was exposed to competition we find an export demand coming into existence. In 1826, when foreign silks were first admitted, the whole of our exports amounted only to 188,801%, in ten years they reached $17,822%, and in 1845 they amounted to 764,424%. It has, moreover, been a matter of notorious fact, that no cases of distress have existed in Spitalfields since 1826 in any way to be compared with the periods of suffering and depression which existed prior to that time. It is not the least encouraging evidence of the advancing state of this branch of industry, that our largest market for exports is the United States, where the French, German, and Swiss manufactures come in direct and equal competition with us. And it is still more gratifying that the next largest market we possess is in France itself, the country of our greatest rivals, which takes more of our silk manufactures than all our colonial possessions together.

Connected with our exports to France, the next table in these returns brings to light an interesting principle in commerce. The table is:

An Account of the Quantities of Forgies Silk Manufactures retained for Home Consumption in the United Kingdom stuce the removal of the Prohibition (5th July, 1826). Silk Manufactures of Europe entered by Weight.

~	Quan	tities retained		Qua	ntitles retained for he	ome consump-	1	for l	iome consumption in the	1		tion in the ted Kingdom.	İ	Uı	lited Kingdom.
Years.		lbs	Yours.	٠	lhn.
1820		48,301	1836		190,078
1827		115,278	1837	• •	172,400
1828		169,489	1838		217,047
1820	-::	121,585	1839		250,851
1830	••	120,314			5 13 746
1831	••	148,470	1841		248,902
1832		144,956	1849		237,160
	••		1843	• •	207,673
1833	••	142,267		••	205,125
1894	••	166,261	1844	••	310,153
1835	• •	160,840	1845	• •	01111100

Since the removal of the prohibition on French siks, the quantity imported has stendily increased each year; while our exports to France have also stendily, but more rapidly in crossed, showing that, under a perfectly natural and Free Trade, different countries would import from each other different descriptions of the same kind of goods, for which each hind the greatest advantage in the production. While France sends silk goods to England which are preferred on account of their better designs of colours, England sends to France other descriptions of silk goods, which have either cheapness or durability to recommend them. It is not too much to say, that the import of silk goods of one kind from France, actually promotes the export of British silks of other kinds to France.

TIMBER.

The next table in these returns relates to the operation of clp

the limber duties from 1840 to 1846.

An Account showing the Quantities of Sawn and Hewn Tin next, the Produce of the British Colouies and of Porting Countries respectively, antered for Home Consumption in the United Kingdom, in each Year from 1840 to 1846 inclusive.

	Donis, ann	Bairing Colo Bairons, &c., or split.	MIAL:
Years.	By tale. Gt. hunds.	By measure- ment Loads	Masta by tale. Number.	Dy most. Loads. 641,613
1840 . 41 . 49 .	59,830 50,804 18,134	170,780		110.57
44 45 1840	10.670	408.801 FORMION.		12/18
	57 176 27 079 	4	processing the

0.0

iolaj,

7,910 1,010 4,674 9,691 7,198 9,746 7,422 3,673 7,240 8,111

Dinot

tion

n at port

Curs

that

N ACCOUNT of the AMOUNT of DUTT received in the United Kingdom on TIMBER (except Staves), in each Year from 1840 to 1845 inclusive.

10 111) suci	uarvo.	BRIT
Zuera.	•	Foreign. E		Colonial.	1 /	Total.
1840		1,222,688		453,805	• •	1.070.403
41		1,012,285		452,509		1,404,704
48		A00,056		122,705		10H, 10R
43		070, 7 35		66,760		644,498
41		R90,493		71,000	• • •	MD1,408
ÄÄ		047,848		94,862		THUILDE
Office	of the	Inapoctor G	eneral	of Importa	and E	sports,
, C		n House, Lon	auon, t	vin March
		1			ATTTI	M Invino.

The change in the mode of measuring timber introduced when the duties were altered in 1842, renders it difficult to institute any accurate comparison between the years immeinstitute any accurate comparison between the years immediately before and succeeding, as to quantity. However, since the reduced duties came into full operation, the import and consumption of timber have rapidly increased, and the revenue is quickly recovering its former amount. The comparison of the consumption and the revenue of 1814 and 1815, the only two years in which the new duties have been fully in operation, is as follows:

Colonial '	Timber.	l'orei	gn.
Desis, &c.	Hewn.	Denis, &c.	Hown.	Total duty
1 acts.	loads,	loads.	loads.	£
398,194	551,094	321,430	202,209	801,492
498,891	797,490	342,905	282,028	1,042,103

WOOL. The next table in these returns is a Region of the Rates of Dutt chargeable on Forzion and Colonial Work, the Quantities thereof Imported; the Prices of Routhbown and Kerlino Wom, and the Declared Value of Russian Woollan Mastracrons Exported in each Year, from 1818 to 1845.

				000	88	Declare	d Value o Exports.	f British
- to 1	oreign Wood iported	Colonial Wool Imported		Price of Southdown	Price of Kent Long.	Woollen and Worsted Yarn.	Manu	Total.
[830 - 9, 21 10, 22 18, 24 18, 24 18, 24 18, 24 18, 24 18, 25 11, 26 11, 27 28, 29 199, 31 20, 32 31, 32 32, 33 31, 34 12, 38 32, 36 11, 38 36 12,	[794,7986] 651,366] 651,366] 662,265] 662,266] 655,286] 655,286] 655,286] 655,286] 656,286] 661,298]	122.239 205,761; 188,815 502,850; 416,945 351,884 1.242,000 1.607,938; 1.607,938; 1.607,938; 1.607,938; 1.707,030; 2.661,191; 3.611,986; 3.770,300; 6,932,986; 9,431,133; 12,161,233; 14,161,233; 14,1	16,722,567 19,356,726 19,366,726 19,366,726 22,061,485 16,980,112 20,110,511 30,230,059 21,510,640 21,510,640 31,032,029 28,142,480 34,076,413 46,405,232 44,379,023 24,174,552 44,379,023 24,174,552 44,379,023 48,379,023 49,432,294 40,432,294 40,170,074 40,432,294 40,170,074 40,432,294 40,170,074 40,432,294 40,170,074 40,432,294	1 3 1 3 1 3 1 3 1 3 1 3 1 3 1 3 1 3 1 3	1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	138,111 138,111 138,111 138,130 131,001 131,001 131,001 131,001 131,001 131,001 131,001 131,001 131,001 131,001 131,001	8,143,327 6,980,022 6,590,138 6,662,946 6,483,01 6,683,946 6,183,683 4,966,879 5,213,610 3,009,741 4,967,743 4,724,603 6,214,471 6,214,471 7,583,587 7,734,671 7,583,587 6,744,671 7,583,587 7,734,671 6,744,673 6,744,674 6,744,6	5,479,746 6,540,726 5,975,415 7,119,692 7,998,018 1,980,073 8,179,001 8,891,965 5,780,814 5,892,350
41 42,4	173,224 ical De	23,604,296	76,828,152 1 Board of T	1 2 1	0 11 1 2 1 3 .1	742,468 958,217	6,790,232 8, 204 ,836 7,674,072	7,553,121 9,163,680

9 March, 1846, . R. Ponten. above the value of Is. below the value of Is.

from June 6.

We have so often remarked upon the interesting and imortant facts contained in this table, and which must be so familiar to our readers, that we do not think it necessary to do much more now than furnish the return itself. It may be well, however, to draw attention to the remarkable decline in our export of woollens in 1819 on the imposition of the high duty. The trade of 1818, the last year of the low duty, has never entirely been recovered in amount till 1844; this is a striking example of the danger of interfering with any branch of industry. It is also very remarkable that with the imposition of the high duty of 1819, although the import fell off immediately by more than thirty per cent, yet the price of Fnglish wool fell from 2s. 6d. to 1s. 7d. per lb.; and throughout the whole period it will be observed that the highest price for English wool has been co-existent with the largest imports, while the smallest imports have co-existed with the lowest prices for home-grown wool. The importa-tion of wool last year exceeded that of 1842 by nearly thirty millions of pounds; but in 1842 home-grown wool was worth only 112d, per 1b., which in 1845 was worth Is. 4d.

1811 froo

The next table shows the

NET PRODUCE paid into the Exchequer, of the REVENUE of Curtums (exclusive of the Corn Duties) and of the REVENUE of Excise, in the Years 1842, 1843, 1844, and 1846, with the Amount of duties remitted in those years respectively.

Not produce and	1842,	1843.	1844.	THAR
Net produce of the Customs, exclu- sive of Corn Du-		£	£	£
Net produce of the	19,601,108	20,275,424	21,400,138	10,829,848
Excise	12,517,610	12,877,528	10,008,050	13,585,583
Duties remitted	32,178,814	33,152,952	34,714,488	33,415,431
Contoms		171,521	296,481 70,000	9,418,000 913,000
the state of the s

While taxes to the amount of 5,197,0741 have been remitted, the actual receipts of the Exchequer have been reduced only

This interesting and highly instructive document conclude by a statement of the reductions effected in the expenses of the excise department, since the repeal, in 184b, of the duties of the excise department, since the repeal, in 184b, and the duties of the duties on suctions and glass, and with some correspondence from glass manufacturers relating to the improved condition of that trade, and the great increase in the demand consequent upon the repeal of the duty. The saving by reductions in the establishment amounts to no less than 52,536, in reference to which it is stated that most of the transions in the establishment amounts to no less than 52,536, in reference to which it is stated that most of the effects discontinued in consequence of these reductions have been provided for, and the manifestar, it is expected, will all which occur.

THE COMMERCE OF ROME.

(From a Correspondent of the Daily News.) ROME, MARCH 12.—That "amusing print" the Diario of Roma, which, as you know, is merely a recital of church coromonies, chronicled with chamberlain precision and Chineso solompity, published, last week, in a fit of generosity, hese sciencity, pursued, must week, in a nt or generosity, the balance sheet of the Savings Bank for February. The laity were thus informed that during the past month a sum of 30,403 dollars had been lodged by them, while only 10,332 had been withdrawn; a palpable that to be jeyful at such evidence of their prosperous condition under the ecclesiastical system of rule; as if they did not know this exceptional surplus to be a simple derivative from the disburse. monts of foreign opulence during carnival, and a casual result of the circulating medium being freely lavished among tradesfolk by these northern revellers, for from being an index to the sustained healthy condition of remunerative industry. This topic I have touched on before, and may resume with effect. The middle classes, the proletaires, and operatives having been utterly overlooked in the dominions of the church (with thereunto, the ignoble countyance of the aristocracy); uniformly snubbed and ornshed since the days of Rienzi.

The declamations of Young Italy may or may not be all froth; but Arabic figures cannot be dealt with in the fushion of rhotorical flourishes; the whole question may resolve it self into a simple study of the balance sheet of Roman trade. Let your readers (matter of fact people) pause at each separate figure, and then sum up their impressions from the general coup-d'ail of the following cartoon, which has not been painted in the Vatican.

1. Colton tissues .- The population pays for every yard in use, hard cash to the looms of England, Switzerland, and Mulhausen. Two millions of dollars (exclusive of smuggling) are ascertained to be lost on this item. The only attempt to manufacture a coarse description of cotton stuffs was made in the workhouse at Dioclesian baths, and in the arsenal of galley slaves at Civita Vecchin. The purpers preferred begging, and the only "cotton lords" left are the latter gentry

2. In Woollens, things are not quite so bad, though the staple is miserably eared for. Alarmed some years ago at the enormous outgoings of money to purchase foreign broad cloth, the present Pope's advisors suggested the exploded system of bounties, a certain sum was ordered to be paid to the manufacturers according to quality as well as quantity. The result was, that the trade appeared to revive.

1836 there were in operation 28 manufactories producing 31.538 ... 46 41 ' • • • • 49,499 63,165 1830

But the force of bounties could no farther go. The thing had been worked up-hill to the utmost of its enpacity; smuggling increased and the bounties were jobbed; last year Peel's policy of reducing the turiff was adopted; and at the fair of Sinigaglia, the quantity of foreign cloth admitted at reduced rates doubled in amount, and kept up the produce to the papal treasury; but several factories have since been discontinued, and much misery has ensued. It must be added that the intelligent manufacturers blame Government for not giving them such powers as are supplied in France by the system of livrets, a matter not understood in England, but absolutely necessary here whenever workmen are congregated in bodies. Meantime, the Roman States export raw wool to the amount of 260,000 dollars, and import the same spun or woven to the amount of 490,000 dollars.

3. In Silken tissues these states could supply all Europe with common painstaking. The whole campagna might be planted with mulberries, if the landowners had the alightest wish to improve their enormous tracts. women spin enough to save a portion of the loss, which is thus:-

4. In Flax and Homp the balance of trade is actually in favour of Rome, and that to an unexpected extent, so us to cover the whole loss of the cetton imports. The spinning and weaving of lizen is attended to, not in manufactories, but in the homesteads of the cottagers, and without any encouragement or interference of Government. The women here again redeem the laziness and incapacity of the men. For, particularly on the other side of the Apennines, the old habits of the peasantry have survived, and though no longer is part of Macaulay's description true-

"When the oldest cask is opened, And the largest lamp is lit; And the chesnuts glow in the embors, And the kid turns on the spit.

If no longer-

"The good man mends his armour, And thims his helmet plume;"

Still-s shutile merrii

Gues flashing thro' the loom. 5. In wax and honey the imports surpass the exports by 140,000 dollars. This is absolutely sliameful, and shows how little the fourth book of the Georgies, or the good old man of Æbalia's example has done for the degenerate agricultural

6. The fisheries are in as miserable a state of neglect as in Ireland. St. Peter appears to have only bequeathed his ring (annulum piscatoris) to the Pomiss. 400,000 dollars are paid in hard each to us English, for fishing the cod banks of Newfoundland, to enable the Romans to keep Lent, which they do very badly.

7. In the matter of oil only think of a country where the olive has but to be planted to spread its silver leaves in the sun and give abundant returns, actually importing foreign-oil from the other Italian states, particularly its neighbour Tuscany, to the amount of $20,000 dollars. Most of the land thus mismanaged is in the claws of the church. To be badly off for soap is a still more blameable condition, arguing arrant laziness: this article is imported to the extent of 100,000 dollars.

8. Corn shall form a chapter to itself in a future commu-

8. Corn shall form a chapter to used in a nature communication. This is the monster grievance, and ought not to be dealt with perfunctorily.

9. For Gums, Resins, Fruit, Wines, the absolute loss on the halame of import and export is 180,000 dollars.

10. Colonial produce—tea, coffee, sugar—are of course on the wrong side of the ledger; but not an attempt has been deserted for imitate the Breach and Garman hest-root for or dreamt of to imitate the Prench and German beet-root fac ories, though this vegetable, planted lately in the fat ground near Ariola, produced roots varying in weights from ten to thirty pounds! It might as well rot on Lethe's wharf as out the banks of the Tiber, for all the Government cares.

11. In the matter of Clicese and Butter, fancy an agricus tural country importing these two articles from its neighbours to the amount of 68,101 dollars, and at the same time exporting come and exen to the extent of Bill the pipelings.

12. Iron, bruss, tin, lead, and zinc, are all imports; yet are there abundant chalybeate indications and olden mines of iron at Viterbo, at Tolfa, at Montelcone, and coal beds unworked. The Government prefer bringing this all important article from Elba of the Florentines. Some praise is due to Gregory for the iron works established at the falls of Tiveli and Terni, but the rale subsists more glavingly because of the exception.

13. In Straw Bonnets the industry of the women again exhibits a slight compensation in an export of 120,000

14. I have not been able to get at the returns of the delf and crockery trade, but a large balance is here against Rome ; though one of its small dependencies, Payenza, had formerly the glory of giving its name to this most profitable branch of industry.

15. In the article of Belli Arti the export is of course on the side of Rome, but to amount for less than would Ic suppowed—a mere trifle over 100,000 dollars. These be a few data on which to found an opinion as to the value of church government and the exclusion of laymen from the management of temporal affairs; and further, while such an aggregate of poverty is necessarily accumulated in the Roman States, with what face can the ecclesiastical rulers of the banighted land refuse the offer of capital for the construction of the railroads? Let Europe judge.

ECONOMICAL BLUNDERS.

(From the Nonconformist.) The difference in a fortress between the day before surrender and the day after, is not more marked than the fallen estate of the protectionists in Parliament Blusts of the oratorical trumpet that would once have called out the over whelming array of banded monopolies, now are quashed harmless under majorities of seven to three. The wonder does not seem so much that this should exist as that it should not have been before. What is it has happened, that makes folly now of what was state-manship and wisdom a few short months ago?

The last fight has been on the timber duties; a rich subject, and which has been treated accordingly. But why was not the whole craft and mystery as well understood twelve months ago? A hand of mercantile gentlemen stand forward and say, " Emable us to get 5t, 10s, a load for timber instead of 41., and you shall see how curiously we will get you timber for the dearer price. We will not put sixpence into our pockets except in the way of trade. Our rate of profits on the capital employed shall not be greater than that of any body else; only we will go the long voyage instead of the short, and bring you the bad timber instead of the good. And the reason why you must do all this for us is, because we are Englishmen, and make the timber in a place we call a colony; and if you were to get the other timber instead, you must get it of Prussians or Norwegians."

Upon which, is it not clear, now that the nine days of political blind-puppyhood are over, that if the other course were taken, the consequence would be, that instead of 51, 10s. being given to the dealer in bad timber, Johson, the 5% would be given to some British manufacturer or dealer, Johnson, to create the goods which would be given for timber of the same intrinsic goodness to the Prussians or Norwegians, and that the 10s, would be given to some other British manufac turer or dealer, Jackson, for something over and shove, to the use and enjoyment of the original owner of the 47.10s, ? If there is any doubt whether Jobson gets it instead, propose to destroy some existing trade by a new duty, and see whether the Johnsons will not ery out. If there be any doubt of the existence of the Jacksons, ask the consumer to point out the dealers from whom he stops the los., if it is to be given to Johson, and see if they do not join the Johnsons' cry. So that Johnson and Jackson are to lose to a pennyworth the custom which Johann is to gain; and the consumer, Bull, who pays for all, is the same thing; he is to give him 10s. for nothing, instead of getting what Jackson used to give him. The world has been a long time in fluding this out.

The fraud, therefore, when stripped to the skin, amounts to this: " Give us for an article more than you could get it for elsewhere; and there shall be an exact balance, -not the fraction of a gain or loss to industry in the aggregate; suving always this one triviality, that you the payer of the excessive price shall get nothing for the excess. Pay us more than you ought, and we will promise you that neither you nor anybody else shall get anything for it in return. It shall be clean lost and thrown into the fire. And for all this we will make a hubl ub in Parliament, and call on heaven and earth to witness our solemn warnings and our deep despuir."

It might be supposed the force of folly could no further go; but there is a lower depth. In rear of these statesmen, there is a reserve of philanthropists, sorrowing over the sadestate of "British Industry," if there is to be no more taking from it at one end and giving at the other, with a loss to the industrious classes in their character of consumers besides. For if the industrious classes are not the greatest consumers of foreign produce, they are some consumers, and would be more if they might. So that the plan amounts to taking water in a bucket from one end of a pond to put in at the other, and spilling balf by the way. Johnon's workmen are to cry out for taking the work from Johnson's men' and Jackson's, and so on to the greatest extent found possible; and the result is to be called protection to British Industry. The working classes by this time understand this as well as anybody, or a large expenditure of the parts of speech has been made for nothing.

It is pleasing to see a man like bord Ashley escaping timely from such a perplexity. It was Mr. D'Israeli, was it not, who was has reported as saying something about "economical blunders?"

noniteal blunders?

TRADE OF LEICESTER.—The delay with respect to the ministerial measures has produced a most injurious effect here. Many wool-combers and others are out of employment, and many hands who are not so have limited work. Not only are manufacturors affected, but the general trade of the town is suffering, and much indignation is fall at the needless hindrances to which the measures of government are subjected.

The Queen has presented a pair of milk, white Cachmore goats, part of a flock sent to her Majorty, by the Shah of Persia, to the 23d Welch Fusileers, to replace the venerable Cambrian goat which accompanied that gallant regiment, and which lately died at Barbadoes.

Action of the control

	THE ERAGUE.	[March) 2
Just Published, MR. COBDEN'S SPEECH in the House of Commons on Friday, Pebruary 27th, 1846.—Rayled. Frice One Penny, 16	Oreat Yer- (*Pinh, John, Theatre Road (*Bailey, Joseph King-street (*Jackson, James, Sorth Quay (*Douglas, James, Theatre Plain	O O Huxley Thomas 15 Whitechand road
M. R. DRIGHT'S SPEECH 12 the Floure of Com- mond on Tuesday Night, Feb. 17. Price One Penny. M. Ollison's SPEECH in the House of Commons on Monday Night, Feb. 18. Price One Penny.	mouth. * Houlter, Henry, North Entrance *Burroughs, Wm. Norton, Market place *Barnes, Reliert, King Arrect *Gourlay, D. A., Market row [Lamb and Scott, linen manufacturers 30	0 0 *Johnson, James, M.D., Bare, near Lancastor 0 0 *Kirby, P., Comington, St. Ivo's 0 0 A Shipowner, Sunderland 0 0 Baker, Capt., Ramsgate Vale, Ramsgate *Broad, Rev. P., St. Mary's Cray
Laiser Office, et. Plact-street, London; J. Gadeby, Newall's Buildings, and 3, Old Miligate, Manchester. Where may be lad, THE GUATACKE MEETING.	Broohin, Mouro, Alexander, flaxeller, Asset Land J. do	O O Martin, W. W., 201, Lower Thames-street O O Martin, W. W., 201, Lower Thames-street Halph, James. 180, Strand O O William, R., 21, Kennle-street, Russell-square
Just published, price One Penny, or se. per 100, VERBATIM REPORT OF THE MEETING OF	N.D. Wood, James, merchant 1 Davidson, William 1 Shepherd, James 1 Grassick, Peter 0	The Members of the Literary Institution, Paversham The Members of the Literary Institution, Paversham Feast, Robert, 10, Pinsbury Pavement Richards, Wm. Maisemore, near Gloucester Rowley, John Mil Field Hanley Httffewischtes
trapt form, 12 pages. Hold at the Lazuva Office, 57, Pleet-street, London; and by J. Gadsby, Newall's Buildings, and 3, Old Miligate, Manchestor. Upwards of 109,000 copies have been printed. Any of the above may be had at 6s. per 100.	*Higghbotham Samuel, Queen street100 *Thompson, Neil, Hutchesontown	0 0 Punton, Wm., Ardrossan place, Greenock 0 0 Turnbull, Thomas, Church-street, Whithy 0 0 Brown, Henry, Lewes
DAWN ISLAND. By Miss Martineau. Written expressly for the Great Isrant. Price 2s. 6d. "The getting up is superh: equal to any specimen of typographical arthur ever met our eyes." Realinel.	1 - Marray, Win. and James, West George-st 20 *Hutcheson, Robert, Hutcheson-street 20 *Robson, George, Queen-street 10 *Chapman, David Jamesen, street 10	O 0 Clarke, A., Flax Mills, Boulogne-sur-Mer O 0 Artists employed in Mr. W. S. Kennedy's Porcelain Manufactory, Burs!cm
FREE TRADE TRACTS, selected by the Council of the Langue, in , in cloth. JOHN HOPKINS'S NOTIONS of POLITICAL ECO-ROMY. By Mrs. Miss'er. Recommended by Mr. Cobden. 1s. 6d. TWENTY TRACTS AND SPEECHES ON FREE	*Michaella, A., do 10 *Anderson, D. and J., South Hanover-st 10 *Mitchell, Thomas, Virginia-street 10 *Fleming, Watson, and Naim, Ingrain-st 10 *Mc Ewan, W. and Sons, Trongate 10 *Mc Kinlay, David, 113, Brunawick, at 10	o o o Brooke, Thomas, clothier, Ossett, noar Wakefield o o williamson, Joshua, do., Horbury do o o wood, Wun., Nicholas-street, Bristol Fead, LieutCol., Itavensbourne-terrace, Lewisham 1 o o o wTinkler, Henry, Castleste, Wallingford
O'Connuct, M'Curlann, Baines, &c. Is stiched. 12mo. size.	Stirling, John, South Frederick-street 10 Stirling, John, South Frederick-street 10 *Armour, Robt. and John Liddell, South Hanover-st. 10 *Paterson: Walter St. Vincontegrated 10	0 0 McKenn David, 20, 8t. Enoch's square, Glasgow *Smith, Robert, St. Paul's place, Walworth Common. A Froe Trader, Hants *Leftley, C. D., 37, Soho-square *Fox, Charles, 67, Paternoster-row *Wright, E., 11, Allerman
desirons of making complete their acts of the Anti-Corn- Law Circular, which was printed in Manchester, prior to the commencement of the LEAGUE paper. They are deficient of the following numbers: 70, 93, 103, 107.	*Sandeman, David, Miller-street 6 *Davidson, Jas., jun., South Frederick st 6 *Mitchell, George, 47, Ingram-street 6 *Tweedic James, Argyle-street 6 *Miller and Caldwell, Croy-place 4 *Brown, John, jun., Virginia street 4	Clary, Wm., 13, New Inn-yard, Shoreditch Clary, Wm., 13, New Inn-yard, Shoreditch Sykes, Jumes, Holywell-row, Worship-street Leach, James, 12, President street, St. Litke's Leach, James, 12, President street, Clerkenwell Cable, Collier, 200, Stone-street, Chelsea
Any reasonable sum will be paid for the numbers, or any of them. They may be addressed to the care of Mr. Gadsby, Newall's buildings. Manchester, and should be accompanied by a letter from the senders, which shall be promptly replied to,	*Tink, J. and C., Cochran street 4 *Tennant, Alexander, Wilson-street 4 *Laird and Thomson, Ingram-street 4 *Service, Wm. and Sons, London-street 4 *Smith, David, 173, Trongate 4 *Hunter, A. G. and Co., Buchanan-st 4 *Jamieson, James, Fife, place 4	Dirming. Piggott, Thomas, Taylor's Dock 20 20 20 20 20 20 20 20
CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE QUARTER OF A	*McKeand, A. and J., Trongalo 3 (Small, John, Stirling square 3 (Cilimour, Matthew, Glassford-street 3 (McNab, A and J., 115, Ingram-street 2 (Black, J. and D. and Co. do 2 (Smith and Sharn, Areyle street 3 (Sanders, Andrew, do
MILLION FUND. Subscriptions received during the week ending Vednesday, March 25, 1846.	*Ord, George, Virginia place 2 0 *Blackwood, Wm., Candleriggs 2 0 *Mitchell, S. and Sons, St. Andrew 8-80, 2 0 *Mitchell, W. W., Ingram-street 2 0 *McGregor, J., and Sons, 43, Old Wynd 2 0 *McGry, Robert 192 Candleriggs 2 0	*I.aidler, John, Patent Ropery 1 0 *Clephan, J. B., Silver-street 1 0 *Clephan, Wm., Queen-street 1 0 Whales, John, High-street 1 0 *Rand, George, James-street 1 0 Braithwife, Samuel, Silver-street 1
N.B —As the Subscription List is made up from Vednesday, contributions received on hursdays and Fridays are not published in the	*Hend rwon, Wm. and Sons, New Wynd 2 0 *Boyd, C. and Sons, Clydesst., Anderston 2 0 *Ross, Philip, Buchangustreet 2 0 *Bankier, Wm., George's square 2 0 *Kay, Alex., jun., 2, Royal Exchango-et, 1 1 Mair, John, 82, Trongete 1	Ord, Richard, jun., West-row OSharp, Henry, Brookst, Birkonhead OMartin, C., Smithfield OStockton
As the regulations of the Post Office require that the Christian Name of the party to whom Post office Orders are sent should be given in full, subscribers are respectfully requested to procure their reders in future for George Wilson, League offices, Manchester, or Abraham Walter Paulton, J., Floet-street, London.	Tollowny, John, 10, George's-street 1 0 *Thomson, Wm., 34, Glassford-street 1 0 *Curle, Robert, Argyle-street 1 0 *Kerr, John, jun., 14, Garthland-street 1 0 *Kerr, John, jun., 14, Garthland-street 1 0 *Gieddes, J., Govan Bank, Upper Govan 1 0 *Finlay, John, Buchanan street 1 0 *Livingstene, Wm 20 0 *Wrigley, John, and Sons 10 0 *Wrigley, John, and Sons, Golear 10 0 *Walker, Josh, and Sons, Lindley 10 0 *Walker, Josh, and Sons, Lindley 10 0 *Taylor, John Newsome 4 0 *Wickerman, Benjamin, Taylor Hill 4 0 *Woodhead, Edward 2 0 *Legnoyd Edward 2 0	*McDowell, Rev. J.
orford John Florence Andrews 10 0 0	Hudders- field. Willett, Richard Hey, Bonjamin, Dyer, Aspley Turner, Frederick Railton, George, New-street Hirst, Walter Dibot-on, Thomas	In Leadue, No. 130, in the Londs subscriptions, for Foster and Davey, read Forster and Davey.
room the Hands of A. and G. Murray New Mill, Great thooats-at., Manchester twoon, Richard, Wigan rimson, J. and Son, Ebenezer-place, Ashton-road, lanchester 188, Joseph L'Itovotor	*Hirst, John, Golcar 0 10 *Hirst, John, Golcar 0 10 Denham, John, Clough in Clifton 0 6 Crawshaw, George, Kirkburton 0 4 Walker, John, Rastrick 0 4 Walker, Alfred, do 0 4	their names as metropolitan subscribers, for the respective amounts appended, to the Quarter of a Million League Fund:
10. Salford 20 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	Hopkinson, Henry, Slaithwaito 0 4 (Broadbent, Joseph, Kirkheaton 0 4 (FA Friend, per J. Crossley 10 0 (Wood, S., Sowerby Bridge, near 10 0 (Sugden, Thomas, and Sons, Brighouse 10 0 (Stocks, Joseph, Lighteliffe, noar 2 0 (Farrar, J. B. and J., Causeway 1 1 (Ottley, Thomas 10 0 (Patricks) 1 0	Edward Strutt, M.P. London £350 Anthony R. Strutt do. 350 1050 0 0 do. 350 1050 0 0 do. 350 1050 0 0 do. 500 0 0 do. 500 0 0 do. 500 0 0 do. 500 0 0 do. 500 0 0 do.
own, George, Slateforth, near Edinburgh 1 0 0 H 1 1 0 0	*Bleckburn, Thomas, Newmarket 1 0 0	Edinburgh 250 500 0 0 At the Works 500 0 0 Courtauld, Taylors and Co, Carey-lane. Cheapside, London 1 200 0 0 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1
binson, George, Saddleworth indells, George, Littleberough, near Rochdalo 1000 ison, Thomas, jun., Quay Side, Newcastle-on-Tyno 1000 Caslin, Wm , Ride do 1000 Ison, Thomas Dany, street do 1000	Hilyth and Graham, Broad-street 10 0 0 *Kompson, T., Fazaley-street Mills 1 10 0 *W. T., at Mr. Sturk's, Shipston-on-Stour 1 1 0 *Taylor, T., draper, Camden, Gloucoster 1 1 0 *Shipsyond John I technologists.	Thomas Ridgway, 4. King William-st, City, do. Foster and Smith, New City Chambers, do. Jacob Tweeslale and Son, at Rochdele 200 250 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
ntgomery, James, Marlhoro Crescent do 1 0 0 aou, Win., Albion-street do 1 0 0 aou, Win., Albion-street do 1 0 0 ackett, W. H., Osteshead 1 0 0 as, John, 28, Cartside-street, Manchester 1 0 0 dd, Thomas, Alport Town do 1 0 0 kins, David, Tregoir Farm, near Swanson 1 0 0	*Sherwood, R., Litchfield-street 1 0 0 *Sherwood, R., Litchfield-street 1 0 0 *Workmen at Sherwoods 1 0 0 *Sherwood; John, jun., Litchfield-street 1 0 0	George Brown, Fore-street, Cripplegate, do. John Dillon, Fore-street, Cripplegate, do. Charles Morrison, Upper Harley street, do. A. Mongredien, do. P. Novello, 10 St. Mary's Axe, do.
hinson, John, Blockmaker, do. 1 0 0 hipowner do. 1 0 0 hipowner do. 1 0 0 west w. J. T. 0 1 0 West w. J. T. 0 0 West w. J. T. 0 0 0 West w. J. T. 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	Kenrick, Timothy, do 20 0 0 0 Spittle, James, and John, Carter's Green 20 0 0 0 Olibert, Lake, jun. Lyndon 2 0 0 0 Wilson, Wm. Hill Top 2 0 0 Olibert, Isalah, High-street 1 0 0 Olibert, Isalah, Righ-street 1 0 0 Olibert, Roger, do 1 0 0 Olibert, Roger, do 1 0 0 Olibert, Roger, do Olibert, Roger, Roger, do Olibert, Roger, do Olibert, Roger, Roger, Roger, Roger, Roger, Roger, Roger, Roger, Roger, Roger, Roger, Roger, Roger, Roger, Roger, Roger, Rog	Joseph Travers and Sons, 10, St. Swithin's lane, do 200 0 0 Charles Swaisland, Crayford, near do 100 0 0 Henry Nibbs Brown, 13. John-street, Minories, do 100 0 0 John Gosnell and Co., 12, Three King-court, Lombardstreet, Minories, do 100 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
Court, Henry Court, Henry Loa, Wm., tailor Martin, Thomas Parabourne	Dent, John do	George Gillett, 94, Watling-street, George Moffatt, M.P., 28, Fenchurch-street, J. & W. Nichelson and Sons, 114, St. John-street, Clerkewell, Lindon 100 0 0
Rutter, Thomas 0 10 0 Rutter, Thomas 0 5 0 Chorley, Robert 0 4 0 Dew	sbury. *Mitchell, Jno. and D., Chiokenley, near 4 0 0 Clarkson, Richard, Dewabury Moor . 1 1 0 Gomersall, Thomas, and Brothers . 1 0 0 Day, Mark, Batley Carr, near . 1 0 0 Harrop, Timothy, Earlsheaton . 1 0 0	Ralph Ricardo and Sons, Champion Hill, Gamber well, George Smith and Sons, 14, Gough-square, Fleet- atreet, London, 100 0 0 Street, 100 0 0
Moore, Mr	Biddall, Samuol and William 0 0 0 e. Richard, 6. Oxford-terrace bli, Mesara. Townsond & Co., St. Etienne, France 10 0 0 f. E. W., 41. Bedford-row 10 0 0 Heisahe, and Co., America-square, Minories 0 6 0 H., Uxbridge	Street, London. London. W. A. Wilkinson, Camberwell, do
Smith, Wm,	Heisehe, and Co., America square, Minorics	John Ashton Yases, 33, Beranston square, V. O. Fresbott, ds. Threadnesdle-street, ds. A. and C. S. and H. Crowley, Alton, near

The state of the s

	TO COMPANY OF THE PROPERTY OF
H. Crowley, Croydon, noar do, 100 (H. Crowley, do., do., 100 (do., 100 (d	O Republican and France do. 10 0	o indispensable to prevent the further willerin and Those Devels, 255 Lawrence-land, Cheup-	O William Wilson, King-street do 10 0	i f steel works. This conclusion has been adonted by
Authory Austin, 15, Stamford Vinas, Fundam do	O C. E. Robson, Frederick street do. 10 0	" I be make think one minoritik exiliter ik
Daniel Cooper 3, Copthali Chambers, Fenchurch-st. do. 50	0 James Bell, Beverington-st., South Shiolds 10 0	forthcoming number of the Eclectic R with more details taken from French so
Copf. J. B. Cogan, Upper Mail, Hammersmith do	6 Robert Pitt, Newark Foundry, Bath 10 0 C W. J. Parkor, 76, Evro-street, Sheffield 10 0 C	thus: "The French merchant service is
Was district, Cheapside, London William Flanders, 2, Upper Woburn Place, Tavistock London 50 0	F. and W. Webster, Arbroath 7 10 C	plorable condition in itself, and as con glish and American mercantilo navies, i
William Hickson and Sons, 20, West Smithfield, do 50 0 T. Holg on, Lambeth-street, Goodman's Fields, do 50 0 Looph Limey, 26, Chancery Inno 60 0	0	extremest auxiety in France among the the community. "The test of figures selected to estable
H. M. Jones, Fishmongers Hall Whart do 50 0 William Lowers, 5, Park-street, Islington do 50 0		18 the amount of the merchant tennage tries in 1830 and in 1848 t and the con
Jahn Morley, jun., do. do. do.	0 Wm. Weldon, High-street 20 0 0	templatation of the Prince do Joinville.
Prevail, Townshend, and Co., 80, Watling-st., do 50 0 Thoras Prout, Eart 1991, Wandsworth do 50 0 Wm. Digby Seymouv, 32, Fenchurch-st. do 50 0	Wm. Bennington, do	light the decline of French shipping, at that English and American shipping ha
Wm. Swainson, 72, Wood-street do 50 0 Wm. Thomas and Brothers, 123, Cheapside do 50 0 Thos. Tooke, jun., Jermyn-st., St. James's do 50 0	John Mulchinson, High-street	In 1830, the Fernal
Western Wood, 25, Mark-lane do. , 50 0 W.H. Ashurst, Cheapside, do. , 30 0 F. Hanson and Co., Bow Church-yard do. , 30 0	John Landler, Patent Ropery J. B. Clephan, Silver-street Um, Clephan, Onconstruct 5 0 0	But in 1830, the was 2,531,810; and
)): ney Bickers, 8, Paradise-row, Chelson, do., 25 0 D. Braggiott, 2, Lombard street do., 25 0 G. Chesseman, Rye Lodge, Pockham Ryo, do., 25 0	7 John Wales, High street 5 0 0 George Rand, James street 5 0 0 Samuel Braithwaite, Silver street	American do. was 1,191,776; and (Document laid by the French minister
William Dartum, 17, Aldermanbury, do 25 0 Gendes Darwin, Bromley, Kent, near do 25 0	O C. Martin, Smithfield 50 0 0 H. Thorpe, Messrs, Harrison & Crossfield Licenses	sembled in December, 1845. p. 20.)
John Prost and Co., Wond-street, Cheapside, do	O Henry Bolckow 5 0 0 John Mainwaring 5 0 0	"Another comparison is also disadva- under the very peculiar circumstance of the foreign shipping which it establishes
Hoyle and Hunson, 88, Wood-street do. 25 0 Christopher Lund, 51, Newgate-street, do. 25 0 Edward Miller, 34, Tower-street, Tower-bill, do. 25 0	Wm. Bleigh 5 0 0 Joshua Branklingham, farmer 5 0 0	In 1830, the arrivals and Y
H. & H. Marriett, 6, Lawrence-lane, Cheapside, do 25 0 Joseph Proctor, Cheapside, do 25 0	Jonu Palmer Wm. Smith.jun. Joseph A. Sanders, High street	departmes of French ship- plng in French ports In 1830, the arrivals and
E. and W. Pontifix and Co., Shoo-lane, do 25 0 T. Rhos desse Sons, Vine-atreet, America sq. do 25 0	Jonathan J. Sanders, do 2 10 0 Henry Fawens 2 0 0 Anti-Monomely 2 0 0	departures of Foreign wore 1,029,801;
U-hn Wood, 17, Cumming-street, Pentonville, do	Robert Rogers Rev. J. C. Meek 1 5 0 Thomas Butchingan 1 0 0	"The document distributed among the Council states the arguments on both sin Amongst other things, the motive of
Rebert Porcett, Ordnauce Office, Tower do. 25 0 8. B. Venning, 12. Pancrus-lane do. 25 0	Z. Rev. J. McDowell 10 0 0 James Readman, High-street 10 0 0 Rev. Wm. Long. John street 10 0	teanded of late years in the South Sens, versions of the consequences, is asserted to have been the
George Wansey, 3, Moorgate street, do 25 0 Web and Margetton, 131, Chempside, do 25 0	C. H. Robiason	the French government to mise the Navy from its admitted and alarming infer The reasons assigned for the admission
H. W. Sgwood, 42, Chesterset, Regent's-park, do	Thomas Close, North terrace	sup building into France, are, that iron perior to timber built. They are light
Control brings, 5, 800 London-street. do 25 0 Henry Hell, Cybridge, near do 25 0 C.M. Kampion, 9,Queenstplace,Southwark-bridge, do. 25 0		better way, are more lasting, and requested consequently, they are much more economis casier, because of the divisions in the
Couland & Gilbert George Yord Roy land do 20 0	A MILLION FUND AT HASTINGS. John H. Maw, Mayor, West Hill House	draught of water, the iron ships carry fro per cent. more cargo. They are less exposed to fire, and all accidents. The
W. Comming and Co., 98, Hatton-garden, do. 20 0 Thes. F. Gioson, Spittal square, do. 20 0 (Urofessor Graham, 9, Torrington-square do. 20 0 (Geogramin Hawes, sen., Brunswick-square, do. 20 0 (Chas. F. Hardman, Castle Down David Tree, York-buildings F. N. Balmain, 38. Wellington square	the crew, and safer for the goods. These settled the question among the English.
H.W., do 20 0 (James Emsry, Albion Hotel	iron ships as fast as possible. Especial ships, of great bulk, built more and more may, by following this example, recover dobn S. Landells, Honey lane Market, Cheapside, do. 10 10 (Win. Wallace, Long Fields John Howell, White Rock place Thomas Board Matter and Control of the	"It is denied on the other hand, that define Pierre, D. Fore street City do. 10 0 (france Pole, 9), High street, Borough, do. 10 0 (Dr. P.e Smith, Horvette, College		made up in England to adopt iron gon ships. Besides, its positive advantages, can be said to be yet ascertained by a sho
Dr. Pre Smith, Hola erton College, do. 10 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	SUBSCRIPTIONS TO THE LEAGUE QUARTER OF A MILLION FUND AT BURNLEY. Roberts and Walton	than formerly. Even if the advantages of
Rolt, J. Bash, 6, Breeknock Cottages, do, 10 0 0	Spencer and Moore	France will not wisely in securing the sup own forges; and a sacrifice of about 400, sort of premium in their favour will enabl
Richard Reauchamp, Hereford at., May Pair, do 10 0 homp Berry, Tyndal place, Islington, do 10 0 0	John and George Holgate 100 0 0 Wm. Hopwood 100 0 0	to produce all that is wanted for this purporience of many years has proved, that the
J. Barrauchs, 18, Addiostreet, Wood-street, do 10 0 0 Tunoby Bevington, 67, King William-street, do 10 0 0 Mr. B.	Henry Tunstell, Marsden, near 50 0 0 0 Win. Eckroyd, Loineshaye, near 40 0 0	for general purposes has succeeded. "In support of the argument in favour onopoly, the gradual reduction of the pri-
George Cundell, 17, Finsbury-square, do. 10 0 0 J. D. Cumming, 16, Park terrace, Brixton, do. 10 0 0 Theo. H. Hall, 12 Finsbury-square, do. 10 0 0 Samuel Band and the control of the cont	Henry Knowles and Son 25 0 0 James Sutcliffo 25 0 0	forgen, from about fourteen shillings, in 183 shillings and sixpence the hundred bound
At late of Hursey, Bow Church Yard, do. 10 0 0 deland H. Loui, St. Maryle Strend, do. 10 0 0		urged that the quantity wanted for the souly to one tenth of the whole present processouragement there will be no difficulty
Some under 62, each, 10 0 0	COMMENCE.	supply. "The point which seems to have determent, is the urgent need of relief to the i
The following have also forwarded their names through the London Office.	OFFICIAL PROPOSALS IN TRANSPORTER	which can be afforded by obtaining from of quality from England, at mices varying fro doseph Acton, Wigon	FOREIGN TRON FOR SHIP BUILDING; AND FOR STEEL.	per cent, chenper than the fron of France in "The councils, after stating the case language, resolved, with a large majority,"
Acthur Morse, Swaffham	Sin, In my letter which you published the week before	ought to be admitted into France, free of d merchant ships.
Berny, Sons, and Co., Arbroath (1884) s and Sons, Lindley, near Huddersfield (2010) the Hutchtonian Co., Arbroath (2011) the Hutchtonian Co., A		Pending these - Meial Inquirles, the cri- begun to excite the liveliest interest in that peech on the 12th of January last, in the cha
Ch Pat's hard Son Alloa 30 0 0 1 Friend to the Agricultural Labourer, Sunderland 25 0 0	desirable that our own great measure should be completed	Due d Harcourt, an old advocate of Free Trac ions respecting its beneficial influence, wh
Themrs Bell, Don Alkali Works, South Shields 25 0 0	It is not, however, true that such comminder ions form	vritten in letters of gold in every chamber o lanada to Canton. This speech has been rej eparate publications ; and it has been copi to orgo Cambing, Arbrenth, near Huddersfield 25 0 0	country. The laws of trade are really international laws;	lewspapers of France, "After showing that the present French.
A.J. Moore, Bridge-street, Sunderland 20 0 0	tion and protection of articles of trade. Expecting prohibi-	ree Trude principles readily enough befout that they coolly laid that baggage aside value public councils, the Duc d'Harcourt productions au la councils.
Robert Villers street, do 20 0 0	do in medding with their neighbours laws of trade. Seeing, however, the cargeness with which the United In	"How can the nation confide in men who to namer? What the people really want is, a Mi
Henry Wilson, Frederick-wireet, do. 20 0 0	struggle, it will be prudent for the present to wait the result	eclaring boldly his resolution to aim at the pu his would rouse the enthusiasm of the people uffering in the land. The combinations of the
James Walter, Luton	general discussion. In the meantime, permit me to offer you some change of	or dreadful excess of toil exacted by parents bildren sent by them to the factories, settle ti ktreme want. And for this integry there is
Alexander Mann and Son, do	admission of foreign iron into that country, duty from for	ominand—a remody that will give the peop leaper clothing, and cheaper comforts, in spli lity. If a minister should address the nation is navigle soon find friendly cohoos in all quarts
Charles Ambreon Arbroath 10 0 0	On the latter bend, the Minister of Commerce declared to the Coneral Councils of Agriculture, Trade, and Manuface	s would soon that friendly echoos in all querie ould bless his mino. I mean Free Trade with of could the Government but summon spirit ocoss is certain.
Andrew Lawson do. 10 0 0	sufficiently abundant, or cheap enough to supply the steel	It is the first niticle in a book mulitaked
William Nicholas Whitehaving 10 0 0	1840; but not in time to be the basis of a new law in the Thesession of that year, as was wished.	ynt Exchango, entitled 'Liberte du Commerce de Duc d'Harcourt is a rich landed propriétar. de, in 1845, he said that he was 'en course r'
46,, 16 6 6	In comparing the progress of England with that of Franco he	nots; and not at all disposed to ruln himse diment. At least he was disinterested, when lif to be changed. (10th June, 1844.)
The state of the s

lowering of the duty is r inferiority of French

by the Connells."
I ruised on the same obweek; and you will may from an ariele in the Review on the subject sources, unacceptable;
its, this question stands undoubtedly in a de-ompared with the En-, its decline excites the a reflecting portion of blish this capital point ge of the three counomparison deserves to daily and hourly con-exhibit in a striking at the very same time has made a great ad-

Tons. in 1810; 590,707 id in 1840; 3,588,387 nd in 1843; 2,158,603 ter of Trade, bofore the Stares, and of trade, as-rantageous to France, of the superiority of as over that of France,

Tons. ; in 1843, 1,204,919

; in 1613, 2,011,714

the members of the sides of this subject, of the establishment with such disastrous the wish long felt by French Mercantile feriority. on of foreign fron for n built ships are suiter, stronger, make quire fewer repairs, omical. The stowage to hold. With equal roon twenty to thirty s ensity annk; less ey are healthier for ese advantages have h, who are adopting cially are the India ore of iron. France or her place among at men's minds are onerally in building jort experience, the less crooked timber of iron be admitted, upply of it from hor 10,000l, a year as a able the iron masters nose ;—as the expeprotection of iron of the French moprice of iron at the 231, to about twelve nds English,—it is shipping amounts roduce, so that with ity in securing the ermined the govern-merchant service, of at least an equal rom fifty to seventy e is now sold at, so in far stronger y, that foreign fron f duty, for building risis among us had at country; and in a humber of pters, the ade, expressed opidichdeserve to be of commerce from eprinted twice, in poled into half the h ministers taught fore taking office, o when called into rocceds thus t turn about in this Minister capuble of public good alone, le. There is deep the workings, and uts from the little of the point of their is a tendent of their in a tendent of their in a tendent of their in a tendent of their in a tendent of their in a tendent of their in a tendent of their in a tendent of their in a tendent of their in a tendent of their in a tendent of their in the a tendent of their in the control of their in the control of their in the control of their in the control of their in the control of their in the control of their in the control of their in the control of their in the control of their in the control of their interest of the control of their interest of the control of their interest of their interest of their interest of their interest of their interest of their interest of their interest of their interest of their interest of their interest of their interest of their interest of the control of their interest of t a the point of their is a remody at our oppo cheaper food, upto of every diffinition in the theme; yet it all the world; it to proclaim it,

"It is the first niticle in a book published at Mr. Wilson's, Royal Exchange, entitled 'Liberté du Commerce,' Price is. 6d. The Due d'Harcourt is a rich landed proprièter. Upon a similar logic, in 1845, he said that he was 'sn owner of iron forges and forgets; and not at all disposed to ruin himself by way of experiment. At least he was disinteresté, when he wished the tariff to be changed. (10th June, 1845.)

Private interests have hitherto pravailed against Pros Trade; but the nation is ready to adopt it. It is the grand question of modern times. The ancients were our superiors in letters, and the time arts. But a privileged few only shared that superiority, whilst the millions were ignorant slaves. Ciristianity has researed them from their degradation; and it remains for us to carry out the doctrines of Christianity, by making our laws conform to them. These doctrines are as yet to be better than mass theories with se. Religious fiberty, civil liberty, commertial liberty, are all refused with dislain by the monopolisers of a rory degree. They know well that the best means of getting the most money out of the nation is to set class against class. They do not know that the true germ of civilisation, perhaps the only universal one, is Pres Trade. There is no mistake in the sysuments establishing the triumph of Free Trade. They are these: first, mutual wears must lead to communication between harmand man; and, secondly, without mutual wants, the earth would become a silent solitade. The more wants men have, the prender must be their intercourse, and the steadlor their propose. Providence, in its wonderful; but, has infinitely varied the productions of different countries, in order to compel their inhabitants to accelerable countries, in order to compel their inhabitants to accelerable chier out. To put obstactes in the way of that intercourse, is to oppose the course of Providence. Havazee are sevages only because they live upart from us, and have no worts. Free Trade, then, is civilisation; and probibil Rayages are sevance only because they live apart from us, and lidy no wents. Froe Trade, then, is civilisation; and probibly the same real barbarism. Archimedes said, that with a federum his world move the earth. I venture to assert, that with Free Trade at my command, I could defy religious animosities, war, famine, noverty—to a often the said lot of man. famine, poverty—to; often the sad lot of man.
(Nor will Free Trade only make fred and elabling the chapper

Not will from I rate outs make food and clothing the cheaper; it will improve man's in only, and increase their intelligence, because it will give them time for the one, and incline them to the other. It is in vain to open schools if the scholars are signified, But feel them well, and they will rapidly acquire all the knowledge von can offer them.

The industry of man is in an energal formant. Its last we

The injustry of man is in an eternal ferment. Its last result is, over abundant production. Consamption has its natural limit; production has no bounds. England and Belgium and France have all reached the last point of consumption in several series s. One two neighbours admit this fact; and half France due: the same thing when year after year complaining bitterly of the tariff, which cuts them off from the proper remedys accessed freign markets. The whole civilized world, with its mutural, instinctive view of the truth, perceive this to be the exec; and, therefore, it is now engerly seeking an outlet in all quarters for its overflowing abundance. Unhappity the Government of France, well as it knows all this, is bound hand and foot by our proposalists.

by our monopolists.
There is, however, one example near us, which we ought to There is, however, one example near m, which we ought to follow. What is passing in England surpasses in grandeur all that is recorded in history—the straggle of the League to emancipate industry. The British Free Trade League is making produced withder. And y here we reflect upon the obstacles in its way supon the private interests opposed to it, and upon the passer is a succernished. And other handless in the continuous discount of such an effort. Mr. Colider deserves to be a notion as able of such an effort. Mr. Colider deserves to be a notion as a ble of such an effort, and of this share in this productors seems. On our parts, instead of fortering a to the profigencess. On our parts, instead of fostering a blind, unprofitable late towards our neighbours, let us imitate their g cat deeds let us become free, like them above all, let u checome Free Traders. All the rest will follow."

This is a faithful translation of a small part of the speech of a French duke, on the 12th of January last.

A RESIDENT IN FRANCE.

To the Editor of THE LEAGUE.

" Blessed is he that considereth the poor." Permit me once more to state, through the medium of your "great fact" paper, that another of the real friends of the peasantry has sent me a sovereign for the poor of our province. Many thanks to E. S. W. 1 am right glad, that while many Free Traders have sent me various sums of money for the peasantry, so few have requested me to give thom money. Food, clothing, firing, beds, and bedding, are at all times a great blessing to the degraded and famishing some and daughters of toil; but they are so ignorant, and too many of them ere so inferior in moral and montal elevation to others of the same class in the manufacturing distriets, that they do not know how to use money when they have it. They are in very deed a degraded and rained class of men, women, and children. They have too long been left to the tender mercy of those who maintain that the best way to keep the poor in order and obedience, is to pay them low wages, and to keep them ignorant. I hope the important information in relation to the condition of our peasan try, and the low wages paid them, which I have forwarded a his own request to Edward Onlson, E.q., Assistant Poor Law Commissioner, will be published. I have now the high honour of being publicly abused by a protectionist farmer in the county of Bucks. Yes, the worthy gentleman has said in public company that I ought to be burnt for the part which have taken in the cause of suffering humanity and justice I hope the valiant yeoman will not entangle blimself in his I am, Sir, yours respectfully. W. FERGUSON,

King's End, Bicester, March 25,

Mr. Gordon, of Naish House, East Somersetshire, has addressed to the Editor of a London paper the following letter, which, with something of an Irish blunder, is headed "The Prightened Farmers";

Onish, East Somerset, March 13, 1816. " Sir, - You inserted, a few days since, a circular forwarded on the 4th Feb., to above to take their farms, at Lady day, off their hands, if they fell alarme I at the repeal of the Corn Laws, and would give notice before the 24th February. A "I spologise to you for not having informed you of the result, namely, that although at Mr. W. Miles's threshold, and most of us his supportors, not one accepted.

" If paule ever really did exist, it is fast dying away among " Plat it is also among the landlords, may be gathered from the fact of persons applying to myself for land, who had to leave their holding under the members for last Somerset and Bristol, as they stated, from their being desirous to form n themselves. I am about to follow their good example on hand that 'ought, but won't goout of cultivation.' Courage, Protectionists! Does not this speak more volumes than Hausaul himself?

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

" J. A. Gordon'

THE TRUE WEALTH OF ENGLAND, The great internal resources of this country depend on its minerals; a bag of coals would not be so comfortable a thing for the Lord Chancellor to sit upon as the woolsack, but much more omblomatical of the wealth of England. It is the coal, and not the wool, that has made England what it is, and our mineral resources both in coal and from are yet in their inflancy. We thave just touched on the fringe of our mineral woulds, something like the cultivation of New South Wales as compared with what it may be. The great increase of railway communication will tend to develope those resources beyond all conception; but any want of uniformity in the guage will tend to diminish that development,—Cupt. Law's Evidence upon the Gauge Commission.

ANOTHER GLANCE AT THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

BY RECEEN.

YOUNG MEMBERS-THE MARQUIS OF WORCESTER. Of the youthful members of the House of Commons, whom we see sitting as representatives of farm-yards, or rising to address the house as the instructors of commercial men on commercial policy; or stretched on the benches of the gallery asleep, as if worn, while yet in the bud, with legislative toil; or skipping arm-in-arm through the lobbies as bosom friends, happy upon the threshold of a pleasant time of life; or standing at the bar in clusters, caring little more for the calls of "order at the bar," from the Speaker, than they cared a year or two ago at college for the calls of the proctors to prayers; listening, it may be, to what the railway king, who stands in the midst, tells them of the chances of scrip being hatched into golden dividends by the committees which sit on scrip as hens sit on eggs-the king, proud to have young lords to listen, and the young lords pleased to have an adviser so respectable in adventure and success as the king of railways; or listening, it may be, to equally confidential and acceptable advice from Lord George, king of jockies, who hints to them how to hedge, and having hedged, how to lay against their own favourites, and win enough to live like lords; -of all the youthful members whom we see sprinkled among the old ones, making an old House of Commons look like a young one, the most noticeable are the sons of the dukes recently withdrawn from school, and brought to London to adorn the drawing-rooms, and legislate for their fathers' corn fields, game preserves, dog-kennels, grease and lard, kitchen-stuff, and all the other elements of ducal grandeur-Temple Grenville, Churchill, Lennox, Bentinck, and Somerset.

Of these the last, who is the heir of the Duke of Beaufortthe handsome, reputedly intelligent, and youthful Marquis of Worcester, deserves special notice. He, was sent in the room of the Hon. Francis Charteris to represent protection to the cheese, grass, tenants-at-will, and foul cultivation of Gloucestershire. Mr. Charteris is the grandson of the Earl of Wemyss, a Scotch nobleman, owning a good estate in the well-known agricultural ounty of East Lothian; and having, as near neighbours, and, I believe, tenants, Mr. Hope of Fenton Barns, and his son, the author of the prize essays, which pleaded so well for Free Trade, for the sake of the farmers. Lord Wemyss has also landed property in Gloucestershire, which, together with his Tory connection, obtained for his grandson a seat in Parliament in 1841 for one of the divisions of that county. And there can be little doubt that the superior cultivation of their Lothian estates by tenants paying rents according to the prices of grain, and not a fixed sum of money, holding on lease, making the land a profitable investment for capital, without reference to the Corn Law, most of them repudiating protection as being not only worthless, but a positive evil,-there can be no doubt that with such an estate so cultivated in Scotland, with another estate badly cultivated, and low rents badly paid, though the soil is naturally good, in Gloucestershire, where the tenantry have been almost unanimous, and those of them who have been the worst farmers have been the loudest, in calling for protection ;-there can be little doubt that these circumstances had a strong tendency to make the Charteris family Corn Law repealers, even before Sir Robert Peel declared a change in his opinions.

But Mr. Charteris had also learned that in Gloucestershire a practical agriculturist, who repudiates protection, who has striven against it, and torn the delusion to shreds and exposed it to the world, both by his pen upon paper and by his plough in the land, by his intellect as a theorist, and by his capital as a practical farmer-I mean Mr. Morton, of Whitefield farm; Mr. Charteris knew that Mr. Morton was producing the best of crops easily where the worst had grown with difficulty under the Gloucestershire system; that his landlord, Earl Ducie, had laid out 7000l. on the permanent improvement of that farm for which Mr. Morton paid five per cent of augmented rent; and that he, the tenant was working the farm with a capital of 4000l.; while under the old system, which gave but a bare living to the farmer and no profit, the working capital was barely 700%; that where a man, a boy, and two women were employed, and paid the meagre wages of a county overrun with pauperism, twelve men and a proportionate number of women and boys are employed now, and are paid wages according to the worth of their work, and not according to how little they could live on without falling on the poor rates. Mr. Charteris had learned these facts; also that while Whitefield farm employed in proportion to its acres two and a half times more labourers than England could give to agriculture, its rateable value for poor's rates had been tripled. Knowing these things, and others equally valuable, which we need not stop to particularise now, Mr. Charteris changed his opinion on the question of protection to agriculture; and having, like many older and more experienced men, given a pledge in 1841 to preserve the Corn Law, he resigned his sent rather than vote for it again, and the Marquis of Worcester is sent up in his place to vote for protection.

The marquis has already voted several times, and has spoken once. High expectations were formed, and by some are still hold, of his speaking qualities. Seldon has the House of Commons bent down its head and listened, and been more complimentary to a young mar. quis than to him; but soldom has a young marquis made so poor a beginning.

But his ability to speak is not the question with us, it is his ability to protect the farmers. And protect them from what? Let us see.

Besides the fifteen or twenty miles of green fields foul ditches, scrubby hedgerows, excellent land, in a state of deplorable mismanagement, with a pauper population on it in Gloucestershire—a district not surpassed in all England for its fox-hunting—the Duke of Beaufort, who is its owner and fox-hunter, possesses a large estate in the neighbouring shire of Monmouth, This Monmouth estate is large enough to give him the power of returning his brother as a county member, and to bring him in upwards of 50,000l. a-year of rent, although it is very defectively cultivated.

This is the ancient family estate of Ragland; and Ragland Castle is famous, not alone in the history of the Duke of Beaufort's ancestors, but in the history of England. No circumstance connected with Ragland Castle, however, in history, equals in interest the tradition that it was here that the discovery of the power of steam was first made. The discoverer and first experimenter was a Marquis of Worcester, ancestor of the Somersets of the present day. But this is digressive; to the subject now before us.

The most striking characteristics of the Rughand estate at the present time, are the necessity for drainage, the facilities for drainage, and the utter absence of drainage; the consequent feebleness of grain crops on strong loamy soils; the coarseness of meadow pastures; the insufficiency of winter feeding for live stock; the poor and profitless condition of the live stock; and the similitude of the farmers, and the farm-labourers, to the poor live stock. I may add, as another characteristic, the ditches with their weedy wastes varying from three to ten yards wide, which occupy more land as absolute waste than would pay all the local taxes.

Now it so happened, a few years ago, that one of the tenants more adventurous than the rest drained some of has fields, imperfectly it is true, yet so beneficially as to add greatly to the fertility of his farm. He is now able to grow excellent Baga turnips (Swedes) and feed winter stock. He produces manure therefrom, and has a large increase of all kinds of crops in return; not extraordinary crops compared with what are taken from similar soils elsewhere; indifferent, compared with Mr. Morton's produce on Whitfield farm, in Gloucestershire; yet great, compared with anything produced in Monmouthshire, under the common agriculture of Monmouth-the system, or rather the systemless waste, of Ragland.

The tenant now under notice also dressed up his hedges, scoured out his ditches, levelled down the banks, made compost of the earth he found there, and, in a word, improved the farm by venturing to obey some of the axioms and/recommendations of the Royal Agricultural Society.

8:00

bad

lect.

that

Nex

ruri

Who

P

said shall

Pers

tection

been from

OD th

and a

ATTE

did. v

IPARY

What followed? the agent of the duke demanded an advance of rent-the tenant holding, as all the others do, at will. This demand led to a disagreement-to the threat of being served with a notice to quit, and ultimately to the appointment of a land valuer to value the farm, who set the fair rental at fifteen shillings per sere more than was previously paid, which augmentation of fifteen shillings per acre is now paid - a warning to all other farmers not to drain their land, not to grow winter food for stock, not to produce manure to fertilise their fields, not to attempt to save the manure now ranning to waste, bot to clear out the foul ditches, not to level down cumbrous banks and make compost, not to attempt to follow any of the instructions of the agricultural sociotics—an unmistakeable warning to avoid joining in the progress of the age-an injunction not to tack, contend with, and overcome the obstinacy of the uncultivated earth, but to preserve its stubborn strength, to be in everlasting battle with it, and to ramain contest, to be always getting the worst of the battle.

Speaking of the Duke of Beaufort merely as a man I do not think he is blameable for unfair treatment of the tenant. He is soldom in Monmonthshire, are when with the hounds or with his agonts when hounds or agents, or both, fill his ear to the archive of any farmer's voice. But as a landlord he is blassed Ho doe as a landlord, from mere no freeze of the to be done, what he would not do as a way.

Nor does it fullow that the agents are intentionally enjust and hard bargaining man. They are expected to pay in a certain amount of money into the duke's account at the bank. On the vast estates, in the absence of everything like systematic management, repairs to farm buildings are only done in a patchwork style, all are needing to be renewed, and most are getting some patches put on. Where least money is received, most is often taken to do those imperfect repairs. Thus money must come from some other part of the estate; and the agents are driven to the necessity of getting the most money out of those who can pay best.

It is a miscrable kind of management, and makes the duke and his agents sink in the esteem of those with whom they should stand well. It makes the duke, who is reputed to be a generous man, seem to be a hard man. It makes the agents do what, if kept to their natural inclinations, they would scorn to do; and it need not be surprising if a long practice of this kind at last leads some of them to be insensible to wrong.

The Marquis of Worcester, and his father, who sent him to Parliament to uphold what they call protection, are thoroughly wrong as to what is protection, and fatally wrong for the sake of their own property, in allowing their tenantry to suffer for the want of real protection—for the want of secure tenures. But this is the time, and we are now in the midst of the events, when and through which it is proper to turn their attention to what protection is, and what it is not.

For this purpose have these remarks been written, and given for the public perusal.

MR. RASHLEIGH.

This gentleman is one of the members for Cornwall. He was one of four or five who jumped to their feet simultaneously to address the house on Tuesday night about 9 o'clock. That is the time of the evening when there is most competition for the "Speaker's eye;" in other words, when there is most desire to speak. In the early part of that evening, after Lord Pollington, who resumed the debate, sat down, nobody rose for some minutes, so sure was every one of having an empty house to speak to, if speaking between 6 and 8 o'clock. And the members did thin away to fewer than 40 before 7 o'clock. But no one had an interest in moving that the house be counted; so it was not counted out; and Mr. Plumptre, an elderly man, of spare figure, who was the first to rise after Lord Pollington, made a long empty-helly speech to an empty house. The man, the speech, the purpose of the speech, the place, the time -all were suggestive of famine.

Towards nine, when the house began to fill, the desire to speak increased. Sitting where I was, the faces of all who sprung upon their feet were not visible, and if they had been visible, I am not sufficiently acquainted with them to know their names. All I could see and understand was, that one of the bodies which had sprung up, remained up, that the others sat down, and that this one threw itself round about in a violent twirl, with its face to where its back was at first, and then righted itself, as if it had been a cable in a stormy sea; that the same instant it threw out its arms and dived forward, and bent itself down, and screamed at the highest pitch of its voice something about feather-beds. Then it stretched itself up, and shook its head, and clenched its teeth, and spoke while its teeth were elenched; then it threw its arms forward, somewhat in the manner of a windmill which has almost stopped, but which bounds on afresh with a new gust of wind, and pointing to somebody opposite it, said, "No; I live among the green fields, not among your smoky chimneys." It then twisted round, and spoke with its face where its back had been, and wheeled round again, and continued so to do, until its voice sunk from exhaustion, and it spoke teebly and low, and told of the time when it would have willingly lost one of its limbs for Sir Robert Peel, but that it would not do so now; and so it sat down. Next morning I found by the newspapers that this curious exhibition had been made by the gentleman whose name stands at the head of this paragraph.

SIR JOHN TROLLOPE.

Provious to the wild man of Cornwall's exhibition, and during the time when the house might have been said to be at low water—the tide being run out, and the shallows left bare on the protection benches, a dignified personage, with a sonorous and finely modulated voice, rose from the front seat, and spoke in favour of protection—proof that whatever appearances may have been, the tide, which awhile before swept the members from the house, had not left shallows, and shallows only on the protection seats. He was the most finelit speaker, and delivered the arguments for protection in the best-arranged style which it has been my fortule to hear. I did not know unfil past morning the tide speaker was, as no one near the small tall higher than the first manne.

John is one of the members for Lincolnshire, and is, I hear, reported to be a man of talent. He may be so, and be greatly in error on the subject of the Corn Law. He evidently clings to it from other causes than a belief in its indispensableness. Towards the conclusion of his speech he said that rather than suffer the taunts applied to the landowners by opponents of the Corn Law, he, for one, would give it up; if its existence depended on his will, it should at once cease to exist. There is no shame conveyed in a taunt to a sensible man if the taunt is not deserved. Such a man as Sir John Trollope must feel the sting all the more that he knows the monopolists, who rob the working bees of their honey, lay themselves open to the sting, and should be stung, and will be stung.

THE EARL OF MARCH, LORD GEORGE, AND THE "LITTLE PATRIOTIC BAND,"

Neither so sensitive, nor sensible, is the heir of the house of Lennox. Whatever merits he may have, he has not the merit of Sir John Trollope, of being ashamed of a bad cause. Extravagant self-esteem is the leading characteristic of his duent parent, and a goodly share of it is his. Allied with Lord George Bontinek in horseracing, betting, and "hedging," the Lennoxes, like his lordship, are "up to a dodge or two," and are not particular as to what people will think of them. Laws which have been made to suppress gambling, some of them wilfully break; and having broken them, they "protect" themselves by their legislative influence in getting an act passed (the qui tam actions act) to save themselves from the consequences. In the annals of barefacedness there is no parallel to that act. For lawbroakers to associate in Parliamentary strength, and pass an act of indemnity for themselves, may be quite in accordance with the spirit of what they call " protection;" but if the phrase "unconstitutional" means anything, it means that the legislature is not to be perverted to save delinquents from the consequences of delinquency. The Duke of Richmond was the mover of the qui tam actions bill in the Lords, and it was supported in the Commons, and earried through, chiefly by that "little patriotic band," as Lord George Bentinck calls himself and co-obstructors of the Government sitting below the gangway. There is a delinquent to be hanged on Monday morning, at the Old Bailey; and he, doubtless believing that a man may be put to better uses than that of hanging, would be very glad if he could get into Parliament, and have friends enough there to hasten a bill through both houses before Monday morning, to save him from Jack Ketch. It was alleged in favour of the qui tam actions bill, that the persons who were proceeding against the honourable and noble delinquents who sought the "protection" of their fellow legislators, were persons of indifferent reputation; but Jack is not remarkable for his high reputation; and in that respect the man now in Newgate would go to Parliament for "protection" on equal terms with those who have gone before. Not that it is insinuated for a moment that gamblers, "bonnets," "legs," "hedgers," &c., &c., &c., are to be compared in guilt with an assassin-far from it. The cases are only mentioned together to enable us to say, that tall law-breakers would pass acts of indemnity to "protect' themselves from the consequences of breaking the law if they could; and that it is, therefore, the interest and the duty of the moral and the well-disposed of mankind to prevent them, when, by some mischance, such happen to have the Parliamentary power. There are some mon-let us hope many-to whom shame would be a sufficient preventative, even if they were inclined to proeet themselves by legislative influence from the consequences of breaking the law. But with that "little patriotic band," of which Lord George is the centre, below the gangway, and to which he now stands godfather, shame, or even a moderate amount of modesty, is not an attribute.

Of course, in this remark, men of respectable moral character—such as Sir Robert Inglis, and Sir John Trollope—are not included, though they are below the gangway, and sit upon the skirts of the "little patriotic band."

LORD EDRINGTON.

This young nobleman spoke in favour of Free Trade on the same evening that the members, whom I have mentioned; spoke on the other side. His lordship is not an effective speaker. His matter reads well, but he is so unready as to be at times painful to listen to. He deprecated the three years of a sliding scale which is proposed by the Government, and pointed out some burdens—real burdens on land, which neither the Government nor the monopolists have taken into consideration—the legal expenses on the transfer of property. The harrier which such expenses have raised against the admittion of small fresholds has been, and is, detrimental in delitional progress in a high degree—so far as national progress depends on an extension of the finnchise in the counties to the men of intelligence, industry, and small means, who have hitherto been shut out from it, but who, instructed by the League, are now associating to obtain the franchise by obtaining small properties. Altogether Lord Ebrington's speech contained valuable suggestions. But it is nothing new in this paper to show that the heaviest burdens on agriculture are the lawyers and agents, who being paid servants of the landlords, ride on the backs of the farmers like so many old men of the sea, and will not be shaken off.

MEMORIAL TO BIR R. PEEL.

GLOUCKSTER, MAR. 21.—Moved by Mr. Councillor Kimberley, and seconded by Mr. Alderman Taylor, that an address be transmitted to Sir R. Peel through the Town-clerk, and that the city scal be attached thereto:

"To the Ruht Hon. Sir R. Pebl., Bart., First Lord of the Theasury.

"The Address of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgosses of the City of Gloucester, in council assembled.

"We, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the City of Gloucester, in council assembled, impressed with a deep sense of the importance of the Government measures, now before Parliament, for relaxing the duties on corn and provisions, with a view to their eventual abolition, as well involving a general reduction in our commercial tariff, avail ourselves of these means respectfully to tender you, as their responsible projector, our cordial and entire approbation of the principle on which there measures are founded.

"Comprising, as this corporation does, individuals of va-

"Comprising, as this corporation does, individuals of various shades of political opinion, we are nevertheless unnumous in our admiration of the boldness, justice, and equity of the proposed changes, and of their complete adaptation to the spirit of the age, and to the ends thereby proposed—namely, the increased happiness, and comfort of all classes of her Majesty's subjects.

"It is not the practice of this corporation, as a body, to identify itself with general political quastions, but there are occasions which seem to justify a departure from the usual course; and we deem the present an opportunity which our strong sense of the immense importance of the tovernment proposals will scarcely allow us to forego, of testifying our high approval of them, and of cheering on the first Minister of the Crown in his glorious yet difficult career of carrying them foregoed to a meeting of the corporation.

them forward to a successful issue.

"We are fully sensible of the many painful struggles which must have preceded the proposal of measures involved. ing principles in direct opposition to the views of a large in fluential section of the Government supporters; but we offer our respectful homige to the moral contrage pendence which could disregard that support, and appeal to the higher tribunal of public opinion, dispassionately expressed through its representatives in Parliament. It is our anxious hope that these measures may speedily become the law of the land. We believe their tendency to be, to secure at home social and political contentment, active employment, health and wealth; abroad, to annihilate prejudice, to increase goodwill towards this country, to remove the barriers to a free exchange of labour and natural products; and thus, by promoting a universal treaty of amity and commerce, to secure that which must almost inevitably flow from it-the blessings of universal peace.

THE PROTECTION CHIEFS. - Among the many delusions of the present day, there is no one, unfortunately, more/prevalent than that the protectionist party in Parliament, however compact in itself, is without leaders. We believe we are in a position to say that this supposition is atterly devoid of foundation. In the House of Commons the question is already settled. Lord George Bentinck has shown the truth of what we have often urged, that circumstances produce men. Those who have only served in the political ranks are called into command by some sudden emergency, and contrary, perhaps, to their own previous belief, are found capable of leading, and of doing so in a manner that throws into the shade the former conventional leaders of party. The speech of Lord George Bentinek—the first in which he took a prominent place in debate—on the 27th of last month; the numerous occasions on which he has since spoken; his patience in wading through the most uninteresting of all reading, Parliamentary blue-hooks; his skill in extracting from these volumes of mere words, for the most part, all that they contain of facts; his arrangement and combination of the truths to be found in them; his skill in bringing such truths to bear on the subject under consideration; and the thoroughly English spirit with which he declares that "he is not ashamed to hoist the colours of protection;" all concur in establishing Lord George's claim, or rather that of his friends on his behalf, to the position of leader of the British party in the Commons. But this point is tacitly admitted, even by men opposed to the protectionists. It is in the House of Lords that we are hourly taunted with baying no leader. Even the most virulent of the Whig journals allow that we have a party-a strong and resolute party-in that House; but they lose no opportunity of throwing it in our teeth, that there is no noble lord, of talent and energy, saited to the crisis, to give direction to the power that we possess. We feel authorised in declaring that this insimuation is perfectly groundless. Lord Stanley is able and willing to lead on his possess the relative that the Reitle Industry will on his noble phalanx to the victory that British industry will yet achieve in the House of Peers. The few words that his lordship delivered on Friday night are conclusive evidence of what he bel'eves may be done; and we think we know enough of what other noble lords feel on the subject to say, without fear of contradiction, that they are content to leave the mode in which it shall be done to the zeal and ability of Lord Stanley .- Morning Post.

REPRESENTATION OF SOUTH LANGASHIRE.—We think it right to state, for the information of our readers, that there is considerable probability of an early election for the southern division of this county. Within the last few days, ramours which had previously been in circulation of an intention on the part of Government to create several additional peers, have acquired greater probability and consistency. It is now pretty generally believed, that after the bill for altering the Corn Law has passed the Flouse of Commons, several individuals, now or recently in that house, including Lord Francis Egerton, Lord Lipcoln, and Lord Ashley, will be called to the upper Louse, in order to assist in carrying the great measure through that assembly. We give the statement as it reaches us; not vonching fer its trait, but, at the shifted time, with a strong impression that there is at least some foundation for it.—Monchaster Guardian.

AGRICULTURE.

THE "PROTECTED" LABOURERS.

With effrontery surpassing that of the reguish horsedealer, who pointed out the lame leg of a horse for sale as one of the animal's best points, the monopolists have lately pretended that "protection"-that is, dear grain and short crops—was essential to the welfare of the agricultural labourers. Nothing is further from the truth, but it serves to divert attention from the real objects and effects of the Corn Laws; and therefore monopolist after monopolist reiterates the oftexposed falsehood.

Perhaps there is no county in England where the farmers have so entirely relied upon the Corn Laws as in Wiltshire. A large portion of the county consists of light but fortile land, held generally in large farms, the occupiers of which, though often men of considerable capital, almost without exception hold too much land for the capital they employ; their profit, therefore, according to the actual system, is derived from a moderate acreable produce on a large breadth of land. They thus produce grain at considerable cost, and require high prices to "remunerate" them. They have a large surface of land to plough, to manure, and to sow. They pay rent-and Wiltshire rents are high-tithes, rates, and taxes, for many acres. Their outgoings, calculated at per acre, are as great as if, with one exception, the highest and most elaborate system of culture prevailed. Indeed, more so, for more seed is required to be sown on the Wiltshire system than would be necessary if the land was more highly cultivated. If the Wiltshire farmer with the same capital had less land, the only additional outlay per acre he would make would be in extra labour. He must raise better turnip and green crops; he would feed some bullocks, or mileh cows, or breed neat stock; and he would fatten off-some of his wether

Root-hocing, manure drawing, cattle serving, and so forth, which such a change implies, would undoubtedly require the employment of more manual labour than the Wiltshire farmer now deems necessary, but that would be a most profitable outlay, for the increased produce per acre would much exceed the increased cost.

Now, when "protection" shall be finally abolished, the Wiltshire farmers must, and will, rely less upon the price, and more upon the quantity of their crops, and they will-necessarily adopt a higher system of farming.

Both landlords and tenants will probably be less auxious for large occupations. To put the difference in a tangible form, let us contrast the high and the low farming. The Wiltshire farmer has a capital of say 4000L, and he takes a farm of 800 nerds, thus employing 5l. per acre. Throughout the county, for one farmer who has more capital than 5/, per acre, there are five who have less. But take 5/. per acre as representing the average of Wiltshire farming, and it will be obvious that by means of that capital -- in the case we put-the rent, tithes, rates, and taxes of 800 acros must be paid, that quantity of land must be ploughed, manured, sown, and harvested; and we know that, practically, the only means by which it can be manured at all by means of a capital of 4000l, is with a flock of shoop kept on "the downs" in the day, and folded at night on the arable land. No beasts will be fed or bred, no sheep fattened, the turnips will not exceed 4 or 5 tons to the acre, and the number of labourers employed will be comparatively small The acreable produce of grain will be small, very small, compared with what the land under a different style of farming is capable of producing. The witnesses examined before the various agricultural committees have never set the Wiltshire produce of wheat at more, upon an average, than about 22 bushols per acre, and other grain in proportion. Had the farmer with a capital of 40007, taken four instead of eight hundred acres of the same kind of land, he would have saved half his outgoings for rent, tithes, rates, taxes, seed, and ploughing; and let him employ the same number of men upon his smaller farm, and homey not only in many instances grow nearly or quite double his present produce per acre, but he may grow grain more frequently on far as the farmer we controll he will carry on his business with much greater success as soon as the necessity of growing large produce shall have taught him not to take too much land.

But if such a change of system as Free Trade will inevitably introduce is best for the farmer, how is it for the labourer? Why, with provisions at lower prices, there will be a greater demand for his labour, and, as a necessary consequence, his wages will rise. The Wiltshire labourers seem to be aware of this. Nothing has been more remarkable, during the progress of the Free Trade agitation, than the meetings of Wiltshire labourers to petition Parliament, or memorialize the Queen, for a Free Trade in corn. The peaceable, rational, earnest demeanour of these humble men, gathered together by the hill side, or under the broad oak, in the moonlight of a winter's night, to raise their voices for untrammelled industry, is a spectacle of no ordinary import. When the truths of economical science are thus practically enforced, daze the Government disregard the signs of the times, in blind obedience to the selfish suggestions of an ignorant landocracy? To that question Sir Robert Peel has given the statesman's only answer-No; emphatically, No.

The following paragraph records a meeting of labourers which took place a week or two ago, in Wiltshire:

"MEETING OF LABOURERS ON LOCKERIDGE DEANE .-On Tuesday evening a meeting of 'protected' Wiltshire labourers took place on Lockeridge Deane, near Mariborough. Many of the cottagers in the neighbourhood of Kennet, Lockeridge, and Overton, having lately received printed papers issued by the Protection Society, setting forth the evils of Free Trade, and having been told by the farmers that protection was for their benefit, and therefore ought to be continued, decided on holding a meeting to discuss the subject, and requested Mr. Edwards, of Marlborough, and Mr. Westell, schoolmaster, of the same place, to attend and explain to them the true bearings of the question. Accordingly, on Tuesday evening, at one o'clock, the Denne, which ingly, on Tuesday evening, at one o clock, the Deane, which is a hollow, spotted over with those singular stones, which, at a distance, from their resemblance to sheep, are called grey wethers, was througed with hundreds of men, whose white smockfrocks literally glittered in the bright moonlight, and made an impressive picture among the old grey stones—memorials of bye gone days. The addresses of Messrs. Edwards and Westell were listened to with intense interest, the labourers every now and then breaking on the solemn stillness of the night, which was otherwise only interrupted by a single human voice, with loud shouts of approval, which were caught up by echo on the other side and sent back again, reverberating over the Deane. The strongest feeling in favour of Free Trade was manifested, and it is not too much to say that, in this neighbourhood, the 'Glory of Protection has departed,' never more to return."—Wiltshire

If the reader knows the district, he will understand the picturesque effect of such a meeting. If not, let him imagine a hollow between the Chalk hills, filled with masses of grey "Sarsen" stone, protruding through the short natural turf, surrounded by wide tracts of "downs," used only as sheep walks, though capable of being highly and profitably cultivated, and by open arable fields which every labourer in the dis trict knows to be only half cultivated. Let him recollect that 7s. and 8s. a week form the ordinary wages of an adult labourer; that there is little employment for women and children, and that this state of things arises from a low, an unnaturally low system of cultivation, occasioned by a law passed by a legislature of dominant landowners, to increase their own rents by enhancing the price of the labourer's food, and diminishing the demand for his labour. Will he wonder at shouts of approval which greeted the Free Trade speakers? May the echoes reach the ear, and act upon the minds of those of the English Oligarchy, who still struggle to maintain their artifloial scarcity! On these very spots, according to local tradition, the aborigines of this Island were accustomed to assemble under the guidance of the Druids for worship, and to concort resistance to the Roman invaders; and from that hour to this, hundreds on hundreds of acres of land have been un. touched and unimproved by the hand of man. Now the peasants assemble there to demand the removal of those laws which restrict the freedom of Britishindustry, and retain the soil in a state of nature.

We understand that the Wiltshire labourers are about to celebrate at Avebury, where their first meeting occured, the partial triumph of sound principles which Sir Robert Poel's measure affords. We shall look with great interest for the proceedings of that meeting, for it is plain the Wiltshire lathe same land than he can with the larger farm their, depression, are about to take the lead in the mation of their depression, of their class.

ADUKE ON POTATOES.

It has pleased the landed aristocracy to take our potato grounds under their especial protection, and to examine, with all the acumen of hereditary wisdom, the symptoms of the potato disease-its causes and its remedies. The why and the wherefore of such condescending beneficence it boots not now to tell. Perhaps the failure of potatoes, upon which so many of our agricultural labourers live, has somewhat unmasked the position of those "who withhold corn from the people," who passlaws to create an artificial scarcity of grain to keep up renu But let that pass. Dukes and lords do care for our potatoes; and perhaps we, the commonalty of England ought not to inquire too minutely into the source of such "a crowning mercy."

It seems that the monopolist Duke of Portland has been experimenting on potatoes; and, as the result of his investigations, promulgated to the world "that quicklime is a protection against the consequences of the disease;" and of course such an authority could not be gain. sayed. Quicklime preserves potatoes: it is so, there can be no question, for the Duke of Portland has said so. It matters not that scientific men, or practical men, quicklimed their potatoes without staying the disease; their experiments go for nothing. What can such things weigh against the authority of a duke? But then another duke, the Duke of Rutland, has also failed to protect potatoes by the use of quickline. Now the Duke of Rutland should know something about potatoes, for he declared publicly, at an agricultural meeting, that he "highly relished" the humble esculent. The question therefore assumed a serious aspect. So long as there was a duke on the one side, and only all the trading potato growers and men of science on the other, the truth could not be in doubt; it must be with the duke But when the popular experience became fortified by that of another duke, who could decide the question? This state of things was awful to contemplate. The potatofed community was about to be split into two factions; the pelting of decayed potatoes might have been fearful; when, lo ! "Scott Portland" relieves the public, startled by this collision of authorities, with the following truly ducal explanation:

"As I know that my authority has been extensively circulated in favour of quicklime as a protection against the consequences of the disease which has prevailed in the potato crop, and I heard yesterday from the Duke of Rulland that his experiments have not been equally successful, I feel it a duty to society to prevent persons from being misled by the general terms in which I have circulated the result of the experiments conducted here."

Mark, reader, the peculiar conditions under which quicklime will stay the progress of the potato discase. The magnate of Wellbeck says:

" It is quite true that the lime used here has been inveriably successful, but it is the MAGNESIAN LIME which abounds in this neighbourhood. In its caustic state it is fatal to vegetation. Barren spots are to be seen in the places on the forest, where lime heaps were placed more than thirty years ago. It is therefore easy to account for the effect of this lime in stopping the propagation of the

And of vegetation together, his grace might have said. His grace then proceeds:

" The lime used by the Duke of Rutland I understand to have been the Crich lime, which is very pure lime, and has no such destructive qualities. It is, therefore, only necessary to state the distinction to account for the difference. Charcoal is quite as effectual as the magnesian lime."

The explanation as regards lime is quite satisfactory, for it shows that both dukes are right. Of course it was impossible that a duke could be wrong when all was known, but we fear his grace of Portland had forgotten ins logic—if he ever condescended to learn logic having discovered that some quicklime "stops the propagation of the potato disease" by destroying vegetative power, he promulgated, in "general terms," that "quicklime is a protection against the disease."

If the faith of the British commonalty in dukes had been less stedfast than it is, this might have shaken our national belief that dukes are infallible. The fault, however, is that of the "rascal commons," who ought to have known intuitively what the ducal oracle meant. And it is with a view to prevent future misconstructions of the "authority" of the lord of Wellbeck that we venture to ask, with all humility, whether, when the Dake of Portland says, "charcoal is quite as effectual as the magnesian lime," he means ignited charcoal? for, should charcoal fail, and no duke discover the failure, the po tato-growing community may be again apparently at issue with a duke.

THE GAME LAW

The important events which his to the sail of have to some extent diverted our attention pressure of the game laws and MOTO PERSONALISTRALIST AND od to gaiba

wille

lioni

eDU.

land.

such քիկ

ikkain.

nulsance; but topon the whole we apprehend the evil to be on the increase.

A few are throwing the hares and rabbits overboard. in the hope of lemoning the public demand for the repeal of the game laws; as, for instance:

"The youthful Earl of Stamford and Warrington has, much to his credit, given the tenantry on his extensive estates permission to destroy the hares and rabbits."—Provincial Paper.

But, independently of the indirect and social evils produced by the existence of a system of game laws, the actual destruction caused by phensants is very great, as witness the following:

"A brace of pheasants were lately killed in the parish of Bradwell, near Coggeshall, Essex, the crop of one of which contained 756 grains of wheat and barley, the other 928 grains, besides other small seeds."—Essex raper.

On many farms the pheasants which are daily fed at the tenants' cost, must be counted by hundreds; let a simple multiplication sum be worked on these dates, and let the public note the result. Farmers know it, and writhe under the infliction. The following extract, from the Mark Lane Express, shows the opinions of farmers on the subject:

"DANAGES CAUSED BY HARES AND RABBITS .- The farmers of the Isle of Wight are quite in ecstacies at the Duke of Richmond and Lord Ashburton having declared that hares were vermin, and alike injurious to the crops of the tenant and the trees of the landord. It is calculated that a farm of 500 acres keeps at least 1000 hares, which will cat as much as 200 sheep, at 17s. 6d. each, or one sheep to five hares, at 3s. 6d. £175 0 0 Waste caused by hares in feeding equal to one quarter

£218 15 0 Every hare on a farm eats and wastes the value of 4s. 6d. at least, and every rabbit costs the farmer at least 2s. per annum.

THE ELECTRICAL MINISTER.

A great sensation has lately been produced at Paris by the wonderful feats of a young lady, a Mademoiselle Angelique Couin, who appears to be a sort of torpedo in petticoats. Chairs and tables fly across the room on a touch from her pron, when she is charged with the fluid, and she can be attracted or repulsed at will by the magnet.

is, perhaps, not generally known that we possess a similar but much more wonderful phenomenon amongst us. What is Mademoiselle Cottin's performance in this way to Sir Robert Peel's?

The following detail of experiments proves his infinitely greater powers of attraction and repulsion:

EXPERIMENT 1. The Premier, after being very beavily charged indeed during the late debate, being placed on the Conservative benches by a single speech, succeeded in violently throwing from him one-half of the Conservative members, quite to the opposite side of the house. Notwithstanding the tremendous efforts made by Sir Sidney Herbert and Sir James Graham to hold these gentlemen in their places, the shock was so great that they were almost knocked over themselves by the violence with which the protectionists flew across. Mr. Ferrand was flung with a tremendous shock against a knot of Free Traders, and talked so very widely that it was feared he had sustained a concussion of the brain. lle is not yet quite recovered.

EXPERIMENT II. \ Sir Robert, being again charged the night after, was found to possess the power of attracting the League members, in the same proportion as he repelled the gentlemen of the Central Agricultural Society in Bond-street. Mr. Cobden was drawn right across the house, apparently without the least power of resistance.

EXPERIMENT III. Sir Robert, being again charged, was put en rapport with Lord George Bentinok and Mr. D'Israell by means of silk (generally a non-conductor). Notwithstanding he drew the honourable members into a slough of absurdity, and fixed them so tight in a dilemma, that they were quite unable to get out of it—until Sir Robert left the honourable to get out of it—until Sir Robert left EXPERIMENT IV. Sir Robert being again charged, and a nantity of arguments presented to him by the member for Northamptonshire, these, though considered particularly strong by those who selected them, were at once broken to pieces, one after another, by a single sentence of Sir Robert's. A gentleman of great scientific acquirements, who has watched these experiments, assures us that Sir Robert is quite as powerful as the electric cel, and if possible, more alippary.

Encouraged by the success of the Premier, Mr. D Israeli has announced his possession of similar powers. He attempted, when fully charged with sarcasm, and facts from MCulioch's Commercial Dictionary, to electrify the House. The attempt was a total failure, and Mr. D'Israeli is accordingly pronounced to be an impostor.—Punch.

Representation of Bridden.—A petition, duly recognizanced, was presented on Monday night in the House of Commons against the return of Mr. Cochrane for the borough of Briddent. The petitioners allege gross bridery, and pray a scrutiny. It appears the majority of one will little-available beautiful the months of some to light. The most faced corruption of votes have come to light. The most corruption of votes have come to figur. The most confident expectation prevails in Bridport that Mr. John Romilly will be, within a month; what he ought to have been originally, the "sitting member." The sats of heibery, are reported to compromise seriously some of the chief partisans of Mr. Cochrane.—Morning Chronicle.

THE BRASON —While the Emerican maners are filled with

THE BEASON. While the European papers are filled with THE BRASON.—While the European papers are filled with paragraphs containing evidences of the extraordinary prescrity of the section, there are letters from North America which axhibit a singular contrast with the former statements. It estates of the Union, we are informed, and principally in North-Carolina, Muscachasetts, and Kennacky, the weather, has been more severe, than any experienced at the contrast of the Carolina and the contrast of the Carolina and the contrast of Contartiti Fleming, and Alreyon Bomaness by B. D'Israeli Esq., M.P. Loudon; Colburn.

REVIEW.

The republication of those admirable works, in which genius sooms to revel in its own exuberance, and the creative power of a poetle mind to have called worlds of thought into existence with greater facility than the slaves of the lamp raised their gorgeous palaces, has led us to contemplate the political position of the author, and to contrast the high principles developed in Coningsby and Sybil with the very inferior practice of the member for Shrowsbury. Like his own Alroy, Mr. D'Israeli has proved false to the star of his own destiny; having appealed to the best feelings of the country, and proclaimed that the sublime of morality ought to be the essence of sound policy—having shown that the system of protection was a device of the tricksters that endeavoured to pass themselves for states. men—having pointed to the vacillations in Lord Bolingbroke's career which deprived of all influence the greatest amount of talent that had ever centred in the person of an English politician, he has declared himself an infidel in his own mission by becoming a partisan of the system he condemned, and an expounder of the principles which he denounced.

There is no greater mistake than that which is made a prominent rule of action in Vivian Grey, one of the author's earliest and most successful works, that tact and cleverness in forming a party are essential to success in political life. True genius is independent of party; Grattan paid Lord Chatham the highest compliment that a statesman could receive when he declared that "he stood alone." Moral power in his case was quite independent of numerical strength; he commanded majorities, for there was a sovere dignity in his independence, a wizard power in his strength of will, which for a time gave to his behests the resistless force of Fate. He too fell beneath the trammels of party. The Lilliputians chained down Gulliver; Chatham's second administration was the sad exhibition of the convulsive throes of a giant, cribbed, cabined, and confined, by the most ordinary of mortals; he was a Sampson making sport for the Philistines.

The greatest of philosophic poots, and the most dramatic of satirical writers, could conceive no punishment more severe for the tyrants of his day than that they should have a full conception of the moral excellence which they had abandoned for ever. Persius rising to a height of ethical dignity unmatched in the whole range of classical literature. pronounces as his anathema on the Neros, the Domitians and the Caligulas:

> Virtutem videant, intabescantque relictà. " May they see Virtue and pine for her deserted."

But the inconsistency between sublime procept and erratic practice, has consequences that extend beyond the individual. It is an unjust, and a dangerous trifling with the moral elements of public opinion. Eternal truths are proclaimed with all the dignity belonging to conscious power; delinquencies of past and existing statesmen are exposed with a fearless severity which implies the assertion of innate superiority. The voice of the prophet stirs all the sympathetic emotions by which intellectual sublimity and moral excellence are appreciated; we look for the voice of the prophet, and we hear the conventional tones of the advocate. We expect some etornal maxim, and we receive a fugitive epigram; we seek the teaching of the philosopher, but we find only the patent fallacies of the sophist. "O Lucifer, son of the morning, how art thou fallen!"

Long and fondly as we have admired the Tale of Alroy, the greatest impersonation of the theocratic principle developed in a human personage which the history of fletion can display, we rise from our last perusal of its pages with a conviction that it is one of those conceptions predestined to immortality. David Alroy, the prince of the captivity, becomes lord of Asia by appreciating and holding fast to the eternity of principle with which his destiny is involved; but he barters principle for a low, mean, and miserable existence—his star culminates in the horizon, and he sinks into the despised captive of a dungeon. But this is a moral as well as a historical truth. There is an iron which enters into the soul, more torturing than the chains which manacle the body; there are fetters for the mind, more galling and more degrading than those which the jailer rivets on the hands and wrists; they are linked indissolubly to the inner man, when integrity parts from genius, and consigns the high trust to the hazards of a temporary and paltry expediency-

And the clankless chains have bound thee, And the silent spells surround thee; And the curse hath gone together O'er thy heart and brain—now, wither.

It is painful to see the author of Alroy lending himself to the advocacy of monopoly; and to say the truth, there is a little of the judicrous in the in-congruity between his builty and powers and that strange "development of intelligence" builted "in the agricultural mind." We want to be him in the midst of the protectionists without, thinking of Nobuchadnezzal grazing among the fixen. When he is cheared by his anomalous supportors, we expect him overy moment to turn round and onquire, "What meanoth this bloating of sheep, and this lowing of oxen in mino cars?" and in spite of all that has happened, we look back to his perpetrating some such severance of the unnatural connection in the course of the session.

Free Trade and Artistic Design, from the Art-Union, for April 1846. (Unpublished).

We have been permitted to use this article, from which we shall make a few extracts, which require neither introduction nor comment. The following is a good description of the protection system:

"The object of protection is to provent competition, and the consequent diminution of profits. We do not say the diminution of prices, because high prices are very far from being identified with high profits; before price can be a measure of profit we must know the cost of production, for profit is obviously the difference between the cost of production and the price obtained for any given article. Cheapness of production is, therefore, an important element in the estimate of profits, and, therefore, in the estimate of wages. For it is quite clear that wages must be paid out of profits, since they could not possibly be paid out of losses. Now, let us for the sake of argument grant that a system of protection can be so stringently maintained as to prevent all foreign competition, and that the operations of the smugglers can be effectually prevented by a revenue police, we say that there are two evils necessarily resulting—the loss of markets abroad, and the raising up of formidable competition at home. Protection is a virtual abandonment of the foreign market, for how can we most those on neutral ground with whom we declare ourselves unable to compete in our own markets? We can export no articles except those which we produce cheaper than foreigners, unless we choose to buy and sell, and live by the loss: a process which is recommended in schools of sentimental economy, but which political economy discards as preposterous. If, on the other hand, we can so diminish the cost of production as to compete with foreigners in neutral markets, we must be far more than a match for them at home, and protection is utterly uscless,—it becomes a mere idle mockery.

"Take it, then, either way, so far as export trade is con cerned, if protection enhances the cost of production it is mischievous by excluding us from foreign markets; and if it does not enhance the cost of production it is utterly and wholly unavailing.

We are pleased with the following remarks on the subject of wages:

"Whatever raises the cost of production cultances the price of an article, and whatever raises price must of necessity diminish the consumption, and, consequently, the demand. Now, as goods are produced only to be sold, it is evident that a combination to raise wages in any branch of labour is a combination to limit the demand for labour in that branch of industry; and, therefore, the unionists must go a step farther. and limit the supply of labour. Now, they have done so in several instances, but they have never succeeded, and they never can succeed. If they fix such a tariff of wages as to leave little or no margin of profits for the manufacturers, no capitalists will emburk in their business, so far as the power of the unionists extends. But Great Britain is not a single town, and no trades' union can exercise the sway of imperial legislation; the capitalists provented from embarking in trade on the banks of the Thames may seek the banks of the Irwell, the Derwent, and the Mersey. In point of fact the competition from which the weavers of Spitalfields now suffer most is not that of Paris or of Lyons, but the competition of Manchester and of Macclesseld.

We have now shown that the effect of protection is to destroy the foreign market and to provoke a most injurious competition in the home market; but this is not all: in the insensate struggle to maintain the rate of wages by artificial means, the natural means—that is, the artistic improvement of the manufactured article—is entirely neglected. The natural constituents of a rate of wages are skill, time, and toil, and of these skill must always bear the highest price. The unfortunate condition of the frame knitters and the handloom weavers is chiefly owing to the fact that the invatory of their art can be learned with great case, and that the employment is of such a nature as to be possible to the young, the infirm, the sick, and the untrained. It is not long since some scores of Irish labourers, coming over to reap the harvest and failing to obtain employment, at once became hand-loom weavers, and thus largely added to the numbers and the misery of that unfortunate class. When, therefore, we urge the importance of raising the artistic standard of instruction for the operative classes, we are also contending for their obtaining higher wages and more permanent re muneration."

We shall conclude by extracting a portion of the remarks on the silk trade:

"It is but justice to say that the immense majority of the manufacturing classes have shown at this crisis that con-fidence and self-reliance which we have endeavoured to recommend. There is probably no class of operatives to which the withdrawal of protection might have been expected to appear more formidable than the watchmakers of Clerkenwell, and yet they all joined in a polition for Free Trade. There has indeed, been one exception to this rule; petitions for protection being continued have been presented from a minority of the persons engaged in the silk trade, and yet there is no trade in England that has suffered so severely from prohibition and protection.

"The allk trade lies suffered from two shools of sentimental soonomy: the Spitalfields school, and the Macclesfield achool. When the facilities of weaving by the application of mawhen the Rollings of warning by the application of intro-obinery, as in the judquard loom, were so increased that the time and toil required for producing any definite length were reduced to one-third, the economists of Spitalfields believed it possible to maintain the price of production in spite of the immense change in the cost-of-production. But two could produce, and the result of the attempt was to drive a large produce, and the result of the attempt was to drive a large proportion of the silk manufacture into the north of England. The Macalesfield comomists took a still more absurd dogma for their guidance; they held that it was the duty of Covernment to provide them a market, irrespective of the value or the meets of their goods; Mr. Brookleburst, who is the leading professor of that species of commissioning, who is the leading professor of that species of commissioning of Macolestical, can confirm our assertion, that whorever this aboriginal school bad influence, actistic design was not merely unknown, but was deliberately rejected. Had not Mr. Brocklehust taken the unfortunate step of opposition to Sir Robert Peel's teriff, on the ground of the incapacity of Englishmen to compete with Frenchmen, we should never have dreamed of making any direct reference to him or to bis establishment. But he has challenged an inquiry which he must meet. We ask, then, what artists has he simployed? What reward has he paid? What original taste has he developed? What design has his large establishment developed? The fact is that on original design several large establishments which we could mention do not together expend one half of the sum which is paid to arises by some of the smaller manufacturers of Paris, Lyons, and St. Etlenne. They ask to be protected in a systematic disconragement of British progress in the art of design, and they have the leasthead to design that they they have the hardihood to declare that they speak in behalf of British industry. We tell them, what indeed they know full well, that skill is a greater element than toil in the profits of British industry, and that those who discourage the development of skill are the very worst enemies of the opera-

"We can relate an illustrative ancodote, and appeal to the Macclesfield economist for the truth of the facts, which came within his own knowledge. A certain West end house, ob tained a design from Paris, and sent it to be realised at a large English establishment; the design was one which required very little skill to adupt it to the jacquard, but it was done so clumsly and so badly that the result was perfectly detestable. Complaints were made, and the answer was, 'You can get no better article without smuggling. Now, the answer was simply a downright fulschood: in the establishment of the late Mr. Schwabe, at Manchester, we have seen patterns five times more complex placed on the jacquard without difficulty. There may be some undiscoverable advantages in a system of protection, but assuredly it is no alvantage to maintain noodles as heads of houses, and botches as operatives.

The plain fact in the silk trade is, that we do not fail so much in backwardness in design as in the realizing of design: the existence of protection was a constant incentive to avoid preliminary expense, and to slur over difficulties. The quantity of the work turned off, not its quality, determined the character of the workman. The operative was protected, not from the competition of low wages, but of high wages; in the comony of Spitalfields and Macclesfield it was a crime to be too industrious too skilled and too intelligent. erime to be too industrious, too skilful, and too intelligent. We have long felt weary of such mischievens nonsense, and we are glad that it has come to an end. We have been paying a premium on the import of foreign designs, and establishing a prohibition on the production of native designers. We have been sacrificing the real interest of British Art to the protonded interest of British Industry. Art now takes its fair stand in a free market. We say to the British manufacturers,-You can only meet foreign designs by English designs, you must cease to be imitators, you must begin to be originators; -you have felt the snuggler to be more than your match while you depended on France for patterns, but a more complete competition will drive you from the field, unless you develope the resources which are notoriously at

"It is neither our duty nor our object to vindiente the policy of Sir Robert Peel -political considerations come not within our peculiar sphere. But we have long felt that the restrictions on the importation of artistic excellence from abroad fornished at least a pretext for discouraging artistic ambition ut home, and that the opening of our ports to foreign rivalry must force the encouragement of domestic powers to meet the contest. Few years, probably very few months, will chapse when the excellence of the British school of design will not be far behind the excellence of the British schools of engraving, of painting, of modelling, and of sculpture.

"If fashionable consumers in lengland have evinced an unpatriotic preference for ornamental articles of foreign manufacture, they can plead in excuse that our prohibitory and protective laws proclaimed the inferiority of our own productions. Our legislation fostered a desire for foreign silks and foreign paper hangings, not merely by creating the perverse longing which all feel for what is forbidden, but by tacitly admitting that the exclusion was a proof of superior excellence. English Art was thus doubly discouraged; relying on protection, the producer refused to stimulate design; deceived by exclusion, the consumer regarded the inferiority of English patterns as an article of national faith incorporated in acts of Parliament. It would lead us too fur away from our immediate subject to show the connexion between the system of excise and the system of protection, but what we have chewhere said on the glass trade will sufficiently prove that the injuries, which being subjected to the excise brings on any branch of manufacturing ladustry, cannot be compensated by any amount of protection, however excessive. We have been legislating against art, enterprise, and invention, and it is assuredly high time that we should seek to advance on some road less dangerous.

In consequence of the press of matter, we are compelled to defer our notice of the Compound Atlas until next week.

INDIAN CORN BREAD. - Bread baked from Indian corn (maize) is coming rapidly into vogue in our city (Glasgow), and several bakers are driving a brisk business in it already. At the meeting of the Philosophical Society, on Wednesday hight, Dr. R. D. Thomson road an able paper on the nutri ingui, or, it is, thousan role an able paper on the nairi tive qualities of ludian corn, which he ranked very high; and at the same time exhibited various kinds of bread and bisenit which had been baked from it by Mr. Wilson, Gordon street. Some of the specimens were mixtures of maize and wheat, and maize and rice, in which state the logvos can be better fermented than when the maize is used alone. The bread and biscuits were very palatable and pleasant. Various uses to which Indian corn flour may be applied in domestic cookery were described, and some of them illustrated, on the occasion. In any form it is incomparable spaces matricinal than patatage, and may with the smallest amount of trouble and expense be made an agreeable dish.— Scottish Guardian.

A paragraph has appeared in one of the Newcastle papers, stating that William Brown, Kag., of Liverpool, had pursiance the catalic of Ford Castle, Northumberland, from the Marquis of Waterford, for the sum of 300,000. We have the last authority for anying that Mr. Brown, of Liverpool, has made no such purchase, though it is quite possible that the estate may have been sold to a gentleman of the same pame.—Liverpool Zince.

TREE TRADE INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION .-

A. W. P. Aulton, Part.

A. W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part.

A W. P. Aulton, Part

Josh I vinney, Paq., 29, Chancery-lane, Scaveson Mr. Predoriek Parrand, Priory Villa, Packham.

per, Predorick Furrand, Prfory Villa, Peckham.

Str. Alfred Lench Saul.

Frospectuses may be obtained, grafis, on application at the Society's.

Offices, East Temple Chambers, Whitefright street, Fleet street. The Rules
(6d. each are now conity, and may be had as above.

Persons desirous to join the Society are requested to make application.

The Society's Offices will be open for receiving subscriptions and the general transaction of business, every Enesday and Friday evasings, from 510 90 clock.

THE TREE TRADE INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION. As the scenad subscription is about to be called for, parties Intending to avail themselves of the bonefits of the Association are requested to is colled in shares an is obtained on the same terms as those which have been stready taken up. Attendance at the Offices, East Temple Chambers, flow to Kine o'Clock ECOLLECTIONS OF A TOUR: A SUMMER RAMBLE IN BELGIUM, GERMANY, and SWITZERLAND. By J. W. Masir, D.D., M.R.I.A. (of Manchester), author of "Continental India," "The Irish Church and Irreland," &c. &c.

London: J. Show.

Exercise of Carrieral Notices.

The Speciator (London), Murch 14, 1816.

Dr. Massie is a Noncon familia innister: this health having failed in the discharge of histalties, change of scene was prescribed by his medical attendard. This prescription jumps of with the wishes of the patient; but the "reamgistateoni "offered an obstacle, till removed by the affectionate solicitude of a generous and kind flock. Dr. Massie therefore started on his trip; made the usual tour through Belgium; visited the Spas adjacent to the Rhine; and proclared as far as Geneva, by way of Switzerland. His return was through Germany to the Elize and Hamburg, but he ne companies the remore no further than Leipsie, from back of space; the portion being briefly dismissed, except as regards reminiscences of Luther. On weturning to his dock at Lower Broughton, Dr. Massie gave them an account of his tour, in a veries of evening lectures or discourses—nucl. It will distribute the seminant of Ar. Alackingham's solvers. There existed Richton: allowed were published in some journals; and, finally, four, which forms the portly volume before us. In a preface the author starts that there is little either of the substance or the details of his legiture of the substance or the details of his legitures that there is little either of the substance or the details of his legiture and prevalls over the written character throughout. Considered merely in the analyse, these things are well enough done; for they are done in good faith, with some knowledge, and with what is called power. Dr. Massie is not a mere book maker, coverity spinning reminiscences out of the nearest receptacle—which generally is the guide-book; but a person who thinks his flock wants this instruction, and thorefore gives it them undisquisedly, owning when he takes it from common well: he condenses his facts with skill, and presents then with eleverness, or something more than eleverness. Will, this iscomplination, not observation; and it needlessly social the book for the general reader—t tion; and it not flessly socils the book for the general reader-though it was not, perhaps, attended for readers in general, but for a particular in the more proper topics of the tourist—incident, description, and remark—Dr. Massie is able to give some variety to an exhausted field, by his particular object, which was to "indicate how linese (foreign) scenes and associations strike a Christian." His comments on the facts he observed partials somewhat of the lecture; but his character and position naturally introduced him to a class with whom the ordinary run of tourists have nothing in common; and he exhibits agood deal of information respecting the condition of the Protestant congregations in Helgium, Gormany, and Geneva (which stronghold of Chivin is now a pure Unitarian establishman slong the Rhine. His opinions of Cutholicism and Latheranism are with other observers, that Rationalism is extensively prevalent in Germany, and it at among Roman Cauthon; though in the main he agrees with other observers, that Rationalism is extensively prevalent in German, and it at among Roman Catholics beire is confined to females and all above them. It seems in Roman Catholic countries, however, to be found and combination he encountered at Cologne, and of the position of dying visitors to the German Spas.—Dr Massie is an advocate for liftee trade. Like Laing and How itt, he does not seem to have been struck) at least, favourably, with the German character.

The Thirds (Ajaghelester, January 10, 1846.

The Author salys Unit, from the first, he meant to indicate how the scenes and associations strike a Christian, and with this intention he has produced a book which cannot fall to interest a Christian. We get little information from him as to cookery, or the mysteries of garning, or of plays or operas, or of accommodation at hotels, although he has an eye to the he catholic Clergy; through the Patherland of the Romanical and the picturesque, be it in the country or antique town. But he passes through Vitrode, and we have an in interesting occument of the decadendary results of sinte establishments for the promation, conveyed in a pleasing manner, and the relice one of the author formation, conveyed in a pleasing manner, and the relice one of the author are always given and true, and generally appropriate and inapply introduced.

The Metropalian Magazinan, Pebruary.

Many publications have recently issued from the press which once read in y be initiaside. The volume before us will be one of permanent interest, as it is one of valuable information and pleasing instruction. It is one of valuable information and pleasing instructions in the price of the control reader it will be information and pleasing instructions. The control reader is an work, a part from all adventitions, possessing great instruction of the produce it is an work, a part from all adventitions, possessing great instructions pleasing the produce it is an work to whole the following the first of the do wings of a philisophic poind, impued with a deep and wide spread with volume. His descriptions are always held she pointed, and, sometime, glowing and graphic. Of the truth of this the following extent that almost at random, will be a sufficient proof, and we have chose it has preference to many others equally or more attractive, because of the icrest which the present precedings in the Cantol of Youder of the work in the superior of the exciting — Another very interesting feature in the wark is, the rape appropriate historical lors which is beautifully word into the work is, the rape nervalive, giving it a failness and variety at once pleasing and instructive our sulfur, too, has drequently brought begraphical as of many tenture, the subject of his interestive, standing out as so many her ich, and thus avoiding anything like a wearisome monotory efficient of syless man, the control close our remarks without recerding our unqualited proper of the scholar and the unfortered will alike be benefited and gratified by portual. We cordially wish it a large circulation: we are sure if the serves it.

or of pullinder speed with and allow considered of the control of now lari

day (

O is re-

():

reduc

culan

Prin

til pe lilos Plati

Hi.

It w format.

it migh

Bord of lowing tisues:

governi governi governi governi alventurial de la pala de volta. A militaria de volta de la profita. A militaria de volta de volta de la profita d

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any person forwarding 3s. 3d. by Post-office order to the copies of the LEAGUE forwarded by post on the days of publication. Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with J. Gadsby, Newall's buildings, Manchester; and the LEAGUS may be had by order of any news agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, March 28, 1846.

From all quarters of the country we receive complaints of the depressed condition of trade and com merce, and of the diminution of employment in almost every branch of British industry. The gloom over all the markets continues to increase, and the chief cause of the depression is the uncertainty produced by the delays which have been interposed by the passing of the ministerial measure. Every one is weary of an interminable debate dragging is slow length slong without pliniting a single ner lacies. Voltaire is said to have lent the same of a work to a Prepal nobleman additional and the same of a work to a Prepal nobleman additional been all the time studying a continuous series. declared that he had found it very amusing; but added il me semble, qu'il se repete quelquefois. The protoctionists se repetent with a vengoance! Even though like Finch, they have to address empty benches, or like the maguanimous Borthwick, they have to encounter significant hints of impatience, they still continue to pour forth the same "weak, washy, overlasting flood," until the diluted stuff has quite sickened our stomachs. Now this may be sport to them, but is death to us. The business of the nation ought not to be suspended that lordlings should indulge in small talk, or agricultural orators prove that they differ from their sheep and oxen in possessing the faculty of speech, though in few other particulars. The leading morehants of Liverpool and Manchester have applied to the Premier to put an end to a dull farco, which renders the British legislature the mockery of Europe, and exposes the British empire to the perils of a commercial crisis.

It is true that the debate has rendered the old fallacies of monopoly uttorly odious and contemptible. Even the monopolist press has ceased to bound on the aspirants to oratorical fame, after the lamentable exhibitions which have taken place. But when it is manifest that we are merely witnessing a "talking against time," and that no other object is sought than factious delay, we must protest in the name of common sense, and common decency, against such a scandalous waste of public time, and such egregious trifling with public patienco.

We have had the "mad Parliament," the "pensioned Parliament," and the "puzzled Parliament," recorded in our annals, but the "prating Parliament," is worse than any of the three, and deserves to be indicted as a common nuisanco.

THE NEAPOLITAN TARIFF. (From the Manchester Guardian.)

We announced on Wednesday last, on the authority of a letter from Naples, the speedy issue of a new tariff, by which the duties on English manufacture would be considerably reduced, and the commercial intercourse between the two countries greatly extended. We have now the satisfaction of stating, that this first step by any foreign power, in imitation of the course pursued by the British Government, in the amelioration of fiscal and commercial legislation, has now been made. The royal decree announcing the new lariff was made public on the 11th inst.; and it establishes, as we expected, very considerable reductions in the duties on the leading articles of import from this country into the kingdom of the Two Sicilies.

The following particulars are derived from a letter received by a house in this town, dated Naples, March 12:

"The question of the tariff is at last decided; and yesterday the royal decree was made public."

The following are the reductions in the tariff on textile manufactures, as deduced from the amount of duty, as stated in Italian money:

The duty on cotton yarns is reduced one third.

On cotton cloths, grey and white shirtings, &c., the duty is reduced about one-half. On printed cottons, the reduction of duty will amount, to about fis. per piece, or one-half the existing duty.

On mixed cotton and worsted goods, and on worsteds, the reduction will amount to about 58. per piece.

On silk goods, and goods mixed with silk, the duty will be reduced one third.

We are indebted to another letter for the following particulars of the new duties on a few of the most important articles of export from this country. As the duties were stated only in Neapolitan monsures and money, which are rather difficult to reduce to Luglish denominations, we may have made some errors, and therefore give them both ways: Prints (including handkorchiofs), a per square yard.

Ileached cottons, 45 grant per canna =24d. per square yard.

Ileached cottons, 45 grant per canna =54d. per square yard.

Figured linens, 110 grant per canna =54d. per square yard.

Figured linens, 110 grant per canna =54d. per square yard.

Justians, velvetoens, &c., plain or striped, 170 grant per canna

July per square yard.

Cotton twist, 17 ducats per cantar =34d. per lb.

It was stated in the letter from which we derived our information last week, that the proposed reductions would prove a serious blow to the Noapolitan manufactures. As unight be supposed that these manufactures, for the benefit of which the Neapolitan government and people have sacrificed so much were of great importance we can the following Seed so much, were of great importance, we copy the fol-lowing notice of them from M'GREGOR'S Commercial Sta-

"We sorreely know of any country where the manufactures of warm specia, usions it be silks, and has adapted either to the senius of the people, or to local electronsectures. The kings and governments of the kingdom, alligred by specious statements said, not by Nospolitans, buy it finglish, French, and German electronsectures, have, however, sphoroed a system of commercial session, and other manufactures, for which the whole country has said dearly, and by which the contrababilits, foreigners as well as Nespolitans, have gained enormous and regular profits."

A more enumeration of factories on paper will appear im-locate to those who do not comprehend the comparative value of such couplishments, and of the objective success under which n Lancachire, Yorkshire, Statordehire, and Lancachire Constitution of the Say, Include State Lancachire and Lan lines, and hardware manufactures respectively, of the kingdom of the Two Sicilies. We exclude from this cutimate the ordinary coarse cloths made by the peasants for themselves, and the ordinary works of blacksmiths and other tradesmen."

All the preceding duties are subject to a discount of ten

THE PORTUGUESE TABLET.-We learn, by letters recoully received in this town, that a commission is sliting in Portugal, for the purpose of revising the commercial tariff of that kingdom. In what spirit, or with what particular views, this revision has been commonced, we have no means of judging. It can scarcely be intended to make more stringent that tariff which is rapidly ruining the wine growers of the Donro; and yet the present statesmen of Portugal are so far personally interested in manufactures, that we feel no confidence in their intentions to promote a more liberal commercial policy. Probably the lapse of a short time will develope their intentions.—Manchester Guardian.

A GAME LAW HEBO .- At the Leicestershire Assizes, ou Monday, two men named Rolleston and Ilales, were charged with being on land in the parish of Evington, during the night, armed, for the purpose of destroying game; and as the evidence was distinct, they were sentenced to twelve months, hard labour each. Fouldes, game-keeper to G.A.L. Kock, Esq., of Houghton, during his cross-examination, was asked by Mr. Kenneth Macaulcy, who defended the prisoners, how many offenders against the Game Laws he had taken? He does not appear to be more than 40 years old, if so much, buthis reply was, "Two hundred and twenty." This Mr. Keck is a stanneh monopolist, and rigid game preserver. He seldom resides at his seat here; and neither farmers nor labourers speak well of him, but the Petty Sessions are continually being occupied with his game cases, and the county is put to immense expense in their punishment of the of-

THE FUNDS.

	8at. Mar.21	Mon. Mar.23	Tors. Mar.24	WED. Mar.25	THUR. Mar.20	Fu. Mar. 27
Dank Stock					210	210
3 per Ct. Red. Ann.	1		l l	l I
3 per Ct. Con. Ann.	96]	1	1		V6	90
31por Ct. Rod. Ann	1 1	90	953	957
Long. An. Ex. 1860	l			103	ios	103
Cons. for Acct	[061	96	96	96	963
Exo. Bills, pm		25	23	27	28	30
Ind. Bds. nn. 1000//	٠ ا	28	30	30		28
Vonezuela 2 porCt.	44				41	•••
Do. deferred						::
Belgian 41 per Ct.]					::
Brazilian 5 per Ct.			 144 	-53
Chilian		993		001	1	•••
Columb. ex. Venez.						••
Danish			H:){-			::
Dutch 21 per Cent.		591		591	597	593
Dutch 4 per Cent.		94	043	947	94	01}
Mexican		31	31	314		ši'
Peruvian	••		"		[
Portug. conv.		573	571
Russian 5 per Centl		1084		1083	109	::
Spanish 5 per Ct.	251		1		251	251
Do. 3 par Ct. ex.dv.		37	364	364	30}	36
· · · · ·			_	_ `	•

MARKETS.

CORN MARKET.

Monday, March 23,-Of Wheat, Barley, and English Oats, the arrivals during the past week have been only moderate, nor are they much increased this morning. The choicest samples are they much increased this morning. The choicest samples of English Wheat fetch is, more money, but inferior samples are dull of sale and no dearer. The quantity of Foreign Wheat continues to increase; 26,782 qrs. have come to hand in the week: there is no alteration to notice in the value of it, but the trule is dull. Barley barely supports last week's prices, but quotations remain the same. About 17,400 qrs. of Irish Oats appear in the return, and in addition there are two or three vessels fresh in the return, and in addition there are two or three vessels fresh in today. Alterather the show of samples is large, but the ste up to-day. Altogether the show of samples is large, but the at-tendance of buyers is pretty good, and stocks being low in the hands of consumers and dealers, holders ask more money than last Monday, and the sales are at full prices; a very considerable business might be transacted at the rates of this day week, Boans and Peas are in short supply, and fully as dear

BRITISH. Por Imperia	One	irfar
Whoat, Essex Red 54 to 60 White	n ÅH	to fi
Kent, & Buffolk 49 58	86	G:
Lincolnabire & Yorkshire 47 64	54	/02
Brotch	-	/04
Oats, Lincolnshire & Yorkshire Feed	.24	21
DittoDittoIslack	22	2.7
DittoDitto,PolandsNew	2.1	20
Scotch Food	ΩH.	20
Limoriak	94	00
DittoFine Now 27 20Old Fine	noi	10
Cork	.24
Waterford, Youghal, & Cork Black	.21	23
8)igo	.92	24
Guiway	. 10	Ξi
Barloy	VA	33
1 1 1 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2	SH	40
Liarrow 33 37
_ Bracil
Peas, White Dollers Dollers	.38	42
Groy3032	.32	34
Flour, Town-madenor sack of 280 lbs	.45	60
Norfolk and Suffolk	.49	46

FOREION. PREB. 1	N BO	ND.
Wheat, Dantzig, high mixed	Quar
Double in Ru miredia		ØU
Rostook	60	84
Glottin	844
Mancherette 60 89	6 0	-01-
	60 60 48

	Harrow	11	37	• • • • • • •			70
	Bracil.	90	"	• • • • • • •	• • • • •	• •
Dana	William	09	1 0,		• • • • •	• •
reun,	White			gonera.	• • • • •	38	42
	3roy30	32		viebio .		32	34
r iour	Town mule	рс	r saok	of $80 l	ba	45	- 60
	Norfolk and Buffol	k				43	46
			•
	•	LOKEI	UN.		REE.	INI	GKD.
1101		`  		Per Im	porta	l Qua	ırtor.
M Doği	, Dantzig, high mix	٠		68	lo 66	64	60
	Rostook				60	50	84
	Stotlin	*		69	88 -	-60-	ōi-
	Humburgh			62	87		. 62
	Odeses				. ••.	48	` & 0
	Odessa Polish	•••••		• • • • •		60
	Busalan		• • • • • •	• • • •		00	61

	Ditto		rou	,			٠.
	Spanish			54	60		٠.,
	Manyallo			6 6 ·	44
	Augurallab			60	69	٠.
Barley	Origiting			97	28
	Distilling			20	Жĭ	•
Oats. A	ropassion			9.4	26	٠.
. D	uniah						\ \
	redish	*******
					31
- 1	alaynd		* * * * * * *	*	٠.
, 12	iidi Jeed					90 −	81
	Brance				27	90	20
	Polanda				20	24	20
	P) 64			29
Berring.	200 - 40 - 40			114	30		٠.
THA	W. 100	a v nje sije si sije i A A a Marka sije sije sije	- e-e - e - e	हर चंद्र	. –,-		, I
411 2	III Palanau			44			L
	- 10 6 6 6 6 6 6 6 6 6 6 6 6 6 6 6 6 6 6	(10° 124 1	ro en fe a	115		٠., ٠.		•		•

	and the same of the same of the same of Flour, Canada, fresh, p	er barrel o	f 190 lbs	. 34 - 36
Unicoa Dialos			1341 1400	28 30
2/4UV#1H	A
Autumian. Dor M	ack of Who	11.
Account of CORN to	n milional		**
Account of OORN, &co	M 4 WILL ILLIO,	bothdays	rtof Lond Inchiatos	lon, from
WILLES	Barley.	Cate.	Beans.	Peas
English 5075	3251	6352	1016
Projek 0	493	814	1010	183
Irlah			••
Wannier and		17433	1
Foreign 96789		duó	1.100

Flour, 4009 enoke; 4387 barrols. PRIDAY, MARCH 27.-There has been again a short app-Friday, March 27.—There has been again a short supply of every kind of Grain since Monday: notwithstanding this, the trade generally has been for from brisk. The demand for English Wheat is fully equal to the supply; and the statement made by the Duke of Wellington in the house last night, that the Corn Bill will not come before the Lords before the coul of April, makes holders of fine dry Wheat firm at rather over Monday's prices. In Bouded Wheat there was more passing on Wednesday than for some time before: but to-day the demand is not quite so brisk. There is no alteration to notice in the Barley trade. A shilling more money than on Monday is asked for Oats, and in some instances is obtained: but for the most part an advance of more than 6d, cannot be made. Hellers at smaller improvement have done a very fair business. Beans and Pens the same as on Monday. A corpo of Indian Corn has been sold to day at 22s., for shipment to Ireland. There was no alteration in the duties yesterlay.

Account of CORN, &c., arrived in the Port of Landen for

Account of CORN, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 21rd of March to the 22th of March Lord Inch.

one water of thirth	a to the 3/111 (Reinsiyo
What] English, [lrish.	Foreign.
Wheat	2190		0020
Durkly	i luun :	.,	111.40
Outu	21(0)	1900	••
	Mane 1500 -

| LONDON AVERAGES for the Week ending March 24, 1846, | Qrs. | Price. | Qrs. | Price. | Qrs. | Price. | Qrs. | Price. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Qrs. | Q Wheat ... 4381 58s, 5d, 8ye ... Burley ... 1351 25s, 8d, Peus ...

IMPERIAL AVERAGES, Weeks ending Whout, Barley, Outs, Ryo, Beaus, Pease s. d. s

Aggregate Average of the Six Weeks, Wheat, 54s. 9d.; Barley, 29s. 9d.; Oats, 21s. 9d.; Ryo, 33s. 4d.; Boans, 34s. 8d.;

Pour, 513, 501.

Duty. Whoat, 18s. 0d.; Bariov, 9s. 001.; 9s. 6d.; Boans, 8s. 6d.; Pous, 8s. 0d.

Stock of Corn in Bond, Mar. 5, 1846.
Whoat. Barley. Oats. Ryo: Boans. Pous.

Cwts. In London, 442560 17200 61192 Unit, King, 1138050 82010 96983 MRAT MARKET

Trade upon the whole dull, although prices were maintained,

Prime Beef. 48 6d to 38 4d | Veal, from . 58 0d to 18 3d | Plain, or inferior Beef. 38 2d to 28 10d | Large, or inferior Beef. . . 38 2d to 28 4d | rior Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Mutton 48 6d to 48 4d | rior Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Mutton 48 6d to 48 4d | rior Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Mutton 48 6d to 48 4d | rior Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Mutton 48 6d to 48 4d | rior Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Mutton 48 6d to 48 4d | rior Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Mutton 48 6d to 48 4d | rior Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Mutton 48 6d to 48 4d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Mutton 48 6d to 48 4d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | Prime Pork . . 38 8d to 38 0d | P

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

FRIDAY, MARCH 20.

James Kirkup, Rotherhithe, coal merchant. [Mr. Hodgson, Brond street buildings.

William Collins, Hugsby, Warwick, Juilor. [Mr. Burbidge, Hutton garden.

Hatton garden.
James Bryant, Mayfield, Sussex, draper. [Mesera, Seles and Turner, Aldermanbury.
James Harris, Croydon, Surrey, clothier. [Mr. Jacobs, Winchester-buildings, Great Winchester street.
Henry Ward, Wilford mill, Gloucestershire, paper manufacturne. J Mr. Rand Lamis.

turer. [Mr. Bond, Leeds. William Stone, Wood street, he man. [Mr. Lloyd, Milk street, Cheapside.

Richard Ellison and John Goodworth, Barnsley, Yorkshire, Me Rond, Leeds.

Richard Ellison and John Gomworth, Barnagey, Forksmire, linen manufacturers. [Mr. Bond, Leeds.] Joseph Whalley and Charlos Whalley, Liverpool, reed men. [Mr. Neal, Liverpool.] Richard Barnes, Preston Leigh, Gloucestershire, coal dealer.

Richard Barnes, Freston Lergis, Croacted Street, Messex, Newman and Co., Cheltenham.
Cornelius Brady, Ashton, Birmingham, commission agent.
[Mr. Harding, Birmingham.
Richard Edwards, Huddersfield, woollen draper. [Mr. Bond,

SGOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS,
Thomas Fairbairn, Edinburgh, banker.
William Davison, Glasgow, smith.
Jamos Sharp and John Thompson, Moadowside, Lana kehire, alica winters.

calico printers.

John Cromie, Glasgow, baker.

BANKRUPTH,

J. Olro, Moorgate-street, City, morehant. [Mr. Peile, Great Winchester-street. C. H. Waters, Queen's row, Pimilico, dealer in pictures. [Mr. Buckleten Hanton Control

C. H. Waters, Queen's row, Finnico, dealer in pictory, 1990.
Burbidge, Hatton Garden.
J. Thompson, Norwich, groner. [Mr. Storcy, Gray's lime-place.
W. Morphew, Sevenouks, Kont, druper. [Messis. Re'ed and Langford, Priday street, Cheapside.
J. Perkins, North-placo, Gray's finn lane, jeweller. [Mr. Clark, Finsbury-place.
Thomps Polyson. Warwick-court, Holborn, money-scrivener.

Finshiry-place.
Thomas Pelmon, Warwick-court, Holborn, money-scrivenor.
[Mossrs. Bell and. Co., Bow Churchyard, Choapside.
J. Brett, Luton, Bedfordshire, sheep salesman. [Mr. Wilkinson, Nicholas-lank, Lombard-street.
R. Ellis, Richmond-street, Soho, carpenter. [Mossrs. Carlon and Haynes, Palace-chambers, St. James's street.
A. B. Innell and A. Cookes, Little Queen street, Holborn, varmish, manufactures. [Mr. Stuart New inn. Strand.

and Haynes, Palace-chambers, St. James's street.

A. B. Innell and A. Cookes, Little Queen street, Holborn, varnish manufacturers. [Mr. Stimrt. New inn. Birand.

M. Cublit, High Holborn, bullder. [Messes. Smith, Houthampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

G. Prince, Romey, Hampshire, wine-merchent. [Messes. Swith watson and Co., Falcon-square.

W. Bull, Addle-street, City, cloth morehant. [Messes. Sudlow and Co., Chancery-lane.

J. Riding and J. Fielding, Layland, Lancashire, cotton manufacturers. [Messes. Milho and Co., Temple.

J. Rishton, Hoddlesden, Lancashire, cotton-spinner. [Mr. Fox, Kinsbury-circus.

J. Gibson, Manchester, vaterinary aurgaon. [Messes. Williamson and Hill, Vernlam-buildings, Orays Inn.

J. Riddall Wood. Manchester, varnish malfox, Manchester, [Messes. Milno and Co., Temple.

J. Taylor, Herstori, grover. [Mr. Grestwood, Birmingham. M. Smith. Birmingham, iron-founder. [Mosses. Smith and Co., Balloyd-row, Philable, draper. [Misses. Smith and Co., Balloyd-row, Philable, draper. [Misses. Smith and Co., Balloyd-row, Philable, draper. [Misses. Smith and Go., Balloyd-row, Philable, draper. [Misses. Misses. n the flat instant will be published on the distinct will be published on the distinct of the flat of Pontanian.

8. Shelches of Literary Life. Bu. 1. Any pathy Goolly Gentland, London: Headbury and Evans, 60, Float-street.

OLIVER TWIST. By CHARLER DICKENS, Eaq. With Illustrations by George Cruikshack, and the latest Corrections and Alterations of the Author No. 4 will be published on the Sits inst., price is. To be completed in Ten Mumbers.

London: Published for the Author, by Bradbury and Hvans, 80, Pleet-street, and Whitefriam.

DOUGLAS JERROLD'S SHILLING MAGAZINE (for April), will contain the continuation of the Police's History of Polices and Mr. JAMBS, Chapters XXIII., XXIV., and XXV., illustrated with Two Richings by Leech.

The Hadgelog Latters, and various other Contributions.

London: Published at the Punch Office, 85, Picet-street.

On the 3ist of March will be published, No. IV., price 6d., of the LMANACK OF THE MONTH. A Review of Brergthing and Everybody. Edited by Gilbert Absort a Brekett. Principal Contents of the April Number—Home Account of April, with an illustration by R. Doyle. Railway Committees of the Month, with an illustration by R. Doyle. The Ornauders at Drury Lanc, with 5 illustrations by R. Doyle. The Content Parliament Debate on Supplies. The legger on Morseback. The Romance of Advertising. Portrait (Jubs, with an illustration by R. Doyle. The Plague of Dwarfs, with an illustration by R. Doyle. The Plague of Dwarfs, with an illustration by R. Doyle. So Original Articles, and 13 illustrations.

With a Portrait of Mr. W. Harrison as Hohemond.

Lond mr. Published at the Punch Office, 8), Ficet-street.

THE TINY LIBRARY—A Weekly Journal for the Entertainment and Instruction of Children and Young Persons, with Illustrative Engravings, Price One Penny. No. IV., Saturday, March 28, 1846; and No. V., Supplement of Interesting Generactes of the Month, with Illustrations. expressly suffed for the perusal of Young Persons. Part I. Just published, price Stapence.
Landon: C. Wood and Co., Poppin's court, Pleet street; and all Booksellers and Newsyconders.

The Sixth Builion, with 155 Pigures, price 10s. 8d.,

WITHERING'S SYSTEMATIC ARRANGEMENT of Builtish Plants, according to the Linnuan System. Corrected and Condensed; preceded by Instructions adapted for persons commencing the Study of Butany; and an Appendix containing the arrangement of the Genera according to the Natural method. By Professor Macordinary, L.D., Marischal College, Aberdeen
This work comprises descriptions of all the Plowering Plants and the Perm found in the British Island, so full as to enable the young botanist to determine every species that may come in his way, without the assistmace of others.

uctormine ever unce of others.

MACOIT.T.IVRAYE MANUAL OF GEOTOGY. Record Edition, with Woodcuts and coloured Geological Map of the British Islands. Price 4s 4d. "It forms the very best companion which the young geologist can take with him in his rambles." Editaburgh Witness. Adam Scott (late Scott and Webster), Charterhouse square.

Just published, price 2s. 6d.

TME EDUCATION OF TASTE. A Series of Lectures. By WILLIAM MACCALL, Author of "The 'Agents of Civilisation."

Omtionis: —1. Introductory—2 The Nature of Taste—3. The Cultivation of Taste—4. Taste and Religion—3. Taste and Morality—0. Taste and Politics—7. Taste and Manners—8. Concluding Remarks
By the same Author, price id.,
THE CREED OP A MAN. A Summary of the System of Individualism.

With Introductory Maxims.
Chapman, Brothers, 121, Newgate street

Dr. itabert Culverwell's Guide to Health and Long Life.

(30) pages, pocket volume, price is., by post, is. 6d.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, and 'AVOID; with Diet Tables for all Complaints. By R. J. Curvanwall, M. D. M. R.C.S., L. A. C. & Contents:—How to insure perfect digestion, tranquil ferlings, a good night a rest, a clear head, and a contented nilid. By an observance of the instructions herein contained, the feeble, the nervously delicate, even to the most shattered constitution, may acquire the greatest amount of physical happiness, and reach in health the full period of life allotted to man. To be had of Aberwood, 23, Paternoster-row, and all Hooksellers, or direct from the Author. 21, Arandel-street, Strand, who may be advised with on these matters daily till 3; evenings, 7 till 9.

Price Six Shillings.

COMPENSATION to the People for Aristocratic Food Laws and Unfair Taxation; or, the Influence of Aristocracles on the Condition of Nations. By J. M. A. 1877 us., Esq.
London: Fisher, Son, and Co.; and all Booksellers.

CORNER'S NEW HISTORICAL WORKS, for School and Pamily Reading.

Mach History, commencing with the earliest authentic records, is contimued to the present time, faithfully pourtraying, also, the Manners, Custonus, and States of Civilisation of the People.

will a will be the total of civiliantion of the	1.60	Die.
•		1	liound with					Without
f .		the Questions.						Questions
Bugland and Wales; five fine plates,	and		-	48.			- working to with a mica! that, this blatter	RIIG	map,	١.		-	•	•		64.
Ireland, three fine plates, and map	•	•		30.	•		٠.	24.	64.
Scotland, three fine plates, and map	-	•	•	34	•			28.	64.
France, three fine plates, and map		•		34.		-		20.	64.
Spain and Portugal, three plates, and	d ma	D		3n.		•		24.	64.
Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, wi	thtw	o fine	• wh	ates	and	mar	· '-	24.	6d.
Gormany and the German Empire, 3	dne	plate		nd n	MD	-		30.
Tu key and the Ottoman Empire; 36	ne n	ates.	and	linn	n'				64.
Poland and Itussia, with three fine pi	inten	ned i	1100)	٠.				6d.
Italy and switzerland, three fine plan	tes. n	nd m	AD.						6d.
Holland and Belgium, with two fine	dater	. and	iiin	n					ōā.
The object of these works peculing		ilend t	0.5	char	ile n	nd F	m
to furnish the reader with a faithful	illat	ort of	l on	ch N	int fe	in li	ntor	unat with an accurate account of the Rel	lylon	Cons			inel.		('60		ior.

with an accumic account of the Religion. Customs, National Characteristics, thate of Civilisation, and Domestic Habits of the people, in various periods of their history—to attract the attention of the rising generation by purity of language and clearness of details and thus render easy and pleasant the attainment of a knowledge of the leading events of history.

Landon: Doan and Co., Threadneedle-street; and, by order, of all Booksellers.

Library, 19, Holles street.

BULL'S NEW SYSTEM FOR FAMILIES AND BOOK SOCIETIES.
Families paying £6 is the year have all the New and Standard Works as they appear, 12 volumes at a time in lown, or 24 in the chuntry. Cata logdes and boxes, free of expense, and Two Guineas' worth of the New Books to koop, at the end of each year.
The New Library Circular, with full particulars, sent gratis and post free, on application, enclosing two stamps, to Mr. Bull, Librarian, 19, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, London:
Also Bull's New Duplicate Catalogue of Popular works withdrawn from the Library, at very reduced prices, sent tourders enclosing one stamp.

CITATIONERY, Dressing-Cases, Travelling Writingdesks, Bryelope Cases, Ladies Companions, Portfolios, and Blotting books, Instands. Gold and Hilver ever pointed Profit cases. Pearl and Ivory Tablets, Cutlery, &c.; Bibles and Prayers in plain and elegant bindings. Name plate engraved for 2s. 6d.; 100 best cards, 2s. 6d.; superfine letter paper from 5s. the ream; note paper, from 2s. the ream; with every article of stationery, of the best quality and lowest prices.—At LIM-Billing, 143, Strand, facing Catherine-street. Envelopes, 6d., Bd., and Is. the hundred.

LITHUORAPHY. ESSRS. MACLURE, MACDONALD, and MAC-ESSRS. MACLURE, MACDUNALD, and MACORRIGH. General Lithographers, beg to call attention to a peculiar feature, in their system of conducting business: namely, their having a large and permanent staff of Assistants, in all the varied departments of the Art, on the promises; which arrangement they submit gives a force and effect to immediate production unattainable by other means, and which is obviously of great advantage to those who may require their services, independent altogether of the excellency of their work.

London Establishment, Sarille House, 6, Leicester Equare; Liverpool Statellishment, 18, Penwick Street; Glasgow Establishment, 57, Buchanan Street.

Vacancies for two Pupils; one in Writing, the other in the Artistical Matienal Tableau of Public Interest, which has been might Months in Preparation. Preparation.

Primes Albert encessing their l'oure, consisting of the Queen and Primes Albert encessing their l'our tovely Children. The Orouging Consisting by Mathews Is used in the Models and Portraiture by Mr. F. Tusmud, is now added to the Collection.

As Albert entreit, Portpan-agare,

The Mathews St. the best exhibitions in the metropolis."—These, the Consistency, i.e., Napoleon Moome, ed. Open from 11 till 4; and from ERGANTILE LIFE—It has been remarked by intellined foreigners that cause. Baldines groutly revail in this country, this as expans, that the unwearly application to adventible pursuits contributes by a first the unwearly application to adventible pursuits contributes by a first the unwearly application to adventible pursuits of the first part restrictive more faceded, that pursuits here is an street parameter to whom artificial appliances have been so eminently serviceable. The numerous cases of recovery of the bair after having fadian off, or partial baldiness, are truly attouishing. The testinomials of the college of OLDRIDOE'S BALM OF COLVALITA place its power and virtues beyond all doubt or eavil; is, ed., de., and its, per bottle. No other priges are grounde.—Uldridge's Balm, 1, Wellingtonstreet, the speed house from the Straud.

THE NATIONAL PROVIDENT

THE NATIONAL PROVIDENT BUILDING MCCISTY and RAVINGS PUND.

Offices, Salvador House, No. 200, Bishopsgate-street.

Dines ave.

Mr. P. W. Hinsch, Old Ford Road, Chairman.

Mr. E. A. Masserman, R. New Gloucester-st., Hoston, Deputy-Chairman.

Mr. Hiddebruid Philose, Queen's-road Daiston,
Mr. Alfred Slator, 2, Heer-lane, Great Tower-street.

Mr. J. Hoberts, 4 Old-street, St. Luke's
Mr. Wm. Blockins, I warriney-terrace, Kingsland.

Mr. Wm. House, 31, Fontherstone street, City-road.

Mr. John Michardson, 5, Stowed street, Philaifields.

Mr. Thomas Frankling Kicholl, 39, Herostord st., Walworth.

Mr. John Maxey, 134, Bishopsgate-street-without.

Mr. Edwin Hooke, Orchard-lane, Indi's Pond, Islington.

Mr. Wm. Mercer, 3, Union-place, Clapham rise.

The distinguished success attending this Society (sithough yet in its infancy) is attributable to the advantageous and equitable plan on which it is based.

is imach.

Among other prominent features it should be observed that there is

No fine on transfers.

No fine on withdrawais.

No bidding of premiums for advances on shares.

No redemption fee.

Interest is allowed on the payments, shareholders are assisted to purchase property at nuctions, and every facility is now offered to the frugal chasses to carry out the real objects which limiting Societies were intended to accomplish.

classes to carry out the real objects which all the compilals.

An early application for Shares and advances is desirable.

Office hours daily 5 to 8 p.m.
The Pourth Paulic Meeting will take place at the Assembly Rooms, Theobold's Road, Red Lion square, Holborn, on Wednesday next, the lat day of April, at 7 o clock p m. precisely, for the purpose of fully explaining the objects of the Company, and enrolling Shareholders.

139 Order, By Order, GRANVILLE W. LEWIS, Secretary.

Ry Crier,

Granville W. Lewis, Secretary.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN LANDLORD.

SECOND BRITISH BUILDING AND INVESTMENT COMPANY. Enrolled.

Established on Macarthur's Simplified and Improved Plan.

Monthly Ruberription, 10s per Share.

No Redemption Pee.

Office, 8, 1vy. Lane, 8t. Paul's, London.

Hours, 16 till 4.

Commenced in March, 1810.

TRUSTES.

William Anderson, M.R.C.S., 12, Chadwell street, Myddleton-aquare.

William Farmer, 20, Charlotto-terrace, Isarusbury-road, Islington.

Lamas Hallsy, Eliborton-square, Islington.

Thomas Rieghard, 6, Gainsford-place, Ilarusbury-road.

All letters should be directed to "The Recond British Building and Investment Company," 3, 1vy-lane, 8t. Paul's, London.

The British Building and Investment Company was commenced on the 4th September, 1845, in five months enrolled 1600 Shares, and advanced about £6000 to its Shareholders for the purchaso of property. Such success is unprecedented in the annuals of Building Societies.

At a Public Meeting, at which upwards of 1100 persons were prosent, held at the London Mechanics' institution, on Tucsday, 17th Feb., 1846, Mr. W. Farmer, in the chair, the fellowing Resolutions were eartied manilmously: Moved by Mr. Beal, seconded by Mr. Loveloy,—That this meeting highly approves of the plan on which the Second British Building and Investment Company is established; and cordially recommends it to the public as being based on equal justice to all, and providing for the members, desirous of purchasing property, the greatest advantages consistent with security to the whole body of members.

Moved by Mr. Alexander, acconded by Mr. Thomas—That this moeting eossiders the conduct of the Directors, in waiving their right to receive or chim any advance from the Company during thefire 12 months, as highly honoricable, and described and improved the plan on which Building Societies to be a decided improvement."—Weekly Dispatch

"We hold Macarthur's pinn for forming Huilding Societies to be a decided improvement."—Weekly Dispatch

"The Prospectus Rever

JONES'S £4. 48. SILVER LEVER WATCHES warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week, are selling at the Manufactory, 858, Strand, opposite Somerset-house. They combine the truth of a mathematical instrument with the elegance of an ornament of taste. On receipt of a Post-office order for is, above the price, a Watch will be sent free to any part of the kingdom. Read Jones's "Sketch of Watch Work," sent free for a 2d. stamp

DEANE'S TWO-HOLE BLACK PENS were among the first brought out, and have maintained their pre-eminence ever alone. Busides being used by the Morchants and Bankers of London, together with the gentlemen of the Stock Exchange, these Pens are also pationized by Her Majesty's Judges, and by a large number of the Clergy. Deane's Two hole Black Pens are especially adapted for continuous writing, their clasticity affording an agreeable case, and their attempth insuring the same character of writing for a long period together. Steel Pen and Cutlery Department of Deane's Warehouse, show Rooms, and Manufactories, opening to the Monument, 40, King William Street, London Bridge.

LUXURY IN SHAVING JOHN GOSNELL and CO.'S AMBROSIAL SHAVING OHN GOSNELL and CO.'S AMBROSIAL SHAVING CREAM (Patronised by Prince Albert). This inestinable Cream possesses all the good qualities of the Finest Naples Boap, without the disagreeable smell inerparable from that article in a genuine state. It is of a white early silvery appearance, produces a creamy lather, which will not dry on the face, and emits in use the delightful flavour of the almond.

In Pots, price 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., &c.

Perfumérs to her Majesty, 12. Three King-court, Lombard-street, London. Manufacturers of Combs and Brushes of the best quality, and on the most approved principles.

1) ICHLY CUT GLASS CHANDELIERS in great variety of Elegant and Original Dosigns, from £10 upwards; a very choice stock of richly cut glass single-light lustres, from 17a per pair upwards; double-light girandoles, from £5 per pair, upwards; planpforte and table lights; originaved and clegantly-cut decenters, wine glasses, tumblers, goblets, and every description of Table Glass of the newest and richost patterns, at equally reasonable prices. Also, a very extensive and superior stock of flohenian, French, and Venetian Glass, just imported. At F. and C. OSLER'S London Warehouse, 44, Oxford-street, near Berners-street. Manufactory, Broad-street, Birmingham. Brublished, 1807. Whole-sale and export orders executed on the lowest terms

TENDERS, STOVES, and FIRE-IRONS.—The largest assortment of Stoves and Fenders, as well as General Iron-mongery, in the world, is now on Sale at WILLIAM S. BURTON'S (later RIPPON and BURTON'S (later RIPPON and BURTON'S (later) and Brought of Stoves and Fenders, as well as General Iron-mongery, in the world, is now on Sale at WILLIAM S. BURTON'S (later RIPPON and BURTON'S (later RIPPON and BURTON'S (later) and the second of the second

The hair is becoming thin and falling off, the only effectual remedy, besides shaving the head, is the use of the two above named articles, applied alternately—the botanic waier to deemee the roots from sour, and as a stimulant, and the bear's greate of the two above named articles, applied alternately—the botanic waier to deemee the roots from sour, and as a stimulant, and the bear's greate for responsing and preserving the hair, Mr. Callin's account of the quantity used, and the length of hair obtained by append of the North American Indians, would be a sufficient answer.—ROSS and SONS, 112 and 180, bishopsgate-street, who first introduced the use of bear's greate in this country, and who fat and all the animals, redemined the public to purchase none other best with the animals, redemined the public to purchase none other best with the application and address printed on the pot, or the chances are they are excitating a spirious article. All vegetable oils applied to the hair are write that wellows.

MUMBER ONE, ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYADD As real sances not helped by saise, nor injured by the fine LACK TAX, at 4s. d. por is, sold by DARIN and COMPANIES popularity saidly to be intrinsic examines.

Orders from the country for guarded Carriage Pres.

BELLING OFF CARPETS.

UUK, KENT, and CUMMING, bog to interest to the position of the position

OUTFITS to AUSTRALIA, INDIA, and the COLO-NIES. Parties leaving England will find it to their savages a purchase their Outlits at E. J. MONNERY and CO. B. 103. Pendaure of City, where a large assortment of Shirts, Clothing, Blosiery, Gange Under Shirts, &c., adapted for onch particular colony, as well as for its age, is kept ready for immediate use, and at prices far more reasonable for usually sharged for the same articles. Blodding, Military Accountements, Cabin and Camp Puraliture effersy description. Lists, with Prices affixed, forwarded by post.

STOOPING of the SHOULDERS and CONTRACTION of the CHEST are entirely prevented, and gently and effects of removed in Youth and Ladles and Gentlemen, by the occasional may of improved Risatic Chest Expander, which is light, simple cash empty outwardly or invisibly, without any uncomfortable rearming, or important to exercise. Sout per post, by Mr. A. Birnon, Bole Manufacture of Proprietor, 40, Tavistock-street, Covent Garden, London, or full parties are on receiving a postage stamp.

DEDUCTION OF DITTY ON FIRENCH BRANDY.

L.—COGNAC BRANDY, like the wine from which it is obtained, acquires age for its perfection; when old, it is the best and mast wholese he of spirits, but, when new, it is deficient in its good and medicinal supporties; while, if adulterated with British Brandy, these valuable properlies are lost, and, from a generous and invigorating cordial, it is changed his a coarse and inflammatory spirit.

The great difficulty of procuring good genuine old Cognac Brandy, and the high duty charged upon it, have hitherto prevented many perms from using it; but now that a good and genuine articlo may be classed and at a nuch more moderate rate, it is natural to expect as great larged in the consumption.

To meet this demand Mr. L. B. Shioner has determined to avail kinself of his long and intimate acquaintance with the Brandy Trade as as importer. He holds the inspect stock of Cognac Brandy, pale and seven, in this country, and, in accordance with the wishes and recommendation of his numerous friends, he has taken out a Wholmany Inches Perfect Licanea, which anables him to dispose of it. In quantifies of symmetry and a produce a limported of the numerous friends, he has taken out a Wholmany Inches Perfect and anables him to dispose of it. In quantifies of symmetry and Brandy, genuine as imported and carefully selected.

To those who know him, he feels assured that this pledge will be attended by the continuation of the superior quality of his Brandy. To strangers, who can discriminate the soft and faggent areas of pure and matured Cognac from the counter, and frequently satisficance upon their judgment in favour of the superior quality of his Brandy.

Mr. Seignette begs also to offer to the Public the best Hollands Cenera Brandy.

Mr. Acignette begs also to offer to the Public the best Hollands Ocasus that can be imported.
Prices for Cash on Delivery, in quantities not less than two gallons, are—21s per gallon for best Brown Cogane Brandy.
20s best Pule ditto.
20s "best Ocusea (Hollands).
A liberal Allowance to the Teade, to whom Mr. Seignette takes the sportunity of offering his Brandies and Geneva in bond at current market prices.

Agents wanted for Town and Country: persons of respectability may apply, per letter only, at the Office, 20 & 14, Mincing Lano, City.

TIEAL and SON'S LIST of BEDDING, containing a full description of weights, sizes, and prices, by which purchasers are enabled to judge the articles that are best suited to make a good set at ledding. Sent free, by post, on application to their establishment.—Healths, Fenther Dressers and Medding Manufacturers, 106, Tottopham-court-roat, DALDNESS.—The reproductive powers of ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL are constantly and surprisingly shows is easily indices of the Head from whatsoever cause acising (proved by auserost testimonials open for inspection at the Proprietors), in chelling, marringly, from the latent stem the active progression of vitality, so had a numerous instances where other specifics have been tried in vals. Obstanting in full plenitude of beauty the permanent graces and utilities of nature.

wrapper of each genuice bottle.

Sold by them at 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

.. All others are FRAUDULENT IMITATIONS!

IM OPEN

'M O P F. N! I 'M O P R N

A SONG OF TRIUMPH

FROM THE NEW RESTABLESHMENT.

I'm open! I'm open! in all my display!

The glory of trade, and the pride of my day!

I'm open in vastness and splendour; and none
Can equal the warehouse of MOBBS and SON.

Ray, ve who have seen me triumphantly rise,
If I moved not your hearts with a thrill of surprise;
Ray, say what you thought when in wonder you cast
Your eyes on my building—so costly—so vast!
And say what you felt when you heard the glad shout
In honour of MOBBS—within and without!

Proclaim my vast triumphe wherever you go.
That others may see, and that others may know.

I'm open! I'm open! but not to delude
With empty attraction and vain magnitude!

I'm open to publish what wonders are done
Hy my dauntiese projectors. B. MOSRS and RON.

My vastness of building is nought but a proof
Of vast speculations beneath my wide roof.
The extent of my houses proclaims, you must know,
Extensive advantage to high and to low.

Extensive advantage to high and to low.

Extensive advantage to high and to low.

Extensive advantage to high that a proof
On the glittering globes of each bright chandelle.

On the glittering globes of each bright chandelle.

On the glittering globes of each bright chandelle.

On the glittering globes of each bright chandelle.

The glasses, which double all objects reflected,
Ryry room which the monarch-like warehouse dis
Ryry room which the monarch-like warehouse dis
Ryry room which the monarch-like warehouse dis
Whose styles and materials all will admire.

I'm open i'm open i well stord with stiffe
Whose styles and materials all will admire.

I'm open with actiers whose slegant tasts

Has nothing defective, and nothing muslaced.

I'm open to do more than over I've done—

I'm open to do more than over I've done—

I'm open to do more than over I've done—

I'm open to do more than over I've done—

I'm open to do more than over I've done—

I'm open to do more than over I've done—

I'm open to do more than over I've done—

I'm open to do none than ove

And while such is the cash I shall level by and And while such is the cash I shall level by an IMPORTANT ANNOUNCHMENT.

A new work, suitled "Habiliment Hall," with self-measurement, may be had on application, or far wheel Mourning to any amount can be had at five minutes' moter, ing prices:

Men's finite, dress coat, rest, and trousers

Ditto, lacket, vast, and trousers

Turourant. Any article parchased or ordered, is a financed, or the money returned.

Osentes. B. MOSER and Son, Tallets, wholeses are appreciately opposite the Graytes.

Ocurron. E. Mose and Son and So 1 1

THE LEAGUE.

No. 132.—Vol. III.]

SATURDAY, APRIL 4, 1846.

[3d.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND.

All Subscribers of L1 and upwards to the LERSOUN FUND will be entitled to, and receive, a copy weekly of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have torwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the offices of THE LEAGUE, Newall's buildings, Manchester, or 67, Fleet-street, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission o gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council of the League would also suggest to their friends in the country the importance of transmitting their copies of THE LEAGUE newspaper, after perusal, to such parties (more especially furmers) as may be either hostile or indifferent to the question of Free Trade:

> By order of the Council, JOSEPH HICKIN, Secretary.

THE NEW PROGRAMME OF ENGLISH STATESMANSHIP.

"My object has been to mitigate monopoly-to increase he demand for industry—to remove restrictions upon conmerce—to equalise the burdens of taxation—to ameliorate the condition of those who labour."—Sir Robert Peel's Speech of March 27, 1840.

In another part of our paper we give the admirably carnest and powerful speeches with which, on the night of yesterday week, Sir Robert Peel and Sir James Graham terminated the otherwise weary and unprofitable debate on the second reading of the Corn Bill. When we say, that we have rarely felt equal gratification in placing upon record any spoken words of public men, we are confident that we only express the sentiments with which those speeches have already been read by many thousands of our countrymen, and will be read again and again by all who are capable of appreciating clearness of thought, generosity of feeling, and manly force of uttorance, and who know the immense value of official advocacy in giving diffusion and permanence to sound principles. The importance of those two speeches cannot possibly/ be over-rated. The doctrines expounded by the Ministerial champions of industrial freedom may be already sufficiently familiar to a large portion of the public-but they are comparatively new to a vast number of persons in the ruling and influential classes of English society, to whose minds economical truth has only begun to find access since it has borne the stamp of official authority. It is most cheering to contemplate the wide and rapid diffusion ensured to sound principles of social and political science, when thus enunciated from a quarter where words are "great facts"-where the thought of the individual has power to shape itself into national enactment, and exerts a sensible sway over the opinions and the destinies of the mass of mankind.

The characteristic feature of the two ministerial speeches of last week is the sympathy they evince with the wants and interests of the industrious classes, and the broad, hearty recognition of worklog men's rights, as constituting a governing elethat in the deliberations of the legislator, and the falloy of the statesman. The Premier and the Home Secretary show that they understand and stheir true position as champions, in this grand mal controversy, of the rights of the many That the saltah and incolent aggressions of the liberaries that a kaifinter and provide wanto the coledar grace of spirit worthy of men who are fighting the battle of over-taxed and "poculiarly-burdened" labour, against titled, priviloged, and usurping idleness, they holdly identify thomselves with the policy that would lighten the poor man's toils, untax his hunger, multiply his resources, and widen his command over the means of comfort, enjoyment, and improvement. This is their Cabinet question-"TO MITIGATE MONOPOLY, TO INCREASE THE DE-MAXD' FOR INDUSTRY, TO REMOVE RESTRICTIONS UPON COMMERCE, TO EQUALISE THE BURDENS OF TAXATION, TO AMPLIORATE THE CONDITION OF THOSE WHO LABOUR." This is the test to which they submit existing institutions and enactments-their operation on the every-day interests and enjoyments of the many. "Why," asks the Home Secretary, on behalf of his clients, the working and oating millions of the British people, "should the consumer and the receiver of wages be required to pay for their daily broad a larger price than, if the trade were free, they would have to pay? And he reiterates, with the increased emphasis arising from strengthened conviction, his assertion of that foundation-truth in social economics which was already so much indebted to his able and enlightened advocacy—the beneficial operation of cheap broad on the wages, the health, and the morality of the working classes:

"The manufacturing population of this country are quite right in believing that high prices produce low wages, and artificially enhance the cost of provisions. I could produce abundant evidence to show that the opinion is no longer confined to the manufacturing classes alone. The agricul tural labouring population begin to be of the very same opinion. I could produce, were it not that I fear to trespass too far upon your attention, the clearest evidence to show the diminution of crime as prices fall, and its rapid increase as they rise; and, what is of the greatest importance of all, I could show you that MORTALITY increases in the same pro portion as the price of bread, while, vice versa, when provisions are cheap, mortality declines."

In the same generous and statesmanlike tone Sir Robert Peel dwells on the social and moral aspects of commercial reforms that tend to the cheapening of the poor man's food. His landlord and aristrocratic auditors "may laugh at it if they please," but he is in carnest; official experience has taught him certain great, all-pervading truths, to which he must enforce the homage that they have already exacted from himself:

"I know I am appealing, and I appeal with confidence, to your generosity; do you not admit with me, that the social condition of those millions, whether manufacturing or agricultural labourers, who carn their subsistence by the sweat of their brow, is, in the present condition of this country, of the very first importance—that it is an object of the legislation of the latter of moment? Have you read the report of the health of towns commission? Are you not deeply convinced that some effort must ere long be made to improve the social condition of that great mass of the population who earn their bread by labour in the manufacturing districts? Believe with me, that the first foundation of social improvement is abundance of food. Believe with me, that make what efforts you will to inlant liabits of cleanliness, to improve the dwellings of the poor-believe with me that the first step towards permanent social amelioration is abundance of provisions. Wherever there is suffering from scarcity, or the apprehension of scarcity, either the suffering or the apprehension so depresses the splits of those who have to earn their bread, that it is in vain to inculcate cleanliness or to improve habitations, without doing what we can to ento improve habitations, without doing that we can to ensure abundance of food. I say this, you may laugh at if you please, but the experience of the last three years, and the experience of the three preceding years, read a lesson to us which we ought never to forget, as to the effect produced on the social condition, the habits of life, and the happiness of the working classes, comparing the years of abundance with those of scavoity." with those of scarcity?

And these are not mere sounding generalities, of the sort that run so glibly off the tongues of the dilettante philanthropist. The Premier gives, not eloquence and sentiment only, but thought to the rights and interests of those whose cause he so impressively pleads before the tribunal of legislation and opinion. He has taken pains to realise to his own mind-and he would have the legislature realise to its mind—the actual details of those hard conditions which pervade and environ the labouring which the House of Commons, by majorities which man's life. He goes into the statistics of the no possible or conceivable casualty our record peasant's case; opens the budget of tolling ordered for execution, is not conceivable.

struggling, and enduring poverty; gives us, from "the actual return of the consumption of a labourer having a wife and one child, and receiving ten shillings a week in the summer, and nine shillings in the winter," the facts and figures of that painful cottage economy which has to work the problem of making out life on these scant resources. So much for ront --- so much for candles and soap--- so much for broad, bucon, salt beef, butter, and choese-so much for tea and sugar-leaving so much for "shoes and necessaries of that kind, which must have been difficult enough to obtain." And then, after onumorating the heavy deductions to which a well-nigh omnipresent taxation subjects this meagre revenue and parsimonious expenditure, the soap is taxed, the butter is taxed, the tea is taxed, and the sugar is taxed." Our poor man's financier dwells with kindhearted satisfaction on those alleviations of the burdon which his own policy has effected, and appeals to the human sympathics of his auditors, to include further among the exemptions, the chief article of all:

"We have now removed the duty on the bacon and the salt beef; we have diminished the duty on butter, and we have diminished the duty on choose; -can you repent having done this?"

" You will find, where wheat does enter into the subsistonce of the people, that by far the greatest portion of the weekly income is expended in the purchase of wheat and tobacco perhaps, but more than half the carnings is consumed by wheat. If ell, supposing the effect of your measures is to cause some reduction in the price of wheat, Juny ask YOURSELVES THE QUESTION-ARE YOU NOT MOST MATE. RIALLY ADDING TO THE COMFORTS AND ENJOYMENT OF MILLIONS? Let me assure you this is by far the most important part of the question.

There is no withstanding this. A policy which thus boldly and broadly bases itself on the first elements of social and political justice, and appeals direct to the common human sense of right, is irresistible. No mere majority of an oligarchical landowning legislature—though it happens, by the way, this time, that the majorities are thus far all on the right side-can make head against the statesman who, in the sight and hearing of an intelligent and instructed people, puts the rights of industry and hunger in the foreground of his political philosophy. We feel deeply grateful to Sir R. Peel for this speech. It is a speech in the highest degree honourable, both to himself individually, and to that spirit of the age of which, in reference to some of the most vital questions of our domestic policy, the Promier may be regarded as the exponent. After all, England does successfully assert her old prerogative of "teaching nations how to live." These lessons of the English Premier will go far and last longlonger, in their silent, world-wide operations, than the fame even of the Indian victories. They are lessons for the world, and the world will hear them. There is no measuring that vast futurity of good which lies enwrapped in the simple, but great and quickoning truths of economical science, which the voice of the Prime Minister of Ureat Britain has now stamped with a title to universal empire over the mind of nations and the policy of Cabinets.

A SPORTING STATESMAN.

"The hour finds, or makes, the man," say certain philosophisers on history; and whonever there is work to be done, somebody always turns up to do it. The aphorism is, it must be universally feit, strikingly illustrated in the present condition of the protectionist cause. The task of spinning out, by interminable factious delays, the last expiring moj ments of a vicious monopoly, which the united statesmanship of the empire has condemned, and judgt

moved noble

that p

Engla

Parlin

string

ment.

and m cumste

ļesto ir

Prynth

in an ii

piy, the

Mino 1

Prices

caring

ruinotu 1830 E

the pri

the nu

English gentleman would undertake. The Mileses orld Bankozes, the O'Briens and D'Israclis - the men who have social, political, or intellectual reputations to take care ofnaturally enough decline the mean and miserable office of obstructing, for mere obstruction's sake, a measure whose fate, so far as one House of Parliament is concerned, has been already superabundantly decided. They have fought their very best for the principle of protection—the day has gone against them-and they have the grace and sense, the respect for public opinion, and the s. If respect, to abstain from a frivolous and vexatious squabbling about details. Accordingly, the Mileses and Bankeses, the O'Briens and D'Israelis have no alternative but to submit to be superseded, and resign the vacant leadership of the "country party"-with what mingled emotions of shame, indignation, and contempt, we have not data for exactly analysing -into the hands of Lord Geonog BENTINCK.

"Who is Lord George Bentinck?" all the world have latterly been asking—as this man's audacious and mischievous extravagancies have fastened public attention on a name strange to such newspaper readers as do not happen to be in the habit of consulting the column of "Sporting Intelligence." The most convenient and comprehensive answer, perhaps, that one could make to this now highly interesting query is, -inquire at Tattersall's, inquire at Newmarket, inquire at Epsom and Doneaster; ask the jockeys, ask the trainers, ask the stewards of races and derks of race-courses. Only, as it is, in all probability, a thing quite out of the way of some up out of every 100 of our readers to follow up this line of investigation for themselves, we must beglittle more explicit. Lord G. Bentinek, then, be it known to all whom it may concern—that is, to the whole commercial, manufacturing farming, shopkeeping, and artisan public of the United Kingdomis the recognised head of what is dimly known to, or imagined by, industrious and sober-minded people, as the "sporting world," His racing stud, we have always understood, is considered by competent persons to be about the finest in Great Britain. A more perfect judge of horse-flesh is probably not to be found within the four corners of the empire. His betting book is universally reputed to reflect the atmost credit on its noble author's skill and science in that department/of literature. As an employer, and remunerator of native jockey industry, his name stands proudly pre-eminent above all his contemporaries. To which may be added, that are an umpire in all difficult cases of sporting honour and conscience, he bears, we believe, the very highest character for judicjal intelligence and impartiality. Take him all in all, we may say that Lord George Bentinek is to the British turf what Mr. Hudson is to railways.

To affairs of State, this eminent and accomplished sporting character has, until quite recently, been a stranger,-us is, indeed, sufficiently evident to any one capable of the mental and moral exertion of critically studying those remarkably silly, and blundering, and consely vituperative harangues which have signalised his lordship's entrance in public life, in this nineteenth year of his Parliamentary existence. For eighteen years and more, that the new protectionist chief has had a seat in the House of Commons, his name has never been before the public in any political capacity. Catholic emancipation, negro chancipation, Parliamentary reform, church reform, education, Poor Laws, Irish questions, foreign questions, colonial questions—all have failed to present themselves to his lordship's mind in a sufficiently interesting shape to furnish a counterpoise to the attraction of more congenial occupations. At length, the needful stimulus is applied in the form of a Ministerial scheme for giving industry its own; and the king of the race-course and the jockey club finds scope NEW poxoroise for his higher powers in the last terral delication of a condemned and falling moman of him. All at once, the affairs

Newmarket and Episom are forsaken for St. Stephen's-the betting book gives place to the blue book—the interest of the turk yields to that of the tariff-and an ambition which had, for half a life time, contented itself with the honour and glory of running the best horses in England, aspires to the nobler task of keeping the trade and industry of the country for a few weeks more in a syncope of uncertainty and unsettlement.

Pleasant, this, to the people of England—the sober, industrious, regular, frugal, and moral, middle and working classes, who make and keep England to be obstructed and harassed in their honest callings, for weeks and months together, because a sporting lord takes it into his head to play at politics, instead of attending to his proper line of business! Seriously, we do not wonder that the older and more respectable protection is tlenders seem ashamed of their self-elected "guide, philosopher, and friend." They must heartily wish the business over, and be anxious to have done for ever with the disagreeable necessity which compels their temporary endurance of political chieftainship that is enough to ruin any cause, and to bring irreparable disrepute on any party.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

THE FREE TRADE MIRROR OF PARLIAMENT FOR THE skssion of 1846.

Eleventh Week, ending Saturday, April 4.

This has been literally a lost week, so far as Free Trade and the commercial measures of the Government are concerned. The Corn Bill having passed its second reading, might have gone through committee this week, and been read a third time before Easter, for the protectionists have begun to exhibit some symptoms of a consciousness that the public-even the agricultural public-are getting impatient for a determination one way or the other. But with an obstinacy worthy of something better, Sir R. Peel has chosen to force on the first reading of the Irish Coercion Bill. Monday was passed in its discussion. On Tuesday, "no house." On Wednesday there was another debate on Ireland, on a pet scheme of Mr. Poulett Scrope, who, in a humane spirit, wished to read a second time and carry a bill for the relief of the indigent poor in Ireland; but which he withdrew, finding the general feeling to be against him. Thursday was occupied by votes of thanks, in both houses, for the great victories on the banks of the Sutlej, by which the Sikh power has been broken up, and the Punjaub placed within our control; and after that was disposed of, there was a mass of miscellaneous matters. And Friday is fixed for the Irish Coercion Bill, with little prospect of a termination of the debate.

The second reading of the Corn Bill was carried, as our readers are aware, on Friday night week, or rather on Saturday morning, by a majority of 88, in a smaller house than that by which the Government measures were originally affirmed. The diminution of the majority arose simply from the fact of there being fewer members present, the ratio of proportion being maintained. In the February division, the numbers were 337 to 240, majority 97; in the division of last week the numbers were 302 to 214, majority 88.

There were three good speeches delivered on Friday night, the orators being Sir James Graham, Sir R. Peel, and Lord Palmerston. Sir James Graham very skilfully directed attention to the fact of the increasing number of applications daily made to the Commons' Inclosure Commission for liberty to bring under cultivation large tracts of waste land -a practical conclusion against the allegation that the repeal of the Corn Law will throw any portion of the soil out of cultivation. And he had a happy hit at Lord George Bentinck. A bill has been introduced into the House of Commons to empower a company to reclaim from the sea a large portion of the estuary of the Wash; and on the back of the bill, which provides for the application of half a million of money, is to be found the name of Lord George Bontinck! It is really amazing how men can have the presumption to come forward and babble night after night, and week after week, on ruin to the landed interest, at the very moment that they are interested in speculations, on which they fearlessly propose to expend large sums of money, in order to rescue land from the sea, and add it to that already under cultivation. Lord George Bentinck smiled, like one trying to wriggle impudently out of a "fix," as Sir James Graham turned to him, and asked him what was his estimate of the future probable price of wheat, when, in the face of a repeal of the Corn Law, he was concerned in an adventure like

Sir Robert Peel made another of his able and elaborate speeches, from which it may be gathered that he is determined to carry his measure, if possible, and that he looks forward to its being the last act of his present official carser. "Sir," said he, addressing the SPEAKER, and alluding to the probability of his removal from office, "When I do fall, I shal have the satisfaction of reflecting that I shall not have fullen because I have shown subscrytency to any partys. I aball not full because I have preferred the interests of party to the general interests of the community. I shall carry with me the entistaction of reflecting that during the countered as official career, my object has been to mitigate monopoly, of Increase the demand for industry, to remove the restrictions upon commerce, to equalise the burden of taxation, and to amelforate the condition of those who toil."

Lord Palmerston closed the debate in an able, skilled and effective speech, in which he strikingly indicated the influence which persoverance and success in the which of the repeal of the Corn Laws has had on the more liberal of the Whig party. The leaders of the Ministerial or the Opposition divisions of the House of Commons are usually in the habit of referring to their supporters as friends-"my honourable friend," the member for So and so. A ladicrous instance of this habit was given by Mr. Bather, when he first went into opposition this session. He was always accustomed to term Sir Robert Peel "my right losnourable friend, the First Lord of the Treasury." But on the proposition of the Government measure for the ultimate repeal of the Corn Law, Sir Robert Peel was no longer the nolitical friend of Mr. Bankes. Yet so strong was the effect of habit, that Mr. Bankes, in his first speech, kept wontnually saying " my right konourable fr-r-oh-" the right honourable gentleman at the head of her Majestra Government!" The house smiled, Sir Robert Peel smiled, and at last Mr. Bankes was obliged to laugh him. self. Lord Palmerston gave another illustration, not Indicrous, but significant. Formerly Mr. Cobden or Mr. Bright were referred to as "the honourable member for Stockport," or "the honourable member for Durham." On Friday night week, Lord Palmerston said that the change of opinion and policy on the subject of the Corn Law, which the Government have so practically exhibited, was to be traced, not so much to the experience of the last three years as to the effect of the debates of the last four sessions; and -turning round to Mr. Cobden, who sat behind him,-to the exertions of "my honourable friend, the member for Stockport."

Mr. Stuart, the Queen's Counsel, whom it has pleased the Duke of Newcastle to return for Newark in the room of the Secretary for the Colonies, Mr. Gladstone, made his first le. gislative appearance on Friday night, and spoke a speech which fully justified the ducal discretion. Mr. Smat is a Scotch member of the bar, retaining a strongly maked Scotch accent, though he has been long in this country and is advanced in years; and has succeeded so well in his profession as to be very well off. He certainly will not wrenthe a laurel for himself by his efforts in the House of Commons. You can perceive that he is a kindly sort of man, fluent, dexterous in ranking mere legal points, but without the smallest capacity for generalisation. He made a long speech, of which it may be said, truly and positively, that the gist was this :- Mr. Cobden once called the landed aristocracy "buobies." repeal the Corn Laws will be to overthrow the preponderance of the landed interest, and therefore will effect the object of of Mr. Cohden, which is to "terminate the empire of the boobies" (Mr. Stuart's own words, which convulsed the house with laughter). But to "terminate the empire of the boobies" is Jack Cade legislation. The House of Commons should never listen to a mob. It should be calm, dignified. and impartial, &c. &c. &c. &c.!

The second reading of the Corn Bill being carried, the next stage is that of committee. This should have come on in regular course on Monday night; but, unfortunately, the Irish Coercion Bill, which has come down from the House of Lords, stood in the way. The Government were deter mined to press the first reading, and the Iri-h Liberal members were as determined to resist it. It was ugged on Ministers that the Corn Bill was of far more importance. The greater portion of Monday night was spent in discussing whether or no the Corn Bill or the Coercion Bill should be taken first. Sir Robert Peel seemed uneasy and folgetty, as if he had placed himself in a fulse position by the obstinacy of adhering to the determination of bringing on the Coercion Bill. Lord Worsley, the son of the Earl of Yarbo rough, and a staunch supporter of the agricultural interest, stated that the delay of the Corn Bill was injurious even to the farmers-"it was the duty of the house," he said. "towards the agriculturists, in particular, and also towards the trading interest, that there should be no further delay in the settlement of the long agituted question of the Cpril Laws." Mr. Cobden also deplored the determination of the Government as a calamity both to England and Ireland, He gave Sir Robert Peel full credit for sincerity in his desire to convey his measures; but his present resolve held out little hope of seeing the Corn Bill pass through the house before Easter. All this must have had some effect; at all events, the debate on the Irish Cocroion Bill was adjourned, and on Tuesday there was "no house!"

In consequence of the peculiar interest and importance at tached to Friday night's discussion, we subjoin at full length the speeches of the Home Secretary and the First Lord of the Treasury, with a summary of the others.

DEBATE OF FRIDAY, the 27th ult-SPERCHES of SIR J. GRAHAM and SIR R. PEBL.

SIR J. GRAHAM, and SIR R. PRBL.

In the House of Commons, the adjourned debate on the second reading of the Corn Importation Act was reasoned.

Sir J. GRAHAM said: I am very unwilling to precede the construction of the corn importation and medically a debate, which has been thus protected as which, I believe, the public at large are most desirable to which, I believe, the public at large are most desirable to constitute of the construction of tice the petition which has just been presented by the honmember for Stockport. I can assure the house that I was not cognisant either of that petition or of the petition presented by the noble lord the member for Lynn, before they were presented, having emanated from a portion of my tenantry taking different views of this question. I may be permitted to assure the house, that neither directly nor indirectly have I, myself, or by my agents, interfered in the slightest or in the remotest degree with the free expression of opinion among my tenantry (cheers); and that I have never attempted to fetter the exercise of their own independent judgment-feeling, as I do, that they as tenants, have as deep an interest in this matter as have the landlords; that they equally with myself, are entitled to the freest expression of their honest opinions (cheers). I will now, with the permission of the house, at once proceed to advert to the speech which closed the debate of last night-I mean that of the noble lord the member for Lynn (Lord C. Bentinck). I will dispose of the percration of that speech with but one romark, it appeared to me, when stripped of the metaphor which accompanied it, to consist almost entirely of that personal and violent invective which, I regret to say, marked the greater portion of the speeches delivered on this side of the house against the measures of her Majesty's Government ("hear, hear," from the Opposition benches). Now, having plainly avowed a great change in my own opinion on this subject, should not be guilty of the presumption,—I will not say, I might eny, of the importinence,—of commenting, with anything like irony, on the maintenance, on the part of hon. gentlemen sitting on this side of the house, of the opinions which at one time I sincerely, in common with thom, entertained, and which, up to a late period, I advocated. Neither will I say, for I could not say with truth, that I am not deeply grieved by the expression of the loss of esteem on the part of hon, members with whom I have acted for so many years, and in whose support and friendship, under trying circumstances, I have often rejoiced (cheers). When I made up my mind, from a deep sense of public duty, to act in concert with my right hon, friend at the head of the Government, and upon consideration of a pressing public necessity, as it appeared to me, to present these measures to Parliament as a servant of the Crown, I did anticipate, I foresaw with pain, all and everything that has taken place on this occasion with reference to the conduct of my hon, friends on this side of the house. But the necessity demanded the sacrifice, and I made it (cheers). I was prepared, I am prepared, on public grounds, regardless of all the taunts, regardless of all the obluquy which might be attempted to be heaped upon me, to meet the present emergency by my co-operation in the maintenance of the measures which are under disoussion, and which, in my conscience, I believe are indispensable to the public good (cheers); and although it would be affectation and useless to deny that I am and have been moved by many of the observations made by gentlemen and noblemen whose former friendship I have valued, yet, steadily, firmly, and fearlessly, I hope to be enabled to discharge that public duty which I have undertaken (cheers). I shall undinchingly persevere in that course, consoled for present mortification by this single reflection,—that the time, as I believe, is not fur distant when the country gentlemen of England will be satisfied, and will acknowledge that her Majesty's Government has not betrayed their interests (cheers); and that those interests will hereafter be reconciled, in fact and in opinion, with the interests of the great body of the community, whose peace, whose welfare, whose prosperity, whose more easy means of subsistence, it is the object of this bill to promote—an object which, as I con-Parliament, will not fail to accomplish (cheers). I will now advert to some of the arguments of the noble lord, and I may be wrong, but certainly it does occur to me, that the arguments which he adduced in opposition to this measure are precisely the arguments, the most cogent, the most stringent and unanswerable, which the opponents of the sliding scale have, from time to time, urged against that system (hear). I will begin with the position first taken up by the noble lord; he is very anxious to gain some opinion from the Treasury bench, and failing in that, he stipulates, linself, as to what will be the prices of wheat with a Free Trale in corn. With a view of forming an estimate, he went through this extraordinary process; he takes certain seasons when the prices of wheat were, in England, remark ably low, being, I think, in 1836, somewhere about 45s., and in 1835, 30s, a-quarter; and then in these circumstances he takes the prices of wheat on the Continent at the same moment, and from this estimates at what wheat could have been imported into this country with a profit. Now, the great argument against our restricted Corn Law was, that whilst there was an unsteadiness in its operation in varying times and varying seasons, the demand was most unequal and uncertain, and it is quite clear that the price of wheat on the Continent of Europe mainly depends on the demand in the British market. The price in 1830 and 1830 being unusually low in England, the effect on the Continent was this - a glut was produced in the foreign markets, from which our supplies were usually drawn, and the price there also was consequently low; and the noble lord under these circumstances when the price then have comstances draws the inference that wheat might then have been imported at a price of something like 30s, a quarter. I have it to the house to say whether it is a safe inference that, in communities annis, such would be the case. A great Funment in favour of a steady annual demand on the Condhent of Europe, our supply being deficient, is this—that while, in this country, from our increasing population, there is an increasing difficulty in finding an adequate home supply, the demand from abroad is annually increasing, and flicement. result will be not so much to lower in this country as to miso the prices on the Continent, thereby equalising the prices here and abroad, fand effecting this great object,—securing the people of England in years of definiency against a sudden and extravagant rise in price (bear, bear). Their commercial rivals will, at the same time, not only have an extended trade with England, by means of an exchange of extended trade with Eugland, by means of an exchange of commodities, but steady prices and a guarantee against any minous fluctuation. What had been the fact in the years less and 1830 was therefore no groundwork for estimating the prices then as the uniform prices at which wheat could be imported into this country. It is only a demonstration of the nucertainty of the demand here and the effect of their universality abroad. The noble lord then proceeded to arrow which I think remarkably this country is another that the whole I think remarkably this country is a notification of the state of the st

to proportion to the proximity to England, and the uncertain demand in England for wheat, has been the fluctuation in foreign corn. The table of fluctuations in the markets of Antwerp, Amsterdam, Danislo, Hamburgh, and Odossa, which are the ports from which we draw the required supplies almost wholly, prove the case; and to complete the demonstration, the noble lord dwell upon the fact that in Bordeaux the fluctuation was least. Now, it is notorious that we have no trade whatever in corn with France. Is not the inference to be deduced from this as I have stated (hoar, hear)? And what is the consequence of this? We convert our natural, our best customers, not only into com-mercial rivals, but into enemics. When they have abundance their markets are glutted, and they find ruinously low prices and under other circumstances the uncertainties of the corn trade are such that they come to the conclusion that they can place no reliance on it. They then form hostile tariffed they impose high duties on our manufactures, and they re linquish our corn trade in despair, as not only not producing to them good, but as inconsistent with their national safety I say again that our Corn Law legislation has solely tended to create these fluctuations in the foreign markets, and that has always appeared to me the strongest reason why the sys tem should be altered (cheers.) The noble lord then proceeds to comment on what he terms the evenuess of prices in England since the passing of the law in 1812. I have already stated to the house that that very evenness of prices in the present year appears to me delusive. It is well known that in no one year, in the memory of the oldest farmer, was there such inequality with respect to the quantity of corn as in the present year (cheers.) I do not exaggerate when I say that the price of wheat of last year varies from 18s. to 72s., and, knowing that this variation in our markets was on account of the slow and imperfect operation of the sliding scale in a great national emergency, I for one was distinctly persuaded that an alteration in the system was called for (cheers). The noble lord has said he was sorry to observe that the importation of foreign corn which has taken place was generally in foreign ships. Why, that is one of the leading objections on the other side. There is no disputing that British ships are not to be had; as the noble lord re marked, the freight of British ships for the conveyance of corn is higher than of foreign ships; and the corn trade being uncertain and irregular, the inevitable consequence is that the importation of corn is more usually in foreign than in British ships. This very circumstance, therefore—this encouragement of foreign shipping at the expense of British shipping-is, among other reasons, why the existing Corn Laws have been condemned (hear, bear). The noble lord then goes on to state that the farmers throughout Great Britain look with dread and consternation upon this measure (cheers from the protectionist benches). The petition which has this evening been presented by the honourable gentleman, the honourable member for Stockport, clearly shows that the statement of the noble lord is incorrect, inasmuch as it demonstrates that all the farmers do not so regard it (cheers from the Opposition). Many hon, members with equal confidence, have declared that the result of the adoption of the bill must be to throw immense tracts of land out of cultivation, and the hon, gentleman who moved the amendment (Mr. Yorke) has asserted that another effect of the passing of the measure will be that drainage will be suspended, and that agricultural improvement will be brought to an end. Now, I must beg leave to observe, that to the best of my knowledge the panie to which the hon, member for Cambridgeshire has adverted is much more confined to within these walls than hon, gentlemen are ready to admit (hear). I do not believe that either landlords or farmers, if they be not exposed to the dangerous atmosphere of this house, at all partake of this punic (hear, hear). An hom-gentleman opposite referred recently to the case of a gentleman in Somersetshire, who had, in consequence of the announcement made by Government, offered to all his tenants to release them from their engagements; and the 60 tenants to whom that offer was made, with one exception, at once rejected it. This criterion, by which to judge of public opinion is a very satisfactory one; and when men, having large capital involved in the cultivation of land refused the offer which would enable them to withdraw that capital, they gave very conclusive evidence of their setisfaction with the change which late events had compired to make in their prospects (hear, hear). I must contend, on the other hand, that when, at the present moment, farmers enter into new contracts, upon no reduced terms, they evince that they have no alarm whatever as to the probable effect of the Corn Law now under consideration (hear, hear). And as it is a mutter of very great importance that the statements of the existence of upprehensions should be refuted, and that no such impression as that spoken of should continue on the public mind, the house will, perhaps, permit me to lay before it some facts which have come within the range of my own observation. If I were to mention any of the furmers of Great Britain as ospecially distinguished for sagacity, and skill, and intelligence, I would assuredly name, without he-sitation, the farmers of the East Lothian of Scotland (hear). w I have the permission of Lord Belhaven to read to the house a letter, dated February 25th, containing information from the Earl of Wemyss. Lord Belhaven writes thus:

"I have been on a visit to Lord Wennyss for some days, and have had an opportunity of learning the opinions of the East Lothian and Berwickshire farmers to a considerable extent. Lord Wennyss's property in this county is, with one exception, the largest in it; and his factor, a claver sensible man, tells me that there is not a farm in this county or Berwickshire new to let that there are not more offers, and higher offers too, than he ever saw made for it, and by mon of skill and capital. I asked how he accounted for this? His answer was, the corn question is now considered as settled, and the prospect held out of getting the land drained by the landlords instead of having to lay out the money themselves as formerly, has created a general feeling of confidence among all intelligent farmers. One gentleman of this county stated, that on a property in Barwickshire, or which he was trustee, he had five offers from men of known character as first-rate farmers, the amount of which was 10t, per cent, above the present ront. (This is since the introduction of this bill by my right honourable friend.) These are facts which are worth all the arguments one hears, coming, as they do, from the greatest corn-growing district in Scotland."

Now I heard somebody behind me allude to East Gloucestershire. East Gloucestershire, it is said, has unequivocally declared itself. But I understand that my right hon, friend, Bir George Warrender, had intended to bring forward the protection question in East Lothian; but he wrote a letter stilling the protection candidate, and thus East Lothian had declared itself against the Corn Laws there can be no doubt (help, hear). Now, with regard to the lake of Ely. I have heard that this is a proposition for throwing land carrow only allows. The rion, member for Phintington that the carrow of the land of the late of the land of t the panic which the measure has created will be, that improved cultivation must be suspended. Now, Dr. Ken (as we understood) has likewise given me permission to read the following latter:

"I received a letter from the Duke of Bedford, a day or two ago, with the following postscript: "I received a letter this morning from my Cembridgeshire steward, to inform me that he had just let two farms for me, to very intelligent men, futher and son, with simple capital, at an increase of 12th n year on their present rent. The agreement has been made sunde Peed's measure was introduced." Such facts as these seem to me to be worth more than he ats of figures and columns of statistics."

Now we have been hitherto looking only at the tenants and occupiers of land; but what will be its effect upon the fee simple of the land if the measure should pass? I know that land surveyors have mentioned extravagant offers to me, and have avowed opinions that have astonished me with regard to the effect which would be produced upon the value of land. I am told by a noble lord that there is a farm within 30 miles of his property, without a residence, and not in very good condition, the rental being 650%, and under the circumstances of its position and its proximity to a reflected. it was supposed there would be an increase in its value, and he had been advised to ask 32 years' purchase for the farm. For five years he never got any one to make any offer to purchase; but within the last three weeks an offer had been made for the purchase, coming up to the full demand; and it is expected that the bargain will be struck. Then will any land be thrown out of cultivation? It is very difficult to ascertain this point; but there is a fact which goes beyond all speculation. If it is probable that land will be thrown out of cultivation, no man out of Bedlam would go and purchase land. Is the house aware of the working of the Euclosure Commission? Last year, in the early part of it, there were few applications for enclosures, and to a small extent. Now I will read to the house what have I cen the applications to the Euclosme Commissioners for the last six months; and I repeat that no men in his senses could make an application to enclose land, if and was expected to be thrown out of cultivation. Now, in September lest, the applications were for 2200 acres, and in October the number of neres was 1588. That was under protection, and at that time there was no idea of any alteration in the Corn Laws, But, in November, there was proguant evidence in many quarters that a proposition would be made to Parliment for a material alteration in those laws. Did that circumstance check applications to the Commissioners of Enclosure? have staid that the number of applications, in October, were for 1588 acres; in November, they were 7447; in December, 7205; in January, 5600; in February, 3595 ("hear, bear, from the protectionists). In March, down to the 7th of the month, there has been one application for 15 0 acres, and within the last fortnight there has been an application from the county of York to enclose Bowes Moor, a common of inferior land, very inferior land, to the extent of 11,000 Dean, Somer et, to enclose 2500 acres; that is, within the last fortnight, applications have been made to enclose no less than 16,500 acres (hear, hear). So much for land being thrown out of cultivation. Now, I beg the attention of the house to a bill now in progress and before Parliament; it is entitled, "A bill for enclosing and reclaiming from the sea certain tracks of land, forming part of the great estuary called the Wash" (laughter, and cries of "herr, hear"). This is not a question of throwing land out of cultivation, or of enclosing waste or common hand, but it is a question of getting property out of the sea; and, by industry and the application of capital, bringing hand into cultivation out of the sen itself. Whose names are at the back of this bill? Why, I find the first name is that of Lord George Bentinek (a laugh); the second that of Viscount Joselyn; and the third that of Mr. Bagge, one of the members for the county of Norfolk. This bill was brought in in the present year when the plan of the Government was known, by the not lo. lord himself. The capital sought to be invested in this nudertaking is 500,000%, the power being taken of borrowing 200,000%; and amongst the subscribers, the first name I find is that of "William George Frederick Cavendish Bentinck, and of the commonly called Lord George Bentinck; and of the Directors of the Company, the first is William George Frederick Cavendish Bentinek, commonly called Lord George Bentinek; the others are Sir William John Henry Browne Folker, the mayor of Lynn, and others. Now, on another occasion the rights of the Crown interposed an obstacle, and there was a negotiation between the parties on this point; but the issue did not lead to a satisfactory conclusion; but here, in this bill, there is an admission of the rights of the Crown, and there is a clause charging the property of the company with the payment of I per cent, to the Crown upon all outlays and expenses, which is expressly stated to be intended as compensation for 30,000 or 40,000 acres. Now the noble lord will permit mo to put a question to him, which he has often put to my right hon, friend. What is his estimate of the price of wheat under the new measure? (hear, hear). I have no doubt that he must have made a most perfect estimate of the price of wheat; and he will, therefore, allow me to ask him what is his estimate of the future price of wheat which has induced him to embark in this enterprise? It is now, Sir, my painful duty to turn to a more serious part of the great question; the house will anticipate that I allude to the state of Ircland. I heard with great pain, and with surprise, the statement of the noble lord (Lord G. Bentinck), that, in his opinion, in which every day's experience confirmed him, the potato famino in Ireland was a gross delusion; he said, I think, that a more gross delusion had never been palmed upon the country by any Government (hear); and the noble lord proceeded to argue, that because the average price of potatoes throughout Ireland was only id. a stone, there could not be any famine in that country, Now I must bave fulled in my endeavour to show the house what is the real state of Ireland, if it can believe that the average price of potatoes is any criterion of the state of destitution in that country. I may observe, in passing, that 4d. a stone in Ireland is nearly double the price of potatoes at an ordinary period; and that when you take the difference between 2d a stone for potatoos, it is an increase in the price of an article of food of 100 per cent., a difference between plenty and want, I night almost say, between life and death. Now the noble lord also commented upon the fact of some small imports from Ireland. What is the inference from that? Imports from Iroland. What is the inference from that P Ito seems to draw the inference that there is no destitution in Iroland. But it is a consequence of the bigh price of potatoes in England and Wales, where the fallers of the potato crop is almost as great as in Iroland itself. High price will attract the supplies to the richer from the poors, applies and it is quite sufficient to account for those through the cases to gain something from the small research will be in the foots.

lord may have been taken under an imperfect acquaintance with the condition of the country. He is, however, supported by the high anthority of an Irish member, the member for the University of Dublin, and the recorder of Dublin, recently returned from Ireland, and who has told the house that the accounts of the scarcity are the grossest exaggerations.

Mr. SIIAW: No. I said, "Great exaggerations."

Sir J. ORATIAM: Well, great exaggerations. I hope the Biome will bear with me if I detain it by reading some extracts upon this point, which assume an aspect of pecutiar importance, for I must confess it was reading these details in October which convinced me then, as I am convinced now, that a discussion of the Corn Laws in the present session of Parliament was inevitable (hear). The right hon. gentleman (Mr. Shaw) referred to the statements made by Mr. Lindley and Dr. Playfair, in November, consisting, in his opinion, of gross exaggerations.

Mr. HHAW: Great exaggeration.

Hir J. GRAHAM: Great exaggeration, I beg pardon of the right hon. gentleman; that report was made to the Government in November. That report, however, was not the circumatance which first alarmed me. I happened, in October, to be residing in Cumberland, and I received a letter from the secretary of the Agricultural Society in Ireland, which includes a great number of the nobility and gentry of the country. Now that letter which I received from the secretary of this society, was dated October 23d, and the house will see how far Dr. Playfair's report (which the right hon. contleman accuses of great exaggeration) corresponds with this letter:

"Sir.-I beg leave to send you an extract from a Dublin sacring paper, which will give you a correct account of the measures which the council of this society have adopted, remeasures which the council of this society have adopted, respecting the provailing disease in the potato crop. I beg leave also to state that when I issued a circular, about a month since, to the accretations of 120 local societies in connection with the central one, I got several answers from persons stating that the disease was not then apparent in their immediate neighbourhood, but I have since received letters from most of them, stating, that upon digging the crops, they found the disease in almost every quarter, and I may safely say at present that there is not a county in Ireland that is not more or less affected by it. Give my return from the cattle-show at Ballimsdoe, my office has been filled with specimens of the diseased potatoes from all quarters, which prove not only the similarity of the disease, but the items which prove not only the similarity of the disease, but the items and uniform estant-of-it. The council of this society-have directed their ideours to two objects. First, to obtain the latest and most accurate information respecting the actual mature and extent of the disease, in the different localities, through the machinery at our command, and to transmit the estime from time to time to the Irish Government at the castle; secondly, to institute the series of experiments within described, and other the direction of Professor Kaye for the automated desame from time to time to the Irish Government at the castle; accountly, to institute the series of experiments within described, under the direction of Professor Kane, for the purpose of deciding upon saving the remnant of the crop, which now undoubtedly appears to be in the greatest jeopardy. The result of these experiments shall be carefully matured and communicated. I shall barely add, Sir, that the greatest panic appears to exist in all parts of the community, and those who know the country best are most puzzled how to act. One thing, however, I think is cortain, that amounts has already transpired to justify the most prompt and energetic measures on the part of the public and the Government."

(Hear, hear.) Now this gentleman cays he was very much alarmed; and I ask the house, was it not the duty of the Government to take measures for regulating the supply of corn to the United Kingdom? But this was not all; there came, cuclosed in the letter from the secretary, another from the colleague of the right hon, gentleman (Mr. Hamilton). That letter, which is addressed to the secretary to the Agricultural Society, is dated the 18th October, and was forwarded to me, if I mistake not, in the letters from the secrotury:

"My dear Sir,—I am sorry it will not be in my power to attend the special meeting of the council this day. If, as I apprehend, the accounts from the different parts of freland concur in representing the failure in the potate crop as at all general, I think it would be advisable that the council should take means for bringing the subject before the Lord-Lieutenant, in the hope for bringing the subject before the Lord-Lieutenant, in the hope that Government might take some steps to make provision against the immleent famine. I am aware that some time since inquiries were made through the constabulary by Government, but the character of the disease is so peculiar, and the mode of its operation so mexpected, that the apparent state of the crop of pointoes a fortnight ago affords very incorrect information as to its real state at the present moment. Probably the council could not do better than to instruct you to prepare a digest of the information which may have come in from the local societies, such as could be presented to Government; and if they were to meet again next wock, say on Thursday next, they might then enter into communication with the Government on the subject. I name Thursday, for I think during the next few days when the people are beginning to dig their crops, much accurate information will reach you; and it is next desirable. accurate information will reach you; and it is most desirable that when we communicate with Government the fullest and most accurate information should be afforded to them."

This representation was made in the month of October last by the secretary of the society, and such was the urgency of the cases that that gentleman thought it necessary to address himself personally to me on the subject in the letter which I have just read. Having gone through all that I think it necessary to bring under the notice of the house in the way of information received during the autumn, I propose which has recently reached our hands. The noble lord the momber for Lincolnshire (North, as we understood) has told the house that there could not be a grosser fabrication than that which represented the danger of society as immediate and pressing. In my opinion, one of the bost answers which can be offered to that broad and sweeping assertion is to read a statement which is dated the 10th of March, and was addressed by the Commissary at Waterford to the Commissary in Chief at Dublin. It is in these words:

"The price of potatoes is so high, and they are of so had a quality, that they are no longer used in the poorhouse here, head being substituted. Nearly all the potatoes on the quay come in coasting vessels from the county of Wexford, where it appears the soil is sandy, and where the mayor informs me the disease has done very little injury; but the price is 6d, per stone of 141bs., which is quite beyond the reach of the poor. I can bear witness to the fact, that in the immediate vicinity of this place a proportion of one third to one-half—and in some cases, the whole—has been found totally injured, factid, and fit only for the dunghill.

This, I am sure, the house will agree with me in thinking forms a most important part of the documents which I have to lay before them; and I have now to call attention to that which discloses the most formidable portion of the whole evil-namely, the probability that not only the produce of the past year has failed, but the seed deposited in the ground already shows evidence of being tainted.

* "Some of the crops of potatoes planted in January have been examined, and the seed has been found to have generally rotted. The ground will most probably be turned up in April, and sown with data or barley."

de la companya di Salah

information derived from that place is founded upon the statements made by one of the coast guard, resident upon the island; his communication is dated the 1st of March, and these are the terms in which he writes:

"I regret to have to report to you a further unfavourable account of the potatoes in this district, in the southern part of which, I may say, they are/literally speaking, totally gone, the peasantry having now discovered, on opening their pits, the true state of them. I witnessed on Friday last that in many, instead of picking them by hand, they satually shovelled them out. On my return from Keele youterday evening I found a great number of persons (from 100 to 600) waiting to complain to me of their misfortunes, which I assure you are great indeed; one person, with a family of six children, stated his prop to be now reduced to about six creeks (8 cwt.)"

Now, there we have a document which to my mind speaks volumes. But this is not all; we have reports from 2000 electoral districts belonging to unions, and these being made up to the 15th of February, state that there is every prospect that the whole of the forthcoming crop will be seen to be in a state of decomposition. The house will now, I trust, permit me to read this statement, which is very brief, but, in my opinion, extremely important:

lumber of Electoral Divisions in which the annexed Propor

Proportion of the Potato Crop Lost. tions of the Potato Crop were returned lost, condensed from Constabulary Reports of Jan. 15, 1846. Pob. 15, 1846. Between 8-10ths and 9-10ths 7-10ths and 8-10ths 5.10ths and 6-10ths 11 14 4-10ths and 5-10ths . 613 3-10ths and 4-10ths 657 ,, 2-10ths and 3-10ths . ,, 1-10th and 2-10ths . Not exceeding 1-10th . . . 280 156 113 252 137 103 Not returned 3 Total number of Electoral 2052 2052

In the whole, then, of those electoral divisions, more than half of the entire crop has been absolutely destroyed. am aware how often it is said that there has been no in crease of this taint amongst the potatoes, and therefore I should wish, if the house will allow me, to advert to some fresh evidence of the fact from another part of Ireland. find in a letter from Sligo, addressed by Col. M'Arthur to the commander in-chief of the forces in Ireland, which bears date the 1 (th of March, that the scarcity in that neighbourhood is of the most alarming character. From the statements of Col. M'Arthur it appears that the supply of food for the people in the neighbourhood of Sligo is at the present time one-third less than it was at the corresponding period of last year, and that the prices of potatoes in the towns between Sligo and Dublin had risen 25 to 50 per cent., clearly establishing the fact of a defleiency. Accounts from Carrick-on Suir, dated the 1st of March, give the same melancholy picture of the existing state of things, and prove, beyond a doubt, that the progress of the rot is in every point of view most alarming. In one case there were 1500 barrels of potatoes in pits, and with the exception of two barrels they were all putrid. I now propose to read an extract or two from the report of a meeting which took place in the county of Cork, when Lord Mountenshel presided. At that meeting the following resolution was adopted:

" Resolved, that the local committee he requested to use their utmost diligence in ascertaining the funds necessary to support the people in their respective districts until the 10th-day of August next, and that the landlords be called upon to meet the exi-gencies of the case, by subscribing a rational proportion, according to the value of their respective estates, based on the Poor

The following letter, addressed to Lord Mountcashel, was

The following letter, addressed to Lord Mountcashel, was also read at the same meeting:

"My Lord,—I have examined the potatoes in the pits, and find them getting worse every day since the beginning of the month; I may say, nearly one-third gone. On examining those in the lofts, I find them worse than those in the pits—rearly one half gone. I am sorry to say, on examining four different kinds planted on the 13th of February and following days, they are getting into a state of decay faster than the above—even those shooting out are puny and stunted. If all now growing come to maturity, they will not be above one-third of a crop.

"March 16, 1846.

"D. M. Kissick."

At this meeting the following observations were made:

"This was very serious indeed, and brought them to the consideration of the future. What was to become of them next year? It would appear that the potatoes were gone. If they planted rotten potatoes, they would not grow, and the consequence would be the total fallure next year of what the Irish neonly depended on for food." people depended on for food."

I do not wish to prolong the present discussion by referring to any more documents; but I have before me one statement from Mountmellick, which I cannot refrain from reading to the house. It consists of resolutions agreed to at a meeting of the Board of Guardians, held on Friday, March 20th:

"That at the meeting of the board this day a number of decent poor married woman made application for relief; their families amounted to the number of 80 human beings, without food or sufficient employment; those poor people have houses or cabins, and, if their whole families were to accept of temporary relief in the workhouse, their residences and furniture would be lost to them. Feeling the pressure of want and destitution now so general in this populous town and neighbourhood, we feel it our bounden duty to bring this matter under the consideration of the Executive Government and the Poor Law Commissioners, in order that some mode may be devised or pointed out, whereby relief may be given by a supply of cheap food, either gratuitously or at a cheap rate, to meet the present exigency. The poor parsans who applied to the heard this day form but a very small portion of those who we know are now in great distress, and actually subsisting on food made from the wesh of a starchyard, only suited for, and considered indifferent, food for pigs."

Mr. SHAW observed, that this proved nothing with respect to polatoes.

Sir J. GRAHAM resumed: Does it not show the utmost degree of want? Try it by any other test you please, but, do what we may with the statement, we can arrive at no other conclusion than this, that it proves an extreme condition of human suffering; an amount of suffering not limited to any one district in Ireland, but spread over the whole of the country. So recently as last Monday a deputation from Limenick walted upon the Lord-Lieutenant. That deputation conslated of the Mayor of Limerick, of Mr. Rodie, Mr. Monson, with data or barloy.

I will now, with the permission of the house, direct attention to the condition of the people in the island of Achill. The Limerick, but in Clare, and though, contrary to all principle, they solicited aid at the hands of the Government, they sale so upon this simple ground, that the people were study starving, and that if relief were not immediately given to most failal results must ensue. This, be it remembered, is in the month of March ;-already the city of Limerick is at ing for money out of the public purse, and at a momential this the Recorder of Dublin tells us that the distress is held so great as we imagined. But then the learned herorier makes a fearful admission. He tells you that things are not much worse than they usually are at this time of the ter, that is, that dysentery, fever, and famine are in all year prevalent at this season. Well, then, this is so true that it. valent at this season. Well, then, this is so true that the right hon, and learned Recorder, acting upon a deep comtion of that which he thought would be the heat for be countrymen, takes credit to himself for supporting a memory couldrymen, takes break to minister to supporting a mesure calculated to afford temporary relief by a grant out of the British Treasury, while he informs you in the same breath that the evil is of a uniform and permanent character—that, is fact, it returns year by year. He tells you that he cannot comprehend the connection between the Irish case and the proposition of the Government, although year by year the condition of the people in Ireland reaches a fearful point of fever, dysentery, and death. Notwithstanding all this, the Recorder of Dublin would say that no extraordinary case has been made out on behalf of the people of Ireland, and that the whole difficulty might be met by a grant out of the public purse. Now, I confess that I am, for one, not prepare to recommend that the people of England shall be callupon to bear the whole expense of this calamity. The people of England suffer already from the rot in the potato, though that root does not constitute their sole food thear, hear, This is a subject regarding which we talk much of authorities, Now, I am sure I need not cite instances to show that incass. of great pressure the practice of the executive Government in this country has been to relax the laws which regulate the importation of food; and, though I am not prepared to mote the exact words of Adam Smith, yet we all know that his opinion is in favour of a perfectly Free Trade in corn then, hear). Then there is also the authority of Burke, than whole no one is more entitled to the respect of those who desire to legislate upon sound and comprehensive principles. The passage which I should wish to quote is contained in Ma. Burke's Dissertation on Searcity, and though an hon mem ber in the course of this debate favoured the house with several extracts from that work, yet he avoided that to which I should like to call attention. He quoted round and round it; but he did not give us the passage itself. I shall menly attempt to quote from memory, for I have not fursished meself with the exact words of the author. The following is the passage to which the right hon, baronet referred:—"So that, in my opinion, there is no way of preventing this coll, which goes to the destruction of all our agriculture, and of that part of our internal commerce which touches our agriculture the most nearly, as well as the safety and way ng of Government, but manfully to resist the iden, speculative or practical that it is within the compotence of Government, taken as a Government, or even of the rich, as rich, to supply to the poor those necessaries which it has pleased the Divine Providence for a while to withhold from them. We, the people, ought to be made sensible that it is not in breaking the laws of commerce, which are the laws of nature, and consequently the laws of God, that we are to place our hope of softening the divine displeasure to remove any calamity under which we suffer, or which hangs over us." Those are noble principles, and these Those are noble principles, and those principles amongst other grounds lead me to defend the principle of the bill. But the learned Recorder of Dublia says, that we have betrayed our party, and that we are inexcusable for that. I do not blame from gentlemen for adhering to opinious which we have given up; but the learned Recorder, in consequence of our having given up those opinions, thinks himself entitled to cast our horoscope. He tells the world that we are a falling Government, and, sitting behind us, by acts upon a conviction that we are falling, and therefore be kicks us. If a protection Government be hereafter formed then I hope that the right hon, and learned gentleman will obtain for himself a more satisfactory settlement of the Recordership (cries of "Oh, oh!" and "Hear, hear, hear"); and a retiring allowance, such as it would not be in my power to support (Oh, oh). The learned Recorder of Dublin often said that he never looked for Parliamentary place or patronage; but yet, if a protection Government were formed, the vision of the Irish Secretaryship might again flit across his fancy; and, should be obtain that office, I hope that under the benign influence of his administration the people of he land may enjoy all the advantages of which their condition is susceptible. At all events, whether now, or at whatever time the learned Recorder may give utterance to any reproaches of us, I cannot fail to know the feelings which as tuate him (hear, hear); and, know the feelings when a tuate him (hear, hear); and, knowing those feelings, his consure sits light upon me. I infinitely prefer his opon, hostility to his smouldering resonment (hear, hear). Then, Sir, the hon, gentleman the member for the University of Oxford, stated his opinion that this measure. thing could be more accurate than the statement which the hon, member made, that under the Commutation Apt, that tithe is an invariable quantity, though the price if variable. In my opinion, the very accuracy of the statement disposes of the question so far as the tithe-owners are concerned. Under the Tithe Commutation Act an invariable quantity is secured; whatever may be the change of cultivation, the only variation is in the price. Now, observe: before the Title Commutation Act, the title-owner was not only exposed to serve the control of the title owner was not only exposed to serve the control of the title owner was not only exposed to serve the control of the title of the title owner was not only exposed to serve the control of the title owner was not only exposed to serve the control of the title owner was not only exposed to serve the control of the title owner was not only exposed to serve the control of variation of price—because, if he took his tithe it kind, he was liable to the variation of price—but also to a great variation in currently variation of price—but also to a great variation in currently variation of price—but also to a great variation and the variation of price—but also to a great variation of price—but also to ation in quantity: whilst under the Tithe Commutation Act, he is free from that variation in quantity to which he was before exposed, and he is liable only to that variation of pict from which he was a result. from which he was not before exempt (hear, hear). That if my answer to the objection of the hon. gentleman the men my answer to the objection of the hon, gentleman the new-ber for the University of Oxford. But let us consider the case of the tithe payers, and if there he may hardship in the case, the tithe payers are more affected than the the owner. Unlike the tithe receivers, the tithe payers have pay a fixed quantity, and even if the land be thrown out of cultivation, the quantity they have to pay will not be affected though the variation in price will be provided for in a mesthough the variation in price will be provided for in a meathough the variation in price will be provided for in a measure, since there is every year an adjustment of price, been on the averages of the last seven years. I am free to confess, Bir, that my answer to the ittherways is not a confess, Bir, that my answer to the ittherways is not a confess, Bir, that my answer to the ittherways is not the plete as my answer to the ittherways is not there is no the plete as my answer to the ittherways in the order to the ittherways is not the plete they will both find that they have been accommon to the proprietors. This is not the proprietors. This is not the proprietors.

u dia permi is the iivals ganisa hear) > of food house Liverp from I it cheir bourhe

trun jo ot white CONTR And be ւերոշեր Tre elicald i cotting Liverpo in Lich and um other pa it is the COTH GR rions to poduci իօտ իւլւ Connai, that exp desired Jacquer dered th fuel, n ile lice o () spins Charles Callack (

he attrib Operatio ay did they pre countrie trade to there an rid be legted, aprent o half. N elone; declared chief h Gereigo.

them to than the

ofit; the tithe owner was in fact copartner with the owner of the soil, and partook of the increased produce without sharing in the outlay necessary to make that increase. Prospectively under the Tithe Commutation Act that copartnery is dissolved, and the landowners now enjoy exclusively the permanent advantages arising from the outlay of capital. On the whole, then, I think that the arrangement may be regarded as equitable to all parties, and I do not see why the inhe-owners should offer any obstacles to the progress of this measure. But the hon, member for Oxford put the case If the prices should not fall, he asked, what as adilemma. is the object of this bill? and if the price falls, where is the equity of this measure? Now the Corn Laws are always open to another dilemma :- the present Corn Laws either affect the price of one of the first articles of necessity, or they do not so affect it. If they do not affect prices, I wish to know why is there all this resistance to any change? It cannot be denied that they turn our foreign customers into tivals-that they cramp our foreign trado-that they disorganise the home market—that they cause internal commotion-that they set class against class-that they cause heartburnings amongst a large portion of the community; and that they produce, I may almost say, an endless inter-ruption of domestic peace. If they do not affect prices, wherein consists the injury done to the landowners (hear, But if they do cause a permanent enhancement of price, then arise the Interests of the consumers and of the rerecivers of wages; and they may say, "Why do you make us pay a larger price than we ought, and than we should otherwise pay for our daily bread, whilst at the same time you diminish gar means of purchasing I will now refer to the damage likely to anse to agriculture, and I must here say that the prosperity of the home trade has been almost invariably concurrent with the improvement of the land, with the prosperity of agriculture, and, speaking generally, with the reduced price of food; and upon this point I cannot resist quoting to the house a short passage from a work on this subject, in which the writer states the argument upon this point so tersely and so ably, that I cannot hope to present it in so effective and so clear a manner. In the neighbourhood of the manufacturing towns the importation from distant places has reculved a great and a progressive increase. Manchester and Liverpool now draw their supplies of agricultural produce from Ireland, from Scotland, and from the northern counties of England; and simultaneously with that increased importation of produce from a distance, there is an increased pace in the neighbourhood of the towns; and so far from its being a consequence that the value of land in the neigh bourhood of the towns should full, the very reverse is the fact. The case, however, is so ably put in the work of Mr. Wilson (hear, hear) on the influence of the Corn Laws that, with the permission of the house, I will read what

i. producers the facilities of steam-navigation have enabled ii. producers in Ireland, Cumberland, and elsewhere, to send the fruits of their industry at cheaper and easier rates to Liver-per Manchester, Sc.; but, while we find that, in the former place, these facilities have tended to improve the value of projects, and the general condition of the producer, yet they have in lower tended to reduce the value of property or the constituence. Without these additional supplies, the consuming that of the large towns would have been abridged to a smaller quantity of food; but, with such additional supplies of such arbits as can be best brought from a distance at a cheaper rate, a larger ability to consume other articles, which are not so easily ten ported, is obtained by the community, in the production of which the immediate producers find an occupation as profit-side as before, and thus the whole community of producers and transmers is equally benefited."

And here be gives an application, to which I would call the associal attention of hon; members:

There is no more reason why the consumer in Great Britain should not be benefited by the producer of the Continent withsoutingmy to our own property, than that the consumers in Lagragood and Manchester should be benefited by the producers in Lagrand and Camberland, as has been shown, without lowering the value of land in the immediate neighbouthood."

This argument, I confess, appears to me to be conclusive ad unanswerable (hear, hear). Now, Sir, there is only one other point to which I am anxious, with the permission of the house, to direct the special attention of hon, members it is the important question of the bearing of the price of com on the rate of wages. I have stated on former occasions to this house my deep and firm conviction with regard to the manufacturing population, and there has been strong evidence to confirm my views,—that so far from high prices producing high wages, the very converse was true, and that low prices produce high wages, and high prices produce low wages. I allude to the evidence given before the Hand-loom cannissioners, and I can refer to evidence given in Scotland in the West Riding of Yorkshire, by the hand-loom weavers in the county of Warwick, and last of all by the wik weavers. The first evidence to which I refer is that of a Scorch witness, taken by Mr. Symonds, the assistantcommissioner, in the south of Scotland, for inquiring into the condition of the hand-loom weaver; and on the result of that evidence Mr. Symonds reports, that the only measure desired by the weavers, and thought desirable by the manu-betures, was the repeal of the Chri Laws. They consibeturers, was the repeal of the Chru Laws. They considered the continuance of that tax, by increasing the price of food, and diminishing the amount of employment, as the amount of employment, as the track of the control of the there of two hand-loom weavers themselves, given to Mr. charles Fletcher was asked, "Have you considered the causes of your distress?" and his reply was, he had, and that he attributed the decline, in a considerable degree, to the operation of the Corn Laws. He was then asked, "In what was did you count to that contribute 2" and his reply was, that operation of the Corn Laws. He was then asked, "In what way did you come to that opinion?" and his reply was, that they prevented the exchange of our commodities with other committee, and that their repeal would open the woollen trade to the whole Countient. He was further asked, "Is there any other way in which the weavers are affected?" and he replied, he thought the weavers were peculiarly affected, for the less income they had, the less they could sprud on bread. Wheat was then 8a. 4d. a stone. A man aprud on brend. Wheat was then 8s. 4d. a stone. A man with a family required two stone or two stone and a-half. Now, he had known it decasionally as low as 2s. a sous; and it ought not to be so high. James Cormack delated that there was more than one cause; but the chief he should be so high. chief he should any was the Gorn Laws, for the duty on faring grain saides to coramp commerce; and it also caused than its and the should be and the said to an and the said to an another said to a dem to cat bread dearer than they ought to do and than the people of other countries do, and cobliged them to can more of their amalicarrings in buying bread, so as a leave little for the purphase of anything clear. And other will be leave the for the purphase of anything clear. And other will be demanded to many manufactured exclusions.

This has been followed by the mills working short time, by the suspension of labour, and by universal distress throughout the manufacturing districts. The hon premier for Rudandshire last evening felt the force of this so cogently that he proposed, as an act of justice to the working classes, that there should be, and he declared there ought to be, a slidingscale of wages as a relief from the sliding-scale in the Corn Laws (hear); and not only that there should be fixed a minimum rate of wages, but that the rate should be adapted to the high price of corn; such was the proposition gravely made by the hon, member for Rutlandshire, who thought it unjust to onhance the price of corn without establishing a scale of wages. I am ashamed to trouble the house any longer, otherwise I could cite much more evidence from the report of the hand-loom weavers' commission of workmen in various trades, whose ovidence is given in their own words; but I am certain that I do not misrepresent the character of that evidence when I say that the manufacturing population generally look upon the Corn Laws as enhancing the price of food, and at the same time diminishing the rate of wages. And now, Sir, I come to the consideration which I own ope rates most powerfully on my judgment. I cannot overlook the fact, that the Government of this country, is, in practice, vested mainly in the landowners, ("hear," and Oh"). The other house of Parliament is composed almost exclusively of landowners; and there is in this house a great preponderance of the landed interest, (hear, hear). A Government so based and so conducted cannot long maintain any influence in opposition to the great body of public opinion; such a Government to be safe, must make it evident to all that its-rule lias been impartial legislation (hear, hear); and now, when we consider the concentration, the union, the intelligence, the growing numbers, and the increasing pro portion of the manufacturing population, who have, if not a universal, a very general opinion deeply scated in their mind, that the Corn Laws do enhance the price of bread, and do at the same time lower wages-that they make the manufacturing workmen pay more and receive less. If you persist in maintaining such laws, you may depend upon it that the population will not place confidence in the impartiality of your legislation. The people, upon this point of their daily food, will not at all times listen to reason; they cannot be enjoied by fullacies (cheers, and counter-cheers from the agricultural members); and I am satisfied in my own judgment, that they are not wrong in their opinion. They are right in their opinion, that with the manufacturing population of this country high prices are concurrent with low wages, and they are placed in a most unfair position when the price of bread is artificially enhanced, and at the same time the means of obtaining it are decreased (cheers), If, Sir, time would permit, I could give you conclusive evi dence, which I have before me, that this opinion is no longer confined to the manufacturing population. I could show that the agricultural population are beginning to be of the same opinion (hear, hear). I could produce evidence to show that there is a diminution of crime when prices full, and that there is an increase of crime when prices rise. can show that distemper and mortality also increase in proportion to the rise in the price of food, and that they decrease as the price of food diminishes. It has been already proved that though the wages in agricultural districts do to a certain extent rise with the price of corn, they never rise in the same proportion as the price of food (hear, hear). 1 have shown, then, the unanswerable opinion of the manufacturing population. I have said that the same opinions prevail in many districts among the agricultural and rural population. I am bound to say that I cannot declare the conclusions drawn by the manufacturing population to be unsound and untrue (hear, hear, hear); and believing them to be sound and true, and that it would be danger ous to the permanent domestic peace of the country, and that it would not be safe to resist all consideration for this opinion, I shall give my hearty and my unhesitating support to the bill now before the house (loud cheers). But I think it necessary, perhaps, that I should say, with reference to our domestic peace, there is no time to be lost (hear, hear), and that with reference to our foreign relations the measure and the time are decidedly politic. Nations trading with each other are bound over in heavy responsibilities to keep the peace. Governments may be prone to war, but if commerce be free, and if there be extended ramifications promoting the social enjoyment of each, they will consider their common good; and whatever may be the disposition of Governments to war, a people whose daily comforts are ministered to by other nations will be the friends of peace; and thus the peace of the world will be best preserved, when commerce shall extend her benefits to the great body of the people (hear, hear). The hon, gentleman who moved the present amendment made a quotation from a modern poet, and then sat down. I will, following his example, of ending with a quotation, and though mine will not be exactly from a modern poet, still it will meet the tone and the spirit in which this measure is proposed (hear, hear). In Pope's Windsor Forest there are some lines so beautiful and so appropriate to the subject of this freedom of trade, and so real a description of the measure we propose, that I may be excused for quoting them. Looking forward as he then did to the happy days when London should be a free port, be apostrophises that noble river, the Thames, which is the channel to bring to this metropolis the commerce of the world, in these words:

"The time shall come when, free assens or wind, Unbounded Thames shall flow for all mankind; Whole astions enter with each swelling tide, And seus but join the regions they divide; Earth's distant ends our glory shall behold, And the new world launch forth to meet the old."

(Loud cheers). That is a real description of the measure which we are now discussing; and I say again, let that vision-be-realised, as I am convinced it will be, by giving a second reading to this bill (lond cheers).

second reading to this bill (lond cheers).

Mr. STUART had heard with the deepest regret the attack which Sir James Graham had so unfairly made upon the Recorder of Dubin, for he attributed the basest motives to that right hon, gentleman. He was not surprised at hearing Mr. Cobden express his opinion that the Government of this country was so overridden and oppressed by the landed interest, that it was unable to bring forward measures which were deemed expedient and wise; but he did not expect to hear the same doctrine avowed by a Secretary of Bister and that too for the purpose of coercing the opinion of the House of Commons. He then proceeded to argue that there was no necessity for passing this bill, but a strong measure for throwing it out. Hitherto, the whole course of our legislation had been devised for the projection of agricultures. Which was a decided for the patiention of agricultures. Which was a decided for the patient of the bill with a landed into test in the light of this subject, because public opinion was against them. He denied the fact. The re peated iteration of the fullacies and false hands of the Anti-Corp. Law League ought not to be mintaken in that house for the opinion of the monufacturing districts; and he complained that Government had given its sanction to so mischlevous a mistako (hoar). Mr, Cobden had succeeded in his mission of terrifying the Government; and the proof of it was visible in the introduction of this bill to out down the influence of the landed interest, Mr. Cobden had declared his intention of putting down the empire of boobyism. What did that mean? What clse than that the house should be did that mean? subservient in its legislation to the clamours, but not to the sober judgment of the manufacturing population-the very advice which Sir J. Graham had inculoated that night with so much warmth and eloquence. He called upon the house to resist this Jack Cule system of legislation, and not to take their laws from the mouths of mobs in fustion jackets.

Mr. BOUVERIE was opposed to the existing Corn Laws, because they were unjust in themselves, and produced scareity, pauperism, and crime, and should gladly support the present charge in them, which was required by every consideration of wise folicy and sound benevolence. A due regard to their own interests, as well as to the peace and harmony of society, ought to induce the laudlords of England to accede to this measure; for the agricultural labourers, on whose well-being their own well-being mainly depended, were much worse off now than they were before these Corn Laws were enacted. He proved this by quoting Arthur Young's description of the condition of the peasantry of Wiltshire in his day, and by comparing it with their condition at present.

The Marquis of WORCESTER and Mr. D. GARDNER expressed their intention of voting against the Ministerial measure, on account of its injurious effects on British agriculture.

Mr. MILDMAY urged, that this bill was not necessary, and, if necessary, was not safe. As a merchant, well acquainted with the shipping interest, and the condition of trade in foreign ports, he could not express the assonishment which he felt at the extraordinary proposition of Sir R. Peel, for the annihilation of all duties on the importation of foreign corn. He must oppose it because it was not accompanied, to use the words of her Majesty's speech, "by such preductions as would prevent loss to the revenue, or injurious results to any of the great interests of the country."

Sir R. PEEτ: Sir, I think the hon, gentleman who spoke last (Mr. Mildmay) appears to have repented of the neutrality which he observed on a former occasion, and resolved to make up for that neutrality by the slaupness of his present attack. In the course of this evering I was told by a young member, the representative for Newark, that so far as this deltate has been concerned, I have been treated with particular for bearance (a laugh). Well, then, I think I might have expected that, at any rate, I should have excaped attack for the simple action of presenting a petition to the house. I did, it is true, present two petitions-one from Manchesteranother from Liverpool; and the hon-gentleman is so captious, that he finds occasion from their presentation to make an attack on me (hear, hear). All I did was to state the prayer of those petitions, and who the parties were from whom they proceeded. Those parties are connected with the manufacturing and mercantile interest, and I think the hon, gentleman, on the ground of community of occupation, might have allowed them quietly to speak for themselves (hear, hear). The petition from Manchester was signed by the President of the Chamber of Commerce of Manches. ter, a body entertaining very strong political opinions (hear, hear), and many of the members of which have been connected with that agitation which has been proceeding on the subject of the Corn Laws; but in order to show the unity of opinion upon this subject, whatever the difference of political opinion, that petition was also signed by the President of the Commercial Association, a body entertaining political opinions of an opposite tendency (cheers). They also came to the same conclusion as did all the bankers of Manchester, I think, without exception (cheers), and as did the vast majority of the manufacturers of that town connected with great manufacturing establishments (cheers). They con-curred in petitioning this house, not attributing the stagmation in trude, which the hon, gentleman says exists, to the delay which has taken phee in this house in passing there measures evelusively, but stating that stagnation and embarrassment in trade do exist and will continuo until the decision of this house shall be finally pronounced, and praying, therefore, that this house, at as early a period as may be consistent with mature deliberation, will propounce its final indement on this measure (cheers). Sir, the hon, gentleman is a proof of how exceedingly difficult it would be to devise any measure connected with the Corn Laws which shall please all parties (bear, hear). But I think the hon, gentleman stands almost along in this house upon this question. The hon, gentleman who so violently attacks the measures of the Government says, if we had proposed a cautious measure of this nature,—that the scale of duties which I propose to exist for three years should be carried into execu tion, and at the end of that period there should be a fixed duty,—he would have been inclined to vote for such a pro-posal. He has not quite made up his mind whether he would vote for it or not, but still be is so favourably disposed to-wards it that he thinks he should have been inclined to adopt it. Well, I think he is the only man in the house who would have supported that proposition. Then the hon. gentleman made another charge against me which I am sur-prised at—he says, that every Irish member ought to be indiguant with me on account of the delay that has been interposed in affording relief to the Irish people. Indignant with me, indeed (lond cheers)! Sir, I am not conscious of having omitted any opportunity of providing that relief which I thought the natural and efficacious relief (loud cheers). Circumstances may have opposed obstacles in the way of the fulfilment of my own desire; but that the hon-gentleman can have any right to rouse the indignation of Irish members against me, individually, for interposing de-Irish members against me, individually, for interposing delay, is what I could hardly have expected to hear from any member in this house (cheers). Sir, I am exceedingly unwilling, in the present stage of this protracted debate, to trouble the house with any matters partaking at all of a personal nature. If I were a private individual, I would pass by all the accusations that have been preferred against me. I am so consolous of having noted throughout from pure and honourable—motives—(loud absers—from the Opposition—benches)—I am so supported by the conviction that I have abandoned no duty and betrayed no trust—(continued cheers from the same quarter, followed by ironical shouts from the protection benches). Well, if it is your impression that I have (unraing to the protegitonists), at least, after the seguinations that have been preferred; you will conceds to me the privilege of defence, and listen with patience to the answer

I have to reake to them (loud sheers). Observe, throughout there debates I have not quarrelled with any one for offering his decided opposition to the opinious I now profess. I have respected in others the maintenance of their former opinions. I knew not by whom the measures I proposed wanld be supported on this side of the house. I can say, with truth, I tried to influence no one. I have listened to the attacks made on me with sorrow, but not with anger. think it natural that hon, gentlemen should retain their former opinions; if they do not respect in me that privilege which I concede to them, at any rate, I entreat them, from a sense of justice, to hear with patience my defence against the attories which have been made against me (loud cheers). At I said before, if I were a more private individual, strong in the conviction that I have acted from nothing but a sense of duty, and from pure and honourable motives. I would have let those accusations pass by; but I am not in the situation of a private individual, and it is right that, as a Willister of the crown, I should vindicate the course taken, us a minister, from the charges which from time to time Lave been brought against it. Sir, I know it is not regular to refer to former delintes, and I will not make express re ference to them; but I am sure the house will permit me to refer in general to questions that have been put to me, and charges that have long mode, since I had the opportunity of had addressing them on this question. It was said in the course of the best deleate that I had expressed an opinion that the charge of this measure for the edjustment of the Corn Law would have been committed with much greater populety to other bands that to mine, and yet it was observed that I had proposed to the cabinet to undertake the conduct of this accessive, and thet if the entiret had been ununinous the residuct of it would have been committed to my hand - that Here was an apparent inconsistency between the opinion that it would have been better to commit it to other hands and my undertaking, had the Cabinet concurred with me, to make the permanent adjustment of this question a conse quence of the suspension of the law. Sir, the facts are correctly stated. I did give an opinion that it would have been suffnitely better, under all ordinary circumstances, that others more entitled to the credit of the success of this measure should have lead the conduct of it; and yet it is perfectly true, that in the Cabject I did propose, if the Cabinet had con-carred with me, to undertake the proposition of this measure to Parliament. I did so under these circumstance:—On the let of November, in concurrence with my right hon, friends the Secretary of State for the Home Department and the Secretary at War, I proposed, on account of the reports from treland, to take the premution against impending danger which I thought was the natural precaution, namely, the suspension, either by order in Council or by Act of Parlia ane'nt, of those laws which prohibited the import of foreign grain. I renewed that proposition towards the close of the same month. I believe if the measure proposed to the Cabinet had been simply a suspension of the law, with a guarantee that the existing scale of duties should revive, I do not be here that there would have been any serious difference of opinion in the Cabinet—at least I am not certain there would. I think there might have been a difference of opinion as to the extent of the danger in Ireland: but I think it possible that if the measure proposed lead been merely suspension with a guarantee on my part that I would at the termination of the suspension propose the continuance of the existing law, I am not sure there would have been any difference of opinion. But I did distinctly refuse, and I admit it here, I did distinctly refuse to undertake to guarantee the revival of the existing law at the termination of the suspension, and I Gid it on grounds which I will now state. As I said before, I thought suspension was a becoming and necessary measure. The right hom gentleman the member for the University of Dublin says we were deluded by accounts from Ireland, and yet be admits that he himself was alarmed by the accounts In October, and the prevailing feeling in Ireland was that of ularm, representations having been made by bodies connected with the agricultural interests of that country cetting forth the danger. It is very easy for individuals to neglect those reports; but what is a Government to do that is responsible for the well-being of the country—deeply responsible, if famine and diseases bould come and no pracautions taken what is a Government to do receiving such reports from all quarters, from the highest authorities, from private individuals, from parties the most disinterested? The alarm may be unfounded precautions may be superfluous; but do you think that when there is good ground for expecting general and wide spread famine, Government ought to neglect to take pre-autions under such a state of affairs? I, for one would not undertake the responsibility of Government if I thought I was compelled to neglect the precautions which such a state of things required. The right hon, gentleman says we were deluded. I deny the fact altogether. I have the firmest conviction now that the impressions under which I acted in November will all be realised; but suppose we are deceived, -why, are we to sit calculating in Cabinet how much of dimelian, and dysentery, and bloody flux, a whole people can bear without making (loud cheers)? The precaution may be superfluous; but what is the danger, should the precaution be required (bear, hear)? Is it not better to err on the side of precaution (hear, hear)than on the side of the neglect of it? I say now, that with the reports that were received by the Government, we should not, in my opinion, have been justified in neglecting that precaution, and therefore I advised it (hear, hear, hear). Of course, the question arose, what will you do when the period of suspension shall have terminated? And it was a most important question; it was, will you, on that termination, undertake to guarantee the revival of the old law? I said at once I could not, and for many reasons. In the first place, in the last session of Parliament, I expressed a decided opinion that you could not long continue to apply different principles with respect to protection to agriculture from those you had applied to other interests. I am told that I surprised every one with the present measures (hear, hear). I say that in the last session of Parliament, I spoke in the debate on the resolutions of the hon, member for Wolverhampton (Mr. Villiers). I opposed those resolutions, but I stated that I could not defend the existing law upon many of those grounds on which it had been defended; I could not say that I thought the rate of wages had varied with the price of corn; I thought the rate of wages had varied with the price of corn; I could not defend the existing law on the ground that we ought to be independent of foreign supply. I stated expressly then, that in my opinion the same principles which governed your ordinary commercial policy must be applied at no remote period to agriculture. I was followed by the noble loud then the member for Sunderland, the present Farl Groy, and he stated consists that I had made use elitection to the and he stated expressly that I had made no objection to the first two resolutions; but I will quote his own words. The noble lord said,—"There was not a word in the speech of the right hon baronet contrary to the two first resolutions, and had the last resolution been worded to the effect that it was expedient all restrictions on the importation of corn should be gradually sholished, the right hon, baronst's speech would have been an unanswerable one in support of the motion." That was the statement of Lord Howick; but what was the resolution of the Protection Society in the month of December last? Was the declaration of opinion on my part so sudden and unexpected? I find the Protection Society in December last coming to this resolution, which was embodied, I think, in a polition:—"That in comsquence of the declarations made by several of the leading members of her Majesty's Government in the last session of Parliament, indicating that further reductions will be made at no distant period in the already groutly diminished amount of protection to agriculture, and in consequence of the interpretation put upon those declarations, an impression has been created, whether well or ill founded, enculated to destroy all confidence in the stability or existence of the present Corn Law, and to arrest the progress now making in the permanent improvement of the inferior soils of the That was the resolution of the Protection Society before they were aware of the measures of her Majesty's Government. (Mr. Hudson here was heard to make some observation, which was followed by loud cries of "Order.") The hon, measher for Sunderland will have an opportunity of speaking during the debate, and I hope he will abstain from interrupting me (loud cheers). I repeat therefore that when the question was put, whether I would undertake to guarantee the revival of the existing law on the termination of the temporary suspension, I distinctly said I could give no such guarantee. The revival of the existing law on the termination of the suspension must have implied the permanent continuation of that law; it must have aroused every energy in defence of it. Lords, Commons, and consti-tuencies must have united for the permanent continuance of the existing law. It was impossible that I could have been a party to any such attempt (loud cheers). Another ground on which I declined to guarantee the revival of the existing law was this: I thought the very fact of the suspension of the existing law would make it almost impossible to induce Parliament to consent to the revival of it. The law had worked tolerably well during the three preceding years, but in the first period of pressure it is suspended; on the proposal being made to revive it, the suspension would operate as an impeachment of the adequacy of the law itself on similar emergencies (hear, hear). It has been justly said, that when the noble lord (Lord John Russell), seeing the difficulty there might be in maintaining a fixed duty in the event of scarcity, proposed to lower it, or to give the Crown the power of suspending it by an Order in Council, I made a decided objection to concur in such a vote; I said it would be futile, because the Crown having once exercised the power of sus-pending the fixed duty on the importation of food, I felt assured in the present state of public opinion on the subject of the Corn Laws, it would be most difficult under any cir constances again to impose that duty (hear, hear). In this case the difficulty would have been exactly the same, or only with this difference—that the fixed duty being much lower, the impeachment of that duty would not have been so great (hear, hear). In this case the proposal would have been, the sliding scale having failed on its first exposure to a severe trial, after its suspension, to have re-enacted the principle in all its details. I do not believe that this proposion could have been maintained (hear, hear). And at what period was this revival of the existing law to have taken place? The duty might have been suspended till September next; in the month of July, a month before Parliament separates, what would have been the state of the house when t' e question would have been asked, whether the suspension should continue, or the old law be revived? Suppose there should be apprehensions which I have entertained, and do still cutertain, that this potato disease is not a mere temporary calamity; suppose we have good, if not certain grounds, suppose we have probable grounds for believing that the potato crop of next year will be affected; supposing there was, as there will be, disease in Ireland in July next in consequence of this disease, could the proposal under such cir-cumstances be made in July next that the old law should be revived (hear, hear)? And suppose you have such a July next year as you had last; suppose you have continued rains, a cold unfavourable season, such a July as you had last year, one that made "the boldest hold his breath for a time" (hear, hear), could you, under such circumstances, guarantee the revival of the old hav (hear, hear)? Sir, I am not insensible to the progress of public opinion (loud cheers). I do not say you ought to yield to that public opinion if it is against your own convictions; but I say that that man is utterly unworthy of holding office who would disregard the progress of public opinion, in considering the question whether or not the existing duties should be continued after such a suspension of them, or who, upon such a question as the Corn Laws, thinks that the state of public opinion can be utterly disregarded (bear). It has been stated that the Corn Laws were suspended in 1765, and again in 1793, and rere afterwards re enacted, and that the precedents are all in favour of their re-enaction. But can any man be so blind to the progress of public opinion on the subject of the Corn Laws since 1765 as to suppose that we can exactly apply that precedent, as to suppose that because the Legislature could re-onact the Corn Laws after a suspension in 1765, therefore we can do so now (cheers)? If you were to set upon that principle, if you were to rigidly apply such Parliamentary precedents without reference to the state of public opinion, you would involve this country in the course of a month in inextricable confusion (hear, hear). I am unwilling to make any statement new; but as I foresaw, when this proposition was made, it would break up the Government, and as I have the permission of her Majesty to give any explanation with respect to the causes which led to that dissolution of the Government, I will, rather than enter into any statement, read to the house the declaration I made of the ground on which I acted, and which, as I foresaw it would be of great importance, I made at the time in writing; that statement of my opinions I will now read. This was on the 28th of November, after the Government had instituted an inquiry into the apprehended scaroity, and taken precautions against the spread of fever that might be the consequence of that scarolly; in the instructions then issued, my right hop. friends cordially concurred. But I forceaw that the issue of those instructions would compel a suspension of the law restricting the importation of food. This is the very point: did I undertake after that suspension to propose to Parliament the adjustment of the Corn I did. and under these circumstances: I could not propose the revival of the existing law, and I thought some alight alteration, some now sliding scale with amalimodiffications of the old one, would be utterly unavailing. I helioyo that the adjustment of the Corn Laws was the legiti-mate consequence of the suspension of it, and I did undertake to do that which, under ordinary circumstance, it thought might be better done by others; I did undertake to meet the axiating amergency, and to become responsible to the consequences of the suspension; and I read that the consequences of the suspension; and I read that the dissolution of the dissolution of the continet:

"I cannot consent to the issue of these instructions, and undertake at the same time to maintain the existing Confuence of these instructions, or immediately following than, would in my opinion answer no good end. The proposal of the would add to the difficulty of defauding that portion of the Confuence of these instructions, or immediately following than you have ought to expend the operation of the existing law for a limited period. The is conflicting evidence as to the degree of pressure from the searcity of food, but there is that probability of severe pressure a few months hence that would in my opinion panyly justify the precautionary measure of unrestricted import. Whave written authority which would justify it; written authority which, should the anticipations of those from whom we receive a prove correct, would impose on us a heavy responsibility for law which, should the anticipations of those from whom we receive a precaution which has been taken in former privates of searcity in this country, and by some countries in Europe within the last few wooks. But, independently of these considerations, the issue of these instructions fully justifies, if it does he require, the temporary removal of impediments to the free in port of corn. They contain a proof not only that the crisis, great—not only that there is the probability of severe submy from the scarcity of food, but the proof that we are unrelessed on the scarcity of food, but the proof that we are unrelessed on the scarcity of food, but the proof that we are unrelessed on the scarcity of food, but the proof that we are unrelessed on the scarcity of food, but the proof that we are unrelessed on the scarcity of food, but the proof that we are unrelessed on the scarcity of these instructions placing on reconstructions. I will not refer to the preceding discussions in the Cabinet, but the issue of these instructions placing on reconstructions of the law by an Order in Council, or of calling the law by an Order in Council, or of calling the accounted for (Cheers). I therefore thought that the adjustment of the Corn Laws was the natural consequence of the suspension; I felt that it would be inconsistent with my duty to the law and then run away, leaving others to deal with the consequences of that step (cheers); and I was prepared, seeing the natural and legitimate consequence, notwish standing my declaration that under ordinary circumstances it would have been better for others to have undertaken it to undertake the responsibility of that adjournment myself. If there be any inconsistency, therefore, in the declaration of opinion as to the course which I should have thought it best to pursue under ordinary circumstances, and the comwhich I was ready to pursue in order to meet the great and pressing difficulty, I forbear from saying more on that inconsistency, but I confess I think the course I took was the natural and fitting course for a Minister to take (cheers) Well, I was in a minority in the Cabinet; I despaired of success; and therefore the Cabinet was dissolved thears. My honourable friend the member for Dorset blamed to very much for addressing a letter to her Majesty, after resigning, stating the course I intended to pursue on the sp pointment of another Government. He says that was a most unconstitutional and a most unusual act. Unusual I admit it to be, but the circumstances were altogether unusual (hear, hear). Unconstitutional I cannot admit it to That a Privy Councillor should state to he Sovereign what course under very peculiar circumstances le was prepared to pursue I cannot admit to be unconstitutional A peer has a right to seek an audience of her Majesty, and tender his advice; a Privy Councillor has a right to do also. True, my official relation to her Mujesty had terminated; I was no longer a Minister; but being a Privy Councillor I conceive I had a perfect right to intimate to her Majesty—I did it with a view of preventing embaratement—having advised certain measures, having been popared to propose them as a Minister, I had a right to state what those measures were, and that, as a private member of Parliament, I would give to them a cordial support (hes hear). And what were the of commstances under which that assurance was conveyed? My hon, friend says that I provented the formation of a Conservative Government—of a protection Government, I mean. I did no such thing the G. Bankes.—"What I said was, that you prevented a discontion of Parliament." The circumstances under which wrote that letter, which my hon. friend complains of some unconstitutional, were these—(Mr. G. Bankes.—"I let parlon. I did not gay unconstitutional.") (the then the hear," and a laugh). An hon, member, I think, told the house that he did not say "gross exaggeration," but "great exaggeration" (laughter), and now my hon, friend tells us, that he did not say "unconstitutional," but "unprecedented and dangerous." Unprecedented! and were not the circum stances nuprecedented (hear hear). stances unprecedented (hear, hear)? I felt it my dutymy right hon friends around me took the same view, and felt it their duty—to quit her Majesty's service; it was difficulty intimated to me that those of my colleagues who differed from me were not fered from me were not prepared to form a Government them selves, nor yet to advise the formation of a Government open the principle of protection; the noble lord (Lord J. Rasett) and Lord Lansdowns declined to undertake the Government. the principle of protection; the hole to the said Lord Lansdowne declined to undertake the Government until they had an assurance that others, who must be prounted to have a majority, were not ready to undertake the sumed to have a majority, were not ready to undertake the forest the noble lord was in a minority of 10, and it was proposed the noble lord was in a minority of 10, and it was proposed to not a Government;—the circumstances were unusualtion of a Government;—the circumstances were unusualtion of a Government;—the circumstances were unusualtion of a Government;—the circumstances were unusualtion of a Government;—the circumstances were unusualtion of a Government;—the circumstances were unusualtied to the surface of surance to her Majosty that the measures on the subject of surance to her Majosty that the measures on the subject of the Gorn Law which I was willing to propose as a limited of the circumstance of the surface of the surface of the circumstance of the surface of the surface of the circumstance of the surface of the surface of the circumstance of the surface of the surface of the circumstance of the surface o until they had an assurance that others, who must be pr is becau nothing degree anja, he and my a goisi*r* have be advise a enmstat tariff, de յոսշել հ That in deut" (existing of any election peressu previou mently, be fuse the Iris as an o Mr. Pit "The

Bu astire

mot tofully wi
Parlian Locant discuss of recog adapter ment c imports nonlori na exte up and when y Wales,
Im tha its own relector the are of usur TLen, would i the exc Cathol
g Wh friends such as Green I

stoad, stoad, ciple, c should the should the should the should the should another coate o Row to ground this er There demoes liamen process open the process of the process which

I have honour answer itself—dor-the state o diffy the that we hop, go with m plo rec Why.

it will to a po good a altered permit any such question, by enabling her Majesty to inform the noble lord of the course I had myself taken; and as others were not prepared to form a Government, I felt it my duty to intimate to her Majosty that I would cordially support the measures I had advised in office. If it is unprecedented, it is because the circumstances are unprecedented; but I see nothing in it either blameable or dangerous in the slightest degree as an example (hear, hear). But my hon friend asys, he did not object to it as impeding the formation of a protection Government, but as preventing a dissolution; and my bon, friend, and others have blamed me for not advising a dissolution of Parliament. In my opinion it would have been utterly inconsistent with the duty of a Minister to advise a dissolution of Parliament under the particular circomstances in which this question of the Corn Law was placed. Why should it be so utterly impossible for this Par liament to deal with the present proposition? After its elec-tion in 1841, this Parliament passed the existing Corn Law, which diminished protection; this Parliament passed the tailf, destroying altogether the system of prohibition with respect to food; this Parliament passed the Canada Corn Bill; why should it exceed the functions of this Parliament to entertain the present proposition (cheers)? But, upon much higher ground, I would not consent to a dissolution. That indeed, I think, would have been "a dangerous precedeut" (hear, hear, hear), for a Minister to admit that the existing legislature was incompetent to the entertainment of any question, that is a precedent which I would not establish (load cries of "hear, hear"). Whatever may have been the circumstances that may have taken place at an election, I never would sanction the view that any House of Commons is incompetent to entertain a measure which is necessary for the well-being of the community (hear, hear). If (on were to admit that doctrine you would shake the foundations on which many of the best laws are placed (hear, hear). Why, that doctrino was propounded at the time of the union between England and Ireland, as it had previously been at the time of the union between England and Scotland; it was maintained in Ireland very vehemently, but it was not maintained in this country by Mr. It was slightly adverted to by Mr. Sheridan at the time when the message with regard to the union was dellvered. Parliament had been elected without the slightest remon to believe it would resolve that its functions were to he fused and mixed with those of another legislature, namely, the Irish Parliament; and Mr. Shoridan slightly hinted it as an objection to the competency of Parliament. Mr. Pitt net that objection, at the outset, in the following manner.

Poblis Relins

"The first objection is, what I heard alluded to by the hon, gentleman opposite to me, when his Majesty's message was brought down; namely, that the Parliament of Ireland is incompetent to entertain and discuss the quostion, or rather, to act upon the measure proposed without having previously obtained the consent of the people of Ireland, their constituents. This point, Sir, is of so much importance that I think I ought not suffer the opportunity to pass without illustrating more fully what I mean. If this principle of the incompetency of Parliament to the decision of the measure be admitted, or if it becontended that Parliament has no legitimate authority to discuss and decide upon it, you will be driven to the necessity of recognising a principle the most dangerous that ever was adopted in any civilised state—I mean the principle that Parliament cannot adopt any measure new in its nature, and of great importance, without appoaling to the constituent and delegating authority for directions. If that doctrine be true, look to what an extent it will earry you. If such an argument could be set up and maintained, you acted without any legitimate authority when you created the representation of the Principality of Wales, or of either of the counties palatine of England. Every law that Parliament ever made, without that appeal, either as to its own frame and constitution, as to the qualification of the elected as to the great and fundamental point of the succession to the crown, was a breach of treaty and an act of treaty and an act of turn parties.

Then, Mr. Pitt asked, if they turned to Ireland herself, what would they say to the Protestant Parliament that destroyed the exclusive Protestant franchise, and admitted the Roman Catholies to vote, without any fresh appeal? He went on:

"What must be said by those who have at any time been friends to any plan of Parliamentary reform, and particularly such as have been most recently brought forward, either in Great Britain or Ireland? Whatever may have been thought of the propriety of the measure, I never heard any doubt of the temperature of Parliament to consider and discuss it. Yet I defy any man to maintain the principle of those plans, without contending that, as a member of Parliament, he possesses a right to concur in disfranchising those who sent him to Parliament, and to select others, by whom he was not elected, in their stead. I am sure that no sufficient distinction, in point of principle, can be successfully maintained for a single moment; nor should I deem it necessary to dwell on this point in the manner trat I do were I not convinced that it is connected in part with all those false and dangerous notions on the subject of government which have lately become too prevalent in the world."

Mr. Pitt contended, therefore, that Parliament had a right to after the succession to the throne, to incorporate with itself another Legislature, to disfranchise its constituents, or associate others with them. Why, is it possible for a Minister now to advise the Crown to dissolve Parliament, on the ground that it is incompetent to entertain the question, what this country shall do with the Corn Law (hear, hear)? There could not be a more dangerous example, a more purely democratical precedent, if I may so say, than that this Parhament should be dissolved on the ground of its incom-Purey to decide upon any question of this nature. I am open to the charge, therefore, if it be one, that I did advise her Majesty to permit this measure to be brought forward in the present Parliament (hear). Now I am not aware of any other matter of more personal character brought forward against me, there is no one part of my personal conduct, of which I am not ready to give a full explanation (cheers); if I have omitted any, it has been unintentionally, and if any honourable member has any question to put to me, I will answer it (renewed cheers). Then I come to the question itself—Is it for the public interest—is it advisable, that, under the present der the present circumstances of this country, in the present Hale of public opinion, we should now either refuse to modify the law, in order to meet the case of Irish distress, or that, having modified it, we should have a new Corn Law, or that having modified it, we should have a new Corn Law, or that we should try to adjust permanently this question? The hon, gentleman who spoke last says, "You might have dealt with maize and nothing else; maize is the food the Irish people require, and with maize and nothing else?" ple require, and why not admit maize and nothing else?"
Why, if you want to undermine this Corn Law effectually, it will be done by taking such a course as that by holding ou It will be done by taking such a course as that—by nothing out to a people suffering under severe privation that maize is food food enough for them, and that the law us to maize shall be altered; but that as to wheat, barley, and oats, you will not perpit a letter of the law to be touched (hear, hear). If you were to vanish to make with an experiment upon Pablic opinion, you would troube a storm of indignation against the law you attended to main the sould are would make it impossible to maintain it (cheers). And what is it you would do with respect to maize? There is a duty of 8s. on it now. Our doctrine is, that the Government cannot support the people of Iroland; that we can do nothing with out earnost local exertions; we all say that those local exertions ought to be made, that the duties of charity are imperative though they cannot be fegally enforced, that it is the duty of the landlords of Ireland, and of all classes possessing property, to co-operate with us in mitigating the evils of this great calamity. It is all very well for us to pay the duty upon maize or outs, paying with one hand and taking with the other, as we distribute it to the people; but what are we to say to those whom we are incling to acts of charity? Are we to say to them, that potatoes are failing, and other food must be supplied, but that they shall pay an 8s. duty upon maize, and an 18s. upon wheat, and there shall be no relaxation of that law? Say what you will about this Irish distress, mitigate it as much as you please-do you think it would be possible (even with the extent to which you cannot deny that it exists), to vote half a million of money from the English treasury for the support of the Irish people, and to incite Irish proprietors to acts of charity, and to the purchase of food for the support of the famishing people, and yet, in the face of every country in Europe that is at this moment threatened with scarcity, Holland and Belgium, the Russian provinces, and within these four or five days the whole kingdom of Bavaria and after they have adopted that which the heart of every man tells him is the natural precaution to take, namely, the removal of impediments to the free import of food; yet you say that you will make no relaxation whatever in the existing Corn Laws (cheers)? I believe that would be hardly The right hon, gentleman, the member for the University of Public (Mr. Shaw), says be cannot deny that there does exist a great scarcity in Ireland. I took down his words. What said he? He said, "I cannot deny that there is a great scarcity, and also that there is great danger of disease; but these are common things in Ireland, -this is the normal state of Ireland" (hear, hear). " A large por tion of the Irish people," said he, "are always living on the verge of destitution. There has been no year in my recollection when the same statement as to disease might not be made" (hear, hear). Well, be it so; that, you will say, goes some way to millify the argument in favour of the present proposition. But, in the face of that declaration, will you tell me that this is a labourer's question? Will you say that the maintenance of protection is for the benefit of the Irish agricultural labourer, if protection has brought him to this hear, hear)? In that part of the United Kingdom which is almost exclusively agricultural, which may be said to depend on agriculture, has protection brought you to thisthat, speaking of the agricultural labourers, a large portion of the Irish people are "always living on the verge of destitution?" Is it true, "that there has been no year within your recollection when the same statement might not have been made?" Well, he it as you say. Admit that this is the permanent, the usual state of Ireland,—does that afford any strong argument for the maintenance of the existing Corn Laws (cheers)? But you will answer, if that has been the permanent state of Ireland, why did not you intro duce this measure before (hear)? Surely, however, that is no reason against our doing it now (cheers). You are so pressed by the force of the argument, that the only answer you can make is, "Why did you not do it before?" no doubt we might have done it before. Perhaps we have neglected at former periods our duty; but is that any reason why weshould neglect it at present? If you have a potato-fed people, and consequently many millions depending on the supply of an article of food like the potato, subject to such diminution of quantity and deterioration of quality as we have been visited with in this year, -if that be the permanent state of Ireland, does it not afford a paramount reason for attempting to effect some permanent change, and not merely supplying a temporary remedy (cheers and cries of "hear")? I think to do nothing would be impossible (hear, hear). To modify the existing law—to propose as a permanent system such a change in the law as that proposed by the honourable member for Southampton a sliding scale for three years and then a fixed duty-such a change as that would only encourage agitation on the one hand, while by the agricultural body it would be rejected with scorn-laughed at-scouted. Such an arrangement would effect no good, produce no benefit. Then what is Is there any alternative but trying to lay the foundation for an ultimate adjustment by repealing those laws (hear, hear)? My firm conviction is, that it is for the interest of all, of the agricultural interest in particular, that this in the present state of affairs is the safest course thear, hear). The hon, member for Newark asked me repeatedly whether I meant to ruin the agricultural interest? attach the utmost importance to the prosperity of the agri-cultural interest (a general cry of "oh!" and ironical cheers from the protection benches). Why, I don't know for what from the protection benches). Why, I don't know for what reason I have not as much right to feel an interest in the prosperity of agriculture as any of those who received that sentiment with scorn (hear, hear). Why, what possible interest can I have to injure that interest (loud cheers)? I attach the utmost importance to it. I think, for great political reasons, it is of the atmost importance that the agricultural interest should have great weight and authority in the government of this country. I think, with Burke, that land is the safest basis of political power in this country. He says, "All the writers," and he quotes Aristotle as speaking of the Grecian States, and Cicero as speaking of Rome, "all the writers on politics have attached the winest importance. the writers on politics have attached the utmost importance to land, and have declared that it is the safest basis of a sound and permanent Government." I concur in that opinion, and deeply should I deplore the day when the landed interest of this country would be excluded from its full share in the councils and the legislation of this country. But Burke adds, with equal truth, that fortunately for this country, land has directed its councils, the rouson being that the landed aristocracy and landed proprietors have never been as a class dissociated from the general interest, but subas a class dissociated from the general interest, but subjecting themselves to the influence and the progress of public opinion, and proving their unity of interest with all (loud cheering). Why, that is just the question. By what means shall we secure the continuance in their just in fluence of the landed interest in this country? Is it by fluence of the landed interest in this country? Is it by maintaining your privileges on the ground of the exclusion of food (a cry of "Oh!" from the protection benches, answered by cheers from the Opposition)? Well, then, on the ground of taxation on the importation of foreign corn? (hear hear). I will call it by which name you wish; it is not, certainly, the "exclusion" of food (hear, hear). But the question is, will it more conduce to the permanent, just, and legitimate influence of the land in this country that these Corn Lays should at length be repeated, or that they should be continued in all their integrity (hear, bear)? Now, my firm conviction - accuse me of treachery if you please that you will fortify and maintain the influonce of the land by this arrangement, rather than, in the present state of publie feeling, by instating on maintaining the present have (cheers). Look, by way of instance at the tax on butter. That, at any rate, is not a tax of 400 or 500 years' standing The taxes on butter and choese were introduced within the last 20 or 30 years. Why should the removal of those taxes be construed into any assault on the privileges of the fanded interest (hear, hear). Let us consider the bearing of this question of the Corn Laws on the great interest of this country, upon the land and the landed aristocracy, the legitimate influence of which I hope to see maintained for ever. have to deal with a population which by the last census, that of 1811, consisted of about 19,000,000 of people. I am excluding Ireland, though, if I took in the population of treland, it would greatly fortify the argument. Our population, now increased to more than 20,000,000, was in 1811 19,000,000 Now, how is that population divided? You have of the agricultural interest about 1,500,000 persons, not including women and children. You have of handed propertors, of farmers and occupiers, and male and female labourers above and under 20 employed in agriculture, about 1,500,000. You have of labourers employed in other occupations 7d1,000 including all those classes of labourers, the rainers and quarriers, and so on, Then you have of persons engaged in concuerce, trade, and manufactures, 3,110,000; 200,000 belonging to professions, or educated persons following miscellaneous pursuits; 511,000 returned as independent persons, living on their own property; and 209,000 paupers, function, and so on. now, what a large proportion of that great mass of population. of 19,000,000 consists of persons who earn their subsistence by the land. Of those, what an enormous proportion there must be of persons whose families subsist on weges below 30s, a-week! Now, just consider how taxation, apart from food, bears on that class of the people (hear, hear). You raise about 32,000,000% by the Customs and Excise. Let us take the articles which enter into the consamption of a family living on less than 30% a week. I have returns here of the articles in weekly use by families of that class. What They are, butter, cheese, a little meat, bacon. lard, candles, soup, and a little tobacco. Now, it cannot be denied that there is scarcely one of these articles that is not faxed. It is, in my opinion, inevitable that you should raise a great portion of your taxes by indirect taxation, and whilst you do that the burden must be unequal (bear, hear). It is my belief that you have established a great claim upon the conflicence and the gratitude of this country by the course you took some time since as respects the public burdens. You did take on yourselves the annual contribution of 5,000,000% by means of the income tax, that you might relieve the labouring classes (hear, hear). Now, in order that I may be perfectly accurate, I have here an account of the consumption of a labourer receiving 10s, a week in the sum mer and 9s, a week in the winter. It is an actual return of the consumption of this man and his family he had a wife and one child. It appears that he bought four gallons of bread, a pound and a laif of cheese, some bacon, some salt beef, some butter, some tea, some sugar, some, candles, some samp. Now, with the exception of candles, the duty on which we removed recently, every one of those articles is subject to taxation (hear, hear). By the present fariff we have removed the duty on bacon and on salt beef, and we have diminished the duties on butter and cheese. I ask you, can you repent of having made these alteration (cheers)? The man of whom I am speaking died; he left a widow, and the child survived. The widow carned 4s, 6d, a week, and the guardians allowed 1s. 6d. a-week for the child. Now, this was her weekly expenditure: -Sho paid for rent 1s. 6d. a week; candles and sonp. 14d.; butter, 24d.; ten, 14d.; sugar, 2d.; leaving Is. 8d. for firing, shoes, &c., which it will be admitted it must be very difficult to buy out of such a sum, Even here we see the pressure of bixation on this woman. Some is taxed, butter is taxed, ten is taxed, sugar is taxed (hear, hear). Now, I will also take the weekly expenditure of a person spending more wages, -of a Yorkshireman,-living more comfortably, and spending more money. These from which I am quoting are bona fide instances of expenditure. This man carned Lis. or 10s, a week, of which he spent 11s., and it was thus applied: - Meat, 2s.; sugar, 7d.; yeast, 3d.; candles, 33d.; butter, 8d.; sonp, 3d.; tea and coffee 1s. 6d.; oatmenl, 74d. These items of expenditure amount together to 6s. ld. per week. And in wheat the weekly expenditure was 8s. out of the 1 ts. Every week be has to buy 3 stone of flour, which would cost of late years 2s. 8d. per stone, making the weekly expenditure in flour 8s. The remainder, therefore, is 6s., for we find that, in the class of which I speak, where wheat is the chief food, by far the greater portion of the weekly expenditure is in the purchase of There will be something in tea, somewheat alone. thing in outment, something in tobacco; but always more than one-half is in flour. Well, then, supposing the effect of this law is to cause some reduction in the price of wheat, pray let us ask ourselves this question: supposing that such is the effect, are you not thus adding to the comforts and to the enjoyments of millions of your fellow-subjects (cheers)? Let me assure you that this is by far the most important part of the question (cheers). It is impossible to deny—you know that I gave you credit for it—the real sympathy which you have for the interest and the condition of the working classes of this country. Yes, I don't agree at all with those who make imputations against you—against your humanity; and I do believe, that among the gentlemen of England there is sincere sympathy with the suffering of the poor, and much of an innest desire to make better the condition of the working classes. Is would almost say that there is more than among any other class (cheers). And I do ask you to follow me in this calculation, and to consider this question in the light in which I have put it. You cannot increase direct taxation with any very great effect. I believe you would if you could (hear, hear). You raise 7,000,0001, on stamps, 5,000,0001, on the property tax ; you raise 4,000,000% from the assessed taxes, and there are limits to raising more. If you add to the Income-tax, you are not benefiting the poor (bear, hear). You may easily increase the taxation on capital, but in thus burdening the riob, may you not be injuring the poor more than by indirect taxation (hear, hear). Adam Smith says, "The first maxim with respect to taxation is, that every man contributes to the taxation of the state in proportion to the revanue which he adjoys under the projection of the state." Can we now say that we are able to act on that principle? I doubt that whather, in that case, taxation as we have does not fall heavier on the poor than it does upon as—the richer men (hear, hear); and it is because they have not the same means of evolving it they cause they have not the same means of avoiding it; they cannot leave the country, as we can. They cannot resort to a country where the rate of taxation is less. They are fixed to the soil, to the labour from which they can alone derive substatence; and therefore, I say the burden of such a taxa-tion does fall more heavily upon the u than upon us (hear). If you increase your assessed taxes, or your stamp duties, or your income tax, it by no means follows that you are thereby doing a benefit to the poor; and, therefore, indirect taxation, in reference to these circumstances is more advan tageous than direct taxation. But, then, look how many of the articles which enter into weekly subsistence are already highly taxed. And then comes the question of rent. It consists of more than one fourth of the whole; and, certainly, when you say that there will be a reduction in rents and the danger is, there will be also some reduction in the prices of whent—you do not express a very extended sympathy with those with whom corn is an article of such primary importance. The noble lord the member for Lynn (Lord George Bentinck) would have me may what was my calculation with respect to the future price of corn; I had repeatedly declined (hear, hear). I know not how it is possible for any human being to make a calculation of the probable price of corn hereafter (hear, hear). But the noble lord said, as you would not answer that question, there is another which you shall answer; and he said that in the year 1835 the price of wheat on the average for the year vas 30s. a-quarter. I may have made a mistake in mention ing the year, but, of course, I meant the year in which the average was 30s.; that was in 1855. And the noble lord says that he insists on telling me what would have been the price at which corn could have been imported, supposing that there had been no duty, in the year 1835. I then said to the noble lord that I am not prepared to admit that in that case there would have been a reduction in the price of corn; I am not prepared to admit, as a necessary consequence, if there had been established for some time previously a Free Trade in corn, that there necessarily would have been in the year 1835 a lower price than 39s. That was my state-ment; and does the noble lord think it a monstrous one, because he has got a list of some quarters of corn which have been brought into this country at 30s. (hear, hear)

Lord G. BENTINCK: They were returns which I read. Sir R. PEEL: I do not doubt the accuracy of them; but it is completely beside the question (bear, hear). It is no sort of proof whatever, because in the year 1835 you bought at Dantzic certain quarters of corn at this price, that, therefore, had Free Trade existed, it could have been imported at less than 35s. (hear, hear). I will give the noble lord my reasons for maintaining my proposition, in opposition to his. I say there is no arguing, on this point, from the prices of corn upon the Continent in any given year when the markets of this country have not been freely opened (hear, hear). The noble lord relies on Parliamentary returns; I also rely on Parliamentary returns. You say that Mr. Jacobs, a man of great knowledge and of great experience with regard to the Corn Laws, was sent, in the year 1827, to the Continent to report upon the state of the foreign markets. You will find in Mr. Incob's report this principle laid down. He says, that in consequence of your excluding foreign corn by your high duties there was an accumulation in many ports (hear). He then goes on to say, "It is this accumulation, not the supply which would regularly reach us, were no prohibition in existence, that depresses the agricultural interests by the exaggerated representations of its amount when we have abundant harvests, and by the too rapid influx whenever the barvests here are deficient. I cannot think that in the year 1822 and 1823 wheat would have sunk so low as 38s, per quarter, if the ports had been opened to foreign grain, and the surplus of Continental Europe had been sent to this country each year as it arose. The penning up of wheat in countries of small extent soon creates a glut in such countries, although the quantity really accumulated there may be very minute, and such as if distributed here would produce no sensible decline in price. A few thousand quarters of wheat, for instance, in Holstein, Mccklenburgh, or Denmark, for which there was no foreign market, would reduce the price even below half the cost. Needy sellers must take what is officied, and reluctant buyers will offer a very low A small sale fixes a price in such cases." the British consuls were required, in 1841, to state what quantity of grain of each kind could be experted to England from the countries in which they respectively resided, if the trade in corn were made constantly free at a moderate duty. What were the answers upon those returns? The general average was 10s. 6d. free on board; the general average of freight was 4s. 11 l. At these four ports the average price, free on board, and the average freight per quarter, were as follows:

		Average price free on board, ' (Freight pe quarter.
			A ,	d.	1	P.	d.	Ħ.
Peteraburgh			30	.1		4	o to	Δ
Dantzie	• •		40	Ü.		3	-
Blettin			40	0		4	O to
Hamburgh		35 to	16	á		,	11 14

Relying, then, on the opinion of Mr. Jacob, and on these returns, I again repeat I am not prepared to admit that with Froe Trade in corn the price of wheat would be reduced be-low that of 30a, which was the price in 1835. In the year 1822, of which Mr. Jacob speaks, and in the year 1835, what were the facts? You had no foreign imports whatever thenr, hear). You completely excluded foreign corn. It was not foreign competition that depressed your prices; but, with full protection, you had in 1822 prices at 38s., and in 1835 at 39s. In 1822 you moved for a committee on agricultural distress. You stated that the agricultural interest was suffering so severely that it was necessary to inquire what remedies could be applied; and therefore observe the complete exclusion of foreign corn does not insure you either from depressions of prices, or from agricultural distress requiring Parliamentary inquiry. In 1835, also, there was no foreign competition; but the depression of price to 30s. was caused entirely by the abundance of your own harvest. In 1830, as in 1822, it being impossible in either case to allege that the competition of foreign corn had either produced depression or caused distress, a Parliamentary committee was appointed to consider what remedies could be devised. Looking at the population, looking at the taxes imposed on articles of daily consumption, considering what immense masses of people are dependent for the subsistence of their families on earnings amounting to less than 30s. a week, how great a part of their exponditure was on bread, and of what great importance the price of wheat was as regards their domestic economy, could you do anything more to benefit their social condition than to give them the assurance that they shall have provisions at a moderate mice? There might be no great depression of price; but if Free Trade in corn give you a guarantee against such variations in price, that guarantee would be an inestimable advantage. Supposing the price of corn not depressed below 50s. or 54s., yet if you take a guarantee by extending the means of supply that the price will not rise above 70s. or 80s., you will confer an inestimable advantage upon the working classes (loud cheers) The honourable gentleman cannot surely share in the alarm which has been expressed on this point, because he has himself proved that a more extended supply of cotton and indigo tends to steadiness of price. Supposing, it is said, our supply of wheat should fail, and other countries should combine to refuse to supply us with food, what should we have to rely on? But other interests will arise, and if the new tariff and the new Corn Law should pass the legislature, I think it is impossible to apprehend that there would be a combina-tion of foreign powers. I doubt the fact. Taking the whole of the measures together, I do not apprehend the existence of a scarcity from a combination of foreign nations. It is said that I have in view the interest of the manufacturing classes. I think you cannot deny that those who are connected with our commerce and manufactures, and who carn their subsistance by their daily labour, have a direct and immediate interest in a moderate price of corn. But the fair claim of the agricultural labourer I also admit. I say the farmers and agricultural labourers have an equal interest in this question with those engaged in commerce, and with the other classes of the community, and if we continued under a system of protection, could we expect a prosperous and contented class of agricultural labourers in this country? Can we say that throughout the country the condition of our agricultural labourers is such? ("Yes," from Colonel, Sibthorp). I say "No." But it is said that the wages of the agricultural labourer vary with the price of food-in the same way as those of the manufacturing labourer I deny it altogether (hear, hear). In the case of the manufacturing labourer his wages are more likely to vary inversely with the price of food; and as to the agricultural labourer there is no direct connection between his wages and the price of wheat. If it is not so, account for this:-If the wages of the agricultural labourer vary in a direct ratio with the price of wheat, why should wages be 13s. 10d. in Kent, and 13s. in Lincolnshire? In the purely agricultural district of Wilts wages are about 13s., I think; in Kent, the wages of the agricultural labourer are high-not less than 13s. Now come to districts purely agricultural, and the most removed from the influence of manufactures; take the counties of Somerset, of Wiltshire, of Cornwell; I say as you advance from these purely agricultural districts towards the manufacturing districts, you will find the price of agricul-tural labour increase (henr, hear). You will say that there is a sympathy between the agricultural and the manufacturing interests (hear, hear). In the south-west of England, which is purely agricultural, the wages of labour are extremely low; as you advance towards the midland counties, ---in Nottinghamshire, for example, the wages are 14s. In Warwickshire, Staffordshire, Yorkshire, Lancashire, you will find they vary. What stronger proof can you have, that the prosperity of our manufactures not only create a demand for agricultural products, but seem to affect the wages of the agricultural labourer? But take the agricultural districts of Norfolk and Suffolk, and the south-west of England, and tell me whether there is any direct ratio between the price of wheat and wages. [An hon, member said "Lincolnshire"] There great skill is required; it is not naturally fertile, but brought into fertility by mere skill and capital, and skill and capital have had there the same effect as in the manufacturing districts; they have raised the price of agricultural labour. That is what I want to show. Two circumstances affect the wages of the agricultural labourer, skill and capital, as applied in Lincolnshire, and as they are applied in the manufacturing districts. [Colonel Sibthorp made some remark.] In Wilts, Devon, and Dorset, with a protection of 18s. a quarter, corn does not vary, and yet the ratio of wages varies; and I think the gallant member, without much exertion of his logical faculties (a laugh), must see that there are other causes for the increase of the wages of labourers. But can you say that, in the purely agricultural districts, the condition of the labourer is as we would wish it to be? appeal to you, and I feel confident that you will answer the appeal,-do you not admit that the social condition of millions, agricultural or manufacturing, is one of paramount consideration in the present state of the country (hear)? Have you read the sanitory reports? Are you not convinced that some efforts should be made to improve the social condition of the great mass of the population? Our first object should be their social improvement, and whatever efforts you may make by promoting increased cleanliness, by education, by providing comfortable cottages, the first attempt at social improvement should be by providing abundance of food (hear, hear). If there be either the suffering or the apprehension of scarcity, you cannot expect that people who have to bear that trial will come to be educated, or will improve their dwellings. The first decision you must come to is to increase the supply of food. The experience of the last three years and of the three preceding years do read a lesson to us, which we ought never to forget, as to the effects which are produced upon the social condition and the moral habits of the working classes, comparing years of abundance with years of scarcity. Now, in the purely agricultural districts, is it possible to say that the rate of wages hears any direct ratio to the price of wheat ("It does," from Col. Sibtherp)? I will demonstrate that it does not. I do not mean to say that there is not some variation; that where wheat is high, there is not an occasional increase of wages; but I will demonstrate to you that the rate of wages does not vary in any proportion to the variation in the price of food. Take all the counties. I will quote no figures which I shall not be ready to communicate to any gentleman connected with the county referred to. Now let us take the seven years from the year 1837 to the present time. I requested to have an account, drawn up from actual payments for particular farms, of the wages actually paid to agricultural labdurers from 1837 to 1844 inclusive. I will begin with the prices of agricultural labour from 1837 to 1×14 inclusive, at Sodbury Union in Gloucestershire. The lubourers there received during that time money and also beer. Here I have the account of their weges for a summer week and a winter week during each of those years. Now, since 1837, the price of corn has varied very much. Even in the present year the price of wheat has varied from 45s. 1d. to 58s. 3d., and the variation in the prices since the year 1837 has been very considerable. The price of wheat in 1837 was 55s. 10d. a quarter; in 1838, it was 6ts. 7d.; in 1830, 70s. 8d.; in 1840, 60s. dd.; in 1841, 68s. dd.; in 1842, 57s. 3d.; in 1843, 50s. Id.; in 1814, 51s. 3d.; in 1815, 55s. 10d. (hear, hear). Therefore the price of wheat varied in this period from a minimum of otte. Id. to a measurum of 70s. 8d. Now I know that writers on political economy have said that the ultimate tendency of wages is to accommodate themselves to the price of food, but

I do not believe it (hear, hear). At any rate they only my the ultimate tendency, but I should like to know what con solation that is for a man who is passing 10 years of his his without any variation of his wages for the batter, in propos tion to the rise of the price of food, that the ultimate ten dency of the two things is to approximate (hear, hear). What consolation is it to find the price of corn 70s. 8d. in 1830, and 50s. 1d. in 1848, but that he must not despair; and that his wages will approximate in time to the price he pay for his food? What is the use of such a tendency to him! But I do not believe in the tendency even (hear, hear). think the tendency is rather a tendency to substitute pois toes for wheat as the food of the working man (hear, hear I am not trying to answer acrimony for acrimony, but to be before you what I believe to be the real state of things in this country. In this view, what is the allotment system which we adopt, and many of us put in practice so belete. lently? Taking individual cases it is, no doubt, productive of great advantage to the labourer. I believe every car of us is trying to introduce it so far as he has the means and undoubtedly the system is a great comfort to the labourer—a comfort to him independently of other con siderations, such as that it attuches him to the soil, it makes him a landed proprietor, it awakers him to the value of peace and social order. But what is it as a system? Is in ffect to raise the price of wages? Is it not rather to sal stitute an Irish peasantry for the English labourer? To substitute potatocs as his food instead of wheaten bread You will find it will be so—that potatoes are substituted for wheaten bread as that system increases, and that yet will have here that great calamity which you have no Ireland, though in an ameliorated shape. I should think it a great calemity that potatoes should be substituted for wheat as the food of the labourers in this commitand I believe that to imbue the labouring population with a taste for better food would be to confer on then a much greater advantage (bear). I therefore think that the allotment system may be productive of evil effects if a increases too much. But, mark this, just in proportion tolk depressed condition of the labourer is the sum he has to par for wheat. The labourer who has an allotment has, as we know, so much the more to help out his wages with, and to pay for his wheat with. Allotments, therefore, have a todency to benefit the labourer. I have only been speaking a to what is the ultimate effect that the system may have in substitute potatoes for wheat, as the food of the labouing classes. I have taken the variations in the price of wheel I will now take the variations in the rate of labour for the same period as before, the last ten years, but I must mask that the tables I am about to cite do not show the whole amount of wages carned, for in harvest time some additions are usually made by the labourer to his carnings. These, however, are made every year, and therefore may be sturout of the table for the purpose of considering the variations in the rate. From the same union of Sodbury, in Glonetershire, I have an account of the prices for winter and suc mer averages. In 1837 the average payment was !s. pa money and 1s. in beer per-week. The total average of weekly wages for winter and summer, in 1837, was 10s. (a) 1838, 11s.; 1830, 11s.; 1840, 11s.; 1841, 11s; 1842, bs: 1843, 10s.; 1844, 10s. Therefore, while the price of wheat varied from 78s, to 51s, a quarter, the rate of wages vanid only from 10s. to 11s. in this union. From Blanfood in Dorsetshire, we had this reply:—"The statement on the other side was given me by four different yeomen. It is only the first-rate labourer that gets 9s. in these puts unless at piece work or extra times; and then if the exact hours were reckoned up which the men work at piece week. I do not think it would average more than 88, to 98, with the best men." Now, at that place the average wages were in 1837, 78.; 1838, 88.; 1839, 88.; 1810, 88.; 1844, 8.; 1842, 88.; 1848, 8. Therefore, whilst the place of corn had varied from 70s. 8d. to 3/1s. 1d., it was 48s. 6d. in 1836; wages have only varied from 7s. to is a week (hear, hear). There were extra earnings, such is piecework, harvesting, &c., as I am aware; but those, for the reason I have given, I do not reckon; they might probably amount to Is, more each week. That is the statement of one of these yeomen near Blandford. Another farmer states that wages in 1837 were 7s.; in 1838, 7s.; in 1833, 8s.; [840] 8s.; 1841, 8s.; 1842, 8s.; 1843, 8s.; 1844, 8s.—a variation of only is, in the rate of wages, notwithstanding the guel variation in the price of wheat during the same period. will take the rate of wages again. In Cornwall, in the union of Bodmin, a person writes, "In reply to your letter of the 8th inst., I beg to state that the rate of wages in this union has not varied from 1837 to 1844. Labourers have been used. the habit of receiving 8s. or 9s. per week during the while of this period. Those who have had 9s. per week, have be a supplied with wheat by their employers at 8s. per imperial bushel, and barley at is.; whilst those who have received 5, por week have had to pay 6s. 8d. for wheat, and is, til. for lat ley, whatever may have been the price of grain" (hear) Then from Burnstople there is this communication: " have inquired of several farmers) esiding in various parts of this union the amount of agricultural wages during the years from 1837 to 1844 inclusive, and have ascertained that in general, the sum paid was 8s. per week; some few farmers gave 08.; but a much greater number only 78. No rise of fall appears to have taken place during the eight year in question, except that in very dear seasons some employers supplied their labourers with corn at a reduced price; but I am inclined to think that they were not very numerous. will now take East and West Suffolk; and first, East Suffolk "The variation of wages in this neighbourhood has been from 8s. to 10s. a week from 1835 up to the present time; and within that period the price of flour has varied from 1s. 3d. to 2s. 10d. the stone of 14lbs." That is to set, the wages from the control of the latest of the lates the wages increased one fifth, while the price of flour had more than doubled. The communication proceeded, "The supply of labour is greater than the demand in this neighbourhood; and the price of labour is, in fact, what ise farmer chooses to give; but he invariably raises his wages and lowers them with the price of corn (cries of their), and lowers them with the price of corn (cries of their), but he invariably raises his wages and lowers them with the price of corn (cries of their), and lowers the with the price of corn (cries of their), and lowers the with the price of their had not once see that 8s. n-week with flour at 1s. 3d. is better at once see that 8s. n-week with flour at 1s. 3d, is better than 10s, a week with flour at 2s. 10d., supposing the master family to receive from the second formula to receive from the second family to require from two to three stone of flour weeking. Now that is the state of things in Fast Suffolk. Next will give weeking the state of things in Fast Suffolk. Now that is the state of things in Fast Suffolk. Next will give you West Suffolk. The writer says, "The general wages paid by the formers of this parish have sustant from 9s, to 10s. her week, but the men employed at work, such as threshing, &c., have entired from 1s. is swork, such as threshing, &c., have entired from 1s. is swork, such as threshing, &c., have entired from 1s. is swork, such as threshing, &c., have entired from 1s. is swork, such as threshing, &c., have entired from 1s. is swork, such as threshing, &c., have entired from 1s. is swork, such as the swork in addition. This variation in the rate of the corn, but when which was selling the swork in addition when the swork is a swork in a swork the anio le, there critting o full in p benrer icara ide and ther proved t ationukimate լս որիոս 1000 8 -- 1 iise at t in the P rate of W ks (n riv Lithink price of von not upon the Alam Si the cour that the lage pre Ligh, an prospecit apon the manufac labour, n tions up then you terferenc 1 do not parts of the sort farms in is it is no there mu

clso with from the ct distres macshie then the 1 of he 1 we have Lanking, advantag upon the հրոր չո you will ary not a insintaine titae for c ay that t ed, that bent for tended to Ulink you which e n the parants which has Pate ration Is iided th time of su Periooke h en said letter of th ու յրով ևո vek Alist Mr. Ge Bil tave mor ուս ոսարի

the barbon the harbon

the purpo

quite awa population of mold not long, in in respect to

AT LHOTO W

and admit are owing

that wages were below 0s. per week, and when the farmers that wages need so per coomb, 10s, per week was generally the amount of wages given. The result of my experience is, therefore, to show that although wages fluctuate in a trifling degree, with the price of corn, yet they do not rise or fall in proportion to such price, and therefore, that the lahourers are best off when the prices are lowest" (hear). There are occasionally extraordinary additions made to the theorer's carnings, and in harvest time his carnings are always increased; but these additions apply to all years alike, and therefore I have not reckoned them. Have I not then proved that it is impossible to gainsay that the present generation-the existing tace of labourers -- cannot be benefited in any way by a direct ratio between the price of food and the rate of wages. Again, I say, I doubt the position that ultimately even there is any tendency between the two to approximate. But if I have shown that in these eight vens -a great period in a labouring man's life (hear) -no ise at all in wages has taken place proportionate to the rise in the price of corn, I think I have shown so far that the rate of wages has no such connection with the prices of foed as to rise with them, but rather directly the reverse (hear). I think I have succeeded in demonstrating that the low pice of wheat operates almost immediately in favour of the and sircenty. Do you think that you can maintain this system of protection much longer? and shove all things are you not assured that we cannot maintain the existing law upon the ground of its being advantageous to agriculture; Alam Smith, whose name has been too often mentioned in the course of these discussions, tells his renders, and proves to the satisfaction of every impartial and intelligent man. that the rate of weges depends upon the country being in a prosperous condition. When there is abundance of capital, large profits, an active and healthy condition of agriculture. manufactures, and commerce, then will the rate of wages be high, and when the opposite state of things happens to prewill then will the rate of wages be in a depressed state, and the working classes reduced to comparative poverty. General posterity and not legal enactments produce a practical effect apon the rates of wages. It is by removing restrictions on manufactures and commerce that you creak a demand for labour, and not by raising the prices of food. Make the sustenaure of mankind difficult of attainment, and you take a guarantee against the rise of wages. But remove restrictions upon agriculture, manufactures, and commerce, and then you save yourselves from the necessity of constant interference for the purpose of regulating the supply of food. I do not overlook how, in some quarters, it has been alleged that there exists a panic about taking land. It has been shown that in England no such panic exists. In many parts of Scotland it has also been shown that nothing of the sort prevails. Even very recently as many as eleven fams in Rexburghsbire were let at an increase of rent. In those parts of the country, where agriculture is most pursued, there does the least alarm prevail. farming this protection ought to be per-Lor bad mment; but where skilful farming exists nothing of the of is accessary. Of course, in some parts of the country there must be suffering, and in certain places there will be tenants without sufficient capital; but compare the advotage of protecting so very small a minority with the reneal happines; and presperity of the nation, compare it the with the comfort to your own minds which must arise from the consciousness of your not being responsible in times of distress for the food of the people. Adopt a course of maestrictive legislation, and then you need not fear that the operations of nature will be imputed to any other than their true origin. Leave trade free and you will not be held responsible for untoward events over which we have not and of necessity cannot exercise any control. lanking, then, at the compensation which this measure funishes-1 do not mean compensation in the way of small equivalents, but on the contrary, I refer to the security and the permanency of the law-looking to the advantages which the change now proposed must confer upon the labourer; looking to the benefits it will confer bjon yourselves; I mean not merely the more obvious alvanages likely to arise to your estates, but the less evident the stin the improvement of your position -- seeing that you will be elevated by making this concession-1 think I no not acting as the enemy of that interest, with which has own is so intimately connected when I recommend this bill to the acceptance of the house (hear, hear). I repeat that that which I advise is for the true interests of I ask you, do you feel scenre; and if You foresee that the present system cannot long be basintained, why will you not take advantage of a favourable titae for effecting a change that very soon must come? You say that the present time is one of prosperity. Is not that a best powerful reason for making this concession? At the Present moment you are free agents. An hon, member ud, that there was nothing to apprehend this year, her anything next year. Then you will not go the length of ning that you me safe for more than two years. Can there lea better proof that the present is tended to accomplish? Again 1 ask you how long do you think you can maintain the system of protection? and we all know, that it cannot be made permanent conistently with that degree of good-will and harmony without with he mation carnot be happy and prosperous. No doubt the financhiate cause of this measure is the sad calamity which has befullen breland. It has forced upon you the consideration of the corn question. But suppose that you sustanded the corn question. Is used the Corn Laws, what could you have done when the line of suspension was at an end (hear, hear). I have not periooked the circumstance that respecting this Bill it has been said to be a good political managuire on my part. The letter of the noble lord the member for London has been dese ibed as a good political maneuvre on his part. Now I ask what possible advantage can a bill like this confer upon the as an individual. I know that I have been taunted, and have more than 10 and hate more than once been told, that my days as a minister are numbered. But I have introduced this measure, not for the purpose of prolonging my ministerial existence, but for the purpose of averting a great national culamity, and for the purpose of averting a great national culamity, and for the purpose of sustaining a great mational character. I am quite aware of the fact that more than once I have been saked how love I can problem the author of those sked how long I can reckon upon the support of those honograble gentlemen opposite, without whose votes I could not hope to carry this bill through the lauport with laught fact, I can recken upon onjoying their support with respect to other subjects (loud cheers). I know, as well at those who takes me that I have not any clott to the supas those who tarint me, that I have not any right to the sup-best or confidence of those mon members. I asknowledge and admit that my prospects of accomplishing this measure are owing to their support. If it be passed it will be by them. But then they give it their support on public grounds, and I feel and acknowledge my public obligations to them as a public man. I admit this, and I have studiously avoided admitting anything beyond this. I am aware of the differences subsisting between those honourable gentlemen and myself. I have no right to claim my protection or support at their hands, and I have never sought to obtain that support by any departure, in the slightest degree, from the principles I have always professed. I know that 112 members constitute the full number of those who, thinking with me on subjects of general policy, support me on the present occasion; these 112, not being above one-eixth part of the House of Commons. I am therefore not surprised that you consider my tenure f power to be doubtful. But let us puss this measure, and while it is in progress let me request of you to suspend your indignation. This measure being once passed, you on this side and on that side of the house may adopt whatever measures you think proper for the purpose of terminating my political existence. I assure you I shall deplore the loss of your confidence much more than I shall deplore the loss of political power. The accusations which you prefer against me are on this account harmless, because I feel that they are unjust (loud cheers). Every man has within his own bosom and conscience the reales which determine the real weight of reproach, and if I had acted from any corrupt or unworthy motives, one-tenth part of the accusations you have levelled against me would have been fatal to my existence as a public man (hear, hear, hear). You may think that we took too great precautions against Irish famine in the month of November. You are mistaken. Events will prove that those precautions were not super-fluous; but even if they had been, as our motive was to rescue a whole people from the calamity of possible famine, and consequent disease I should be easy under the accusa tion (hear, hear). I do not say whether this measure will do so or not. I speak only of the motive (cheers). What weight would your accusation have even if the precautions be superfluous? I am saying, with the information we had, and the prospects which were before us, repeat the accusa tion that we took superfluous precautions, and I say, as Mr Burke said when Inbouring under similar obloquy, and in circumstances not dissimilar, "In every accillent in Infe, is pain, in sickness, in depression, in distress, I called to mind that accusation; and was comforted" (cheers). No, never no reproach will attach to me even if we should have proo that the precautions will be superfluous. Before the month of July (" May" from the Opposition), it will be established to the conviction of every pain, that the precautions we took were not superfluous, and that our motives were not impure I am not speaking of a temporary measure; I am speaking of a permanent measure. When I do fall I shall have the satisfaction of reflecting that I do not fall because I have shown subservience to a party (lond cheers). I shall no fall because I have preferred the interests of party to the general interests of the community (cheers); and I shall carry with me the satisfaction of reflection, that during the course of my official career, my object has been to mitigate monopoly (cheers), to mercuse the demand for industry, to remove restrictions upon commerce (cheers), to equalise the burden of taxation, to ameliorate the condition of those wh labour (great cheering).

Mr. STAFFORD O'BRIEN contended that Sir Rober

Peel had not made a candid declaration of the causes of his future fall from power; for it was attributable to far other causes than his desire to mitigate monopoly, and to equalise taxation. He complained that Sir Robert Peel laid no stated his case-fairly, because he had not stated it fully. He also, protested against the unfairness of the Minister's coming down to the house and quoting a vast variety of statistical documents relative to highers/fure, which nobody could answer off-band, and which, if/of any value at all, longhitto Trave been placed before the house at the com-mencement of these discussions. The protection party had acted with the greatest sincerity during these debutes. They had mooted the question of protection, or of no protection and if they should be defeated upon it, nobody could accuse them of baying resorted to unworthy artifice. He expressed his determination to resist this bill to the utmost.

Lord PALMERSTON observed that there had been two questions involved in this debute—one whether the Corn Laws should be repealed, and the other, whether Sir R. Peel and his colleagues were justified in departing from certain engagements which they had contracted with the Conservative party. He took the last question first, and declared that, however important political connection might be to the working of the British Constitution, he held that, if public duty pointed one way and party considerations auother, an honest man was bound to stand by his country. Reverting, however, to the first question, he expressed his opinion that Government had placed the defence of their new commercial policy on too murrow grounds. They attributed their change of opinion to the experience of the last three years; he thought that they ought rather to have attributed it to the debates of the last four sessions, and especially to the able and chaquent speeches of his nisters had not changed their opinions now, but that they had not changed them sooner. He then proceeded to remind the house that years ago he had expressed a wish that the word "protection" was crased from our statute book, and his reason was, that protection meant injury to the many for the benefit of the few, with this addition, that the injury was real, but the benefit was illusory. He stated at great length the reasons which induced him to support this bill, and concluded by declaring that our example in establishing practical Free Trade in this country would be more beneficial in obtaining it throughout the world than all our past negotiations.

The house then divided, when there appeared-For the second reading ... Against it ••• Majority .. The other orders of the day were then disposed of, and the house adjourned.

THERE IS ORBAT VIRTUE IN AN "IP."-The Liverpool Courant informs its readers that the Duke of Portland has offered to head a subscription list with 25,000/. "11 an active plan can be devised to thwert the unconstitutional proceedings of the League" In other worls, his Orace has wegered 25,0001. to nothing, that the League is irresistible.-Notts Review.

According to a return from the Mint, the amount of the gold coince in 1840 was 10,020/.; the silver, 017,008/.; and the copper, 0044/.

*. * Soveral members of the Council of the League are desirons of making complete their sets of the Anti-Corne-Law Circular, which was printed in Manchester, prior to the commencement of the LEAGUE paper. They are deficient of the following number: 03.

Any reasonable sum will be paid for the numbers, or any of them.

They may be addressed to the care of Mr. Gadaby, Newall's-buildings, Manchester, and should be accompanied by a letter from the senders, which shall be promptly replied to, with payment.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE QUARTER OF A MILLION FUND.

Subscriptions received during the wook ending Wednesday, Apřil I, 1846.

N.B -As the Subscription List is made up from Wednesday to Wednesday, contributions received on Thursdays and Fridays are not published in the LEAGUE of the Saturday immediately succeeding, but are included in the list of the week following.

As the regulations of the Post Office require that the Christian Name of the party to whom Post Office Orders are sent should be given in full, subscribers are respectfully requested to procure their Orders in future for GEORGE WILSON, Lengue Offices, Manchester, or Annapam Walter Paulton, 67, Fleet-street, London.

١,		£	ρ,	d.
	Harrison, Thomas, and Sons, Staleybridge	80	0	0
٠ .	*Earnsdaw, John, Mount Pleusant, Bacop *Collier and Phythau, Well-street, Shude Hill, Man	10	()	0
! I	chester	10	0	0
ï	*Kay and Fletcher, Radeliffe, near Manchoster	r,	()	()
-	*Johnson, John, Congleton *Fielden, H., Great Hampton efreet, Blradingbain S	. 6	00	Ü
ſ	*Humer, Just, brown, Johnstreet, Ancouts, Manchester			0
lı	*Miller and Mitchell, Allum street, do do	"	0	0
d.	Mayo, Win., 13, Market street, do	}	!	()
k	*Hooper, Edward, Medlock Inn. Brook street, do *Yates, John and Charles, New Mills, near Blockport	- 1	1	0
١.	*Morecroft, Wm., Brinksway, do	ĭ	o.	0
K	Alsop, Alfred, Lea Bridge, Wirksworth	į	()	0
t,	*Blows, T., Burtholomew street, Birmingham *Whitfield, S., Oxford street do	1	0	-0
ıt	*The Workmen of ditto do	i	0	ö
·	*M. M. S., per Edwin Chapman, Guildford	. !	. 0	0
ì	*Wilson, John, Wine Wall, near Colne *Rowcroft, John, Tenerite et , Broughton, Manchester	. 1	0	0
r	*Blackburn, Robert, Granby tow Yaw Mills do		- 0	- 0
ľ	*Pinder, Win. and Sons, 67, Travis street do	1	()	0
0	*Inxhury, George, 28, Cable street do
1,	*Ingham, James, 28, do do *Sector, James, 28, do do		0
()	*Stevenson, Alfred, Urmston, near do		()	()
	*Walker, R., Shakspeme Tavern, Windmill st., do
1	Redf arn, Samuel, stonemason, Wirksworth	0		11
r	*Metiregor, John, agent *Lova, Wm., do	. !	10	0
u	*Love, Wm., do	i	ö	0
i	! ! Green, Wm., Steeple street	ı	0	0
Ċ	Kilbarchan, (*Wilson, George, innkerper	ŀ	- ()	()
н	N.B. *Compbell, Win , surgeon	·i	0	()
ı	*Hurdie, Stark, and Co., Locherfield	- 6	0	()
V	Crawford, Archibald, merchant	1	()	()
•	f Ganders. Thomas, Park street			_0
i	*Wills, Wm., 2, Portland equare		0	0
y	Wills, H. O., 12, Somerset street		ő	. 0
;	* Thomas, Alfred, Clarifolds street	20	Ó	n
,	*Lang, Samuel, and Sons, Bridge street		0	0
١.	Terrell, Wm. and Sons, Welch Back *Totbill, Chrs., and Co., Temple Backs	10	ö	0
	I Thomas, Fripp. & Thomas, Broad Plain	10	0	0
•	*Burnes, Stuple, and Shoard, Countership	10	0	0
١	Bristol. (*Hall, James, Broadmend *Workman of Thomas, Fripp, and Tho-)	4	4	()
•	mas, R. Phillips, foreman	:1	10	1)
•	*Langdon, A. N., Old Market-street	2	()	0
•	Haball, Edward, Norfolk street *Nash, Henry Shute, Ot George street.	1	0	()
•	*Tucker, J. W., 7, Lower Green	i	.0	ö
ľ	*Hedge4, Wm., Broad Quay	. 1	0	0
	*Benden, George, 26, Mary le-portest	-1	0	0
	*Rowe, Richard, 6, Prince street Bale, Thomas, Browlinead	- 1	10	ö •	(*Clny, Joseph Travis, Rastrick, near		0	0
ľ	*Leppington, S, Brookfoot, Bilghou e.io	3	11	ő
′	Firth, B., do do	. 3	()	0
	*Butterworth, Joshua, Norwood Green/de) iš	0	()
'	Halifax. (*Turner, Clarke, Booth town	i	ĭ	ö
٠	*Buttye, Semuel	. į	0	0
٠	*Blakey, Henry	1	0	.() ()
١	*Blyckburn, Thos., jun., Brighouse, nr *Simpson, Lewis do	i	,ö	ö
,	*Blackburn, Joseph do	1	0	0
١	(*Ainley, Daniel do	1	0	0
,	(*Dunn, Thomas, Richmond	10	0	0
•	[*Frith, Francis, Allerton, or Liverpool	10	,0 - 0	0
۱ ا	*Hunter, Michael, sen., Wicker *Broadbent, C. E., solienter	4	ö	ö
	1 Bramley and Gaingord, Paradisc-sq	2	0	O
'	l • A. Mouth Januari, Bridge street	3		U U
, إ	Sheffeld. (*Hunter, Michael, jun., Wicker *Frith, Brothers, Arondel street	I	b.	ŏ
٠	*Fox, Benjamin, do	į	0	0
	*Wolstenholm, Josh., Park	1	0	0
	*Hramall, Godfrey, Bouth street *Johnson, David, Campo hut	i		ŏ
	• Ellison, Joseph, Allen street	i	Ü	Ŭ
-		10	0	0
	Nelson and Co. Offroy, Brothers, Cowgate	b	Ü.	Ü
	*8 m ill, David	5		Ö
	*A Prioud	4	0	0.
1	Lowe, Alexander ; *Turnbuli, Wm.	4	Ō	O i
ı	*Shfell, John	4	O.	Ó.
	Christie, Wm. and Son, Panmuro-st	2	0	0
1	Dundee. Shaw, Wm. and Son	ğ	0 ,	O ;
1	Bax(rr, Wm. B		Ŏ	g
1	i Milelmore Charles	2	0	U

Chalinois, Charles

*Chainors, Charles *Milwor Hirman Smith, Silvastor *Mtarrook, John, jun, *Sturroyk, Robert Tyril, Alexander *Storiler, Androw *Ogley, With Mulcolm, Jamos

Ųi

0 0 0 0

AQUQ: et. x

0.81

beir

des oʻel

ber

Ma

of t

fatl

nat

wei

olli

101

of

W on

 $t^{1}\omega$

Тu

the

Wo

DIM

Sur

14

the

ot

Th

and

M.G

រែកព

					-
			•	_	,
	Graham, Col. David, of Micklewood M'Farlanc, John	••	5 5	0	0
	Minith, Robert		3	8	0
	*Mawers, John	• •	3	3	0
	*Mirel, Ballie	••	2	2	0
	*Mathie, J. and J. *McRobbie, Daniel, Bridge of Allan	• • •	2	2 2	0
·	*Micremon, G. and J		2	2	0
	*Galtraith, Wm,	••	2	2	0
	*Taylor, Robert, and Son, manufacture		2	. 2	U
	*Hobertson, John	• •	2 2	2 2	0
•	*Kidston, John		2	42	0
	*Sawers, Robert	• •	2		0
	Morrison, Baille	::	2	2	0
	*Tragentr, J. *Gibb, Alexander	• •	2 2	2	0
	*Thomson, Wm. and Co.	• •	2		ö
	*Kerr, James	• •	2		0
,	*Monat, A, and G	• •	ī	ï	ö
1	*Printice. James	••	ļ	ļ	0
	*Taylor, W. G., Hayford Mill's Gifties, Thomas	••	1	1	0
	Mathie, James and Arrive	.,	ļ	!	0
	Thompon, George Cenigis , John	• •]	1	0
Sticking.	Reid, John		į	- .] .	0
	Copland, John Scott, Alexander	• •	I i	-	0
٠	Gealiem, Win.	: ·	i	ì	0
	Miller, James	• •]]]	0
	Christic, John Forguson, Thomas	:.	i	1	ö
	-lammax,-lulm	-••	_i	 	_0_
	Gentleman, Eberézor Bord, Alexander	••	1	1	0
	Baselea, John		į	1	0
	Yellowlees, David Grabem, Thomas	• •	1	ı	0
	Godden, Henry, Bannoel burn	••	i	ō	ö
	Burden, James	• •	1	0	0
	Irving, John Malancidan, Daniel	• •	i	ő	ő
•	Harvey, Wm	`• •	!	0	0
	Robertson, Win.	• •	- 1 - 0	15	0
	Henderson, J. and G. and Co		0	12	0
	McNah, Dancan Smith, Win	* *	. 0	- 8	8
	Morgan, D. and G. and Co.	••	ő		0
	Kane, Jumes	٠.	0	- 1	0
	Pator, dolin	••	ő		ő
	Niven, Wm.		0	-	0
	Niven, Win.		0	4	0
	Niven, Wm.		0	4
	Niven, Wm. M. Noughton, John A. Friend, per A. Fraser	••	0	4 4 5	0
• Rooke, Char • Phillip • mal	Niven, Win. M. Namhton, John A. Friend, per A. Fraser Sundry small subscriptions less, Westwood Hores, near Colchoster South, Melksban		0 0 0 0 20 5	4 4 5 0 0	0 0 11 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillips and *Strode and 1	Niven, Win		0 0 0 20 5 5	4 5 0 0 2	0 0 11 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillips and *Strode and I *Morris, W. B *Lean yr. A.	Niven, Win. M. Namhton, John A. Friend, per A. Fraser Sundry small subscriptions Jest, Westwood House, near Colchester Snath, Melksburn Letter, 4, Huggins Jane L, Mill land, Deptford V., 89, John Stject, Tottenbam Courter		7 2 2 2 50 0 0	4 4 5 0 0 9 2 2	0 0 11 0 0 0 0
• Rooke, Char • Phillips and • Strode and I • Morris, W. B • Le an v. A. • Allen, Edwar • Rataman, H.	Niven, Win. M'Naughton, John A Friend, per A. Fraser Sundry small subscriptions Jes, Westwood House, near Colchester Smath, McRobom "select, 4, Huggins lane "Mill lane, Deptford V., 89, John street, Tottenham Courter d, Humbrook, street, Southsea		0 0 0 20 5 5	4 4 5 0 0 2 2	0 0 11 0 0 0
• Rooke, Char • Philips and • Strode and I • Morris, W. R • Le an et A. • Allen, Edwa • Bataman, H. • Hennell, E.	Niven, Win. M'Naughton, John A Friend, per A. Fraser Sundry small subscriptions les, Westwood House, near Colchoster Smath, Mclksbum Leter, 4, Huggins lane L, Mill lane, Deptford V. 89, John stject, Toffenbam Courte d, Humbrookstruct, Southsea em v, ft, Islington Green Omesa street, Bridge rond, Borough	· · ·	0 0 0 2 0 2 1 2 1 1	4 5 00 2 2 1 1 1	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
• Rooke, Char • Phillips and • Strode and I • Morris, W. R • Le un v. A. • Allen, Edwar • Homell, E., • Woster, C., Taylor, Thom	Niven, Win. A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) les, Westwood House, near Colchester Smith, Melkeban "eleer, 4, Huggins lane "Mil lane, Deptford d. Humbrook-struct, Southsea mry, 6, Islington Green Questa street, Bridge road, Borough 5, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Im 8s, Dake street, Tooley-street		0 0 0 20 2 1 2 1 1	4 5 0 0 9 2 2 1 1	0 0 11 0 0 0 0 0
• Rooke, Char • Phillips and • Strode and I • Morris, W. R • Le un v. A. • Allen, Edwar • Homell, E., • Woster, C., Taylor, Thom	Niven, Win. A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) les, Westwood House, near Colchester Smith, Melkeban "eleer, 4, Huggins lane "Mil lane, Deptford d. Humbrook-struct, Southsea mry, 6, Islington Green Questa street, Bridge road, Borough 5, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Im 8s, Dake street, Tooley-street	· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	0 0 0 0 5 2 2 1 2 1 1 1 1	4 4 5 0 2 2 1 1 1 1 0	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillip and *Strode and I *Morris, W. R *Le un v. A. *Allen, Edwa *Batoman, H. *Homell, E., *Woster, C., Taylor, Thom Husaey, W., C. *Dewar, W., C.	Niven, Win. A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry Small subscriptions) bes, Westwood Horse, near Colchester Smath, Melksban select, 4, Hoggins lane Mill bane, Deptford V. 89, John Street, Tottenbam Courter d. Hambrook-street, Southsea emy, 6, Islington Green Questa street, Bridge road, Borough 5, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn 8s, Duke street, Todey-street orean Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks breen street, Sunderland Oxonwich	(O) (A)	0 0 0 0 5 2 2 1 2 1 1 1	4 5 0 0 2 2 1 1 1 1	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillip and *Strode and I *Morris, W. R *Le un v. A. *Allen, Edwa *Batoman, H. *Homell, E., *Woster, C., Taylor, Thom Husaey, W., C. *Dewar, W., C. *May, Charle *May, Charle	Niven, Win. A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry Small subscriptions) bes, Westwood Horse, near Colchester Smath, Melksban selec r, 4, Hoggins lane Mill lane, Deptford V, 89, John street, Tottenbam Courter d, Hambrook-street, Southsea emy, 6, Islington Green Questa street, Bridge road, Borough 5, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn 8, Duke street, Tooley-street accur Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks broon street, Sunderland (Norwich av, 110, Great Charles st., Birminghan av, 110, Great Charles st., Birminghan	(O) (A)	0 0 0 0 5 2 2 1 2 1 1 1 1 1	4 4 4 5 0 0 0 2 2 2 1 1 1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 11 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Philips and I *Strode and I *Morris, W. II *Le un et A. *Allen, Edwa *Bataman, H. *Hennell, E., *Foster, C. J. Taylor, Thoman *Hower, W., C. *Down, W., C. *Manton, Her From a Pool	Niven, Win. M'Naughton, John A Friend, per A. Fraser Sundry small subscriptions les, Westwood House, near Colchoster Smath, McHesbaun Letter, 4, Houghts lane L, Mill lane, Deptford V. 89, John stject, Toffenham Courter d, Humbrook-struct, Southsea Lanv, fi, Islington Green Questa street, Bridge rond, Borough 5, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn as, Duke street, Tooley-street recen Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks broon street, Sunderland C, Norwich nv, 110, Great Charles st., Birminghan Man	(O) (A)	0 0 0 0 5 2 2 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	4 4 4 5 0 0 0 2 2 2 1 1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillip and *Strode and I *Morris, W. R *Le un vr. A. *Allen, Edwa *Bataman, H *Hennell, E., *Foster, C. J. Taylor, Thom Husaey, W., C *Down, W., *Max, Charle *Manton, Her From a Pool *Hilditch, Ma *A Fow Luce	Niven, Win. A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) les, Westwood Horse, near Colchester Smith, Melkshain Leter, 4, Huggins lane (L, Mill lane, Deptford V. 89, John street, Tottenhain Courter (d. Humbrook-street, Southsea Lany, 6, Islington Green (Questa street, Bridge road, Borough (J. Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn as, Duke street, Tooley-street (con Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks (hreen street, Sunderland (Nowich Liny, 110, Great Churles St., Birminghan Main Main do s, King street, Wrexhain Malors in the Isle of Wight, per Jan Malors in the Isle of Wight, per Jan	(O) (A)	0 0 0 20 5 2 2 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	4 4 5 0 0 0 2 2 1 1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 11 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
• Rooke, Char • Phillips and I • Strode and I • Morris, W. R. • Le an v. A. • Allen, Edwa • Hennell, E., • Foster, C. J. Taylor, Thom Huscay, W., C. • Dewar, W., C. • Mary, Charle, • Mary, Charles, • Marton, Her From a Poo. • Hilditch, M. • A Few Lee • Marythers	Niven, Win. M'Naughton, John A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) Jes, Westwood House, near Colchester Smith, Melksborn Lebert, 4, Huggins lane L., Mill lane, Deptford V., 89, John street, Toffenham Courted, Humbrookstruet, Southsea Lany, 6, Islington Green Questa street, Bridge road, Borough Ja, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn As, Duke street, Tooley-street recon Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks heen street, Sunderland (Norwich nv, 110, Great Charles St., Birminghan Man Man Man Malora in the Isle of Wight, per Jan Malora in the Isle of Wight,	103	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	4 4 5 0 0 0 2 2 1 1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 11 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillip and *Strode and I *Morris, W. R *Le un v. A. Allen, Edwa *Ratoman, H. *Homell, E., *Foster, C. J. Taylor, Thom Huseey, W., C *Power, W., C *May, Charle *Manton, Her From a Poo. *Hilditch, Ma *A Fow Luce *Smythers *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Joh	Niven, Win. A Friend, per A. Fraser Sundry small subscriptions less, Westwood House, near Colchester Smith, Melksburn Leberr, 4, Hougins lane L., Mill land, Deptford V., 89, John street, Tottenham Courter at Humbrook street, Southsea Lanry, 6, Islington Green Questa street, Bridge road, Borough Lo, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn as, Duke street, Tooley-street incon Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks hieen street, Sunderland L., Norwich Livy, 110, Great Charles St., Birminghan Man Lo S., King street, Wrexlam Malors in the Isle of Wight, per Jan 11, 271, Oxford'street L., 208, do	(O) (A)	0 0 0 20 5 2 2 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	4 4 5 0 0 0 2 2 1 1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 11 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
• Rooke, Char • Phillips and • Strode and I • Morris, W. R • Le un v. A. • Allen, Edwar • Hennell, E., • Hennell, E., • Honter, C. J. Taylor, Thom Huscey, W., C • Dewar, W., C • Max, Charle • Manton, Her From a Poo. • Hilditch, M • A Few Lace • Bmythers • Cutting, Joh • Cutting, Mc	Niven, Win. M'Naughton, John A Friend, per A. Fraser Sundry small subscriptions Jes, Westwood House, near Colchester Surth, Melksbam Les et 4, Huggins lane Le, Mill lane, Deptford V., 89, John street, Toffenham Courter d, Hughrookstruet, Southsea Lany, 6, Islington Green Quests street, Bridge road, Borough Lo, Sistone-buildings, Lincoln's Ina as, Duke street, Tooley-street recon Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks freen street, Sunderland Le, Norwich Ley on street, Sunderland Le, Norwich Ley of Charles et L., Birminghan Man Ley 110, Great Charles et L., Birminghan Man Ley 171, Oxford'street Ley 183, do 191, 78 and 79, Newgate-street 191, 78 and 79, Newgate-street 191, 271, Oxford'street Ley 183, do 191, 78 and 79, Newgate-street	OH	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	1 1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 11 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillip and *Strode and I *Morris, W. R *Le un vr. A. *Allen, Edwa *Blataman, H *Hennell, E., *Foster, C. J. Taylor, Thom Husaey, W., C *Max, Charle *Manton, Her Fram a Poor *Hilditch, M *A Few Lace *Binythers *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, M *Wood, Rich *Rend, Henry *Hellanny, Sa	Niven, Win. A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) les, Westwood House, near Colchoster Smath, Melksbum aster , 4, Huggins lane (L. Mill lane, Deptford V. 89, John stject, Tottenham Courter at Humbrook-street, Southsea emv, 6, Islington Green (Questa street, Ridge road, Borough 5, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Im as, Duke street, Tooley-street incen Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks breen street, Sunderfand (Norwich uv, Ho, Great Charles et., Birminghan Man —, King street, Wrexlam Makora in the Isle of Wight, per Jan ug, 271, Oxford'street (Ly68, do ud, 28 and 79, Newgate-street (Ly7, Austin Friars much Clarence plage, Camberwell	OH	20 5 22 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	1 4 4 5 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 11 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillip and *Strode and I *Morris, W. R *Le un vr. A. *Allen, Edwa *Blataman, H *Hennell, E., *Foster, C. J. Taylor, Thom Husaey, W., C *Max, Charle *Manton, Her Fram a Poor *Hilditch, M *A Few Lace *Buythers *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, M *Wood, Rich *Read, Henry *Read, Henry *Read, Henry *Rellamy, Sa	Niven, Win. A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) les, Westwood House, near Colchoster Smath, Melksbum aster , 4, Huggins lane (L. Mill lane, Deptford) V. 89, John stject, Tottenbam Courter at Humbrook-street, Southsea emvy 6, Islington Green (Questa street, Bridge road, Borough 5, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn as, Duke street, Tooley-street ireen Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks broen street, Sunderfant (Norwich uv, Ho, Great Charles et., Birminghan Man —, King street, Wrexlam Malora in the Isle of Wight, per Jan 19, 271, Oxford'street (1,268, do 191, 78 and 79, Nowgate-street (1,27, Austin Finars much Clarence place, Camberwell	OH	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	2 2 1 1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 11 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillip and *Strode and I *Morris, W. R *Le un vr. A. *Allen, Edwa *Blataman, H *Hennell, E., *Foster, C. J. Taylor, Thom Husaey, W., C *Max, Charle *Manton, Her Fram a Poor *Hilditch, M *A Few Lace *Buythers *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, M *Wood, Rich *Read, Henry *Read, Henry *Read, Henry *Rellamy, Sa	Niven, Win. A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) les, Westwood House, near Colchoster Smath, Melksbum aster , 4, Huggins lane (L. Mill lane, Deptford) V. 89, John stject, Tottenbam Courter at Humbrook-street, Southsea emvy 6, Islington Green (Questa street, Bridge road, Borough 5, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn as, Duke street, Tooley-street ireen Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks broen street, Sunderfant (Norwich uv, Ho, Great Charles et., Birminghan Man —, King street, Wrexlam Malora in the Isle of Wight, per Jan 19, 271, Oxford'street (1,268, do 191, 78 and 79, Nowgate-street (1,27, Austin Finars much Clarence place, Camberwell	OH	0 0 0 0 5 2 2 1 2 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	2 2 1 1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 11 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
• Rooke, Char • Phillips and I • Strode and I • Morris, W. R. • Allen, Edwa • Batoman, R. • Hennell, E., • Foster, C. J. Taylor, Thom Hascay, W., C. • Dewar, W., C. • Max, Charle • Manton, Her From a Poo. • Hilditch, M. • A Few Luce • Smythers • Cutting, Mo • Wood, Rich • Read, Henry • Bellamy, Sa Catthroon, W. • Brooks, B. ng • Down J., 170,	Niven, Win. A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) les, Westwood House, near Colchoster Smath, Melksbum aster , 4, Huggins lane (L. Mill lane, Deptford V. 89, John stject, Tottenham Courter at Humbrook-street, Southsea emv, 6, Islington Green (Questa street, Ridge road, Borough 5, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Im as, Duke street, Tooley-street incen Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks breen street, Sunderfand (Norwich uv, Ho, Great Charles et., Birminghan Man —, King street, Wrexlam Makora in the Isle of Wight, per Jan ug, 271, Oxford'street (Ly68, do ud, 28 and 79, Newgate-street (Ly7, Austin Friars much Clarence plage, Camberwell	OH	0 0 0 5 2 2 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	2 2 1 1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 11 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
• Rooke, Char • Phillips and I • Strode and I • Morris, W. R. • Allen, Edwa • Batoman, R. • Hennell, E., • Foster, C. J. Taylor, Thom Hascay, W., C. • Dewar, W., C. • Max, Charle • Manton, Her From a Poo. • Hilditch, M. • A Few Luce • Smythers • Cutting, Mo • Wood, Rich • Read, Henry • Bellamy, Sa Catthroon, W. • Brooks, B. ng • Down J., 170,	Niven, Win. A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) les, Westwood House, near Colchester Smith, Melkebom seles et 4, Huggins lane is, Mill land, Deptford V., 89, John street, Toffenham Courted d. Hughrook-street, Southsea mry, 6, Islington Green Quests street, Bridge road, Borough 5, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn 8s, Duke street, Tooley-street occur Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks breen street, Sunderland e, Norwich my, 110, Great Charles st., Birminghan Man s, King street, Wiexlam Malora in the Isle of Wight, per Jan m, 271, Oxford'street e, 268, do gd. 78 and 79, Nowgate-street e, 27, Austin Friars mich, Chreence plage, Camberwell ett, Chreence plage, Camberwell ett, 11, York street, St. Luke's main, 100, Curtain road Strand	OH	0 0 0 5 2 2 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	4 4 5 0 0 8 2 2 1 1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 11 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillip and *Strode and I *Morris, W. II *Le an ter. A. Allen, Edwa *Blataman, H. *Hennell, E., *From C. J. Taylor, Thom Husaey, W., C *Max, Charle *Manton, Her From a Poo. *Hildirch, Mi *A Few Lace Smythers *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Mo *Rend, Henry *Rend, Henry *Rend, Henry *Rend, Henry *Rellamy, Sa Cattinson, W *Brooks, Bong Down J., 179, A Friend	Niven, Win. A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) les, Westwood House, near Colchoster Smath, Melksbum aster, 4, Huggins lane (Mill lane, Deptford) V. 89, John stject, Tottenbam Courter of, Humbrookstruet, Southsea emv, fi, Islington Green Quesa street, Bridge road, Borough 5, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn as, Duke street, Tooley-street ireen Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks hiem street, Sunderland (Norwich nv, 110, Great Churles st., Birminghan Man s, King street, Wrexlam Malora in the Isle of Wight, per Jan 11, 271, Oxford street (1, 208, do 12), 78 and 79, Newgate-street (1, 27, Austin Finnis much, Clarence plage, Camberwell (1, 1), Ock street, St. Luke's amin, 100, Curtain road Strand Midl and Company, Market street Tripe, Cornelius, ker street	OH	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	1 1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 0 11 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillip and *Strode and I *Morris, W. R. *Le un v. A. Allen, Edwar *Batoman, H. *Homell, E., *Woster, C. J. Taylor, Thom Hussey, W., C. *Powar, W., C. *Max, Charle *Manton, Her From a Poo. *Hilditch, Mi *A Fow Luce *Bmythers *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Mi *Wood, Riche *Rend, Henry *Rellamy, Sa Cottingon, W. Brooks, Beng Down J., 179, A Friend	Niven, Win. M'Naughton, John A Friend, per A. Fraser Sundry small subscriptions Jes, Westwood House, near Colchester Smith, Melkoban Les et 4, Huggins lane Les Mill lane, Deptford V., 89, John street, Toffenham Courter d, Hughrook street, Southsea Lany, 6, Islington Green Quests street, Bridge road, Borough Las Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Ina as, Duke street, Tooley-street occur Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks breen street, Sunderland Les et Sunderland Les et Sunderland Les et Sunderland Les et Sunderland Les et Chales et, Birminghan Man Les et Chales et, Birminghan Man Les et Chales et, Birminghan Man Les et Chales et, Birminghan Man Les et Chales et, Birminghan Malor in the Isle of Wight, per Jan 11, 791, Oxford street Les et Chales Like'	OIL O	20 60 22 22 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 11 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillip and *Strode and I *Morris, W. II *Le an vr. A. *Allen, Edwa *Blataman, H. *Hennell, E., *Foster, C. J. Taylor, Thom Husney, W., C *Max, Charle *Manton, Her From a Poo. *Hilditch, M. *A Few Lace *Buythers *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Mo *Wood, Richt *Read, Henry *Read, Henry *Relainy, Sa *Cottinson, W *Brooks, Beng Down J., 179, A Friend	Niven, Win. M'Naughton, John A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) les, Westwood House, near Colchoster Smath, Mclksbam Les, Westwood House, near Colchoster Smath, Mclksbam Les, Mill lane, Deptford V. 89, John stjeet, Tollenbam Courte of, Humbrook-struet, Southsea anty, fi, Islington Green Questa street, Bridge road, Borough 5, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn as, Duke street, Tooley-street orcen Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks breen street, Sunderland c Norwich ny, 110, Great Charles et., Birminghan Man do , King street, Wrexham Mahora in the Isle of Wight, per Jan n, 271, Oxford'street (208, do 101, 78 and 79, Newgate-street (27, Austin Frans much, Clarence plage, Camberwell (11), York street, St. Luke's amin, 100, Curtain road Strand Miall and Company, Market street Foster, John, St. Aubyn street Oram, Richard Robt, do Pyce, Rey, John, Stoke	OIL O	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillip and a Strode and I Morris, W. R *Le un v. A. A. A. Charles, Edwa Blatoman, H. Hennell, E., Allen, Edwa Blatoman, H. Hennell, E., C. J. Taylor, Thom Huseey, W., C. Plewyr, W., C. Mowyr, W., Charles Manton, Her From a Poo. A. Hidditch, Ma A. Fow Luce Sunythers. Cutting, Joh. Cutting, Joh. Cutting, Mr. Wood, Riehe Rend, Henry Blellamy, San Cottheam, W. Brooks, Beng Down J., 179, A. Friend	Niven, Win. A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) les, Westwood House, near Colchester Smath, Melkobon select, 4, Huggins lane s, Mill lane, Deptford V., 89, John street, Tottenbam Courter d, Hunbrook-street, Southsea anty, ff. Islington Green Quests street, Bridge road, Borough J. Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn so, Duke street, Tooley-street incen Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks heen street, Sunderland (Norwich ny, 110, Great Charles st., Birminghan Man s, King street, Wrexlam Mathera in the Isle of Wight, per Jan 11, 271, Oxford street (278, Austin Frans much Clarence plage, Camberwell 111, York street, St. Luke's amin, 100, Curtain road Strand Midl and Company, Market street Tope, Cornelius, ker street Foster, John, St. Aubyn street Oran, Richard Robt, do Tyre, Rey, John, Stoke Nich dls, John, George street	0000	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillip and *Strode and I *Morris, W. R *Le un vr. A. *Allen, Edwa *Blataman, H *Hennell, E., *Foster, C. J. Taylor, Thom Husaey, W., C *Max, Charle *Manton, Her Fram a Pool *Hilditch, M *A Few Lace *Buythers *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Mo *Wood, Richt *Read, Henry *Rellany, Sa *Collinson, W *Brooks, Beng Down J., 179, A Friend	Niven, Win. M'Noughton, John A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) les, Westwood House, near Colchoster Smath, Mclksbam Les, Westwood House, near Colchoster Smath, Mclksbam Les, Mill lane, Deptford V. 89, John stjeet, Tollenbam Courte of, Humbrook-struet, Southsea Lany, ff, Islington Green Questa street, Bridge road, Borough 5, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn as, Duke street, Tooley-street orcen Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks bron street, Sunderland Consider Consider Courter Conditions Man Lot Great Charles st., Birmingham Man Lot Great Charles st., Birmingham Man Lot Great Charles st., Birmingham Man Lot Great Charles st., Birmingham Man Lot Great Charles st., Birmingham Man Lot Great Charles st., Birmingham Man Lot Great Charles st., Birmingham Man Lot Great Charles st., Birmingham Man Lot Great Charles st., Birmingham Man Lot Great Charles st., Birmingham Man Lot Great Charles st., Birmingham Man Lot Great Charles st., Birmingham Man Lot Great Charles street Lot Great Mindl and Company, Market street Tripe, Cornelius, Iver street Foster, John, St. Aubyn street Oram, Richard Robt., do Pyc., Rev. John, Stoke Medombo, Thomas, Ker street Bu Lot, James Woolcombo, Thomas, Ker street	000	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillip and a Strode and I Morris, W. R *Le un v. A. A. A. A. Charles, Edwar Blatoman, H. Hennell, E., Edwar, W., C. J. Taylor, Thom Hussey, W., C. Plewur, W., C. Mark, Charles Manton, Her From a Poo. Alfilditch, Markey Luce Smythers (Cutting, John Cutting, Mr. Wood, Riehr Rend, Henry Bellamy, San Callingam, W. Brooks, Beng Down J., 179, A. Friend	Niven, Win. A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) les, Westwood House, near Colchester Smath, Melkoban select, 4, Huggins lane E, Mill lane, Deptford V., 89, John street, Tottenham Courter d, Hughrook street, Southsea any, 6, Islington Green Quests street, Ridge road, Borough J. Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn so, Duke street, Tooley-street irea street, Sunderland con street, Sunderland con street, Sunderland con vich ny, 110, Great Charles st., Birminghan Man s, King street, Wrexlam Malora in the Isle of Wight, per Jan mid, 271, Oxford/street (218, do cd. 78 and 79, Newgate-street (27, Austin Frints much Chrence plage, Camberwell JI, York street, St. Luke's amin, 100, Curtain road Strand Midl and Company, Market street Tope, Cornelius, Iver street Foster, John, St. Aubyn street Oran, Riebard Robt, do Pyre, Rey, John, Stoke Noedcombo, Thomas, Ker street Woodcombo, Thomas, Ker street	Olto	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	111100000000000000000000000000000000000	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
• Rooke, Char • Phillips and • Phillips and • Strode and I • Morris, W. R • Le un v. A. • Allen, Edwar • Blatoman, He • Hennell, E., • Woster, C. J. Taylor, Thom Huscey, W., C • Dewar, W., C • Dewar, W., C • Max, Charle • Manton, Her From a Poo. • Marketh, M • A Fow Lace • Bmythers • Cutting, Joh • Cutting, Mc • Wood, Richt • Read, Henry • Bellamy, Sa • Bellamy, Sa • Bellamy, Sa • Cuttingon, W • Brooks, Beng Down J., 170, A Friend	Niven, Win. M'Naughton, John A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) Jes, Westwood House, near Colchester Smith, Melkebom Leter 14, Huggins lane L., Mill land, Deptford V., 89, John street, Toffenham Courted, Humbrook-street, Southsea Lany, fi, Islington Green Quests street, Bridge road, Borough Ja, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn As, Duke street, Tooley-street Irecut Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks Irecut Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks Irecut Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks Irecut Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks Irecut Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks Irecut Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks Irecut Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks Irecut Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks Irecut Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks Irecut Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks Irecut Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks Irecut Jane Midl and Conforteet Jester, Austin Finars midl. Clarence plage, Camberwell Jet, Vork street, St. Luke's amin, 100, Curtain road Strand Midl and Company, Market street Tripe, Cornelius, kor street Foster, John, St. Lukyn street Oram, Richard Robt, do Pyro, Rey, John, George street Bachett, James Woolcombe, Thomas, Ker street May, Joseph, St. Aubyn street Dymond, Thomas, Ker street	103 103	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	1	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
• Rooke, Char • Phillips and I • Morris, W. R • Le un v. A. • Allen, Edwar • Blatoman, H. • Hennell, E., • Voster, C. J. • Froster, C. J. • Froster, C. J. • Footer, C. J. • Way, Charle • Manton, Her • From a Poo. • Hilditch, Mi • A Fow Lace • Bmythers • Cutting, Joh • Cutting, Me • Wood, Riche • Rend, Henry • Bellamy, Sa • Cuttingon, W • Brooks, Beng • Down J., 179, • A Friend	Niven, Win. A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) les, Westwood House, near Colchester Smath, Melkobon select, 4, Huggins lane (Mill lane, Deptford V., 89, John street, Tottenbam Courter d. Hunbrook-street, Southsea anvy, f. Islington Green Quests street, Bridge road, Borough (J. Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn as, Duke street, Tooley-street (recu Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks (heen street, Studerfant) (Norwich ny, 110, Great Charles et., Birminghan Man syking street, Wrexlam Malora in the Isle of Wight, per Jan Malora in the Isle of Wight, per Jan (n, 274, Oxford'street (278, Austin Frans mucl. Clarence plage, Camberwell (11), och street, St. Luke's aman, 100, Curtain road Strand Miall and Company, Market street Foster, John, St. Aubyn street Foster, John, St. Aubyn street Oran, Richard Robt, do Nyo, Rey, John, George street Buchett, James Woolcombo, Thomas, Ker street Dymond, Thomas H., 29, Grambyst, Prebon, Edward, James-street	105	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
• Rooke, Char • Phillips and I • Morris, W. R • Le un v. A. • Allen, Edwar • Blatoman, H. • Hennell, E., • Voster, C. J. • Froster, C. J. • Froster, C. J. • Footer, C. J. • Way, Charle • Manton, Her • From a Poo. • Hilditch, Mi • A Fow Lace • Bmythers • Cutting, Joh • Cutting, Me • Wood, Riche • Rend, Henry • Bellamy, Sa • Cuttingon, W • Brooks, Beng • Down J., 179, • A Friend	Niven, Win. A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) les, Westwood House, near Colchester Smath, Melkoban select, 4, Huggins lame E. Mill land, Deptford V. 89, John street, Tottenham Courter d. Hughrook, street, Southsea env. 6, Islington Green Quests street, Bridge road, Borough J. Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn so, Duke street, Tooley-street icen Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks heen street, Sunderland (Norwich nv, 110, Great Charles st., Birminghan Man s, King street, Wrexlam Mathera in the Isle of Wight, per Jan 11, 271, Oxford street (278, and 79, Newgate-street (278, Austin Frans much Chrence plage, Camberwell 41, 70 & street, St. Luke's amin, 100, Curtain road Strand Midl and Company, Market street Tope, Cornelius, ker street Foster, John, St. Aubyn street Oran, Riebard Robt, do Pyre, Rey, John, Stoke Nach dls, John, George street Brenett, James Woolcombo, Thomas, Ker street Dymond, Thomas H., 29, Granby-st. Hocton, Rey, Tlomas, Stoke Preben, Edward, James-street Tucker and Poarce, Pembrokesstreet	105 · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	200 5 2 2 2 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
• Rooke, Char • Phillips and I • Morris, W. R • Le un v. A. • Allen, Edwar • Blatoman, H. • Hennell, E., • Voster, C. J. • Froster, C. J. • Froster, C. J. • Footer, C. J. • Way, Charle • Manton, Her • From a Poo. • Hilditch, Mi • A Fow Lace • Bmythers • Cutting, Joh • Cutting, Me • Wood, Riche • Rend, Henry • Bellamy, Sa • Cuttingon, W • Brooks, Beng • Down J., 179, • A Friend	Niven, Win. M'Noughton, John A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) Jes, Westwood House, near Colchoster Smath, Melksbam Leter, 4, Huggins lane L., Mill lane, Deptford V., 89, John street, Toffenham Courted, Humbrook-street, Southsea Lany, 6, Islington Green Quest street, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge Logistice, Bridge Logistice, Bridge Logistice, Bridge Logistice, Bridge Logistice, Logistic, Logistice, Logistic, Logistice, Logistic, Logisti	105	000 00 20 22 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char. *Phillip and *Strode and I *Morris, W. It *Le un v. A. *Allen, Edwar *Blatoman, H. *Hennell, E., *Woster, C. J. Taylor, Thom Huscay, W., C. *Powar, W., C. *Max, Charle *Manton, Her From a Pool. *Hidditch, Ma *A Fow Luce Burythers *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Ma *Cutting, Ma *A Fow Luce Read, Henry *Rehlamy, Sa *Cotthyon, W. Brooks, Beng Hown J., 179, A Friend	Niven, Win. M'Naughton, John A Friend, per A. Fraser Sundry small subscriptions Jes, Westwood House, near Colchester Sunth, Melkebonn Lebert, 4, Huggins lane Le, Mill land, Deptford V., 89, John street, Toffenham Courter d, Hughrookstruet, Southsea Lany, 6, Islington Green Quests street, Bridge road, Borough Las Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn As, Duke street, Tooley-street occur Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks breen street, Sunderland Anowich Ley 10, Great Charles et., Birminghan Man Ly 10, Great Charles et., Birminghan Man Ly 10, Great Charles et., Birminghan Man Ly 10, Great Charles et., Birminghan Man Ly 10, Great Charles et., Birminghan Man Ly 10, Great Charles et., Birminghan Malora in the Isle of Wight, per Jan 11, 271, Oxford'street Ly 268, do 11, 128 street, St. Luke's mich. Clarence place, Camberwell Ly 11, York street, St. Luke's mich. Clarence place, Camberwell Ly 10, Curtain road Strand Miall and Company, Market street Foster, John, St. Aubyn street Oram, Richard Robt., do Pyes, Rey, John, Stoke Nuch alls, John, George street Buenett, James Woolcombo, Thomas, Ker street Dynond, Mr. Bunnak Stoke Preben, Edward, James-street Trocker and Poarce, Pembroke-street Cloater, John, Town-squaro Dynond, Mr. Smath, R. C.	109	0000 20522 12111111111111111111111111111	1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillips and I *Morris, W. R *Le un v. A. Allen, Edwar *Batoman, H. *Honnell, E., *Honnell, E., *Honnell, E., *Max, Charle *Max, Charle *Max, Charle *Manton, Her From a Poo. *A Fow Lace *Bmythers *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Mr *Wood, Richt *Read, Henry *Rellamy, Sa Cotlinson, W Brooks, Beng Down J., 179, A Friend	Niven, Win. M'Noughton, John A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) Jes, Westwood House, near Colchoster Smath, Melksbam Leter, 4, Huggins lane L., Mill lane, Deptford V., 89, John street, Toffenham Courted, Humbrook-street, Southsea Lany, 6, Islington Green Quest street, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge road, Borough Logistice, Bridge Logistice, Bridge Logistice, Bridge Logistice, Bridge Logistice, Bridge Logistice, Logistic, Logistice, Logistic, Logistice, Logistic, Logisti	103 Hora	000 00 20 22 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	445 00227111110000000 000000000000000000000	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillips and I *Morris, W. R *Le un v. A. Allen, Edwar *Batoman, H. *Honnell, E., *Honnell, E., *Honnell, E., *Max, Charle *Max, Charle *Max, Charle *Manton, Her From a Poo. *A Fow Lace *Bmythers *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Mr *Wood, Richt *Read, Henry *Rellamy, Sa Cotlinson, W Brooks, Beng Down J., 179, A Friend	Niven, Win. M'Naughton, John A Friend, per A. Fraser Sundry small subscriptions les, Westwood House, near Colchester Smath, Melkobon select, 4, Huggins lane E, Mill lane, Deptford V., 89, John street, Toffenham Courter d, Hunbrook-street, Southsea amy, 6, Islington Green Questa street, Bridge road, Borough J. Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn as, Duke street, Tooley-street incen Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks freen street, Studerfant e, Norwich ny, 110, Great Charles et., Birminghan Man do syking street, Wrexlam Malora in the Isle of Wight, per Jan Malora in the Isle of Wight, per Jan Malora in the Isle of Wight, per Jan my, 271, Oxford'street e, 208, do ord, 78 and 79, Newgate-street e, 27, Austin Frans much Clarence place, Camberwell e, 11, Yerk street; 8t. Luke's amin, 100, Curtain road Strand Miall and Company, Market street Tripe, Cornelius, ker street Foster, John, St. Aubyn street Orana, Richard Robt, do Pyer, Rev. John, Stoke Nich dls, John, George street Bachett, James Wodeombo, Thomas, Ker street Dymond, Thomas H., 29, Gramby-st. Horton, Rev. Thomas H., 29, Gramby-st. Horton, Rev. Thomas H., 29, Gramby-st. Horton, Rev. Thomas H., 29, Gramby-st. Tocker and Pearce, Pembroke-street Cloater, John, Town-square Dymond, Mr. Smith, R. C. Tomson, John, Fore street	109	0000 20522 12111111111111111111111111111	1 1 1 1 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillips and I *Morris, W. R *Le un v. A. Allen, Edwar *Batoman, H. *Honnell, E., *Honnell, E., *Honnell, E., *Max, Charle *Max, Charle *Max, Charle *Manton, Her From a Poo. *A Fow Lace *Bmythers *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Mr *Wood, Richt *Read, Henry *Rellamy, Sa Cotlinson, W Brooks, Beng Down J., 179, A Friend	Niven, Win. M'Noughton, John A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) Jee, Westwood House, near Colchester Smith, Melksbam Lebert, 4, Huggins Jame L, Mill Jame, Deptford V., 89, John street, Toffenham Courted, Humbrook-street, Southsea Lany, 6, Islington Green Quest street, Bridge road, Borough Lo, Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn As, Duke street, Tooley-street receu Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks broen street, Sunderland Norwich Levent Charles st., Birminghan Man Ly, 10, Great Charles st., Birminghan Man Ly, 10, Great Charles st., Birminghan Man Ly, 10, Great Charles st., Birminghan Man Ly, 10, Great Charles st., Birminghan Man Ly, 10, Great Charles st., Birminghan Man Ly, 10, Great Charles st., Birminghan Man Ly, 10, Great Charles st., Birminghan Miller in the Isle of Wight, per Jan 1, 271, Oxfordestreet Ly 108, do 1, 272, Austin Finas mid. Clarence plage, Camberwell Lityer, Gertelius, Iver street Teipe, Cornelius, Iver street Teipe, Cornelius, Iver street Teipe, Cornelius, Iver street Teipe, Cornelius, Iver street Oram, Richard Robt, do Pyer, Rey, John, Stoke Nich alls, John, George street Dymond, Thomas, Ker street Man, Joseph, St. Aubyn-street Oyam, Richard Robt, Germby-st. Horton, Rey, Thomas, Stoke Parlen, Edward, Jannes-street Cloater, John, Town-square Dymond, Mr. Smith, R. C. Tomson, John, Catharine street (Flosen, John, Catharine street	000000000000000000000000000000000000000		445 00227111110000000 000000000000000000000	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
*Rooke, Char *Phillip and and I *Morris, W. R *Le un w. A. Allen, Edwa *Bataman, H *Homell, E., *Foster, C. J. Taylor, Thom Husaey, W., C *Down, W., C *Max, Charle *Manton, Her From a Pool *Hilditch, Mi *A Fow Luce *Smythers *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Joh *Cutting, Mi *Wood, Rich *Read, Henry, Sa *Collingan, W *Rrooks, Beng Down J., 179, *A Friend	Niven, Win. M'Noughton, John A Friend, per A. Fraser (Sundry small subscriptions) Jes, Westwood House, near Colchester Smath, Melkobam Les et 4, Huggins lane L., Mill land, Deptford V., 89, John street, Toffenham Courted J. Hughrook-struet, Southsea Lany, fi, Islington Green Quests street, Bridge road, Borough J. Stone-buildings, Lincoln's Inn As, Duke street, Tooley-street occur Farm, High Wycombe, Bucks breen street, Sunderland Nowsich Ley 10, Great Charles et., Birminghan Man Man John the Isle of Wight, per Jan Malora in the Isle of Wight, per Jan 11, 271, Oxford'street 12, 268, do 12, 268, do 13, 28 and 79, Nowgate-street 127, Austin Friars mich, Clarence place, Camberwell 141, York street, St. Luke's min, 100, Curtain road Strund Miall and Company, Market street Foster, John, St. Aubyn street Oram, Richard Robt, do Pyer, Rey, John, Stoke Nich dis, John, George street Buchett, James Woolcombe, Thomas, Ker street Dynond, Thomas H., 29, Granby-st. Horton, Rey, Thomas, Ker street Trucker and Fearer, Pembroke-street Cloater, John, Town-squaro Dynond, Mr. Smith, R. C. Tomson, John, Catharine street (*Young, George	000000000000000000000000000000000000000		445 0082 21111100000000000000000000000000000	000000000000000000000000000000000000000

Those names marked with an asterisk are renewed subscriptions.

*Andrews, David R., Porthand street ... 1 '0 0 *Mack, Thomas, Titclifield street ... 1 '0 0

ERRATA.

In Leader, No. 131, for Thomas Hestit, Dean-street, Newcastle on Tyne, 17., read 36.; for A. Anderson, Scarborough, 525., read A. Anderson, Norwood, Surrwy; and in Stockton-on-Teen list of subscriptions, for Henry Sharp read Henry Thorpe, In list of promised subscriptions, for Geo. Gibson and Co., 1006., read 1276.

The New Serdino Scale—Its Effect on Adricultural.—What the agricultural interest (meaning thereby the real cultivators of the soil) have really most to fear, is a delay in the final settlement of this question. There will be no readjustment of rents and leases while the change is in process. All the disadvantages of a sudden repeal are thus meaned to the farmer, without any of its corresponding advantages to bimself or the community. The evil may not be felt during 1816, because searcity throughout Europe, preventing under any circumstances extensive importation, may provent its operation. But during 1847-8, stocks of foreign corn, prevented by the sliding scale from gradual importation, will in all probability accumulate in foreign ports, and, on the sudden full of duty in 1819, be poured on the market, unmaturally lowering the price, to the great injury of the English producer.—Report of the Liverpool Anti-Monopoly Association, 1845.

A THIRD GLANCE AT THE HOUSE OF COMMONS. By Reuden.

SIR JAMES GRAHAM AND MR. SHAW.

When one stands upon a bridge which spans a ravine, in some woodland solitude, looking over the side of the bridge upon the leafy tops of trees, which rise up like platforms for the sunshine to light upon, as it peeps below to see what the water is doing, which is heard, but not seen; and when we look down upon the jackdaws which hover upon the tree-tops, clusters of them sitting on branches sedately, while a single one balances itself upon a twig, extending first one wing and then the other to preserve its balance, calling, "cacaw, cacaw," or "jackdaw, jackdaw;" then durting off in an instant with a dozen followers to join in a thicket of flapping wings and "ca-cawing" voices, from amongst which some birds disappear into holes in the side walls and re-appear again, and call "caenw, jackdaw," and take their seats on leafy twigs, and there continue the cry, or listen to others uttering it; looking down upon this fraternity of jackdaws, the human spectator on the bridge, who is a kind of "stranger in the gallery," cannot for the life of him-tell what all the flutter and noise is about, though he is a believer in the natural truth that all creatures by their motion or their sound express some sensation or meaning, no matter whether they be jackdaws on trees or gentlemen in Parliament.

Thus it was with me, one evening this week, at that time of the evening when there is too little daylight left to see the members of Parliament distinctly, and the bude lights are not yet turned on in full strength. Knowing nothing of what had been done, or what was doing, what had been said, or what was saying, I reached an elevated position, and looked down upon the House of Commons, and saw it more than usually full of members, and the members all in commotion. Rows of them were sitting aloft in the side galleries, looking over the front, moving their heads excitedly, and uttering sounds like "cacaw, cacaw," or "jackdaw, jackdaw;" while below, the same sounds were uttered from all sides and all seats, while some members darted up and darted down again, while others were vehemently wagging their heads and vociferating "cacaw," or "jackdaw," or some sound which my unparliamentary ears believed to be those. A few members sat gravely still, and seemed to say nothing; but only a few. Some emerged hastily from doorways, and listening, or seeming to listen, for a moment, joined in the cries. I had just caught a glimpse of a tall dark figure—a gentleman in black, whose bald head, with the black edging of hair combed up to hide a little of the baldness, as remnants of a good reputation are sometimes brought up to cover spots -where--character -is-bare,—I--had- just-caught-a glimpse of this tall figure as it sat down, and knew it was that of Sir James Graham. This down-sitting of the Home Minister was the signal of commotion; something he had said about somebody was the cause of it.

At last the tunult of sounds ceased; the members sat still; and another member of high stature, not far from the place of the first one, who had been standing for some minutes, but whom I had not seen in the dim light, began, with a strong voice, to speak. I was soon informed that this was Mr. Shaw, representative in Parliament of the Dublin University. I also discovered now that I had made a mistake in supposing that in the tunult of the house the members had been calling "caenw," or "jackdaw," they had been calling "Shaw Shaw," "Mr. Shaw, Mr. Shaw!"

This Mr. Shaw, it sooms, has declared himself bitterly against the Government, but particularly against Sir James Graham. According to what has transpired, he, at the end of 1834, when Sir Robert Peel returned from Italy and took a short hold of office, was offered a place of some kind. He declined to take any judicial place that would exclude him from the House of Commons. His ambition to be a great statesman has never been concealed; and he might have been a respectable second-seat man, at least, had he not been a bigot, and the worst of bigots, an Irish political bigot—and had he evinced some regard for other persons than himself. He is a ready speaker, with a good voice.

Nor could he, he says, take any political office which would deprive him of his Recordership of Dublin; he could not afford to lose its income. But it seems he planned a scheme by which he might get its income—and something more—and be relieved from its duties, free, able, and willing to take political office. The Whigs, however, were in power; the Tory tenure of place having been very short in 1834 and beginning of 1835. It was not until 1842, shortly after the return of the Tories to power, that he brought his scheme before them. He gave an account of it the other night, and from the way in which he gave it shape and colour he was loudly cheered, for he made its history tell against Sir James Graham. He called it an arrangement of the office of the Dublin recordership, and several other small judicial appointments in that city, "whereby a saving of between 3,000% and 4,000% a year" was to be made to the public. But Sir James Graham, on rising a second time, gave the affair another shape and colour. Shaw's scheme was to get an increased allowance fixed for the recordership of 3,000%, with a retiring pension equal to the present income, the salary for the office being now about 2,000%, that he should, therefore, cease to receive the 2,000% a year, for doing the work, and get the retiring salary of 2,000% without the work to do, but to be at liberty to remain in Parliament and take any political office which Sir Robert Peel, or political fate, or even Sir James Graham might put in his way.

The job was too bad for Sir James, and he wrote to Mr. Shaw and told him so; and on Monday night told him he was at full liberty to read that letter to the house. But neither the Home Minister, nor the Recorder of Dublin, in their disputes, have said a word about the Dublin jury lists. There were people in the Home of Commons on Monday night who almost expected to hear the "cat let out" about the jury lists in the O'c onnell trials.

Be that as it may, Sir James Graham during lan session had called Mr. Shaw his right honourable "friend." Whereupon the latter retorted angrily that he had never been his friend; that more than political and parliamentary acquaintance he knew nothing of him. And when the present session of Parliament came, and the Free Trade scheme was divalged, Slaw ranged himself with the protectionists, denied the the Irish potato disease, and accused the Ministry. Sir James Graham hinted that he was bitter on the question of the Corn Laws, because disappointment in me direction excited his hopes in another. This led Shaw to give a history of his hopes and disappointments, and make strong asseverations to the house that there was not one word of truth as to his having been disappointed in not being made secretary for Ireland. Sir James explained, however, that he had only spoken of a "prospective" secretaryship; one which he may safely count upon as his own, should the protectionists form a new Government.

When an hour and a half, or thereabout, had been consumed in such personal bickerings, the question before the house proceeded. That question was corn or coercion. After much debate, a division took place, and coercion carried the day; while corn was for a time set aside.

Had a division taken place an hour or two some than it did, the majority, it is thought, would have been for proceeding with corn; and it is believed that Sr R. Peel would, if thus strengthened by a vote of the house, have been quite willing to shelve the Coercion Bill for a few weeks. But so many members spoke, and some of them so long, that a considerable number left the house, and chiefly from the side where corn strength against coercion strength was ranged. Ultimately, the coercion debate was adjourned to Tuesday.

No House-the battles in India.

But, though Tuesday was appointed for the resumption of the debate on coercion, to the exclusion of the question of corn, the debate was not resumed. There did not assemble members enough to form a house; one circumstance tending to which might be the promise of the Irish liberal members to occupy the house for at least three nights, with the defence of Ireland, even if no other members should speak, and the aversion which a large body of the English aristocracy and squirearchy have to listen to the tale of Irish wrongs, or have anything to do with Ireland, save to receive rents or tithes from it, or hold commissions or commands in its arms of occupation; or vote coercion for it to compel it to pay its rents and tithes quietly, or with only as much grumbling as shall be in a whisper; to compel it to sell its last bushel of corn, last pig, and all but its last potato, to go without a shirt, without a coat, with a straw wisp in its hat, and with barely half a pair of breeches to its limbs, that it may pay rents and tithes, the one to a landlord who pockets the money, buttons his pocket, and walks away, and says, "If the Irish gramble, pull down their houses, eject them from my estate, and hang them if they refuse to submit;" the other to a parson who also pockets the money, does not button his pockets, perhaps, but says, " I will spend it only with good Protestants -I will spend none of it upon those idolatrous Papists who pay it to mo, unless it be for Protestant sheriff's officers to distrain on them ; Protestant constabelary to protect the sheriff's officers; Protestant soldiery to back the constabulary; Protestant witnesses to swear against the idolatrous Catholics who do not submit quiotly : Protestant juries to convict them ; Protestant hangmen to hang them; Protestant curates to and me in heaping curses on them when they are hanged all that Iroland may be Protestantised in the great process of paying tithes to a price bood IP does not believe the save to vote for coercion to Ireland, to obtain from Ireland submission to such aggressions as those, the English owners of Irish land and their political friends in Parliament have little juclination to sit on either side of the house to listen to the wrongs inflicted by them and their agents in Ireland. And this may have been one reason why the attendance was so thin on Tuesday, at four o'clock, as to muster only 31 members, 40 members being requisite to form a house.

But this was not the chief reason. The telegraphic despatches, published early in the day in second editions of the London morning papers, prepared London to expeet before many hours details of one of the most ter-Vible seems of carnage known in the history of India. In a few hours the first of the details from India arrived, and every man, and woman, and, I may add, child, who had a friend or brother there, were eagerly running to the offices of the newspapers and to the newsmen to learn some particulars, however scanty, or, if possible the names of those who had fallen in the carnage.

From the fact becoming known that the Morning Heraid had been the first to publish the details at much length in a third edition, and that the Standard would repeat their publication in the evening, the rush of people of all degrees to the offices of those papers was most intensely exciting. At one period towards five o'clock, it being rumoured that the Standard was to give the names of the officers killed and wounded, though every newsman and newsman's boy in the metropolis was commissioned to get papers with all speed for the clubs and reading rooms and reading people, there were in Bridge-street alone as many members of Parliament in carriages, on horsehack, or on foot, competing to get papers, as would have made up the number deficient at the House of Commons for a house. Many more must have been at their clubs anxiously waiting for the papers, or running, riding, driving over the town to tell persons interested in India, or in the fate of the armies of India, what was not yet generally

The scene in Bridge-street, Blackfriars, was suggesve of reflections of deep import : not alone that some of the earriages which drew up there contained what were evidently-the-whole, or nearly-the-whole, of a fitmily, none of whom had patience to stay at home after the first rumour while one came out to get tidings of father or brother, but who came all off in painful anxiety to ascertain if the names of the slain had yet arrived; not alone that beating hearts, which had no carriages to carry them in search of the news of battle and the names of friends supposed to have been in the battle, were as anxiously contending for the printed sheets; not alone that the friends of the lives and happiness of all mankind were eager to learn how many and whom of mankind had been destroyed, even though they had individually no relatives in the war; not alone that the greatest part of all who assembled at the Standard office, or any other office, to learn the news did so because they were pleased, and gloried in the rumours of the slaughter because of its very magnitude; not alone for any of these reasons, nor for all united, nor for the additional and more satisfactory one, that this action had terminated the war, was it that reflections of deep import were suggested, though all or any of those considerations were suggestive of grave reflections.

Meditative thought turned almost involuntarily from the certainty that war had been upon the Sutlej in India, to the possibility of its being upon the St. Lawrence in America; and that with an army, not composed of the half-barbarians of the Punjaub, but with brothers of Saxon blood, Saxon courage, perseverance, and endurance. And what so intimately allied to such reflections as the great question of commercial freedom, of national brotherhood, for which we are struggling? What is there of equal value in that question to the certainty that it is the forerunner of universal peace? the only sure preventative of war? Let us commit some of those thoughts to paper.

THE WAR OF NEIGHBOURS—WHAT WOULD IT BE LIKE?

Standing in Bridge-street, Blackfriars, looking upon the crowd who press to get the names of the killed and wounded in India, from a newspaper supposed to be about to publish the names, it will be deemed very absurd to look along Blackfriars-bridge and imagine the London side and the Southwark side at war ; the bridge the central point of the battle, the one army driving the other across the bridge, and over the bridge, into the Thames; the artillery of the strongest scattering grape and canister shot among the flying crowds of the weakest; the lancors with lances, the swordsmen with swords-riding upon the disordered rear, howing down those that have not yet fallen, trampling to death those that are already down, rushing across to Blackfriurs street to set it on fire, bringing up heavy cannon to batter down buildings that will not burn; retreating to their own side (supposing the citizens to have been the most powerful, and to have chastised the Southwarkians for an invasion) and breaking down or blowing up the bridge in their retrent to prevent the Southwarkians from coming over again; proceeding upon the river to scuttle, sink, or burn, or fotch away by force of arms, and call them their own, every barge, wherry, boat, or raft of timber upon which the Southwarkians could venture upon the water again, either for war or peaceful business. It would be absurd to stand in Bridge-street and suppose all this; but why? Simply because such occurrences are impossible. And why are such occurrences impossible? Because the people on the one side and on the other are one people. The traffic of the one is the traffic of the other; the bridge of the one is the bridge of the other; the barges, wherries, bonts, and rafts of wood of the one, are the barges, wherries, boats, and rafts of wood of the other; the preservation of the property of the one side is equally important to the other side. It is so impossible that the two sides of the Thames could go to war and destroy each other's shops and houses, butcher each other's bodier, lay each other's streets in ashes, and make a population of widows and oxplans and wounded men, to inhabit the streets of ashes and desolation, so utterly impossible is it for such a thing to happen, that it may appear supremely ridiculous to put the case even hypothetically.

Yet there was once war, even between the two sides of the Thames. The river was a division of kingdoms at a time when there was a belief not yet so dead in the English mind as it should be, that war is a glorious thing, and is only dishonourable when not successful. That was at a time when there was no oneness of interest between the dwellers on the left bank and on the right. It was at a time when the ruling principle of such commerce as was known was piracy. But even now, in the age called civilised--between nations who are the pioneers of civilisation, England, America, France, all three, or any two of them, it is quite possible for war to arise.

It is not possible that the ships of the Messrs, Baring trading to America, could be attacked, boarded, plundered, burned, or sunk in the London docks by an armament from Rotherhithe; but it is possible that they may be attacked, boarded, plundered, burned, and sunk on the shore of America when trading there; and if so, the loss would be as great to their owners, or their insurers in London, as if they had been destroyed upon the Thames.

Then, if, in retaliation, the ships of war of England should go out, and lay themselves alongside of Boston, and throw rockets into it, and shells to blow it up, and set it on fire, and to tear the limbs from the bodies of the inhabitants, all of whom, it might be, were in favour of peace; some of whom, it might be, were the sellers or the buyers and consumers of the goods which the Barings had before carried there; some of whom might be the owners of ships lying in the ports of England, or at that moment going to the bottom of the sea, sunk by the cannon-balls of England; -- if Boston should be bombarded and laid in ashes, its inhabitants left houseless, or thousands of them lifeless, the ships burned, and the docks filled only with wreck, what redress would that be to England? The English merchants would not be paid for the ships and cargoes lost. On the contrary the Americans would be still less able to pay them, even if the war was ended:

But the trade between Liverpool and America, if suspended by war, would be an act of national suicide by both countries, far exceeding in disaster anything here hinted at in regard to the port of London, or anything known in the history of warfare. To depict its consequences would be an unwelcome task; and for the present, in this paper, an impossible one.

Let it suffice to say that the inhabitants of America. who are in the closest commercial intercourse with England, and the inhabitants of England who are holding intercourse with them, are jointly as averse to war as are the inhabitants on the Southwark side and the city side of the Thames to a war between Middlesex and Surrey.

Those in America, who would not so immediately feel the consequences of war in their worst form, are the people of the Western States, who have little commercial intercourse with England, but with whom we are seeking to establish it, by getting food from them in return for our clothing and furniture, of which they are in need.

Repeal the Corn Law at once, and the Western States of America are converted into peacemakers. Defer the repeal, and let the excitement on the Oregon question proceed, and the time for joint occupation cease, and warmay become unavoidable. And, if it does begin, all the battles on the Sutlei are as holiday powder fired away, compared with the results of a war with America.

Not that it is denied that the Indian battles are great ones; they are greater, probably, than any pitched land battles that would be fought in America. A warbetween England and America, would be one coaseless mival battle; the separate engagements being nothing more than a small part of the whole. It would be fought along a coast of six thousand miles, and upon an ocean field extending from the English Channel to the shores of China.

America might disable England, and England might disable America. What would be the gain to either? Let two neighbours who have lived in peace - the blacksmith and the miller -full out and fight, and try to stab each other, and cut each other's hands off, and burn each other's houses; the miller who used to get the blacksmith's skill and iron and tools to mend his mill, trying to cut the sinews of the blacksmith's arm, so that he shall not be able to wield his lammer again, and trying to sink his hammers and his iron in the millpond; the blacksmith battering the head of the miller with his hammer, breaking the mill, throwing the flour into the mill-pond." What would be the gain to either if completely victorious over the other? If equally matched, would they not fight until they each cried "enough," and begin their respective business again in the mill and the smithy much poorer men, more helpless men, less useful men, less amiable men than they were before they fell out, and quarrelled, and fought, and battered each others heads?

That miller and that blacksmith are not fictitious. They may fall out. They are not now such friendly neighbours as they might be. The smith has refused to take the flour; the miller refuses to take the smith's ironwork. They dispute about a small piece of common land, of little benefit to either; and it is possible they may go to blows about it. But they would not fight could not; their domestic households would not permit them, if the smith dealt with the miller, and the miller

Nothing prevents that dealing but our Corn Law. Off with it at once.

THE NORTH LANCASHING PROTECTIONISTS AND THEIR PETITION ON THE CORN LAWS. A paragraph, under this field, appeared in the Guardian of Wednesday last, stating, in substance, that a few weeks ago R.W. France, Esq., of Raweliffe Hall, had declined to sign the North Lancashire petition in favour of protection, when requested to do so by R. Fownley Parker, Esq., along with a few other protectionist Incolorings. In reference to this paragraph, we have received the following polite epistle from Mr. Parker, which we presume be intended for publication:

"Cuerden Hall, 22d March, 1846. "Sir, .. The inclosed paragraph has been sent to me, and, I am informed, appeared in the Preston Guardian." If it be correctly copied from your paper, I have to inform you that the statement you have made is false.— I am, sir, yours, &c.

"R. TOWNLEY, PARKER.

^eTo the Editor of the Manchester Guardian! The particular expressions of this letter are quite beneath our notice; and we shall therefore content ourselves with a word or two in reference to the facts to which it relates. What it is in the paragraph that is " false," Mr. Parker does not explain, and we cannot supply the omission. Whether the call was made upon Mr. France a few days instead of a few weeks ago, -whether Mr. Parker called upon him alone, and not along with a few other protectionist buildowners,-or whether Mr. France conveyed his refusal to sign in a different form of words from that detailed in the pavagraph,-or upon what other incidental point the loose general depial turns,---we are left to conjecture as best we may. At all events, we may safely presume, that if Mr. Parker had not called upon Mr. France for the purpose stated, -- or if, when so called upon, Mr. France had consented to sign the petition, - Mr. Parker would have had discernment enough to see, that the real fact should be distinctly stated in his letter. - Manchester

BRISK TRADE, PROVISIONS LOW, A.D. 1765. Mr. Wm Smellie, F.R.S. and A.S., late printer in Edinburgh, Secretary and Superintendant of Natural History to the Society of Scottish Antiquavies, &c., &c., intimate with Arineipal Ro-bertson, David Hume, Dr. Blair, Dr. Adam Smith, Read Kames, Lord Hailes, Lord Elibank, Robert Burns, poet Remodeller and compositor of Dr. Buchan's Domestic Medicine, Translator of Buffon, &c., &c., &c., in a letter to Dr. Buchan, author of Domestic Medicine, dated Shellield, 1765, writes thus :- " Extremerdeadness of trade, and consequent want of money, at present in these parts; high paice of provisions of all sorts—these two latter are reasons of much provisions of all sorts—these two latter are reasons of much greater weight than you are aware of, and greatly influence the sale of anything here (Sheffleld). You must know, when trade is brisk, and provisions law, we are all brisk as lords in this trading country; but when 'the contrary happens, we are poor as rats or beggars."—Memoirs of the Life, Writings and Correspondence of Mr. Wm. Smellie, by Robert Kerr, F. R.S. Ed. Edin. 1811, in 2 vols. Mr. Kerr elsawhere observes of 1r. Adam Smith, the immortal author of the Wealth of Nacions—"A book greatly more celebrated and admired than understood; and the principles which it inculcates and establishes, though almost univerwhich it inculcates and establishes, though almost universally acknowledged to be just and irrefragable, are still successfully opposed by the narrow mercantile system of monopoly, and the bigotted terror which actuates many respectable characters against every appearance of innova-tion and reform." Mark, this was pouned in 1811.

South LANCASHIER.-The requisition to Messes. Villiers and Brown is progressing towards completion; already upwards of 7(00 of the electors have appended their signatures, and this is exclusive of those received in townships which have not yet sont in their returns. It will be recollected that at the last contested election Mr. Brown only

There were no potatoes in the Limerick market on Friday.—Limerick Examiner.

AGRICULTURE.

REAL AGRICULTURAL PROTECTION.

A MODEL LEASE.

That the real friends to agriculture are to be found amongst the Free Traders is now scarcely denied by any but the politico monopolist landlords. "All, except those who regard their estates as sources of political influence rather than of revenue, are following the natural direction of agricultural improvement, and seeking, with more or less of effect, to amend the tenures of their tenants. Amongst the landowners who deserve honourable mention for their sound and practical views of the requirements of agriculture, Mr. Holland, of Dumbleton, a Free Trader and a Leaguer, stands high; for to that gentleman and his cyadjutors of the Vale of Everham Association, the farming interest is indebted for the simple and equitable model lease which we now present to our readers.

It appears that about a year ago, a resolution was passed at a meeting of this Society, "that security of tenure is essential for the prosperity of the furner, and will tend to the welfare of all other classes;" and a committee of landlords and tenants was appointed to draw up a form of lease, under which a tenant might hold his farm with the greatest advantage to himself, and with due justice to his landlord. The committee so appointed issued and extensively circulated a series of inquiries addressed to agriculturists in all parts of England; and after a due consideration of the answers obtained, the following form of lease has been submitted to the members of the association and the agriculturists at large, as one framed with due regard to the interests of both tenant and landlord. It is suggested that the lease may be altered to suit local or personal circumstances; and the committee believe " that the form will be found capable of adoption upon any land, and in any part of England.

This Indenture made the - day of - one thousoud eight hundred and forty in pursuance of an Act to facilitate the granting of certain Leases, between A. B. of of the one part, and C. D. of

of the oth r pert,

Witnesseth that the said A. B. doth demise and let the farm unto the said C. D., his heirs, executors and administrators, all the dwelling house, buildings, and several closes of land mentioned in the schedule hereunto annexed, and containing by a lineasarement A. B. P. or thereabouts, to hold from the day of for the term of twenty years theree ensuing; yielding therefore during the said term the rents hereinofter mentioned. Except and always reserved out of this demise all coals, mines, minerals, quarries of stone and heds of gravel, timber, and trees likely to become timber, with full liberty for the said V. B. his agent or others by him authorised, with or without horses, carts or other carriages, to enter upon the said premises or any part thereof, for the purpose of working any of the said mines or quarries, or of felling or taking away the timber, or planting other trees, or for any purpose whatsoever; making reasonable satisfaction to the said C. D for any r jury or damage which the said A. B. may carse in so doing.

1. And the said C. D. doth hereby for himself, his heirs, executors and administrators and every of them, covenant, promise and agree to and with the said A. B. his heirs and assigns, in member following: that he said C. D will pay to the said A. B. by two equal half yearly payments in every year, the first being gaide on the 25th day of Mauch and the other on the 25th day of September in each year the following rents, that is to say, in the first year the sum of C — which sam constitutes the value of — bushels of wheat, according to the average price of whoat for the seven years ending on the 1st of January next preceding the date of this denise, made up and published as required by law for the purposes of the Tithe Commutation Act; and in every other year during the continuance of this denise the value of a like number of bushels of wheat according to the average price, in like manner made up and published for the seven years next preceding; the rent for each year varying with the average price of wheat during the preceding seven years.

2. And the said C. D. covenants with the said A. B. to pay all taxes chargeable upon the said premises during the said term, laudioid's taxes excepted.

3. And that the said C. D. will at his own proper cost and charge repair all the house and buildings hereby demised, and also will keep in good repair all the gates, rai's, pales stiles, hedges, ditches, fences, banks, bridges, mounds and drains on the said lands, the said A. B. his heirs and assigns furnishing on the said premises or within miles thereof all rough timber, brick, lime, tiles and all other materials whatsoever for making such repairs.

1. And that the said dwelling house and other buildings linving been valued by persons of skill at the entry on the said premises by the said C. D. at the sum of £ which valuations are included in the schedule hereunto annexed, the said C. D. shall and will at the expiration of the said term or at the time of his leaving the said premises, whether it he before or after the end of the said term, deliver up to the said A. B. all the buildings so valued in good repair, and shall and will pay to the said A. B. the whole sum by which the said buildings shall have become lessened in value by reason of his neglect to repair the same; and in case any dispute shall arise with respect to the decreased value of the same, such dispute shall not be referred to the decision of two schitzstons or their unspire, chosen as hereinafter provided; but/the said C. D. shall not in any case be liable for any damage caused by tempest, and a reasonable deduction shall be made for the natural decay and wear and tear of the promises while occupied by him.

5. And that the said C. D. shall not sell or assign over this lease nor underlet the lands hereby demised or any part thereof unless with the written consent of the said A. B. and shall use his best endeavours to protect from injury by cattle or otherwise all trees or quickset hedges growing upon the said lands, and shall not lop or cut any of the trees so growing, pollard trees excepted.

growing, pollard trace excepted.

6. And it is hereby agreed that at any time in the sixteenth year of this demise, or in any subsequent year, the said A. B may require the said C. D. to grow such crops on every portion of the said lands as shall be prescribed by the said A. B, be the said A. B., delivering in writing to the said C. D. the course of cropping prescribed by him; and in case the said C. D. shall object to crop the land as proposed by the said A. B. the point in dispute shall be referred to the decision of arbitrators or their umpire, chosen as is hereinafter provided.

7. And that the said A. B. shall, at all times, have power for himself, or his agent, to go upon any part of the said demised lands for the purpose of inspecting the state of repair of any part thereof, and of ascertaining the state of the management and cultivation thereof; and in case the annual renting value of the said demised lands shall have suffered decrease by reason of the said C. D.'s failing to repair or to cultivate the said lands according to the rules of wood husbandry, the said A. B. may give notice to quit to the said C. D. at any time before the 25th day of March in any year, and the said C. D. shall quit and deliver up possession of the said lands on the 29th day of September next ensuing after such notice has been received by him; and in that case arbitrators, or their umpire, appointed as here-inafter mentioned, shall assess the damages to the land and buildings caused by such breach of covenant, which sum so assessed the said C. D. shall pay to the said A. D. And in case the said C. D. object to quit after receiving such notice, he may require that the dispute shall be referred to arbitrators or their umpire, chosen as hereinafter provided; and if they shall decide that the said lands have not been materially deteriorated by the management of the said C. D., such notice shall be void; and if they shall decide otherwise the said C. D. shall quit, and shall pay to the said A. B. whatever um the said arbitrators, or their umpire, shall judge to be a reasonable compensation for the injury done to the said

8. And that in the event of the said C. D. becoming a bankrupt or insolvent, or of his making any bill of sale or assignment of his estate or effects, or refusing to pay in full the rents herein reserved within one month after the same shall have been lawfully demanded, the said A. B. shall have power immediately to re-enter and repossess the lands herein demised, paying to the said C. D. reasonable compensation for such improvements effected by the said C. D. as have increased the annual renting value of the said lands, the amount thereof being adjudged by arbitrators or their umpire, chosen as hereinafter provided.

9. And the said A. B. covenants with the said C. D. for quiet enjoyment of the herein demised lands; and that the said A. B. shall insure all the buildings upon the said premises, provided always that in case such insurance shall be rendered void by the said C. D. having on the premisengeods of a hazardous nature, or by other circumstances caused by the negligence of the said C.D., he, the said C.D., shall pay to the said A. B. the whole amount withheld by the insurance office.

10. And that the said A. B. will effectually drain at his own cost and charge every part of the said lands which require drainage, and that the said C. D. covenants to pay an additional rent after the rate of 5l. for every 100l. expended by the said A. B. from the time of the completion of the whole or any part of the drainage and during the continuance of this demise.

11. And that the said C. D. shall and will, during the time he holds the said lands under this demise, farm them in a good and husbandlike manner, and 'shall not break up or convert to tillage any of the land marked in the schedule annexed as pasture or meadow land without the written permission of the said A. B. or of his agent lawfully authorised.

12. And the said A. B. and C. D. mutually covenant and agree that any dispute arising in settling their respective chims in respect to any matter contained in this demise, as well as the several matters herein declared to be referable to the decision of arbitrators, shall be settled and decided by persons of skill, appointed in the following manner:—that is to say, the said A. B. shall choose one such person, and the said C. D. shall choose another to be arbitrators, who shall upon being appointed forthwith choose an umpire, whose decision, in case the said arbitrators disagree, shall be final; and should either the said A. B. or the said C. D. refuse or neglect to choose his arbitrator within a month after being required to do so by the other, then either the said A. B., or the said C. D., shall have power to choose and appoint two arbitrators, who shall decide by themselves, or their umpire; and such decision shall be equally binding on both parties, as if each had appointed one arbitrator.

In witness whereof, these presents written on this and the preceding pages are subscribed by the said parties at in the county of and in the presence of

This is indeed a great step towards "agricultural protection." It is one of the most simple and evenhanded leases which has come under our observation, and deserves to be adopted as the groundwork of that reformation in the frame of leases, which is now indispensable. The forms of leases now commonly in use are practically adapted only to the state of husbandry fifty years ago. From the year 1792 till 1814, the value of land was constantly rising, and the competition for its occupation increased year by year-consequently, the object of furmers was to got farms, and the frame and technicalities of the leases entered but little into their consideration. Hence, during the period of high prices, little substantial alteration or amendment in the common forms of leases was made. In 1815, the blight of the Corn Law fell upon British husbandry; and from that time leases have almost fullen into disuse in Eugland. Tonant and landlord have been alike afraid to bind themselves by permanent contracts under the fluctuations and uncertainties of "protection."

From this cause first commenced the yearly-tenant system, which has of late become one of grievous oppression and loss to the tenant farmers of England. Under this system, however, in the exceptional cases where leases have been granted, the old forms have been adhered to; tenants, if determined to improve their land, being too glad to excape from the perilous condition of yearly tenants to scan very closely the terms of the lease by which they obtained protection against the caprices of landlordism.

The time, however, is now come when a new system must be adopted. Farming, it is admitted, can only be conducted with success by a due application of skill and capital; and skill and capital will only be applied where the tenant is seenred in the full possession of the fruits of his own enterprise and industry. Leases, therefore, must become the rule instead of the exception, and the settlement of the preliminary question of what is a fair and practical lease has thus become a necessity. The form promulgated by the Valo of Evesham Association goes far towards the settlement of that question, for it contains provisions which will amply secure the landlord against the deterioration of his property, unless through his own negligence; but we think that somewhat less of restriction on the tenant is required for the full developement of the capacity of our soil for increased production.

We have numbered the provisions of this form for the purpose of ready reference, and for the sake of brevity. First, although the reservation of existing timber is not perhaps to be avoided in the actual state of farms, the power to enter to plant other trees is decidedly and seriously objectionable. The object of modern management of land should be to remove all hedgerow timber with as little delay as is consistent with securing to the owner the fair value of his trees. But all new plantings should be made upon portions of the land especially agreed upon and defined for that purpose, and which would naturally be arranged so as to afford shelter and protection to the farm, instead of, as now, obstruction to light, air, and mitriment. This is a most important point in all enclosed and timbered districts.

The next point of objection occurs in provision No. 5, by which the tenant is restricted from assigning or underletting the farm.

This opens a wide question, upon which some of our best managers of land have doubts. But a little consideration will show that the restriction is an injury, not an advantage, to the landlord; whilst it greatly lessens the value of the tenants' interest in the farm. That the tenant or his assigns should be restricted from subdividing the farm is most reasonable and proper, but where the landlord is protected against the deterioration of his property (as we shall show presently he may effectually be, by a slight addition to the form before us), into whose hands seever it may come, the restriction on assigning the farm can only tend to prevent the application of capital to the land.

Let us suppose a farm taken in moderate or or dinary condition; and the tonant to have expended in bringing it at once into a state of high cultivation so much of his capital that he is cramped and pinched for want of floating, ready money capital. He is a man of substance, for he has investedsunk, if you please—a large sum of money in his farm, in such acts of husbandry that, unless prevented from following out his plans of culture, he is certain to got back his money with a fair profit during the currency of his lease; but his substance is unavailable as the means of credit. His optlay has much increased "the annual renting value" of his farm, but he can't avail himself of that value to obtain a needful supply of ready money, for he can't pledge his lease. His substance cannot be made a security to his friend or his banker. An additional ten, fifteen, or twenty per cent. on his previous outlay might give a most profitable rounn upon his total expenditure; but he has no security to give for such addition. Like Tantalus, he starres in the midst of plenty; the profit, which is almost his, oludes his grasp, because his interest in the fam cannot be assigned.

Or, take another case, the farmer has sufficient captal for the usual routine of his business, but he has no emplus; if an opportunity of making an all the geous purchase of extra stock, of a cheap quantity.

or hi
the fetter for h tho lease in th prope
be ar most adva
No. 3 again migh which the le dispe

there

reet l

the ti

his le givo

the a tratic Bene tion provi to rel awar we he it, un shoul

Th

12, re

They have a rance tenant is no diction agricu cultiva grain, Salish—Thi norang and, in his own under concep he is t prising curity he said dustry not se a chan that d him a have 1 dlery prospe lay.

Marque point point property quis he hension go out to in the inevital poor, I and the protection of th

Proten
"CL
On Waive sa timber
lings w Wood,
and 8p
Wood,
Heath

licath Hodder owner, quantit Possus, Put of cattle provender, of straw, or of manure should offer, there can be no doubt of the advantages direct or indirect both the farmer and the farm would derive from the transaction; and, had he the power of assigning his lease, he might, in depositing it with his banker. give security of ten or twenty times the value of the accommodation he receives. Again, the farmer or his family desire to sell the leasehold interest in the farm; and the same offered in the market, unfettered by previous negotiation with the landlord for his acceptance of the new tonant, will attract the attention of farming capitalists. In short, leasehold interests in land must become marketable, in the same way that leasehold interests in house property are now marketable, before capital will be applied to agriculture to the extent that would be most profitable to the farmer and landowner, and advantageous to the community. The provision No. 7, seems to be effectual to guard the landlord against waste, into whose hands soever the land might come; and therefore the provision, No. 8, which is in fact a simple robbery of the creditors of an-insolvent tenant, should, upon the principle that the leasehold interest ought to be marketable, be dispensed with.

The provision for arbitration, contained in No. 12, requires the addition, "that the submission or agreement to refer the matters aforesaid to arbitration, may be made a rule of the Court of Queen's Bench, or other Court of Record, upon the application of either of the parties to this demise." If this provision be omitted, and one party should refuse to refer, the other has no means of enforcing the award, except by a suit in Chancery. The provision we have added gives a summary power to enforce it, under the statute 9 & 10 Wm. III., ch. 15. This should never be omitted.

MONOPOLIST PROPHECIES.

We have again and again had occasion to remark upon the utter hollowness of the monopolist landowners. They are not faithful to their own political creed. They have not, in most instances, the excuse of mere ignorance for the foolishnesses they have palmed upon their tenants upon the subject of Free Trade. Now, there is no one who has given vent to more direful predictions as to the ruin Free Trade would bring upon agriculture, and the danger of driving land out of cultivation, though the free importation of foreign grain, than that genuine monopolist, the Marquis of Salishury.

This marquis, although not amongst the least ignorant of his not very enlightened class, has a keen and, in a narrow point of view, an accurate regard to his own interest—that is, he knows how to turn a penny under a system of moderate farming, though he has no conception of the real enpacity of land for production, and he is too hard and feudal as a landlord to give an enterprising tenant that full possession of his farm and security of tenure, which are essential to profitable farming.

However, the Marquis of Salisbury is a living instance that Mr. Colden, usually so accurate, erred, when he said that the monopolist landocrats, by whom the industry of the nation has hitherto been trammelled, have not sense enough to enable them successfully to manage a chandler's shop; because the marquis is just fitted for that department. Had fortune and descent not made him a landed magnate, he would, unquestionably, have been eminent in the huckstering and chandlery line, for he has a quick perception of the prospect of an immediate return for a given outlay. Now, we find in the following paragraph from the Herts Mercury the most complete demonstration of the Marquisof Salisbury's own want of faith in his own monopoint prophecies. Let farmers remember, that the Marquis has been one who professed the most extreme apprehension, that with a Free Trade in corn, poor land must goout of cultivation, and moreover that the land referred to in the subjoined paragraph, which, now Free Trade is inevitable, he is bringing into cultivation, is not merely poor, but cold and stubborn land, difficult to cultivate, and they will hereafter know what faith to put in the pretended alarm of these protectionist landocrats:

"CLEARING OF LAND FOR AGRICULTURAL PURPOSES.—On Wodnesday last, Mr. Kimpton superintended an extensive sale of timber, at Hoddesdon, comprising 2,647 oak timber trees, and 6,667 oak saplings. The timber and saplings were standing in the following woods:—Minims Great Wood, near South Minms, Middlesex; Cloth Hall Wood and Springs, near Baldock; Lady Grove and Wood Hall Wood, near Hatfield; Box Wood, Wormley Wood, Cow Heath and Darmondsay, Westfield Grove and Spring, near Hoddesdon. We understand that the object of the noble owner, the Marquis of Saliabury, in disposing of this large quantity of timber, is to slaar the land, for agricultural purposes. We have heard that seven farms are to be created out of the land which will be thus cleared. This startedly necessary to inquire whether the noble Marquess can be of opinion that Free Trade will depreciate the value of arable land, when he adopts these measures on the very eve of the downfull of 'Protection.'"—Horts Mercury.

In the same district, other landlords are clearing woodlands for the purpose of cultivation. This is a wise proceeding, and it strongly shows that they have no real apprehension from Free Trade.

INDIAN CORN BREAD.

We confess we have always regarded Indian corn as food for stock rather than for man, and we have therefore hailed its free introduction as the means of indirectly increasing the people's food. This it will do in an eminent degree; for it is said we shall ultimately get it at a very cheap rate, and the cheaper the more stock can we keep on our land, and thus reduce the price of wheat by the increased fertility of our own fields. But we learn that maize, or Indian corn meal, makes excellent bread, and that it is coming into extensive use as an article of human food. We are glad of it; and this we say as occupiers of land, especially if not exclusively adapted for the growth of wheat.

We believe no one worthy of the name of "a farmer" has any-fear of that competition which excites the sham horror of Mr. Miles and his scarcity-loving band in the House of Commons. We have been led to these remarks by a little tract we have received on the advantages of Indian corn as a cheap and nutritions article of food, by Dr. Bartlett, the Editor of the New York Albion, which gives ample directions for using maize in the various modes common in the United States; and we propose on a future occasion to give some extracts from it.

STATE OF TRADE AT LIVERPOOL.-The only point in connection with the corn trade of this port indicative of the opinion of dealers respecting Sir Robert Peel's measure is the growing indisposition to purchase cargoes of bonded wheat on speculation. This would seem to evince a fear for the ultimate fate of the bill now under discussion in the House of Commons, though, in the present state of the money market, it is rather difficult to judge accurately of the motives of those whose enterprises, in more healthy times, give so much animation and impetus to business. The prevailing malady no doubt depresses the energies of men in all departments of trade, and merely speculative designs are entertained with caution, or held in abeyance till affairs assume a more settled aspect. There has, throughout the past week, been an increased demand for foreign wheat for present uso, and buyers from the country have continued to make large purchases at this port for transmission to their respective districts. The purchases of Irish wheat have been so considerable as to cause an advance of price to the extent of threepence to fourpence per bushel. This strengthens the helief lately entertained, to which we alluded last week and the week before, of the low state of the stocks in the principal corn growing districts of the country. alluded last week to the increased demand for Indian corn, consequent on the Government order for the release of that article at the low duty pro _ Government_order posed under the new tariff. The orders for that description of grain last week were very extensive; floating or forthcoming cargoes being in great request, principally for Ire-land. The reputation of Indian corn is, in fact, rapidly increasing, and there is every prospect of this and many other descriptions of nutritious and wholesome food, bitherto almost unknown in this country, coming largely into consumption. Our American brethren, who are considerately anxious to relieve our wants, and at the same time roup legitimate advantage from our necessities, have recently sent over a cargo of red kidney beans, of which not only they, but, we believe, the French and Dutch, are in the habit of cooking substantial and highly nutritions messes. These beans are, when properly prepared, exceedingly palatable, and they can now be obtained at a very low price in many of the shops of this town. Our transatlantic friends must have conceived that we were really on the verge of funine, for some smart denizen of the States has transmitted to us a cargo of lupins-a bitter, unpalatable sort of pulse, of which we do not pretend to know the use or properties, and we believe the consignes of this novel adventure is equally unenlightened. We have not yet had any arrivals of buckwheat, though we know that orders have been transmitted to Hamburgh for a quantity to be sent over to this country forthwith by steamer.—Liverpool Albion.

BIX BUSHELS OF SPEKCHES.—It appears that our member, Lord George Bentinck, during the 20 years he has occupied asseatin Parliament, for this borough, has been hiding his talents under a bushel. We had no idea his abilities extended beyond the necessary sharpness for making up a book for Newmarket. The Free Trade measures of Sir Robert Peel, however, appears uddenly to have developed them in an extraordinary degree, and his lordship may now be considered the leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons. That his constituents may be perfectly aware of his attainments, and the place they will in future occupy in the estimation of the country, as the returners to Parliament of so great a statesman, his lordship has furnished a corrected copy of his speech of like 27th of February to the Morning Post, which was published in that paper of the 23d instant, and to the dismay of the letter carriers of Lynn, no less than six bushels arrived by Tuesday morning's mail, directed, we presume by his lordship's orders, to the voters of the borough.—Correspondent of the Cambridge Independent.

PROSPECTS FROM THE REPEAL OF THE CORN LAWS.—On Tuesday, the grass parks attached to the mansion-house of Barr, the seat of Colonel M'Dowall, Lookwinnool, were let by public roup, and the yearly rent obtained for the same amounted to no less than 1251, above the sum for which the same ground was let last year. Similar advances have taken place in various parts of the country.—Edinburgh Witness.

Place in various parts of the country.—Edinburgh Witness.

A Mr. Smith demanded compensation from the Cork and Bandon Railway Company, for the injury which would be done to the milk of his cous by reason of the noise, steam, and smoke of the locomolives in their (rans).

THE DEBATE OF FRIDAY.
(From the Times.)

Friday night went far to redeem the intelerable dulners of the week's debate. The distinguished speakers set to work like men on their subjects, and laid for the pending measure a broad foundation of reason and facts which a House of Lords will find it easier to neglect than overthrow. Novelty, of course, there could be none. What more could be said? What new thing that would not be untrue, what true thing unless it no longer was new? There is, of course, but too much truth in the successme with which the late Foreign Secretary took care to spice his adhesion to the ministerial measure. All has been said times and times before. The League has said it all; Peel Limself has said it. "I think," said his lordship; said it. "I think," said his lordship;

"That the Government have placed upon somewhat too may grounds the justification they have advanced for the change that has taken place in their conduct. They have useribed that change to their experience during the last three years. I think they would have as justly explained the cause if they had imputed it to the debates of the last four sessions. I think it is not merely their experience of their own tariff which has altered their opinions, but that the change may be attributed to the speeches of my hom, friend the member for Stockport, and other hon, gentlemen who have advocated, session after session, with an eloquence unanswerable, and with arguments which could not be disputed, there principles of freedom of commerce upon which the measures of Government are founded."

After a preparation which has really been years in progress, and which the crisis, if crisis it be, has only brought to a head, all that remains is the summing up of the argu-It must be rather tedious, after the splendid harangues of the counsel, the dexterous examination and cross-examination of witnesses, the elaborate arguments, the sudden surprises, the diverting episodes of a long and important trial, to listen to the very same things, collected, stuffed, and dried by the judge. Wonderful as his memory and skill may be, nothing but a caput mortuum of harren recapitulations can now be extracted from the cause. The harvest has been seemed by the League, the gleaning is all that is left for her Majesty's ministers, or, indeed, for the *tatesmen of either party. Such is the rightful meed of original spirit and genius; and such, on the other hand, the penalty of those who are slow to learn, and still slower to act on their growing convictions. They may at last master the whole argument, and, what is more, they may triumph over the hostility and suspicion that inevitably dog the path of the convert. They may seem not only to speak the truth, but also to believe it; yet all has been said before. The freshness of the thing is gone. The more the speaker proves his new system, the more he condemns his own long resistance. Others have discovered the new world, and deservedly given it their name. Peel and Graham are only the settlers who securely cross the well explored ocean, and com fortably squat on the now familiar shore.

One topic there was, however, which assumed a new and peculiar interest in Sir Robert Peel's hands, chiefly on account of the practical comments with which it is in his power to illustrate it. Sir R. Peel can not only enunciate principles of taxation, he has the power of following them up, and therefore every word he drops on that subject, whatever its truth, cannot fail to be important.

The Premier's first feeling on the subject is to relieve the classes whose incomes are, as he expresses it, under 9s., 12s., 15s., or 50s. a week. He points out that the expenditure of these classes is almost entirely on articles which are heavily taxed. In the lowest rank of this census, the larger pert, a half, or two thirds of the pittance goes for bread. So large a place does the staff of life occupy in the labourer's budger, that if its price rises but a little, it swallows the whole of his earning. Sir Robert Peel, without committing himself to the opinion that the repeal of the Corn Laws will really be duce the price of bread, asks for the labourer and operative the chance of this result. What if bread should fall, he says, why should we he situte to give so great a boon to the poor man, at so small a cost, if any, to the rich?

"Well, then, supposing the effect of thickey is to cause come reduction in the price of wheat, purvict are ask ourselves this question; supposing that ruch is the celect, are you not thus materially adding to the comforts and to the enjoyments of millions of your fellow subjects? Let me assure you that this is by for the most important part of the que tion. It is impossible to dary sour know that I give you credit for it the read sympathy which you have for the interest and the condition of the working classes in this country. Yes, I don't agree at all with those who make imputations against your against your humanity; and I do believe that among the gentlemen of England there is sincere sympathy with the suffering of the poor, and much of an hop sit desire to make better the condition of the working classes. I would almost say that there is more than among any other class."

Nothing can be more honourable, or, we will add, more safe, than such a wish as a ruling motive of policy. A mere anxiety, however, to lighten the expenses and hardships of the poor may be misdirected, as Sir R. Peel himself takes care to intimate in this passage. As a statemann he is bound to give us a principle as well as a sentiment; and the principle which he does give, and adduces in behalf of his present measure, is quoted from Adam Smith, who says, a The first maxim with respect to taxation is, that every man contribute to the taxation of the State in proportion to the revenue which he enjoys under the protection of the State." Bir Robort then proceeds to express his opinion that we have been violating this maxim by pressing with under sevenue.

The principle, however, is one so impossible of express application that we very much question whether it is worth anything except as an occasional cheek. There are times when it becomes very manifest that taxation does directly or indirectly press upon the poor, if not by adding to their expenses, yet by curtailing their means. Such is undoubtedly tho case now. As the taxation of the country now stands, the poor are the sufferens. Causa latet, vis est notissima. A burden, a fotter, a blight, is on the condition of the poor. Adam Smith's maxim, therefore, becomes a startling truth—a bencon, a rule, which, intricate and impossible as its rigorous application may be, now at all events, testifies against the actual system of the day. The poor are the least protected, and their difficulties the greatest. Taxed or not taxed, they are by position the least able to better thomselves.

Nothing, however, can be more hazardous than to rest an argument on a principle of such difficult application. It will of course be said, and primaries with much plausibility, that the surest way of taxing all paries according to their revenue is to tax the articles of the most universal consumption. It will be argued that the most practical plau is to levy a tax on broad, and if it should happen that any payticular class will gain by the impost, we can equalise matters, and do in fact equalise matters, by charging them with some deer

În t

whie

of th aign the !

wher

inest

Cent

Ezel

it po

may map

spect

exec

labor

place

special burthens. It may also be said, with still greater plansibility, thet a tax on food must reach all classes with oportionate force, because the expenditure of the wealthy is, in fact, only an aggregation of less expenditures, the employer being the great paymenter of the employed.

Space will not permit us now to repeat the arguments by which this alleged system of fiscal equival not has often been confuted. We only wish to deprecate any attempt to apply this maxim as a ground either for direct or for universal taxation. Hir Robert Peel himself has saved us the necessity for saying anything as to its direct application. The Income-tax, which, as far as it goes, aims at carrying out the principle, he admits to be a severe tax on the classes expressly exempted from its direct force. As for universal taxation, what which aims to reach all classes with a sort of arithmetical fairness,—we believe that to be equally certain to disappoint itself. Ecce signum. The most univerand tax, that on bread, cannot be maintained, for it is found to press with double force on the labouring classes. It both directly increases their costs, and indirectly exhausts their means. A tax on food is a tax on labour, and therefore on production. It strikes at the very root of prosperity. Tax unproductive expenditure; tax luxurics, as far as they are Inxuries, within certain reasonable limits; but spare the very sinews and strength of the country. Do not tax industry itself.

"PROTECTION" PETITIONS.

(From the Carlisle Journal.)

We have this week the opportunity of presenting to our remiers a very "remarkable" petitjon.

In the House of Commons last week, a petition for "Protection to British Industry" was presented by Lord George Bentinck, purporting to be from 6 2000 persons engaged in the cultivation of land in the eastern division of Cumberland; and amongst those who had signed it Lord George asserted that," (with the exception of those engaged on one form, Cubby Hill?" it had received the signatures of "every one of the tenants of his right hon, friend, the Laird of Netherby Hall (Sir James Graham), praying the House to reject the measures of the Coverament." The accounts add that "the presentation of the petition created a conniderable sensation."

Well, when we consider that the eastern division of Cumberland contains apwards of 5000 electors—that the petition had been hawked from farm-stead to farm-stead to catch the important signature of each stable-boy-that every village school had contributed its quota of names - the wonder is, not that there were 3000, but that there were not 10,000 signatures. The result which the fact furnishes-supposing the 2000 were bond fide signatures-is, that not onetenth of the electors had signed the petition. But, when we show, as we shall do presently, that in innumerable instances the signatures were not band fide-that they were either forgeries, downright frauds upon the legislature, or had no existence at all-the after worthlessness of the petition as a representation of public opinion or public feeling must be manifest. Of course, Lord George Bentinck merely followed his bricf-stating only what he had been told by those who instructed him; but his instructor must have known the falsehood he was trying to play off upon the house and the country; and if Lord George be an honest man, he will denounce his betrayer to the world. Some time previous to the protection petition being sent off, we heard of the fraudulent way in which signatures had been attached to it; but we could not believe that any one who had the least value for his character, as a man of honesty and truth, would venture to instruct a Member of the House of Commons to proclaim a falsehood; and we therefore declined noticing what we had heard until the proofwas undoubted. That proof we have now before us, in the form of a petition to Parliament, signed by 114 of Sir James Graham's tenants, praying for a total and immediate repeal of the Corn Laws, and denouncing the statement of Lord George Bentinck as an untruth!

The tenantry on the Netherby estate is probably one of the most intelligent bodies of agriculturists in the kingdom. and the indignation with which they read Lord George Bentinck's misrepresentation of their feelings and opinions may easily be conceived. To be held up to the world as selfish monopolists, caring only for their own interests, and as so ignorant as not to know that in freedom of trade is their only true protection, must have been galling beyond mea sure. A meeting was immediately held amongst a few of the most influential of them, and a petition drawn up which received the signatures of not less than 114 of the tenants in less than two days. There was not time to see the furmers in what are called the "out manors" of Sir James Graham's estate, or the number would have been swelled considerably. A few of the parties who have signed have attached to their names the amounts which they pay in rent. These amounts will speak for themselves as to the interest which the petitioners possess in the land, and show how little intelligent men fear competition with foreigners. The total amount of rental paid by the petitioners is, we believe, somewhere about 15,000%, per amoun-nearly three fourths of the whole rental of Sir James's estate.

. Here, then, is ample proof of the grossness of the frauds practised upon the house by what are called "protection" petitions; and we shall be much surprised if this exposure of the utter worthlessness of the East Cumberland petition in favour of "protection to native industry" do not create a "gensation" much more "considerable" than that created by Lord George Bentinck's most untruthful statement.

We subjoin a copy of this remarkable petition, with a few of the names attached to it; and it is proper we should add that neither Sir James Graham nor his steward had the slightest knowledge that such a petition was in agitation. The first intimation Sir James will have of its existence will be its presentation to the house by Mr. Cobden, who was selected for this honour, not less as a compliment to him for his great services to the country as a real " farmer's friend," than to show that it was by no influence or dictation of their landfold that the farmers on "the Laird of Netherby Hall's" estate have thus come forward to vindicate their claim to be considered men of common sense and intel-

The petition was sent to Mr. Cobden on Thursday, and would probably be presented to the house last night. The following is a copy :-

"To the Honourable the Commons in Parliament

*The petition of the undersigned the tenants of the Right Honourable Sied, R. G. Graham, Baronet, M.P., on the estate of Netherby, in the County of Cumberland, "Sheweth... That your petitioners are a class of men not ac-

"Sheweth. That your petitioners are a class of men not accustomed to dabble in politics, but at the same time in this most important crisis cannot refrain from expressing their undivided opinion on the great measure now before your Honourable House: that they view the measure of the Government with the greatest satisfaction, but cannot refrain from saying that total and immediate repeal would still more heartly have met their approbation.

"We bey also to state to your Western and the control of met their approbation.

"We beg also to state to your Honourable Honse, that the assertion made by Lord George Bentinek on the presentation of a petition from East Cumberland in favour of protection to agriculture, that the whole of the farmers on the Netherby estate, with one exception, had signed that petition, is erroneous and unfounded in fact.

"That some few of such farmers did sign the petition is true; but they now next having down and and their their their test."

"That some few of such farmers did sign the petition is true; but they now regret having done so, and admit that they were induced to sign it in an unguarded moment; whilst the names of others were attached to it without their knowledge or consent.

"That your petitioners look upon the great measure proposed by Government as wise, generous, and healing; and therefore pray your Honourable House to pass it into a law as speedily as consider.

possible,
"And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will aver may and your perturbers span in a	ary nound, will	ever pray.

" William Reed, Moat Farm	,	Rent.
William Charles Coll 1 2 11 c		£600
William Graham, Cubbyhill, -fa
John Corrie, Fauld Mill		145
Irvine Reny, Bri co-full	• • • •	240
Frances Stockbridge, Bush-on I	yne	350
John Wilkin, Randalinton		330
Archibald Thomson, Parcels-tos	VII	440
- Richard Carruthers, Hornick hij	1	350
Joseph Johnston, Stone House		200
Mary Buxter, Fauld		507
Jane Little, Grands' Mill		280
John Birrell, G. lerde' Farm	••••	****
John Fawkes, Snothas town
Robert Gibbons, Messband	••••
Herbert Wilkin, Bach Farm	• • • •	325
William Armstrong, Batinbush		730
	• • • •	202 1
John Fermison, Glinger Mill	• • • •	75
dolar Joneton, Milbert Brachend		160
Robt. Ferguson, Glinger Bank	John Blaylock	, Becksid o
J. Plenderleath, Rea Clough	Robert Wilson	, Beckside
W. Johnston, Shadwell Crook	John Benttie, 1	Croft
Ann Ridley, Sleidwell Crook	John Farish, I	Becklees
W. Graham, Crox s-yeat	Thos. Graham	. Beck Commo
Win. Nichol, Dalliestownrigg	Jan. Brown, Br	www.rigg
Burlanca Little Ciller and December	1 31711

Win. Nichol, Dadliotownrigg Burbara Little, Gllnger Burn John Atkin, Beck Geo, Johnston, Bogburn Thos. Graham, Franks town Win. Beattie, Bogburn Churles Graham, Bogburn Win. MeVitie, Bogburn John Beattie, Beatt e's town George Graham, Hills town John Beattie, West side.

Lucy Wilson, Loaning Frances Graham, Brachead John Livingstone, Brachead Richard Byers, Brachead George Graham, Pattenstown John Robson, Pattenstown George Graham, Hills town
John Beattie, Mosa side
George Bell, Calwellpath
Simon Johnston, Nether Beck

Andrew Wurd, Longtown
Fractics Lumb, Longtown
Wm. Graham, Longtown
Wm. Hayton, Plump."

REVIEW.

The Quarterly Review, No. 154, Postscript. Londen: Murray.

We thought that we had done with Righy-"Time was when the brains were out, the man would die"-but that time is not the present, for this veteran defender of abuses has again put forward his exploded fallacies, and has once more expounded the policy of preferring the exigencies of party to the interests of a people. The purpose of the article is to urge the protectionists to keep something -to grasp the rags when the robe is torn from them-to retain even the diminished sliding scale of Peel's measure rather than allow total Free Trade. He does not any longer require that no alteration should be permitted. The visions of county meetings and agricultural petitions have fided from his view. Evon in his opinion, the doom of the existing Corn Laws is scaled; but he thinks that delay might afford opportunity for capitulation. He cannot bear to surrender at discretion, seeing that discretion, either moral or political, has never been the attribute either of himself or his party.

One of Righy's recommendations has been adopted. Delay is granted. Sir Robert Peel has interposed the Irish Coercion Bill between the stages of the Corn Bill; and the result must be a long and floreo sories of debates, with fresh incentives to violence, and fresh facts to be disputed brought over by every mail. We are not about to discuss the Irish Bill; the extermination of tenants and the assassination of landlords are subjects far too painful for us to quit our prescribed course to examine! but we must say that, whether viewed as a part of political expediency or national policy, the appearance of the Coercion Bill in the House of Commons at this crisis is a calamity deeply to be lamented.

recess Ministry. The country has survived greater calamitics, for the principles of the Ministerial measure would survive the Ministry. There are two great elements of hope presented to the Conservatives—the probability of war, and the formation of a Cabinet by Lord Stanley. There is about as much chance of the one as the other. No same man but as allording model and the formation of the man and the formation of the regarded as man matter of the first of the formation of the chance of the one as the other. No same man but as allording model and the first of Righy's text is the speedy dissolution of Sir R.

receives the possibility of either contingency. The plain truth is, that at home and abroad Free Trade is received as un fait accompli. The question ; fairly placed in issue between a protectionist party and a commercial nation—between the preserva-The tactics of the protectionists have tended to bring the question to this simple is the They demand a dissolution at a moment when all the monetary arrangements of the country would be thrown into perilous confusion by the suspension of the progress of the railway bills new before Parliament. They interpose delay, and new thing but delay, when all the great interests of the country demand an immediate settlement of a quetion in which not only their prosperity but their very existence is involved. Does Righy suppose that this unparalleled exhibition of utter reckless ness and undisguised selfishness is unnoticed and unknown? He has been too much accustomed to measure the moral tone of the country from the exhibitions of such patrons as a luxurious marque surrounded by French mistresses. We tell him that neither Hertford morals nor Castlerengh principles of policy are applicable to existing circumstances; and that he but lures to their doom those whom he invites to follow him in either the one or the other He seems to the existing public like a creature of the court of Nero, attempting to regulate the Government of Titus.

It is, however, gratifying to find that he is humiliated. The insane miser in the old picture is represented as satisfied with hoarding farthings, when his gold was consigned to the care of his legal guerdians. Rigby declares that he will be content with the beggarly scraps of protection which Peel baflung almost contemptuously from the agricultural budget to gratify a greedy and a yelping pack. "Keep up, at least, a show of Corn Laws," he say: " for if that question is settled, you know not what may be hidden behind it." Now, we very much question the policy or the prudence of hinting that there are profitable abuses and Inerative corruptions veiled by the Corn Laws. To a corrupt party that may be a valid reason for retaining them; but, to an uncorrupt people, it is a further incentive to remove them as soon as possible. Taking Rigi favourite and characteristic ground of palmy and selfish expediency, we are convinced that his recommendations would be far more ruinous to his party than injurious to the nation. He believes that "a vigorous demonstration of opinion in the Lords" would render the passage of the bill in the Commons "problematical." Perhaps so; but might there not be "a vigorous demonstration of opinion," outside the precincts of the palace of Westminster which would solve the problem very decisively?

Compound, Atlas of the Ancient, Middle, and Modern Ages. London: Hall and Gower.

Although this truly national work has not yet been issued to the public, sufficient progress has been made in its proparation to enable us to form some estimate of its importance, both historically and commorcially. We could wish that a less dubious name than the "Compound Atlas" had be a given to the work; it should have been called the Historical and Comparative Atlas, for its distinctive merit is to set before the student at one view the ancient, the medieval, and the modern names of countries and places. It has the further merit of setting forth more clearly than is usual in ordinary maps the natural features and geographical characteristics of the countries delineated,-particularly the course of mountain ranges, the fluvial system as determined by declivities, and the arrangement of islands on the coast.

Students of history have long felt the want of such a work. The changes of name frequently compel them to consult several Atlases in succession before they can identify the localities to which they desire to refer; and there must, consequently, lie a great saving of time when they are enabled to effect this identification at a single glance. But there is a still more important advantage anising from a comparative Atlas: the changes of name are very often our best, and not unfrequently, our only clue, in tracing the migrations and the conquests of races, which have left few written memorials of their vicissitudes. In the Coltic, the Tentonic, and the Selavonic history, philology applied to names must over be a most important element in determining the course of their migrations, and the extent of their conquests. Thus the first England was in the the peninsula of Jutland, and the first France in the circle of Saxony.

We may also notice the importance of such all Atlas in tracing the progress of maritime and inland discovery. There are many interesting and perploxing problems connected with chims to priority

lication J. Gag

Lord great clare Amor

LC

We al bisho their Censi doub moli landmarks by which we are to estimate the general progress of humanity and of human knowledge.

It is only within the last few years that the importance of medieval history has been appreciated. In the last century, the middle ages were regarded as a long period of intellectual degradation, during which the course of civilisation was retrograde, and the triumph of barbarism all but complete. We have learned a better lesson: we have discovered that the civilisation of the old world had become effete, and that it sunk into decay from sheer decrepitude, but that there was growing by the side of this expiring system new and vigorous elements of civilisation, which, like the infant Hercules, won signal triumphs while yet in the cradle; and heralded the glorious maturity, of which we have not yet seen the full and complete development. By smoothing the path for the students of this important epoch in the annals of our race, the proprietors of the Comparative Atlas will have opened to historical students, " Fresh fields and pastures new,"

where they may meet incalculable sources of amusoment and instruction.

To a commercial nation, such an Atlas is of inestimable importance. . It is a fact that has attracted too little notice, that hardly any of the caravan routes of antiquity has ever been wholly abandoned, and that the overland commerce of Central Asia traverses the same tracks that were used in the days of the Phomicians and Babylonians. No one can read the twenty-seventh chapter of Ezekiel without being surprised to find in how many instances the merchants of Tyre bartered in the very marts which are now opened to the enter-prize of the merchants of London. Steam has brought us back to the Red Sea, and rolled back the revolutions effected by the discoveries of Pasco di Gama. Suez has recovered the importance which it possessed as Arsinoe; and it is not unlikely that the ancient glories of Ezion Geber and Berenice may be revived at Akaba and Cosseir.

So far as we have been able to examine these maps, we must pronounce them most creditable specimens of the engraver's skill. The pains taken to secure cleanness and accuracy in the mechanical execution deserve not less commendation than the labour and research which has been bestowed on the identification of ancient names with modern We need not add a word more; such a work must command success, so long as commerce is valued and history appreciated.

TREE TRADE INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION.

A. W. Paulton, Esq.,
Richard Potter, Esq.,
William Leavers, Esq.,
William Wilson, Esq.,
William Wilson, Esq.,
William Wilson, Esq.,
William Wilson, Esq.,
William Wilson, Esq.,
William Wilson, Esq.,
Bidney Smith, Isq., Churles Swaisland, Esq., Crayford.

Churies Ewansland, 123q., Crayford.

Dr. Thomas Price, 7, Highbury, terrace, Islington.
George Thompson, Eq., 6, whaterloo place.
Captain Cogan, Upper Mill, Hammersmith.
BANKERS.
Mosers. Prescott, Groto, & Co.

John Iviney, Eur. 26, Chancery-land. were review.
Mr. Prederick Farrand, Priory, Villa, Pockham.

err Preuerick Farrand, Priory Villa, Peckham.

SERTARY.

Mr. Affred Lench Saul.

Prespectures may be obtained, gratis, on application at the Society's Offices. East temple Chambers, Whitefriars street, Fleet street. The Rules (d. cach) are now ready, and may be had as above.

Persons destrous to join the Scolety are requested to make application inmediately.

The Society's Offices will be open for receiving subscriptions and the Federal transaction of business, every Puesday and Friday evenings, from to 50 clock.

TREE TRADE INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION. As the Second Subscription is about to be called for, parties intending to avail themselves of the benefits of the Association are requested to be called in, shares can be obtained on the same terms as those which have been already taken up. Attendance at the Offices, East Temple Chambers, Whitefriers street, Fleet-street, every Tuesday and Friday evenings, from Six to Nine o'Clock

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any person forwarding 3s. 3d. by Post-office order to the Publisher, 67, Fleet street, London, will have one quarter's copies of the Leaous forwarded by post on the days of publication. Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with J. Gasshy, Newall's-buildings, Manchester; and the Leaous may be had by order of any news-agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, April 4, 1846.

The calculations of the probable result of a division on the ministerial measures in the Mouse of Lords are, as yet, very vague, in consequence of the great number of waverers, who have not yet declared to which side they will give their adhesion. Among those who "halt between two opinious," we are informed that a considerable number of the bishops may be ranked; and we are further told that their hesitation has exposed them to considerable censure. We do not join those who attribute the doubts of the right reverend prelates to unworthy molives. It is true, that in the last century, when the Duke of Newstatie had the management of ministerial patromage, it used to be said of a doubting ecclesiastic-

Little Control

Botween his two masters, what course can be trace, On one side his God—on the other his Grace."

But it must be confessed that those in whose hands episcopal appointments have been vested during the last 30 years, have been guided in their choice more by considerations of public benefit than of party exigency, and that there was never a period in our history when the right roverend bench could exhibit such a strength of moral character, talent, and learning, as it displays at the present moment. We know not the causes of the doubts that are said to haunt the minds of many prelates, but we do know that the precepts and example of their Blessed Master inculcate the feeding of the hungry as the first of Christian practical duties, and that the most severe denunciations in the inspired volume are pronounced against those who create artificial famine to gratify their own rapa-

The established church is based on law; but law derives its validity from public opinion. Tho alliance of the clerical body in France with an oppressive aristocracy precipitated the French Revolution, and produced that hostility to Christianity, the effects of which have not disappeared from the minds of the present generation. The real strength of a hierarchy is in the hearts and affections of the people. A church is not a fortress, to be covered by bayenets and protected by artillery. It must appeal to the feelings, not to the fears of the nation; and any clerical member of the establishment who gives support to the Corn Laws, is an enemy to religion and a traitor to his order.

We cannot believe that any such will be found on the episcopal bench. We cannot be persuaded that any of our venerable prelates will be callous to the precepts of sacred, and the warnings of profane history. They have not one duty as barons, and another as bishops. Their secular rank is subordinate to their spiritual functions, and they should therefore, in such a case as is now offered to their consideration, decide as pastors, and not as Medieval history relates many anecdotes of bishops who preferred their polities to their pastoral care. One of them, who headed an army in an unjust attack upon his neighbours, declared he made war as a prince, not as a bishop; upon which it was shrewdly asked, "when Satan claims the prince, what will become of the bishop?" We live in different times; the continuance of the church must mainly depend on the conduct of its ministers; the establishment must rest upon its character; and if those by whom it is directed mistake its purpose and pervert its object, they incur for the institution to which they belong the penalty denounced against the school of talse prophets, and bright exceptions will not atone for general delinquency, "Though these three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, they should save but their own souls by their righteousness."

THE FUNDS.

	Sat. Mar.23	Mon. Mar.30	Tuns. Mar.31	Wko. April 1	Tuon, April 2	Far. April 3
Bank Stook 3 per Ct. Red. Ann. 3 per Ct. Con. Aun. 5 per Ct. Ited. Ann. Long. An. Ex. 1860 Cons. for Acet Exc. Bills, pnn. Ind. Bds, un. 1000/. Venezucia 2 per Ct. Do. deferred Bolgian 44 per Ct. Bruzilian 5 per Ct.	2101 Shat. 961 Shut. 101 964 27-50	shut. 961 shut. 961 30 27 28 pm. 131 983	яћиі. 964 ≋hut. 107-16 96∓ 27-10 22	slint. 001 9b at. 107 968 30-28 30-28	#hut. 901 #hut. 961 25.20 30 431 13	яћит. 967 яћит.
Chillan Columb. ux.Venoz. Daniel Dutch 25 por Cent. Dutch 4 por Cent. Moxican Peruvian Portug. conv. Russian 5 por Cent Spanish 5 per Ct. Do. 3 por Ct. ox.dv.	044	041 31 1001 201 308	07 001 011 314 1081 251 361	871 509 921 312 	90 10 70 92 38 38 20	17 509 924 32 204 204

MARKETS.

OORN MARKET.

Monday, March 30.—Up to Saturday night the arrivals of every kind of grain into this port were very moderate. Utile morning a good show of Wheat samples, both by land-carriage and constants, is made on the Posex, Kent, and Suffolk stands; and constants, is made on the Essex, Kent, and Suffolk stands; and fair quantities of Barby and Onts have also come to hand since staturday. In the morning, last Monday's prices were asked for English Wheat, but millers hid very cantionsly, and the market closed is to se, cheaper than this day week. Bonded Wheat remains the same as last week, without much inquiry. Burley is a heavy sale, and last Monday's rates are with difficulty obtained; the heaviest descriptions of Chevalier meet a readier sale. The chief part of the show jet Oats consists of English samples, which continue to come, as they have done all this season, very light; is, more is asked than on Monday hast, and dd: is obtained, but the advance checks business, and the trade is flat. Heans are in fair supply, and fine qualities rather dearer. No alteration in Peas. 8. II, Lucas.

The state of the s
BRITIS	11.	PerIn	perk	ıl Qu	artor
Wheet Weser	Boll &	tex (iii)			to fiff
Vant v. G. O. D.	40	LU CH	11 744	56	6.1
Whoat, Easex, Kent, & Suffolk Lincolnshire & Yorkshire	,, 70
Lincolnshire & Yorkshire	47	01		04	63
Scotch Oats, Lincolnshire & Yorkshire F		• •
Oats, Lincolnshire & Yorkshire F	ced			23	5.2
DittoDittol	Hack			23	6 26
DittoDittol	bolanda		Nau	27
Scotch Food	orania.		otate		20
Yangalah	40 40	•
Limerick		• • • • • • • •	*		211
Ditto Fine New 27					1110
Cork				24	25
Waterford, Youghal, & Cork	Black			23	24
Sligo
Galway					21
					83
Barley					****
Benns, Mazagan	• • • • • • •	,,,,,,,		, ,31	33
Harrow					:37
Small				30	40
Peas, White	B	offers.		3#	42
Grey30, 32,	Λ	lanla		31	34
Flour, Town madep		a sign t		18	56
riour, rown madep	at Bitck o	if Son I
Norfolk and Buffolk		••••		_لنائد	40
FOREI	(1 N		EKK.	IN BO rone:
		Per Inc	րությ
Wheat, Dantzig, high mixed		bK 1		64	GO
Rostock		56	.60	60	δŀ
Atettin			δH	60	ΔL
Hamburgh		62	57	50	62
Odessa			٠.	48	60
				•
Oderga Polish				60	. vr
Russian
Dittoh	ırd
Spanish		54	an	-
Blanquillo		50	0.3
Australian		60	69
Daulan Ontolling	• • • • • • • •	OP.	911
Barley, Grinting	• • • • • • •	1 2 3 1 W T
Distilling			31
Oats, Archangel			20
Danish
Bwedish			24		*
Fordsund
Dutch Feed			23	20	21
			29	23	21
Brew			5.14
Polimds				25	20
Black
Beans, Egyptian			30	•
Pons, White
Ditto Boilers
Flour, Camaba, fresh, per barrel of	100 H.		36		•
riour, Chimot, fresh, per narrer of	tan tost				00
United States			117	개	-00-
Dantzig
Australian, por sack of 280	tba
	a salah salah

Account of CORN, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from Mar. 23 to Mar. 23, 1816, both days inclusive. Wheat. | Burley. | Onto. | Bouns. | Peas 1590 27: 1 209 / 653 Scotch 6595 Foreign..... Flour, 1919 sacks; 1300 barrels.

Flour, 1919 sacks; 1900 barrels.

Furray, Apart. 3. Only a moderate quantity of Wheat, Barley, and Oats has come to band since Monday; most of the Essex Wheat was sold on that day; but there are still some samples exhibited on the Kentish stands, which factors find it difficult to sell, though offered on Monday's terms. There is so little business passing in Barley, Beans, and Peas, that no alteration in any of them can be noticed. The cupply of Oats consists chiefly of English; the market is decidedly more heavy have been exceedingly cautions; the prices of Oats have an dergone no alteration this work. The inquiry noticed on Monday for Indian Corn does not continue with much briskniess, The duties remain the same as last week.

Account of CORN, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 30th of March to the 3rd of April, both inclusive

English . 6970 6510 Irish. Barley 75(4) Oats Flour, 5000 anoka.

123 39a, 6d,

Apprepate Average of the Six Weeks. Whoat, 54s. 10d.; Barley29s. 8d.; Oats, 21s. 9d.; Rye, 33s. 7d.; Bouns, 34s. 9d.; Poss, 34s. 1d.

Pons, 519, 1d.

Duty. Wheat, 18s. 0d.; Barley, 0s. 0d.; Oats, 0s. 0d.; Ryo 9s. 6d.; Boans, 8s. 0d.; Pons, 8s. 0d.

Stock of Corn in Bond, Mar. 5, 1816.

Wheat. Barley. Oats. Ryo. Boans. Pons. Gwis. CWIR. 114076 In London, 442560 17200 61102 ... 6111 8462 Unit. King, 1138050 82010 96983 ... 13413 8127 8:17:155

MEAT MARKET. Trade upon the whole rather declining, except for a chosen lamb or calf.

THE LORDS' COMMITTEE ON SPECIAL BURDENS .- WO hear that the committee on special burdens have alighted on curious information; and some of those who at last consented to the inquiry, which they had so long and so astutely resisted, begin to repent of their rashness. Perhaps the disclosures may have the effect of justifying some more conversions to the new pollay.—Speciator.

If fresh brewer's grains be put down in handfuls here and there about the borders on mild nights these heave will be govered with slugs, which can be readily destroyed by a dusting of powder, quick lime, or salt.

Potatoes this week at Groom had reached the enominas, price of 10d. per stone, by retail.

On the 1st and 15th of each Month, every Part containing Four highly-finished Portraits, price One Shilling,

THE PEOPLE'S NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY

Of Plustrious and Eminent Personages of the Nineteenth Century, engraved by first rate Artists, from Paintings by Lawrence Reynolds, West, Shee, Republic, Phillips, Carrick, &c. &c.

With Memoirs by W. COOKE TAYLOR, LL.D.

Fisher, Son, and Co., the Caxton Press, Angel-street, Newgate street, London.

Now ready, price 6s., new and next Editions of THE, DAUGHTERS OF ENGLAND, their Position in Society, Checaeter, and Responsibilities; and of THE WOMEN OF ENGLAND, their Social Indica and Domestic Habita.

Being Vols. I and H. of The English women a Family Library," publish Fig. In Monthly Vols., price 7s. each.

"Amidde and judy are these besoms, calculated to clevate and purify the nearts into which they may be received, and to carry those best bless-lings of love and peace into many a family."

Fisher, som, and Co., London; and all Booksellers.

Now ready, embelished with Nine Engravings, Vol. I., price 9s of P. E. M. P. E. R. A. N. D. T. E. M. P. E. R. A. M. E. N. T.; or, VARIETTES OF CHARACTER.

By Mas. Elect.

"There can be no difficulty in discerning in every line, that the pen of the Authoress of The Women of England, has fost none of its british actions. Dimburgh Weekly Register.

Fisher, Boit, and Co., the Caxton Press, Angel street, Newgate street, London.

Just published, 12mo) cloth, price 6s. NEW and IMPROVED EDITION of the POPULAR HOSTORY of PRIESTCRAIT, in all Ages and Nations. By Wilson Howers, Eventh Lilition, with large Additions. London: J. Chapman, 121, Newpate street.

Jast published, price (d CTRICTURES on a Pamphlet published at the request of the March ster Statistical Society, entitled, "Papers read before the March ster Statistical Society of the hermoralisation and Injuries necasioned by the want of proper regulations of Labourers engaged in the construction and working of Railways." By Thomas Nacquesov, Contractor, Woodhead, near Mottraa, Cheshire.

Landon. R. Groombrilge and Sons, 5, Paternoster-row, Manchester: J. Gadsby, Newsyll's buildings, Market-street.

OLIVER and BOYD'S STANDARD EDITION of 1.1V. Being the only English Edition corrected and authenticated by the Author, who has also written a new Preface, and made various Additions and hitherty published. Large type, with Autograph. Post 80, cloth. The first three vide 7s. eight; the fairth; e. V. Autograph. Post 80, cloth. The first three vide 7s. eight; the fairth; e. V. Autograph. Post 80, cloth is now ready, and will be followed by the others at short intervals. Ext. set from Dr. D. Autograph and I have restored the sense wherever I did not find it clearly rendered. It is the only one which I have corrected I declace in consequence, that I acknowledge this it assistion as the only faithful expression of my thoughts in the Laglish language, and I recommend it as such to all my readers."

Messes Oliver and Toyd, who have purchased the copyright of Vol. IV. and alloine posses the right of publishing it in Great firstein, are thus enabled to supply the only authentic and standard chilion of the four volumes of the History of the Reformation Lately published, demy 800, Vol. IV., price 12s cloth.

Oliver and Boyd, Edinburgh. Simpkin, Marshall, and Co., Loudon

Price Six Shillings.

Condition of Nations. By J. Mee is raid, Esq. Toucher, Son, and Condition of Nations. By J. Mee is raid, Esq. Toucher, Son, and Confidence and all peckagillers.

Dr. Robert Culverwell's Guide to Health and Long Life.
(30) pages, packet volume, prico is a by post, 1, 561,
WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, and tAVOID; with Diet LACAC Contents: How to insure perfect digestion, tranquil feelings, a good night a rest, a clear head, and a contented mind. By an observance of the instructions herein contained, the feeble, the nervously delicate, even to the most shuftered constitution, may accupie the greatest amount of physical happiness, and reach in health the full period of life allotted to place To be had of Shervanod, B. Paternovter row, and all Booksellers, or direct from the Author, 21, Arundel street, Strand, who may be advised with on these matters daily till 3; evenings, 7 till 9.

CORNERS NEW HISTORICAL WORKS, for School and Panily Reading

Rach History, communicing with the earliest authentic records, is contiled to the present time, Taithfully pointraying, also, the Manuers, Cus-

Build to the principle time, extending points	i in K	,	·,		.,,,,,	*, C III
tom, and States of Civilisation of the People	de. Bound with			,	' Withou
	ther	Quer	tions.		Qu	textlon
England and Wales; five fine plates, and n	nape	4	4	•		34. 6d
Ireland, three fine plates, and map		- 3	4, -	•		24, 6d
Read and, three fine plates, and map -	-	- 3	•	•	•	2a. 6d
Prance, three five plates, and map		- 2	۹	-	-	24. 6d
Boain and Portugal, three plates, and map		. 3	4, -		٠	24. Gd
Denmark, sweden, and Norway, with two	fine	plate	es and	map	-	24. Cil
Germany and the German Emplie, 3 fine pl	Lites.	, and	map	- 1		34, 6d
In key and the Ottoman Empire, 3 fine pla-	11 4. 4	ind r	uap 🗀		-	34. 6d
Poland and Russia, with three fine plates, a			•			3, 64
linly and switzerland, three the plates, and			-	-	-	34. Gd
Holland and Belgium, with two tine plates :	and r	ORD	-			2s. Ud
The object of these works peculiarly suit	tool to	Sel	ool a B	ind F	am	ilies—li
to furnish the reader with a faithful Histor	ry of	each	Nath	on, h	iter	spersed to furnish the reader with a faithful History of each Nation, interpersed with an accurate account of the Religion, Customic, National Character-Istics, State of Civil cution, and Domestic Habits of the people, in various pockuls of their history: to attract the attention of the rising generation by purity of language and clearness of detail, and thus render easy and pleasant the attainment of a knowledge of the leading exents of history.

London: Dean and Co., Threading edio-street; and, by order, of all Booksulter.

Tableau of Public Interest, which has been Eight Months in Preparation.

PILE Royal Family at Home, consisting of the Queen and Prince Albert caressing their Pour lovely Children. The Grouping and Colouring by Madame Tusanud, the Medicis and Partraiture by Mr. P. Tusanud, the Costonius by Mrs. F. Tusanud, is now added to the Collection.—BAZAAR, Baker street, Portman square,

"This is one of the best exhibitions in the metropalis."—Times.
Admittance, is.; Napolson Rooms, 6d. Open from 11 till 4; and from 7 till 10

LAND AGENT, SURVEYOR, and CIVIL EN All MERIC has a vacancy for one intelligent young gentleman. He will be instructed in a Land Agent and Surveyor's profession, with as much of Civil Engineering necessary for the construction of Railroads.

Terms, £13) (without diet), and may be paid by annual instalments Articles for three years, or £10) for two year. Address free, H. H., 13, Upper King street, Russell square, London.

ANTED, in the country, and near a London railroad, admittance to a private family, without children or other bounders, for a man who is old enough to prefer a quiet retreat to a nigeratory life, simple habits with well bred society to every luxury without it, and recipros ity of good offices to rivary of preferations. Conveniences the habiting in spring water, at no great distings, indispensable to one who have been to be one experience, that pharmacy is the bane of health and alcohol of humanity, and that his is more indebted to a German peasant on its preservation than to any College of physicians for its destruction interchange of references may load to a permanent extrangement, if mutual tourtesy should produce mutual confidence.

Any information about cold baths would much oblige an "uncompromising Free Trader," and would decide the locality of separate house keeping, should this attempt to obtain what poverty would hardly grant to a friend, and money cannot purchase for a stranger, be unsue-respited.

Address, with details, X. Y. Z., to the care of Mr. Shorry, No. 3, Shoane-attreet.

THE ATRAPILATORY, or LIQUID HAIR DYE THE ATRAPHATORY, or LIQUID HAIR DYE, the only dye that really answers for all colours, and does not require sended as but as the hair grows, as it never fides or acquires that unnatural red or purple that common to all other dyes. It 1888 and 80M8 can, with the greatest confidence, recommond the above dye as infallible, if done at thair satable latmont; and lather or gentlemen requiring it are requested to bring a freque of several with them, to see how it is used, which will enable than to do it afterwards without chance of failure. Several Private aphrimonts devoted entirely to the above purpose, and, some of their setablement having used it, the effect produced can be at once soon. They thak it recomments the of dye, numerous persons have succeeded equally well writing at complete of dye, numerous persons have succeeded equally well writing at complete to higher.

will out coming to them.

Address kind and Sens, 119 and 120, Hishopsyste-street, the colebrated Perruguies, Perluguies, Silventiended and Hairdy erg. N.B. Particentiended at their own recitioness, whatever the distance

On the 1st and 1 dh of each Month, every Part containing Pour highly-finished Steel Engravings, price One Shilling, MSHER'S GALLERY OF SCRIPTURE ENGRAV-INOS, Historical and Landscape, Selected from the best Paintings of the Old Musters. The Landscapes by Allon and other.
With Descriptions, historical and canada, and critical, by Jones Kerro, D.D., F.S.A., Latter of The Pactorial Bible," the "Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature," &c.
Fisher, Son, and Co., the Caxton Press, Angel-street, Nowgate-street, London.

Now ready, Vols 1, 11, 111, each containing Ci beautiful Engravings on Sted, elegantly bound, pike 22s,

TTHE PEOPLE'S GALLERY OF ENGRAVINGS,

after original pictures and deawings by Lawrence, Turner, Stanfield, Prout, Roberts, Allom, Cindons, Hayter, Pairis, Maelise, Suphanoff, Catternole, Bartlett, Leitch, &c. &c.

Entired by the Rev. G. N. Wajour, M.A.

Published also in Parts, each Part containing four beautiful Engravings on Steel, for Ont Sulling

Fisher, Son, and Co., the Caxton Press, Angel street, Newgate-street, London.

223, Piccailly, between Regent C reus and Haymarket, London I.A. GIDNEY, formerly of New York, but for the last I.A. 16 years extensively known in Mauchester and Ita populaus neignbouring towns, as the American bereist, inconsequence of his health requering a change to a uniter and offer elimate, has selected the above premises, as very central, and convenent for his professional business, where his tenders has best services to all who may desire the faithful and solid advantages of his art. His practice will embrace every necessary operation for the huga-veniont and preservation of the human teeth. He regulate demanged teeth, and removes all causes incidental to their destruction, or that may deform the leastly of these important organs.

Mr. G never uses may of the various cements, postes, or succedanciums, which are allocated you makes for the same an facle being base amalgums of quicksilver increase; with other coarse metals, their use being wholly prohibited for filling teech, and justly considered material codege and Society of Lentul Surgeons, but he fills decayed teeth with the very fine steadyd, so as to preserve them free from pain for life. Nor does be excise or cut of the crowns of palnful teeth when they should be extracted, but his renewly office turally and with case destroys the nerve when exposed and painful. His expectence and advantages in artifical substitutes are equal to may in the profession.

Mr. O considers it strictly professional, and will, under a conviction of its utility, adopt the practice who acalled on of visiting public seminarios and private familia, for impection and consultation only, gilhar before or after the hours of bashness.

His circular containing regulated charges, and brief information, respecting the advantages and utility of his profession, may be had through post when required. Hours of business from 0 km. to 5 p.m.

JONES'S 21. 48. SILVER LEVER WATCHES MARGO 24. 48. 5114 C.R. L.P.VE.R. WATCHES warranted not to vary more than balf a printle per week, are selling at the Manufactory, 338, strand, opposite Somerset-house. They combine the truth of a mathematical instroment with the elegance of an ornament of inste. On receipt of a Post office surfer for Is above the price, a Watch will be sent free to any part of the kingdom. Read Jones's "Sketch of Watch Work," sent free for a 2d. strang.

DEANE'S TWO HOLE BLACK PENS were among DEANE'S TWO HOLE BLACK PENS were among the first brought out, and have maintained their procuninence ever since. Besides being used by the Merchauts and Bankers of London, together with the gentlement of the Stock Extension, those Pous are also patronized by Her Majesty's Judices, and by a large number of the Clergy. Denne's Two hole Black Pens are especially adapted for continuous writing, their clasticity affording an agreeable case, and their identify the same character of writing for a long period together. Steel Pen and Cutlery Department of Denne's Watchouse, Show Rooms, and Manufactories, opening to the Monument, 46, King William Street, London Bridge.

JUNUITY IN SHAVING.

JOHN GOSNELL, and CO.'S AMBROSIAL SHAVING
CREAM Patronised by Prince Albert. This inestimable Gream possesses all the good qualities of the Firest Naples Soap, without Caedisagrees all the good qualities of the Firest Naples Soap, without Caedisagrees able smell inseparable from that article in a genuine state. It is of a white pearly silvery appearance, produces a creamy lather, which will not dry on the face, and emits in use the He latiful flavour or the almond.

In Pots, price 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., &c
Perfumers to her Majesty, 12, Three King court, Lombard street, London Manufacturers of Combs and Brushes of the best quality, and on the most approved principles.

LYENDERS, STOVES and EUDING.

Approved principles.

PENDERS, STOVES, and FIRE-IRONS, — The largest assortment of Stovet and Fenders, as well as General Ironmongery, in the world, is now on sale at WILLIAM 8. BURTON'S that RIPPON and BURTON'S extensive warehouses. Bright steel fenders, to 4 feet, from 30s each, ditto, ditto, with orngin ornaments, from 60s, rich bronzed seroll do, with steel bar, 10s, 6d.; fron fenders, 3 feet, 4s 6d; 4 feet, 6s; ditto bronzed, and fitted with standards, 3 feet, 9s; deet, 14s, wrought from kitchen fenders, 3 feet, 4s 6d; 4 feet, 6s; bright rigister stoves, with bronzed ornaments, and two sets of bars, from 2s; ditto, ditto, with ornolu cramments, from 2; black finding room register stoves, 2 feet, 18s, 3 feet, 2s, bed room register stoves, 2 feet, 18s, 3 feet, 2s, bed room register stoves, 2 feet, 18s, 3 feet, 5s, bed room register stoves, 2 feet, 16s, 3 feet, 5s, bed room register stoves, 1 feet, 6s, 4 feet, 6s, a feet feet, 3 feet, 16s, 3 feet, 2s. The new economical thermio stove, with fender and radiating hearth-plate, from 48s; fire froms for chambers to 9d per set, bandsome do, with cut heads, 6s 6d; newest puttern, with cleant bronzed heads, 11s, A variety of the foors, with oenolu and richly cut heads, at propertionate prices. Any article in the furnishing frommongery, 30 per cens under any other house. The money returned for every article not approved of. Detailed entalogues, with engravings, sent (per past free.

WILLIAM 8, BURTON'S (atte RUPON and BURTON'S stock of greent furnishing frommongery is Bierally the largest in the world, and as no language can be employed to give a correct blea of its variety and extent, purchasers are invited to rall and inspect it.—35, Oxford-street (corner of Newman street). Exhablished in Wells-street, 1820.

general durnishing frommongery is florally the largest in the world, and as no language can be employed to give a correct blea of its variety and extent, purchasers are invited to gall and inspect it.—32, Oxford-street (corner of Newman street) Exhabilated in Wells-street, 1820.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN LANDLORD

SECOND BRITISH BUILDING AND INVEST.

MENT COMPANY. Enrolled.

Established on Macarthur's simplified and improved Plan.

Monthly Subscription, 182 per Share.

No Redemption For.

No Redemption For.

No Redemption For.

Offloe, 3, 1vy Jame, 8t. Paul's, London.

Hours, 19 till 1.

Commenced in March, 1846.

TRUTTE.

William Farmer, 2b, Charlotte-terrace, Barnsbury-road, Islington.

James Staley, Tibberton square, Stington.

Thomas Shoppard, 3, Gainsford place, Burnsbury-road.

All, letters should be directed to The Steeond British Building and Investment Company was commenced on the three prepared and avanced about $10,000 its Shareholders, issued 280 Shares, and advanced about $10,000 its Shareholders, issued 280 Shares, and advanced about $10,000 its Shareholders, issued 280 Shares, and advanced about $10,000 its Shareholders, issued 280 Shares, and advanced about $10,000 its Shareholders for the purchase of property. Such success is unprecedented in the names of Building Societies.

At a Public Secting, at which upwards of 100 persons were prejent, seld at the London Mechanics Institution, on Tressley, 17th Feb., 18th, Mr. W. Parmer, in the chair, the Stlowing Resolutions were carried unanimously; Moved by Mr. Brai, seconded by Mr. Resolutions are control unanimously; Moved by Mr. Brai, seconded by Mr. Rosaley, 17th Feb., 18th, Mr. W. Parmer, in the chair, the Stlowing Resolutions were carried unanimously; Moved by Mr. Brai, seconded by Mr. Atomics and institution, on Tressley, 17th Feb., 18th, Mr. W. Parmer, in the chair, the Stlowing Resolutions were carried unanimously; Moved by Mr. Brai, seconded by Mr. Atomics and the succession with security to line whole body of members.

Moved by Mr. Blace and the su

Obeliak;
Iburth Priday, at the Temperance Hall, Henry-street, Portland Town;
From 7 to 8 in the extening.
All Latters should be directed to the Second British Building and Investment Company, 8, 17y-lane, 8t. Paul's, London, propaid, and if an answer is required, a stamp for the reply must be enclosed.

UMBER ONE, ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD
As real goodiness is not inciped by praise, nor injured by rea the BLACK TRA, at 4a, 4d, per ib, sold by DAKIN and COAPAN, its popularity selely to its intrinsic excellence.
Orders from the country for warded Carriage Frea.

M FRCANTILE LIFE.—It has been remarked by intending the design of the ligent foreigners that cases of Buldness greatly provall in this case, and as a case, that the unwearded application to more antic parallel to this result. Be this as it may, nowhere is a project and restorative preparation more needed, and probably there is a second pean people to whom artificial applicances have been so an instant pean people to whom artificial applicances have been so an instant appearance in the numerous cases of recovery of the late after having failer of a partial buldness, are truly astendishing. The testinonials of the effect of partial buldness, are truly astendishing. The testinonials of the effect of DIDICIONE'S BALM OF COLUMBIA of the effect of the power and struct beyond all doubt or early; as ed. a. and in per bottle. No other prices are genuine.—Oldridge's listin, I, Wellington street, the second house from the Strand.

BELLING OFF CARPETS.

JUCK, KENT, and CUMMING, beg to inform the Nobility and Gentry, as well as their friends and the public that the have removed their Business from Carpenter's Hall, London Wall, to the long ostablished Warehouse, 4, REGENT-STREET, WATERLIO PLANS opposite Howell and James's, and to 59, HATTON GARDEN, HOLDOR, where they trust that Patronage will be continued which they have they trust that Patronage will be continued which they have of BRUSSELS, RIDDERMINSTER, and other Carpeting, to be said at Great Reduction. In addition to Carpeting, they have at their West has Establishment, a large Stock of Chintzes, Damaska, Taboureta, ac. 22, wall worthy of attention. A splendid Carpet, of British manufacture, 30-1by 18, with a centre and border, at less than cost price.

OUTFITS to AUSTRALIA, INDIA, and the COLO. NIDA. Parties leaving England will find it to their advanage to purchase their Outfits at E. J. MONNERY and CO.N. 165. Penchurch-sirred, City, where a large assortment of Shirts, Clothing, Hoslery, Gauze-Mariso Under Shirts, AC., adapted for each particular colony, as well as for the vorage, is a cpt ready for immediate use, and at prices for more reasonable that usually charged for the same articles.

Heddling, Military Accountements, Cabin and Camp Pumiture of every description. Lists, with Prices affixed, forwarded by post.

TENDERS AND FURNISHING IRONMONGERY.

—RICHARD AND JOHN SLACK, 334, Struad, opposite Sources, House, have just added to their hitherto immense stock of Fenders may quite new designs of most elaborate finish, surpassing in elegance of struay before offered. Bronzed serval and atcel har fenders from 182, jornamental from ditto from 18. 6d. Also the best selected stock of formising from monecy in London, at prices 30 per cent, under other house. The money peturned for any article not approved of. Their book of prices, containing upwards of 20 jongravings, gratis, or post free. Established 1811.

THE POCKET APERITIVE VASE releases persons from the odious and injurious practice of swallowing purgatives, by enabling them at any time to produce an execution of the lowes, by means simply of a little water. This very agreeable substitute for physic, having been constructed by Dr. Scott for the conventonce of hardles is noticed, is certain of being commodicing to every find claim, and cannot be not strongly recommended to families in general, especially to those who are subject to costiveness, bile. Ac. To be produced of Mr. Llewellyn, surgeon, 3-9, Strand, the third house from Exeter Hull, where may also be obtained the SONHERS for deafness, by which any effect may be produced so as to ensure a complete restoration of hearing. Description sent free on receipt of two post stamps

F. I) F E A T II E R S.—

Mixed, per lb. - 1s. 0d. | Best Foreign Grey Goose, 1s. 4d. | Best Irish White Goos, 2s. 4d. |

Poreign ditto - 1s. 4d. | Best Irish White Goos, 2s. 4d. |

Foreign ditto - 1s. 4d. | Best Irish White Goos, 2s. 4d. |

HEAL and 80N, 196 (opposite the Chapel), Tottenhom Court Road.

CTTOOPING of the SHOULDERS and CONTRACTION 1 OOPTAGE of the SHOULTHEAS RIGUON MACTION

1. of the CHEST are entirely prevented, and gothly and effectually romoved in Youth and Lodles and Gouthenen, by the occasional use of the Improved Elastic Chest Expander, which is light, simple easily employed, ourwardly or invisibly, without any uncomfortable restraint, or impediages to exercise. Seat per post, by Mr. A. Bisyon, Role Manufacturer and Proprietor, 49, Tavistock street, Covent Garden, London, or full particular on receiving a postage stamp.

DICHLY CUT GLASS CHANDELIERS in great to variety of Elevant and Original Designs, from £10 upwards; a very choice stock of richly cut glass single-light lustres, from 17s, per pair opwards; double-light girandoles, from £0 per pair, upwards pinnoforie and table lights; engraved and elegantly-cut decauters, wine glasses, tumbers, goblets, and every description of Table Glass of the newest and relagingteness, at equally reasonable prices. Also, a very extensive and superforstock of Bohemian, French, and Venetian Glass, just imported. At £334 C. OSLER'S London Watchouse, 44, Oxford-street, near Berners-street Manufactory, Broad-street, Birmingham. Established, 1807. Wholesale and export orders executed on the lowest terms

OWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE.

A White Powder for the Teeth, compounded of the Choicest and most Recherche Ingredients of the Omental Herbal; the leading regulsites of elequitoes and officery being present in the highest possible degree. It bestows on the teeth a peal like whiteness and frees them from Lartar; imparts to the guman healthy faraness, and to the breath a grateful sweetness and perfunc. Price 2: 84.

per hov.
CAUTION.—To protect the public from Fraud, the Hon. Commissioners of Stamps have directed the Proprietor's Name and Address to beengaved on the Government Stamp thres—
"A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatten Garden,"
Which is affixed on each box.
Sold by them and hydrhemists and Perfumers.
All other Odontos are FRAUDULENT IMITATIONS!

TAKE NOTICE.—The Establishment of E. MOSES and SONS will not be opened for business on Saturday Brealing, April 11, 1016.

THE CITY.

THE STIR IN THE CI

A DIALOGUE.

Two gentlemen met in the City, they say,
And stood and convers'd in the following way:—

Mr. A.

How d'ye do, Mr. B.? how d'ye do? how d'ye do?
And how's your good lady, and little ones too?
And now that we've met, can you state, my dear sir,
Why the City appears in such bustle and stir?

All the world scena abrund, by the crowds that we view,
And I cannot imagine the reason—can you?

Mr. B.

Imagine the reason! Decleddy so?
The cause is B. MOSES and RON—don't you know?
These tailors, and hatters, and goodness knows what,

The cutties is it MASSES and goodness knows what. These tailors, and hutters, and goodness knows what. Have open'd their spacious new house—have they not? I ve seen this new Mart; and, fudeed, Mr. A., I never beheld such a spicually display. When I think of the building's magnificent rango. I cannot but term it "the second Exchange."

"Tis this that is filling the City with people—You see how they're flocking near Aldgale Church steeple.

Mr. A.
Good day, Mr. B., you're excited me so,
That I'll go there myself to belied this depot
And when I have noticed what thus has been done, Ill order a suit of E. MONES and SON.
For I've tried many fullors, and none can I find
So much to my profit—so much to my mind.

A new work. entitled "Habilment Hall," with an direction of forwarded pest the self-measurement, may be had on application, or forwarded pest the Mourning to any amount can be had at five minutes notice, at the typ prices:

Mon's Suits, dross coat, yest, and trousers

Mon's Suits, dress coat, Yest, and trousers

Ditto, jacket, vest, and trousers

Ditto, jacket, vest, and trousers

Informatic. Any article purchased or ordered, if not approved the provided of the money returned.

OBERVE R. MOSES and SON, Tallors, Wholessle and Response Outfitters, and Gonerni Warshousemen, 184, Mineries, and the Church.

Cavrier. B. Moses and box are obliged to grant imposition, having learned that the entire and the connected with them, or it's the same observations many instances, and for only long area of the connected with them, or it's the same observations with any other establishment in or out of London; on with any other establishment in or out of London; one continue Cheng Clothing should (to prove the continue of

Printed at the Whitestian Printing Control of Whitestian, in the Control of Whitestian, in the Control of Whitestian, in the Control of Whitestian of Whites

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND.

All Subscribers of Al and upwards to the LEAGUE FUND will be entitled to, and receive, a copy weekly of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have torwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the offices of THE LEAGUE, Newall'sbuildings, Manchester, or 67, Fleet-streat, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council of the League would also suggest to their friends in the country the importance of transmitting their copies of THE LEAGUE newspaper, after perusal, to such parties (more especially farmers) as may be either hostile or indifferent to the question of Free Trade,

> By order of the Council, JOSEPH HICKIN, Secretary.

WHY COMPROMISE IS IMPOSSIBLE.

This week exactly completes the seventh year of that portion of our movement which has been conducted by the agency of the periodical press. On the 16th of April, 1839, appeared the first number of the Anti-Corn-Law Circular—subsequently enlarged into the Anti-Bread-Tax Circular, and since continued in this journal.

The present is scarcely the fittest season for taking a leisurely and comprehensive retrospect of the labours, sacrifices, and successes, that have crowded this eventful period. With our great work still unfinished—still exposed to delay, obstruction, and (as regards immediate results) to the risks of political accident—we cannot afford to take our eyes off the present, and that just of the future which lies nearest to us. In alluding, on the suggestion of this interesting anniversary, to the past history of our question, our purpose is simply to enforce a lesson of present and practical application, the need of which is, we fear, even yet not altogether

Throughout the entire term of the existence and operations of the Anti-Corn-Law League, we have steadily and undeviatingly pursued one, and only one object—the TOTAL abolition of that monopoly, our antagonism to which is indicated in the style and title of our organisation. For this have we, the Free Traders of the United Kingdom, banded ourselves with a compact unanimity, and laboured with a continuity of exertion, and a zeal and pro digality of sacrifice, unexampled in the history of popular movements. To this we are irrevocably committed. With nothing short of this can we for an instant, be satisfied. Anything and everything short of this is, to us, as nothing. Until this be realised, in an Act of Parliament, we are as we ere with our work all to do.

This totality of our demand is no mere piece of domatism or self-willedness on the part of those the country recognises as the leaders of the There is nothing arbitrary or wilful in it. thoults from the very nature of the intellectual nd moral elements that constitute the League's n of those diverse, yet harmonious, principles in; which have combined in this movement the amount of the intelligence and moral feeland one common cause. This will immewe after the discriminate the ference to the ruling impulses by which they are severally actuated. These are mainly two. There are the Free Traders who regard the question from what may be called the commercial and politifosconomical point of view-and there are Tree Traders to whom it is chiefly interesting as a moral and religious question. There are those who seek the total abolition of the Corn Law, as logically implying and practically necessitating the extinction of the whole of the protective and restrictive system—and there are those with whom it is an affair of conscience and religion to protest against a tax on food, as intrinsically oppressive and iniquitous. There are those who intelligently deprecate, as fraught with national loss and injury, every violation of the common-senso rule of commercial interchange, "Buy in the cheapest market, and sell in the dearest"-and there are those whose moral and religious sense is outraged by the impiety of wilfully intercepting heaven's answer to man's prayer for daily bread. Neither of these two points of view, we need sorreely suy, excludes the other. Our best Free Traders take both -with an habitual preference, however, of that which most accords with the profession, the circumstances, the range of experience and observation, the cast of mind of the individual. The two classes we have indicated run very much into one another. The commercial statesman, whose thoughts dwell mostly on the impolicy of fettering trade, is likewise indignant at the cruel injustice of taxing the poor man's ways and means of life; and the religious philanthropist, whose conscience is revolted by the injustice, is likewise cognisant of the impolicy. On the whole, however, the distinction is sufficiently exact. One or the other of these two principles of thought and action—the commercial and economical, or the moral and religious—is the main actuating impulse of every individual member of our great Free Trade confederacy.

Now, each of these two elements of our movement implies the totality of Corn Law repeal. The smallest remnant of the landlord monopoly violates the sound commercial principle of free exchanges, and affords a plea for a thousand other and minor violations of that principle;—a particle of unrepealed bread-tax offends the moral instinct which domands the unrestricted flow of heaven's bounties to man. Let the Corn Law be but partially repealed; let any sort of compromise be huddled up between truth and falsehood, right and wrong; and the claims of principle remain unsatisfied—the force of a movement that represents and embodics a principle remains unabated. If the Longue's work is not to be done now, the League goes on, with unspent powers, until it is done. And this, not because Mr. Cobden, or Mr. Bright, or the League Council, says that so it shall be. So it MUST be, in the nature of things. There is no help for it. It lies not in the power of man to deal with the force of opinion and conscience that the Leagne embodies on any other than its own terms.

We commend all this to the especial consideration of those extremely imprudent persons, who, if one may credit the rumours floating about in the atmosphere of the clubs and the lebbies—are still amusing themselves with the fancy that it is not absolutely impossible to "adjust," as they call it, the question now before the country, on the basis of a "fixed duty." Even could one conceive of the possibility of a fixed duty on corn getting temporary possession of the statute book, it would merely leave matters as they stand. Nothing would be "adjusted," excopt the terms and objects of a new agitation as vigorous, as determined, and as certainly successful, as that which has already beaten down two sliding and win defeat and extinction of the power that thus linked itself with a fixed absurdity and a fixed iniquity. The commercial and economical intelligence of the country, and the moral and religious sentiment of the country-those two irresistible forces of which the League and its agitation are the expression, would still remain in unabated antagonism to landlordism and landlord law.

Whoover they may be who think of trying this monstrous experiment on the public patience, and on the power of landlordism and aristogracy to crush the spirit of the people, we are sure, at all events, they will find neither support nor sympathy at the hands of the farmers. The farmers want, above all things and before all things, a settlement; and there is not a farmer in Great Britain, whother of protectionist or of Free Trade principles, who will over dream of this being a settlement. Tho cheat will be too transparent. The farmers have had more than a "three years' experience" of the value of landlord promises of "settlement;" and they are also experimentally acquainted with the value of League promises. They know who they are that have always deceived them in the matter of Parliamentary prices and artificial Corn Laws; and they know who they are that have never con ceived them. From the hour that protection taken any other shape than that of the "permanent sliding scale of 1812," and the "fifty-six shillings," from that hour will the farmers of Great Britain have but one wish and prayer—the total and inpacdiate abolition of the last remnant of a system which to them has been systematic delusion, betrayal, and disaster.

Nor will the Government have anything to say to such an attempt at fulsifying the great principles. with which they have so manfully identified themselves. On this point we are quite easy. We do not feel it necessary to recur to those specific objections which the leading members of the present Cabinet—Sir Robert Peel especially — have so strongly and steadily urged, in past years, against that particular form of food tax, known as "fixed duty." We are contented to rest on their carnest adoption, and vigorous and enlightened inculcation of sound and just principles that include the condemnation of every form of a food tax. Sir Robert Peel and Sir James Graham perfectly understand the principle of our movement, and are thoroughly and heartily at one with it. Their "object" is, "to remove restrictions upon commerce "-and they will not fetter commerce with a new restriction; " to equalise the burdens of taxation"-and they will not charge the poor man with a new burden that has all the cruel oppressiveness of a poll tax; "to amoliorate the condition of those who labour" and they will not deteriorate the condition of those who labour, by laying an impost on food, which, to the whole extent of its operation in raising prices, operates likewise to the lewering of wages, and the increase of mortality and crime. " Why," asked the Home Secretary, the very last time the Corn Law was debated, " should the con sumer and the receiver of wayes be requested to pay for their daily bread A LARGER PRICE THAN, IF THE TRADE WERE FREE, THEY WOULD HAVE TO PAY?"and he will not stultify himself by consenting that the consumer and the receiver of wages shall pay this surplusage of price. "Believe with me," says the Premier. "THE FIRST FOUNDATION OF SOCIAL IM-PROVEMENT IS ABUNDANCE OF FOOD;" and he will not consent to narrow, loosen, and weaken that first foundation of social improvement, by artificially restricting the range from which the national supplies of food are drawn. He will not add another peculiar burden" to those already weighling to heavily on the poor ten shillings a week labourer, whose physical and economical condition he liss taken so much pains to master, and with whose rights and interests he has shown so warm-hearted and generous a sympathy. Bir Robert Poel will not legislate, even on the small scale of a "low fixed duty," for the scarcity and dearth of the poor man's food, now that he is fresh from "the experience of the last three years and the three preceding years," and from that lesson "which we ought never to forget, as to the effect produced on the social conduction, the habits of LIFE, AND THE HAPPINESS OF THE WORKING CLARKER, comparing the years of abundance with those of scarcity." Nor will be be willing to deprive himself of any portion of the satisfaction he so proudly and hopefully anticipates from "most ma-TERIALLY ADDING TO THE COMPORTS AND ENJOY-MENT OF MILLIONS-of "those millions, whether manufacturing or agricultural labourers, who carn their subsistence by the sweat of their brow." On this head we have not the shadow of a misgiving.

If there really are men mad enough to take the field, in the name of a fixed bread tax, against Ministers who have thus identified themselves and their policy with the rights and interests of millions, we have only to say, the strait-waistcoat is ready. Nover was fever of the brain assuaged by prompter and more efficacious remedies than those which the country will apply to the hallucinations of the fixed-duty protectionists.

THE RAGGED REGIMENT.

If the elements of time were not, just now, of vital and essential moment to all the great national interests awaiting the settlement of the Free Trade question; if months, weeks, days even, of uncertainty and unsettlement had not an appreciable influence on the employment, the wages, and the daily comforts of tens and hundreds of thousands of the people; if this commercial and industrial country could afford to have the business of production and exchange kept at a stand-still, to gratify the selfish vanity or wrath of "the wretched remnant of an expiring faction," we should take it easily, and should have nothing but congratulations to offer to our readers at this holiday season. We should be contented to look at the men who now lead the protectionist party, and read, in their very names, the pleasantest auguries of the certain and the near doom of the protectionist cause. A mere glaped at the fallen fortunes of the faction which rejoices in the chieftainship of a Bentinck and a Borthwick, were enough to reassure the con-Aldence which, in some of the more eager of us, may have been damped by a vexing and unexpreted delay, and to satisfy the country that all is and will be well.

A come-down indeed! From the "good old English gentleman," whose substantial individual worth, and long-ostablished political influence, gave a sort of respectability to an exploded principle and a vanquished party-to the sporting lord, and the unplaced political adventurer. From Mr. MILES, and Mr. BANKES-to Lord George, and Peter ! We do not hold up our hands in amazement, and ask, Who could have thought it? It is the most natural thing in the world. It was to be expected that men like those who have herotofore fought the battle of protection-men with political character and influence to lose-men who had really believed the protectionist principle to be sound in point of policy, and tenable in point of fact-should, on the contest of principle being deelded against them, honourably refuse participating in a system of obstruction for more obstruction's sake, which, on any principle, must be wrong. It is impossible to deny that the present cast of parts in the political drama has a sort of moral fitness. The business and the agents are well matched. Men who never, in all their lives—so far, at least as the public are informed—put their hands to a piece of useful work, are appropriate instruments for obstructing the industry, and fining down the earnings, of the classes that live by labour, and longthening out the present dreary sonson of commercial stagnation and embarrassment. Those much-respected politicians, but for whom the Corn Bill would have passed its third reading before the unhappy question of Irish coercion arose, are indisputably fit and proper persons to preside over the desperate fortunes of a disgraced party, a condemned principle, and a vicious cause.

Of course, they will gain nothing by it—except that momentary gratification of spite, or pique, which is probably all they expect to gain. It only makes sure doubly sure. A cause that has visibly fallen so low can never, in the judgment even of the craziest enthusiast, make head again. The country loses much by the present delay-but landlordism loses more. The commercial and industrious classes can have no forgiveness for a faction that thus mischievously and insolently trifles, for the mere love of mischief, with the most urgent and pressing national interests. The "British farmer," in particular, may be trusted to keep it in mind. Farmers will long cherish the recollection of those "friends" who have impudently used their name to prolong and aggravate that which farmers most abhor-suspense and uncertainty; and for whose over-intimate and obtrusive friendship they will have been muleted, during certain weeks or months of this spring, of 1846, of many shillings on every quarter of corn that it has been their misfortune to sell under a fictitious and got-up agricultural panic. Friendship of this singularly costly quality is sure to be long remembered, and duly appreciated, with precisely the kind and degree of gratitude that it merits.

THE WIGAN ELECTION CASE.

Soon after the election of the Hon, Capt. Lindsay, son of Lord Balcarras, for the borough of Wigan, a potition was presented against his return, founded on a notorious system of treating and presumptive bribery practised during the contest. That petition has been heard before a committee of the House of Commons, which has declared Captain Lindsay duly elected. We do not mean to impugn the integrity or the propriety of the decision; but if it be conformable to law, we assert that Lord John Russell's Act against treating is nothing better than waste-paper. It was established in evidence that Captain Lindsay's central committee ordered drink to be supplied at public houses in the various wards to those electors who were in his favour; that he was in the habit of attending this committee, and that he canvassed the publicans at whose houses drink was ordered in company with its members. That at one of those houses large quantities of brandy and water were supplied to electors in the presence of Captain Lindsay; that the bill for the liquor consumed at one public house (the Eagle and Child) was paid by Mr. Glover, the steward of Lord Balcarras (father of the candidate) who is not an elector of Wigan; that the treating in nine public-houses, the owners of which were examined, amounted to 269l., and these were but a few out of the number known to be kept open during the election. Finally, Captain Lindsay declined to defend his soat, and, by a printed circular, disclaimed those by whom it was defended. The committee, however, has decided that he was duly elected, no act of treating having been traced to him, or an authorised agent!!! Need we add a word of comment?

A Conn I.Aw Aneodore.—Near the village of Shafton lived Sir Thomas Hanner, editor of Shakspere, and Speaker of the House of Commons during the reign of Queen Anne. A curious anecdote of this celebrated character is traditionary here:—The Ministry of that day ontertained an idea of laying a tax upon wheat; to this measure Sir Thomas was decidedly hostile; and being admitted to an audience, the Queen inquired, with no small degree of solicitude, why he determined to go into the country so early. "That I may prepare my lands, and please your Majesty, for the cultivation of hemp." "With hemp, Sir Thomas! and why with hemp?" "Because, and please your Majesty, I am told your Royal Majesty's Ministers are about to tax your people the very bread they eat. A man can die but once; and please your Majesty, I think we had far better being than starve them." "I think so too," replied her Majesty; "and I will consult with my ministers, and see that my people shall not be starved. I thank thes, Sir Thomas." The measure was, in consequence, immediately dropped, and never afterwards resumed.

WHERT IN EAST LOTHIAN.—Winter These and please the wards.

restuned.

Without is East Lordian. Winter sheat cantilines to look well, though the keen frosts have prevented shything like growth either on it or young gross; the latter, where at all stocked, has gone destictly back. However, this check to vegetation may be considered rather in frozen of the when than otherwise, provided there is full growing weather after than otherwise, provided there is full growing weather after than otherwise, provided there is full growing weather after than otherwise.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

THE BREE THADE MORROR OF PARLIAMENT FOR THE.

Twelfth Week, ending Saturday, April 11.

Three months have clapsed since Parliament was assenbled. It was called together earlier this year than usual and Easter, this year, is later than usual. Yet to Easter we have arrived, without a particle of public business being transacted. Three or four temporary bills have been passed. in order to provide for the destitution in Ireland; and one or two formal votes of supply have been passed, in order to see the public service from embarrassment. But all other public business is at an absolute stand still. The Government are partly to blame. They have, without any apparent object, interposed their Irish Coercion Bill between the stages of the regular progress of the Corn Bill. No doubt Sir Robert Peel imagined that he could induce the Inch Repeal members to waive their opposition to the first reading of the Coercion Bill; and he as doubtlessly supposed that by paying some deference to the Coercion Bill in the Com mons, he may conciliate some portion of the landlord feel ing in the House of Lords towards his Corn Bill. In one respect he has been mistaken; he may be deceived, or rather undeceived, in the other also. As it is, everything is at a stand-still; and there is nothing hazardous in the prolition that we are rapidly approaching a period of severe Indee TRIAL PRESSURE, unless the causes which are producing a are removed.

The House of Lords adjourned on Tuesday, the House of Commons on Wednesday, for the Easter recess from Wednesday Sir Robert Peel made a speech, which exhibited a consciousness on his part of the false position in which has placed the Corn Bill and the Tariff. It deserves to be recorded.

Sir James Graham had adverted to the state of discress in Ireland, and laid on the table of the house the returns made to Government by the Scarcity Commissioners, the members of which are Sir R. Brown (the Commissary General), Sir Robert (Professor) Kane, Mr. Twisleton, Colonel Jones, Sir J. Dombrane, and Mr. Mackenzie. These returns exhibited unequivocally the daily increasing progress of the distress. After some conversation, shared in by several Irish members,

Sir ROBERT PEEL wished to call the attention of honour able members to this, as a subject of vast importance. He hoped that no honourable member would make any imagdiate answer to what he was about to say, and to the appeal he was about to make; and that neither the, one nor the other would lead to any discussion. He did hope that he nourable members would give him credit for being influ enced solely by his strong impression as to the state of the country at this present moment (hear, hear, hear). It was his belief that a great revolution was beginning to take place in Ireland by the introduction of meal the produce of Indian corn (hear, hear). His belief was that they were giving to the Irish people a new taste for a better and more generous description of food than that hitherto principally consumed (hear, hear). It was found—he would entreat them to remark—that on railways, those who were substituting for the first time, an article of foreign produce, to which they had not been accustomed, for the diet they were hitherto used to—it was found that they would work longer and better than those living on that water food-potatoes (hear, hear, hear). There had been prejudices to encounter, but these were disappearing; there had been an immense demand for the publications containing directions as to the manner of preparing this new article of subsistence, and he was happy to state that the people had found it, when properly dressed, extremely palatable (hear, hear). At present, however, Indian come was only admitted into Ireland, upon a sort of sufferance, and only admitted into Ireland, upon a sort of sufferance, and under the authority of an order issued by the Treasury. The measure which would fully legalize its importation was still waiting for the decision of Parliament, and he was confident that there would be increased confidence shown in the import of the article were the law satisfactorily settled, and were the raisers of the corn in the United States to find that they had the guarantee of an Act of Parliament, instead of the authority of a mere Treasury warrant (hear, hear). Lat it not be forgotten, too, that we wanted foreign wheat to mix with our own (hear), at a cheaper rate than the duty of 10s., which at present prevailed, and that if we could get only healest prevailed, and that if we could get oats and barley meal at a duty of 1s., instead of 5s. of 6s., we should have a great and desirable addition to our supply (hear, hear). He believed that there would be an immediate import of oats from foreign parts, were it settled that oathed would be allowed to be brought in at a duty of is. (hear, hear). At present there was no Treasury order except in favour of Indian corn and buck wheat. Uncertainty, then, would stuck to all controlled to all contro attach to all operations in other grains until such time as the house should have arrived at some decision upon the point. Under these circumstances he did hope that Irish members would read the returns about to be had before the house with the greatest care. He was sure that the honemembers for Clare and Timadal was they reserved accounts members for Clare and Limerlok must have received accounts members for Clare and Limerick must have received accounts of the distress which prevailed in those localities (best, hear). He believed that if the decision of the house were known with respect to the Corn Bill, it would greatly increase the available means of supply (hear, hear). All he could say with that if honourable members connected with Iraland sould reconcile it to their sense of public daty, usder any protest, and mean the understanding of any opposi-Ireland could reconcile it to their sense of public day, as der any project, and upon the understanding of any opposition to be offered to the hill for the prescription of life in Ireland, at any of im future stages—If those hor, sendement could allow the decision of the largestance to be taken to the first reading of the measure, with a view to the Corn Billies then immediately proceeded with, that in that send they would be conferring a great advantage on many distinction of their own country. He did not wish to provide disamption their own country. He did not wish to provide the measure of the provide the pr from the street of power states the state of the control of the co

from h
A di Calch and di sured Coerci
the Co minds commo

AN
In e when arrived

had to deficie repress Custor half a and a 800,000 Agains Stamp Rems On the 2,227,000 an net The amount April, former pers of property of the property of the ground of the grou

two m

tered le pongra phoels if they we thin ment de remind The pand the metion, gravita speries and speries

We lie bun and Pa forval house weapor ingloring and re-meet the common feeling doubly even the fix saun of yore owed he

This Reference Highely Mesories and m

trade, and consequent want of employment in many of the manufacturing districts. As to the Coeroion Bill, he boped that Irish members would consider how far they could shorten the discussion upon its provisions. For himself, he opposed the bill, and would continue to oppose it by all fair and proper means; but he did hope that I rish members would have a little regard to the commercial interests of England, and endeavour to conduct the discussion on the Coercion Act so as to allow the consideration of the Corn Bill to be resumed on the very earliest day possible ("heur, hear," from Bir Robert Pecl).

A discussion arose, shared in by Mr. Smith O'Brien, Mr. Calch Powell, Sir James Graham, and Mr. Poulett Scrope, and during which Mr. Thomas Duncombo severely censured the Government for their pertinacity in forcing on the Coercion Bill, thus placing a stumbling-block in the way of the Corn Bill. Their conduct had raised doubts in the minds of the public as to the sincerity of Ministers in their commercial measures. The subject ultimately dropped, and the house adjourned for the Easter recess.

THE REVENUE RETURNS FOR THE YEAR AND QUARTER ENDED 5TH APRIL, 1846. (From the Times.)

In estimating the finances of the empire at this moment, when the customary termination of the financial year has arrived, the inevitable stagnation of trade, consequent upon the suspended condition of the Corn Laws, and of the many articles included in the tariff, was of course to be borne in mind. This paralysing ingredient has entered into the material of commerce for more than three months, and we had to expect, therefore, as we auticipated on Saturday, a deficiency in those items which, in the quarter's revenue, represent generally the prosperity of the country. The tustoms accordingly show a decrease in the quarter of near half a million; and in the whole year, of near two millions and a half. The Excise shows a similar deficiency of about 800,000%, on the year, and about 340,000%, on the quarter Against this may be set an increase of near 400,000%, in the Stamps, and about 90,000l. in the Post-office, both which items may be placed to the account of the fallway mania. On the total ordinary revenue there is a decrease for the quarter of a million. for the year of two millions and a half on the total income, 1,100,000% for the quarter, and 2,327,000% for the year. Of the last-mentioned sum about 300,000% is merely incidental, which, being deducted, leaves an actual decrease of a little more than two millions.

These figures, however, exhibit merely the positive amount of receipts in the quarter and year ending the 5th of April, 1845, as compared with the like period in 1846. The former year was one of unexampled prosperity, great com-mercial activity, and unprecedented speculation. The pre-sent year, although it shows less of these signs of advancement, is nevertheless remarkable for that which is, after all, the true index of national prosperity—an excess of income over expenditure. This excess for the present year is about two millions and a-half.

It would be superfluous to particularise the many im-pertant reductions that were made in the Customs' duties in the years 1814 and 1845. Those of 1844 were but imperfeetly developed in 1845, and both have produced more or less effect upon the results of 1846. The bold experiment of Sir Robert Peel line hardly yet received a proper trial. tireat changes, of course, require a lengthened period to develope themselves, and it cannot be defiled that the lapsed interval has been both naturally and politically unfavourable to financial prosperity.

it would be equally superfluous to mention in detail the petitions lately presented to the House of Commons from the great commercial cities of England and Scotland for a proof of the injurious effect which the uncertain state of the Unions' department has exercised upon the relations of trade during the last few months. These, which are by far the most active months of the year in all departments of commerce, have been rendered flat and dull by the protracted decision of the House of Commons on the great question which now agitates the empire. There is ample evidence in the shape of trading circulars and petitions and Pullamentary papers, that the greatest injury has been inflicted upon the ordinary transactions of commerce by the studium immane loquendi that has seized upon the chartered legislators of the lower house. These gentlemen may congratulate themselves upon having put a drag upon the sheels of trade, and stayed the progress of the state machine. If they can find any satisfaction in this reflection, no one, we think, will be found to interfere with their perfeat enjoyment of it. But, with a view to check their pride, we must remind them that their power is limited to a temporary check. The progress of improvement will go on in spite of them, and the next quarter will probably evince, by a sudden reaction, that the protectionist vis inerties is but a momentary gravitation, ar the onward impulse of national prosperity is happily far superior to their powers of obstruction.

THE CORN BILL AND THE COERCION BILL.

(From the Times.) We cannot but view with dissatisfaction the state of public husiness in the House of Commons. Two more sittings, and Parliament adjourns for the Easter recess. An idle intotal of ten days follows, during which the vanquished loss of biles and Bentinek may collect their scattered wespons, and prepare their strength for another and less inglerious field. At the same time the eager patrices of Ireland review their yet unbroken ranks, brighten the unstained smour, and dive smour, and give a keeper sharpness to the weapons of at-tack. Both then, together, though not united, sdvance to meet their common foe, inspired with a common hatred, a common jesiousy, a common spirit of revenge—with every feeling but a common cause. Side by side they fight the deady battle against the Government of the comity; and wen though curtain in the very moment of the final issue to even though cortain in the very moment of the final issue to Systemater as far as pole from pole, and range themselves as of fore in open hostility, the combined attack may be followed by an unexpected victory.

This apple of discord is the Irish Coernion: Bills Gir Raiser's motley hand is the Gorn Law majority, which, if highly generaled, might are this have been from pured, with viscolous wreaths." It is money manived in a class many handly again be combined in value of the law law handly again be combined in value and delinated as week it stook as a handle with the law and the law has been as a second to the law has under the standard of Free Trade. What is it now? A scattered remnant of an army, dispersed without a blow, sufforing the shame of a defeat without the consolution of a wellcontested field. And all this is the doing of their own gonerel. This is the end of high aspirations and bold imaginings. How different from that other consummation so devouty to be wished i

See what is the position at this moment of the Corn Law measure. It passed the second reading now some ten days back, and then waited only to be committed. And so it might and would have been immediately, but that just at this critical juncture ill-luck sent forth the Irish bill from the House of Lords to trouble the unanimity of the friends of corn. In accordance with Parliamentary etiquette, and on the authority of precedent, Sir Robert Peel resolved that the Coercion Bill should be read forthwith in the House of Commons. We know not whether he imagined this procooding would pass sub silentio, as a matter of course. If he did, we are sure he ought to have known his opponents better. The Irish "patriots" are not the men to hold their tongues when there is a question concerning Ireland. However this may be, Sir Robert so determined, and having once said it should be so, why, of course, it must be so, and there an end. The corn was shelved-haid up in bond, and the Irish debato began. Sir James Graham made a long speech. and opened his case, not by any means so strong an one, by the way, as the Earl of St. Germans opened to the House of Lords. When Sir James had finished, the evening was somewhat advanced, and for Mr. O'Connell's convenience the debate was adjourned. The case then hung fire for three days, and on the fourth Mr. O'Connell made a long speech, followed by several gentlemen on either side, when there was a very respectable discussion. Hereupon followed two dies non, and again a third debate on Monday night. Last night there was no house, to-morrow will be a halfholyday, occupied probably, as usual, with a thousand subjects. Thursday is not a trovernment regard, not the its being the last before Easter. Friday commences the its being the last before April, recess; and thus we shall have arrived at the 10th of April, nearly three months from the beginning of the session, without even a proximate termination to the debate on either

What is it that has thus shelved the great measure demanded by the country?, What is it that has made Sir Robert Peel play has and loose with his own great scheme, and dodge Corn Bill and Coercion Bill backward and forward, like the balls in a juggler's hand? Nothing but a sentiment of courtesy to wards the Upper House, and a love of aucient precedent as established in the lower? Now, courtesy is, doubtless, a very amiable virtue, and cannot be too much cultivated by the gay and idle. A respect for precedent, also, is a prudent quality, and useful beyond all measure to the dull and ignorant. But both are sometimes troublesome things, and highly inconvenient in the serious affairs of life. The one is apt to fritter away the energy of action, and the other not seldom clogs the wings of genius. The Premier of England we should have pronounced the most unlikely man in the kingdom to pay homage or tribute to either, to fetter himself by inconvenient forms, or to square his actions by the standard of an idle etiquette. In other days it was certainly not so. This is the first time we hear of courteous Sir Robert or old-fashioned Sir Robert Peel.

It is not, however, too late for him to retrace his steps and disentangle himself from the net of his own weaving. The thing of course cannot be done before Easter, but it may after. Next Monday week let the Government set to work in good carnest, determined to pass the Corn Bill in spite of everything, and to the exclusion of everything. Do not fear the cry of 'Ireland in danger." There is no justice in it, for the repeal of the Corn Laws is an Irish measure as well as an English one. You are not disregarding the true in terests of Ireland when you offer the boon of cheaper food and unshackled commerce. If the great measure were other than it is,-if it were less humane, less comprehensive, less universal, and, therefore, less Irish,-it might be another matter. But we know that it is all these, and the best proof that it is so is the conduct of the Irish members themselves. Have they not all declared to a man that they will asvist the Ministry to pass the Corn Bill, and have they not done so until this one discordant element was introduced amongst them? Indeed, it needs no argument to prove that the repeal of the Corn Laws is of far greater importance to Ireland, in every point of view, than a Coercion Bill, however ostensibly necessary. We, therefore, conjure Sir Robert Peel to abandon, with all speed, an unwise determination. He must see that it is unwise. He has thrust aside the Corn Bill to make way for the Coercion Bill, and now he finds that the latter cannot make way for itself. The Irish debate, he may be sure, will be interminable; Irish debates There is no security for us that, if these are to have precedence, the Corn Bill will be read a third time before this day three months. How ridiculous, then, would be the Premier's position at the end of the session! A broken party, loss of power, loss of influence, loss of character,and all for nothing

THE BROCKLEHURST FALLACIES.

(From the Morning Chronicle.)
Protectionist fallacies are so soon to become historical that we feel it a duty to embalm, for the benefit of postcrity, the most perfect specimens of the class that fall in our way. The time will come when strong contemporary evidence will be requisite to prove that some of our most familiar argumentative absurdities did really find men to give them a grave utterance in the Parliament of 1816. During the recent debates we notice for preservation some of these illustrations of our representativides. But there were of these illustrations of our senatorial wisdom, but there was one which, though especially worthy of attention, was not at the time set as fully in the light as it deserved. We take the first opportunity left us by the pressure of other topics of supplying the deficiency. The argument to which we refer came from Mr. Brookishurst, and it lies at the bottom of the question now before the sountry. The fact was, and Mr. Brookishurst, whilst we experted 20,000/. worth of silk goods to France, we imported 100,000/. worth from the same country. So much for the bonated reciprosity!" This statement, made, it is presumed, on the suffering of Custom-house returns, was put forth not so much for its own sake, as for the inference to which Mr. Brookishurst pointed, viz.; that a country which, gives 160,000/. to got head 20,000/. if a heavy loss it the rampacition.

The amendment of these flavore, followed by the exclamation. To much for the lowest reciprosity, was calculated to make at impression on the projectionist mind; and of these illustrations of our senatorial wisdom, but there was significant designation of the said are 20,000% worth of goods experted, and 150,000% worth imported; the large sum of 150,000% spent by England in paying French workmen, and incremeling French capital, whilst 20,0001, only comes back to England to supply the defloiency. The difference is a gift to France—a dead loss to England of 130,000l. in the one article of silk; and the official returns of the Custom-house attest the fact. It may be very well," the protectionists go on to say, "for political be very well," the protectionists go on to may, concentrate that exports are equal to imports—this accommists to assert that exports are equal to imports—this content is not so in practice." " But may be true in theory, but if is not so in practice." "But pray are merchants' books good in practice?" Our friend Bustiat, to whom we have refurred before, and who cannot be too often quoted, asks the same question on a similar occasion; and he answers it, or rather would answer it if he had Mr. Brooklohurst to deal with, in some such way as the

"If there is one thing in the world which is entitled to practical authority, it is the entries of profit and loss in the ledgers of a counting house. Dopend upon it no mistake is made there; that which a merchant calls profit is profit, and What he calls loss is loss."

Now it so happened that a morehant of Liverpool freighted a vessel to the United States with Manchester goods of the value of 10,000/. Such was the declared value, and such the sum entered at the Custom-house. The carge on arriving at New Orleans had incurred charges to the amount of 10 per cent., and paid duty to that of 30, making the total amount 14,000%. It was sold at a profit of 20 per cent, that is 2000%, and produced altogether 16,000%, which the consignee disposed of in buying cotton. This cotton, too, had to bear charges of 10 per cent. for freight, insurance, commission, &c., so that on reaching Liverpool, on its remen, the new eargo amounted to 17,000%, and this too, was the sum entered in the ledgers of the Custom-house; and to conclude, Mr. T. again realised on this return cargo 20 per cent. profit; i. c. 3,520/.—in other words, the cotton sold for 21,1207.

On Mr. T's books may still be seen figuring to the credit of the account of profit and loss, in other words under the hoad of profits, two entries, the one of 2,000, and the other of 3,520/; and Mr. T. is thoroughly convinced, and in likely to remain so, that he has made no mistake, and that his arithmetic is correct.

But what does the Custom house ledger my to this transaction? It tells us that England has experted goods to the value of 10,000%, and imported goods to the value of 17,600%; that this country has paid to the United States 17,60%, and received back only 10,000%. The conclusions which Mr. Brocklehurst would draw from these figures is, that England has lost 7,600% worth of capital, which she has given to the United States.

Some time after, Mr. T. sent off another vessel, which was also laden with 10,000%, worth of nutive produce. But the unlucky ship, after leaving the port, struck against a rock, and went to the bottom, cargo and all, and Mr. T. had nothing for it but to make on his books the two following little entries: - "Sundries. Dr. to X. 10,000/., for the purchase of various articles sent out in the ship N. and loss—Dr. to sundries, to,000%, final and total loss of the whole cargo.

In the meanwhile, the Custom-house officers had not been idle. They had been recording 10,000% under the head of exports; and as they will never have to make a corresponding entry under the head of imports, it follows, according to this doctrine of Mr. Brocklehurst, that this shipwreek is a clear profit to England of 10,000%.

There is another consequence to draw from this -- namely, that, according to this doctrine, a country has a very simple way of doubling its capital at any moment. To do so, it is quite sufficient that, after such capital has passed the Custom house, it should be tossed into the sea. By such means the exports of the country will be equal to its amount, of capital, the imports will be reduced to nothing, and be, in fact, impossible, and we shall gain all that the sea has awal-

Besides, observe how directly the shipwreeks would tend to protect British industry. Not only the vessels which carry out English goods would never bring back foreign ones, but as the demand for English goods in the United States will be just as great after us it was before these successive losses, new capitalists would be brought into the field, new mills set to work, new artizans find employment to supply those wants which will never be satisfied. A sunken rock, a sand bank, and a raging sea, may be turned to account, and become a much botter and cheaper protection to British industry than high duties and Custom house officers. At all events, those who are for the latter, to be consistent, should be for the

We would seriously recommend to Mr. Brocklehurst, Mr. Rashleigh, et ld genus omno, to go through a course of Bastiat. It would open their minds, and alley their feverish fears; and a little plain and pointed sense in the morning would be an agreeoble and useful relaxation after the lively revels of the night.

DISTRESS IN IRELAND.

(From a Correspondent of the Morning Chronicle.)

In very many places potatoes have already reached a price far above the means of that class of whom they are ordinarily the sole subsistence. If at any period of the year the amount exceeds three penace per stone, while wages are but eightpened a day, it is generally allowed to be verging upon a famine price; but in Galway, Clare, and Limerick, the price new values from disconnected expensive.

price; but in Galway, Clare, and Limerick, the price now varies from flyopenes to seven pence.

This is no implous fabrication, no profine device of the Free Traders. Buch are the current prices of this week, while yet the planting of the ensuing year's crop is scarcely begun. When that operation once becomes general, there will be an increased demand, which will ruise the prices considerably; and as soon as it is completed, a great proportion—fully one-half. I should say—of what now remains of wholesome provisions will have disappeared altogether, leaving as seanty remnant of unsound and decaying food to be contended for by the numerous competitors by whom the markets are already orowded with unusual frequency.

kets are already crowded with unusual frequency.

It has been stated that in Clare the poor people having exhausted all the rest of their stock, are now consuming what they had reserved for seed. To this fact I can bear testimony from personal observation, having within a few days visited a populous district in that county, where the inhabitants have been driven to that desperate resource. How they are to provide for the supply of the next year they no more known than by what make the evils of the now imminist calability are to be selfened and made supplied. They so that consider the contemplate. They are to contemplate. They are to contemplate. They beginned and made supplied them made frightful to contemplate. kets are already crowded with unusual frequency.

sands to the seaports and other places of embarkation, to escape from misery, the very existence of which is denied by men who should be the foremost to proclaim it, and arouse the sympathy of the public and the legislature in their be-half.

In the whole of the district to which I refer, divided into small farms of eight or ten acres, and extending over several miles of country, there were not ten corn-stacks to be seen. The oats had been all threshed out, and sold long ago to I do not wish to imitate the Times commissioner, by naming the provident landlords, who have thus taken time by the forelook. Exposure would not mend them, and it is not wanted to prove a practice which is too notorious to call for particular censure on any individual. But let it be remembered that it is for the benefit, and in compliance with the dictates of persons who do such things, that the existence of distress amongst the Irish peasantry is now so audaciously and perseveringly denied.

TREE TRADE ABROAD.

(From the Daily News.)

The Free Trade League is extending its fame in foreign lands, where it meets kindred spirits long imbued with the same principles, and carnestly engaged in applying them at home. It has its allies in France, Germany, and Italy, and though last not least important, in Spain also. The political degradation of that unhappy country has not yet affected

There are several patriotic societies established throughout Spain for the encouragement of industry and agriculture, and the dissemination of sound economical doctrines. The Booledad Economica Matritense deservedly stands at the head of these. The society publishes a monthly periodical entitled El Amigo del Pais, devoted to an account of its sessions, and to the discussion of scientific and economical questions, with practical dissertations and suggestions on the means by which the agricultural and industrial resources of the gountry may best be developed. It is to be lamented that this otherwise excellent and learned publication should be so extremely deficient in that statistical information, without which the truth of principles cannot practically be tested and brought to bear upon the common sense of peoples and governments. Beveral copies of this periodical having been forwarded to the head quarters of the Longue at Manchester, the secretary, on behalf of the Council, addressed to Senor Dov Juan A. Became, its principal editor, and President of the Section of Commerce in the society, a letter of acknowledgment of the compliment in February last. The March number of the Amigo del Pais, just received, contains a copy of this letter, with the eloquent reply of Sevor Second. We collect from this ready that collect from this reply that, far from being behind the age in the appreciation of enlightened economical truths, Spain has been with the foremost in their discovery and propagation "When," says Senor Secure, "Smith was addressing these counsels (his 'Wealth of Nations') to the disdain of the aristocracy of England, Jovellanos and Campomanes were repenting them in our country to a clergy, a nobility, and officials, who received them with applause indeed, because they dreamt not of the possible triumph of these theories. Senor Secane might have added, that these illustrious men did more still. As stawsmen and ministers they practically applied them so far as possible in their day. Strange it is, but true, that, since that passing period of a briefly illu majorated despotism. Spain has lived on for half a century of retrograde existence, political, financial, and industrial; alshough, during one half the time at least, despotism has been displaced by the Cortes, by ascendant liberalism, and by assentiations of all stades, to be reckoned only, like those of France, by the score. With the exceptions of Mendizabal when in office, and of Mon, the Inte finance minister, there is no evidence of a single effort being made by any of the so called liberal and patriot statesmen of Spain, who have figured since 1808, to re-awaken the vitality of those principles which shed lustre on the absolute monarchy of Carlos the summer when there of the knowledge and connects of Carlos III., and to the extent of their application diffused prosperity through his dominions. Those principles have slumbered in the tomb with Jovellanos and Campomanes, who had evoked them after a cantury of oblivion. For liberty of commerce was a fundamental law of Arragon, of Bispay, and others of the follows being the follows. and others of the federal kingdoms or provinces of Spain; and it may be shown on other occasions how it was coutended for in remonstrances against the prohibition of foreign textile fabries so long ago as 1620.

(From the Economist)

THE FOREIGN EXCHANGES.

The causes which have combined for so long a period to maintain the foreign exchanges at rates so favourable to this country, are well deserving the attention both of the more and and the politician, at this particular time. The invostigation of this subject cannot fail to expose the groundless nature of the blarms of some of the opponents of Free Trade, who appear to associate a deraugament of the currency with every considerable importation of grain, without any dissimination of the ofreumstances under which it takes place. It may also be of the highest utility in enabling the merchant to form a correct estimate of the effects which present and coming events are likely to exercise over this important demonst in all monetarial calculations.

It may, perhaps, he passasary, in order to render our fur-aber remarks more intelligible, that we should refer to the general principles which regulate the exchanges, and to advanced in civilisation, assumes soms commodity as a standard of value, in which the prices of all other commodities are expressed. The commodity excumed as such standard of value in this country is gold, an ounce of which represents £3 10s. 10dd. of our money in account. Every sum therefore expressed in sterling money represents as many ounces of standard gold as the sum itself bears a promany ounces of standard gold as the sum itself bears a proportion to £3 10s. 104d.—a pound sterling being in fact a convertible term for 5 dwts. Si grs. of gold. In France, and in most other countries, the commodity assumed as the standard of value is aliver, of which 3 dwts. 5i grs. represent a franc, the French money in account. The par of excepts therefore between France and England must be doctomized by the relative value of silver and gold, and the proportion which 8 dwts. 5i grs. of the former metal, or a france, being to 5 dwts. 3i grs. of gold, or the pound sterling. Computed at our mint price, this quantity of gold representing a pound is aqual to (within an insignificant fraction) twenty-five times the quantity of silver representing a france; so that the par of exchange between France and England is twenty-five france to the pound sterling.

There are two ways in which this relation of the franc to the pound may be changed, or, in other words, in which the rate of exchange may be altered: first, a permanent change in the relative value of the two metals, either by being produced or by being consumed for other purposes, in different proportions than formerly, will permanently alter the par of exchange. For example, if an unusual production of silver were to take place, and the supply to be materially increased, while that of gold remained stati nary, the intrinsic value of silver, in relation to gold as well as other commodities, would fall, and the quantity of silver represented in twenty-five france would no longer be equivalent to the quantity of gold represented by one pound sterling. ()r if, on the other hand, the consumption of gold for jewellery, plate, or even for coin, were to increase in a greater proportion than the supply, and also in a greater proportion than silver, the intrinsic value would rise, and the quantity represented in a pound sterling would be more valuable than the quantity of silver represented by twentyfive francs. In either of these cases the par of exchange upon France would rise, and the pound sterling would represent as much more French money in account, as the altered relative value of odwts. 3 grs. of gold bore to 3dwis. 54grs. of silver. The second and more usual way in which the rates of exchange fluctuate, is by the changes which take place in the balance of payments between the two countries. The par of exchange is fixed by the value of the respective metals in London and Paris; and as long as the exports and imports of the two countries, and claims arising from other sources exactly balance each other, the exchange will remain at par. The amount of bills drawn by one country will exactly balance the amount drawn by the other. But if, from any circumstance, the payments due to England by France become larger than those due to France by England, bills upon England rise to a premium, and the pound sterling then represents more than twenty-five francs. It must, however, be plain that no greater permanent change would take place from this cause than the cost of transmitting the metals themselves from the spot where the debt is due to that where it is payable. And thus it is, when the balance becomes sufficiently large to raise the premium upon bills so much above par that the transmission of bullion would be more profitable, that either merchants remlt gold instead of bills, or, which is more usual, bankers and dealers in bills of exchange transmit bullion, and draw bills against it, which are supplied to the merchant. The transmission of bullion is, therefore, seldom for the immediate purpose of making purchases, but for the ultimate balancing of merchants' and bankers' accounts after purchases have been made.

The high rate of exchange which has been maintained so long between this country and the Continent of Europe has naturally induced us to inquire if that effect has been produced in any degree by a permanent change in the relative value of the metals. So far, however, we have not been able to discover any evidence that such has been the case. The supply of silver has not been more than usually large; and though the consumption of gold for jewellery and plate has been much on the increase of late years, yet the additional supply, including the new source in Siberia, has probably been quite as great. Mr. M Culloch, in the new edition of the "Commercial Dictionary," states the produce of the gold washings in Siberia, which, in 1830, amounted only to five poods, to have been, in 1843, no less than 1342 poods, being equivalent, after adding one fifth as the quantity which it is calculated is not brought to the public account, to £3,298,962. So great an increase of the supply of gold, considered alone, would have led us to expect a diminished value of this metal and the supplementary of the metal and the supplementary of the supplement tal, and, consequently, a lower permanent rate of exchange; and, perhaps, no fact could speak more strongly to the great increase of consumption of this metal generally, than that such an effect has not been produced.

We are, however, satisfied that there have been sufficient causes of a mercantile nature in operation during the last few years, satisfactorily to account for the state of the exchanges; and it is these we now propose shortly to investigate.

For some years prior to 1839 the trade between this country and the Continent of Europe, showed a steady but slow increase. After the American crisis of 1836-37, which materially depressed the foreign exchanges, and caused a severe drain of bullion, a sudden reaction took place, the exchanges were corrected by the great reduction of our imports in 1837, and the bullion in the Bank rapidly increased from £4,048,000 in March 1837 to £10,126,000 in April 1838. During the whole of 1838 the exchanges remained steady, and there was every appearance of the trade between this country and the Continent of Europe being nearly balanced. For several years, however, prior to the close of 1838, the import of grain from the Continent had formed a most insignificant item in that trade; our entire consumption of foreign wheat having been-

| qrs. | | 1832 | 325,435 | | 1833 | 82,346 | | 1834 | 64,653 | | 1835 | 28,483 | 1836 ... 30,554 first quarter of 1838 35,207

The whole foreign wheat taken for consumption in those six years and nine months having only been 821,297 quarters. During this period, it is then evident that the trade hetween this country and the Continent of Europe must have been gliusted and balanced, without reference to any important shipments of grain. The wool, tallow, flax, being, silk, and other produce usually imported by us, were paid for to a certain extent. paid for to a certain extent, by our own manufactures, and the remainder by foreign and colonial produce, such as indigo, coffee, and sugar, imported by us in exchange for our manufactures exported to other parts of the globe. In the autumn of 1838, a sudden import of wheat commenced, and continued upon a large scale until the end of 1842. The quantity of foreign wheat imported from that period till the end of 1845 was as follows:

months of 1,633,678 1,639 ... 1,633,678 1839 ... 2,634,667 1,999,510 1841 ... 9,400,754 last 3 months of 1849 ... 2,732,305 1843 ... 940,190 1544 ... 1,100,505 1845 ... 871,443

The imports of wheat which began in the autumn of 1888 The imports of wheat which began in the autumn of 1838 amounted to 4,168,485 are., in fifteen months, representing a sum of not less than £12,000,000, which sum was thus added to the value of our imports without any squivalent being experied, and the balance of account was thus suddenly turned against us. The payments due by England to the Continent were larger than those due by the Continent to England; drafts on the Configent rose to a premium, and at length it became necessary to transmit builton to believe accounts, and to sorrest the explanges. On the the cof January, 1839, the amount of builton in the Bank was £9,886,000; and on the 6th of December, notwithstanding the loan from the Bank of France, it was reduced to $2,887,000. In 1840, the importation of wheat stiff real tinued upon a large scale; but notwithstanding there we an evident tendency for the exchange to turn in favor of England, by means of the increased exports of manufactures, for which a greater demand was soon experienced partly in consequence of the reduced prices of our goods and portly from the additional demand created on the Continent by our imports of wheat: and considerable progress would have been made in 1840 towards restoring our bullion, but for a new cause of disturbance which operated by some time in preventing it. The general fear which existed in Europe, in the autumn of 1810, of a ruj tire between France and England, induced the Continental bankers generally to dispose of securities in the London market in order to increase their reserves of money. Yet, hotalit. standing this circumstance, and a continued large in. port of wheat, and the partial repayment of the loan from the Bank of France, the bullion in the Bank of Englandhal increased in December, 1840, to £3,511,000. In 1841, the import of wheat was still larger than in 1840, the whole of the Bank of France was repaid, but yet such was the tendency of our exports to rise up to the amount of our imports, that in December, 1811, the bullion amounted to £4,480,000. In 1842 the largest import of wheat on mend took place; but notwithstanding this, our exports had in-creased so largely, in consequence of low prices at home, and from having created new customers abroad, that at the end of the year the bullion in the Bank had increased to no less than £10,380,000. We had thus become able to add to our usual imports from the Continent a large quantity of whent, without causing any disturbance in the exchanges We will shortly examine how this was accomplished, by comparing the amount of our exports to those countries in 1837, the last year prior to the commencement of three transactions, with the same in 1842, when they had con-tinued for three years. The following is a comparison of the exports of British manufactures to the chief Continental a ne encac en o posse	, uo .

	1837.	١	1842.
	£		£
Russia	2,040,592		1,885,053
Sweden	101,121		199,313
Norway	72,413		134,704
Denmark	103,448	• • • •	194,304
Prussia	131,536		376,651
Germany	4,898,016		6,202,700
Holland	3,040,029		3,573,362
Belgium	804,917		1.009,190
France	1,643.204		3,193,939
Total	12.841,276		16,860,416

We thus arrive at the striking fact, that while our entire exports were undergoing a considerable diminution, as they did from 1838 to 1842, our exports to those countries from which we imported grain, increased more than £4,0,000m. The exchanges were, in short, corrected by our rising to an equivalent to our increased imports.

With the commencement of 1843 we come to the causes which, for the last three years, have operated so strongly in maintaining high exchanges and a large stock of bullion. Independent of the large imports of grain from the Continent, our export trade, especially of cotton manufactures, was materially aided by the rajid improvement of machinery and consequent economy of production, and the low prices of the raw material, which, for the last three years, have created a consumption of those goods without any precedent in extent. In 1813 the import of wheat fell to about one-third of the quantity im ported in 1842; an extended market having been made for our manufactures was not suddenly lost, and thus the reverse of the operations which took place in 1839 created a large balance in our favour to be remitted from the Continent, the exchanges became very high in our favour, and at the end of the year the bullion in the Bank was nearly 14,000,000l. During the last two years (1811 and 1915) the import of wheat has continued small, compared with the years from 1838 to 1842, while the extreme low prices of our manufactures have enabled us still to sustain an export of those goods, little diminished, to the corn-growing countries, and greatly to increase them to the other markets of the world. We therefore come to the conclusion that the high rates of exchange which have been maintained for the last three years, have been caused, first, by the sudden reduction of our imports of wheat in 1843 to about 900,000 quarters, after our trade had adapted itself to an annual import considerably exceeding 2,000,000 quarters in each of the four preceding years; secondly, to the great economy chained in our process of manufactures by improvements during the last six years; and, thirdly, by the extreme low prices of cot ton wool, especially during the last two years, the products of which constitute nearly one-half of our whole exports; and lastly, to the general prosperity of our customers on the Continent, who have been onabled to consume our manufactures to so large an extent. In 1837 the exports of cother was the continent of the exports of cother continents of the exports of cother continents. ton goods amounted to £20,098,000, and in 1414, notwithstanding the great reduction of price, they amounted to £25,805,848. In 1837 our exports of all kinds to the Continent of Europe amounted to £10,401,320, and in 1811 to £25,805,1401

The important inquiry in which all are now most deeply £40,621,185. interested is, how far the same causes are likely to continue As far as we can judge from present appearances, we do not think it probable that any such important increase will take place in our imports of grain as will of itself be calculated materially to affect the exchanges. The supply of coton continues very large, and the prices fully as low as on any former occasion. Our manufactures are conducted upon a scale of conference. scale of perfection and economy never before equalled. So far, then, as these elements of the question are concerned, there would appear at this time little to be apprehended to lead to any particular than the state of the property of the state lead to any reduction in the exchanges. There have, bos-ever, been some other symptoms visible of late, which would have the symptoms of the great symptoms of the great symptoms. ever, been some other symptoms visible of late, which would ever, been some other symptoms visible of late, which would lead us to fear that some reaction in the course of the present year must be expected. During the last ix months are imports of all leading articles have been, and continue to be, imports of all leading articles have been, and continue to be very considerable; while at beet, our exports up to December the transfer of all leading articles of matter than the present of matter than the present of matter than the present worsel in ufacture, and more particularly for cotton and more particularly for cotton and worsel with what it was a year a continues to be very limited, compared with what it was a year a continue to be very limited, compared with what it was a year a continue to be very limited, compared the with what it was a year a continue to be very limited, compared to be partily in connections of the season of the seaso season ; ratively duce, at tation w allude t tributio stringer country made a i not let feated th period o the peop question sculed, 0 the pres Parliam their dec pondera annoyar they hav porters c s niggar flows wt landown though decide tl be found Commor Law was finally re raid it w would in tudea. nubiasse a luctry Commor creded.

18

Which le

mons res

ાતાનું માત્ર

were repo

agreed to emminitte Whieli da on the 10 Thus from Just 21 o House of measure. and was read a sec bill, pravi tition to the bill w 20th of 3 On the 2 came the the introd 13th of N read a thi dyliberati ver pass teade acet privileged our dâys briona in

2 d of Me irriad the made in Historia o tarv. to g House of conducted The pr with the p them with

On the Matement the Corn I he allowed Pebruary continue of the Ho

March, and and division w

arason; while the large proportion of our labour employed in the construction of railways, will maintain wages companatively high, promote a large consumption of foreign produce, and in the course of time lead to an extent of importation which our exports will not be adequate to meet. There is no immediate danger of such a disturbance as we now allude to; but the whole tendency of our trade, and the dis-tribution of our capital and labour at this time, points to such a result, sooner or late, as highly probable, unless sningent means are used to prevent it.

CORN BILL DEBATES-1815-1846. (From the Manchester Examiner.)

Up to the session of 1845, nothing was so distinsteful to the country gentlemen as a discussion on the Corn Law. It was made a subject of repeated complaint that Mr. Villiers would not let the question rest, however great a majority had defeated the proposition be submitted to the house. During the period of severe distress, from 1838 to 1842, the sufferings of the people were often the subject of debate, and the landlords in Parliament protested against the introduction of the question of corn as one which the legislature had finally culed, and which ought not, therefore, to be re-opened. In the present session we find a complete change who, some time ago, were content with the decision of a Parliamentary majority, are now resolved on a pertinacious and irritating opposition to a measure which has received the deliberate sanction of a majority of 97 votes. So long s majorities were in favour of a policy by which the nation was pillaged, and the fruits of its industry misappropriated. their decision was to be held sacred; but now, when the pre ponderance of votes is on the side of justice, every means of annovance is practised which obstinacy and selfishness can devise. It has been a frequent charge against the opponents of the Corn Law, both in and out of Parliament, that they have imputed unworthy and base motives to the supporters of monopoly; and the class of persons whose charity is niggardly enough when speaking of the poor, but over flows when the rich are to be judged, have denied that the buildwares have been actuated by other than patriotic, though possibly mistaken, motives in the policy they have pursued. The journals of the Houses of Parliament shall decide the question,—we ask no other evidence than is to be found in the records of the proceedings of the Lords and Commons, in the debates in the year 1815, when the Corn I aw was enacted, and in the year 1846, when it will be finally repealed. No one denied that the projected Corn Law of 1815 was a most important measure; its friends raid it would save the country; its opponents said that it would injure trade, and produce misery and ruin to multi-It was a measure demanding the most mature and unbiassed deliberation, affecting as it did the food and the histor of a whole nation. And how did the Lords and Commons, owners of the soil, treat it? By reference to the journals of the House of Commons, we find the following narrative of the rate of travelling at which legislation, for high prices of corn and high rents, procreded. On the 17th of February, 1815, the House of Commons resolved itself into a committee of the whole House, to consider the laws which regulated the importation of corn, and on the same day, certain resolutions were reported. This report was further considered in committee on the 22d, 23d, and 24th of February, and on the 27th nine resolutions were reported to the house. The debate was adjourned to the following day, the 28th, when all the resolutions were agreed to, and a bill was ordered. On the 1st of March, the bill was brought in and read a first time. On the 3d it was read a second time and committed. It was considered in committee on the 6th, and further considered on the 8th, on which day it was reported, and ordered to be engrossed; and on the 10th of March it was read a third time and passed. Thus from the introduction of the resolutions on the 17th of February, to the passing of the bill on the 10th of March, just 21 days clapsed. We now turn to the journals of the House of Lords, and track the progress of this iniquitous measure. It was sent up to the Lords on the 13th of March, and was read a first time the same day On the 15th, it was read a second time. On the 17th, a motion was made to hear the Corporation of London on their petition against the bill, praying for further inquiry. The Lords ordered the petition to "lie on the table," saying they had information though, and were prepared to legislate, and on the same day the bill went through committee, and was reported. On the 30th of March, the bill was read a third time and passed. On the 23d of March it received the royal assent, and be came the law of the land and of the landowners. Thus, from the introduction of the bill into the House of Lords, on the 13th of March, to the 20th of the same month, whon it was dyliberation, on one of the most important measures which five passed that branch of the legislature. The royal action was discounted to the legislature of millions was acted to the legislature of millions was acted to the legislature. needs was kiven on the 23 used scarce and dear, by the enactment of an interested and privileged class. It will be seen from this, that just thirty-our days intervened from the first introduction of the resolution. bitions in the House of Commons, on the 17th of February. to the affixing of the royal signature to the Corn Bill, on the of March. It must be borne in mind, that during this definition of the hostility of the people to the odious measure, were made in every possible form. On the 6th of March, the linnes of Parliament were surrounded by police and mili tary to guard the members on their way to the scene of their everlasting disgrace. The lobbies and galleries of the lione of Commons were cleared of strangers, with a view to conceal from public view the mode in which the laudowners conducted their operations against the public weal.

The proceedings we have just narrated were connected with the passing of the Corn Bill of 1816. Let us contrast them with the doings of the monopolists in the session of 1846.

On the 26th of Jennery last, Sir Robert Peel made a ful statement of the intentions of the Gabinet with respect to the Corn Y. the Corn Law. At the pressing request of the monopolists, he sllowed a fortnight for consideration of the measure, before moving the other of moving the House into Committee. On the 9th of Pebruary he moved for the Committee, and the monopolists continued the debate during three weeks, engaging the time of the House of Commons for no heavy than twelve nights. of the House of Octomonas for no share than twelve nights. At least two nights were spent on the report of the resolutions. The second reading was postponed to the 98 d of March, and the debate on the second reading, which community on Monday last, has now leasted four nights, and the debate on the second reading, which community of the second reading will probably between the post of the second reading will probably between the post of the second reading who was any national facility who was the second reading the secon tion to past discussion, a further debate in the Committee on the Bill, and a great content on the third reading; and there is no chance of the Bill leaving the House of Commons till just before the Easter recess. What the Lords will do with it is yet uncertain; but of one thing we may feel quite sure—they will not pass it in one week from its reception by them, as they passed the Bill of 1815.

In 1815 the people demanded delay and inquiry: they wo e refused both, and indecent haste marked the conduct of both houses. In 1846 the people demand that their industry shall be liberated, and starving multitudes in Ireland ask for bread; they are met by delay, by an opposition of the most factious character, and by the contemptuous denunciations of the men who for thirty years have been trampling on their most sacred rights. In 1815 thirty four days were enough for discussion, and for enacting the Corn Law; in 1846 sixty days are spent before the Corn Law Repeal Bill can proceed to its second reading in one house of the legislature; and it is probable that six weeks more, at least, will have passed before it is read a third time in the House of Lords!

The monopolists in one house are led on by Lord George Bentinck-a member of a family which came over with William the Third, and whose greatest deeds are recorded in the annals of the turf. In the House of Lords they are to act under the orders of Lord Stanley-a man whose incapacity for business, and whose impetuosity of temper, have rendered it impossible for him to work in any administration. We leave it to any right-minded man to determine whether the interests of a great empire are to be thus obstructed by a party who can boast of no services rendered to the nation, but whose career has been chiefly remarkable for the shame less audacity with which they have persisted in pillaging the national industry, and by an unvarying disregard of every duty their position as citizens, or as members of the legisla ture, has imposed upon them. It may be desirable to have a privileged aristocracy, but if national well being, and the national liberties, are worth preserving, it is high time the insolence of power manifested by the privileged classes were brought under some efficient control. It will be small compensation for the ruin of a great nation, that the territorial aristocracy should be involved in its downfall.

THE AGRICULTURISTS AND FREE TRADE .- At a meeting of the Newcastle-on-Tyne corporation, on Wednesday last, Mr. Sinton, the keeper and manager of the extensive and increasingly important cattle market at that town, pre sented his annual report to the town council, which showed that, during the past year, the quantity of stock sold at the market considerably exceeded that sold in the previous year; and that the demand for all kinds is now so brisk that, to use his own words, "prices have risen almost to an extreme," beasts selling at 7s. 6d, per stone, and sheep at 8d, per lb. The report concluded with this emphatic statement: "I may also take the liberty of stating, that a great difference of opinion exists in the agricultural districts with reference to the Free Trade measures now proposed, compared with what provailed when the Premier introduced his measures in 1842. At that time the graziers became alarmed, and brought their stock to market before it was ready; consequeally prices were then verylow, and all kinds of stock were a drug in the market. But the Free Trade measures now proposed have not affected the prices of stock in the least. On the contrary, since they came under discussion, prices have had rather an upward tendency. Holders are firm, and no apprehension exists as to any reduction in prices." The author of this statement is in constant communication with all the large stock farmers in this neighbourhood, as well as with dealers from adjoining counties. Sir John Fife remarked that Sir R. Peel could not have a better reply than it afforded to his monopolist opponents.—Daily News.

THE PROTECTIONIST PREAS .- We are informed, on authority which cannot be doubted, that "the die is cust." The monopolist peers have had their meetings, one after another, and the issue is, that the march of Free Trade is to be resisted to the attermost. Lord Stanley, never deficient in animal courage, and always forward when mischief is to be done, has undertaken so to mutilate and mangle the ministerial measure in committee that it will be quite impossible for the Free Trade party in the House of Commons to accept it when it is returned to them. Our regret, we confess, is greater than our surprise at this information. Their lordships have always been tardy learners in the school of wisdom, and therefore we may not wonder at their preserving this characteristic of their order in the present instance, And what are they to gain by playing this dangerous game with an irritated and angry people? Or rather, what muy they not lose by their appalling folly? But, while such is the present intention of the lords, Sir R. Peel, we are as sured, is resolute and determined on the subject. He has made up his mind that he will take no measure but his own. It is aut Cosar aut nihil with him. He will have all or The monopolists must be prepared to form an administration or face a dissolution of Parliament in the very hour when they give a mortal stab to his proposition. So stands the case at present. We speak on the authority of one engaged in playing the game himself .- Liverpool Al.

FREE-TRADE TESTIMONIAL.—We are pleased to find that the subscriptions to the testimonial to Mr. Symons, the honorary Secretary of the Plymouth Free Trade Association are progressing in a very satisfactory manner. The members and friends of this popular movement appear to think themselves under weighty obligations to Mr. Symons for the spirited, zealous, and unceasing energy which he has siways thrown into the cause, and which has kept this Association constantly before the public eye as one of the greater provincial bodies which have been instrumental in furthering the onuse of Free Trade. They will therefore, we are assured come down handsomely on the occasion, and show that they duly appreciate the exertions of their active officer. They now begin to feel, probably, under the slow movement of the Commons, and the threatened opposition to their hopes in the Lords, that they will require his services still further; certainly there is reason to four that some active demonstration may yet be required to convince our hereditary wisdom that the people of this country will not allow themselves to be triffed with in the full attainment of their just hopes, and that nothing short of unrestricted commercial freedom will that polying short of unrestricted commercial freedom will satisfy the nation. In obtaining this severy one must see the advantages of an organized League, and we hope that this testimental will be in some measure a handsome recognition of the steady services of the Secretary of our Free Trade Association.—Plymouth Journal.

Whe Stanford Infraregy states that, so exceedingly source is copper money in Itingolu, some of the fredericen have been scinally compelled to give change in postage stamps.

BIRMINGHAM FREE TRADE ASSOCIA-TION.

LEAGUE QUARTER OF A MILLION FUND. (From the Birmingham Journal.)

On the evening of Tuesday, the 31st ult., a general meeting of the Free Trade Association was held at the Public Office, to receive a report from the committee regarding the League Quarter of a Million Fund, and to adopt atten measures relative thereto as might be deemed necessary. There was a protty numerous attendance.

About seven o'clock, Mr. Alderman Geach was called to the chair, who, in stating the object of the meeting, said that although Birmingham did not occupy so favourable a position with regard to wealth as Manchester or Liverpool, yet he hoped the town would not be dishonoured by the amount of subscriptions it would send to the fund. Taking into account its offcumstances, and considering the differ ence in its capital from those towns he had mentioned, he had little doubt but the liberality of the friends of the cause would be such as to do Birmingham all honour. The report of the committee would now be read, and the minutes of a former meeting relative to the subject, which would; ut them in possession of the proceedings of the assectation in

The secretary, Mr. Cliprond, then read the minutes and the report, which will be found in our advertising columns. After reading the report, Mr. Clifford said he might, perhaps, be excused making a few observations. He had heard it generally asked, and by parties, too, from whom they might not have expected it—"Why, what are we to sal-scribe for? The work is done; Sir Robert Peel has done it for you; and if you will but allow him time, will com-Now in answer to that, they had but to point to the opposition Bir Robert's measures bud met with; the battling he had to do to carry them, in order to show that he required, not only support in the House of Commons, but backing up out of doors. Not only so, but when they saw fallacies, which had been exposed and put to flight over and over again, repeated with all the pertinacity of new matter. and heard the leading men of the protectionists say that the period of three years, which had been fixed upon as the time the Corn Laws should be wholly repealed, was adopted but to allow them any chance the chapter of accidents might turn up, in order to nullify that decision-when they saw all this, did it become them to slacken in their exertions? Would it be proper for them to cease their work while the matter remained in doubt? On the contrary, their best efforts were yet required in the cause : they were not asked for without reason; and they had a guarantee that these exertions would not be called for, or continued a moment longer than was necessary, in the fact that Messes. Cobden and Bright, who had given their talents, their money, time, and even health to the cause, and who now considered a renewal of their exertions expedient, would not have done so, unless they felt convinced of its propriety. Then, again, they had the same statements and fallacies to contend against at that moment as they had at the very first. And one, which appeared very material, and frightened many, was the assertion that other nations would not follow the example of England in abolishing restrictions; but already, even in the present most imperfect state of our commercial policy, they saw that assertion refuted by the utmost gratification that had been felt in other countries at the mere announcement of a Free Trade by England; and already, to a certain extent, had France, America, Naples, and Germany, given assent to the principle of that measure. Why, if they did so now, while the plan was in its infancy, he did not think, when in all its details it was perfect, and the abolition of restriction complete, they need fear that other nations would not consult their interests by following the culightened and honest policy of England (applause). They had heard a great deal also about competition; the fears of it had been great throughout the country, and considerable in Birmingham; but since the enunciation of Sir Robert Peel's policy it had been very much on the decrease. Take, for instance, German goods—more particularly the article of In one case he was acquainted with a manufacturer, who informed him that he had been afraid of competition; but he saw some of the articles, took them to bits, examined them, and found that they were constructed on a principle at once chenper and as good as those made in England. What was the result? Why, he altered his mode of manufacture, and can now turn out an article cheaper and better than could be imported, and is regardless of competition from any quarter. In his words, "they had much to learn, but nothing to fear, from competition" (applause). With the tulent, the skill, and the capital of England—with the many resources the country possessed within itself—it would be indeed surprising if they should feel afraid of rivalry from any quarter; on the contrary, it would have the effect of stimulating renowed exertion of opening up new fields for British skill, capital, and enterprise, and would be followed by advantages lasting and important (renewed applause). There was only one other point to which he would allude. Birmingham was late in the field in bestirring itself in aid of the cause (hear, hear). True, other towns were exerting themselves before Sir R. Peel brought his measures. into Parliament; but although these measures were carried, their obligations to assist in the work were by no means cancelled. It was never too late to do well; and he trusted that Birmingham would stand as well amongst the list of subscribers to the fund as they wished it, and would occupy such a position as would do it honour.

Mr. George Smith then moved the following reso-

"That the report of the committee be received and adopted "That the report of the committee be received and acopted, and that the committee be requested to take the earliest opportunity of completing a subscription list in aid of the Quarter of a Million Fund, and thus teally the warm interest taken by the inhabitants of this borough and its neighbourhood in the success of the measures brought forward by her Majesty's Ministers in Parliament for the repeal of the Corn and Provision Laws, and in support of the principles of Free Trade."

Mr. THOMAS CAMMON seconded the motions: The Chairman, after explaining the conditions of a cube scription as detailed in the report, read a list of subscriptions amounting to upwards of £2,000. The reading of the list was received with loud obsers.

was received with loud oheers.

The Chairman, in continuation, said that many other persons had expressed their intention to subscribe, but had not determined how much they would give. They had oare tainly done well; but a great deal more remained at 40 and to accomplish it every man should act as if culidepended on his individual exertions. In fact it was only had his that any great work was done. If this had not been the came the public mind would never have been enlightened, nor the antiquated hillspice of many years awept away; and if that not been this, chusation had never dawned upon the country, information as to all the great questions that incountry, information as to all the great questions that incountry.

terestits well being had never been given, nor would that liberal and comprehensive scheme of commercial policy of Bir Robert Peel been proposed (applause). He would not join in a detraction of the Premier, because he had shown a degree of moral courage in bringing forward this measure that commanded admiration. He had come formeasure that commanded admiration. He had come forward and acknowledged his errors; he had boldly separated from the factions of his party, he had placed in jeopardy even his political power; and had indeed temporarily lost it—all to carry out that measure, for the consummation of which they all heartly longed. He had done all this, and surely he deserved their praise and their thanks (hear, and applause). Mr. Clifford had partly anticipated him in what he intended to say; but he would counsel them to be ware of fancying that the work had been accomplished. But even supposing that it find, would it be right, he would ask, would it be fair or honest, to allow the men of Liverpool, and Manchester, and Leeds, to bear the burden—the time. and Manchester, and Leeds, to bear the burden-the time, the trouble, and the expense-and then sit down and say, why, what more is there to do-the work is done ? (No, no) He knew Birmingham better than to suppose they would. The had met with one singular exception, however; Le had met with one man who held that it was fair to take advantage of the exertions of their neighbours, and to refuse to assist. He was glad there was only one in this mind —he wished there had been none (applause). As had been observed by Mr. Clifford, they had a great guarantee that their exertions were necessary; but there was also the expectation that this money would not be required. Of this let them rest assured, that unless a necessity existed the League would not survive a single hour. In his opinion, however, that time had not come : circumstances had placed them in a position where energetic exertion was made more imperative than ever, in order to maintain that recognition of free Trule principles which Sir Robert Peel's scheme so liberally manifested. It would be impolitic, in the highest visgree impolitic, to allow the advantage they had gained to he lost by supineness; and that advantage could only be considered seems after the general election, which could not be far distant. It was not by any means improbable that the Lords, in their wisdom, might throw out the measure, rendering an appeal to the country necessary; but supposing that it was carried, every possible effort would be made by the protectionists to obtain a majority at a general election; and if in this they did succeed, it would not be autonishing if they attempted to cancel the measure of Sir Robert Peel, and again adopt protection. It was at the coming election that the grand struggle would take place: it was there that the Free Traders would meet fallacy and misstatement by honesty and truth—and there it was that the contest must be decided which should show the protectionists the hopelessness of their opposition (cheers). It was an eternal disgrace to Birmingham to be represented, or rather misrepresented, as it now wer ("hear," and renewed applause). It was dishonourable to them to have one member speaking ngainst the measure and then voting for it, and the other both speaking and voting against it -to have one member continually against them, and the other very little, if any better (loud cheers). One of these hon, gentlemen had been very eloquent on the question of bronze, and all the bronze men of Birmingham were, according to his account, to be runned together. Now what, he would ask, was the great interest which was to be affected by the change? Was it large in numbers? But, even although it were, was it to be supposed that they were to be beaten out of the market by a reduction of five per cent., when, while the duty was almost nominal, it real sed to the revenue in one year 781,—the very handsome sum of 78l. per annum (cheers and laughter)!
He could not say whether the hon, member alluded to bronze or buttons first (laughter, and "Bronze first"). Well, he thought the reply of the Premier might have proved a settler to Mr. Spooner; but no; the hon, gentleman was up again, and at him with but ons (cheers and laughter). Why the button makers were to be ruined too. Now nothing could be more unfounded. There was a large button manufacthree sitting on his right hand (Mr. George Smith). He was not afraid of competition, nor of ruin—he had not had his orders cancelled, his workmen discharged; nor had he shut up his manufactory. He knew he had nothing to fear, and courted competition (applause). But the honourable member projected instances of German buttons, and told the house, "Here are buttons from Germany, which will put the Birmingham makers out of the market." Now every one knew that the price of buttons was simply a question of fashion; that when first brought out they fotched a high price, and that their market value varied with the feshion, price, and that their market value varied with the ipshion, although intrinsically it remained always the same—so that the German buttons might be as good as those of Birmingham, and they might also be cheaper, merely because they were not fashionable. As for the Birmingham, manufacturers being beater out of the market, the statement was absurd, and the honourable member ought to have known so when he made it (applause). Were they content to allow much a state of menters to man? Were they content to allow such a state of matters to go on? Were they by petty differences among themselves to continue to be misrepresented (No, and applause)? The electors were disgusted, and he did not wonder at it, for when a Birmingham man mixed with the Free Traders of other towns, he felt very much inwith the Free Traders of other towns, he felt very much in-clined to hide his head, when he heard the invariable excla-mation, "Why, what a pretty pair of members Birmingham has got" (laughter and cheers)! In the prospect of another election, let them not be unprepared—let them ascertain the men who had the greatest amount of electoral support—and let these men be elected. Let them sink the more patry distinctions of party and party feeling; and let overything be subservious to this; and then, after they had attained their bulservient to this; and then, after they had attained their object, they might again revort to Whig and Tory, or to anything also they might please. It was these petty feelings that at the last election placed them in the position they now occupied; it was these feelings that gave the protectionists a chance, which otherwise they might never have been to They flattered Mr. Sturge—(laughter)—that he he had no the people, and the result was the present did forces that he had been to be the head of the people, and the result was the present would be greatest to have the greatest auffrages, he would be glad to support to have, however, that this Mr. Sturge did not postate the first secure the return of Free Trade representations of the times, and the condition of the country of the figure of the times, and the condition of the country of the Rev. Guenou Dawson said he would only sak one into a chance, which otherwise they might never have

The Ray, Out one Dawson said he would only sak one question—whether, even admitting that the interests of buttons and brouze were affected, this at all affected the principle of Free Trade? It was impossible that any great measure amosting the whole commercial policy of the country could be carried without injuring the interests of some classes; but where the great end was to confer general benefit, this must be borne. He perfectly agreed with all that had been said regarding the members for Birmingham—more especially with what had been said of one of them. It was really pitiable to see that honourable gentleman get up, on any question, to advocate obstruction, and repeat in eilly, childish, and factious talk, his bigoted opinions and antiquated fallsoies, recommendatory of hindrance to overy great question of advancement-(cheers)-hindrance not only to a supply of food, but obstruction to religiou—as he manifested on the late proposition of relief to the Roman Catholics of Ireland (loud cheers). He hoped they would hear no more from the honourable member about bronze or buttons; his statements were ridiculous, and known to be so by every manufacturer in Birmingham. He would thank the scoretary to put down his name for £5 (cheers).

Mr. CLIFFORD said it might, perhaps, be as well to mention the mode they intended to pursue in collecting the subscriptions. Now since they had got it started, they intended to send a circular to all the parties in the town and neighbourhood whom they thought likely/to subscribe, enclosing a form to be filled up with the sum subscribed; and to save all trouble, this form would be ready directed to the treasurer, so that they had nothing to do but put it in the post-office. This mode they considered preferable to a personal canvass, as it would enable them to reach every one, and to know exactly when the subscription was complete.

Mr. EDWARD COWPER said, perhaps he might be allowed to state what had taken place in Mesers. Fox, Henderson, and Co.'s works, at Smethwick; and it was cheering, because the movement among the men had been quite spontaneous. About a week or two ago, one of the working foremen inti-mated his intention of subscribing to the fund, and put down his more for several pounds; his example was followed by the other workmen; and in three days they had collected the handsome sum of £22 (loud cheers).

The Rev. R. MELSON remarked that he had seen in the papers a proposition to request Sir Robert Peel to stand for Birmingham. They might ask Sir Robert; he (Mr. M.) felt certain he would be well supported.

The CHAIRMAN said he was afraid Sir Robert would not come amongst them.

Mr. THOMAS MACKAY said it would certainly be a pity if Birmingham required to go a begging for men to represent it—good and honest men, too. He might mention that on a recent occasion he went to Mr. Spooner in London, regarding the Friendly Societies Benefit Bill, which was at present pending in the House of Commons. "Well," said Mr. Spooner, "what do you think of matters now?—that measure of Sir Robert's will be the ruin of you all. Not only will it be the destruction of the button and bronze manufacs, but it will rain the boot and shoemakers as wel (Mr. Mackay) told him we were of a different opinion; that I was acquainted with several manufacturers who had now more orders than ever, and feared no competition. "Ah, it will ruin—it will destroy you," said Mr. Spooner. "At all will ruin—it will destroy you, said Air. Spooler. At all events, Sir Robert has lost my confidence (great laughter). I can never trust him more" (renewed laughter). After a few general remarks, Mr. Mackay continued: But I almost omitted to tell you one little incident. My frieud, Mr. Sansum, who was along with me, addressing Mr. Spooner, said: "I am a very plain and blunt man, and you'll excuse me speaking my mind. Well, Mr. Spooner, to tell you the truth, I neither like your acting, nor Mr Muntz's speaking—there's confidence to be placed in neither" (great laughter

The resolution was then put to the meeting, and carried unanimously.

A vote of thanks was afterwards given to Mr. Alderman

Grach for his conduct in the chair; which having been suitably acknowledged, the meeting broke up. In the course of the evening several gentlemen contributed liberally to the fund, and at the close the amount of subscriptions was announced to be £2000.

The following is a list of the subscribers' names, and the sums announced.

	£	8.		£	8.
Henry Smith	200	0	John Webster	25	0
Thomas Phillips	100	0		25	. 0
Lash, Scholofield & So	na250	0	Samuel Messonger	25	0
Joseph Gillott John Wright Timothy Smith & Son	250			25	0
John Wright	125	0		25	0
Timothy Smith & Son	5 200	0	Robert Fletcher	25	0
John Betts Charles Clifford	3~100	0	Joseph Collins William Hayward	2.5	0
Charles Clifford	100	0	William Hayward	25
Charles Geach	100	0	John Blakeway	25	C
Harrold and Sous	100	U		20
Harrold and Sons Samuel Beale Thomas Whitfield	100	0	i E. W. Fr▼	, 20
Thomas Whitfield	100	O		. 10	0
William Nuttor	50	0	Thomas Wright	, 10
F. and C. Osler	გე	0		- 10
John Lord and Co.	50			. 10
Blyth and Graham	100	0 /		. 10
Neustadt and Barnett		O	Rov. R. Melson	. 10	(
Thomas Eyro Lee		ο	Thomas Walker	. 10	10
William Wills		0	F. & W. Southall (Don.)	. 5	(
W. J. Benlo	50
B. A. Goddard	60	0	A Friend, per J. Haywar	d 5	(
l Smith and Kemp	50	Ŭ	A Friend, per J. Haywar George Dawson, M.A. Edward Cowper	, 5	(
Goorge Smith	50	Ü	Edward Cowper	. 10	(
T. H. Ryland	30	Ü	Loach and Clark .	, 15	• (
1		-

ANTICIPATING FREE TRADE.—On Saturday, the 20th ult., a fine 6(x) ton iron ship was launched from the building yard of Messrs. James Hodgson and Co., Liverpool. She is the first of a line of eight, to ply betwixt Liverpool and Rio de Janeiro, touching at Pernambuco and Bihao, South America. She will be fitted with the screw propeller, and a pair of 50 horse power engines as auxiliary steam power. She will be heavily rigged as a ship; her length on the load water line is 170 feet, 20 feet beam, and 17 feet deep. The christening was performed by Mr. Samuel Johnson, of Pernambuco, who gave her the name of "Antelope," as she glided into her native element, amid the assembled multitude. A splendid entertainment was provided after lunch, at the expense of the owners, and about 375 sat down to dinner, prepared by Mr. Lynn, of the Waterloo Hotel. The vessel is consigned to the able management of Mosers. Me Tiar and Hudfield, the well-known Rio merchants. Her owners are Hudfield, the well-known Rio marchants. Her owners are entirely Free Traders, including some of the standbest, vis. Messrs. Crook, Finch, and Jevans. Mossrs. Hodgson and Oo, have also on hand one 1800 ton steam-vessel, iron, to trade betwixt Liverpool and New York, which will be ready for launching in about eight weeks, and it is expected that this vessel will be called the "Free Trader," although she was to be named the Eagle. They have also just completed an iron steamer, for the River Plate, and have the stocks for others for different destinations.

REGISTRATION APPEALS.

BURRALL v. LUCKETT.

Mr. Wellaby for the Appellant; Mr. Grove for the Respondenti made on the 28th of September, the purposes to which the rate was to be applied being referable to the thirteen weeks preceding the 18th day of December, 18th; therefore, the up. ject of the provision was to provide for the exigencies of the parish for the interval from the 10th of September to the parish for the interval from the 10th of September to the 16th of December. Now the question is, whether it was the rate of the parish for the time being? It appears to me to satisfy all the terms of the Act. The rate, independent of the new rate, was a rate still existing for the same purpose. No doubt if the arrears were due upon it, the parish officers might distrain and justify under the rate, if they justified at all, in the interval when the new rate was made; and, therefore, unless there is a justification under this rate, it would fall or upless there is a justification under this rate, it would fallen the existing rate at the time. I conceive it never was intended in a case of this sort, where the words are general in the beginning of the clause, "every parish in which there shall be a rate for the relief of the poor," that it should be said because the term for which it was intended to provide the relief of the poor," has expired, that therefore the rate has expired. I think the words of the act are satisfied.

Mr. JUSTICE MAULE.—I am of the same opinion. To construe the rate for the time being to exclude the rate in question, I think would be inconsistent with the plain spirit of the 30th section of the Reform Act; and would be inco-sistent with the directions of that section, and what is to be understood by the words there used. That section en-bles a party to be put upon "the rate list for the time being;" and therefore it assumes that there always is a rate for the time being in every parish; and probably at the time of passing the Reform Act, there was no parish in England in which no rate had ever been made. In fact there aways is a rate in every parish; a rate is made, and until another rate exists it is liable to be enforced at the end of its enseence, or at any time. Then, as the section of the act speaks of "the rate for the time being," it excludes the idea of these being two rates at one time as much as it excludes the idea of there being no rate at any time. It is, I think, very also that a very rate of the results of the res plain that a person under this section has always a right to plain that a person under this section has always a right to be put upon some rate, and that rate is the rate last made. It is said here he ought to have demanded to be put, but on the rate made in September, but the last effectually made and published. It is not said he has not a right to call the overseers to put him on the last made rate, but insument as it was another rate, it did not become operative or capable of being enforced till after the demand made. I think such a rate as that is not a rate for the time being and in the second a rate as that is not a rate for the time being, and in the serof the Act of Parliament—consequently the demand was properly made, and the appellant was entitled to succeed.

The rest of the court concurred.

Decision reversed

LUCKETT v. KNOWLES Mr. Grove for the Appellant; Mr. Wellsby for the kespondent. CHIEF-JUSTICE TINDAL .- It appears to me this was a case properly for the amendment of the revising barrisher, and comes within the 40th section; and I conceive he is right in the amendment he has made on the present accasion. That section, so far as the place of abode of the chamants concerned, provides for two cases; first, where there is a total omission of the place of abode; and the second, where it is insufficiently described for the purpose of being complete. In both these cases the barrister is to expunse the name; but if, whilst the revision goes on, evidence is brought to his satisfaction of the proper description of the place of abode, then he is to insert it in the list. In the argument it is admitted that there is the total absence of any place of abode; and it is said the second predicament, namely, the insufficiency of the description for the purpose of being identified, must be limited and confined to a description that affords sufficient particularity; but it will not apply and compared a continuous state. apply and comprehend a case where this description is actuapply and comprehend a case where this description is actually wrong. It seems to me, looking to the object and intention of this power of amendment, the thing may be very safely included within the power given where the place of abode of a party is not sufficiently described for the purpose of being identified. None can say in this particular case, when you find the word Queen in the register, and the purpose place of abode is Queen extract. Recombury, that proper place of abode is Queen-street, B comsbury, that there is a sufficient description on the register for the purpose of identifying the party of the party o pose of identifying the party. I do not see what there is to restrain and narrow the terms of the clause intended to be literal. It seems to me that if the statute intended to compreliend every case of total omission, and every other case in which the description inserted is one by which we could not find the party, this falls within the latter, and therefor I think the decision must be affirmed.

think the decision must be affirmed.
Mr. JUSTICE MAULE.—I think this name was pro retained in the list. The barrister was bound to retain the unless he had some duty to perform under the power given him to expunge the name. Now, the only object of the name being retained was, that the place of abode should not be called the contraction. There be called Queen when, in fact, it was Queen square. There is a list of voters, in which the voter in question appears quite regularly upon the face of it. The barrister is sake to expunge the name, unless there is some reason given for we expunge the name, unless there is some reason given for interest so doing, or some authority given him by the Act. The voter having been objected to; and notice of objection being given, it was necessary for him to prove his qualification. He did so entirely to the satisfaction of the revising larriater. It has been said that the place of abode is a part of the qualification. I do not agree to that. It means the the qualification. I do not agree to that. It means he place of abode at the time he is put upon the list. There is provise that he shall not be not upon the list. place of abode at the time he is put upon the list. There is a proviso that he shall not be registered, unless resistant within a certain distance from the borough for a certain time. It is by no means required to be put down in the Art of Parliament; so that there is no objection at all to the qualification of the voter here, and it does not fall within the histories of section 40; that requires the barrister to expect the name of any person, if the barrister finds he qualifies it is insufficient in law to entitle him to vote the property of the law to be appunded on that proged in no kind of objection to the qualification here; the is. not to be expunsed on that proper is no qualification. It is not because life, qualities in a qualification. It is not because life, qualities in law as stated on the list, because is included. The only power given to xiste index also subsequent part of the which imposes the direction of the list, because it is which imposes the direction of the list, because it is a which imposes the direction of the list, because it is a which imposes the direction of the list. the eith (sin prop

> that their Mild tocre the .

chur bres Ð We .

insufficiently described for the purpose of identification, then the power of expunging does not arise, and he is " on the register," because he is rightly on the register. Those two powers have already been dealt with, and the third power is the only one in question. The objector, in order to bring the voter within that power, must say the place of abode is either wholly omitted, or insufficiently described, for the purpose of identification. If he says it is not an error in fact, he has no power to expunge; if he says it is so, then he "shall expunge it," wherever it exists, tinder the authority given by the powers of the act: that is to say, the power to expunge unless the matter so omitted, or insufficiently described, be supplied to the satisfaction of the revision of the list. Here, undoubtedly, it was so supplied. It seems perfectly clear the revising barrister before he shall have completed the revision of the list. Here, undoubtedly, it was so supplied. It seems perfectly clear the revising barrister had no power to expunge. If then he is to have a conditional power of performing that which was performed, here then power becomes void, and no longer exists. I think it is clearly within that part of the section. It is unnecessary to discuss the question, whether, in the event of the name not being supplied to his satisfaction, he had any other power heyond that which is stated: it is clear there is no power given him to expunge, unless it be qualified by supplying that which was supplied on this occasion.

The rest of the court concurred.

Decision affirmed.

1MPORTANT DEMONSTRATION AGAINST FREE TRADE.

In the Parliamentary proceedings of Friday last we find the following most important announcement:

"Mr. Grogan presented a petition from the chimney sweepers of Dublin against Free Trade."

Undoubtedly the League has got its death blow now, and the new allies whom the Richmonds and Buckinghams have enlisted in their cause will prove as effective in putting the anti-monopolists to the rout as that gallant Irishman, Sir H. Gongh, was in his late triumphant victory over the Sikhs.

—Kilkenny Journal.

THE PROTECTIONISTS .- The Augsburgh Gazette just received says :- " In consequence of the auxiety of the publie for news from the East Indies, the Or gon question is in the meantime almost forgotten. At all events, no one takes it ill of the Ministry except the protectionist organs; for making no answer to the swaggering of the Americans, and continuing to offer its hand for an equitable adjustment. Lord George Bentinck, who is all of a sudden, as if by a magic stroke, transformed into a great statesman, and delivers his judgment, in a single speech, on all points of internal and external policy, upon trade, finance, and national education, spoke very freely last week, in the Bramarbas style, of the destruction of all the American scaports. I assure, you, however, that John Bull infinitely profors buying from his brother Jonathan cotton, corn, salt meat, and cheese to destroying his towns with cannon balls, and if Jonathan has not entirely lost his senses, he will not thwart old Bull in his peaceable humour. The opposition (behind the Treasury benches) contest Peel's plan step by step; and seem to derive fresh courage from Lord Stanley's declaration that he hopes the House of Peers will throw it out; and yet the result of all their divisions on each individual point of the tariff which they thought proper to oppose ought to have rendered them more discreet; for they were not only beaten every time, but on every division the Ministerial majority was larger, and in the sequel the House of Commons adopted the tout ensemble of the tariff without the slightest At this moment all the articles therein included are already either entirely free of duty or admitted at the newly-reduced rates. What, however, they should take still more to heart is the almost total silence of the manufacturers and artisans affected by the alteration; even those orators who at first cried out so loudly had partly withdrawn their complaints against the intended alteration in the timber duties (since adopted), and partly ceased to complain at all. Yes, the prevailing silence of the farmers, and even of the landed proprietors, should serve them as a warning that, as these have attained conviction, it would be better to bring the af fair to a termination at once, than any longer to depend upon an apparent, but, on account of its uncertainty, a useless protection. All this, however, does not restrain the landlords from continuing to struggle. On the 23d ult. Peel proposed the second reading of the Corn Bill, and a long debate susued. The result is known. Unfortunately, the Government finds itself compelled to press forward the new Irish Corn Bill and on this assection to the Corn. Corrion Bill, and on this account the business of the Corn Bill and the tariff must be postponed. There is, moreover, no hope entertained, in spite of all the prayers and complaints of the commercial world, that this affair will be entirely brought to a close before the end of May. What is intended my it is difficult to ascertain, as even amongst the Opposition ranks it appears to be deemed a matter of certainty that a majority is gained in the House of Peers. It suits their purpose, however, to impute to Peel every possible act of treachery in the world; and thus their organs declare, with all the appearance of conviction, that he has already con-certed with the Whigs, Radicals, and Repealers the sacrifice of the church in Ireland and the granting of repeal to O'Connell, as soon as the Corn Law battle has been won; and that consequently every bishop who may vote for the re-leal of the Corn Laws will really vote for the downfall of the church. I fear, however, that this mingling of corn and church will not much avail either the corn producing aristocracy or the aristocratical church established by law. From the very circumstance that the League is constantly accused that its intention is directed beyond corn and simed at the church, the latter might easily be enabled to direct its power against an institution the clergy of which are on all occasions pressed upon it as advorsaries."

DEATH OF CHARLES SQUAREY, Esq., OF SALISDURY.—
We deeply regret to have to announce the death of Charles Squarey, Esq., of Salisbury, who died on Sunday last, in the 36th year of his age. In him the League has lost an enersete and uncompromising advocate of its principles, and socisty a man whose telents and exertions have ever been used

gric and uncompromising advocate of its principles, and socistys man whose talents and exertions have ever been used to advance the intelligence and welfare of his fellow men. Scancity in Issuary.—The price of potatoes in Dülling has now deen to but a stone for good one pand dail for very indifferent ones. This is an advance of as least a hundred per cent, on the prices of last year, and yet the protectionist, per cent, on the prices of last year, and yet the protectionist, when is Dublin have the Benguer and ones, to make this least is no established the benguer of calls highly ward have is no established the button at the prices of the THE CHELTENHAM ANTI-CORN LAW PETITION.

Mr. Barkeley's committee to enquire into the charges of forgery and personation in the signatures to this potition, have brought in a report as under. The facts proved are exactly as we stated them at the time, and the Committee are obliged to own as much in their report. But as there happened to be a majority of Anti-Frod Trade members on the committee, the last sentence was very kindly added as a rider, as a delicate method of letting down easy to the hon, member, who has made himself so conspicuous on the occasion. Here is the report:

That it is the opinion of this comulities that an irregularity in regard to the potition from Cheltenham, as transmitted thence to Manchester, was of a nature which rendered it not capable of being presented to the House of Commons, according to the known forms of the house, that it was altered by agents of the Anti-Corn-Law League at Manchester, who were cognisant of the rules of the house; and in adapting this petition to those rules they acted irregularly, though with no fraudulent intention. It appears to your committee that the first five signstures appended to the petition sheet, as presented to the house, are not in the hand-writing of the persons there named, but are transcribed from genuine signatures which were on another sheet; that this act of transcription, though irregular, is not fraudulent. It further appears that 24 names, purporting to be the signatures of other subscribers to the petition, were written by one and the same person (an elector of Cheltenlam), with the sanction, as he states, of the persons named. In closing their report, your committee think this a fit occasion for expressing their regret that methods of promoting and pre-paring petitions should prevail, which have a tondency to bring into discredit that mode of giving expression to the sentiments of the subjects of the realm."—Cheltenham

CORN FOR EUROPE. -- Several shipments of Indian corn having been made from this country for various ports in Ireland, the impression prevails that on corn the duty has been or will be taken off. The shipments as already stated, are by order of the British Government, for the aid of the poor Irish who are suffering from the injury of the potato crop. Indian corn, however, will be included in the tariffs of the bread stuffs, if it shall be ascertained [that Sir Robert Peel is strong enough in both houses of Parliament to reform the 'orn Laws according to the principle he has laid down, but it is certain that recent experience having shown the utility and economy of our Indian corn, and as it cannot be produced by the corn growing countries of Europe, our west will have the benefit of an extensive sale of this valuable product as every kind of experiment will be made in England to improve the manner of baking it. In other bread stuffs it is possible that grain from the Baltic could be sold as But if we look at the importe tions of our bread stuffs into England during the months of December and January, say in the port of Liverpool alone, we are doing a heavy business even with the Corn Law in force. Of flour there was entered in those months 133,883 bls., 129,052 bushels of wheat, 188,012 bushels of corn, besides barley, peas, beans, &c. It is a doubtful policy for us to tie ourselves up by a commercial arrangement of reciprocal duties in relation to the tariff. We reduce our tariff as a national policy, and England reduces her duties on the Corn Law in conformity with the wishes of the people. The clunge is mutually beneficial, and operating silently to the benefit of both. There is no necessity for treaty stipulations. Independent of the double crop of corn produced in the prairies of the west, we can grow to the north several milions of bushels more than we did in 1845; and we learn that our farmers at the present season are preparing to plant many additional acres of Indian corn.—New York Sun.

The Borough of Wigan.—The following circular from Mr. James Lindsay, dated London, March 24, was delivered to the electors of Wigan on Friday lost:—"Having seen in the Parliamentary proceedings that a petition from two of the electors of Wigan had been presented, on the 17th instant, praying to defend my return, I think it is due to myself and respectful to you to inform you that this course has been taken without my knowledge, and I deeply regret it. Having endeavoured to obtain what information I could, it would appear that it has been prepared by persons wholly unconnected with the town of Wigan: I accordingly sent for the agent employed by the party to defend my seat, and informed him, in the presence of witnesses, that this petition had been prepared, and he had been employed, without any sanction from me, and that noither I nor any one connected with me would be responsible in any way whatever on account of their proceedings; for, having declined to defend my return, I conceived I could not with honour encourage others to defend it for me." It is said that Mr. Ghulstone has signified his readiness to become a candidate, if unopposed.—Liverpool Albion.

The Tariff.—The New Boon to all Nations.—A Dutch paper makes the following statement with respect to the new Peel tariff:—"Groningen, March lithi.—We understand that it is in contemplation to establish a direct communication between this city and London. When the great measure of Sir Robert Peel, the reform of the English tariff, has passed, as in all probability it will, the Upper House, it will have a favourable effect on the price of our productions, and in their exportation, so that a direct communication with England will be of great importance to our provinces. What an influence the general reform of the English tariff will have, it already seen by the Somblergine increase in the price of cattle, in consequence of the reduction of the duties on importation, and the prospect of their ontire abolition in the sequel. When the greater part of our productions find easy admittance into England we shall never have to fear a want of exportation, since all our articles, if the projected reform of the tariff take place, will find a ready market in England; and even many things, which hitherto could not be thought of, may become articles of exportation, when a regular communication by steamboats between this city and London is established."

THE EMPEROR OF CHIMA A FREE TRADER.—A very salutary and effective measure has just been adopted, which promises well for the increase of commerce, and to be otherwise beneficial to the Gapital. Through want of rain, the grain boats from the provinces have been delayed, and the dily as well at the environs have the season been apposed to make suffering. The Emperor has been prevailed upon hanceforth to allow the tribute rise of some provinces to be imported by season to the state in the large of the sardy inland bases. He has also abolished the Corn Laws at Ohilds, and parallely vessely from Rockin and other frowinces to import rice to any amount need of duty.—Pokin Gazelle,

THE COLONIES ARE COMING!

(From the Nonconformist.)
The course of right, like that of the love does not appear to be "running smooth." The protectionists, in one way, or other, have secured delay; the object of which, is to have the polonies into their line of battle.

time to bring up the colonies into their line of battle.

It is therefore time to begin to look after colonies. It has a colony! The colonial question is going to be ineculated upon the corn. The League, for the putting down of Corn Law robbery, is going to be transformed into League for the putting down of colonial robbery, by the act of the enemy.

A colony is a portion of the inhabitants of a country, sent

A colony is a portion of the initialitation of a country, sent but of it to live and labour somewhere else. If Robinson Crusoe had sent his man Friday to grow yams at some distant point, or some island in sight, if such there were, Friday would have been a colony. And the rule for determining whether this colony was worth having, would have been simply whether Friday in his transportation made more and better yams than he would have done by staying at home if on keeping Friday at home and employing him there, more and better yams could be gotten for instance by exchange with the inhabitants of the main land opposite, supposing peace to have been established;—then Friday would be a knave and Robinson a fool, if he carried his point of going forth a colonising. And doubly both, if Friday could be conceived to be of such consummate impudence, as to propose a self-denying ordinance in the shape of a tax on Continental yams, by way of enabling him to keep up the price of his.

If Friday requested to direct attention to the great and important trade which would be carried on with him in his losing colony,—the canoe loads, for instance, of enriously tunned goats' hides, and implements framed with the histo of such tools as his master alone possessed, which might be dropped down to him under charge of a shipwrecked Spannard, for a return eargo of his yams,—his master would tell him he was an ass if he expected this to be done, when yams as good could be got by a less expenditure on the Continentals who were in the market. But civilized men are not asses, when they think they can cheat their follows by an Act of Parliament; because the practicability of the thing is every day demonstrated, and not only that, but the difficulty of hindering it. In legislation,—such are the consequences of the way in which the community at large have hold of the short end of the lever—the nature of things is to do wrong, and to do right or to get it is the difficult exception.

The colonies, then, are on their way. Their trumpeters will be here by the next steamboats, to assure you,—one, that it will engage to find you with dear corn, if you will only pay for it,—and another, that you shall never be without dear sugar, unless by your own fault and obstinacy. The secret in all this to be kept, and which heaven and earth will be moved to hary under a load of words and bluster, being that all and everything in the way of encouragement given to trade and industry by the foolish process, would be given to them somewhere class by the wise one; with the advantage to the consumers, who are everybody, of having something for the difference of price instead of nothing. The history of Jobson and Johnson and Jackson, in the article headed "Feenomical Blunders!" in last week's Noncomformist, is applicable throughout.

This one principle runs through everything. It runs through corn; it runs through colonies; it runs through the apprehended injuries to the working classes from the employment of machinery. In fact, it is the eye-opening principle; and if we can get our eyes open, we shall put down all that can be brought against us.

THE TRIUMPHS OF DAVID HUME, AN A POLITICAL ECONOMIST: - "In no long time, a hundred yours will have clapsed from the day when Hime told the world, what the legislature of this country is now declaring, that national exclusiveness in trade was as foolish as it was wicked; that no nation could profit by stopping the natural flow of commerce between itself and the rest of the world; that commercial restrictions deprive the nations of the earth of ' that free communication and exchange, which the author of the world has intended by giving them soils, climates, and geniuses, so different from each other;' and that, like the healthy circulation of the blood in living bodies, Free Trade is the vital principle by which the nations of the earth are to become united in one harmonious whole. Those who, with a reverential eye, have marked the wonders of the animal structure, and discovered beauty, utility, and harmonious purpose, where presumptuous ignorance has found uselessness or deformity; or have seen the lower animals, each working in its own blind ignorance, gregariously constructing a fabric more perfect, on philosophic principles, than human science can create, have thence drawn vivid pictures of the wisdom and goodness with which the would is ordered. May we not extend this harmony to the social economy of the globe, and say, that the spirit of activity and enterprise, harmonising with the dispersal of the different bounties of Providence in the distant regions of the globe are part of the same harmonious system; the merce and the desire of aggrandisement, which in the eye of a narrow philosophy assume the air of selfish and repulsive passions, represent themselves, when they are left to their legiti-mate course, as motives implanted in us for the great purposes of securing mutual dependence and kind offices, and their fruits, peace, and good-will, throughout the great family of mankind. To be the first to teach that the earth is not doomed to the eternal curse of rivalry and strife, and to open up so wide a prospect of bencheence, may be an atonement for many errors, and in the eye of good taste may justify the brief assumption of completions superiority, in which the subject of this memoir indulged, when he desired that the investigation on his memoir indulged, contain only that the inscription on his monument should contain only his name, with the year of his birth and of his death, leaving it to posterity to add the rest."—J. II. Burton's Life and Correspondence of Hume.

A correspondent, whose case, we fear, is not singular, A correspondent, whose case, we fear, is not singular, says.—"In the process of sowing a field of five acres, I found eight nests of young rabbits, five in each, about eight inches below the surface." This is "stocking" a poor man's possession with a witness. It is equal to 320 animals on 40 acres.—Montrose Review.

acres.—Montrose Review.

If we are to have I'ree Trade, let it be free and unconditional. Open the ports, by all means; but open them to everything. Let the quays be as free for fradic as the Queen's highway; let us grow what we like, consume what we please, and tax us in one round summanishing to each man's means and substance; and then, at all events; these can be no clashing of interests. This is the true principle of Free Trade, carried to its utmost extent; and we recommend it now to the serious consideration of Ministers.—

Blackwood's Magazine,

tirel

valle put chis

ance

mac

mair

be t

and bee

call bra into

Cri

the sme

thic

poo stre

-kn

of l hei

sho

tru

80 thi

		7
	BDEN'S SPEECH in the House of Commons		*Wilson, Walter, Orchard House *Fraser, Robert, Teviot Orescent
Pages.	iday, February 27th, 1818.—Revised. Price One Penny, 18		*Laing, Alex, and Son, Wilton *Wilson, John, Ladylaw *Wilson, George, High-street
NA mone,	NOTIT'S SPERCH in the House of Com- on Tuesday Wight, Feb. 17. Price One Penny. BRUN'S SPEECH in the House of Commons.		*Killot, Hon J. E., Wilton Lodge *Nixon, Wm., Lynnwood
LEADER OF	BHON'S SPEECH in the House of Commons and ay night. Feb 1s Price One Penny as My Rest street, London: J. Gadaby, Nowall's buildings, ligate, Manuferder.		*Kedis and Armstrong, High-street *Turnbuil, Wm. and J.
	WELL COLOR TO COLOR OF THE PARTY OF CA		*Hom, Geo . at Watson's Pactory *Walson, George, and Rop, Buccleu
A VER	Just published, price one Penny, or see per 100, BATIM REPORT OF THE MEETING OF		*Wilson, M. and Sons, Teviot Cresc *Briggs, John, clothier, *Kirk, Churies, Kirkstyle tract form, 12	Upwards of 100,00° copies have been printed		*Turnbull, John, Dyer Crescent *Melrose, James, and Bon
	THADE TRACTS, selected by the Council of		"Turnbull, James, Galalaw "Goodfellow, Alex , Hadebaw
JOHN I	IOPKINB'S NOTIONS of POLITICAL ECO-	·	Pringle, Robert, High street Pringle, Thomas, do
TRADE BY	'Y TRACTS AND SPEECHES ON FREE Bart Ducie. Memors. Villions, Cobden, Bright, Gibson, O'Con-		*Inglis Wm. do *Michie, Robert, O'Connel-street
n. ii, M. Cullag	h, Baines &c le atitched. 12mu.aixe		*Grierson, Adam, High-stroet *Laidlaw, Douglas, do *Armstrong, John, do
CONTRI	BUTIONS TO THE QUARTER OF A	Hawiok, N.B.	*Michie, Andrew, Loan-street *Haddon, Andrew, Howe Gate
	MILLION FUND		*Robson, Ebenezer
Subscri	ptions received during the week ending		*Easton, George, Tower Knowe *Ewen, Henry, Crescent Scott, George
	y, April 8, 1846. As the Subscription List is made up from	,	Irvine, Wm., High-street Wilson, James, writer
Wednesdi	ly to Wednesday, contributions received on		Park, David S Horsburgh, Alex
Thursdays	s and Fridays are not published in the of the Saturday immediately succeeding,		Pengrieve, James but are in	cluded in the list of the week following.		J. G. Blackie, Geo., Tower Knowe Munro, Wm., High street the Chris	regulations of the Post Office require that tian Name of the party to whom Post		Deiner, F. W., Round Close Scott, Thomas, New Road
Office Ord	lors are sent should be given in full, sub- re respectfully requested to procure their		White. Wm Laing, John
Orders in	future for GRORGE WILSON, League	i .	Fiddes, John Brodie, Walter anchester, or Abraham Walter Paulton, street, London		Armiston, John Douglas, John Burnet, Robert
143	£ . d.		Turnbuil, Win. Deans, Francis, High-street and Sons, Manchoster40 0 0 Burley Hall, near Ottley20 0 0		Paton, J. and D.
*A Friend, Bevan, Rei	do 20 0 0		*Archibald, J. and R. *Archibald, Robert, and Sons
 Lloyd, Nath 	nantel, 101, Rumford-street, Manchester 2 0 0 Volfenden, Wakefield-st., Oxford-st., do 1 0 0		*Monteith, Thomas, and Son *Walker, Andrew, and Co. *A Friend post, Tempest street, Ardwick do 1 0 0	·	*Henderson, James *Harrison, W. and P.
	Norris, 35. Choriton street de 1 0 0 ort, Rochdale Road, Bury 1 0 0	Tillicoultry, . N.B.	*Thomson, J. and M. Walker, J. and G.
Stroud.	Clutterbuck, James, Russell-street 1 0 0 Bucking Henry 1 0 0 Hawking Henry 0 10 0		Dawson, Thomas Hunter, George
Billia.	Thomas, Jense 0 5 0 Grimes, J. C., Stonehouse, near 0 5 0		Corgill, John Miller, George
	(*France, Benj., and Sons, Honloy, near 4 0 0 8 Boothroyd, Joseph 4 0 0		Morrison, John Pyle, Wm.
Hudders-	*Whiteley. James, Almondbury, near 2 0 0		Shaw, Alexander Philip, Robert
Aeld.	*Binns, David, Lindley near 1 0 0 *Wormald, Henry, grocor 1 0 0	*Strutt, Edwa	ge, and Co., 119, Wood street rd, M.P., 42, South-street
•	*Whiteley Samuel 0 4 0 Sykes, Thomas, Slaithwaite, near 0 4 0	*Strutt, John. *Strutt, Antho	Derby Day,do
•	Sevill, Mesara, and Wolstenhulme, Lower Moor Iron Works . 10 0 0	*Courtauld, T *Stone and K	aylor, and Co., 2. Caroy-lane, Cheaps emp. 35. Spital-square
į .	*Wild and Whitehead, Pastures, Saddle- worth 10 0 0 *Holden, John, and Brothers, Holden	*1) evan, W. an	s, and Sons, 3. Cripplegate-buildings dT., & Co24, Lawrence-lane, Cheaps and Son, 114, Gough-square, Fleet-str
	Fold, Royton 10 0 0	Mitchell, T. A. *Lee, Messra.	., M.l'. J. & Co , Felling Alkali Works, Gatesh
	*Smethurst, Win., Stock Brook, Chad- derton 6 0 0	*Cash. Wm., 3	orge, Gutchlead Iron Works, do
1 a 1 a 1	*Whittaker, Brothers, Royton	mercial-road	nd Son, New Barge House Wharf, Co I, Lambeth on Association, Eastington, near Stro
	*Radeliffe, Houry, Union-street 4 0 0 *Boutloy, John, Victoria-place, Mumps 4 0 0	Gloucysters	hire, per, W. Clarke' 3, 58, South Audley,street and W. and Co., Shoe-lane
	*Cowper, Wm do 4 0 0 Whitehead, Jerry, Greenseres Moor 2 0 0	Walaon, John.	, 56. Holborn Hill
Oldham.	*Meliodew, Thomas, Moorside, do 2 0 0 *Braddock, Thomas, Bell Mill, do 2 0 0 *Chadwick, Thomas, Royton 2 0 0	*Balfour, Brot	ur, New Bridge-street hers, 71, Groat Winchester-street as, Bordesley-street, Birminghun
	*Niott, James, Edge-lane, do . 1 0 0	*Orcenhow, M	n, Newcastle-on-Tyne rs., Bowness, Westmoreland
	Moor 1 0 0 Ashton, John, Fonloach, do 1 0 0	Phelpa, Josef	na, St. Mary's Cray, Kent di, 44, Patermoster-row
	Oranger, Wm. Croft Bank do 1 0 0 Melior, John, Side of do 1 0 0 Melior, John, Stampston do 1 0 0	*Pole, George	omas, M. D., 109, Pall Mall , 95, High-street, Borough J., Stockwell Groon, Stockwell
• • •	*Holt, Wm., Stampston do 1 0 0 *Rhodes, Thomas, Castla Mill, do 1 0 0 *Fletcher, James, Rhodes Mill, do 1 0 0	*Carter, Richa *Bendall, Rich	rd, 3: Newgate-street pard Smith, Old Kent-road
•	*Riley, Joseph, Market-place 1 0 0	*Levy, Edward *Lambert, Sar	i, 37, Upper Gower-street nuel, 238, Regent-street
	Orcenwood, George, Victoria st., Munips 1 0 0 Mills, John and Thomas, Barnfold 1 0 0 Mills for Union Mills	Moore. Thoma	as, 13, Frederick-place. Goswell road is, 8, Grove-place. Brompton ry, 3, Hamilton-place. New-road
sud oor	Chalwick, Edward 1 0 0	Hulgson, Wm .*Thornely, A.	., Rostrick, Huddersfield W., Wrexham
##	Milnes Jones	*Clark, Mrs., I *Dinmore, Joi	Elizabeth, Lymington, Hants m. Knareshorough //
Hibbert, Pha Greenacres	Richardson, Wm 1 0 0 Richardson, Wm 1 0 0 Whitehead, John 1 0 0	Gleig, George	. »bipowner, Arlycath »l, iron and brays founder, Littleborou
ie in	Trivior, James 1 0 0 Bradley, Wm 1 0 0		rt, 20, High-street, Maidstons et ei	Ormrod, James 1 0 0 Gartaldo, John Bell 1 0 0 Mortimer, John 1 0 0	*Pilkington, T	Promenade, do Dony, London-road, Brighton
Heen Work	Richard 1 0 0 Riley Joseph 1 0 0 Riley Joseph 1 0 0	Devopport	n, 1, Albemarle Cottages, Stoke, n St. Aubyn-street, Devopport
)6 (1)	Rimpson, John 100 Halkyard, John 100	*Johnson, Edv	st. Aubyn-street, Dovopport vin, 25, Blackman-street, Borough 166, Sloane-street, Chelsea
sopie ord I	Dunkorley, Edward 1 0 0 Dawson, George 1 0 0	Henry, John,	33, High-street, Paisley mas, 20, Little Bell Alley, Moorfields
ŧ3	Brooklehurst, Thomas 100 Foarnley, James 100		6, High street, Guildford
The Werkpeople of Messi Sons, Hartford Iron Work	Pollitt, Joseph 1 0 0 Pollitt, Joseph 1 0 0	Fans I ==	TING IN SCOTLAND.—Two or the
F&	Whitiam, Timothy 1 0 0	the vicinity of	Edinburgh have lately been let, or a for them, as would lead to the con
1.00	*Wardrop, Robert, do 1 0 0	farmers consi	der the protection of the Corn Lav
Belth, Ayr-	"Crawford, Hugh, thread manufacturer 1 0 0 Clark, Archibald, drangr	this city to th	ug horse. A small farm within the south, has been let at 04.12s. 6
ahiro.	Meikle, Rov. James 0 10 0 Meikle, Rov. James 0 5 0 Giffen, Adam depar	offered Scot
	Rishmond, George, glaster 0 5 0.	per cent, on t	en recently let at an advance of fro
	Danlop, John, baker 0 8 0 Various small sums 0 6 6	nontientiens of	s, versus Rents.—Notwithstanding I the protectionists, that the propose Garlieston.	(Merchall, Wm.	of the Covern	ment would immediately tend to a such money nviction that ws no better two miles of 6d. per acre have been several large rom 10 to 80 ng the proga vast reduction in the rest of land, there was a farm, within a few miles of Hawick, let last weak at an advance of 25 per cent, The former rent was 41000.—Border Watch.

A HISTORY FOR HOLIDAY CHILDREN OF ALL GROWTHS.

BY REUBEN.

The robber G— L—,.

How he got up when Buonaparte fell;
How, with the great lords, he in London did dwell;
How he lies now in a murderer's cell.
Let us all read the life of the robber C— L—,

Which is an authentic history of a great murderer and robby one C. L., sentenced to death by order of her Sovereign Najesty the Queen. Written for the Newgate Calendar, and printed by permission here.

IN TWO PARTS .- PART THE FIRST. CHAPTER I .- Of the place of his birth; of his parents of his education; of his teachers; of his cutchim; of the consolution of its precepts in the condemnel cell.

L- was born in the ancient city of West. minster, in the county of Middlesex, Anno Domini, one thousand eight hundred and fifteen. His parents were travelling tinkers, remaining-neither long in London nor long in the country, but shifting from one to the other, as they felt a desire to do tinkering work in town or a desire to travel out of town.

At the time of C- L-'s birth, they occupied an old house in a low part of Westminster, close to the river side and near the foot of Westminster-bridge. which has since been burned down. They are now living in a temporary place of shelter, and have been so housed, when they are not travelling in the country, for the last ten or eleven years. Whether this is he. cause nobody will give them a house, their characters being damaged by their loose habits of life, or whether it be that they are looked upon as chargeable with the crimes of their children, or that they, used to a migratory life, as all tinkers are, care not for a settled habitation, we cannot say. All we know is, that since their old house was burned down, eleven and a half years ago, they have not been otherwise sheltered than in a temporary shed or outhouse. And in this metropolis, there is always a strong disposition to question the respectability and honesty of people who lodge themselves in sheds or outhouses, or under waggons in the streets, or on door steps, or in the dry arches of the bridges, or among the baskets of Covent Garden market, or under the scaffoldings of new buildings, or in the churchyards among the tombstones, or in St. James's Park under the trees, or who walk the streets without rest, complaining to all who will listen, that they once had a house of their own, but have none now.

Both the statute law and common law of the country pronounces such unhappy people to be vagrants; or, as they are sometimes called, rogues and vagabonds.

Such have been, and, as we are informed, such are, the unhappy parents of the notorious malefactor C-L--, now under sentence of death in her Majesty's gaol of Newgate; some of the events of whose lifethe extraordinary trial of whom at the Old Bailey-the unparalleled efforts of whose relations and associates, in attempting to secure his escape, we are now about to

Of the education of C---, save the training of him in practices of dishonesty, we know little. It is said he received some early lessons from one Robinson -Mr. Prosperity Robinson, we think, is the name the neighbours gave this teacher when we made our inquiries-and he was also at the school of one Castlereagh, an Irishman, living in Westminster; of this, we have not ascertained many particulars It is certain, however, that one Perronet Thompson, seeing the evil courses of the boy when in his very childhood, endeavoured to reclaim him by teaching him the catechism: but the parents, who did not desire to see the child bred up honestly, thwarted this good work, and no result was effected; at least, not then. But it is so far satisfactory to know, that since the criminal has been condemned and left to the solitude of his cell and his own conscience, and after all the petitions to save him from axecution have been answered by the Right Honoarable Sir James Graham, Secretary of State for the Home Department, that a reprieve cannot be granted—that he must expiate his crimes upon the scaffold; it is, we say, satisfactory to know that in the gloom of the condemned cell, in the hours of his repentance, he confesses to having retained in his memory, throughout his career of crime, some of the early impressions made on him by the excellent teacher of the catechism; and though in the seeming prosperity of his guilty course, those impressions lived within him as thorns that could not be plucked out, he feels them now in the pained conscience as balm upon his wounds.

It is said that some of his more hardened associates in vice, who have been working to effect his see pa those who attempted his rescue when before the inegrthose who attempted his rescue when here got applied het trates, and again at his trial, who have got applied her tions in his favour, and who is is supposed will see a desperate effort, though it must be mis vallet to the satisfaction the mailting to the satisfaction of the satisfact these persons more than the rumours that he has repented—that he will not, as Lord G. B., one of his old companions, calls it, "die game"—and that in his hours of sorrow and repentance he confesses never to have entirely forgot his catechism, and that he draws consolation from its precepts now, when passing through the valley of the shadow of death. They say if he would put a bold face on it, and keep up his heart, and make no confessions to the governor of the gaol and the chaplain, as it is rumoured he has done, nor read the catechism or any of the books given him, to help his repentance and to case his mind, but be ready to jump from the scaffold into their arms when he is brought out for execution—as he was expected to leap out of the dock at the Old Bailey when they gave the signal-they would still save him. But they think if he has really made a confession, and has seriously betaken himself to the precepts of the catechism which the gentleman named Thompson taught him in his youth, there will be no hope of his escape from the hands of the executioner. They say that in that case it will be "all up' with him, and perhaps with some of them, for they dread his making a confession, lest in the last dying speech and declaration which will be published, he should peach upon them, and divulge to the world how they have been sharers in his guilt.

We shall now give a few particulars of his career at its different stages.

CHAPTER II.—Of Peter Street, Westminster; of his being called a soldier's bustard; of the boys of that day; of the old man with the breeches pocket; of the shoemaker; of the soldiers; of the cupboards.

One day, when he was still a child, his father and mother were going through Peter-street, Westminster, calling, " Pots and kettles to mend !-old iron or brass to sell !" He was trudging after them, peeping into shop windows, and into houses that had their doors open, and standing behind corners, snatching the bread and butter from the hands of solitary children, when m e boys who knew him called out, "There goes the young thief!" And they kept at him, calling to every me to look and see the thief. Says one noisy boy-his name was Gale Jones-" Who sneaks down the areas?" Cries another, whose name was Wooller, "Who robs the cupboard?" And then a tall farmer's boy, in a smockfrock-for even the country-people knew him by this time; his name was Hunt-he happened to be going along Peter-street at the time, answered, "Why, no one, but that there tinker's brat as robs the henroosts down with we in Hampshire, -that be the thief of the cupboards, that tinker's son." At which a poor man, who kept an apple-stall at the corner of the street-his name was Alexander Baring-said, " I know he is a thief; not that I can say anything about cupboards or henroosts being robbed, but he has been at my breeches pocket, where he saw me put a couple of ha'pence, that I took for a pennorth of apples. I know them tinkers have brought him here to rob my breeches pocket; it is me that he has come to rob; my apple-stall and my breeches-pocket. We must, all of us, help to have him sent out of Westminster. He will not leave a ha'penny in my breeches pocket."

Hearing which noises, the tinker turned round, and asked what the boys and the old man meant by abusing his son. Says a shoemaker, who put his head out of window, one Thomas Williams, "He is your wife's son, old fellow, and you may be stepfather. I dare say you are; but, blow me if I'd call him son, if my wife had been among the soldiers, as yours has been." Whereat the tinker's wife was in a most violent passion. She called the shoemaker many bad names, and denied what he said. But he stuck to it stoutly, that he had seen her in Palace-yard with the soldiers, and carrying on an abhorrent dalliance with them in the very streets, and at the doors of the Houses of Rarliament. And the shoemaker appealed to his neighbours if this was not true; and they said it was true, and that the old tinker was a cuckold, and did not know it. And the tinker was so enraged that they should call him a cuckold, and say that his son, C____ L___, of whom he was fonder than of any other of his children, was begotten of the soldiers, that he threw down the pots and kettles which he had collected to mend, and trampled on them, crushed them, kicked them, tore them in picces, and threw the pieces at the head of the shoemaker, and cut it open, and swore that he would have the life of some one, if they called his darling son, C. L., a thief and a soldier's bastard.

And while he was thus breaking the pots and kettles that he had gathered together to mend, and was fighting with the shounaker and his neighbours, his wife, still danying that she had ever been undily intimate with the soldiers, returned, after a brief absence, with some tall guardeman at her back pandigiving them the word to begin, they began, initial dup the places of broken to begin, they began, initial dup the places of broken to begin, they began, initial dup the places of broken.

mend, and gave those same people a terrible thrashing, wounding and disabling them with pieces of their own pots and kettles. Some of the people called to the tinkers to be off altogether; that they were all dishonest alike, themselves as well as their children; that the calling of pots and kettles to mend was only a pretence to get into people's houses to steal ; that they mended one hole in a kettle and made another that they might have more jobs to do, and more chances of getting into private houses to steal The people bade them to go about their business, and they would mend their own pots and kettles when they needed mending. But the tinkers had the soldiers at their backs; and more soldiers came to help those who came at first, and the upshot of it all was, that some of the people were slain, and some wounded, and some sent to prison. But even this was not all their punishment. While the conflict was going on, and all were out of doors, or looking out of doors, the insidious young thief, C- L-, about whom they had all been quarrelling, was sneaking from house to house, plundering every cupboard that had an catable thing in it; slinking off with loaves of bread; dipping his hands into sugar basons, and cating the sugar; his fingers into pots of butter, and eating the butter; or into basons of lard and dripping, which, if he could not eat, he carried away to those who had trained him to steal-to his dishonest parents, who liked nothing better than a row in the streets, such as this was, covering, as it did, some new attempt of theirs to live at the expense of others. While the people and the soldiers were thus rioting, C- L- and his parents were thus employed. This happened when he was little more than four years of age.

CHAPTER III.—Of his travels in the country; of his parents and the farmers; of the agres with more heads than one; of his protecting the farmers from the agres; of his being suspected; of his acquittal.

Soon after this, the tinkers betook themselves to the country, where, meeting with some of their migratory associates, they held a merry time of it in the woods and green lanes; a merry time, however, at the expense of the farmers.

What with sheepfolds, hen-roosts, potato-fields, rickvards, barns with corn in them, mills with flour in them, stves with hogs in them, and sows with little pigs, hares and rabbits with skins on their backs, the skins being saleable; fields with cows in them, the cows willing to be milked in the dark; dairies with butter and cheese in them, the dairy-maids willing to have their fortunes told ;-what with all those advantages for themselves, besides provender for their asses, on whose backs the pot and kettle implements were carried, and keep and scope for their dogs, they did very little tinkering work in the country. There they were chiefly engaged in fortune-telling among the farmers; and were it not that we have the clearest and most ample evidence of the facts of the delusions practised by the tinker fraternity and their imp of all mischief, C---, we could not believe that the farmers, farmers' sons, farmers' daughters, and farmers' wives of England could have been so credulous and pliant to imposition.

The tinkers would go to a farmhouse, and say, "You know we mended allyour pots, pans, kettles, and everything else of yours that wanted mending last year and this year, and we will do so again, and we never charge anything: we make the farmers, with whom we are always good friends, a present of our tinker work. But we have heard that you have lately had some losses in your flocks, and also in your corn fields; we will, if you choose, by the use of some secrets we possess, discover the thieves for you."

At this the farmer would be overjoyed, and would begin, and at great length relate all his troubles, past and present, and his fears or hopes for the future. Hearing which, the tinkers would take him by the fingers, look at the palm of his hand, bid him put a piece of money in their hands, and they would tell him his fortune, in addition to telling him who had stolen a sheep, or a sack of corn, or anything else he had lost.

And though almost all the farmers were pleased to think they got their tinkering work done for nothing by their good friends the tinkers, and though they would have been very slow to pay money directly and openly for tinkering, they parted with their money freely to have their fortunes told, or to have the mystery of the key and the book performed for the discovery of thieves. It mattered not that the real thieves were never pointed out; they always believed what the tinkers told them.

This is partly to be explained on natural principles. There was a farmer in Hampshire, who, when they offered to tell his fortune, smiled and shook his head, and said he would not like to entrust them with his fortune, not even to tell what it was to be. And on shoother occasion, when they offered to discover, either by the book and key, or by some mystical herts which we will be the containty informed which), who the thieves were who had been at his corn which stood in sacks in the barn, he spake scornfully, and told them there was no need for him to employ them to tell who robbed his barn,—he knew as well as they did; and they knew well enough to be able to tell without either book or key, or mystic herbs, or any of their incantations. And he went on, and at last called them impostors; and when they became angry at that appellation, he called them worse; he said they were the robbers of his barn themselves, and he could prove it.

At which they sneaked away, threatening him for saying these words, and only looking back to shake their clenched hands at him, and grind their clenched teeth. In six months that farmer was sold up, and turned out of his farm.

There was another in Wiltshire, who expressed his disbelief in their incantations and fortune-telling. When he had done so, he made a boast of it to his neighbours, and said he had served the tinkers right. But all his neighbours were grieved to hear what he had said. They shook their heads, and looked sorrowful, and told him that something evil would most certainly happen to him

And what they said to him was true. In less than a year he had to quit that farm. He was not sold up; he left it with some wealth. But the tinkers, who were always moving from place to place, spread such evil reports of him being a bad farmer, and a bad man, that he could not get another farm anywhere. He and his family were at last beggared, and some of them had to go into the workhouse, whilst he himself became a pauper, breaking stones on the parish roads for parish nay.

And so it was in nearly every case where any farmer doubted the honesty or the efficacy of the incantations of the tinkers. This being seen throughout the country, the people in general, and the farmers in particular, believed that there must be a spirit of prophecy, or a kind of second sight, allied with the trade of mending pots, kettles, and pans, and of dealing in old brass and iron and tin.

Thus they not only submitted to the rules and propositions of the travelling fraternity, but they sought the youthful C--- and his parents, and eagerly crossed their hands with money to set them to befriend them, to make each of their owes have three lambs, their corn have double ears, and their eggs two yolks; or to have it told them again and again that the robbers of their barns were not men, but terrible ogres with two heads, and some with three heads, who lived on human flesh, far away by the hills of Derbyshire; and that they came in all kinds of mysterious shapes, and stole the corn from their barns, and the butter and bacon from the pantries, and the lambs from the sheepfolds, and the eggs from the hen's nests, and the little sucking pigs from their mother sows all to feed little children upon and grown-up people, to make them fat, that they, the ogres with two heads and three heads, dwelling beyond the hills of Derbyshire, might eat them and grow fat themselves.

Now, though the farmers never caught one of those ogres at their barns, they believed they came there; though they had never seen one anywhere, they believed that they existed, for the tinkers told them, and they always believed the tinkers. Accordingly, C--- L--being highly respected for his power of seeing in the dark, and of seeing ogres with two heads and threa heads, when nobody else could see them; and of frightening them away, no mater in what variety of shapes they might come to the farm-yard, he was looked upon as the hope and protection of the farmers; and was admitted into the homes of every one of them, and treated to the best which the farm-houses could afford, and more at times than they could afford. Every morning he came out of the dark places where he spent the night, and told of the things with two heads and three heads which he had seen; and how he had driven them away; and how they would have devoured every living thing on the farm, the farm itself, the farmer also, and his wife and children, and even the farm labourers and their wives and children, and would have picked the flesh from the bones of the very leanest of the labourers, and the very fattest of the farmers without reserve, had not he, C-L-, been present in the dark to protect thom.

Still the losses of the farmers continued, and increased in amount and in frequency of occurrence, until C.—. was not so popular with them as he had been. Accusations against him began to be made, and he was at last taken before the magistrates and examined. This was when he was only in his seventh year, in 1822. But the charges against him were not listened to. The tinkers said, "If accusations are admitted against him, accusations against us will follow; we must speak and act, for our own sake, in his defence." And they did so, and persuaded all the farmers who had been robbed to speak well of him, and to lay the blame of their losses.

busit

litio

Edg

of tl

ing

tant

hav

Fre

the

and

the anc tha

the

on the ogres with two beads and three heads, who lived far away beyond the hills of Derbyshire. So zenious were the tinkers to get the farmers to speak well of him, and with such high praise, that he was not only acquitted, but his supposed good services sought after more eagerly than ever, while his popularity increased so grently as to gain admittance for him/into the highest society. Even earls, and dukes, and countesses, and duchesses, and the very king himself, sought the friendship of the wonderful boy with the second sight, who could see in the dark, and protect them from the two-headed and three-headed ogres, who came from the north, from the hills and dales over the mountains of Derbyshire.

Charren IV. — Of his friendship with the noble and the rich; of his late evenings; of his early mornings; of the hand-loom weavers, of their children and their wives; of the murders he committed.

The fortunes of C--- L--- were now in the ascendant. From the meanest pilfering he rose to revel in splendid sin in the company of the noblest and richest of the land. He attended young lords to Oxford and Cambridge, not as a fag, nor to be a student himself, but as a companion, without whose society they said they could not exist. He taught them to perform tricks which we might have supposed were below the dignity of young nobles; but so pleased were they with him, that they almost grieved they were not tricksters themselves. It was here he made the acquaintance of some of those who have adhered to him ever since, and have perilled their own existence to save him. They, in turn, introduced him to the doctors and proctors of the universities, and to the dignitaries of the church, who all believed that he must be an excellent fellow when recommended as he was by young nobles.

We have heard of old Squire Elwes, the miser, sitting all the night in the most splendid saloons of the metropolis, supping with the card-playing nobility on the most costly viands, staking thousands of pounds on the chances of the cards, having a new pack at each deal, and tossing the used ones on the floor, until he was up to the knees in eards. Leaving this society, its splendour, and its recklessness, at an early hour in the morning, if it was Smithfield market day, without having gone home to change his dress, he would go out of town a few miles to meet his cattle coming to market that he might help to drive them through the streets, to save a shilling to an assistant drover I and to watch the salesman at the market that nothing less per head might be taken for them than by dint of a sharp bargain he could obtain. But the paradox in the character of this miser was far outdone by the paradox in the character of our

We have all heard of highwaymen who, when the profession of "your money or your life" was in its palmy days, used to rob the rich without mercy, and give alms without stint to the poor. Our highwayman, however, used to rob the poor without mercy, and give the proceeds without stint to the rich.

At the dawn of day, or an hour before day dawned, he would leave the gorgeous saloons of the west end, where he had spent the night with Lord G—B—, Lord W——L—, and other associates of that exalted order, with eards, dice, wine, women, and all the luxurious accessaries of samptuous sin; he would come out upon the streets charged by them to replenish their purses by the ensuing evening for more gambling and more surfeiting. They needed money, they said; money they must have; and he was the only one that could get it. What did they exalt him into their society for, asked they, when he seemed unwilling to work for them, but that he might use his tricks learned in the thaker trade to supply their wants, and be repaid therefor by the honour of having them to call him friend?

And it must be written, and written truly, that he esteemed it no small honour to be so called. Instead of going to bed in winey sleep, he would keep awake, and come out in the early morning, when the first of the industrious rise from their bods and go forth to work, and the last of the idle go to bed to sleep till mid-day; and he would peep round corners, and follow the marketmen and the basket-women of the markets stealthily; and he would put his hand into the buskets on their heads and take something out, and deposit it out of sight, as the clown in the pantomine does, until he could sell it, or otherwise make money of it. He would watch the corpenter going on the early street to his work, with his basket of tools over his shoulder, his saw beneath one arm, and his broad for broakfast and dinner in a napkin under the other. He would watch where this man went to work, would soo him strip off his cost and fold it, and lay his dinner in the fold. When he was plying his tools, C- L- would lift the cost, carry it to the pawabroker, pawn it, put the money he got on it in his own pocket for his sploudid associates, and the carpenter would have to work hard many a day before he got another coat. He would do the same with the bricklayers, and the labourers of the bricklayers, and the paviours of the streets, and the seavengers, and the milkmen of the early morning; and the same with the women who sit with stalls at the corners of the streets, selling coffee and bread and butter, and water crosses, for early breakfasts.

He would go on the bridges while they were yet unloaded with the din and traffic of the day, and look over upon the barges and wherries and the one or two steamboats which had then for the first time come upon the river, as they lay dosing asleep—the barges loaded as if they would sleep for ever, the steamboats exhauted with their efforts of yesterday - with their puffing and blowing before they got used to their work-and he would see that nothing was astir there save the silent river; and he would go down the stairs to the water's edge, like a spirit that had no sound in it, and would go on board stealthily, and would steal from every one of them, and take what he stole to some receptacle for such things, carrying the money to his masters when he had added it to what he got before, and had put to it what he got after.

When London awoke to business, and the suburbs sent in the bankers and the clerks, the stockbrokers and the merchants, who dwelt there, to the city; when the shops had opened their eyes, and put away their shutters, and looked out for customers; when the Temple, and Lincoln's-inn-fields, and Chancery-lane, and Gray'sinn, and all the places where lawyers creep into when they are sleepy, gave out their lawyers refreshed and wide awake, as holes in an old house give out blackbeetles; when the river turned himself on his bed, and bade the dosing craft bestir itself, and get to work; when the great thoroughfares, which had slept all night with only an occasional sound of wheels upon them, as if they were speaking in their dreams-when they woke, and began to hurl from one to the other the traffic of giants, and shops were filled with customers, and everybody was a human bee, buzzing about and making honey, then C ___ L __ was a wasp buzzing about, too, present everywhere, stealing honey which was not his own, and stinging those who detected him, and essayed to drive him away.

At Mark Lane on Mondays, he was among the corn factors and the farmers, who were not richer of his presence. He would again meet them in the country, and again have his hands crossed with their money to tell them their fortunes, or to discover some thief who had been in their houses or their barns taking money from the secret drawers, or corn from the sacks. Go where he might, no matter whether the farmers were in prosperity or distress, he found them always ready to listen to him, to tell their fortunes and to pay him for so doing.

He would go into the large towns of Lancashire, and to the small towns also; to the towns of every other county, and to the villages and hamlets, and even to the solitary houses, the very poorest of them, and levy contributions. He would creep beneath a weaver's handloom, and when he saw the weaver's toes worn through his old shoes, he would lay hold of the bare toes and pinch them; and he would also make the weaver's limbs ache, and would from beneath the web in the loom pinch the weaver's belly as if a screw were worming its way through him; and while the weaver endured this trouble, but could not tell what was the matter, he would cut away a part of his web, or steal his coat, and sell it, if he had one.

He would go down the narrow streets, where dwelt the weaver population, and go into the poorest of their houses, perhaps because the poorest were defenceless, and would look if he saw children ill of fever, or if they were left alone with nobody to protect them, their mother being out at work to earn money to buy bread for them; he would look into the cupboards and take what bread he found there; and when the children, seeing their bread disappear, screamed, he would lay them down on their meagre bed and pinch them till the flesh came off their bones, and would leave them dead, and would carry away the morest remnants of clothing and furniture to sell it, when they were dead; and would meet the tired mothers at the door, who would try to stop him : but he would lay hold of their skinny arms and twist them. and throw them down, and would take their wages from thon if it was pay day, and would show them their dond children; and when the women grow desperate at the sight of the house stripped bare, and the children duad, and in their desperation tried again to do battle with him, he would throw them on their dead offspring, and would knool on them and crush the life out of their bodies, and commit those most cruel of murders for which he is now condomned and is doomed to suffer.

And when he had left families dead or dying, and had robbed them, and had made money of the deaths and the robberies, he would come into the public streets and put his hands into the baskets of women who were

And when he returned to the society of the tinker and the lords of London with the profits of his spoil, he would tell them how very poor the hand-loom wearen were; that their toes were bare; that they had not a cost to their backs; that their limbs ached; that they had pains in their stomachs, like worms screwing through them; that they lived in narrow streets, in mean house, with fever in them; that the mothers left the children at home, and went to work to get bread for them to eat; that he looked into all the cupboards, and found only a little food in some, and in some none; that where is found any food, he brought part of it away, or if there was very little, he brought it all and turned it into money, and there was the money.

And the lords would almost weep to hear of the misery of the poor weavers, but they would take the money and put it in their pockets, and play with it in the evening, or they would go to horse-races with a, and lay wagers, and lose and win, and return and join their wives and daughters, arrayed in the dresses which part of this money bought for them—the shawls of Cashmere, the satins of Persia, and the orient diamond, glittering like—tike—the tears of weavers' wives.

And in drawing rooms, furnished and adorned with all that is most beautiful and rich found within the compass of the earth's girdle, and shining in brilliancy, as if men had gone beyond the earth for their illumnation, peopled with the loveliest beings of creation, to whose grace and beauty all things minister-the female aristocracy of England, (who, we are compelled to believe could not have known that C- L-, upon whom they smiled so sweetly, and listened to so intently, was the crime-maker we know him to be); but in those drawing rooms, amid those fair forms, fondled and almost caressed to wantonness, C- L- toll the miserable story of the weaver population,-how he had seen ogres with two heads, and those heads living upon their flesh; how he had encountered the ogres and fought with them, and expected some day to be able to kill them. He told this, and the fair beings wept to hear what the ogres had done, and applanded to hear what C ___ intended to do to them.

He would see some wretched needlewoman from whom he had filched before, when she was 18 hours a day at work to complete one of the matchless dresses for which there was no patience to wait, and whom he had reduced from a milliner to a mere shirtmaker, compelling her to make shirts at threehalfpence each, wringing from her the odd halfpenny, turning her out of doors because she could pay no rent. Even this creature of God, broken down in body and soul, he would see sitting in the recesses of the bridge; and he would watch her well, for if she had still one penny left to get bread, he must have a share of that bread or that poony; or if she was, as there was too much reason to fear, at the fatal spot where many earthly miseries have expired, he would watch her, and catch her when wound up to that pitch of endurance where the strings of life must break he would catch her as she was plunging into the river, that he might get a remnant of dead clothes, even from her; and her last ponny if she had one. He would then throw her in, and watch her drowning struggles, to get threepence out of the shilling which the parish pays to those who take dead bodies from the rivof.

and of part the pitter.

A Gasin Law Hand, At the Literate tesies on Monday, two men, named Rollseion, and Hales, were all with being on land in the parish of Evingon, duries a right trips of the purpose of districting the state of the purpose of districting the state of the purpose of districting the state of the purpose of districting the state of the purpose of the purpo

AGRICULTURE.

LANDLORDISM'S FAIR SIDE.

We have frequently referred to the various ways in which Free Trade in corn will improve the business of farming; and, amongst others, to the improvement of the relation between landlord and tenant, which will be the speedy result of the abolition of the Corn Laws. The letter of a noble landed proprietor to his tenants, which has recently attracted some share of public attention, affords the means of illustrating this point. The Earl of Mount Edgecombe has written and published a kind of paternal lecture to his tenants, singularly suggestive of the actual state and future prospects of the farming business, so far as it depends upon the owners

The purport of his lordship's letter is to show his tenants that the maintenance of "protection" is no longer possible, inasmuch as all public mon, of all parties, who have any pretension to statesmanship, have, with more or less willingness, declared for Free Trade; that resistance and impotent rage on the part of farmers and others is altogether useless, and that nothing remains to be done but to make the best of the matter, to leave off invocations to "protection" and reliance on Acts of Parliament, and, by putting their shoulders to the wheel, show that British farmers, with enterprise and capital, can compete as successfully in the world's market as British manufacturers have done. Now this is very sensible advice, which is creditable to his lordship's judgment, as the manner in which he has conveyed that advice does honour to the kindliness of his feelings towards his tenantry. Nevertheless the letter betrays an absence of knowledge of the real wants of farmers, or an indisposition to meet the necessities of the times. Of course the high protectionists fell foul of his lordship. To see clearly that "protection" was doomed, although personally unconvinced that it is detrimental, and still viewing Free Trade with alarm, was a degree of rationality inconceivable to the "protectionist mind." The Morning Post, launched, on three successive days, three leading articles, intended to be savage, against the Earl's backslidings; in which such "dastardly prudence" as that of Lord Mount Edgecombe, was denounced as destructive of the "influence of his order;" and, it was pathetically urged, that if the example should be generally followed, "the ascendancy of the landed interest in the British empire is at an end;" a catastrophe "we (the Post) shall lament as the forerunner of the degradation of

Now it is this "ascendancy of the landed interest," maintained hitherto by means of the "degradation" of the tenant farmers, which has been so prejudicial to agriculture and so mischievous to the community. Why should the "landed interest" have an "ascendancy?" Why ought the semi-foudal relations, which have hitherto subsisted between landlords and tenants for the sole purpose of maintaining that "ascendancy," to be upheld? Now that the subject is being canvassed by the public, the days of that "ascendancy," like those of "protection"—if, in fact, they are not synonymous terms—are numbered. Let us see how the Earl of Mount Edge-combe, apparently one of the best of his class, is prepared to deal with the NEW ERA.

His lordship, after stating that his health will not permit him to meet his tenants, says he cannot refrain from addressing them by letter "at this moment so interesting to the agricultural interest."

He then adds:

"It is not to hold out any hopes that protection to sgriculture can be longer maintained; it is decided that in a few seam the English furmer will have to compete wills the locald world.

"Nor can I so antirely get rid of my former opinions as to be able to declare that we have not great ground for alarm.

"Yet when I see, will very few exceptions, every many who can claim any lills to the character of a Maternali, openly commit himself to directly confirm whichens, and consider that on a question of this kind that of any man of eaknowledged talgot, who list haboured to acceptain the facts upon which it is formed is world the opinion of any manufaction of ordinary man, particularly when his sincerity is proved by his interests being depicted by the his sincerity is proved by the interests being depiction of the proved by the interests being depiction by apperions. I as some the soult till the result is chosen by caperions. I as some the soult till the result is chosen by caperions. I as some the soult till the result is though the characteristics. I as some the soult till the result is though the characteristics.

I shall deem to be liberally just. One thing is, however, certain—all agree that to ward off these dangers we must exert ourselves. We are started in a race against all comers, and was beine the hindermost. In such a race the manufacturers have been signally victorious; and it is well for furners to consider by what means they have succeeded."

That his lordship means to be "liberally just' we doubt not, but he must do somewhat more than the things of which he afterwards speaks, if he intends to let his tenants succeed in the "race against all comers." Although we do not know his lordship's estates, we venture to offer him the following advice. Let him discharge his gamekeepers, and give up the game to his tenants. Let him remove all the hedge-row timber with as little delay as possible; let him onlarge all the inclosures which are less than ten acres, by removing some of the fences; and let him offer overy tenant, who has capital, a lease of his farm for 21 years, without any unnecessary restrictive covenants. If these things be done, and fair arrangements made about draining, where draining is necessary, we will assure his lordship that his tenants will cheerfully pay him his present rents, and put in practice the procepts of improvement contained in his letter. Of these the following is a specimen:

"That success (of manufacturers) is attributable to, not only a steady attention to their business, but also to an unceasing activity of mind. Each improvement in their respective trades is no sooner made public, than it is immediately adopted, antiquated methods are put uside, and every new discovery of science and ingenuity without delay or he station put into practice. Those without the activity, the talents, or the capital necessary to affect such changes, become bankrupts, and their places are supplied by others in the enjoyment of those advantages or rather necessaries."

Tonants have been, his lordship says, protected from such penalties by a sort of feudal benevolence on the part of their landlords:

"Against all but tenants has this last penalty been in force, and why has it not been against them?" Because other influences besides the love of money-making have been allowed to operate. The landlord feels that the tenant is bound to his estate, and he to his tenants, by ties of the heart, rarely, if ever, known to the manufacturer, or by those with whom he is connected. Far he it from me to wish those feelings should cease to exist or to exercise their kindly influence; I deem them to be the best source of the peace, and the happiness, and the strength of the community; and when I am told that we are fated to become the shopkeepers of the world, I deplore the change from the belief that with it must come the diminution of such feelings."

Oh, most tender twaddle! But let his lordship feel quite easy about these "ties of the heart," under the new state of things. "Such feelings," we can assure his lordship, have no existence, except in the imagination of his lordship's class. Tenant farmers are not very sentimental beings, especially when the change his lordship deplores will certainly bring with it a considerable increase of farming profits. That will be a sure balm for the wounded "ties of the heart," snapped by the adoption of business-like habits. Take his lordship's own statement of the chief reason why protection was no longer tenable:

"The misfortune that has tended the most to cripple the efforts of your friends (which, like most so called misfortunes, arises from a great fault) is, that the agricultural labourers have not, and do not, enjoy the comforts they in reward for their services are justly entitled to. Our duly as Christians, to society, and to ourselves, calls upon us, each in our station, to remedy to the utmost of our power that disgraceful evil."

And why are the labourers so badly off? Simply because the land is scarcely half cultivated; and that state of half cultivation is a part of the system of paternal foundalism, that tenure of "ties of the heart," over the possible extinction of which the well meaning peer laments.

Lot it not be supposed that we undervalue a good understanding between persons so closely connected as landlord and tonant, and who really can often materially assist each other; but we desire to see that good understanding based upon a manly, rational, and business-like foundation of independence and mutual respect. This can only be under a system of long leases.

After babbling of "healthful sport on the green," and "gambling in dark manufacturing towns," in a fashion purely aristocratic, his loxdship further observes:

orbearves:

"The power to check the ordained course of events, however, possible axists, the agriquiturists are irected as, and now indeed are termed manufacturers of corn, and to exist must however uppeatable, slope to a great degree the ayelem and submit to the same has as their fellow manufacturers and submit to the same has as their fellow manufacturers.

The orbits of the same has as their fellow manufacturers and the same has a their fellow manufacturers.

The orbits of the same has a their fellow manufacturers are their fellow manufacturers. In the same the same their fellow manufacturers are the same the same their fellow manufacturers. The same and the same and the same and the same and the same are same and the same are same and the same are same and the same and the same are same and the same are same and the same are same and the same are same and the same are same and the same are same are same as the same are same are same as the same are same and the same are same are same are same are same as the same are s provements without delay. To tenants who have succeeded to estates from their ancistors have also frequently descended habits which it is hard to east off. The attempt, however, now MUST DE MADE."

The emphasis on the three last words is his lordship's. And in the next sentence, something in the relation of landlord and tenant less tender than "ties of the heart" peops out. He says:

"Landlords are on their part bound to take every means in their power to make their tenants acquainted with all changes in agriculture, which from time to time experience may have shown to be improvements, and also to give them every assistance in their power by sharing on equitable terms the expense, or by in any other way aiding them to carry them out; but in return, they have a full right to expect the utmost readiness in tenants to take advantage of the assistance and information offered, and to decline a renewal of connection with men who refuse to perform their part in what is no more than their duty at a time of difficulty and dancer to all."

Now, to us, this looks very like saying to tenants, who for thirty years have been told to rely on Acts of Parliament and so forth for profit, "the time is now come when you must stir yourselves like other tradesmen, or you must turn out." And that view is confirmed by the next passage:

"As I said before, in other trades, either the want of sufficient activity or of capital is followed as a matter of course by inevitable rain, and no aid is offered; but a tenant's case as I put it, and as I hope under most landlords it would in fact stand, is far letter; for if he will be but willing and active, consideration and assistance will be shown, to shield him from the disastrous consequences that naturally sow from the want of talent and capital. But I repeat, that when advice and assistance is offered and not readily accepted, the fate common to all must be expected, and cannot in justice by complained of."

From generals his lordship thus hints at particulars.

"I will not lose any time in determining on a system by which information proved to be useful, and the assistance you can fairly expect from me, may be afforded; and in the mean time confidently call your attention to the advantages which are certain to be derived from a great increase of the number of callle fed on your estates, to the better preservation of their manure, and to under draining."

To promote which, the tenant must first be made independent by a long lease.

His lordship next attempts to pacify his tenants with respect to the conduct of their representatives; and then himself indulges in a long string of scesaws, wherein he greatly blames Sir Robert Peel for leading the "gentry and legislators of England' to do that, which his lordship alternatively shows it was impossible for any same legislators to avoid

But his lordship's wisdom is hereditary wisdom, differing possibly from mere vulgar wisdom, and we dare say it is "all right," for at the last he comes to this intelligible and accurate estimate of the protectionist position:

These few lines on politics have I added from the desire to soften any ill feelings that may exist amongst us. It is most desirable that whatever may be the consequences—yield we must, that we should do so with a good grave, that the agricultural body, who still may claim so high a station, should not present the undignified spectacle of struggles now so clearly ineffectual—as to have the appearance of impotent efforts of childish anger—still less of quarrels and eriminations amongst ourselves. Let us rather determine at once to unite all our energies to do our duty to the community and ourselves, by industriously putting into practice those improvements which science and experience have shown will enable us to produce from our land the greatest quantity of food at a fairly remunerating cost."

This is hopeful. When landowners as a body shall act up to the convictions expressed in Lord Mount Edgecombe's letter, they will not find tenant farmers backward. Give them a fair field, and they want no favour.

SIGNS OF LAND GOING OUT OF CUI.

Perhaps the most dishonest pretence urged by the monopolists against the repeal of the Corn Laws was, that land in Great Britain would thereby be driven out of cultivation. Well, Free Trade is inevitable—it is at hand. For all practical business purposes, in dealing with landed property, it must be calculated on as immediate, or almost immediate; and what about land going out of cultivation? See a few of the first cyldences which we select at random a

Neither free corn, nor free chitic, lieve prevented the "grass parks" from fetching a greatly increased ront. Again, in spite of the tariff, stock looks up:

The Parcial of the tariff, stock looks up:

The Parcial of the tariff, stock looks up:

The Parcial of the tariff, stock looks up:

The Parcial of the tariff, stock looks up:

The Parcial of the tariff of the tariff

stat

Ho

by me gli she you bo wor British day ho friends ho of county, we are not aware of any that have realised higher prices than at Shrawardine Castle Farm, near this town. By request from several gentlemen, we have been furnished by Mr. Tisdale, the auctioneer, with the following statement:—

'Of the cews and calvas, the highest price for a cow and calf was 201. 10s; and the average price of all the cows and calvas are upwards of 261. Waggon horses: One waggon-horse sold for 641, one at 631 two at 601 and one at 671. horse sold for 64L, one at 53L, two at 50', each, one at 47L, three at 441. each, and the average price of the first twelve waggon-horses was 45L 5s.; two waggon-colts sold for 71L. Sheep: The highest price for a pen of five ewes and five lambs was 201.; the average price of the ewes and lambs fetched nearly 31. 10s. per couple. Rams: One two year old ram sold for 131., and one for 10 guineus."—Shrewsbury

Next we have the following letter addressed to ourselves :

To the Editor of THE LEAGUE.

" Heath, Leighton Buzzard, March 24, 1846. "Bin,-The euclosed is the answer I received in reply to my inquiry respecting three farms, advertised to be let in Hampshire. Such eager competition for farms, at a time when the 'British farmer' is about to be deprived of his protection, shows how much danger there is of land being thrown out of cultivation. As the letter to me is private, I cannot authorise you to publish the name of the writer, but I think the fact too good to be lost.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, "WM. Mounice."

This is the enclosure:

"March 21st, 1846, "SIR,-In reply to your note of the 10th inst., I beg to say, I have now so many applicants for my farms, that at present I scarcely know it they are let or not. I will, however, keep your address, and if I have a vacancy in a few days I will write you again.—I am, Sir, yours, &c.,
"Mr. Win. Morrice."

"J. F. H."

Now with these and similar passages, which must strike the eye of every reader of newspapers, before him, will the most timid protectionist refuse to be comforted?

PROTECTIONIST OBSTRUCTION.

THE CORN TRADE.

The "farmer's friends" in the House of Commons are making growers, sellers, and buyers of corn, cry out lustily, "save us from our 'friends.'" The following account of the wheat market appears in the Mark Lane Express review of the corn trade:

The uncertainty felt, even up to the present moment, though the matter has been before the house since the commencement of the session, how the affair may ultimately terminate, has had, and still continues to have, a most injurious influence on commercial operations. It is now certain that the third reading of the Corn Importation Bill will not take place till ofter the Easter recess; and in the Lords the question can scarcely be expected to come under considera-tion till the beginning of May; it will therefore probably be June before a definite extlement is arrived at. Meanwhile merchants, millers, and dealers are likely to pursue the some course as that by which they have regulated their operations for months past, viz., avoid buying more than just sufficient to meet their immediate wants; if therefore the supplies from the growers should about keep pace with the consumptive demand, the knowledge that upwards of a million quarters of wheat are ready to be thrown on the markets at any period the proposed alteration in the laws may be sametioned by the upper house, must undoubtedly act as a poworful check to any advance.

And what will the wheat producers say to the following aspect of trade in general?

"CITY NEWS.—In the opinion of the mercantile classes of the city, the 'protectionists' in the House of Commons have taken the best means in their power to retard the passing of the plans of Sir Robert Peel. But scarcely one of our merchants were prepared to see such a falling off in the receipts of the Customs and Exciso as is apparent in the official returns just made public. The diminution in the receipts of the two all-important branches of the revenue is solely and entirely to be attributed to the anxiety of the trading interests, to see the measures of Government passed into law before operations on their part are entered into; till, in fact, they are combled 'to see their way clear,' as the almost every day phrase is, when wholesale and retail dealers throughout the country are solicited for orders. It is therefore held to be of the most pressing importance, that the final decision of the legislature, upon the corn and other measures of the Ministry, should be announced at the earliest possible period. In the event of the Corn Bill being rejected by the House of Lords, and an appeal to the country being made by Sir Robert Peel, the delay that will in-evitably occur must prove as prejudicial to the revenue re-turns in the present as it has been in the last three months." -Mark-Lane Express.

We suspect the state of the revenue has given a quietus to lordly rejection of the bill, whatever may have been previously intended.

THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

It seems that that aristocratic body, the Council of the Royal Agricultural Society, has been moved to consider the best plan for promoting practical discussions on husbandry, at the county meetings of the society. At the council meeting, on Wednesday week, the subject was council meeting, on Wednesday week, the subject was thus mooted:

"Newcastle Lectures and Discussions.— Mr. Thomson then moved, agreeably with the notice he had given at the previous Council, for the appointment of a committee to make arrangements for lectures and discussions on mittee to make arrangements for lectures and discussions on agricultural subjects at the ensuing meeting at Newcastle. He stated that one of the main reasons that had induced him to make this motion was his conviction that, although the society had been very successful in bringing together. The Gairblus—Much nicety is to be observed in the preparation of the griddle, which, as must be well known; is fast, round, not considered the producing a free interchange of opinion size. It must be made not very hot, because then is amongst practical men, or anything approaching to adequate discussion on the disputed questions in agriculture—one of the principal arguments used to justify the laying out of so large a sum annually in premiums at the show having been that euch outlay was absolutely necessary to induce practical men to assemble from distant parts of the country, and that when so assembled they would assuredly both impart and receive benefit from intercommunication and discussion with each other.

In the show yard nothing but casual conversations take place, and that chiefly between persons from the same districts:

"Whereas, he conceived the object of the society was to induce persons living at a distance from one another to practise different systems, and to compare their respective opinions, so that those who could satisfactorily show their practice to be the best, might induce others to follow their example, while they, on the other hand, might themselves be led to abandon such parts of their own system as could not rationally be defended against the advocates of other

The plan of lectures hitherto adopted had not elicited conflict of opinion and comparison of facts:

"The method followed by the British Association seemed best adapted to attain the objectin view; and with some mo-diffications, he thought the advantages of lectures might be combined with those resulting from the reading of papers and discussion. He considered that it would be one main point to have the lectures short, and to have it clearly understood that such lectures should be only the opening of the subject and commencement of the business of the meeting.

A committee was appointed, to work out the detail of which Mr. Pusey is chairman. We suspect such restrictions will be placed upon these discussions as will prevent their taking a turn unpalatable to the landocrats, otherwise some useful collision and communication of practical knowledge might arise from this plan.

LOOKING ONE WAY, AND GOING ANOTHER.

A correspondent of the Farmers' Journal, who writes to uphold "protection," makes the following statements, which for that purpose are certainly oddly used. However, that is the writer's business, not ours; for certainly we cannot complain when such arguments as the following are put forward for monopoly

"These are, undoubtedly, very weighty reasons why the working classes of this country should have cheap bread, and prices approximate, as near as possible, to those of the old countries of Europe; the Corn Law of 1842 would, on an average of good seasons, keep our prices at 48s. to 50s. The proposed law, with the 10s. duty, will reduce them to 38s .a reduction of about one fifth in price—and the great question is, how far it will be possible to meet such a reduction of 20 per cent. in the productive cost of corn? I am much inclined to think it can generally be met by farmers of capital and intelligence, without any lessened demand for labour, or throwing out of cultivation any very considerable proportion of arable land; but that it will tend to employ more labour, from the necessary conversion of large tracts of poor grazing land into arable, which land will give a much greater supply of food for the national wants, and an increased de uand for labour. The reduction of 20 per cent. in the prices of agricultural produce will require one-fifth less capital, and lessen the general cost of production one fifth. If the landlord lowers the rent one-fifth, he will gain as much in the lowered price of the main articles of the consumption of his family and establishment; and from the fact that on many farms (where they are partly grazing), full one balf of their whole growth of corn is consumed by the farmers themselves; consequently, such low productcost will be to their advantage as regards such half of their

This is an argument we have constantly used. We hope the clouds which have obscured monopolist brains are being gradually dissipated, and that there will be a residuum of common sense yet.

INDIAN CORN BREAD.

The following extracts from Dr. Bartlett's little book on the use of maize, will teach our readers how the Americans make this grain into divers wholesome and palatable edibles:

"As an article of goneral domestic use it has no equal, "As an article of general domestic use it has no equal, where economy is an object to be kept in view. It is easily converted into puddings, cakes, rolls, and bread; but the cheapest mode o. using it—that is to say, the way in which it will go furthest—is in the form of hasty-pudding or mush; and in this manner, when properly cooked, its advantages as a cheap food are surprising. To establish this fact, I made the following expariment:

the following experiment:
"I carefully weighed out one pound of the meal, and gave it to a person who understood the mode of cooking it. In the course of boiling, it absorbed about five pints of water, which was added at intervals, mull the process was complete. which was added at intervals, until the process was complete. The bulk was again weighed, and gave as a result four pounds and a half. Such are the powers of expansion possessed by this kind of grain. On dividing the mass into portions, it was found to fill four soup-plates of the ordinary size; and, with the addition of a little milk and sugar, gave a plentiful breakfast to four servants and children.

"To Make Grapher Cares. Best way to make these in burn the cakes; and it must be well cleaned and greated burn the cakes; and it must be well cleaned and greated while warm, that it may be perfectly smooth, so that the cakes may be easily turned, that they may be done brown (not burnt) on both sides: to promote their turning seally is the object of adding the wheaten flour. Be it remembered that the dough, or rather the batter, as above directed, must be well beat up and prepared directly before being cooked, though it might set an hour. This is mentioned to prevent its being supposed that it, like some other break, would bear to be mixed overnight. The cakes are usually poured or until they spread on the griddle to the size o the bottom of until they spread on the griddle to the size o the bottom of a breakfast-plate. You will think this recipe rather prolin. but it is my way in all such cases to be very exact. Better be too particular than to omit any essential item.

"Eag Pone.—Three eggs to a quart of meal; no wheat flour; to be made also with milk—water would make it heavy; a spoonful of butter; all well beat together, and made up of a consistence thicker than the cakes, too thick to pour out, but just thick enough to require to be taken up with a spoon: may be baked like the cakes, immediately with a spoon: may be based in a tin pan, which must be baked in a tin pan, which must be placed in a Dutch oven, not too hot at first, but the fire under it to be increased. The object is to have it begin to under it to be increased. The object is to have it begin to bake at the bottom, when it will rise in the process of baking, become brown on the top, and when put on the table and cut, resemble what we call pound cake. 'Hominy and asheakes' George Washington had cooked for his own eating to the day of his death.

"P.S.—Salt, of course, add as usual, in both cases."

FLAX CULTURE.

We recur again to this subject, because we believe that growing flax will be one of the means farmers may usefully adopt in the improved condition of husbandry, which will commence with Free Trade, to advance the fertility of the soil, to vary the rotations, and to afford winter employment to the women and children of the rural classes. With that view we give the following, wherein Mr. Warnes has put forth the principal points in favour of flax in a few pithy propositions:

"TEN FACTS CONNECTED WITH THE FLAX CROP. "1st. Under the improved system of husbandry, flax is not an exhausting, but a highly restorative crop.

"2nd. If sown primari y for the seed, the value of the crop is equal to the average value of wheat, barley, and oats.
"3rd. Under experienced management in every department, the crop is worth more than wheat.

"4th. Flax will grow upon any soils that produce corn, and upon soils where corn will not grow at all.

"5th. It will flourish after any crop, turnips excepted, and robably carrots, or mangel wurzel. "6th. Flax has been grown upon my farm in the following rotations during the past six years:

Clover stubble, flax, wheat, barley.

Wheat, flax, wheat, barley. Wheat, barley, flax.

Potatoes, flax. wheat, turnips, wheat. Wheat, potatoes, flax, barley; the improvement of every field being distinguishable.

7th. This year I have already sown four acres and a half upon clover stubble. One acre upon barley stubble, instead of turnips. Three-quarters of an acre that never produced a crop of any kind, save briars and thorns; and three acres of which the previous crops were flax, wheat, and barley.

"8th. I have now six fields of growing wheat, but the most lyxuriant is that of the flax, and which is also superior to any in the parish. " 9th. When wheat follows flax, much less seed is re-

10th. One acre sown with flax to every hundred now under tillage, would produce at least 35,000 tons of Linced more than ever was imported of oil-cake in one year, afford employment for double the present redundant population, and then not supply half the home demand for the fibre.

"From observations, and some experience, I am of opinion that clay land, such as is now allowed to lie fallow, would produce alternate crops of wheat, and flax much larger than any other rotation.

A could adduce many additional facts in refutation of former prejudices against the flax crop, and in favour of its immediate adoption in every agricultural district through out the kingdom; but I trust the above will suffice for the present.

"Two fundamental principles are involved in this important question: "lst. The successful cultivation of the plant depends upon the preservation of the seed, a point hitherto not recognised either by the theory or the practice of past or present times.

"2nd. The national introduction of the crop can only be achieved through the exercise of patriotism. On this ground, then, I hold myself in readiness to co-operate with any parties, regardless of every private consideration.

"April 3rd, 1840.

"P.S. Linesed may be sown with advantage throughout the present month, and I have seen good crops from seed sown in May, but the earlier the better."

That farmers are seeking information on the subject, is evident from the frequency of such inquiries as the following, by a correspondent of the Mark Lane Ex-

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE MARK LANE EXPRESS. "SIR,—Last year I grew two scres of flax as an experi-ment; I have now just completed threshing the seed from ment; I have now just completed threshing the seed from the fibre, and am at a loss how to proceed further, as I do not know where to obtain a scutching machine to convert the fibre into flax. If you, or any of your correspondents, can favour me with information, stating the names of manufacturers of machines for the purpose I have named, with the price, you will oblige your obedient servant.

"A Suscensial."

"P.S.—Any additional information regarding the method of manufacturing the fibre into flax will be applied."

FREE IMPORTS

Theifollowing paragraphs though Oaksoo in ports (Oakso farmers and

The Cork Reporter says—Mr. D. Meagher at once had the baskets, which were closely done up in matting, removed to the Chamber and examined; each contained about three hadred-weights, and every potato was wrapped in thin blue handred-weights, and every potato was wrapped in thin blue handred-weights, and every potato was wrapped in thin blue handred weights, and every potato was wrapped in the late paper. They appeared to be of a very choice kind, in excellent sound condition, and putting forth light healthy called the presume they are intended as samples of what imported from Vera Cruz. They will remain at the shoots. We presume they are intended as samples of what may be imported from Vera Cruz. They will remain at the Chamber of Commerce for inspection, and will be distributed for seed in a day or two."

"SEED POTATORS FROM AMERICA.—We observe by the import list that two vessels arrived last week from South America, having on board about 100 barrels of potatoes, which we understand were expressly ordered by the importers for seed. It was from South America the potato was first brought to Europe, and it is reasonable to suppose that seed from the indigenous soil will be highly prized at the present moment. Some years ago a small quantity of potatoes was brought from the same quarter, and used as seed by a farmer in Dumfrieshire. The produce, we are informed, turned out very superior."

POTATORS IN ROSS SHIRE.—We are glad to be able to state that the potato pits lately opened in this county are in good condition, and that there are none diseased. A great quantity has been shipped for the south, and the prices are high, from 12s. to 10s. Small quantities, however, can be got cheaper. We are within the mark, however, when we say that about 4000 bolls have been, or are in the course of being, exported from Ross shire this year, a very unusual circumstance."-Ross shire Advertiser.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Worcester, Massachusetts, Feb. 28, 1840. ELIHU BURRITT TO JOSEPH STURGE.

Honoured and dear Friend,-I thank you with all my heart for your kind letter, and the documents you sent me by life Cambria. O how we felt disposed to shout aloud for joy, at the blessed peace breathing, that steamer brought to our shores—the abolition of the Corn Laws! Who can predict the consequences of that measure of heroic humanity? How many fetters and iron restrictions it will loose from the necks and hands, and hearts of millions! How the Providence of God has co operated with you in effecting this great blessing to the world! The potato—how the base things of this world have been chosen to confound the wise, the honourable, the mighty—to overthrow dynasties! Had it not been for the defection of the potato crop, probably your long-carnest hopes would have been deferred to a distant year. Famine, then, has been a Prime Minister of Provi dence to give cheap and plenteous food to the future generations of your countrymen. The blessings of all the poor and bondmen of the earth will be for ever on the Anti-Corn-Law League for what they have done for man. They have proved that God always co-works with those who work by moral means, and that moral power is an attribute of his Omninotence which men may wield to the pulling down of the strongholds of oppression and wrong. O, you have worked out a problem for the whole world, of increasing importance to the race. You have encouraged all the labourers in the field of humanity to believe in God, and throwaway all other weapons but those of moral power. Slavery, war, want, sin, and misery through the world have thriven with fatal luxuriance under the reign of brute force; but at the spirit of Christ, the spirit of truly philanthropic hearts, they must

Free Trade! it is verily the harbinger of the millenium. How soon it would fuse the nations into one unanimous brotherhood! Oh! it is delightful to contemplate its social and moral influence on our two countries. How soon, with the offluities of consanguinity and common language, will it make us brethren in overy sense of fraternity! Why, as make us brethren in every sense of fraternity! Why, as a transforming effect on our whole western population, in whom the war-spirit is most excitable. They will be brought immediately into the most pacific attitude toward the labouring classes of Great Britain, and they will soon begin to talk more about feeding than "licking the British." How often extremes meet. It is intimated in some of your papers that our western people are all impetuous for war with England; open your ports, and you will find them more impetuous for prace. Give them a chance to open the port-boles of their vast Egyptian grapary upon your ill fed millions, and their martial propensities would be satisfied. And why will you not say to your hungry, hard-labouring people, that our rude warm hearted westerners owe them no grudge, nor wish to do anything more to them than to feed them with cheap bread. Oive them a chance to do this, and they will hang up their bunting rifles, and take to the hos and plough. Nothing could be more happily conceived than your plan of sending to the citizens of our cities addresses from the inhabitants of yours, appealing for peace. This is a beau-tiful social movement, and will be met with enthusiasm in this country. I wish it were possible to send back responses by the Cambria, but the time has been too short to call town mecetings, for the purpose of authorising addresses to our English friends. The nextsteamer, I trust, will carry back to your shores the proof that our countrymen will not be behind Jours in sentiments and expressions of brotherhood. I hope one thing, in connection with this movement, most devoutly: that is, that every town, village, and hamlet in Great Britain, which has a namesake in this country, will send it a friendly address, as your Boston has done to our Boston. There is a something extremely interesting in this; something like a word of maternal affection from a mother to adapther; accounting a material and administrated to air up thing like a word of majornal affection from a mother to a daughter; something so personal—so calculated to eitr up a home feeling. The influence of such an interchange of friendly addresses, would last for the whole generation; and lead to an indinary—a openess of sentiment, and interchange that would strengthen the bonds of our brotherhood, and beget associations of great afficient to the ministers of the good in the same that it is a slip, addressed to the ministers of the good in Great Heriain and the United Bianes, arreading to them to interchange forms friendly communities. Home to show that Obristanity, a.s. much for peace as community and sent them to all the same to an experimental to the control of the same to a show that Obristanity, a.s. much for peace as communities.

REVIEW.

The Honey Stew of the Countess Bertha. A Fairy Tale. Translated from the French by Mrs. Cooke Taylor. London: How.

This little work has many claims upon our attention. It comes from the pen of the secretary to the ladies' committee of the Covent Gardon Bazaar, and thus revives many pleasing associations con-nected with that Free Trade jubileo. It is one of the most beautiful specimens of ornamental typography which has ever issued from the press, each page being set in a framework of gold, equally novel and chaste. The chromographic illustrations are highly creditable to British art, both in design and execution. The price is moderate, and the tale itself is one of the most delightful works of fancy which we have seen for many years. But a further recommendation, hardly intended by the author, but which probably induced the translator to bring it before the English public, is, that the story may be regarded as a very clever allegorical illustration of the aphorism, that "property has its duties as well as its rights," and that one of the first duties of landlords is to provide for the feeding of the people. Imagination, as well as reason, has been brought to the aid of the great cause of Free Trade and untaxed provisions. The Countess Bertha may be regarded as a personification of those sound principles equally taught by the laws of economic science and the precepts of our holy religion, while the association of beneficent fairies or Kobolds, formed to fulfil her behosts, is a lively representation of the Anti-Corn-Law Longue.

The agreement between the Countess Bertha and the Kobolds was made when her old castle was about to be pulled down and a new one erceted, just as commercial law may be said to have originated in England when the old constitution of the Stuarts was set aside to make room for the Bill of Rights and the Revolution. The proposition of the Kobolds was made in rhyme; and to complete the parallel, it used to be asserted that the Revolution was effected by the ballad of Lillibullero. Here is the interview between the Kobolds to the Countess Bertha and her husband, Count Osmond. The fairy creatures sent a deputation to their bed-reem; and we may remark, that it was under similar circumstances William and Mary received those who invited them to England:

The Ambassador, who was at their head, was richly dressed in the fashion of the times, having on a furred mantle, a vest of velvet, pantaloons to match, and his little shoes extravagandy pointed. By his side was a sword of the finest steel, the handle of which was a single diamond. He held politely in his hand his little hat, ornamented with feathers, and, approaching the bed of the Count and Countess, who looked on with astonishment, he addressed these words

We have heard a report, noble lady and lord, That you wish to erect a new dwelling,
As this castle no longer can shelter afford, When tempests around it are swelling.

We approve the design—for these ivy olad walls, And the weeds that each buttress have studded, Seem no better than spouts for the rain when it falls, So that every apartment is flooded.

Pull the old castle down-let a new one appear-And the Kobolds will grant you protection, If the virtue and truth, which made this one so dear, Shall reign there in equal perfection.

Count Osmond was too much astonished at what happened to reply to these words, etherwise than by a friendly gesture; but the Ambassador seemed quite satisfied with this politoness, and retired, after having ceromoniously saluted the wedded pair."

The Kobolds assisted in building the new castle as the morcantile interests did in urging forward the Revolution; but the former were not approciated by the musons, nor the latter by politicians:

"One day, a mason found, on the scaffolding, a little wheel-barrow/ not as big as his hand, but so beautifully made of the best rose word, bound with silver, that it seemed only fit to be a plaything for a king's son. The mason who had discovered the wheel-barrow showed it to his companious, and in the evening took it home to give to his little boy but the instant that the child was about to take hold of it the wheel-barrow began to roll away of itself, and ran out of doors with such rapidity, that though the poor mason ran after it as fast as his legs could carry him, it disappeared in a second. At the same time he heard several shrill peals of laughter, loud and prolonged, as if the Kobolds were making game of him."

We come now to the promise of the Countess Bertha, on which the story is founded:

"At the end of the third year, when the swallows quitting their nests in our caves, bid also farewell to our climates, and when the other birds, doomed to remain in our cold and when the other birds, doomed to remain in our cold northern regions, become more sad, and more scarce, the new castle though still far from being completed, began to make something of a figure; Bertha nothing this, as she one day presided over the labours of the workmen, addressed them in these words, with her bland and melodious voice:

"Well, my good masters and labourers, do the works advance as quickly as you can make them? Winter is knocking at the closer, and the Count and I are so badly lodged in our little farm-house, that we are very anxious to leave it, to our interest of the coping sines of the coping sines of the coping sines on the labourers, if you will enable use to anter in a month, bromise you continue to the coping sines on the labourer than the coping sines on the labourer than the coping sines on the labourer than the coping sines on the labourer than the coping sines on the labourer than the coping sines on the labourer than the coping sines on the labourer than the coping sines on the labourer than the coping sines on the labourer than the coping sines on the copi dren and grandchildren shall receive the same treat from me, while I live, and afterwards from my children and grand-children.

"The invitation to partake of a honey-stew-trifling as such a matter seems in modern times—was not to be despised in the middle ages; for it was the form used in asking you to a good and plentiful dinner. People said then, come and take your honey-stew with me to-morrow, as they now say, come and take your soup with me to morrow; in both cases, the dinner was tacitly understood, with merely this difference, that the loney-stew was enten at the end of the repast, but soup is eaten at the beginning."

The greedy Dominick, who had come into possession of the castle after a lapse of time, may be considered a representative of Lord North's monopolist administration; he withheld the Honey-stew as Lord North taxed trade. Both suffered soverely for their violation of principle; and Dominick's final punishment is a lively symbol of the loss of the American colonics:

"Dominick resolved to take no farther notice of what had passed, and that day invited all his officers to a more than menalty splendid banquet; indeed, the terror inspired by Dominick was so great, that at the appointed hour, although the orders had only been given in the morning, the table was served with wonderful splendour. The delicious means, and excellent wines from the Rhine, France, and flungary, drew forth repeated exclamations of praise from the guests on the liberality and magnifleonce of their General; who, however, on taking his place turned pale with rage, calling out, with a frightful oath, 'What wrotch has dured to put this ammunition-bread before me?'

"Indeed the bread placed for the General, was the same as that distributed to the common soldiers, and such as Dominick had eaten in his youth.

"Every one looked to his neighbour with astonishment, unable to comprehend how any one could be bold enough to play such a trick on a man known to be so flerce, haughty, and vindictive as the General.

"Come here fellow, said Dominick to the servant, who was behind a chair, and take away this bread."

"The servant obeyed with all the engerness which four inspired; but vain were all his exertions to remove the loat

" 'My Lord,' said be, after several useless efforts, 'this bread is so glued to the place, that I cannot get it away.' "Then the General, whose strength was acknowledged to be equal to that of four men, took the bread in both hands, and in his turn, endeavoured to lift it; but he raised the table, not the bread, and after a violent exertion of five or six minutes, he fell back in his chair, exhausted with fatigue and covered with perspiration. " ' A drink! a drink! fellow, and of the best,' said he, in an icritated voice, holding out his glass; but he assured, I shall not fail to find out who has played this singular trick on me, and he shall be rewarded as he deserves.

mon, dine; I drink to your good appetite."
"He raised the glass to his lips, but immediately rejected what he had taken, exclaiming, 'What wretch has given me this infamous boverage?"

" 'It was I, my lord,' said the trembling servant, still holding the bottle in his hand.

" 'Tokny, my lord.'

" 'Liar!' you have poured me out water.'
" 'It must have changed into water since it came into your glass, my lord, for I have poured out from the same bottle for the two gentlemen sitting next, my lord, and they both declare that it is excellent Tokay."

"The General turned to his two neighbours, who confirmed what the servant had said.

"Then Dominick, frowning, began to comprehend that the jugglery was more terrible than be had at first supposed; for he had imagined it to be a trick played on him by the living, while, according to every probability, it came from

"Wishing, then, to ascertain the truth, he took the bottle from the servant's hand, and poured out a glass of Tokay to each of his neighbours. The wine had its usual colour, and appeared a liquid topuz; then, from the same bottle, he poured some into his own glass; but no sooner did the wine fall there, thun it took the colour, transparency, and tase of

"Dominick smiled bitterly at this double allusion to the lowness of his birth, and not wishing to remain near the black bread, which seemed placed there to humiliate him, he requested his uide de-camp, who was a young nobleman of one of the first families in Gormany, to change places with him. The young man obeyed, and the General went to sit at the other side of the table.

"But he was no better off now than he had been before; whilst under the alde-de-camp's hand the bread detached itself from the table, without difficulty, and became like the other bread; every bit that Dominick took immediately changed into ammunition bread, and the wine, contrary to the miracle at the marriage of Cana, turned into water. "Dominick, out of all patience, wished to cat something, and drow a large dish of roast larks near to him; but no sooner had his hands touched the dish than the larks took wing, flew away, and fell into the mouths of the peasunts, who, from a distance, were beholding this magnificent ban-

We need not quote many more of the historical parallels which this amusing flotion must suggest to every Free Trader; but there is one passage so vividly picturing in allegory a contest between Cobden, typified as the King of the Kobolds, and a boasting monopolist, represented by the craven knight, Hans, that we must give it insertion. We need only premise that Hans agreed to watch in a chamber said to be haunted by the Kobolds, just as some protectionists promised to encounter Leaguers in a county meeting:

"We may mention, for the honour of Sir Hans, that he that begun to sleep, when he suddenly heard a great noise in the chimney; he immediately threw a faggot upon the fire, which was almost burned down, thinking to meat the limbs of the ghosts it they decided on soming by that way. The fire blaced up anew, and the flames rose to the chimney arealting, and spatishing when studienly Sir Hans say a plank, about a book with laster from the chimnes of which the pushed itself forward, growing larger, and larger, without it being possible to discover what had set it in motion. The plank then descended slowly in a slanting position towards the ground, and when it rested on the floor, it seemed to form a kind of bridge over the flames. At the same instant a multitude of little Kobolds began to alide down this bridge, like haliday falks down the fall at Greenwich, headed by their king himself, who, armed at all points, like the great knight Hans, seemed to lead them to battle. As fast as they de scended, Hans kept pushing himself back in his arm-chair, so that when the king and his army were ranged in battle before the chimney, Hans had arrived at the other end of the room, travented by the wall from gains for the though there room, prevented by the well from going farther, though there was still a large unoccupied place between him and his unwolcome visitors.

"Then the King of the Kobolds, having conferred in a low voice with his general officers, advanced alone into the " Hir Hans, said he, in an ironical tone of voice, 'I have heard you more than once boost of your great conrage, and as a true knight cannot lie, I feel convinced that you spoke the truth. In consequence, I have come to offer you single combat; and having heard that you valliantly offered the Baron Willhold to conjure the spirit who haunts this castle, I have obtained from this spirit, who is one of my intimate friends, leave to take his place this night. If you conquer, the spirit, through me, engages to abandon the castle, and never to re-appear in it. If I conquer, you are fankly to acknowledge your defeat, and to give your place to Sir Torald, whom undoubtedly I shall have little trouble in defeating, as I have mover heard him beast of having cut any one in two in a blow. Therefore, as I do not doubt that you will accept my challenge, behold my glove.

At those words, the King of the Kobolds threw his glove boldly at the feet of the knight.

"Whilst the king spoke in a clear little voice, Hans looked at him attentively, and feeling certain that he was not more than six inches and a half high, felt comforted; for such an adversary did not appear very terrible; be, therefore, took up the glove with confidence, and placed it on the top of his little finger to examine it. It was a little glove, cut out of the skin of a musk rat, upon which little scales of steel had been sewed

"The King of the Kobolds allowed Hans to examine it at his leisure; but after a moment's silence said: Well, Sir Knight, I await your roply. Do you accept or refuse my

"Sir Hans again took a survey of the champion who challenged him to combat, and seeing that he scarcely reached half-way up to his knee, he took courage from the diminutive

" ' And what are we to fight with, my little man?' said the knight.

"" We will each fight with our own arms--you with your sword, I with my whip.

How! with your whip?

"' Yes, it is my usual weapon; as I am little, I must have something to reach to a distance.' Hans burst on

And you will fight against me with your whip? "' Undoubtedly. Have you not heard mesay it is my usual

"I And you will take no other?"

" You promise?"

" On the faith of a knight and king! " Well then, said Hans, I accept the challenge."

" And he threw, in his turn, his glove et the king's feet. " Lt is well,' said the king, who made a few steps backwards, Inot to be crushed. Trumpets sound?

"Immediately, a dozen trumpeters, who were mounted on n little footstool, sounded a warlike flourish, whilst an officer brought the king the weapon with which he was to fight. It was a little whip, the handle of which was formed of a single emerald. To the end of this handle, five chains of silver were fustened, about three feet long, each terminated with a diamond about the size of a pea. Putting the value of the material aside, the king's weapon recembled one of those whips sometimes used for beating clothes and carpets "Bir Hans, full of confidence in hissize and strength, drew

'When you will,' said the king to the knight. " At your orders, sire, said Hans.

"The trumpets immediately sounded even a more warlike air than the first, and the combat began.

But at the first blows he received, the knight perceived that he had been wrong in despising his adversary's weapon. Although covered with armour, he felt the blows of the whip as if he had been naked, especially where the five diamonds struck; they indented themselves into the icon of his armour as if it had been the softest paste.

"Hans, instead of defending himself, began to cry, and ran about the room, to get up on the furniture and bed, followed everywhere by the whip of the implacable king, whilst the warlike air which the trumpets had played, accommodating itself to circumstances, had now assumed the character of a one placed it in the fifth act of Gustavus.

"After five minutes of this exercise, Sir Hans fell on his knees and asked pardon.

"Then the King of the Robolds giving the whip to his equercy, and taking his sceptre, 'Sir Hans,' said he to him, 'you are nothing but an old woman, and it is not a sword and polynard that suits you, but a distaff and spindle.

"At these words, he touched him with his sceptre. Hans felt as if a great change had taken place in his person. The Kobolds servamed with laughter, and all disappeared as in a visiou.'

We wish it were possible to present our readers with a copy of the clover picture of this engagement; Cobilen in armour is capital, and his two squires will be readily recognised. / Here we must close this little volume, which has afforded us much gratification and some instruction,

Anti-Cons Law Leaour, (La Lique Anglaise. Revue Britannique : Sixième Série, No. 1.) Paris and London: Barthes and Lowell.

We have dulayed our notice of the admirable article on the history, character, and objects of the Anti-Corn-Law League, published in the Revue Britannique, until the Parliamentary recess afforded us authorout space to do justice to its merits. It is from the tible pon of M. Fonteyreau, a young aconomist, who has already taken his place in the first ranks of economic soience, a place to which he is entitled by the depth of his intelligence, the soundness of his principles, and the accuracy of his observations. We know of no foreignes who has so thoroughly appreciated the truly English character of the great Free Trade movement. He has comprehended not merely its operations, but its internal impulses. He has viewed it not merely in its physical, but in its moral and intellectual influences, and has justly pourtrayed it as the great revolution of a great nation, winning triumphs not for itself, but for universal civilisation; securing benefits not to its own exclusive interests, but to those of general humanity. M. Fonteyreau justly says:

"The League, whilst working for its proper object—the sholition of the Corn Laws-has not neglected the future. Whilst overthrowing the old edifice, it contemplates that which must be raised in its stead, and conceives it in its largest proportions. The men who conduct it embrace in thought the universal relations and interests of the nations of the earth. They require a system; they require a legislation which shall comprehend them all. Conceive a boundless ocean, over which every flag may float, every fleet glide, and every kind of produce be conveyed, conceive Peace spread-ing her wings to afford shelter to the entire world, and you will have figured to yourself the vision which these beneficent men desire to realise. To a thousand voices of rival selfish ness they wish to oppose the single calm and impartial voice of reason; to a thousand interests jarring and clashing in-darkness, they wish to oppose one great and recognized interest, that of the nation. In a word, to the deceptions of the existing fiscal administration, they oppose the majestic simplicity and inexhaustible benefits of Free Trade. If they have directed their principal efforts against the monopoly of the forn Law, it is because that is the bulwark and support of all the rest."

We need not follow this able writer through his very clever history of the Corn Laws, but shall quote his account of some of the lamentable consequences which the artificial scarcity they created produced

"During the years of favourable harvests from 1832 to 1837, the number of emigrants did not exceed 70,000. In 1811, a year of dearness and scarcity, emigration rose to 116,000, and in 1812 to the higher number of 128,000; between 1838 and 1843 not less than half a million of individuals voluntarily abandoned their country. The people of Rome in times of oppression retired to Mount Aventine; Englishmen retire beyond the Ocean, and to the Blue Mountains of America; in both cases I perceive an anathema pronounced against social order. In criminal statistics we find the same gradation. In 1836 the number of committals was 36,000; in 1843 it rose to 51,000. The total number of banksupteies, which was 800 in 1888, amounted to 1500 in 1842, and paralysed every branch of industry. Factories were emptied to crowd work-houses. Poor rates assumed formidable dimensions. In five years they increased 134 per cent. in Manchester, 150 per cent. in Oldham, and 304 per cent. in Bolton. And whilst the country was thus depopulated by emigration, but death and by the principal that the best country was thus depopulated by emigration. by death, and by the prison—that tomb of the living—marriages, which should have filled the void, rapidly decreased; parents died, and were not replaced by children. Let it not be supposed that these disastrous effects were confined to the manufacturing districts, for, as we have already indicated, there is a cohesive principle uniting all the members of the social body. At the moment that the Corn Laws, the vaunted palladium of England, raised prices to the very summit of the sliding scale, a Poor Law Commissioner found agricultural labourers, working at 4d per day, in the midst of the most frightful destitution. Nine hundred and cleven families of labourers showed him the title-doods of their property. They consisted of more than nine thousand duplicates of articles pledged to the pawabroker. Thus protection murdered those whom it professed to shelter; its shade was as fatal as that of the Upas tree.

Take now his survey of the effect of the Corn Laws on foreign commerce:

"In one word, these restrictions raise an insurmountable barrier between countries producing provisions, and the manufacturing districts of England. The earth, the great producing power, or, as we may call it, the manufactory of corn, of wine, of cattle, no longer gave motion and activity to steam engines and spinning jennies; a separation was made between man and nature, between man and his fellows. These are not sentimental imaginations or visionary dreams; they are stern realities and simple traths. In all the propositions for reciprocity treaties of commerce made by England to Russia, Germany, and the United States, hor diplomatists were silenced when the scornful fluger pointed to the Corn Laws as the emblem of prohibition and isolation. They refused her iron, her yarns, her calicoes and her coals, because she refused the corn of Dantzie, of Riga, of Odessa, of Hamburgh, and of New York. Reprisals were every-whore invoked to the everlasting disgrace of the political leaders of Great Britain."

The mission of the League, its orators, its lecturors, and its writers, was to teach the people:

"They teach that men are one great family, invited by Providence to the same great feast of his bounty; that the immense variety of their wants is satisfied by the immense variety of the productions of nature, in the division that is made of all social functions—such a country producing from; unde of all social functions—such a country producing fron, such another, cotton; such another, diamonds; such another, the master pieces of engraving or painting; so that it is necessary to float all these varied forms of wealth on the same level that they may diffine the prospering without Corn Laws, and overflowing with provisions, though its soil slipe from beneath the plough, and oblighting against famine a store of provisions which in the time of Raleigh amounted to 700,000 quarters of corn. They show the granaries of the United States growing under their loads of fool, and wating but the signific pour the rich should ance the land; they curse those laws which as O'Connell said, moisten the wheels of the rich with the tears of the poor, which contains him to insaid vity they vestibule of famine—and to famine, that vestibule of death. They captee all those things; and sooks all the set in contain the them their own deeds, their devotedness of every day and every hour to the seared onuse of truth, of justice, and of charity,

We shall now turn to his character of Mr. Coldon, which is traced with great force and discriming

"We have placed Mr. Cobden in the lead of the more. ment ;-in truth the leadership belongs to him in right of his devotedness, of his talent, and of his courage. It was by no sudden effort that this supremacy of moral force was catablished. The League had long been growing in obscurity; and it was while maturing its growth, and viviving its agita-tion, that Cobden gradually revealed himself as the here of its struggles. The caution necessary to be exercised in the selection of means for conducting an infant agitation, the contact with sulightened minds, the information obtained during his searching enquiries into the misery of the country, prepared him to come efficiently before the public; and when, by a kind of tacit consent, the League conferred on him the leadership, he found himself fully equal to the difficult mission. The scientific ardour of Mr. Cobden then took a new course, and was transformed into an indefatigable attivity for commercial freedom. There has been no great evolution of the party which has not been maturely considered by him and his faithful companions, Messis, Wilson and Bright. There is not a victory which has not been won at the cost of a thousand efforts; there is not a struggle in which he has not shown himself ready to s terifice his health, his interests, and even his self-love; for it will be hereafter not the least of his glories, to have set in motion so many men, and to have influenced so many mind, without exciting the jealousy, or wounding the pile of those by whom he is surrounded. In this we must see a proof of great moral superiority united to great integrity. This superiority is specially remarkable in Cobdens marvellens aptitude in using all the varied forms of action. Should a new system of tactics seem necessary, but finds unexpected resources in the dalm segacity of his intelligence; if the country is to be addressed through the pass, he has at its disposal a practised peu; if Parliament is to be persuaded, his address exhibits the calm reasoning and sente exposure of sophistry, which is sure to win votes; if it be required to force conviction, he finds in his own breast the noblest sentiments of humanity, and adorns them with lively sallies of eloquence and wit. Doubtless there are orators more rich in imagery, more philosophic, more atdent, more poetic—but there is no one who better elucidates fact, and enters deeper into his subject. The traces be leaves in the mind are, perhaps, less brilliant than those left by Fox, or Bright, but they are more profound. His legapenetrates like some finely tempered weapon; it tems po muscle, inflicts no pain, but almost imperceptibly it reaches the heart and compels it to surrouder. That which especially characterises the eloquence of Mr. Cobden, is ite entire absence of digression; his speech is as true to the point as the needle to the pole, and never deviates for an instant. A great orator, he is above all, the orator of the League; a sound statesman, he is especially the repre sentitive of the League in Parliament; in a word, he appears to me its very personification—the actual incarnation of its Cobden's whole life has been one of labour and meditation.

Beginning with humble means, he has realised a fortune, emerging from obscurity, he has won a reputation; respected and feared by the aristocracy, he has undertaken to guide an entire nation to the promised land of Free Trade. He is in the strength and prime of his age, if strength can be applied to one of those delicate organisations which is consumed by the fever of thought. His calm and meditative physiognomy, furrowed over by the deep lines of meditation and reflection, bears witness to his efforts and his struggles. He might be mistaken for a hermit, if the ardour that sparkles in his eyes did not mark him as the leader of a party. It is from the mildness of his manners and his sine plicity, worthy of Franklin, that Cobden has obtained the sympathics by which he is surrounded; as it is in the car nestness of his temperament and his exhaustless energies, that the source of his influence over the masses may be found. At a distance he is admired, in intimacy he is be-This is not usually the effect of great talents; they usually charm you at a distance, but crush you when you come near. I may add that this admiration and sympathy of the Loague for its chief is often manifested in a most striking manner; ships and streets have been colled after his name, and corporations have been anxious to earel him amongst their citizens."

We shall now turn to the portrait of Mr. Bright: "In the charming openness of his countenance, Mr. Bright exhibits the characteristic signs which reveal government. The inseparable companion of Mr. Coblent he has been distributed by the fatigues. shared with him the applauses of the nation and the fatigues of the strife;—both acting in conjunction without either being eclipsed; the one giving to the question clear and definite outline, the other affording to the picture depth and relief. Ask not Mr. Bright to convince statisticians and algebrates on to wine actions and algebrates. algebraists, or to win over a company of nervous lailes and perfumed dandies; he respects the figures of arithmetic, but he rarely uses them; and with respect to the nervous ladies, ne rarely uses them; and with respect to the nervous lains, there is a manly firmness in his tones which would scar them out of their lives. No: what the young quaker want is a mass of human beings to stimulate, an onemy to crush by sarcasm, a plea of charity to be poured in words of fire into feeling hearts. To day he will harl thunderbolts against the iniquities of aristocratic tyranny; to morrow, his voice, faltering with amotion, will melt an audience into tears, into feeling hearts. To day he will hurl thunderbolts against the iniquities of aristocratio tyranny; to morrow, his voice, faltering with emotion, will melt an audience into tear, whilst he describes the misery of the working classes. Behind the orator you always soo the Christian, as behind the League you can discover the democrat, the aposte of international fraternity and the gonuine rights of man. Thus this double source of ideas gives extraordinary amplitude to his language. In his speeches you find, side by elde with philosophical inspirations, the views of an economist, the philosophical inspirations, the views of an economist, the philosophical inspirations, the views of an economist, the popular sentiments and irony of a Partiamentary dehical inspiration of acutephase and frankness, sulfactor of invative, as when he dissected the similar of the Standard. Mr. Bright takes pleasing in branch and of the Standard. Mr. Bright takes pleasing in branch and interruptions of the protectionism that he likes as the and interruptions of the protectionism that he likes as the how to misely. He loves the tempels, which he know the house of the Addition's area.

His bottom and the protectionism that he likes as the how to misely a man and the standard of the stan

the st that b Lustin the s

Free

Loage

that o

demo

selec have to th

raise Fund well town for it it, th its op ner t

Tho t perile [relin Whiel is mi and 1 obsta amp] town m070 tions and a PLAT from Dent

OH A

everything he takes the sympathetic side; and if distinctions should be drawn between the three principal craters of the League, I would say that Cobden appeals most to the intelligence, Fox to the imagination, and Bright to the heart. The cloquence of the leader is the most condise and contests that of Fox the most dazzling he its hellioner, and riseing, that of Fox the most dazzling by its brilliancy, and that of Bright the most touching. It has been said that tile democratic ardour of Bright has cometimes compromised the success of the cause; I would reply that causes must often be compromised in order to win; for it is at such a crisis that the distinction between the coward and the brave is revealed. Admirals ere now have been forced to burn their ships in order to ensure the victory. But I may add, that the reception which was given in the House of Com-mons to Mr. Bright's late speech on the Game Laws, proves that he unites Parliamentary tast to the vehemence of the

We shall return to this interesting article, and at the same time endeavour to bring our readers acquainted with further specimens of the growing Free Trade literature of France.

The Tiny Library. A Weekly Journal for Children. Wood and Co., London.

This is a cheap and instructive Penny Magazine, chiefly designed for the young, but not destitute of entertainment for persons of mature years. The selection of articles evinces good taste, and they have all a high moral aim and purpose. The book is well printed, and the illustrations are generally very effective. We can safely commend it to our young friends as a miscellany which will add much to their pleasure, and not a little to their profit.

TREE TRADE INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION.

A. W. Paulton, Paq.

Michard Potter, Esq.,

William Leavers, Esq.,

William Vision, Eq.,

L. G. Welford, Riaq.,

Ed. Welford, Riaq.,

Churles Swalaland, Paq., Crayford.

Samuel Harrison, Esq., Dr. James Carlisle, John Gadsby, Esq., R. Hall, Esq., Uxbridgo, Richard Euract, Esq.,

TROSTERS.

1)r. Thomas Price, 7, Highbury-terrase, Islington. George Thompson, Eq., 8, Waterloo place. Captain Cogan, Upper Mill, Hammersmith. BANKARS.

Mosers. Present. Oroto, & Co.

Mosers. Presentt, Grote, & Co.
solutivos.
Josh. Ivimey, Esq., 28, Chassory-lane.
scavevos
Mr. Fredorick Parrand, Priory Villa, Peckham. sscavear.
Mr. Alfred Lench Saul.
Prospectuses may be obtained, gratis, on application at the Society's filters, East Temple Chambers, Whitefriers street, Fleet-street. The Rules d, such are now ready, and may be had as above.
Freum dealrous to join the Society are requested to make application stretchety.

relately.

whichly offices will be open for receiving subscriptions and the ral transaction of business, every Buesday and Friday ovenings, from

TREE TRADE INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION .-As the Second Subscription is about to be called for, parties intending to avail themselves of the benefits of the Association are requested to make application for shares immediately. Until the Second Subscription is called in shares can be obtained on the same terms as those which have been already taken up. Attendance at the Offices, East Temple Chambers, Whitefiars street, Pleut-street, every Tuosday and Friday evenings, from Su to Nine o'Clock

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any person forwarding 3s. 3d. by Post office order to the Publisher, 67, Fleet-street, London, will have one quarter's copies of the LEAGUE forwarded by post on the days of publication. Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with J. Galshy, Newall's buildings, Manchester; and the LEAGUE may be had by order of any news-agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, April 11, 1846.

In another part of our paper will be found a report of the Birmingham Free Trade meeting to raise subscriptions in aid of the Quarter of a Million Fund. The demonstration was well-timed and well placed. When one member for that important town spoke against Free Trade, though he voted for it, and the other both spoke and voted against it, the constituency was bound, for the sake of the catablished character of Birmingham, to pronounce its opinion on the great question at issue, in a manner that could not be mistaken, before the country. The time was well chosen. Nothing can be more perilous to a cause than a general and delusive feeling of false security. The tranquil expectation which is now the prevalent feeling of the country is mistaken by some of the monopolists for apathy; and bence they have been encouraged to interpose obstacles and create delay. We trust that the example of Birmingham will be imitated in other towns, and that each locality will work out its own movement without waiting to be visited by deputations from the League. Let the Free Traders be up and doing, less their quietude should be mistaken to want of ther of confidences of interest in success. W. areaware, indeed, that that present quiesde die anima. from excess of confidence, and that a disappoint ment would be foliated by a convulsive and the convulsive and the ment would be foliated by a convulsive and the con sistance, and thus provent the evoking of those dangerous passions which disappointment, under present circumstances, would let loose upon the country. It was wise in the Free Traders of Birmingham to come forward at this crisis, and declare that their purpose is unshaken, and their means ready to continuo the conflict, until victory is achieved. Their example should be more powerful than our precept. They have declared that their reliance is still fixed on the people, where it can rest more safely and more securely than on princes, premiers, or parliaments. The other great towns of the empire must pronounce, not to create civil confusion, but to avert its possibility. Even wore there "six Richmonds in the field," they would shrink from the encounter with an entire and a united nation.

It is impossible to conjecture to what despicable arts the protectionists will resort to protract the existence of monopoly as the hour of its doom approaches. They are now coquetting with the Trades' Unions, acting on the principle that "like courts like," for their confederacy is nothing more than a vast trades' union to raise rents by the means of high prices to consumers, just as infatuated combinators endeavour to raise wages by forcing employers to charge high prices to consumers. It is indeed true that the Corn Trades Union protects its unjust usurpations by legal enactments, instead of ruffian violence; but it has not abstained even from the latter, as witness the field of Peterloo. There is, therefore, nothing but what might reasonably be expected in a junction between the protectionist "turn-outs" against Peel, and the destructionist "turn-outs" against other employers. The object of both is the same; to obtain exorbitant remuneration for their land and their labour, from farmers of the soil, or farmers of capital, leaving them to repay themselves as best they may, by charging high prices to consumers.

It is time to put an end to these idle exhibitions of petulant resistance to what every man in his senses, and every woman in her senses, except poor Mrs. Harris and Mrs. Gamp, knows to be inevitable. The attitude of the people of Birmingham cannot be mistaken; there is scope for error in the patience of hope manifested by Free Traders in other quarters. We trust that in the ensuing week we shall have to recount the proceedings of similar meetings in other localities, and that our friends everywhere will exert themselves to make "assurance doubly

THE FUNDS.

	SAT. April 4	Mon. April6	Turs. April 7	Wrb. April 8	THUR April 0	FRt. Apr. 10
Bank Stock		2003	207 953	206 952	206)
3 por Ct. Red. Ann. 8 por Ct. Con. Ann.	967	96	90]	96	១ប
3fper Ct. Red.Ann.	••"	07 10 3-16	10	97 .	101	ì ì
Long. An. Ex. 1860 Cons. for Acet	ល់កំន	80}	กัก	001	06	ł
Exc. Bills, pm	20-28	25.27	39-30	27 20 pm.	24-20	ļ
Ind. Bds. un. 1000/. Venezuela 2 perCt.	• • •			20]/111.	20 1000	ين ا
Do. deferred	••.	ėò	08	99		8
Belgian 41 per Ct. Bruzilian 5 per Ct.	• •	HU	801	ะเ	йiş	站
Columb. ox. Venez.	• • •	96	••	*:		Good Friday
Danigh				F74	H74	Ğ
Dutch 24 per Cent. Dutch 4 per Cent.	694	003 003	003	00	001
Mexican	32	32	• •	32)	32
Portug. conv	86	••	• • •
Russian 5 per Cent				1004	100
Spanish o per Ct. Do. Sper Ct. ex.dv.	5 22.	254	25 361	2δ 36∦	36

MARKETS.

CORN MARKET. MONDAY, APRIL C.—Ve are moderately supplied with English Wheat this morning; most of the White that has arrived was cleared off ourly at the same prices as last Monday; Ried Wheat is more difficult of disposal, but factors do not give way in prices. The supply of liarley is short; fine Chevaller maintains its value, and sells readily, but other descriptions are duli sale, though they cannot be purchased on better terms. In addition to the Oats noticed in the return, several Irish vessels have come to liand to this morning a parket. The trade is heavy, and in some instances rather lower prices had to be submitted to in order to effect sales; but generally quotations are not altered. Fine Bank fatol full prices, the samples being few; but inferior sorts are the turn lower. No altered to the service are the turn lower. Builts in Reas. C. Eligioga.

Wheat, Essex.	BRITISH	rerimper 1 54 to 60 Wi	ite 60 to 60
Kene k Sunoik Lincolnellire &		10 68	60 03
Boolobs		46/ 104
Oats, Limoolnehire &	Yorkshire Faed,		20 90 46 6 26
	DitaKalid
Edition Food	ned a		20 20
. Plug Pin	Now 27 12 week	OU FI
Name bedanions		Copyright and Abstract	91 M . 94
CHORAGA	WITTER	WHITE HAM	34

	···	,
Onlway	. •			10	91
Barley.					33
Beans, Mazagan				ái	31
	• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •		••••••	R:4	37
17 · · · ·			• • • • • • • • •	NO.	40
Peas, White	, , , , , , , , , , , , , , ,	16.4	lara	EW)
Grey,	30 30	1111 HI	min.	00	48
Flour, Town-made.	100 Cag	tone and but	WANT II.	48	34
riour, rown-made.	D. Amili	but suck of	Sect. 1110	119	00
Monote mia	Nofile	ALON :		10	40
•	, PURI	J. 1.111.	PREK.	IN BON	D,
Wheat Dautsie hie	h mived	, ,	or Imperia	J Quarte 54
Whoat, Dantzig, hig Relatock	(* P)11.00.00.00.00.00.00	· • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •			co
Quality.				_	01
Manhandh			69 67	T	64 64
Odeset				44
Odanan Dalla	h		••	δü	60
Diministr			••	OU;	δL
tyler.		16716	• •
	• • • • • • • • • • • • • •
Barley, Grinding
	 Oats, Archangel
Danish
Bwedish	• • • • • • • • • • • • •	٠٠٠٠٠٠٠	, 23 24
Strabund
Dutch Feed				20	21
					84
				20	20
Black			• •
Beans, Egyptian
Pens, White
Ditto Boilers			12
Flour, Canada, fresh	ı, per barrel c	эг 190 lbs	36
					43/1
United State				ΛW	30
Dantzig			•	. W	30
Dantzig Australian, p	or sack of 28	O live	•
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN,	or sack of 286	liaPo	rt of Trong	lon, fro
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 (or sack of 286 &c., arrived o April 4, 184) lba In tha Po 6, both days	rt of Lond inclusive	ion, fro
Dantzig Australian, p Account of 440 RN, March 30 t Who	or sack of 286 Lo., arrived to April 4, 184 cut. (Bircley.	0 lbs	rt of Lone i inclusive Besns,	lon, f ro Pens
Dantzig Anstralian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Who English	or sack of 286 &c., arrived to April 4, 184 out. Bucley. 55 0507	O lba	rt-of-Lone inclusive Beans, 1965	ion, fro
Dantzig	or sack of 28 &o., arrived to April 4, 184 out. Bucley, 55 0507 640	0 lbs	rt of Lone i inclusive Besns,	lon, f ro Pens
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Who English	or sack of 28 ke, antived o April 4, 184 out. Burley. 55 0507 640	0 Hm	rt of Lour inclusive Beams, 1365	lon, fro Pons 661	m
Dantzig	or sack of 28 &c., arrived to April 4, 184 out. Buckey, 55 0507 640	7 lbs	rl-of-Lone inclusive Besns, 1965	lon, f ro Pens	m
Dantzig	or sack of 28 4.0., arrived on April 4, 184 ont. Birdey. 55 0.007 640 53 485 ontr. (2316 non	11m	rk of Four inclusive Beans, 1865	Pons 601	m
Dantzig. Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Wh English. 75 Secotch. Irish. 62 Apatr. 8.—Next	or sack of 288 S.o., anrived o April 4, 184 ent. Birdey. 55 G40 our, 381 eeu market day	0 lbs	rt of Long inclusive Benna, 1365 1662 ols	Pens Pens dat 980	m
Dantzig	er sack of 288 80., arrived to April 4, 184 ent. Burley. 55 640 640 631 485 outr. CS16 sea market day	11 ha	rk of Lone inclusive Benna, 1365 1652 ols ol Friday, 60 ors, of	Pena Ott Oso we also	nll
Dantzig	er sack of 288 80, arrived on April 4, 184 ont. Bacley. 55 640 640 our, 6816 sec unarket day R Monday.	0 lbs	ri-of-Lone inclusive Benne, 1965 	Pons 001 080 080 wa shr Foreign: even	nll m
Dantzig	or sack of 288 S.o., anrived o April 4, 184 ent. Birley. 55 640 our, 4816 en unrket day it Monday. e since Monda is exten	The the Po 6, both days Oats, 7502 125 6022 2410 3ks: 10 barr being Goo Except 127 day are y	Plof Jone i inclusivo Bonna, 1965 	Pens 161 980 we she Foreign	nll m
Dantzig	or sack of 288 to April 4, 184 ent. Birley. 55 640 contr. (216 sea market day it Monday. s since Monday. re difficult of	The the Po 0, both days 7.02 125 6022 2410 des; 10 barr being Goo Except 127 day are well disposed as	rt of Long inclusive Beans, 1365 162 ols Friday, 50 qrs. of cry triffin I notwith if the atte	Pens 681 980 we show the Foreign (C) with allowing indicating in	ill m ry K.
Dantzig	or sack of 288 to April 4, 184 out. Burley. 55 0597 640 out. CSIB sea market day il Monday. s since Modalit of l; but holder	The	ri-of-fond inclusive Benna, 1365 1652 ola Friday, 60 grs. of cry triffin I notwith al the atte In the p	Oso Pension, fro Oso we sho Foreighteding	ill m ry k. of
Dantzig. Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English	or sack of 288 S.o., arrived o April 4, 184 ent. Birley. 550 640 our, 6816 sea market day il Monday, a since Monda is extrem re difficult of 1; but holder	O lbs. In the Po 6, both days Oats, 7502 125 6022 2410 dos: 10 barr being Goo Excopt 122 day are v day languid disposal ar	rt of Lone inclusive Benna, 1965 1862 rdla di Friday, 60 qrs. of cry triffin I rotwith di the atte in the pt	Pens dat pen	m m m m ry k of
Dantzig. Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English	or sack of 288 S.o., anrived o April 4, 184 out. Birley. 0.007 640 our. 0816 secunded day it Monday. a since Monday. but holder &co., arrived	The the Po 6, both days Oats, 7:02 125 6022 2410 3ks: 10 barr being Goo Excopt 122 mlay are v rely languis disposal ar 2 give way	ri of Long inclusive Besna, 1965 il Friday, 60 que, of cry tritin il the atte in the p	Den dot Den dot Den dot Den dot Den den den den den den den den den den d	m m m m ry k of
Dantzig. Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English	or sack of 288 Rec., anrived to April 4, 184 ent. Birdey. 55 G40 56 E35 our, 4816 sea unrket day it Monday. since Mod de is extien re difficult of 1; but holder Rec., arrived urit to be 8th	The the Po th the Po 6, both days Cats, 7:02 125 6022 2410 88 : 10 barr being Goo Except 127 day are v ely languid disposal at 18. give way	ri of Long inclusive Besna, 1965 il Friday, 60 que, of cry tritin il the atte in the p	Den dot Den dot Den dot Den dot Den den den den den den den den den den d	m m m m ry k of
Dantzig. Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English	er sack of 288 April 4, 184 ent. Birley. 55 0507 640 551 485 ent. 6316 sea market day it Monday. s since Mon re difficult of l; but holder &c., strived oril to the 8th English.	The the Po th the Po 6, both days Cats, 7:02 125 6022 2410 88 : 10 barr being Goo Except 127 day are v ely languid disposal at 18. give way	ri of Long i inclusive Besne, 1365 de Friday, 60 qrs. of cey triffin il totwith al the atte in the p	Den dot Den dot Den dot Den dot Den den den den den den den den den den d	m m m m ry k of
Dantzig. Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English	or sack of 288 S.o., arrived o April 4, 184 ent. Birdey. 55 640 coir, 6816 sea market day il Monday, s since Mod do is extrem re difficult of 1; but holder S.o., arrived orit to the 8th lengish	The the Po th the Po 6, both days Cats, 7:02 125 6022 2410 88 : 10 barr being Goo Except 127 day are v ely languid disposal at 18. give way	ri of Long i inclusive Besne, 1365 de Friday, 60 qrs. of cey triffin il totwith al the atte in the p	Pens 081 Pens 081 Pers of 1 Lucas. lon, fro	m m m m ry k of
Dantzig. Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English	er sack of 288 April 4, 184 ent. Birley. 55 0507 640 551 485 ent. 6316 sea market day it Monday. s since Mon re difficult of l; but holder &c., strived oril to the 8th English.	The the Po th the Po 6, both days Cats, 7:02 125 6022 2410 88 : 10 barr being Goo Except 127 day are v ely languid disposal at 18. give way	ri of Long i inclusive Besne, 1365 de Friday, 60 qrs. of cey triffin il totwith al the atte in the p	Pens dat 1 980 we she Foreign that in the correct of a Lucas. lon, fro oreign.	m m m m ry k of
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English	or sack of 288 to April 4, 184 ont. Burley. 55 640 658 485 onr. 3816 sea market day it Monday. since Modern re difficult of 1; but holder 620 1500 1500 230	Dis	reof-fone inclusive Benne, 1365 als Friday, 60 qrs. of cry triffin I rotwith al the site in the pro- st 45.	Pens d81 980 we shr Forely gr. even shadin udaneo ri Lucas. lon, fre ve	nll m ry k of
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English. 75 Scotch Irish Foreign 62 Apatt 8.—Next have no market ti Wheat, the arrival branch of the tra Wheat and Barley a Out buyers is small acticle. Account of CORN, the 5th of Aj Wheat Barley Outs	er sack of 288 S.o., arrived o April 4, 184 eat. Birdey. 55 640 53 640 53 640 640 640 640 651 640 650 650 650 730 Flour, 940	The time Pool of the Pool of April, is	reof-Lone inclusive Benne, 1965 al Friday, 60 qrs. of ery triffin I rotwith al the atte in the pro- st I Lone oth Inclusion.	Pens d61 D80 We shr Foreign R; evel shadin ndaneo rice of 1 LUCAN LUC	nll m ry k of
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English. 75 Scotch Irish Foreign 62 Apatt 8.—Next have no market ti Wheat, the arrival branch of the tra Wheat and Barley a Out buyers is small acticle. Account of CORN, the 5th of Aj Wheat Barley Outs	or sack of 288 to April 4, 184 ont. Burley. 55 640 658 485 onr. 3816 sea market day it Monday. since Modern re difficult of 1; but holder 620 1500 1500 230	The time Por Control of the Por Control of April, in Proceedings of the Por Control of April, in Proceedings of the Por Control of April, in Proceedings of the Por Control of April, in Proceedings of the Por Control of April, in Proceedings of the Por Control of April, in Proceedings of the Port of April, in Proceedings of the Port of April, in Proceedings of the Port of April, in Proceedings of the Port of April, in Proceedings of the Port of April, in Proceedings of the Port of t	reof-Lone inclusive Benne, 1965 al Friday, 60 qrs. of ery triffin I rotwith al the atte in the pro- st I Lone oth Inclusion.	Pens d61 D80 We shr Foreign R; evel shadin ndaneo rice of 1 LUCAN LUC	m m m m ry k of
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English	or sack of 288 Rec., surived to April 4, 184 ent. Birdey. 55 640 56 485 our, 4816 sec unricet day it Monchiy. since Mod de is extien re difficult of t; but holder Rec., strived oril to the 8th English 620 1500 230 Plour, 910 [AL AVERAchent, Barley.	The the Po th the Po 6, both days Cats, 7:02 125 6022 2410 88s: 10 barr being Goo Excopt 127 day are v nely languid disposal ar 18. give way 10 ft Po 11 fts, 11 fts, 12 fts, 13 fts, Weeke Outs, Ltyo	ri of Long inclusive Besns, 1365 1652 rels if Friday, 60 qrs. of cry tritin if the site in the post of Long in the post in the	Pens dat 1980 we shr Foreign that and the core of 1 Laucas. 19700 250 860	m m m m ry k of
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English Foreign Arati. 8,—Next have no market ti Wheat, the arrival branch of the tra Wheat and Barley a Out buyers is small acticle. Account of CORN, the 5th of Aj Wheat Barley Outs IMPERI	or sack of 288 April 4, 184 on April 4, 184 ont. Burley. 55 G40 56 G50 onr. Call sea market day it Monday. since Mod do it oxtron re difficult of 1; but holder five 1500 1500 Flour, 010 [AL AVERA on d. d. d. d. d. d. d. d. d. d. d. d. d.	The the Po th the Po 6, both days Cats, 7:02 125 6022 2410 88s: 10 barr being Goo Excopt 127 day are v nely languid disposal ar 18. give way 10 ft Po 11 fts, 11 fts, 12 fts, 13 fts, Weeke Outs, Ltyo	ri of Long inclusive Besns, 1365 1652 rels if Friday, 60 qrs. of cry tritin if the site in the post of Long in the post in the	Pens d81 D80 We shr Foreign R; evel shadin ndaneo rice of 1 LUCAN L	nll m ry k of
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English Foreign Arati. 8,—Next have no market ti Wheat, the arrival branch of the tra Wheat and Barley a Out buyers is small acticle. Account of CORN, the 5th of Aj Wheat Barley Outs IMPERI	or sack of 288 S.o. arrived o April 4, 184 ent. Birdey. 0.507 640 col. 485 cour. 6816 sea market day il Monday. s since Monday. s since Monday. do is extrem re difficult of 1; but holder sco., arrived oril to the 8th lingish 620 1500 730 Plour, 910 AL AVEIRA heat, Barley. s. d. s. d.	The time Pool of horizontal property of the Pool of April, in Trial property of the Po	ri of Long inclusive Besns, 1365 1652 rels if Friday, 60 qrs. of cry tritin if the site in the post of Long in the post in the	Den dat Den dat Den dat Den dat Den dat Den dan den den den den den den den den den de	m m m m ry k of
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Who English 75 Scotch Irish 62 Arun, 8.—Next have no market ti Wheat, the arrival branch of the tra Wheat and Rarley a Out buyers is smal acticle. Account of CORN, the 5th of Al Wheat Barley Outs IMPERI	or sack of 288 Rec., surived to April 4, 184 ent. Birdey. 55 640 56 485 outr. (2816 see market day if Monday. since Monday. since Monday. since Monday. since Monday. since Monday. since Monday. Rec., strived orif to the 8th English.	The the Po th the Po 6, both days Oats, 7:02 125 6022 2410 88s: 10 barr being Goo Excopt 127 and problem as 18. give way 19. first 11. first 6740 ancks, 3 ES, Weeke Onts, Hyo 8, d. s. 21. 5, 31 21. 40, 33	ri of Long inclusive Beans, 1365 1662 ols Friday, of grs. of the acte in the post of Long th Inclusion. Fig. 1663 on the Inclusion. Fig. 1663 on the Inclusion. Fig. 1663 on the Inclusion. Fig. 1663 on the Inclusion. Incl	Deam data of the control of the cont	m m m m ry k of Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English	or sack of 288 S.o., anrived to April 4, 184 ent. Birdey. 55 640 58 485 outr. 6816 sea market day if Monday. a since Monday. but holder re difficult of 1; but holder fire the 8th English fire 1500 730 Flour, 010 [AL AVERA hout, Barley. c, d. s. d. d. s. d. s. d. s. d. s. d. s. d. s. d. s. d. s. d. s. d. s. d. s. d. s. d. s. 29 7 d. 10 29 3	The the Po th the Po th the Po th the Po th the Po Cats, 7:02 125 G022 2410 iks: 10 barr being Goo Excopt 127 alay are v rely languid disposal ar figive way in the Po of April, be Irisi ERS, Week Onts, Ityo s, d. s. 21 5, 31 21 40, 33	reof-fone inclusive Beans, 1365 1862 cls Friday, 60 qrs. of ery triffind the atte in the post for London h. F. S. 44.	Den del de de de de de de de de de de de de de	nll m ry k of
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English 75 Scotch 1. Irish 6. Foroign 62 Apart 8.—Next have no market ti Wheat, the arrival branch of the tra Wheat and Barley a Out buyers is smal article. Account of CORN, the 5th of Al Wheat Barley Outs 1MPERI W 28th 4 7th March 5 14th 3, 5	or sack of 288 S.o., arrived o April 4, 184 out. Birdey. 555 640 583 584 585 outr, 6816 sea market day il Monday. a since Monday. b since Monday. do is extrem re difficult of 1; but holder controlled English 620 1500 Plong 910 AL AVERA heat, Barley. c. d. 8. d. d. 6, 29 7, d. 10, 29 3, d. 3, 29 4, d. 3, 39 4, d. 3, 30 4, d. 3,	The time Pool of April, in the Pool of April	rest of Long inclusive Beans, 1365 and 1 Friday, 60 qrs. of cory triffing I notwith at the atte in the post in the	Deam del per de la periodici del periodici del periodici de la periodici de la periodici del periodici d	mill (u) (u) (u) (u) (u) (u) (u) (u) (u) (u)
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English 75 Scotch Irish 62 Aratt. 8.—Next have no market ti Wheat, the arrival branch of the tra Wheat and Barley a Out buyers is smal saticle. Account of CORN, the 5th of Al Wheat Barley 00ts IMPERI W 28th 6 5 7th March 5 14th 9 5 28th 9 7	or sack of 288 Ko., anrived to April 4, 184 ent. Birley. 55 5640 58 485 cour. 6816 see market day if Monday. ko since Mor do is extrem re difficult of t; but holder Ko., arrived oril to the 8th English fixe 1500 730 Flour, 010 [AL AVERA hout, Barley, k. d. e. d. d. 6, 29, 7 d. 10, 29, 3 d. 3, 29, 4 d. 3, 29, 4 d. 5, 5, 20, 2	The time Pool of the time Pool of the time Pool of the time Pool of the time Pool of April, he is the time Pool of April, he i	riof four thelusive Besne, 1365 1662 rels of Friday, 60 qrs. of 1 tour with all the attern of Lone of	Pens 081 080 081 080 081 080	nll m ry k of
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Who English. 75 Scotch Irish	or sack of 288 Rec., arrived to April 4, 184 ent. Birdey. 55	10 h 11 the Po 0, both days Oats, 7502 125 6022 2410 80 : 10 barr leing Goo Except 127 day are vely languid disposal are give way 10 the Po 10	ri of Long inclusive Beans, 1365 1862 rels if Friday, 60 grs. of coy triffin il the attern the post of Long thing in the last line las	Dens. 080 08	all garry of no
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Who English. 75 Scotch Irish	or sack of 288 Rec., arrived to April 4, 184 ent. Birdey. 55	10 h 11 the Po 0, both days Oats, 7502 125 6022 2410 80 : 10 barr leing Goo Except 127 day are vely languid disposal are give way 10 the Po 10	ri of Long inclusive Beans, 1365 1862 rels if Friday, 60 grs. of coy triffin il the attern the post of Long thing in the last line las	Dens. 080 08	all gary of no
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English	er sack of 288 Ko, arrived o April 4, 184 eat. Birdey. 55 640 53 38 640 630 640 631 640 640 641 641 642 643 644 644 645 645 645 645 645	Ollos. In the Po 6, both days Outs, 7502 125 6022 2410 dos: 10 barr being Goo Excopt 122 disposal ar very languid disposal ar was give way an the Po of April, ba Lybs 6746 ancks, Weeke Outs, 15, 30 21 5, 31 21 0, 33 22 6, 33 7778, When	reof-Lone inclusive Beans, 1962 role of Friday, 60 qrs. of the atte in the atte in the first of Lene o	Dens d61 080	mile tu of no om
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English	er sack of 288 Ko, arrived o April 4, 184 eat. Birdey. 55 640 53 38 640 630 640 631 640 640 641 641 642 643 644 644 645 645 645 645 645	Ollos. In the Po 6, both days Outs, 7502 125 6022 2410 dos: 10 barr being Goo Excopt 122 disposal ar very languid disposal ar was give way an the Po of April, ba Lybs 6746 ancks, Weeke Outs, 15, 30 21 5, 31 21 0, 33 22 6, 33 7778, When	reof-Lone inclusive Beans, 1962 role of Friday, 60 qrs. of the atte in the atte in the first of Lene o	Dens d61 080	militury of mooning
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English	or sack of 288 Rec., arrived to April 4, 184 ent. Birdey. 55 640 56 485 ent. Color 640 58 since Modelity. 8 since Modelity. 8 since Modelity. 8 since Modelity. 8 since Modelity of 1; but holder 1; but holder 1500 230 Flour, 010 [AL AVERA hout, Barley. 8 d. e. d. 4 6 . 29 7. 4 10 . 29 3. 4 3 . 29 4. 5 5 . 20 2. 5 9 . 30 7. 8 of the Sign [8]	The time Pool of the time Pool of the time Pool of the time Pool of the time Pool of the Pool of April, he first the time Pool of April, he first the time Pool of the time Pool	riof-four thelusive Besne, 1365 1682 rels if Friday, 60 qrs. of ery tritin if the attern of Lone of Lo	Pens 081 080 081 080 081 080	all or y y y or y or y or y or y or y or
Dantzig Australian, p Account of CORN, March 30 t Whe English	or sack of 288 Rea, surived to April 4, 184 ent. Birley. 55 640 560 571 680 680 680 680 680 730 Flour, 910 Flou	110	riof-four thelusive Besne, 1365 1682 rels if Friday, 60 qrs. of ery tritin if the attern of Lone of Lo	Pens 081 080 081 080 081 080	all or y y y or y or y or y or y or y or

THE LONDON GAZETTE

FRIDAY, Arati. 3.
BANKRUPTS

J. Haye and H. Ayres, Newgate-street, City, woollen drapers, [Mosses, Everest and Co., Hatfon Garden.
J. Dutt. Upper-street, Islington, builder. [Mr. Wright, Greencharchestreet.]

H. Watkinson, President street East, St. Luke's, carponter. [Mr. King, North buildings, Ensioney Circus.
J. Withers, Bushey Heath, Hertfordshire, cattle dealer. [Mr. Sanger, Essex court, Temple.
W. G. Bradford, Bucklersbury, City, failer. [Mosees, Tathon, and Son, Staples Inn.

W. G. Bradford Bucklersbury, City, tailor. [Mosers, Tathum and Son, Staples Inn.
T. Forshall, Grove House, Kennington, surgeon. [Mr. Bis good, Carey-street, Lincoin's Inn.
W. Pite, Lower Thumes-street, victuallor. [Mr. Dupletx, Lincoin's Inn Fields.
E. S. Dykes, Romford, Essex, basket maker and cooper. [Mossrs. Gadaden and Flower, Furnival's Inn.
J.R. Holmes, Poplar, brewer. [Mr. May, Queen-square.
A. and M. Duffield, Slough, ironmongers. [Mr. Taylor, Moorgate-street.

gate-street. T. G. Bhann, Leeds, woollen cloth morchant. [Mr. Strang-

T. O. Shann, Leeds, woollen cloth merchant. [Mr. Strangways, Barnard's Inn.
H. Marsland, Bossion, Cheshire, silk threwster. [Mr. Coppock, Cleveland-row.
J. Morris, Manchester, auctioneer. [Messes. Gregory and Co., Bedford-row.
J. Williamson, Manchester, brickmaker. [Messes. Gregory and Co., Bedford row.
T. M. Cook, Bath, publican. [Mr. Mansford, Bath.
M. Oliver, Langtown, Camberland, innkeeper. [Messes.
Mounsey and Gray, Bispie's Inn.
T. Henrey, Liverpool, draper. [Mr. Walker, Furnival's Inn.
BCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.
Altken, W. T., Clasgow, sharebroker.

Aitken, W. T., Glusgow, sharebroker, Miller, J., Dundee, coal merchant.

TUESDAY, Apart. 7.
BANKRUPTCY ANNULLED.
W. E. Burman, High-street, Whitschapel, hat and whoe dealer.
BANKRUPT'S.
R. Gatehouse, R. Darch, and G. Wilkins, Upper Lisson-street, Umber merchants. [Mr. Lambert, Raymond-buildings.
B. Moir, Wost Cowes, stationer and peweller. [Mr. Woollen, Bucklersbury.

O. Folthouse, Dorcas-terrace, Fulliam, plumber. [Musses.

Watson and Son, Bouverte street.

R. Arsout, Ringsland road, gracer. [Mesers. Simpson and Cobb, Moorgate-street.

J. Barwies, St. Martin's-lane, watchmaker. [Mr. Luttly, Dyer's Hall, Downste-hill.

B. Robbeck, Bog-row, Cambridge-heath-row, and Ross.place, Mile End, oil and colournan. [Mr. Coron, South Molton-treet.

J. Hare, Newstreet, Dorset square, linendraper. [Mesers, Hardwick and Co., Weaver's Hall, J. Quarton, Stemford bridge, Yorkshire, grocer. [Mr. Wood, York. W. Tweddle, Liverpool, soap manufacturer. [Mosers. Corn-thwalte and Co., Old Jewry Chambers.

J. S. Gregson, Manchester, grocer. [Messys. Gregory and Co.,

J. Birth North Shields, linen and woollon draper, [Mr. Hart-ler, Southampton street, Illednisbury, [Mr. Moss, Soricant's

BOOTOH SEQUESTRATIONS.

No keptis I was the figure of the companie.

Nicol (Clargon, morelland.

On the let and loth of each Mouth, every part containing Four bighty-finished Portratie, price One alling, THE PEOPLE'S NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY

Of Illustrious and Eminent Personages of the Minetegnile Century, engraved by first rate Artifics, from Paintings by Lawrence Reynolds, West, Blass, Hoppiner, Beschey, Phillips, Carrick, &c., &c. With Memoirs by W. COOKF. TAYLOR, LL.D.

Fisher, Son, and Co., the Caxum Press, Angel-street, Newyate-street, London.

On the lat and Lylin of our it, arouth, every Part containing Four highly-Bullet at the Kagravings, price One chilling.

ISHER'S GALLERY OF BURLETURE ENGRAVINGS. Historical and Landscape,
INGS. Historical and Landscape.

Selected from the boat Paintings of the Old Masters. The Landscapes by Allow and others.

With Descriptions, historical, geographical, and critical, by John Kirro, D.D., F.S.A., Editor of The Plutorial Bible, the "Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature," && &...

D.1), P.R.A., Editor of "The Pictorial Bible," the "Cyclopedia of Biblionial Literature," &w &r., Fisher, Hon, and Co, the Canton Press, Angel-street, Newgate-street, Fisher, Hon, and Co, the Canton Press, Angel-street, Newgate-street,

Price six Shillings.

COMPENSATION to the People for Aristocratic Food Laws and Unfair Taxation; or, the Industries of Aristocratics on the Condition of Nations. By J. Maccayana, Eng.
London: Plainer, Hon. and Co.; and all Booksellers.

Now Ready, at every Library in the Kingdom.
In : voi., price lue. td.,
In ELEN STANLEY; a Tale. By MATILDA M.
In a voi., price at ite. 61,
LOVE, WAE, AND ADVENTURE. By H. HARRIERS.
In 3 vois., price 4: 18.66.
GITHA OF THE FORENT. By the Author of Rodenhurst.
E. Churton, Library, 28, Holles street

No 2 of THE TOPIC.

Now ready, for sto, price 3d.,

NEW TARLIFF, and its Effect on Trade and Rocioty fully analysed and elucidated.

This new periodical, The Topic, consists of an article each week of the same kind, and by the same writers, as in the quarterly reviews.

No. 1.— he Indian War.

O. Mitcholi, ited Lion court, Fleet street.

Just Published, price is each, or by Post (pre-paid), is, 4d.,
New Editions of

FILHE OVERSEE FREED UIDE.

THE HIGHWAY SURVEYOR'S GUIDE.

THE CONSTABLE'S GUIDE.

Also price 3s., beards.

THE GENERIAL HIGHWAY AUT, and the Statutes and Cases relating thereto, with Index, Notes, Abstracts, &c. Hy A. A. Pay, Eq.

Ditto, bound with the Highway Surveyor's Guide, cloth, 4s 6d.

London: Charles Knight and Co., 22, Ludgate-street, Publishers (by Anthority) to the Poor Law Commissioners.

In Robert Culverwell's Guide to Health and Long Life.

(300 pages, pocket volume), price la. by post, is. 6d.,

WHAT TO EAT. DRINK, and AVOID; with Diet
Tables for all Complaints. By R. J. Outwaswall, M.D. M. R.O.S., L.A.C., &c. Contents:—How to insure perfect digastion, tranquil feelings, a good night a real: a clear head, and a contented mind. By an observance of the instructions herein contained, the feeble, the nervously delicate, even to the most shattered constitution, may acquire the greatest amount of physical happiness, and reach in health the full period of life allotted to man. To be had of shiar wood, 23, Paternoster-row, and all tooksellers, or direct from the Asthor. 21, Arundel-street. Strand, who may be advised with on these matters daily till 3; evenings, 7 till 9.

CORNERS NEW HISTORICAL WORKS, for School Rach History, commencing with the earliest authentic records, is conti-sued to the present time. fastfully pourtraying, also, the Manners, Cus-toms, and States of Civilisation of the People.

aued to the present time. faithfully pourtraying, also, the Mauners, Customs, and States of Civilisation of the People.

Bingland and Wales; five fine plates, and map, 4s. 3s. 6d. [roland, three fine plates, and map 4s. 2s. 6d. 6cotland; three fine plates, and map 3s. 2s. 6d. 8cotland; three fine plates, and map 3s. 2s. 6d. 8pain and Portugal; three plates, and map 3s. 2s. 6d. 8pain and Portugal; three plates, and map 3s. 2s. 6d. 10enmark, Sweden, and Norway; with two fine plates and map 3s. 6d. 10enmark, Sweden, and Norway; in the two fine plates, and map 3s. 6d. Tu key and the Ottoman Empire; 3 fine plates, and map 3s. 6d. Tu key and the Ottoman Empire; 3 fine plates, and map 3s. 6d. 10 and Awitzerland, three fine plates, and map 3s. 6d. 10 and finesia, with three fine plates, and map 2s. 6d. 10 and and Belgium, with two fine plates, and map 2s. 6d. 11 and and Belgium, with two fine plates, and map 2s. 6d. 11 and an Belgium, with two fine plates, and map 2s. 6d. 11 and an Ottoma in the render with a faithful listory of each Nation, interspersed with an accurate secount of the Religion, Custems, National Characteristics, 4tate of Civilisation, and Domestic Habits of the people, in various periods of their history;—to attract the attention of the rising generation by purity of language and clearness of detail: and thus render easy and pleasant the attailment of a knowledge of the leading events of history.

London: 170an and Co., Threadneedie-street; and, by-order, of all Book.

Tableau of Public Interest, which has been Bight Months in Preparation.

Preparation.

THE Royal Family at Home, consisting of the Queen and Prince Albert careaing their Four lovely Children. The Grouping and Colouring by Madame Tussaud, the Models and Portraiture by Mr. F. Tussaud, the Continues by Mrs. P. Tussaud, is new added to the Collection.

—BAZAAR, Inker-airect, Portman-aquare.

"This is one of the best exhibitions in the metropolis."...Tiwas. Admittance, is.; Napoleon Rooms. 6d. Open from 11 till 4; and from 7 till 10

RICHARD COHDEN, BSQ., M.P.

STEPHENSON and CO., Engravers, Publishers, and Printsellers, have the honour to announce that the WHOLB-LINOTH PORTRAIT of RICHARD COHDEN, BRQ., M.P., painted by (I. A. Ilu Val, Kag., is now on view for a short time prior to being placed the Rugraver's hand. This is the latest portrait as well as the most striking likeness ever painted, and will be engraved in line in the highest six leaf left.

atriking inconess ever painted, and a six in order in the Subscribers to the Portrait J. B. and Co. have the picasure to inform the Subscribers to the Portrait of Win. Brown, Eaq., that the engraving will shortly be completed and ready for delivery. This portrait has received the unantenous approval of Mr. Brown's friends, and is admitted to be a very correct likeness. These portraits are perfectly distinct from any others announced to the public. They are double the size of those already published, and no expense will be apared to render them in every respect works of standard excellence. Cellence.
Art Union Repository, 46, King-street, Manchester.

IMBIRD'S STRANDSTATIONERY WAREHOUSE. LA—Biationery. Travelling Writing desks, Envelope and Dressing-Cases, Ladies' Companions, Albums, Serap Books, Fortfolios, and Hioting-tooks, Inkstands. Gold and Silver ever-pointed Pencil-cases. Feari and Ivory Tablets, &c.: Bibles and Prayers in plain and elegant bindings. Name plate engraved for 2s. &d.: 100 best cards, is &d.: superfine latter paper from 0s. the ream; with every parties of stationery, of the best quality and lowest prices.—At LIM-BILLUM, 148, strand, facing Catherine-street. Envelopes, &d., 9d., and 1s. the hundred.

TALECTRO-PLATE SUPERSEDED BY RICHARD and JOHN BLACK'S PURE NICKEL SILVER.—This incomparable Metal possesses all the richness of Silver in appearance, with all its durability and hardness, and is warranted to stand the test of squafortis.

Table Spoons and Porks, per dozon 12s. 0d. 18s. 0d. 20 0d. 0d. 10 0 $1 0 $2 0. 0d. 10 0 $2 0. 0d. 10 0 $2 0. 0d. 10 0 $2 0. 0d. 10 0 $2 0. 0d. 10 0 $2 0. 0d. 10 0 $2 0. 0d. 10 0 $2 0. 0d. 10 0 $2 0. 0d. 10 0

Table Apoons and Porks, per dozon - 13a. 0d. 26a. CTOOPING of the SHOULDERS and CONTRACTION of the CHEAT are entirely prevented, and gently and effectually removed, in Youth and Ladice and Centlemen, by the cocalegal use of the impreved hisatic thest Expander, which is light, slimple chally employed cutvarily or invisibly, without any succembrished straint, or impediment to exercise. Sent per post, by Mr. A. Binton, Sole Manufacturar and Proprietor, 40, Twistock-street, Covent Garden. London, of full parties law on receiving a phetage stamp.

DICHLY OUT CLASS OHANDELIBRS in great I veriety of Riemant and Original Designs, from Alo appropriate for very class of a person of the control of the contr

Now ready, Vols I., II., III., each containing 64 heautiful Engrayings on steel, elegantly bound, price 32s.,

"I'HE PEOPLE'S GALLLIRY OF ENGRAVINGS, after original pistures and drawings by Lawrence, Tevaer, Sangfarid, Frout, Roberts, Allom, Chalons, Hayter, Parris, Maclise, Stephanoff, Cattermole, Bartlett, Leitch, Sc. 80.

Belied by the Rev. O. N. Watorr, M.A.

Published also in Parts, asch Part containing four beautiful Engravings on Steel, for One Shiffing

Fisher, Son, and Co., the Caxton Press, Angel-street, Newgate-street, London.

NREE TRADE CLUB, 27, Regent-street, St. James's.

The ANNUAL MEBCING of the MEMBBLE of this CLUB was held on Monday, the thof April, 1846, at the Club House, in Regent street Major-Ooneral BRIOGS, F.R.S., F.O.S., in the Chair.

A most satisfactory report of the financial and general prospects of the club having been read and sdopted, it was Resolved—1. That a copy of the report be printed and sent to each

Resolved—1. That a copy of the report be printed and sent to each ment er.

2. That the committee be requested to draw up a circular, to accompany the report, calling on each member to exert himself scalously to obtain members, with a view to give full effect to the important objects contemplated in the establishment of the club.

3. That the following noblemen and gontlemen be elected members of the committee for the succeeding year, namely:

Briggs, Major Gen, F.R.s., F.G.b.

Brigts, John, Eaq. M.P.

Clark, William, Eaq.

Clark, William, Eaq.

Codden, Richard, Kaq., M.P.

Cogan, Captain

Lievy, Edward, Kaq.

Ducle, the Harl

Fixroy, Lord Charles, M.P.

Gibson, Thomas Milner, Eaq., M.P.

Wilkinson, Norman, Eaq.

CIRCULAR NOTES and LETTERS OF CREDIT. CIRCULAR NOTES and LETTERS OF CREDIT.—
The LONDON AND WESTMINTER BANK issues Circular Notes for the use of Trivellers and Residents on the continent. These Notes are payable at qvery important place in Europe, and thus enable a traveller to vary his route without inconvenience, no expense is incurred except the price of the stump, and when cashed no charge is made for commission.
These Notes may be obtained either at the Head Office of the London and Westminater Bunk in Luthbury; or at the Branches of the Isank, viz.:—
1. 81. James Bunks, 128. High Holdown; 4: Stratford-place; Oxford street; 3, Weilington-street, Borough; and 87, High street, Whitechapel.
Hy Order of the Board,
JAMES WILLIAM GILBARY, General Manager.

JAMES WILLIAM GLEART, General Manager.

1. ENTISTRY

12), Piccadil y, between Regent C-reus and Haymarket, London

L. 16 years extensively kn-wn in Manchester and its populous neighbouring towns, as the American Dentit, in consequence of his health rodu ring a colonge to a mider and drier climate, has selected the above premises, as very central, and convenent for his pr fessional business where he tenders his best services to all who may desire the faithfu and solid adva tages of his art. His practice will embrace every necessary operation for the innrovement and preservation of the human teeth. He regulates deranged teeth, and romoves all causes incidental to their destruction, or that may deform the beauty of the cimportant organs.

Mr. O never use any of the various cements, postes, or succedaneums, which are all were fancy names for the same article being base amaigums of quicksilver (mercury) with other coarse metals, their use being wholly prohibited for filling toes, haid justly considered mal-practice, by the American College and Society of ental Surgeons; but he fills decayed teeth with the very thoat gold, so us to preserve them free from pain for life. Nor does he excise or cut off the crowns of painful teeth when they should be extracted; but his remedy effectually and with ease destroys the never whon exposed and painful. His experience and advantages in artificial substitutes are equal to any in the prolossion.

Mr. O considers it strictly pre-fessional, and will, under a conviction of its utility, adapt the practice when ca'led on of visiting public seminaries and private families, for inspection and consultation only, either before or after the hours of business

His circuiar containing regulated charges, and brief information, respecting the advantages and utility of his probasion, may be had through post when required. Hours of business from 0 a.m. to 5 p.m.

FENDERS, STOVES, and FIRE-IRONS. -

EVERY MAN HIS OWN LANDLORD EVERY MAN HIS OWN LANDIORD

BRITISH BUILDING AND INVEST

MENT COMPANY. Enrolled.

Established on Macarthur's Rimplified and Improved Plan.

Monthly Rubscription, 10s per Share.

No Redomption Per.

Office, 3, ivy.lame, Ht. Paul's, London.

Hours, 1s till 4.

Commenced in March, 1846.

TRUSTERS.

Office, S., Ivy. Lane, Mr. Paul's, London.
Hours, 18 till 4.
Commenced in March, 1846.
TRUSTERA.
William Anderson, M.R.O.S., 18, Chadwill etreet, Myddleton-square.
William Farmer, 26, Charlotte-terrnoe, Barnsbury-road, Islington.
James Staley, Tibberton-square, Jalington.
Thomas Sheppard, O. Cainsford-place, Barnsbury-road.
All letters should be directed to "The Second British Building and Investment Company was commenced on the All letters should be directed to "The Beround British Building and Investment Company was commenced on the The British Building and Investment Company was commenced on the The British Building and Investment Company was commenced on the The British Building and Investment Company was commenced on the The British Building and Investment and advanced about £10,500 to its Shareholders for the purchase of Property. Such success is unprecedented in the annals of Building Societies.
At a Public Meeting, at which unwards of 1100 persons were present, held at the London Mechanics' Institution, on Tuesday, 17th Feb., 1845. Mr. W. Parmer, in the chair, the fellowing Resolutions were earned unanimously:
Moved by Mr. Beal, seconded by Mr. Lovajoy,—That this meeting highly approves of the plan on which the Second British Huilding and Investment Company is established; and cordally recommended to the public as being based on seatablished; and cordally recommended to the public as being based on seatablished; and cordally recommended to the public as being based on seatablished; and cordally recommended to the public as being considers the conduct of the Directors, in walving their right to receive or claim any advance from the Company during the first in months, as highly honourable, and deerving of the sincers thanks of the meeting considers the conduct of the Directors, in walving their right to receive or claim any advance from the Company during the first in months, as highly honourable, and deerving of the sincers thanks of the meeting considers the conduct of the property of the Building Scole

Pourse priest, at the Company of the NUMBER ONE, ST. PAUVS OHITROHYVIII

A real pool is the rib, sol of the printing of the politic

MERCANTITE LIFE.—It has been remarked to the street foreigners that case of Baldanes grantly proved in the state and, that has been remarked to the state and that has been remarked to the state and probably the street. Be this as it may, now men people to whom artificial applications have been so emission people to whom artificial applicates have been so emission been people to whom artificial applicates have been so emission able. The numerous cases of recovery of the thir safet having a been contained to the second with the second house from the Strant.

Place its power and virtues beyond all doubt or eavil; so, as, as per bottle. No other prices are genuine.—Oldridge's listin, i, was street, the second house from the Strant.

JONES'S 44. 48. SILVER LEVER WATOHE at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset-house. They the truth of a mathematical instrument with the elegance of state. On receipt of a Post-office ender for its above the price will be sent free to any part of the kingdom. Read Jones's Watch Work, "sent free for a 2d. stamp

DEANE'S TWO-HOLE BLACK PENS WATER the first brought out, and have maintained their pre-eminestince. Besides being used by the Merchania and Bankers of together with the gentlemen of the Stock Exchange, these Pess is a patronized by Her Majesty's Judges and by a large namer of the Clergy. Deane's Two hole likek Peus are especially adapted in tinuous writing, their elasticity affording an agreeable edse, and strength insuring the same character of writing for a long eried in gether. Stocl Pen and Cutlery Department of Deane's Wardshow Rooms, and Manufactories, opening to the Monument, M. William Street, London Bridge.

LUXURY IN BHAVING.

TOHN GOSNELL and CO.'S AMBROSIAL SHAVING CREAM (Patrofiled by Prince Albert). This inestinable Griss senses all the good qualities of the Pinest Naples Soap, without Lie lies able amell inseparable from that article in a genuine state. It is of a specify silvery appearance, produces a creamy lather, which will not trie the face, and emits in use the deligitudi risvour of the almond.
In Pots, price 2s. 6d., 2s. 6d., 2s.
Perfamers to her Majesty, 12, Three King-court, Lombard-street, InManufacturers of Combe and Bruskes of the best quality, and on the lies approved principles.

UTFITS to AUSTRALIA, INDIA, and the UOLO-NIER. Parties leaving England will find it to their advantage is purchase their Outfits at E. J. MONNERY and CO.'S, 165, Fonchurch after, City, where a large assortment of shirts, Co. adapted for each particular colony, as well as for the rage, is kept ready for immediate use, and at prices far more reasonable that usually charged for the same articles.

Bedding, Military Accountments, Cabin and Camp Familiars of every description, Lists, with Prices affixed, forwarded by post.

description, Lists, with Prices affixed, forwarded by post.

SELLING OFF CARPETS.

SELLING OFF CARPETS.

Lincolnity and Gentry, as well as their friends and the public, that have removed their Rusiness from Carpentor's Hall, London Wall, is they long established Warehouse, 4, REGENT-STREET, WATRILLOO FLAD opposite Howell and Jamos's, and to 98, HATTON GARDEN, 100,5002, where they trust that Patronage will be continued which they lave active of BRUSSELS, KIDDERMINSTER, and other Carpeting, to be sold at a Great Reduction. In addition to Carpeting, they have at their West his Catablishment, a large Stock of Chintises, Damaske, Tabourcus, &c. 28, will worthy of attention. A splendid Carpet, of British manufacture, 39-2 by 18, with a contra and bordor, at less than coet price.

BRUSHEM-NEW INVENTIONS.

THE TRIPLE HAIR BRUSH. One stroke of this is equal to the effect of one penetrating, five small-tooth combs, and e even cut brush; to be had in four sizes, No. 7, 6s. 6d. No. 10, 11s. 6d.

THE DOUBLE ANTI-PRESSURE NAIL BRUSH, which does not divide the quick from the nail, no pressure being required, in thoroughly cleans and polishes the nails in a tenth part of the that other method. Price, in Bone, No. 1, 2s. No. 2, 2s. 6d. No. 3, 2s. 6d. 4, 5s., and of all sizes and prices in Ivory.

4,6s., and of all sizes and prices in Ivory.

THE NEW TOOTH-PICK BRUSH, which entirely enters between the interstices of the closest toeth; marks, fall dise bruskel, Ref., hard. No. 2, less hard. No. 3, middling, No. 4, soft. The Nervey Brushes, No. 5, hard. No. 6, less hard. No.7, middling, No. 5, soft, 4 feach, or 10s. per dozen in Bone; and 2s. sech, or 21s. per dozen in Properties. Hair warranted never to come out.

THE MEDIUM SHAVING BRUSH, between the usual trade of the strongest Hair end from the Hadger Skin, in a variety of sizes, both in Bose and Ivery. The abeve articles are the Inventions of Ross and Sons, 11s and 11s. Bis hopagate-street, London, and being protected, any one imitating them will be proceeded against FEAL and SON'S LIST of BEDDING, containing a full description of weights, sizes, and prices, by which purchases are enabled to judge the articles that are tour stitud to make a good at a full ding. Sent free, by post, on application to their catabilishment.—Heal and Feather Dressers and Bedding Manufacturers, 196, Tottenham-court-read.

CREY HAIR.—The nourishing properties of ROWN.

LAND'S MACASSAR OIL are eminently successful is the west, tion of Grey Heir, and in the restoration to its original colour. It is only article that really possesses nutritious virtues for proposing a life, wrient growth of Hair, preventing it from falling off, remaining the continuous for cleansing it of seurif and all impurity.

The Beware of spurious imitations!!!—The genuine article has the words "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL," on the wrapper.
Price 38. 6d., 7s. Pamily Bottles (equal to 4 small), ice. 6d., and doubt that size, 21s. per bottle.

Sold by the Propristors, at 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by all the mists and Perfumers.

TAKE NOTICE.—The Establishment of E. MOSAS and SONS will be closed on Thursday Ryoning at a cycles, and sons will be closed on Thursday Ryoning at a cycles, and open on Saturday Evening at 7 o'clock, when business will be resulted. HEAD

WORD FOR THE A WORD FOR THE
Of all the places in the town
For covering the human "crown,"
The mart of MOSEA you will find Stands highest in the public mind.
MOSES and 80 in let nought escape,
In point of quality and hispe;
And I you know whit you were at,
You'd fasten there to buy a hat.

A WORD FOR THE BACK
Try MOSEA Coats and Weistcoats, too,
And see how wall they il act by you.

Try MORBH' Coats and Walstcoats, 100,
And see how wall they ill set by you.
In fitting there is not a wrinklo,
Nor will they spoil when rain-drops sprinkle.
In durability and make
The highest value they partase;
And when your largest purchase closes;
And when your largest purchase closes;
A WORD FOR THE LEG.
The large a root; important limb.

The leg's a most important limb,
Which folks should always keep in trim.
MOSES and SO 'may salely beg
The patronage of ev'ry leg,
For not a warehouse, any how, site,
One of the folks in the limbs of t

THE REAL PROPERTY.

These trouble and real and the real seasons.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNISHMENT.

A new work, entitled Habiliment hall with the self-measurement, may be had on application, and the self-measurement, may be had on application, and the self-measurement and the self-measurement of t

Complete State antml:image>data:image/s3,anthropic-data-us-east-2/u/marker_images/sfishman-markermapper-1007004613/42e6538e11d8f4da5248afb152be8fb3.jpeg</antml:image>

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND.

All Subscribers of £1 and upwards to the LEAGUE FUED will be entitled to, and receive, a copy weekly of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have towarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the offices of THE LEAGUE, Newall's-buildings, Manchester, or 07, Fleet-street, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council of the League would also suggest to their friends in the country the importance of transmitting their copies of THE LEAGUE newspaper, after perusal, to such parties (more especially furmers) as may be either hostile or indifferent to the question of Free Trade.

COLOmanage to rch-street, se-Meriso if the voysable than that they l, to their PLACE, LHORN,

ry. and 190, ng them

RO₩-

ul Cae-

)8E8

By order of the Council,

JOSEPH HICKIN, Secretary.

WHIG AND TORY BRANCHES OF THE RIGBY FAMILY.

"THE 'QUARTERLY.'—LORD JOHN.—If Lord John Russell's letter had not so rashly, and we now say so unfortunately, pledged himselfand his party to a measure which, even with Sir Robert Peel's support, he found he could not carry—had Lord John stoed on his own original ground, his own early opinions—the opinions, we believe, of Lord Grey, of Lord Melbourne, of Lord Lausdowne, of Lord Brougham—of the necessity of an effective protection (either fixed or sliding) to agriculture, there would have been no reason why there might not have been a cordial union of all classes of protectionists on the only great quantion that now divides the political world; and Lord John Russell might have been at the head of a government strong enough to be independent of Mr. O'Conmell and the League, and to have gathered round it all the friends of the existing institutions and policy of the country. This great position Lord John giddily threw away, and has created difficulties in forming an administration capable of governing the country, of which we humbly confess that we do not see the solution."—Quarterly Review.—(Extracted into Globe.)

We should scarcely have deemed it worth while to make the above piece of mingled drivelling and reguery the text of an article in THE LEAGUE, but that we find it set forth in a prominent place in the columns of a journal which is generally understood to speak the sentiments of a section of politicians of considerable "Liberal" pretensions. If we wrong the Globe and its patrons, in supposing that its quotation of this choice bit of Rigbyism is to be taken as indicating, in a sly way, a disposition to regard favourably the suggestion of a Whig and Tory coalition on the "principle" of plundering the receivers of wages and the eaters of bread, it will give us sincere pleasure to be called upon to retract an error which has, at least, prima facie evidence to excuse it. As the thing stands, however, we fear we can hardly be mistaken in the conjecture, that a number of what are called "influential" and "leading "persons, of "Whig principles," would like dearly, if they could, to close with the monopolists on the Rigby terms, and patch up a bread-taxing alliance of pseudo-Liberals and Tory landlords.

The above extract from the Quarterly Review is, in fact, but a plain avowal of opinions and predilections which, we are well aware, have been long entertained by a class of over-clever, but desperately purblind politicians "about town," whose whole souls are wrapped up in the vulgarest and coarsest interests of party—men who, in the grandest of national struggles for the assertion of a great principle, can see nothing but the chances of finding, a making, political capital to be invested in the hames of certain Pall-mall cliques. These men are dream of asking, whether such or such a line challent well-being—and rarely trouble them—thought well-being—and rarely trouble them—thought in the secondance of their notions with a line with a secondance of their notions with a to discern and interpret. Their thoughts run mainly on what Rigby calls "combinations" for tripping up the hoels of Parliamentary and official rivals; and the only mode in which they ever recognise the people as an element of their political calculations, is in the periodical invention of a "good cry," to practice upon popular gullibility. As a knave is, after all, "a fool with a circumbendibus," it is not surprising that these gentry are extremely apt to be taken in—are, in truth, about the most gullible of mortals.

The Quarterly Reviewer, well knowing his men, baits his trap to their taste. He tells them, that if Lord John Russell could only have kept himself to himself, in the month of November last, and given the go-by to his own principles and convictions, he might have enjoyed the extraordinary honour and, glory of getting up a new protectionist party, on the basis of a fixed duty. Up to the hour when Lord John Russell did the boldest, honestest, and wisest act of his whole political life, he had good cards in his hands-but he "rashly" and "unfortunately" forgot which were trumps. He had a "great position," quoth the Quarterly—so long as nobody knew whether he had any, and what, clear opinion of his own on the first question of the age, and was unshackled by "pledges" to do the right thing rather than the wrong one; -when he came out with that ever-memorable declaration which made him, in three days' time, the most popular of English statesmon, he "giddily threw away" the said "great position." This is the story that the Tory Rigby has his private reasons for wishing the Whig Rigbys to swallow ;-and they do swallow it -the cunning little Isaacs—every word ;—and they fancy that some of them may be the happy instruments of repairing Lord John Russell's rash, unfortunate, and giddy act, and consummating a mutually useful and convenient alliance between the fagends of a pair of factions.

All a mistake, gentlemen, as the Quarterly perfeetly well knows-as every man knows, who has an honest eye-sight, and a tolerable memory. Lord John Russell's "great position," as a statesman of whom people were not quite sure that he exactly know his own mind, was simply the position of not having a leg to stand upon; and the "cordial union", between "all classes of protectionists" and the advocates of a fixed duty was a flat impossibility. Lord John Russell had certainly given the experiment a very fair trial. In 1841, he tried the temper of "all classes of protectionists," with eight shillings-with what success, vide the Quarterly Review, of that year, and its lucubrations on the "revolutionary Whigs." Last summer, he tried them again with "four, five, or six shillings," qualified with a "perhaps." It was all of no uso, Strike high, or strike low, there was no such thing as pleasing them. The "friends of the existing institutions and policy of the country" had nothing to say to his lordship, or his lordship's fixed duty-not a man of them had a vote either for him or it. The " cordial union " is absolutely farcical. The bait is the veriest delusion that ever was hung out; and none but extremely hungry small fry would ever have had the silliness to bite. Of the morality of the scheme thus shadowed forth by the Quarterly Review, there is no need to speak. What a spectatacle that would have been, over the departed nossibility of which the Rigby imagination so fondly and tearfully lingers! The Liberal leader helping and heading the old enemies of his party, to tax the people's bread! Coalitions, at the best, are suspicious in honest and plain men's eyes but this would have had invany as its very basis and bond

We ought, perhaps, to apologise to Lord John Russell for maing his name even hypothetically, in connection with a nefarious project which it is utterly inconceivable that he could over have stooped to countonance under any combination of circumstances. But it is well to speak plainly, and to tell the whole Rigby kith and kin, Whig and Tory, that so thoroughly reguish a conspiracy never could have had so much as a momentary success. The League and the people would have trampled down the unholy alliance out of sight, and out of existence, in the very hour of its consummation. Long ere this the irresistible course of events would have palsied with terror the hearts of the men who should have dared to commit themselves to this felonious scheme. Why, cannot the dreamers over a dead, buried, and forgotton fixed duty see, that even if their favourite "adjustment," as the east phrase goes, had happened to be already in actual possession of the statute-book, it never could have kept possession? This year 1846 would have most effectually "adjusted" it. Ilad the Longue itself played traitor, nothing could have saved the eight shillings. Irish famino would, by this time, have taken the question out of the hands of all of us. No Minister-Whig, Tory, or nondescript-would over have dared to ask the English people to pay large sums of money for the purpose of feeding those millions of Irishmen who, between now and next harvost, will have to be fed at the English people's ost while an eight shilling landlords' tax was charged on every quarter of wheat, The public charity and the private tax never could have stood together. The fixed duty must have come offand "once off;" as Sir Robert Poel long ago said, " by whom is it to be laid on again!"

The truth is, as all the world well understandsexcepting only the men who have neither hearts nor heads to know a piece of statesmanship when they see it-Lord John Russell's "rash," "unfortunate," and "giddy" abandonment of the "grout position" which, in the lively Rigby imagination, he held up to the 22d of last November, was the vory wisest thing he ever did, for himself and for his party. The letter to the London electors saved the Whigs from political extinction. Had Sir Robert Peel's determination to abolish the Corn Law been publicly known before his illustrious rival "pronounced" in favour of Free Trade/the whole grace and force of Lord John Russell's adhesion would have been lost. The Whigs would have ceased to be the popular and Liberal party, in any sense of the words that the popular intelleet and sympathies can comprehend. Nothing would have remained to the "Liberal" breadtaxers but a caput mortuum of withered and defunct traditions. Lord J. Russell has shown himself to have far more of length, breadth, and depth of political view than many of those who call themselves his followers. His plain-spoken honesty has proved an immeasurably better policy than any that all the quidnune cunning of Pall-mall could have devised. By his frank, timely, and effective espousal of the principles and objects nearest to the hearts of the English people, he has won for himself a really "great position" in public esteem and honourwhich he will, we are confident, continue to occupy. long after both sliding scale and fixed duty shall have become matter of history.

THE POST TAKING MORAL GROUND. "No case—abuse Plaintiff's attorney."—(From THE ROOME, a Drama in many acts.)

The Post of Thursday morning takes a very short way with the Ministers and their Free Trade-policy. Sir Robert Peel, and Sir Robert Peel's colleagues, and "the crowd by which the present ministerial policy is most vehemently and noisily approved," are rescals—and of course there's no more to be said. The Free Traders, like the little tailor's sons in the old song, are "all xogues together "-and therefore Free Trade is, most propably, a bad thing. Let a man travel all over England "to recruit his town worn spirits"-and, |go where he will, he will find all the bad people staunch Free Traders, and nearly all the good people protectionists. Wherever ne "falls in with men of gentlemanly manners, whose conversation indicates education and experience," or with " plain, homely men, who possess respect for religion and law," he "will find a large majority of such men, either directly opposed to the ministerial policy, or very much afraid that it is a great error." On the other hand, all the "riffraff" people, who "smoke oigars and drink brandy-and-water"-all the "ruffiane" who wear whiskers and talk slang-all the "seoffers," who " treat all religion as mere superstition "-and all the "loose, disreputable fellows," of "dangerous opinions" and notoriously "profligate morals," are uncompromising Free Traders. On the whole, the general feeling among respectable, moral, and pious people decidedly is, that "there is something BLACK-GUARD in the present policy of the Government"that "there is some GROSS RASCALITY in the business."

Really, this is a wonderfully easy style of political writing, for those persons to whom good taste and a sense of propriety does not render it impossible. It saves a world of trouble. Calling one's political opponents "blackguards" is so much simpler than refuting their arguments. Dubbing the Free Traders "rufflans" and "rascals" is a thing so much sooner done than patching up a decent-looking case for monopoly.

We have no desire to imitate a writer whose passions thus overleap the restraints imposed by the ordinary proprieties of language, and we abstain altogether from those retorts which the well-known tastes, habits, and pursuits of some prominent persons of the monopolist party almost irresistibly suggest. But throwing dirt is not our forts. A writer who can do nothing better with his pen than "blackguard" a party, which has all the first-class statesmen of the country for its chiefs, and the whole mass of the sober, quiet, moral, steadygoing industrious classes, for its rank and file, places himself at once outside the pale of political controversy.

We have thought it worth while to notice this coarse and silly trash, partly as it shows how very hard monopoly must feel itself driven for something to say-but chiefly because of the radically false notion of the duties and responsibilities of statesmen, implied in this and similar assaults on the chiefs of the Free Trade Cabinet. In the modern protectionist philosophy of political morals, men who hold and avow different opinions now from what they held and avowed some years ago, are inso facto convicted of dishonosty - unless they whitewash themselves by refusing to give practical effect to their new opinions as to what national wellbeing demands. Second thoughts are sinful in a etatesman-unless he abstain from acting on them. For a public man to find out that he has been wrong, and to say so, may, perhaps, be venial -though we are not positively sure that this is to be found in the litera scripta of the protectionist code of othics;—but for a public man who finds he has been wrong, to proceed forthwith, and no what his conscience and judgment tell him is right, is " gross rascality"—there is " something blackguard" about it Opennoss to conviction, when embodied in act and fact, is dishonesty; and all who approve of a statesman's learning by experience, and adopting the results of experience into his policy, are "riffraff" and "ruffians."

The aim of all this is perfectly intelligible—but we beg to tell the Post and its patrons that it won't do.

They are quite out in their calculations when they racken on damaging and discrediting Sir Robert Pool and Sir James Graham by this sort of tirade. No doubt there is much in the public lives of these Ministers, as of others of our prominent Parliamentary politicians, which invites moral criticism and reprehension;—but this is a work demanding widely different qualifications from these which appaar to be at the command of our contemporary—not to add, that after all, the characters of individual Ministers are not, at this moment, the question before the country. Public opinion and public tasts will not approve the combination of the airs of a moral censor with the dialect of a fish-woman. The Post may stand assured that the only possible effect of its brainless and unmannerly vituperation is to strengthen and deepen—in the minds of such of the industrious classes as are cognisant of the Post's existence—the sense of the gratitude due to Ministers for the intelligence, carnestness, and vigour of their recent advocacy of the rights of industry.

THE EXPIRING STRUGGLES OF MONOPOLY IN AMERICA.

Monopoly has run its race in America. The monopolists of that country, aided by the English tariff, and by the eloquent declamation of Clay and Webster, succeeded for a time in mystifying and frightening Brother Jonathan into the belief that Free Trade was fraught with dangers. His natural shrewdness, however, has at length led him to discover that it is not his interest to be obliged by law to pay from 20 to 50 percent. more for every thing he needs except food, and at the same time to sell his corn and provisions in the cheapest markets into the bargain. An American correspondent writes us-"The gallant struggles of the League in England have long created great sympathy here, and have given new interest to the exertions of Calhoun and McDuffle in Congress, which there is now every prospect of being crowned with success. The discussions in England have prepared the public mind here to appreciate Mr. Walker's able report, and the Free Trade measures of Sir Robert Peel have given the finishing stroke to monopoly. There is little doubt that Mr. Walker's views will be in part, if not wholly, carried out this session; but if the monopolists in Congress succeed in clipping them now, it will only lead to more extensive reductions in our tariff next session."

 $Mr.\ Walker's admirable report, showing by the most$ incontrovertible facts that the manufacturing monopoly costs America an annual sum equal to double the amount of the revenue of the country, has startled Brother Jonathan as much as the people here were startled by the evidence of Deacon Hume and MacGregor before the Import Duties Committee, to the effect that our corn and provision monopolies were a burthen equal to the whole expenditure of the country, including the interest on the national debt. It needs no seer to foretell that the publication of such facts in free countries like England and America, must soon be followed by the downfall of a system so prejudicial to the national interests of both. The manufacturing monopolists of America, and the corn monopolists of England, are therefore equally alarmed at the propositions of the ministers of both countries, simultaneously to abolish protec-

Boston, in the United States, is the stronghold of the American monopolists; and the Hon. Abbott Lawrence, the largest manufacturer in that country, holds a similar position, as their monopolist champion, with our Duke of Richmond, the champion of the corn monopoly. A pamphlet has been sent to us, containing letters addressed by Mr. Lawrence to the Hon. W. C. Rives, of Virginia, in favour of "protection to native industry," to which S. D. Bradford, Esq., a Free Trader, has had the temerity to roply; and so strong is the monopolist interest in that city, that only one of the newspapers could be prevailed upon to insert Mr. Bradford's letter. Mr. Lawrence's letters are couched in similar language to the monopolists' writings here—bold assertion and rhodomontade—which Mr. Bradford meets with facts and figures very perplexing to con-

"From the intimation given near the close of your first communication (says Mr. Bradford, in his first letter to Mr. Lawrenge). I had made up my mind that your second would be devoted to break down demolish, and overthrow the report of Mr. Walker, secretary of the Treasury; her sould I wonder that you should desire to do sp. This public document had attracted universal stantion, job only in America, but is Financial less than the product of the product of the public document had attracted universal stantion, job only in America, but is Financial less than the olive branch of reace, and mad rendered almost acceptable to that proud nation the high and lofty pretences of the President's measure. It had been mentioned as a most extraordinary state paper by the governor of Massalm most extraordinary state paper by the governor of Massalm most extraordinary state paper by the governor of Massalm setts in his admind measure. It had charged upon the president injustice and inaquality. It had attempted to show has a enriched the few at the expense of the many; how the high est rates of duty were paid upon the articles consumed prescipally by the poorer classes; how oppressive it was to our commerce and navigating interest; and unjust also toward the agriculturists and planters, in limiting their markets. Mr. Walker had estimated the sum of extra taxation im posed in this manner upon the country for the particular benefit of the manufacturers, as amounting to 54 millions of dollars per annum; being equal to double the amount of the revenue of the whole United States. These are high charges, and ought to be disproved, if they can be. I hope, however, that you will pardon my freedom of speech, and impute it only to my regard for the truth, when I assure you that I have been unable to find in your letter the refutation of any one of the charges above enumerated."

Mr. Lawrence doubtless found it much more difficult to "demolish and overthrow the report of Mr. Walker" than to include in confident assertions, that even if Great Britain abolished her corn and provision laws, exports from America of these articles would not increase—just as our monopolist tell us that if we abolish our Corn Laws, our exports of manufactures will not increase.

Mr. Lawrence was at one time one of the largest importers of foreign manufactures in Boston. He was then a Free Trader, and a leading member of the committee appointed at the colebrated Fauncial Hall meeting, in 1820, "to consider what measures are proper to be pursued in order to avert the calamity which must eventually flow from the passage of the tariff bill, referred to the ensuing session of Congress." He then considered, in the language of the resolutions prepared by this committee, that "the proposed high tariff and the principles on which it is avowedly founded, would have a tendency to dim nish the industry, impede the prosperity, and corrupt the morals of the people." He further considered, in another resolution, "that the obvious cons quence of the adoption of the tariffs would be, that the furmer must give more than he now does for all he buys, and receive less for all he sells." But Mr. Lawrence has since tasted the sweets of monopoly; he has accumulated enormous wealth by the law which obliges his countrymen to pay him a higher price for his manufactures than they could buy them at if the monopoly were abolished; and now he has the effrontery to tell them, in effect, that if the farmer were by the abolition of high bounties on domestic_manufactures to-give less than be now does for all he buys, and receive more for all he sells, the country would be involved in a flood of ruin foarful to contemplate. But Mr. Lawrence shall speak for himself. Referring to Mr. Walker's proposed new tariff, he says:

prot

Buga

aller

facti iron

do y lince artic

them

M(ot

of th dolus

Blood

altere

Ou

from

Brad

COMIT

क क्रा

Total

"The question then arises, what will be our condition after the proposed plan of low duties goes into operation In 20 days after the bill becomes a law, it will have reached every country in Europe with which we have trade; the manufactories are all set in motion for the supply of the American market; the merchandise is shipped on account of foreigners, in many cases with double invoices, one set for the custom house, and another for the sales, so that, instead of the duty amounting to 20 per cent., it will not probably exceed 15 per cent. This has been the experience of the American importers in New York, who, previous to the passing of the tariff of 1842, had (most of them) abandoned the haringer, not being a like the control of them abandoned the haringer. the business, not being able to compete successfully with fraudulent foreigners. I will not say that all foreigners commit frauds on the revenue,—far from it; but I do say that enormous frauds have been perpetrated by foreigners. on the revenue, under ad raterem duties, and will be againprostrating the business of honest foreign and American importers. In less than twelve months after the new plan shall have been in operation, this whole country will be lite rally surfeited with foreign merchandise (if it he not so, the revenue will fall short of the wants of the Government); we shall then owe a debt abroad of millions of dollars, twhich must be paid in coin. The exchanges go up to a point that makes it profitable to ship specie; money becomes source in the Atlantic cities, yet bills on England and France do not full; the loans made to the south and west are called in; demands for debts due from those sections of country are made; exchange cannot be obtained; produce is purchased and alternative and the north it purchased and shipped; and when it arrives at the north, it will not command the cost in the west; a paralysis will have struck the hardhave struck the business of the country; produce will ro-longer answer to pay debts due at the north, and the next resort is to coin, which is to be collected and sent down the resort is to coin, which is to be collected and sant down the Mississippi, or over the mountains to Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston. Western and southern create are out off, as the people of those sections can no longer promptly meat their engagements. The new states, and he outer circle of the republic, are the weak points; and the first giving way of the banks is heard from those points where there is the least amount of central. We see the storm approaching like a thunder shower in a summer's day; we waster the great marks of trade and the architecture waster than the storm that the section of the swell everything in its course; and the banks of the swell everything in its course; and the banks of the swell everything in its course; and the banks of the swell everything in its course; and the banks of the swell everything in its course; and the banks of the swell everything in its course; and the banks of the swell everything in its course; and the banks of the swell everything in its course; and the banks of the swell everything in the course.

erde ori

will take place within the space of eighteen months from the time this experimental bill goes into operation; and not a specie paying bank doing budges, will be found in the United States. Where will be the revenue which was to produce such a mighty sum united by duties? Where is the treasury and the accretary? and the President and his Cabinet? The treasury is empty; the secretary is making his estimates of income for 1849, and preparing to sak Congress for a large batch of treasury notes; or, perhaps, the deficit is so large that a loan may be required."

Such is the catalogue of evils which Mr. Lawrence predicts will befall his country, if he and other manufacturers are deprived of the privilege of plundering it to the tune (according to Mr. Walker's estimate) of fifty-four millions of dollars per annum. But we are much mistaken if Brother Jonathan will be scared from doing himself justice by empty alarms of the consequences, especially when he looks to this side the Atlantic, and finds that every proposed relaxation of our monopoly system from the alteration of our navigation laws to the abolition of the wool-tax last year, has been attended with monopolist prognostications of ruin to the country. And although it is proved beyond controversy that every relaxation of our protective system hithorto adopted has been attended with benefits far exceeding the most sanguine expectations, the monopolist cry of disaster and calamity from any further approximation to Free Trade is as vehemontly repeated as ever. The fearful consequences predicted from the repeal of our Corn Lines and the abolition of all other monopolies are, that we shall lose our colonies; that the land will cease to be cultivated; that wages will fall; that the country will be drained of all its specie, because foreigners will not sell corn, except for gold; that the revenue will fall off, and the interest on the national debt will no longer be paid; that our venerable constitution will be endangered, the church destroyed, and eventually the monarchy overthrown. Free Traders are not frightened; they only laugh at such raw-head-and-bloody-bone attempts to terrify the simple. Their short and simple answer to such monopolist alarmists is, "Keep your hands out of our pockets, and we will take the risk of being ruined by it."

There is no charge the injustice of which the monopolists here complain more than that of selfishness. They protest that they desire to see protection extended to all. Mr. Lawrence is equally

"I have never (says he) advocated a protective tariff for my own or the New England States exclusively, nor have those gentlemen with whom I have been associated in this cause, at any time, entertained a narrow or sectional view of the question. We have bolieved it to be for the interest of the whole country, that its labour should be protected, and so far as I have had to do with the adjustment of those diffcult combinations embraced in a tariff bill, I have endea-voured to take care that the interests of all the states were protected, whether they were large or small. I say now to you, and it should be said in congress, and to the country, that Massachusetts asks no exclusive legislation. If Pennsylvania, New York, and Ohio, the three great states, with kentucky, Georgia, Missouri, Alabama, and Louisiana, wish to try an experiment on iron, coal, hemp, cotton bagging, sugar, &c. &c., I am ready as one citizen of Massachusetts to meet it, and await in patient submission the result, which I doubt not will be found, within 18 months, in the realisation of all I have predicted. I say again, I would not, if I could, have a tariff made for Massachusetts alone."

Generous Mr. Lawrence! You kindly offer your aid to such individuals, in other states than your own, as are desirous of plundering the community er the fashion of the cotton and woollen manufacturers, by obtaining for them like monopolies in iron, coal, homp, cotton bagging, sugar &c. Is this what you call protection to ALL? What protection do you propose to give the growers of cotton, tobacco, rice, coru, boof, pork, and timber, the staple articles of your country? You know you can give them no protection. Your own generosity then, after all, is a mere protonce; all you want is protection to a few manufacturers, a mere fraction of of the people. The offer of protection to all is a delusive cheat, and will by and bye be as well understood in America (where the tariff has been already altered thirty times since 1789) as in England.

Our limits will not allow us to give further extracts from the letters of Mr. Lawrence, or those of Mr. Bradford. In fact, they are chiefly interesting to the community to whom they were addressed. There is so much similarity in the style and in the arguments adduced in support of protection, that if the words, corn, butter, beef and Bacon, was substituted for cottons, woollons, and hardwares, and vice verse, they would suit either side of the Atlantic. Wo have, however, been gratified to see the specious and reckless assertions of the American manufacturing monopolists so ably and satisfactorily mot by the facts and figures put forth by Mr. Bradford, and which cannot fail to impress the minds of dispassionate readers. Whilst Mr. Lawrence was hugging himself with the assurance that his monopoly was secure, because there was no prospect of England repealing her Corn Laws, Mr. Bradford was prodicting that the triumph of the League was at hand. Says ho:

"Free Trade has already obtained the total repeal of the duty on raw cotton. The next steamer may bring us the news of the total repeal of the duty on bread stuffs; and who can doubt that ere long there will be a total repeal of the provision laws?"

By a singular accident, the steamer arrived with Sir R. Peel's speech the very day the letter was published, by which the prediction was fulfilled, to the no small dismay of the monopolists.

We cannot withhold the concluding paragraph of Mr. Bradford's letter, in which all Free Tradors will

"To what you will, you cannot destroy Free Trade, nor retard its progress much longer. Its course is 'upward and onward.' It is being adopted by the nation which General Cass informs us possesses already one seventh of the whole earth, and whose Government rules over one eighth of all the inhabitants of the globe. It has recently overthrown the iniminations of the gione. It has recently overthrown the strongest, and in my opinion the best Ministry, which has existed in England for a long time, because they hesitated to repeal the Corn Laws. It will overthrow the next probably, unless they will agree to remove the restrictions on provisions, and also on tea, coffee, and sugar. It is destined to change the fiscal regulations of the whole world. The opinion is becoming almost universal that when Great Britain shall adopt a scale of duties founded on a true revenue principle, the tariffs of all other nations will soon fall before it. It does not ask whether the industrious but suffering operative dwells in the mountains of Switzerland or upon the stoppes of Russia. Its philanthropy is expansive. It embraces the whole world. It assists the deserving, and relieves the wants of the suffering, wherever they may be found. It is the herald of peace and civilisation. Free Trade may be compared to an Alpine plant. It is highlight. Trade may be compared to an Alpine plant. It is healthy and hardy, and survives the concussions of the severest tempests, for it depends on itself alone for support. Protection is a hot-house plant, always kept alive at a great expense, often sickly, and requiring constant attention. What wise legislator would hesitate to which he should give the preference?"

CANADA.

The following address has been forwarded to us by the Free Trade Association in Canada; and we insort it with much pleasure as manifesting the existence of a movement in that quarter which cannot fuil, if perseveringly pushed forward, to issue in conferring on our colonial brothren the inestimable advantages of unrestricted commerce:

ADDRESS OF THE FREE TRADE ASSOCIATION, TO THE INHABITANTS OF CANADA. FELLOW COUNTRYMEN,

A crisis has arrived in the commercial affairs of this colony which demands the best energies, the devoted attention of all concerned in the welfare of its various rising interests.

That crisis has arisen from the new commercial pelicy of the mother country—a policy which strikes at the root of protection in every shape, exposing at once this colony and the mother country to the severest effects of unrestricted competition. To raise objections to this policy would not only be idle, but inconsistent with the objects of this Asso-

Believing, as we do, that the principle of Free Trade, applied generally to the commerce of a country, is sound, and the wisest, under all circumstances, for a nation to adopt in order to secure the prosperity of all classes; believing also, (since the mother country is depriving us of the favour we have hitherto enjoyed in her markets,) that the prosperity of Canada can only be maintained by its trade heigh repulered free, allowing industry and central to greek out. e, allowin heing rendered free, allowing industry and capital to seek out their natural distribution and employment; but approbensive at the same time that our legislature is not yet prepared to give affect by law to these liberal views, we have deemed it prudent and expedient to form ourselves into an Association for the purpose of collecting in one body all who agree in opinion with us. By this means we shall extend our influence, consolidate our views and interests, attain unity of purpose and action, and thereby place ourselves in a position to secure the assendancy of our principles in the commercial laws of the province.

United on the basis of Free Trade, we shall respectfully but firmly demand, in the first place, the removal of all imparial acts imposing discriminating or regulating duties; in the second place, the repeal of all duties, imperial and local, levied on American wheat, provisions, or corn of any kind whateoever; and leadly, we pledge ourselves to resist by every lawful means. the future enertment of any protective prewhatenever; and leasily, we pledge ourselves to resist by every lawful means, the future enactment of any protective, proinbitive, or merely regulating duties—ballsving such to be detrimental to the general interests of society, and at variance with sound policy.

We further evow that we entertain the opinion that duties should be levied solely for the purpose of creating revonue to provide for the necessities of Government, and the extenston of internal improvements; and that, for these objects, such articles only should be selected for duty as will afford it without restricting, or fattering the general commerce—the carrying trade—or the agricultural industry of the country.
Dislaving these to be our guiding principles and opinions, we now as resetly invitament of all classes throughout the provides,
to compute and compared with us to give them, provided,
to compute and compared with us to give them, provided, and them through the legislature. We sell upon our fellow-citizans to enrol their names upon our backs, and our fellow-entables to enter their names upon our books, and our fellow-entableds at a distance to form branches, in connection with this control Association.

The commerce and industry of this colony, as yet in their infancy, and hitherto nourished under an unsound system of the seal out their sections. protective stimulants, will soon be left to seek out their natural channels; and fortunate will it be for our common welfare, if, by our united efforts, we now succeed in planting the principle of Free Trade in our commercial system. Then,—but not ill then,—may we hope to make the Saint Lawrence the highway for the rich products of the teening west—to develope the vast resources of this rising colony—and to secure for her people the highest possible share of prosperity and happiness.

We shall now address a few words to the Canadian agriculturist, to satisfy him that he has nothing to fear from Free Trade; but that, on the contrary, he will derive advantage from it in common with every other member of the community. We are aware the opinion prevails that protective duties enhance prices, and we shall consequently take some pains to remove this fallacy.

All writers of eminence on the subject of political economy; all close and carnest observers of the course of trade, agree in opinion that where a country is in the habit of exporting in opinion that where a country is in the habit of exporting any surplus produce, the price in the market she mainly depends on, as her customer, regulates the value of the whole to the producer. Canada is in that position. She has for many years past been an exporter of agricultural produce, partly her own growth, and partly naturalised American; and the course of prices has ever been regulated by the value in the markets to which such surplus was sent. To prove this the markets to which such surplus was sent. To prove this to the satisfaction of all reasonable men, it will only be necessary, we think, to review prices here for the last six years. We adopt this term as most likely to carry conviction to the minds of agriculturists, because it enables us to compare prices during two periods of directly opposite character. During the first period, American wheat was admitted duty free; during the latter it was subject to a duty of 3s. sterling per quarter. Let us now compare the average price of flour in the said years in the Montreal market; taking flour as our criterion, not as being better adapted to our purpose, but because the market prices are better fixed and more readily got at. We shall place these prices in parallel columns, that the principle we are contending for may be obvious at a glance, viz; that, to the Canadian agriculturist, prices are not enhanced by protective daties, but depend on the market to which his median to gentle.

Thus when American Wheat American Wheat subject to was admitted into Canada free, prices were as follows, i. c. the average of the year:

1840 ... 26s 10d
1841 ... 28s 5d
1849 ... 30s 0d a duty of 3s, sterling per quarter; Average prices of the year; 1843 . 25s 7d 1844 . 25s 3d .. ชอด 7d .. ชอด 5d .. $7s 2d verage of 3 years, 28s od Average of 3 years, 26e which his preduce is sent:

Who now will contend, with these facts before him, that prices are enhanced by protective duties, or that such duties favour in the slightest degree the prosperity of the Canadian farmer? We call upon him, therefore, to unite with us to rid the country of such fettering duties, which plainly have no effect but that of crippling its industry, and restricting its commerce. Let him also bear in mind, that our plan, if fully carried out, will cheapen every commodity which he requires for his daily uso; for, by removing all discriminating and regulating duties, we shall enable him and every other consumer, to obtain his sugar and his tea, his wearing apparel and his luxuries, wherever he can procure them cheanest.

We now proceed, in the development of our plan, to show the incalculable advantages that will result to Canadian com-merce and the carrying trade, by removing all duties and restrictions from American produce.

First, we shall show the amount of produce collected annually on the shores of our great inland waters, and brought to this city for distribution to the various markets of consumption; next, the vast quantity that passes through the Eric Caual, seeking a market at New York, and other American ports; and lastly, we shall show that it is in the power of Canada to divert a large share of this latter trade through her own waters, if her people and legislature will promptly give effect to the liberal and enlarged policy which it is the object of this Association to advocate and urge:

No. 1,-Table showing the quantity of Produce brought by the St. Lawrence to the City of Montreal in the year 1846.

Pork. Bris.	Boef, Brls,	lard. Kogs.	Flour. Bris.	Wheat. Bush.	Othor Grain, Bush,	Ashes. Вим.	Butter, Koga,
6109	723	461	590,305	450,200	40781	33,000	HIIZ
No. 2	-'I'able	showing the	g the qu Erio Can	mulity of all in the	Produc your 184/	o carried	through

Pork. Brls.	Beef. Brls.	Lard. Lbs.	Flour. Brls.	Whoat, Bush.	Corn. Bugh.	Plax- nood. Libn,	Anlien. Bris.
03046	7690	3084800	2517250	1620033	35803	8:10:10:10	80040

From the foregoing tables, it will be seen that the quantity carried through the latter channel is enormous as compared with the former. It becomes then a question of vital importance, whether a portion of this trade can be attracted through the St. Lawrence. We believe that it can, because the cheapest conveyance to the sea-board and to the manufacturing districts of New England must win the prize; and who will deny that the securing of this prize is not worth our best and united exertions? The cheapening of the means of transit is the great object to be attained; and our best practical authorities are firmly of opinion that the Saint Lawrence will be made the cheapest route as soon as our chain of inland improvements is est route as soon as our chain of inland improvements is rendered complete. They affirm that the cost of transporting a barrel of flour, from Detroit to Montreal, will not exceed is, 6d, to is. 9d. The difficulty will then be to secure a port of constant access to the sea; and that difficulty will be overcome by the early completion of the projected Portland railway; a road that will place us within a day's journey of that city, the harbour of which may be made the safest and cheapest on the Continent of America. By that route, we shall avoid the occasional dangers and inconveniences of the St. avoid the occonsional dangers and inconveniences of the St.

Lawrence from Montreal outwards, practically secure a longer season for trade in the fall of the year, and safely rockon ou relights to Liverpool as low as those from New York. But what is equally important to the trainfit trade to England, is this: that by rendering our charges cheaper than those through the Eric Canal to Boalon, we shall secure the trainfit trade to that great city, and all other Beatern markets, as well as the supplying of our class, colonies, promopny known as the lower ports. This ploture may appear too

in vait

pjoym

that ev

tive co

the col

le usol

opiulon

As m these se against entirely mally li

every praitogeth

another

what say

victually

('anada

the large form of Canada,

their ow who call motives

n Imitted

for which interested liave neve

ritory, an fenders of our timbe

It is need procured

exchange it will be there is To exports rea

foreign co materially goods, it the facts?

and the tre

that import our foreign way. From of timber.

tion and co

but more es According (

As we !

flattering to those who have not investigated the subject; but flattering to those who have not investigated the sunject; but to such we say, examination will convince them that, with the Saint Lawrence as a highway, and Portland as an outlet to the sea, we shall be enabled successfully to struggle for the mighty trade of the west, and bid defance to competition on the more artificial route of the Eric Canal. But there is no time for slumbering; inactivity at this crisis would be fatel to our hones; even the vary produce of would be fatal to our hopes; even the very produce of Western Canada may be carried, in spite of us, through American channels, unless we immediately carry out the completion of our own.

We may also here remind the Canadian farmer, at whatever place he may be situated, that every saving effected in the means of bringing his produce to market, adds in the same degree to the value of his wheat and every other marketable produce of the soil he cultivates. And here it may not be out of place to add that, repudiating all sectional feelings, we seek no advantage for element to require advantage. ings, we seek no advantage for classes, no peculiar advantage for Montreal over other parts of the province; we advocate, on the contrary, the general interests of producers and consumers—the general welfare of the community, sumers—the general welfare of the community.

In connection with the foregoing we shall now briefly advert to the Regulation Acts imposed by the mother country, for the purpose of scenring harmony in the working of her commercial policy. These Acts were carried when England's policy was protective, and we had no right or interest to complain of them. Now her policy is founded on the opposite principle, that of Free Trade, and it becomes the duty of this colony to object to their continuance, as incompatible with the welfare and development of her resources and interests. We allude now to the imof her resources and interests. We allude now to the imperial duties on American produce and provisions generally. ngland can have no interest now in maintaining these fetters on our trade, and will doubtless remove them as soon as their objectionable effects are fairly and legitimately brought under her novice, orought under ner nouse,

The imperial duties upon foreign manufactures are also objectionable, as being at variance with the imperial maxim of legislation:—"That it is true policy to buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market." They are also at variance with the doctrine laid down by Mr. Goulburn, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the late debates in the House of Commons, "that Canada has no right to complain as long as she is placed on the same footing as the inhabitants of the mother country.

Accepting this doctrine as sound, this Association shall deem it its duty to demand the removal of all Imperial Acts levying discriminating duties on articles of foreign manufacture; thus leaving us free to obtain our supplies wherever they can be produced cheapest,

We conclude by again appealing to the Canadian public to combine with us to give effect to the principles of Free Trade in our commercial policy—the only policy which can secure prosperity and rapid development to our great resources and the rising interests of all classes of society.

In the name of the Free Trade Association,

JOHN YOUNG, Chairman, Office of the Free Trade Association, Montreal, March, 1816.

FREE TRADE IN FRANCE

The following observations from the Journal des Débats, on the question of Free Trade, are interesting at the present moment, as, from the semi-official character of the Tibbats, it may probably be taken as expressing the opinions of the French Government on the question. The Debats says:

"The absolute isolation of nations, which is the object of prohibitionists, is a countersense in the present day. Is it peace or war which exists in Europe? Is it peace or war which ought to be encouraged? Is the most evident probability in favour of peace or war. What is a peace in which commerce, destined to bind nations together, is subjected to a thousand obstacles, a thousand delays, a thousand vexademand and ought to demand, they go right against their object in placing at each frontier excessive tariffs, like an unscaleable wall. Foreigner remains synonymous with enemy, increase if the common way will receive the first or if the common way will receive the first or if the common way will receive the first or if the common way will receive the first or if the common way will receive the first or the common way will receive the first or the first or the common way will receive the first of the common way will receive the first of the common way was at its contraction. just as if the cannon was still roaring. If a Free Trade between two nations is publicly qualified as a tribute paid to a foreign power, in place of becoming in the official language what it really is, a profitable arrangement for both parties, what is done but to excite relative to commerce those ideas of hostility and implacable jealousy, of which the political effects are so justly dreaded? It has been declared a thousand times to the friends of prohibition, without their being able to give it an answer—that these absolute pro-leibitions, these exorbitant duties, place everything on a wrong faoting, and in the end injure the very persons they were intended to protect. Let us take, for instance, the fabrication of linen threads and cloths by machinery. Great Britain, in whose manufactories work is done on so immense a scale, had produced a complete revolution in this article, and it was necessary to raise ourselves to a level with her. The principal impediment in this improve-ment consists in the dearness of spinning machines. What, ho sever, is done? At the moment that England permits ho vever, is done? At the moment that England permits the exportation of these machines, hitherto prohibited, in place of opening to them overy entrance free of duty for a period of four or five years, which would infallibly produce the creation of numerous spinning factories, the duty on them, already clevated, has been augmented to an extreme amount. This, forsooth, is called protecting the national labour. It must be stated that this most ill-judged measure is 0 to of those which the orators of the League delight in referring to most frequently, to prove to their auditory to what ino le of those which the orators of the Longue designt in referring to most frequently, to prove to their auditory to what inconsistencies the prohibitive system was sure to lead. Quite lately, even ideas of Free Trade, prescrited with extreme moderation, and with due regard to the projudices of nations, excited a sort of disdain. They were considered mere excited a sort of disdain. Utopian schemes, young men's dreams. Adam Smith was a madman, political economists lightheads; and in order to merit the title of a practical man, the first condition order to merit the title of a practical man, the first condition was to greet Free Trade, even in a mitigated point of view, with a smile. The practical man in commercial matters was he who had no fixed principle; who had matters was he who had no fixed principle; who had matter read nor written anything on the subject, if not to cause a laugh against political economy. What do practical men think of the matter at present? Is Sir R. Pool a practical man? Is the avowal which he has made of his old prohibitive illusions an error, or the act of a great statesman, etrong in his knowledge and his conviction? Is the atriking homoga which he has rendered to the memory of Action Smith the enthusiasm of an unthinking scholar? We know wall that our prohibitive gentlemen will say—Oh! this is another Machiavelian trick of la perfide Albion! England, which produces everything cheaper than other nations, has nothing to fear from the general reduction of duties; let us not be the dupes of this ruse de guerre. What England, however, produces cheaper than others is not wheat, which is certainly as important a matter as any other; nor glass, paper, silk goods, nor articles of fashion, or bronzes. The act of the English government is a sincere ore, inspired by a profound conviction. This conviction takes its origin in facts, and the result is, that the English Government takes this step the first without demanding a return from any one; it is not a bargain which it makes with other nations, but an example which it gives. It is an act of enlightened policy, a decisive demonstration in favour of the peace of the world, which thus receives a precious pladus. From what passes in England it must come to pledge. From what passes in England it must come to pass that in France, as elsewhere, in consequence of the movement that has declared itself, the old prohibition system will be shaken, and that the duties will be successively modified so as to facilitate Prec Trade. The formidable phrase of a tribute paid to foreign powers will lose its power and prestige. It will be generally understood that commercial transactions profit the two contracting parties, nation and nation as well as individual and individual. Already some governments, shaken by the example of Great Britain, give the signal. Absolute prohibitions will disappear from the code of nations, from ours at least, where they are still so multiplied. It will be admitted that it is good for foreign competition to make itself be felt, in order to stimulate manufacturing improvements. The various great interests of the kingdom are as little tractable in England as with its, and yet we find that they yield to evidence, and accept what is commanded by the general interest. We do not deny that absolute liberty of commerce is, like perpetual peace, a Utopian scheme; but still it is one of those schemes which we ought to endeavour to approach as much as possible, and towards which we ought each day to make a step. The ultra-conduct of the partisans of the prohibitive system has at length produced a reaction which will impel us strongly in the course just alluded to. Such is the state of things, and we consider it fortunate for the country."

PROGRESS OF FREE TRADE ON THE CONTINENT.

(From the Times.)
The principles of Free Trade, so efficiently demonstrated in the measures of Sir Robert Peel, have, we have many reasons for believing, already found an echo on the Continent. The large mass of population embraced in the Zollverein, or German Customs Union, are impatiently awaiting the final accomplishment of those measures, in order that they may demand a corresponding reduction of the import duties which at present press so heavily on many articles of consumption. They will not, after England gives the example, continue to suffer under the penalties of restrictive, or, as they are improperly called, "protecting duties." cloth and the cotton which we can furnish at from 25 to 60 per cent, cheaper than the native manufacturer must ere long find their way into all the German markets. The good of the many cannot be sacrificed to the benefit of the few. And the mistaken policy by which some millions of people are condemned to purchase an inferior article at an exorbitant price will receive, even in its stronghold of the Zollverein, a speedy condemnation.

The King of Prussia has taken the first step in this important affair. He has addressed a note to all the members of the Customs Union, impressing on them the necessity of yielding to the spirit of the age, and of revising the tariff. It is true that the southern states of the Union receive those advances with much coldness, and that the influence of the capitalist manufacturers is for the moment predominant. But those local interests must give way before the principle of Free Trade; and if the Prussian Government follow up this step with sufficient vigour, public opinion will triumph over a partial and selfish opposition. The influence of England is great; her moral power is the wonder of the world; but never have their effects been more sensibly felt than in the rapid adoption of the principles advocated by Sir Robert Pecl, and supported by so great a majority of the House of Commons, throughout an union of states where monopoly and protection apparently were most firmly esta-

THE ROAR OF THE BRITISH LION. (From the Morning Chronicle.)

We thought the protectionists were going to make great play this Easter recess. It was not to be supposed that men of so much practical good sense could be toiling away in the House of the Commons, sweating themselves and boring mankind, without some definite object in view. The chiest of that multipoliums and interminable contour are object of their multitudinous and interminable oratory appeared palpable. Why was the meagre material of one night's debate amplified by repetition and dilution into the talk of twenty nights? Why were old squires condemned to break the silence of years? new county members put up to break the silence of years? new county members put up to boggle the very night they had taken their seats? and unitedged marquesses pushed into premature flights of speech? Why did Lord George speak three mortal hours, and Miles two? Why was the plug taken out from the barrel of Borthwick's swipes for more than an hour a time for three successive evenings? Why was Finch allowed to twitter on for hours? It seemed at the time very clear. All the successive evenings? Why was Finch allowed to twitter on for hours? It seemed at the time very clear. All the world supposed that the protectionists thought they should gain something by keeping the Corn Bill in the Commons till after Easter. We anticipated terrible county meetings during the recess. The protectionist leaders were to go down to the country, and poke up the British lion till he roared. The House of Lords, too, was to be acted on. Apostates were to be shamed, and waverers terrified or encouraged, so that the rejection of the bill was to be rendered a matter of that the rejection of the bill was to be rendered a matter of certainty.

Well, Easter is come; the holidays are half over, and the country does not move. The British lion sits immovable, either utterly cowed, or utterly indifferent to the cause of national desired in the country does not not be caused in the country does not not be caused in the country does not not be country not because of national desired in the country not because of national desired in the country not because of national desired in the country not because of national desired in the country not because of the country either utterly cowed, or utterly indifferent to the cause of native industry. There has not been a county meeting; no apostate has been ducked, or even had a requisition presented to him. The "country party" have not been paraded in triumph by grateful farmers, or decorated with prowns of grass. At any rate, when our patriots return to carry on the conflict with Peel, and time, and human patience, they will have no fresh materials furnished by public damonstrations: connot with l'eel, and time, and human patience, they will have no fresh materials furnished by public demonstrations; they will be confined to retailing the talk of their tenants, and stating the public opinion of their parishes.

The Post sees the necessities of its party's case, and endeavours to make out a case of public excitement. It has the heading, "Protection to British Industry" stereotyped in the largest characters, and ready to direct attention to every semblance of meeting in behalf of that sacred can. But nothing worthy of the type can be got to print much neath the heading. On Monday we imagined that seem tion of the country had been got to open its mouth when saw near a page of reporting under this tempting title. But a found that the only real movement in telegraphs saw near a page of reporting under this templing ute. But also I we found that the only real movement in behalf of British industry had been got up by our old biends in Spitalfields weavers. It is a comfortable thing to see the energies of this body unexhausted by the somewhat uses sonable demand made on them by the protectionists. The home in someth constituted almost the entire out-of-door for have in truth constituted almost the entire out of door fare of monopoly since the promulgation of Sir Rober Paris measures. The centre and circumference of national error ment have been in Bethnal-green.

And undoubtedly the Bethnal-green meeting pressure the features usually observable in modern agriculture. the features usually observation in modern agrance. It had its chairman and its secretary—people to make and second—possibly people to support its resolution and second—possibly people to support its resolution. The secretary had to report the usual incidents of the organised agitation which the weavers have set on fact the funds collected, the means taken for spreading agit. the funds collected, the means taken for spreading agination, the prospects of the cause, the merits of trusty field. Like the Anti-Corn-Law League, the protectionists of Bethnal green are collecting a fund, and inundating the country with tracts. The resemblance to the League is to be constructed and chieses that seen, however, rather in the principles and objects than in the extent of the Bethnal green organisation. The cont. butions to the fund seem to consist of one 5/. note, sent in an anonymous old lady. This donation is stated two three times over; but as far as we can understand the report, the subject matter is one and the same five pound not This five-pound note is to be spent in calightening the country; and the full ghtenment is to be effected by taking and circulating a certain number of copies of Lord George Bentinek's "celebrated speech." On this and the exercises of the Morning Post the hopes of the meeting seemed to

Of all this we highly approve. The circulation of the "celebrated" speech is a very fit object for the expenditure of the old lady's five-pound note. She need be under no alarm as to the result; for unless the printer have put in something more stirring than the speaker ever dresued of, we may feel perfectly confident that no undue excitement will be produced among the readers of the speech. The results, therefore, of the Bethnal-green meeting seem to us to be by no means calculated to produce any material alteration in the state of affairs.

There was, however, another meeting reported by our contemporary, which though of a kind usually classed under the heading of Protection to British Industry, was very properly placed in another part of the paper. We mean the meeting of the Furmers Club at Watford, to which we adverted yester day, and which was undoubtedly anything but calculated to help forward what are called the farmers friends. In the first place, it is quite obvious that the Hertfordshire farmers think the question of the Corn Laws settled. Otherque-tions are beginning already to occupy the first place in the attention, The subject of "tenant rights" was brought for attention, The subject of "tenant rights" was brought pr-ward and discussed. Tenancy-at-will was generally de-nounced as prejudicial to the farmer: the "custom of the was derided as a worthless guarantee for the tenant, and "legislative enactments" were generally insisted upon as the only true security. The discussion closed by the unanimous passing of a resolution, which expresses a pretty definite opinion on the subject matter, and shows that the Hertfordshire farmers are not likely to lose kight of a. It is, "that the 'tenant rights' is well worthy of consideration, as equally calculated to promote the interests of both landlord and tenant, and the advancement of practical agri-

But besides this, there was the speech of Lord Essex, et increased by its being that of a man whose Conservative alarms have led him to quit the Whig politics of his family. and who very recently came forward at a public meeting at St. Alban's, and declared himself a stout protectionist. This speech was received with patience, if not with satisfaction, by Lord Essex's rustic auditors. It does not seem in the slightest degree to have disturbed the harmony of the meeting, or to have weakened the personal regard felt for his lordship. Mr. Hibbert, the only person that attempted any kind of answer, admitted protection to be a "broken read" and did not a company to the former would be reed;" and did not seem to think that the farmers would be much the worse for the loss of its faucied support. The only point on which he differed from Lord Essex was the conduct of "those by whom that reed had been broken." He is evidently very angry with Sir Robert Peel; and complains of the "rapidity" or what he calls the "ferocity" with which he has pushed on his Free Trade measures. But this speech is a good proof that among men of sense even those who would rather the bill had not been brought in-have little to say against it, and no hopes of stopping it.

The whole meeting was most significant of the alteration of feeling which has been going on among the agricultural hody since Sir Robert Page introduced his measure. The protracted discussion of the Corn Bill will not have been without some compensating advantages in bringing out this state of feeling; and the conversion of Lord Essex may not be the less useful for baving been made public some weeks before the House of Lords are called upon to vote. Such exhibitions of public feeling we are content to receive as a set off against the meeting in Bethnal-green, the old lady's five-pound note, and the gratuitous circulation of Lord George Beutinek's "celebrated speech."

THE COLONIES AND THE TIMBER DUTIES. (From the Morning Chronide.)

It is now evident that an attempt is being made to organise a strenuous opposition to the reduction of the timber duties.

For this purpose printed circulars, and letters, and copies of correspondence from provincial newspapers are extensively circulated with assiduity. In these papers there is not a fallacy, however ancient or exploded, that is not revived, nor a prejudice that is not appealed to. The colonies are applied for everything which they have been so recently ever and over again proved not to be. Manufacturers in Manchester, Birmingham, Shaffield, and Glasgowanealled upon, at any cost, to save the colonies as their only parameter. at any cost, to save the colonies as their only paragraphs foreign markets. Shipowners are implored to recous hos danger the main branch of the pairying trade of the histogram. don; Artisans and mechanics are jumined that the and extension of the colonial system are the only method and artisans and benerolant, who without an artisans and benerolant, who witness, the summit which, especially at particular political contraction.

timber impe rold, while chester, Bi to be the fa in 1913, the is published amount of o represent a from which banio year oi

So that th ertisans mus for the benef of the most i i lo supoms said they wil romers for ma But If we in markets bave portion as the to be even the the protected of the pr colonies offer the only safe asylum for our increasing surplus population.

It may be in wain that we prove that not only is our solo-uisl trule comparatively small of itself, but that it does not progress in the same proportion as that to foreign countries. Where we are without the benefit of protection, it may be in vain that we show, from the best authority, that even our shipowners are far more indebted to the foreign than to the colonial trade for the employment of their oraft ;-it may be is vain that we prove that for every mechanic who finds em-ployment in supplying the colonies with the manufactures of this country, at least four earn their bread by working for independent foreign markets;—and it may be of little use that we should produce evidence, which cannot be doubted. that even a majority of the emigrants who have left their native country in search of another home, have found it not in the colonies, but in foreign states. All this, we know, may be useless and in vain, as far as these inveterate monopolists themselves are concerned, whose main object is to secure the continuance of a system of restriction, on which they ignorantly believe their own immediate interests to be dependent. Fortunately, however, there is a large and enlightened public, who are now, above all things, anxious to form a correct opinion on these subjects, based upon unquestionable facts.

As might be expected, the parties who are now taking these active measures to raise in the public mind a projudice against any further reduction of the timber duties, dwell entirely, or mainly, on the importance of the Canada market. We would not, for a moment, wish to depreciate either the importance or the value of our North American colonies. We seek for the real colonists—that is, the people who ac-We seek for the reat colonies, dependent on their own industry every privilege which we seek for ourselves at home. altogether deny our right, or the policy, of taxing them indirectly, by imposing protecting duties upon our manufactures entering their territory for consumption. If they can obtain their clothing or their luxuries cheaper or better from another market, we contend they are entitled to do so. But what say these soi disant friends to the colonies here? The overture they make amounts to a kind of compromise of the real interests of the consumers at home and in the colonies, in order that thus a small class shall be benefited. They virtually propose that the great mass of the community in Canada shall be taxed in the form of dear clothing, and that the large mass of consumers at home shall be taxed in the dear timber and dear food, in order that the comparatively small class engaged in the timber trade from Canada, and in the export trade to Canada, shall advance their own interests. These men, mostly residing at home, who call themselves the colonial interest, have objects and motives as wide apart from the real advantage of the large mass of the people in the colonies, as it is now generally a limited the labouring population at home have in the objects for which landlords have struggled to maintain dear bread on great a distinction cannot be made between individuals interested in colonial monopolies, of whom a large majority have never so much as set foot in any of our colonial ter-niory, and the great mass of the population of the colonics.

As we have said, the main argument on which the de-fenders of the timber monopoly rely is, that at present our chief dependence for the export of our manufactures is on the colonies generally, and on Canada in particular; that "when Canada is lost to England, we shall have to pay for our timber in gold, instead of in manufactures, as at present."
It is needless for us to stop to inquire how gold would be procured for such a purpose, were the emergency to arise; it is needless to dwell upon the obvious fact that if we possess gold, it can only be obtained from other countries in exchange for the articles actually produced by British labour; it will be sufficient that we should now inquire what ground there is for such an allegation. If it appeared that our main exports really found a market in the colonies, and if those foreign countries, whose produce we have either excluded or materially restricted by high duties, took few or none of our goods, it would not be a matter of surprise. But what are the facts? What, upon investigation, do we find to be the truth? Let us take the case of the timber trade by itself, and the trade with those countries from which we import that important article. The countries from which we derive our foreign timber are Germany, Russia, Sweden, and Norway. From these countries in 1844 we imported, of all kinds of timber, 536,737 loads, while from Canada we imported as (536,737 loads, while from Canada we imported as (536) loads; being, both of foreign and colonial timber, the largest quantity which, up to that period, had ever been imported in any single year. For several years the importation and consumption of timber have considerably increased, but more canadially since the reduction of the duties in 1842. but more especially since the reduction of the duties in 1842. According to the theory propounded by the timber monopolists, the public would be led to believe that every load of timber imported from the Continent has been paid for in cold, while Canada mainly sustains the industry of Manchester, Birmingham, and Sheffield. But what do we find to be the feet to be the facts when we turn to the Parliamentary accounts? In 1913, the last year for which such subdivision of the exports is published, it appears that out of 52,270,700L, the entire amount of our exports, the British North American colonies represent a sum of 1,751,211L, or little more than three per cent. of the whole. Turning to those Continental countries from which we import foreign timber, we find that in the same year our exports amounted to each as follows:

	The second second	to out	THE RESTORAGE
Rossia Busslen		• •	£1,895,519
Norway	••	• •	131,302 151,377
Gormany	, including Prus	ala .	6,681,049
	Total	.).	£8,829,240

so that the colonies on which our manufacturers and arisans must chiefly rely for a market for their products, and for the benefit of which we are called upon to maintain one of the most injurious monopolies, took, in 1848, goods to the amount of 1,761,2114, while those countries of which it is taid they will only take "gold" for their timber, were ous marrier manufactures to no less an amount than 8,529,2404. But if we inquire into the progress which these respective markets have made in consuming our manufactures, in proportion as the importation of timber has inoreased; the rach to be aven under by the advocates of deal timber are shown to be aven as to be even more groundless. If we compare our expects to the restricted timber are shown to be even more groundless. If we compare our expects to the restricted timber countries on the Continent in 1885, within a same in 1885, within a same in 1885, within a same in 1885, within a same in 1885, and to the restricted timber of the countries on the Continent in 1885, within a same in 1885, and to the restricted for that herease of trade on which our prowing population have relied for employment. Referring to Parlamentary accombines, we had in 1886 care appoint to the British our water points and the same points of the British out of the same points and the same points and the same points are same and the same points and the same points are same points.

Russia Swaden Norway Germany, including Prussia

Total .. 0,145,816 The two periods will therefore present the following comparison :

Exports to the protected timber colonies
Exports to the restricted foreign £9,099,550 .. 1,751,911 timber countries 0,145,016 .. 8,829,210

We thus arrive at two most important facts in the question. The protected timber colonies new consumer loss timber one fifth of the quantity of British manufactures which find one fifth of the quantity of British manufactures which find The protected timber colonies now consume less than a market in those countries whose better timber it is sought to exclude by high protective duties; and, moreover, while the colonial market has, notwithstanding the protection it has enjoyed, actually fallen off in the last ten years by 341,339%, the Continental timber countries have increased the consumption of our goods by 2,683,924/!

This is a fair sample of the truth of the assertions made in support of the vicious system contended for by the class of men who are now inundating the country with their " printed papers and circulars," in the vain hope of stemming the course of a wise and just policy, which consults not the private and selfish interests of a class, but which has for its object the true and lasting benefit of the whole community. We shall have abundance of opportunities, as this discussion proceeds, to show that not less groundless and faila-cious are the other arguments upon which these monopolists rely.

THE "LORDS" AGAIN. (From the Universe.)

An impression to some extent prevails that the measure of commercial reform which has been so triumphantly advocated, in the House of Commons will be just as triumph antly thrown out in the House of Peers; that while the people and the representatives of the people acknowledge its commanding character, or bow to its imperious necessity, our hereditary legislators, on whom the spirit of divination descended at their birth, will eject it with little ceremony and

We cannot, however, yield to an opinion so injurious to men whose functions and whose faculties we estimate so highly. We cannot suppose them wanting in all knowledge of the history of the past, or all foresight for the future. We cannot imagine that the only lever which can move them is. that very common, every-day uncanonical quality called sel-fishness. Heaven, in making them the lords of its creation, doubtless intended them to be the representatives of its bone-The prudence that has descended to them from an onnobled ancestry through many generations must still vindicate its prerogative of acting and judging-rightly. Of course they feel the need of the country with considerable With their far spread and far peopled possessions, living amidst the many-coloured miseries of an impoverished tenantry, and the difficulties of araised rental, how can it be otherwise? They will not therefore deprive themselves of the privilege and the pleasure of co-operating in the promotion of a plan, large and liberal, like their own minds, and which is designed to secure to the public that permanent relief which they are professedly so solicitous to confer.

Besides, they must feel that the interest of their order is staked, in some degree, upon their fair and frank dealing, and for that order they have a very religious veneration. Should they fall in this trial of principle, their sin terminates not with themselves—it is imputed to their caste. It extends to their progeny, to the third and fourth generation of lord-lings. They know and they weep over the solemn truth, that a new and mighty power has sprung up in the country, a power whose supremacy needs only be named to be dreaded by peer and by plebeian. The aristocracy of wealth seems likely to outbid, if not outweigh, the aristocracy of rank. Its rise, its progress, its history,—its wide spread ramifications, its tremendous strength, may well alarm the most blinded votary of hoary eld. The monied men of the kingdom—from their immense and ever available resources—have acquired an influence, which in this luries with the control of the -have acquired an influence, which, in this business-like and bad world, the descendants of kings envy. sess the idol before which the pride of station hends, and breathes not. They are the priests of that divinity in whom mortgaged landowners believe and tremble, -while their intimate acquaintance with the realities of this sober lifewith the honesties or the trickeries of trade—has given them all the advantage they can need over those whom inclination or habit has too long and too perilously estranged from the mass of the people. These knights of the long purse have been wise in time. They have thrown themselves into the conflict of commercial freedom; not as borne along by the tide of circumstances; not as compelled by the terrors of a crisis; but actually as leaders and champions,—now, martyrs in this cause,—now, victors in the fight of humanity. They have thus—to use the old expression—covered themselves with a glory which, whether it belongs to them or not, serves their purpose well. Protection and honour are beneath it. While the very necessities of argument place their opponents in a position, as invidious in its distinctions as dangerous in its results: making them, in appearance at least, the enemics of those whom their very privileges bind them to succour: obstructors to human freedom—mopopolists of the people's food. This is a character in which we imagine few would be ambitious to shine. And we hope their lordships will take timely care that none can ascribe to a sordid source either their movements or their motives. They cannot, it is true, be the originators of a scheme which has already found so many advocates, and whose leading principles have so long and so largely impregnated the mind of the country. But why should they not stand forth-if only in solf-defence-as immediate aboilnot stand form—it only in soir-defence—as summediate descri-tionists of a law that has been already doomed? They might thus secure a find of gratitude in the breast of the people, on which without the fear of their bills being dis-bonoured—they might safely draw in the great conflict— which many of them foresee—at least in those vicies studes from which none of them is exempt.

REV. THOS. SPENOER IN AMERICA.

(From the New York Mercury.)

Dim Beowale Ridgers.

The Rev. Mr. Spencer; a clargy man, of the Retablished Churchy in Michigan dell'ered a lecture here some months ago on the Com Laws, and another on temperance. He has laboured arduously in his own country to remove the burdens which are imposed on the people, and has done much to diffuse correct opinions. Ho has written a large number of tracts, which have been widely circulated. Among the rest, is one entitled "The People's Rights, and how to get them." The directions under the last part are of the most loyal and Christian character. They are, "by deserving them;" they must use none but moral means; they must not be ambitious of law-making; they must display a deep sonse of public justice, &c.

The extracts which we print below, stand under the first head, viz. "the people's rights." They are the reasonings of a strong and independent mind, which loves truth better than every thing else, and falters not, though that love carries him to the botton of a well. The thoughts require thinking to understand them, though very clearly expressed. We hope the multitudes who by endowments and combinations and logislative interference seek to do good, will see how their measures tend only to an early decrepitude in our country, and to embarrass the next generation with the great labour of undoing the bad deeds of their fathers. It is an idea worth thinking of, that the world belongs to the living generation, unembarassed, as far as possible, by the actions of the dead.

1. The right to earn a living with the fewest possible impediments. The rights of industry are the most important of all rights, and an honest man will claim no other subsistence than that which he can acquire by his own labour, Cobbett, in his "Advice to Young Men," says - "Start, I beseech, with this conviction firmly fixed in your mind, that being of hale body and sound mind, you have no right to any earthly existence without doing work of some sort or other; unless you have ample fortune whereon to live clear of dobt; and that even then you have no right to breed children, to be kept by others, or to be exposed to the chance of being so kept. To wish to live out the lahour of others is, besides the folly of it, to contemplate a fraud, as the least; and uniter certain circumstances, to meditate opthe least; and under deriain circumstances, to meditate oppression and robbery. Write it on your own heart, that you will depend solely on your own merit and your own exertions." And of himself he says—"A father like ours, it will be readily supposed, did not suffer us to eat the bread of idleness. I do not remember the time when I did not earn my own living." And when he became a Member of Parliament he sacribled all his success in life to his subject to the sacribuled. bed all his success in life to his early habits of industry. Labour and toil are, howover, by no means pleasant to men in general. There are always indolent men amongst the rich who will desire to live on State pensions: and idle men amongst the poor who will try to obtain parish pay; but the Divine command applies to all without exception "Six days shalt thou labour, and do all that them hast to do." Before a man complains, therefore, of the infringements of the rights which society owes to him, let him take care to respect this right which he owes to them, that he will not be burdensome to them, but will support himself and family by his industry. He is an enemy to mankind who would claim for one part of the community a right to sahsist upon the labour or property of another part: this will, in the long run, inevitably impoverish those who are compelled to pay, and degrade those who receive. All experience shows the truth of the assertion made by Lord Brougham in the House of Lords, that "Every permanent fund set apart for the support of the poor, from whomsoever proceeds ing, and by whomsoever administered, must needs multiply the colls it is intended to remedy.

On the other hand, he who labours has a right to demand from society that there shall be the fewest possible impediments in the way of obtaining his own living. There are natural impediments which are unavoidable, and which exorcise a salutary discipline over the human race, calling forth contrivance and forethought, and promoting the vigour of body and mind. The field must be cultivated before the brend can be caten; water must be got out of wells, metals out of mines. Long continued rain perplexes the farmer; the tempest scatters the ships of the merchant; and every man must exercise his faculties to foresee and provide against the calamities that may beful him. But whoever adds to these difficulties adds to the primoval curse; and if he make those difficulties so great as to render it scarcely possible for a man to live by his labour, he takes from that curse the the meroiful promise that was included in it—" In the sweat of thy face thou shalt cat bread," Legislators have over been interfering with the rights of industry. Whatever ties a man to a particular place, or limits the number of men engaged in any trade or employment; whatever confers any monopoly or peculiar privilege on some at the expense of the rest; -- whatever checks invention, meddles with machinery, or dictates the act of wages; -- whatever prevents a man from taking his labour or goods to the best market, or prevents his getting the largest amount of the necessaries of life in return for his labour or goods, from any quarter of the globe;—whatever makes commerce less free than the winds which blow over all lands, or than the ocean which washes every shore, places unnecessary obstacles in the way of getting a living.

TORRINGTON.—CHARITY OF THE LEAGUE.—We are happy to record the munificence of the Anti-Coru-Law League to the agricultural labourers of this place and the neighbouring parishes. On Monday last, Mr. C. Toms, of this town, "the moor man's friend," received a great quantity of beds and bedding from the League, for his disposal to the bodiess of the town and neighbourhood, of which unfor-tunate sufferers there are too many. The beds and bedding are of excellent quality, and such as would be no disgrace in a respectable tradesman's bedroom. Nothing could be more acceptable at a crisis like the present, when the town charities are at stake, and are likely to become a nonentity. Many poor families, who have had only a pallet of straw to sure of resting their bodies on a comfortable bed; and, no sure of resting their bodies on a comfortable bed; and, no doubt, will every night repeat their thanks to the League for the comforts they are put in possession of. This noble present has been obtained from the League for the poor through the agency and companionate inquiries of the poor through who has searched into and represented the Hercard state of the agricultural labourers of the neighbour bod, and to whom there is much preise and ment due. Would'll not be equally possibly on the gentry of the neighbourhood, now to rease a found, and make a similar present to incomino full remain bediess?—Devonshire Chronicle.

THE REVENUE

The usual returns of the revenue for the year and quarter ending the 5th lints, have been laid before the public. The returns for the year existing on the whole; a favourable rocult; but those for the quarter are marked by the results of the stagnation of business that has prevailed during a considerable portion of the last three months, especially in those branches of trade likely to be affected by the proposed blanges in the tariff. The general result may be summed. ul in a statement made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in reply to some questions put by Colonel Sibthorp, in the House of Commons on Monday evening:

"That last year, when he made known the financial arrangement for the year, he stated that he anticipated a surplus of 60,0001 on the account of the year, exclusive of the sem to be derived from China, and now he found that when he should racks his financial exposition of the actual surplus revenue, he should have to state that instead of 50,000, it amounted to one million and three-quarters, exclusive of the money from China."

Such being the facts, we saw with no little surprise in the Standard of Monday, an article on this subject, containing the most absurd and extravagant misstatements that have over come under our notice, even upon this most fertile source of blundering and misrepresentation. The Standard, ulter giving the figures of the return, says:

ufter giving the figures of the return, says:

"It may be well to compare the results of Sir Robert Peel's Free Trade policy, in a year, mark, said to be of extraordinary prosperity, with the right hon, baronets anticipations as explained by him on the 14th of February, 1845:—'I am now going to address toyaclf to the prospects of the coming year—that year which will terminate on the february, 1845:—'I am now going to address toyaclf to the prospects of the coming year—that year which will terminate on the february, 1845;—'I am now going from the Customs in this year (1845), on the 5th of April, rate at 122,000,0001.

" " We are not inclined to take the estimate of Customs for the coming year at more than 24,000,0001.

" " The Excise we feel ourselves warranted in estimating at 13,000,0001. The stamp duties we propose to take at their present actual produce, 7,100,0001.

On the 5th of April, 1846, therefore, we shall be entitled to make the total revenue, even if the income tax be discontinued, 51,000,0001."

6 1	•			Anticipated.	Realised.
Customa	• •	• •		£22,000,000	17,664,616
Exche		• •		13,500,000	11,880,085
 Prampa				7,100,000	7,090,691
Brampa	minus	meeta	e tuz)	51,100,000	41,395,743"

It would, therefore, appear, from this most sage and veracious chronicler of events, that the revenue from Customs and Excise has this year fallen short of Sir Robert Peel's unticipations by about six millions sterling.

One would have thought that the utter extravagance and absurdity of this result would have opened the eyes of the blindest dunce that ever bewildered his brains with financial statements. Unfortunately, however, the editor of the Standard is not only grossly ignorant on the subject of finance, but grossly dishonest on that as on all other sub-He did not desire to ascertain the truth, or he would very soon have discovered the gross, and, in the conductor of a public newspaper, almost incredible, blunder into which he had fallen.

It is quite true that Sir Robert Peel, on the occasion to which the Standard refers, did estimate the produce of the Customs at 22,000,000l., and the Excise at 13,500,000l., prorided the then existing duties were all maintained; but he proceeded to announce abolitions and reductions of taxes amounting to no less than 3,310,000%, all of which have since been carried into effect; and Sir Robert diminished his anticipations of the probable produce of the revenue by the amount of the taxes which he proposed to repeal.

This, however, constitutes only a portion of the blunder into which the Standard has fallen. Of course, Sir R. Peel, in making his annual financial statements spoke of the Customs and Excise revenues of the United Kingdom, which the Standard has very ingenuously compared with the product of the revenue for Great Britain! Every body who has even the slightest acquaintance with this subject knows that the usual quarterly returns do not include the produce of the revenue of Ireland; and, in the very paper with the article on which we are now commenting, those returns are given under their proper head of "An Abstract of the Net Produce of the Revenue of Great Britain," &c., &c.; so that the ignorance, or the dishonesty, or the mixture of both, which dictated this most extraordinary mass of blundering misropresentation, is neclectly ineversely. presentation, is perfectly inexcusable.

But, notwithstanding the flagrant nature of the Standard's misstatements,—although all London must have been ringing with laughter on Monday afternoon at the expense of the conductors of that journal,—we find the kindred Morning Herald falling into errors of the same kind yesterday morning. It gives a pretended statement of the produce of the Excise, from the year 1822 to 1846, in which the three last years stand thus

> 14,469,386

On these figures, the Herald makes the following remarks: Now, be it remembered, that in 1845, the Premier reduction "Now, be it remembered, that in 1845, the Premior's reduction of duty lavied upon excisable articles was estimated by himself, and he certainly could have had no object in underrating the amount, at something under a million sterling. Calling this reduction, then, 1,000,0000, we find that since 1844 there has been a decrease in the consumption of those articles which contribute to the comfort of the people of about 2,000,0007.

Where the Herald got the produce of the Excise for the year 1840, we are not informed; but it must have been from somobody who can see some months into futurity. Not laying any claim to the exercise of prophetic powers, we shall not onter upon any controversy on that point. With respect to the comparison of the years 1844 and 1846, however, we have a few words to say. In making this comparison, the Herald has fullen into the same blunder as the Standard, namely, that of comparing the produce of the entire revenue of the United Kingdom in the one year with that of Great Britain in the other. But this is not the only error. The Gerald, like the Standard, cannot make the simplest statemont without committing a brace of blunders. The net revenue of Excise, in 1844, was not 14,469,836L, but 13,200 of the net the net revenue, in 1846, was 18,080,080L, anowing an excise of about 280,000L, instead of a decrease have thought these egregious mistakes of cities, had we not seen the persevering from for the purpose of throwing disjusted in the persevering of the purpose of throwing disjusted in the purpose of the persevering disjusted in the purpose of the persevering disjusted in the purpose of the persevering disjusted in the purpose of throwing disjusted in the purpose of throwing disjusted in the purpose of throwing disjusted in the persevering disjusted

DUNDEE-CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

A meeting of the Chamber of Commerce was held on Tuesday, the 7th inst., for the purpose of considering the propriety of petitioning both Houses of Parliament regarding the necessity of immediately passing the ministerial Pres Trade measures. The meeting was more numerously attended than usual, even though it was a market day; and there were present the most influential manufactures about sent the most influential morchants, manufacturers, shipowners, and flax-spinners in Dundee. Provost Brown, owners, and flax-spinners in Dundee. Provost Brown, chairman of the Chamber, occupied the chair.

The Chairman said, he expected that before this time they would have been in possession of Free Trade; but here they were met again to complain of delay. Things were in a state of uncertainty, and not altogether to their wishes. It was to be apprehended that the prize within their grasp might for some time longer be withheld. He was not altowather without hone of getting it in a short time, provided gether without hope of getting it in a short time, provided the country did its daty. He believed Sir Robert Peel's intentions were honest, but he was powerfully opposed by the monopolist party; and on that account he required the ar-dent support of the country to enable him to carry his mea-sures. The Dundee Chamber of Commerce had frequently sures. The Dundee Chamber of Commerce had frequently declared itself in favour of Free Trade, and he hoped that they would agree to do everything in their power to carry it

Mr. Edward Baxter regretted the delay which had taken place in passing the Corn and Customs' Bills through the House of Commons, which was operating injuriously to the agricultural and commercial interests. Since these bills had been proposed it appeared that the rents of land on leases in lingland and Scotland had risen very considerably, and the land also had increased in value. This fact showed that these bills would be beneficial to the landed interest; for they tended to stimulate improvements in the cultivation of the soil, to induce competition, and would increase the amount of farming products. It showed also that the interests of the agriculturist and manufacturer were the same, and intimately blended. The delay in the progress of these bills had already had a very injurious effect on commerce. On many articles in the Tariff, as butter, cheese, wool, and timber, the duties were greatly reduced, while on others—as maize, rice, cattle, &c.—the duties were to be entirely removed. No one would venture to import these important articles of commerce, until a greater certainty was obtained as to the final passing of these bills; and trade in them was at a stand. Mr. Baxter said he had received a private letter from London, expressing doubts if these bills would pass the House of Lords, and that a protectionist Government might even be attempted. He thought such would be very short-lived; but there was a great uncertainty as to the future progress of these measures, as indicated by the great difference in the price of free and bonded wheat, amounting to 5s. per quarter on Dantzic, and 6s. per quarter on Rostock. He then adverted to the loss which would fall on the importer of In dian corn, if he were required to pay the present heavy duties which he had given bond to do in case these bills should not become law; and, after stating the pleasant and nutritious qualities of this new article of food, which he had used in his family, concluded by moving the following resolution: "That it appears, from the accounts received from various parts of the country, and which are confirmed by the experience of the members of this Chamber, that the producted discussions on the Corn and Customs' Bills have produced a stagnation in the commerce of the country, and a suspension of the previous activity in manufactures, which, if it be not arrested, will be attended with the most injurious consequences to all classes of the community.

Mr. T. W. MILNE could not conceive it possible that the Premier's measures should not ultimately become the law of the land. They were founded on the broad principles of justice and equity. In fact, the frade of the country was suffering most severely from the delay which had already taken place. That was one reason why they should urge upon Parliament the necessity of immediately passing those measures in order to prevent the evils which would ensue from delay. He would, therefore, second the resolution. The resolution was put to the meeting, and carried by accla-

Mr. ALEXANDER Low begged to propose the second resolution,—

"That this Chamber, while it expresses entire confidence in the ultinate triumph of the principles of Free Trade, is of opinion, from the present state of the country, that every legitimate means ought to be employed for the purpose of getting the Corn and Customs Bills passed into law with the least possible delay; and, in accordance therewith, resolves that petitions to both Houses of Parliament be prepared; that the merchants of Dundes be recommended to sign them; and that they be forwarded for presentation—the one to the House of Commons, to the Right Honourable Sir R. Peel, and the other to the House of Lords, to the right hon. Lord Kinnaird."

The resolution which they had heard would recommend itself, and therefore it would not be thought necessary that he should say much in its support. The Chamber had often spoken its mind in favour of the principles of Free Trade. He agreed with them in what they had done on that, and nothing had occurred to make him change his opinion. They had witnessed the boneficial effects on the judustry of They had witnessed the beneficial effects on the industry of the country by the partial removal of the restrictions which had been effected by Sir Robert Peel. This was a powerful argument in favour of Free Trade, and clearly showed the difference between truth and error. They should take every step in their power to give effect to principles which would be so beneficial in their results. The repeal of the Corn Laws would improve the condition of millions of their population. He did not think any party opposed to the principles of Free Trade would venture to carry on the Governples of Free Trade would venture to carry on the Government of this country. If they did, the attempt would be a failure. The working classes had already felt, and were again beginning to feel, the effects of the want of Free Trade.

Several branches of business were in a state of stagnation. Provisions were rapidly rising. The price of potatoes was double of what it was last year. There were many reasons double of what it was last year. There were many reasons to induce them to petition Parliament to pass these. Free Trade measures. The population was ingressing rapidly. Without Free Trade it would be impossible to supply the people with the necessaries of life. There was no way of doing that but allowing them to exchange their labour for the bread of other countries. He had full confidence in the ultimate triumph of Free Trade principles. Should the House of Lords be to far left to themselves as to refuse their assent to them, they would find at hover distant day, that they would have to agree to a latter measure than the people were now demanding. Should be British lion be roused, the nobles of the ladd would be the military in would not be directed to a deterior of a confidence in the production when the finding these than and considering the position which the finding these that, and considering the position when the their power to strengthen the hands of Sir Robert Peel in order to enable him to carry his measures. He would, fore; propose that the Chamber should give their asses to

Mr. Thomas Nersu seconded the resolution proposed by Mr. Low. In doing so he felt confident it was unnecessary to say a word to ensure its unanimous approval. He had so often on former occasions addressed the Chamberon the subject of Free Trade, that he would not take up the val. able time of the meeting on the present occasion by pointing out to them how necessary it yet was to give every sopport in their power to Sir R. Peel for the immediate passing of his Corn and Customs Bill. Other towns were already up and doing; and Dundee should not be belind in so good cause. Instead of attempting, however, to make a speech, he would, with the leave of the chairman, read a letter from London, dated Thursday last (hear, hear), which stated much better how matters stood than anything he could say, and would also show the meeting that, although there migt he a screw loose, it was not the one many of them suspected, The letter stated that there were last week many suspicious as to the sincerity of the Premier with regard to the Con Bill, and all kinds of whispers in circulation. He (tig writer) had endeavoured to ascertain the truth; and although no admirer of Sir Robert Peel, he had every confidence that he would prove determined and upright. The Irish Coercion Bill was an ill timed interruption; but the Duke was to blame; "he had done it all;" and having agreed reluctantly to the Free Trade measures, he was determined to have his own way in this matter, and have another trial of the rule of own way in this matter, and have another trial of the rule of Toryism. It was very generally believed that mischief was brewing in the Upper House; and therefore every town and village in the empire should lose no time in showing even possible demonstration for the purpose of supporting Su Robert Peel and his tariff. In again seconding the motion, he begged to observe that, as it was proposed to forward in petition for the House of Commons to Sir Robert Peel, it had just been suggested to him (Mr. Neish) that it would be better to send it direct to their own member, Mr. Duness. with a request that he would communicate with the Primier on the subject. He thought that it inight be as well to do so; and hoped that Mr. Low would agree to this alteration in the resolution.

Mr. Low had no objections to the alteration proposed by Mr. Neish. He thought that the petition should be signed by by the members of the Chamber instead of being signed by the chairman only; and that the directors of the Chamber should send along with it, as had been done in Manchesler and Liverpool, a list of the number of persons employed by those who adhibited their names to the petition, to the member whom they should select to present it.

Mr. EDWARD BAXTER agreed to Mr. Low's suggestion, regarding the petition being signed by the members instead of by the chairman. In the House of Lords the petition of any public body or corporation, however numero ential, signed by the president, was regarded as being merely the petition of a single individual.

The CHAIRMAN concurred in all that had been proposed in the resolutions, and agreed to what had been suggested by Mr. Neish regarding the petition being sent to Mr. Dancan. That gentleman had on all occasions done the town's business most cheerfully, and it would only be complimentary to intrust the petition to him at first, and to furnish him with the information alluded to; and, if he thought it proper, he could communicate with Sir Robert Peel regarding its presentation; and there was no doubt if it was trainmitted to him in the manner suggested, that he and Sir Robert would arrange matters so as to bring it before the house with the best effect.

After some observations from Mr. Johnston, Mr. Neish, and others, it was agreed that the potition should be significant by the members of the Chamber and transmitted to Mr. Duncan, and that that gentleman should be requested to confer with Sir R. Peel as to its presentation.

Mr. NEISH said, there was another matter deeply affecting the interests of the Chamber, which he wished to direct their attention to, although it was not connected with the business on which they had been called. He hoped the Chairman would allow him to notice it. They were awar that Mr. Bell had been summoned out of the premises in which the present Post Office was kept. It had been proposed that the Office should be removed to a small shop in Reform-street having only one front. The present premises in Reform-street having only one front. although by no means equal to what the town was entitled to, or its trade required, had the convenience of two fronts. The premises to which the Post Office was to be removed, might be well enough adapted to a country village, but it was by no means what Dundee, having seventy thousand inhabitants, and the second commercial port in Scotland, required. He therefore thought that the Chamber should memorialise the Government upon the subject, without delay, and endeavour to get more suitable accommodation.

My. Barroun said that Sir R. Peel would give for any "Subscribe money among yourselves, and you shall have a commodious Post Office."

Mr. NEISH.—Three years ago Sir R. Peel would have mused to give anything like a repeal of the Corn Laws, but look what he is doing now (laughter). But whether secosaful or not, now was the time to try (cheers).

The CHAIRMAN said, he did not think it regular that the Chamber slightly entertoes the discussion of other questions.

Chamber should enter into the discussion of other questions when the meeting had been called for a special purpose; but as the one brought before them was of great importance, he should submit it to the Directors, and call a meeting to consider it the constituents. sider it on an early day next week.

After giving a vote of thanks to the Chairman for his conduct in the chair, the meeting separated.

Districts of THM PROFILE OF INSLAND. Meeting on the subject of relief and amployment continue to the northern and western counties: Some of the grand juries desline to not under the Priblio Works Act of the present session. The Clark grand before to the sot under the Priblic Works Act of the present session. The Cleffe grand duty, con Briday, agreed to a recolution to the effect that it would be inexpedient to take any appearance measures under that Act, as the regular present session are so hear at hand, and as stope have already been taken to provide amplityment arrivally in this district. Be taken to Brien, the lieutenant of the county, declared that moment the people inevitation; particularly in rillegated to a stope has districted harms, districtive provide the provided harms, districtive provided the provided harms, districtive provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided that the provided the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided that the provided the provided the provided that the provided agre

HOW

and,

H entire bought here, e there e more u Peuple. at 14d. with th contain tiọn of "Big. Cation o but it is more ha labour a labour a labour a labour a labour a country them; but trying per list of the

etly Iris of

IRISH DISTRESS.

DUBLIN, APRIL 11.—Such is the extent of misery and suffering already produced by the failure of the potate erop, that the Tory journals here have assend their demela; but not until Conservative landlords, such as Sir Lucius O'Brien, Lieutenant of Clare, have oried shame at the heartleannes and basoness of the conduct pursued by those jourusls indenying the existence of scarcity or high prices, when, as Sir Lucius remarked, at the meeting of the Ennis Poor Law Union, the people are actually starving, and en desvouring to support existence on black and festid potatoes I request attention to the observation of the honourable barouet, who is an excellent resident landford, and totally incapable of sucrificing truth and the safety of the people to It is to be factious objects or personal or selfish interests. feared that there are many Irish landlords not wholly exempt from such an accusation. I have collected the intest accounts from the country, and certainly they present an appalling picture of distress and suffering. A considerable number of the resident gentry are co operating with zeal in the benevolent work of providing against famine and postilence; but there are many others who appear utterly indif-ferent to the calls made upon them at this period of cala

The following details are abridged from the provincial journals received this day :

FAMINE IN BALLYLONGFORD AND THE PARISH GENE-BALLY .- At about nine o'clock on the morning of the 6th instant some hundreds of persons assembled and repaired to the residence of the parish priest, the Rev. D. M. Carthy, from whom they demanded immediate relief, which, they said, could not be postponed many days, or if so, that necessity would oblige them to resort, first to him, by slaughtering his cattle. The reverend gentleman remonstrated with them on the impropriety of their proceedings, but promised to represent their awful situation to the proper authorities. They subsequently paid similar visits to Mr. Stephen C. Sandes, of Carrigafoyle House, and also to Mr. William Hickie, of Kilelton house, J. P., who, I am informed, was not a little annoyed at seeing the " posse comitates" approach, as he immediately commenced a pre-paration for a siege, abiding his well known motto, "No surrender;" but on being informed of their purpose, he pro-mised to come forward as liberally as any other gentleman in the neighbourhood, and to represent their wants to the Government, upon which they returned to their homes peaceably. I have only to add, that if something be not done, in the way of providing employment, and that immediately, for the numerous starving population of this place, Providence alone can tell what consequences will follow,- Ballylongford Correspondent of the Tralee Chronicle.

BRAY, APRIL 7.—This day, while the board of guardians were sitting at Loughlinstown, county of Dublin, about 40 able-bodied men came together from the town of Bray, and sat down opposite the gate of the poor house. Some of the guardians went to know what they wanted, when they replied they wanted either work or relief. The guardians agreed to admit one or two of them to the board room, when it was explained to them that the guardians could not relieve them out of the house; but were ready to admit such of them as were destitute, and their families likewise. The guardians desired those two men to go to the rest of their party and tell them this, which they did; upon which they all went quietly away. It was stated to them that a meeting would take place in Bray on Thursday next, to apply to Government to relieve the poor of that district.

COUNTY OF CLARE. - FINNIS, APRIL 9 .- Potatoes are now in our market sixpence a stone for the best quality, and, as there are not any offered that are not diseased, we may add to this price an additional penny for waste. Oaten meal is two shillings and threepence a stone—that is, at the rate of eighteen pounds a ton. Very great distress, indeed, HEADFORD, APRIL 13 -The Galway Mercury of Saturday, says:-In this district, as well as others, the progress of the potato blight is exceedingly rapid, especially within the last few months. At the last market the prices reached from 44d, to 5d, per stone, and this was paid for loads not entirely free from disease. Several families have been, for weeks back, endeavouring to sustain life on had potatoes, and many more, not having even that, are indebted to their neighbours for the means of subsistence.

The Cork Reporter of Saturday, says:—"The relief committee have, we rejoide to say, thrown off the Castle incubas, that weighed like a night-mare on their energies. To day there are six depots selling out Indian meal, which arrived by the Nimrod, on Thursday, at 8d. per 7lbs., 10s. 8d. per cwt., just 2d. per cwt. over the rate the Commissary charged for the six tons he gave the committee, for he fixed the price, not at 9s. 4d. per cwt. (a penny per lb.) as expected, but at 10s, 6d, per cwt. We pray the public to remark that that price, 10s. 8d., will cover, we understand, the cost of the Indian meal, bought this very week in Liverpool, after a considerable rise bad taken place in its price, and after paying the freight and charges of bringing it per steamer, while the Oovernment, for meal ground from corn bought months since at first p there, charge within a mere fraction of that 10s. 8d. Was there ever anything so monstrous? Yes, there is something more monstrous still—they refused to give it to a starving people, even at that exorbitant price. The committee, besides the Indian meal, are retailing whole meal to the people at 14d. nor the which will meat the fours of those who think at 1 d. per lb., which will meet the fears of those who think that the Indian meal alone, however cooked, may not agree with the constitutions of our people. The following letter contains the Government ultimatum in respect to supplying, or rather than the contains th or ruther denying, to the starving poor of our city any por tion of the Indian meal stored by the authorities:

"Sign.—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 5th inst., inquiring, for the information of the 5th inst., in the second to find an order meet are now forming in the country; but it is intended to reserve issues from these depots for the store heavy pressure during the summer months, when farm should be supported, and rolled against the is is expected that is all have ceased, until which time it is expected that had beginned to the stiff of the most of the provision which is now collecting for the same but all parties must co-operate to reserve it for the most trianger of the sum to an basimultaneously applied for the received of the whole opinity. Present to reserve it for the most life, when it can be simultaneously applied for the received of the whole opinity. Present to reserve it for the most life, who is opinity. Present to reserve it for the most life, who is opinity. Present to reserve it for the most life, who is opinity. Present to reserve it for the foot life.

of about 20,000l, a year from his Irish property; and for the last ten years there has not been anything worth naming ment in Ireland."

TUAM.—Our secounts from various parts of the country are most discouraging. In some localities they have not even the seed, and in these districts best off not more than a fortnight's or three weeks' potatoes will remain after the seed. The price of potatoes in Headford market last Tuesday was, for lumpers 44d., and good seed so high as 6d. This part of the country, which usually abounded in plenty of the best description of potatoes, has scarcely sufficient for seed. At Tuam market this day, they are selling at 5d. per stone .- Tuam Herald.

GALWAY.—The relief deputation appointed by the local relief committee waited on the Lord Lieutenant on Thursday, at the Castle, and acquainted his Excellency with the sad condition of the people, and the necessity of providing them immediately with food and employment. His Excellency promised immediate attention to the memorial, and caused all the officials of the Relief Commission, of the Commissariat, and of the Board of Works, to assist the deputation in their object. His Excellency urged the necessity of local subscriptions, and directed the deputation to sign the memorial, to have them responsible for the statements it contained, as it would be made public use of with all despatch. The deputation then waited upon the relief commissioners, and Captain Kennedy having accompanied Mr. Stophens to Sir Randolph Routh, the commissary general, that gentleman promised to give orders for the Rhadamanthus steamer to load with Indian corn in Cork, to be stored in Galway, and that an officer of the commissariat department would be here on Tuesday next. Valuable assistance was rendered by the Very Rev. Dr. Kirwan in the interviews with the officials of the several departments to which the deputation were referred; he also put down his name for 201, as his sub-scription to the Local Relief Fund; the Rev. Mr. Eyre and Francis Comyn, Esq., have promised a subscription of 101. each.—Galway Vindicator.

PLUNDER OF A PROVISION BOAT.—On Wednesday morning, as the smack Maria, the property of Mr. John N. Russell, of this city, was proceeding from Limerick to Clare, laden with flour and Indian meal, she was boarded near Smith's Island, in the Clare river, by about fourteen armed men from a lighter, who ordered the crew (three men and a boy) into the cabin. They held possession of the vessel over six hours, during which time they took away about one hundred sacks of prime flour and twenty of Indian meal, valued at 2501. They then departed, first ordering the crew to remain at anchor at their peril, until they returned for the remainder of the cargo. This order the crew did not obey, but started instantly for Clare, and were pursued by a boot filled with a most officer. boat filled with armed men. Mr. Russell's agent (Mr. Reardon) at once reported the occurrence to the magistrates and police. Warrants are issued, and about 30 sacks of the flour have been recovered. Several boats that were passing at the time of this outrage were ordered to anchor, and had to remain so during the day, with the exception of the Dublin Company's bont, the Royal George, which was allowed to proceed unmolested. Mr. Richard Russell left yesterday morning for Ennis, to aid in recovering the property, and discovering the perpetrators of this audacious outrage. He returned last night, having discovered 51 bags of flour belonging to his father, hid under the ground near Limerick Examiner of Saturday.

April 14.—Distribus of the Prople—Riots in Clon-MEL-CALLING OUT OF THE MILITARY .- The patient endurance of the Irish peasantry, with famine staring them in the face, whilst abundance of food is experted from every harbour, is, perhaps, unprecedented. I sent you a day or two since an account of an open air meeting of the famishing peasantry at Tory-hill, county of Limerick. They had determined at length to take their own case in hand, in the hope of devising some means of providing labour or food. Yet, when the Catholic priest of the parish, with one or two other inhabitants, known to be well-wishers of the poor unemployed labourers, spoke some words of admonition and hope, the thousands of starving men, women, and children, departed peaceably to their cold and comfortless cabins. Amongst the town population of Cloumel, famous for its numerous and extensive corn mills, there has been less of patient endurance. Accounts of food riots reached town this day, and are thus noticed in the Dublin Evening

"A correspondent in Clonmel, whose letter is dated yesterday "A correspondent in Clonmel, whose letter is dated yesterday afternoon, writes to say that the greatest excitement prevails in that town, owing to an attack made by the peasantry on some carts laden with previsions, and under an essect of military. Two troops of dragoons and a party of artiflery, that arrived from Cahir yesterday morning, were despatched to Marifield Mills and Distillery, upon which an attempt at plunder had been made. Happly no lives have been lost, as the military succeeded in driving back the people without firing on them."

Another letter states that the populace had attacked some flour-mills on the River Suir, adjacent to the town, whence large quantities of flour were about to be expected for the lı market

The other accounts received to-day describe the distress as daily becoming more alarming. Read, for instance, the account given by a Conservative paper, the Clare Journal, of the allocation of the money subscribed by the 60th regiment. Sixty famishing beings are to be provided with employment, and the selection is made with as stringent a regulation as if some rich office or fat benefice were to be conferred by a minister of state. The people known to have one meal per day—one insufficient meal of coarse food in the Ott have are avaluded from the fortunate authors in one meat per day—one insumment meat of coarse food in the 24 hours—are excluded from the fortunate number who are to obtain 1s, per day out of the labour-fund subscribed by the officers and the privates of the 60th regiment. Yet in this very county of Clare the Marquis of Thomond has a vast estate, although nothing stall like the amount of ready money possessed by Mr. and Mrs. Gerrard, of Clibbather. Gibbatown.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE POOR REMEMBERED.

THE POOR REMEMBERED.

To the Editor of THE LEADUR.

Sing—The following excellent letter was addressed to make lew days ago; by a few thought his receiving, and be nevolent persons, in Sheffield, Yorkshire. It speaks for itself, and its contents have already spoken to the poor thinging my limited medium. Have the goodness to insett it in your, great act; paper, and and you will oblige.

Bleese Original Contents to the first full things.

Hall Curr Terrace, Sheffield, April 1, 1846. DEAR Str. - It is with deep regret we see the wretchest condition to which the farm labourers in your district are reduced; but we refolee that they have found such an able reduced; but we rejoice that they have found shen an able advocate of their cause, and benefactor (so far as you have it in your power) to relieve their distresses yourself.

We, a few friends to suffering humanity, who meet at Mr. Joseph Outram's Black Swan Inc, have subscribed 54, 15s. 6d. towards their relief, and regret the amount is not

Please acknowledge the receipt; and if it is not asking too much of you, be kind enough to give us a statement of a few such cases as you experimentally have found, and the mannor in which you dispose of the trifle sont.
Yours respectfully, in behalf of the Subscribers,

P. S .- We have sent 61. 0s. to Mr. Burrowes, editor of the Independent newspaper of Devizes, for the same purposes.

> To the Editor of THE LEAGUE. " What thou doest, do quickly."

Sin,-Permit me, through the medium of your "great paper, to inform my Free Trade friends that I have just purchased and given away among some of the most needy and deserving of the peasantry of our neighbourhood, about sixty bushels of potato seed. I have not yet fluished this part of my daily work. In a few cases, I have rented a chain of potato land for the use of honest and sober menyes, men who are willing to work; but, as no man will hire them, they have it not in their power to pay for a chain of land. One of these men, John Waldock, of the town and parish of Bicester, in the county of Oxford, has a wife and five children to suport out of nothing. Waldock has been married 13 years, and has had but one whole winter's work during the whole of these years; neither has he had constant employment during the summer part of these years. It is not to the protectionists of our high church county, but to some of the Free Traders of Manchester, Liverpool, Sheffeld Loydon During See Manchester, Liverpool, Sheffeld Loydon During See Manchester, Liverpool, Sheffeld Loydon During See Manchester, Liverpool, Sheffeld Loydon During See Manchester, Liverpool, Sheffeld Loydon During See Manchester, Liverpool, Sheffeld Manchester, Liverpoo field, London, Dudley, &c. &c., that John Waldock and others are so deeply indebted for the heds on which they sleep, for the bread upon which they have lived during (nome of them for wacks, and others for several months) this winter; and also for their potato land, and the seed which they are now planting. Waldock's touching and heartrending case is a fair specimen of others which I could furnish, to demonstrate that the peasantry in districts purely agricultural are whet I have for seven years said and published concerning them, and that is " a ruined wreck."

l assure those friends who have put it into my power to assist those who have been made slaves by protection to an extent to which they have never been before assisted by any man, or by any number of men, in either the county of Oxon or Bucks, that I have done my best to clothe the naked and to feed the hungry. I now begin to feel the effects of walking from village to hamlet day after day, up to the ankles in water and mud, and wet to the skin, to deliver others from the jaws of hunger, and from the graap of the winter's cold blast. There shaken one of the strongest of constitutions to its very centre, and with the exception of my own partner, I have had no one either to encourage or to help me. The general remark made by my casy and old-fashioned neighbours has been - "I wonder who sends Mr. Fargurson money to do all this for the poor people. What business has Fargurson with the state of the people. Why don't 'em go to be soldiers? There is no work here for 'em.'

The following receipt, which I received the other day for the money which I paid for Waldock's potato land, will show what kind of education the mochanics of our district have received at the liberal hand of protectionists:

"He have reseve the som of 6 shelens of Mr. Ferkeson for chen of perteter land. "1846 Apriel 0."

There are as many overgrown and stagmant ditches and wild hedges in our neighbourhood as would keep scores of idle hands employed eleaning and dressing them for many months to come. But no; the health, comfort, and honesty of thousands must be jeopardised rather than that the things which are wanting should be set in order.

The most intelligent and extensive farmers with whom

I have conversed in our district are most auxious that Sir Robert Peel's measure should become law without any more delay; and as to the tradespeople, they are out of all patience with the unmeaning rant and absurd cant of protectionist members of Parliament.

Permit me to thank you, sir, for the leading article in the Langue of Saturday, April 11th, 1816. That article should be published in a small tract, and circulated in tens of thou-sands. My own Free Trade creed embraces both of the views to which you have given a real form and living character in that article.

I seek the total abolition of the unrighteous Corn Laws, because I feel the deepest interest in whatever promotes the happiness, comfort, and elevation of main.

I am happy to add, that I am just about to send four abla-bodied single young men into Cheshire, where they are to be employed at good wages as farm servants. Your's respectfully, WILLIAM FERGUSON.

King's End, Bicestor, April 14th, 1840.

PARMERS! KEEP YOUR MANURE DRY .- Suppose that any of the married men in this company was to get hold of his wife's ten-pot, after she had done with it, and was to dry up the leaves carefully, and bring them to her for her ton the next morning, I would just ask you, whether she would be likely to find out the trick or not? I imagine she would not be long in discovering the client; and I might venture to guess he would find out to his cost, that, if that was the way he was to keep her in tea, she would soon find out the way to keep him in hot water. Now, if the wife would feel spindignant at being supplied with tea that had been wet two or three times, how ought the farmer to feel who was supplied with manuro that had been wet two or three hundred simes? It is true the farm cannot fight its own battle so well as the mistress, but there is such a thing as passive resistance; and you may depend on it, that in the barvest, the farmer will be made to feel, that in cheating his land, by giving it manure which has lost all its strength, he has been, in fact, cheating himself, and that this into have a worse result even than cheating his wife.—Mr. Blaker, at the late Markethill Moeting.

Thanks to Father Mathew, there was only one case of drunksnness amongst the Irish population of Manchester brought before the magistrates on the day following the national feast of St. Patrick.

An oplum sale which lately took place is Galerata produced the snormous sum of 800,000%, sterilog.

M. COBDEN'S SUEECH in the House of Commons on Briday, Vebruary 27th, 1816.—Revised, Price One Penny, is M. R. BRIOHT'S SPEECH in the House of Commons and Annual Park, Peb. 17. Price One Penny.

M. R. OBSON'S SPEECH in the House of Commons of Commons and Annual Park, Peb. 18. Price One Penny.

M. R. OBSON'S SPEECH in the House of Commons of Commons of Commons of Codeby, Newall's buildings, and A. Uld Milgate, Manchespey.

THE GOATACHE MEETING.

Just penished price One Penny, of Se. per 100.

VERBATIM RIPORT OF THE MEETING OF ACHIEVED AND CONTROL ABOUTERS AT GOATACHE, printed in a level form, 12 pages.

Lipuside of 100,000 copies have been printed.

Any of the above may be had at the per 100.

PREF. THADE TRACTS, solected by the Council of the League, 1s., in cloth.

JOHN HOPKINS'S NOTIONS of POLITICAL ECO-TWENTY TIACTS AND SPEECHES ON FREE TRADE. By East Ducie, Mosers. Villors, Cobden, Bright, Oldson, O'Connell, M'Cullagh, Baines, &c. 1s stitched. 12mo. size.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE QUARTER OF A MILLION FUND.

Subscriptions received during the week ending Wednesday, April 15, 1846.

N.B - As the Subscription List is made up from Wednesday to Wednesday, contributions received on Thursdays and Fridays are not published in the LEAGUE of the Saturday immediately succeeding, but are included in the list of the week-following.

As the regulations of the Post Office require that the Christian Name of the party to whom Post Office Orders are sent should be given in full, subscribers are respectfully requested to procure their Orders in future for Gronge Wilson, League Offices, Manchoster, or Abraham Walter Paulton,

67, Pilcet	street, London.	•
•	-	-			_
*Ashworth.	Hours on t. Palmont	Tunion	• • • • •	£	# .	ď
L'intle Hol	, Henry an i Edmund, ori, Staleybridge	nimon neer no	irdif	. 300	1
*Armitage,	Elkanah, and Sons M	Innohoutee		. 200 . 100	•
			• •	. 60
TOTAL K. J. A.	Held. and Co. Dalubus	,		. 10	-	-
*A Prison	t. and J., Capar, N.B. Newcastle on Tyne	••••		. 5	0	O
*Hartley, V	Newconte on Type Vm. and Richard, Mal	*			10
* *   * *	1(9)11)1		• •	_	0
TUrimohaw	. Christopher Some	street Manches	•~~	2 2	0	_
Mawson, A	Joses, Church street	do	ψ01	2	ŭ
THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN	'. P H The Colon. B	71 31 3	thot		ΰ	ŏ
*Hintley I	James, 2, Edwin-plac , Kettleshulme, Whale Ir. Tiverton	o, Glargow		Ī	1	Ü
*Clamben 8	Tr., Tiverton	ry Bridge, nr Sto	ckpo	rti	0	0
"Massey, T	Spine Manday				 	_0
			• •	1	0	Ű
			••	î	_0	0 -0
		do		1	0	-0
				, î	Ö	Ö
Nemo)., Buckinghain			0	10	O
Thomas, E.	and W., Zara-street, M	i i Instaltantan	• •	0	5	0
	WILL FULL AND THE STA	do	• • •	ŏ	5	0
Kirby, Josep	ph, Buckingham	qo.	• •	. 0	9	0
		'	•••	U	•	U
	Clegg, Wm., Lane	End	_ • •	30	0	0
	Workpeople of Wir	i. Clogg, Lano	End	٠.	_
	*Mmith, Mark, and S	ious	4 •	ļ	B
	TOTIVEN JOHN Rock	ninio Jano	• •	l	0	0
	I TOYWOOD, Win.		••	î	ö	ŏ
Heywood,	4 "Hill, Thomas, boll	er maker		ī	Ŭ	ŏ near	- wilding the property of the	idec_mireat		1	Ö	Ü
Manuliester.	4 Yliylo, Alaxa Rock	idala-lano	• •	1	Ō	0
	Bennett, Rli, Chure	rt-piace h-mm	• •	ì	0	0
	J "MILLE, Chitring Yor	k atomot	. • •	ļ	Ŏ	Ö
	a trurter, tobort, Had	slav Reidao		1	0	0
•	I was will sold by your	kitt.stront	• •		ıö	ŏ
	a a pricili, mark mai	P. • 67	• • •	ō.	5	ŏ
	Mills, Robert, jun., 1	nillwright,		0	ě	0
	Dawson, A., bobbin		• •	0	4	0
	Chambers, George,	High Green Ho	1160	2	U	0
Sheffield.				_	ŏ	ŏ
anemola,	J. '''III USBN LINGINA.	JURAL RITAGE Par	k	= .	Õ	ŏ
•	1 '' '' '' '' '' '' '' '' '' '' '' '' ''	II-BIPANE PARE	i	0	8	0
	Major, Mrs., Broads	troot, Park	•• ,			6
	Simonite, Josh., Parl	к	••	0	2	0
	Wordey, Thomas				0	o [
	Asheroft, Win., Hah	and nour	• •			0
			••	0 1		0
Ormskirk,	Dennett, Rev. James Garside, Wm. H.	• •		0 10		ŏ
	LAMBUL KUY, A., NAD	brandrate van F. Lau. ww	tool	0 10 0 10		0
	Kaye, Ralph, Aughto	1				ň

	Dawson, A., bobbin turner,	•	. (
1.	*Chambers, George, High Green H *Wynns, A. and E., Bernard-street *Himpson, Thomas, Duko-street, Park Wood, Brothers, High-street, Park Major, Mrs., Broad-street, Park Simonite, Josh., Park
rk,	*Worsley, Thomas *Asheroft, Win., Habsall near Edge, Mr., sollcitor Denictt. Rev. James	rpoo	00000
* H	(*" The Laird," per S. Neish * Ferguson, Wm., and Son * Dinean, Petor * Ewan, John * Hell, Thomas * Jaffo, Brothers * Wastland, James * Outhro, James, St. Andrew-street * Duncan, John * Duncan, John * Idenderson, Wm. and Son * Lawson, Alex. * Petric, David		44442322111
	Latham, John, town olork Johnson, Charles Broadhurst, James Johnson, Thomas, Bank House Hnelson, Edward Maskerry, Samuel Bayley, Bamuel	•••	2221000
	Thompstone, Samuel Whalley, Aaron Snelson, George Parr, Edward, Jraper Bayley, Joseph, tailor Harrop, Frances Front, James Joyce, Edward		000000

Dundeo.

i Congleten,

Joyce, Edward Foden, Charles

Farringdon, O. Hordman, O., grocer Robinson, Thomas

Goldkaw, Josoph Goldkaw, Josoph Billingham, Nev. Wm. Barton, Nathaniol Date, Joseph Josoph Peter Small Sums

			_	_	_
	"Totbill, Wm., Stoke		40	0	.0
	(*Charlion, James, Ashley Hill		20
ĺ	I I TOOKEL, Philip D., Franchay		Ä	ō
1	I Directo "Charleton, is . Bt. George's Cloudest	eri	ı. Å	ŏ	Ö
ļ	i "Jayles, Libomes, Mi, James's mines		Ť	õ
ļ	Oibsop, Robert, 4, York-street	•	ō		ŏ
	491/ t		50	0	0
1	i 4744VAN 9.01AA FORMATIMAN, DINDDINGSIA		40	ŏ	ŏ
ı	Brown, Ocorge, 3, Finsbury Clrcus		40	ŏ	ŏ
١	*Travers, Joseph, & Sons, St. Swithin's-lane *Prescott, H. J., 55, Old Broad-street *Prescott, W. G., 62, Threadneedle-street *Moffatt, George, M.P., 85, Eaton-square *Tennett C. Roys and C. 101		40	ŏ	ŏ
ı	Prescott, H. J., 55, Old Broad-street		20	ŏ	ŏ
ı	Prescott, W. G., 62. Threadnesdla street		30	ě	ŏ
١	Moffatt, George, M.P., 85, Eaton sonare		-	~	ŏ
i	Tennant, C., Sons, and Co., 101, Upper Thames-street Crompton, Henry, White House, Patney, Surrey, Sindgeon, Thomas, Lambeth-street, Goodman's Fiol	net.	20	ŏ	ŏ
ı	*Crompton, Henry, White House, Putney, Surrey		īŏ	10	ŏ
ı	"Hodgeon, Thomas, Lambeth street, Goodman's Fint	di	ñň	ō	ŏ
ı	Dewar, David, Son, and Co., King's Arm Building	ve.	•	Ÿ	٠
Į	wood-alreet	p-,	10	0	0
Į	"Morley, John, 18, Wood-street		iŏ	ŏ	ŏ
ł	Morley, John, jun. do		iŏ	ŭ	ŏ
1	Moriev Samuel do	::		ŏ	ŏ
ł	*Burnley, John, and Sons, Batley	••	ŏ	ŏ	ŏ
ì	Slater, John, Castle-street, Carlisle	••	Ď	ŏ	ŏ
f	*Burnley, John, and Bons, Batley *Blater, John, Castle-street, Carlisle *Silver, Thomas Temple, Woodbridge, Snffolk	• •	ð	-	ě
١	EGUIUDGS, LIDINAS, LITURASTORE, FITOR WYCONIUS	::	ŏ	ŏ	ě
ı	"MUAIDIDO AIICI NODIOW, 53. Broad.stroat.	::	š	ŏ	ŏ
۱	"Vonuing, 5, M., 12, Pancras-lana	••	5.		ŏ
ı	"L'Orrett, Robort, Ordhenna Offica Towar		ŏ	ŏ	ŏ
۱	Ting Workings in the Employ of Measur, Mandalo	v.	٠	٠	۰
l	7906. and Field. Lambeth, nor Geo. The		4	0	0
l	*Biffin, John, East Gate, Chichester *Cook, T. A., Welker Alkall Works, Newcastle-on-Tyr	••	ŝ	š	ŏ
ı	Cook, T. A., Welker Alkali Works, Newcastle on-Tyr	141	٠ž	õ	ŏ
l	THE WORKSHOPE OF MISSEL D. SING J. Halfand, Har	ul	_	•	•
ı	Floure, Dirgiouse, near Huddorsheld		1	5	0
l	*Wilson and Ware, it. Aldernanbury		ī	ĭ	ŏ
ı	with, John, Elm Tree House, Haverstock Hi	ii.	-	-	•
l	riampatead	,	1	1	0
l	*Boyd, James, jun., 50, Mark-lane		/Ī	_ī_	-Ŏŀ	"Hoyd, James, jun., 50, Mark-lane Gurtis, Stephen, 30, Finsbury-stroot Gurney, Alfred, 19, Hadre-row, Islandon		ίī	ō	ŏ
ı			ĩ	Õ	ŏ
ľ	"Walles, Thomas, 48 Conclured street		ī	ā	ŏ
ŀ	*Keeley, John, 4, Bugar-loaf-court, Leadenhall-street		ĩ	ŏ	ö
ı	TORRINGULIOUITI, 40, 176, MISTLIN MILITIN		ĩ i	ŏ	ŏ
	*Hennell, C. H., 7, Brickhill-lane, Upper Thames st *English, Wm., 8, Tredegar place, Mile End Road		ĵ	ö	ő
	*English, Wm., 8, Tredegar place, Mile End Road		ĩ	ŏ	ŏ
	rinton, wm., north-street, Hanley, Staffordshire		ī	_	Ö
	Trounen, Mr., Bury St. Edmunds		Ī	Õ.	ŏ
	*Cuddon, W., Bungay		ī	ŏ	ŏ
	"Hickeon, Bamuel, 162, High-street, Chatham		Ĩ	ŏ	ŏ
	"Machin, R., ten dealer, Nottingham		ī		õ
	Raymond, C., 3, Finsbury-place		Ō		õ
	Minn, Alex., 23, Charlton-street, Somers-town		0		ō
	The same of the sa				. 1

* Those names marked with an asterisk are renewed subscriptions.

A HISTORY FOR HOLIDAY CHILDREN OF ALL GROWTHS.

Br REUBEN.

Being an account of the notorious robber, C L, now under sentence of death. Originally written for the Newgate Calendar.

PART THE SECOND.

CHAPTER I.—Of the fortunes of the farmers not being as foretold; of his new instructions by the tinkers; of his journey in Hampshire, when he met Captain Swing, of Swing; of what happened to Hampshire!

Time to write, space to print, patience of readers to read, will not permit us to follow the career of C- Lall its events, incidents, turnings, fallings, risings, devices, and frauds; swindling under the guise of friendship, thieving under cover of secrecy, robbing by the strong arm of might, murdering when victims were too weak and too poor to withstand him. It would take as many volumes of large size, as we have chapters here, to contain the record-ofthose

In the years of his age, 11, 12, and 13, the country people, and the farmers particularly, complained somewhat bitterly to the tinkers that their fortunes had not been truly told; that C- I had deceived them; that in watching over them in the dark to keep away the ogres who had two heads and three heads, and who lived in the north among coal pits, black chimneys, fly wheels, spindles, shuttles, and clanking bammers, things went a missing, although he said he had allowed no ogres to come there to steal. Moreover, he said in 1825, that he had killed half the ogres of England, and so wounded the other half that they could not move from home; that they could not even move one of their wheels, nor spindles, nor shuttles, nor make their chimnoys smoke, nor clauk their hammers, nor go down into the coal pits, nor stir one of their ships out of the docks; he said that all the ships, like all the machinery, belonged not to men, but to ogres with two heads, and three heads, and he had so levelled them with the earth, and the the earth, that they would never get up their heads again, and that the farmers would therefore live in peace and plenty; the ogres would no longer live on human flesh; they would not be able to run after human creatures to catch them, nor could they come again to the furmers barns for corn, on which to feed the human creatures which they catched, to make them fut enough to eat; and he promised to show the farmers some of those dead ogres some day, or their heads—as a rat catcher shows the tails of the rats he kills, to get his payment.

However, he drew his payment first; and soon after, the farmers heard that the ogres were coming alive again, that ships were going out of the docks, engines were moving, wheels revolving, spindles whizzing, shuttles flying, chim-

They agreed that they must set O L to work in another manner, and they must take another method of tel. ing the farmers their fortunes; and they must not tell the me fortunes to the same men; they must promise sometime to all, which probably might be fulfilled. At all evens, the must make a new movement, for the country people were the country people with their property of the country people were the country people with their property. ginning to watch their hen-roosts, pigstyes, barns, stake, corn-ricks, potato-stores, and dwelling-houses, and that it they, the tinkers, did not delude them afresh, they would be themselves outwitted.

So they put C L under a new course of inside tion in the 12th and 18th years of his age (1827-1828); and he went down into the country with some new tricks in the 14th and 15th years of his age.

In the latter of those years (1830) he was travelling in Hampshire one day, and on the road between Whitchurch and Winchester, at a village called Sutton Scotuey, he made and Winchester, at a village called Sutton Scotucy, he made a pause, intending to renew some of his operations them. He had been in the village before, and knew every house in it, and was sure he knew every member of every family. But he now saw a person standing in the midst of a group of idle hungry men—men whom he himself had made idle and hungry. He did not know this person; but their eyes met, and they scanned each other closely—rigidly.

and they seamed each other closely—rigidly.

C— L—— looked upon the stranger's face, until he looked through him. He looked until he saw that the places where eyes should have been had no eyes; that they were the looked that they were the looked that they were the looked through him. only holes with light in them, resembling red tinder burning in the dark. And underneath a black cloak, which covered the stranger, C—— L—— saw has entire body, which was nothing more than a skeleton. The skeleton put its bar. bony fingers forth, as if to shake Cand the latter put forth his hand; but when he touched the skeleton's fingers, he felt that, horrid as they looked, they were not even bare bones,—they were thin matches of dry touchwood, tipped on the ends with sulphur. They SERLETON: "Those hands are at thy service, and this (taking his head off, and oponing his skull, like a diderbox, and lighting his finger ends thereat), these are a thy service. Thou hast come on a mission of destruction, as thou hast come before; make it short, quick, decisive, and do not let the lingering bodies of hungered life bring forth more monstors of thy engenderment as they have brought forth me. For terrible is life like mine."

-: "Who are you? - and what what is the name ?"

SKELETON: "My name is Swing. I am the embodiment of all the hunger that has been by you created. In me the essences of all the pangs of Sutton Scotney and Barton Stacey are concentrated. I am the representative of bodies worn to leanness, and in me has been deposited the dark secrecies and the smouldering passions that burn and grow in hungry men's brains. Welcome enemy of limin happiness and peace! Foe of life itself, welcome to Sutton Scotney! We need thee to complete the work begun."

C- L-: "What wouldst thou with me? that wouldst not have me to commit a crime?"

Swing: "Crime! Hast thou not already laid waste the fields, and wring the farmers' heads awry, to look at ill things or at nothing, or at anything, so that they did not look at their own farmyards, to detect you and those who sent you? Hast thou not torn the very last mouthful of bread and bacon from the workers in the fields, giving then, when they dropped from hunger and the toil of labour, a cold potato for their out-field dinner? Hast thou not worn their hands to the bare hone, and their hearts to something lower and harder than a bone, by laying them lower than the beasts which are fed, or the very worms, or snails, or meanest grubs, which can feed themselves? Crime! You ask if I would allure you to commit a crime? You, who have robbed by violence, and murdered when all was yielded to you! You, who have scuttled ships and laid waste the commerce of a pation, will the commerce of a pation, will the commerce of a pation, will the commerce of a pation, will the commerce of a pation. nation until the very grass has been rank on the wharfs and streets, and green weeds have grown in warehouses, only

C- I : "You are an excellent fellow, Swing, but you mistake me. I have not the least objection to your using that tinder-box brain of yours and those touchwood fingers. I can even tell you where to go, and you shall care my gratitude and that of my nearest relatives and best of noble friends. Go to the north, to the country of the ogrea, with two heads and three heads—they are not men; you may roast them alive in blazing cotton, flax, wool, and the oil of their abominable factories, and no respectable person will say it is evil you have done. You may even take the ploughs and harrows of Hampshire with you; pull down the ruins of those ogres' deus-the factory towns-plough over the ground on which they stand, harrow it, and cast all their rubbish of engines, wheels, spindles, shuttles, hammers, forges, and everything of theirs, which you have not in the first instance burned, into the sea, and England will be a great a country as she is now, and as happy; hampshire more happy and better fed.

"But to open that tinder-box head of yours in Hampshir. where my friends, the tinkers, so often resort for a sucking-pig, a goose or two, a few fowls, and for provender to their asses; where I have so often and so successfully come to replenish the banks of the dicing tables of my noble friends and patrons in London, by using a little legerdemain among the farmers, and some boldness and force of arms among such people as those of Sutton Scotney; where also we have fortidd such good fortunes to the farmers, so very often, to get them to comply with our demands, or to get them to that their eyes and comp their mouths, and catch what we would their eyes and open their mouths, and eatch what we would send them; to operate with your touchwood fingers and the der head here, Mr. Swing, would not be to me convenient.
Not that I am tender in the conscience as to the sin of the thing, for I must confess I have often done as bad things myself, though not quite in the same way. What I object to is the inconvenience of setting fire to one's own house, as we may that?

may say."
Swing: "I believe you, Charles, when you say it is not a matter of conscience with you, but convenience, not to light the torch which I offer to put into your hands; but you will be nevertheless the incendiary, and shall be known as such. This day was handless to Steek and Suitos to tunes had not come true as told, he could do no more than he had done.

Upon which the tinkers once more, when they came up to Westmineter to ory in the streets, "Pots and kettles to mend," held counsel together; and they agreed their to owners of the form which they came up to the form the streets, "Pots and kettles to mend," held counsel together; and they agreed their to owners of the form which they pillaged, were becoming too knowing for them, and too much disastisfied. agni farn they what this r mea with most then

Molen be si being

of th

neck

(Th CHAPT mag and of lu of U (Th Сидра of the

culia elf ; The convio part of Walten a com OWN W he is n bets he he koo the m in the there.

'. But

e and

B.C.C

the bodies of the working poor, and more stackyards in Barton Biacey than one shall

A contemptuous laugh from C—— L—— interrupted the sentence. He turned away, and proceeded in his usual manner to visit the flour mills, bakers' shops, cottage cupboards, and every place else where he could flich a morsel of food that would help to raise money for his splendid associates and noble patrons in London.

Swing also turned away, his skeleton joints aching, and the concentrated pains of all the hungry stomache of the two rillages, Stacey and Sutton, wringing in his empty framework of bones. Where he went to then was not known.

But that night, at the dead hour of the night, at the side of a wheat rick upon a farm of 1000 acres or more in Barton Starcy parish, where the farmer paid a high rent to a lordly landowner, kept three hunting horses for his own use, rodo after the hounds often, and looked after his farm seldom in their pockets—on that farm that night, at the dead hour of night, Swing for the first time opened his skeleton head in carnest, and drew forth the burning tinder, put his sulplur ended fingers to it, lighted them to a flame, and put the staine to one wheat-rick, and then to another; and from that farm he ran to another; and again he did the same next night elsewhere; and again and again. Still, day after day, he continued to meet Cand to implore of him to have mercy on the Hampshire peasantry, not to reduce them to skin and bone, and a potato diet entirely, but to leave them their bread, if not the bacon them, and sometimes threatening them, if they would not listen, but always signing his name "Swing," to have mercy on the working men of Hampshire, and not starve them by means of C——L——'s visits, and the distraction and deception which C———L———introduced among the farmers; but the noble and exalted would not listen. The nor were made more hungry to make the nobles more rich. New fortunes were foretold to the farmer, and they listened not to the cries of the hungry—they were taught to have no dependence on them; but to depend wholly for the safety of their barns and rickyards on C--- L---.

And the barns and rickyards were not safe. In the day time throngs of men assembled in the roadways to look upon the ashes and the wreck of the preceding night. At night, the invisible Swing made more ashes and more wreck for them to look upon next day. They had often been told by C--L--, and the tinkers his relatives, what a terrible thing it was for the ogres with two and three heads to have wheels, and spindles, and shuttles, moved by steam engines, and how meritorious it was in any human being to speak sgainst, and sometimes to kick against, the machinery of the ogres. So they thought it must be no better for the farmers to have threshing machinery; and in their wrath against the farmers and U-I-, and against machinery, they did not discriminate between the machines of farmyards and the machines of factories. They would have destroved all if they could; they could not, so they destroyed

And the farmers who had been foretold fortunes of peace and plenty by the tinkers, were now mounted on horseback, with swords girded round them, galloping in troops with the swords drawn from the scabbards, cutting and hewing down the mobs of men from whom C--- L-– had stolen the means of subsistence; and these mon with plough-staffs in their hands, and sledge hammers, were breaking the heads of the well fed, and the doors of the affrighted. And columns of infantry, troops of dragoons, companies of artil-lery, with caunon and bullets and gunpowder; and judges with powder in their wigs; and lawyers in long gowns, almost as numerous as the soldiers in scarlet coats; and hangmen with ropes, and nooses to their ropes, went down to Hampshire among the lean labourers who had been robbed of their houses. of their bread by C ___ L ___, and drove them into corners, and caught them in the ropes, and hung them up by the necks until they were dead.

About which time the nobles who danced at Almacks', and dieed at Crockford's, required of Cdied at Crockford's, required of C- L-, when he came up to town with the penu'orths and ha porths of bread, and bits of bacon, and lard, and dripping, which he had stolen for them, that they, the dancers and the dicers, might be supplied with money—the produce of these mean thefts being the perquisites of those mean nobles. About this time they halted in the quadrilles, and lifted their eyes for a moment from the dice tables, and asked what noise and discontinuous transfer or the dice tables. turbance that was down in Hampshire?

CHAPTER II.—Of the years of his 16, 17, 18, 10, and 20, when notway looked to what he was doing; of the year when he was 21, and the constable of Wolverhampton, who took him into custody; of the birth of a young giant in the land of the ogres; of U——L—is new expedition to slay the ogres; of his meeting with the young giant; of the terrible buttle they had.

(This chapter, being very long, and narratory only of recent and well-known facts, must be omitted.)

CHAPTER III.—Of C-- L--'s arraignment before the magistrates by the young giant; of the evidence produced against him; of his committal to Newgate; of his trial and condemnation; of the attempt of the more desperate of his late associates to effect his rescue; of their failure; of the uncertainty of the time of his execution. (This chapter must also be omitted.)

CHAPTER IV.—Of the increasing uncertainty about his fate; of the erection of the gallows; of the morning of the execution; of his old friends, who went to see him knocked off; of what happened.

The uncertainty rose higher, sunk deeper, extended wider every day, and every hour of the day. A few hoped the convict would escape, millions feared he would escape, and part of both laid wagers. As the accomplished layer of wagers on the tart backs his own horse, and would not back a compatitor with his own were he strong in hope that his own would win the race, but bets in favour of others because he havely against his own will win the race, and sometimes he knows his own will not untituded the face and sometimes he knows his own will not untituded the sporting logist and partificially wing so the solid some of the sporting logist and partificially like he would be handed, though they ware nearly desired, that he would be handed, though they ware nearly desired, that he would be hearly, though they ware nearly desired, that he should be hearly, though they ware nearly desired, that he should be hearly, though they ware nearly desired, that he should be hearly, though they ware nearly desired.

could not refrain from the game of chances even on the fate could not refrain from the game of chances even on the fate of a friend. And so accustomed were some of them to "hedge," to be always winners of something, to take in the green ones, and to scoure a large part of a lordly income by "hedging" their bats—that is, laying privately against what they betted publicly, that they could not help "hedging" on the fate of their own friand; though backing him resolutely, they yet knew that the chances were largely and heavily against him; and they, wagering always, wagered now that he would be excented. he would be excouted.

Thus aid the confused uncertainty become more confusive.

The condemnation of C——— fell upon society like a stone plunged into still water; and each of the fresh rumours of his fate was like another stone plunged into the same water at another place, the commetion of each confusing all, and being confused by all.

At last, one evening, at the hour of twilight, men with pickaxes, with one or two spades, a waggon with two score of strong wooden posts, and as many or more strong railings of squared timber, with sharp edges—these sharp edges to be laid in such a way, when fixed on top of the posts, that those who might climb upon them to obtain a prominent seat would have at best a seat so uneasy, that they would not sit on it long. There were also iron rods of great strength, to stay those wooden barriers, by one end being bolted to the posts, and the other end sunk into the street; so that if the crowd was dense, and the temper of it warm, and its motions dangerously unsteady, it might (there being also double lines of policemen within those railings) be prevented from breaking into the open space round the

How the coincidence of legislators choosing to make the laws in the night-time, and the workmen who put up the gallows to hang those who break the laws choosing to do their work also in the night-time,-how this coincidence is to be accounted for, I cannot tell. But, as the clock of St. Sepulchre's struck half-past seven, and the darkness had closed in thickly enough to make the top of St. Sepulchre's steeple just barely visible, at that hour the men with the pickaxes began to loosen the stones in the street where it is wide, and where the wooden pavement does not reach, to put in the posts of the outer barriers; and then they laid the strong rails on the posts with the sharp edges upper-most, to make the seat uneasy for those who attempted to sit thereon.

And little ragged boys from Field-lane and Saffron-hill, and out of Turnagain-lane, and all the regions of Smithfield and the Old Bailey, came round the corners, first peoping slowly, then walking more boldly, to look at the men with the pickaxes and the hammers, and the nails and the iron rods. And those who came last asked those who came first what was going to be done. And when they were told that a man was going to be hanged, they said, "Crikey!—let us get on the front rails to see him." And when they were told it would be ten hours yet before he was brought out man the sastial and that the continue of the gost life. out upon the scaffold, and that the creetion of the scaffold and the "fatal beam" had not yet begun, they said, "What of that; won't it be a lark to sit all night, to be in the front in the morning?

And when midnight came, and the black scaffold was erected, and the beam above the scaffold, and the rope was fixed to the beam, and the moose was made to the rope, and Mr. Jackson had tried how it would run, and found it would run very well, other people came and took their places as near the front as they could get, and the Old Bailey began

Now, if the reader will call to mind what the shape of a fannel is, by which liquids are introduced into a bottle, and imagine what like this funnel may be, if a child gets it to play with and hammers in one side of it at the widest end, and bends the other side out near the widest end; and if the reader will suppose this furnel to be three hundred yards long, instead of five or six inches, he, standing at the mouth of it, will see something like the Old Bailey. And if he will further imagine that, where the furnel's narrow pipe joins the widening part, the gallows has got into it, and is sticking there, and will not let another drop pass into the bottle, or down into Ludgate-street, as the case may be, he will imagine a simile which is real. If, further, he will suppose that the frothy liquid poured into the funnel, which will not let it through, resembles the excited multitude, which is stuck fast and cannot get out, save by running over where more is pouring in; and again, if he will fancy a hand shaking the funnel to make it hold more, and every atom of matter endowed with the power of speech, or so much speech as shall hall its neighbour with an oath, or some known face, seen wedged among shoulders at the opposite side, with "Don't go too near; you'll be there soon enough," pointing to the gallows; or if he will fancy cries of "lies coming; he's coming! hats off! hats off!" when nobody is coming; and fancy what like a street would look if paved with ten thousand human faces all turned up, young and old, male and female; some of the faces red and excited, some pale and fainting, most of them dirty, and all contorted with pain suffered by twenty thousand elbows punched into as many sets of human ribs; and if the reader will imagine farther that the police have made a gangway above the first row of railings, and that among those ragged boys, who sit "below the gangway," and who have sat there all night in hopes of a good place, painful though the sharp edges be upon which they sit, that among them are the Young Englanders from the purileus of Westminster and Pimileo, old companions of C— L—; and among them the somewhat ancient phizzes of Ben of Shrewsbury, and Peter of Evosham, with Lord G. B., Lord W. L., and other notorious swells from the "flash kens" of the West End—all come to see an "old pal knocked off;" if the reader can put all those things before his mind's eye, he may form some idea of what the Old-Bailey was like on that my remarks and the contract of the contract Bailey was like on that memorable morning when the gal-cell.

Whe subspectional sat up an hour later then usual on the previous evening, writing letters to his nearest relations, which he put into the hands of the turnkey, by whom they were handed to the 'governor. He then went to bid, and also soundly. And having directed the turnkey to call him at all to be research of said himself, and particle if, a plenting orealists of conce. and buttered rolls. The clish-lain then, in the hearing of the sherifts, caked him once more if he had anything to say before he quitted this life; and he said in an audible voice, which all could hear, "I did it." Upon which the sheriffs said, "Did what?" And he replied, "Took the coffee and bread and butter from them." And the culprit shed a flood of tears, which, when dried, he said had made him happy, and he would now die easy, and would tell all. And he then gave an account of the robberies and appalling murders which he had committed.

His arms were then pinioned, during which operation he only remarked that they need not make the rope so tight; he had no wish to escape. And then he said, in a mournful voice, "I have been brought to this by not minding what my catechism taught me; it was bad companions brought me to this. Neighbours all, farowell!"

But as he spoke those words, an unusual sound was heard in the passage leading to the cell; feet were trampling and voices speaking. The shoring went out aid came in again, and then they communicated to the convict that he was respited until sometime after Easter. Hearing which he fell backward; and when we left the cell, he was lying on the

The commotion outside, on the news being carried thither of the respite, was indescribable. The young Lassociates of the criminal, were seen throwing their caps in the air; as was also Lord G. B. and the other ragged boys, who sat all the night on the sharp railings below the gangway. The greater part of the multitude, however, gave utterance to their disappointment at not seeing C I. executed and done with. No business, or almost none, was done on that day by those interested in his fate, and very little, it is said,

The holidays being ended, so is this history, and C-L-still lives.

AGRICULTURE.

A PENITENT MONOPOLIST.

It is now little more than two years ago that the monopolist lords and squires, landowners of Hortfordshire, assembled their tenants together at St. Albans, to form a county "protection society."

Nowhere have fletitious statistics, erroneous reason ing, and virulent invective, been more called in aid of the "protectionist cause" than they were at the St. Albans meeting in February, 1844. And amongst the speakers on that occasion there was no one who launched forth more reckless assortions, or coarser abuse than the Earl of Essex. Yet the Earl of Essex has, at length, seen the error of his views, and with courage and manliness has come forward openly to avow the change. This occurred at the Watford Farmers' Club, of which his lordship is president; and his speech is important on two grounds: first, it marks the complete change of opinion going on amongst the aristocratic landlords and the peers; secondly, it proves the prefound degree of ignorance which has hitherto existed amongst the dominant class, in this country, the landowners. The Watford Club met to hear a lecture from Mr. Clutterbuck, on "tenant rights," in which the subject appears to have been treated with much good sense; for the lecturer, after enlarging upon the benefits of improved farming, said that "in every instance where a tenant is prepared with sufficient capital, there is nothing like a good, à long, and a liberal lease."

That is a proposition we have often enforced: and we say again, that all attempts to frame any system of tenunt right, Acithout a lease, is a more make-shift; and, in truth, is little more than adapting what is called "the custom of the country" to modern and improved husbandry. Tonant right alone cannot attract capital to the cultivation of land. It may, to some extent, save yearly tenants from such barefaced pillage as they are new occasionally subjected to, but it never can give independence to the farmer, or certainty to his business; and such seems to be Mr. Clutterbuck's view, for he said, "the difficulty of the question lies in this point only, how existing tenants, who hold from year to year, can receive a guarantee for that outlay of capital, which, at the time of their quitting, may be fairly said to be unexhausted in the land, and which would fairly entitle them to compensation."

And a resolution in favour of the "consideration of tenant right" was unanimously agreed to by the club. The members then dined together, and after dinner the Earl of Essex made his recantation of monopolist errors in a speech, from which we extract the most important passages. His lordship

"At no period of our lives—at no period in the history of our country has it ever been, I think, so absolutely necessary for all who are connected with agriculture to exert themselves to the utmost, not only to advance thomselves in the profession they have chosen, but even to keep their heads above water (hear, hear). That prop on which you have been accustomed to lean for years peet, and which you have been accustomed to question as conductive to your success—that prop, I believe, it door to be removed. That oroken reed—protection, which you have long been accustomed to depend upon, is about to be taken from you, and therefore I think you will agree with me that if ever it was essential, it is now more than ever essential that you should exert yourselves."

Doubtless this is sound and sensible; and after the carnest part taken by Lord Bases in teaching the contrary, he deserves some credit for the acknowledgement of the now underlable truism. But before we proceed to the noble president's analysis of the state of the farming mind, we must note the fact that the tenant farmers had pretty nearly arrived at the same wholesome conclusions two years ago, when his lordship and his fellow "protectionists" acted upon their fears, their cradulity, and their want of information, by telling them "that Free Trade in corn would destroy, to a ruinous extent, all capital now vested in agricultural operations, bring desolution and misory on the agricultural labourer, and prove destructive to the landed interest;" for such was Lord Essex's language at St. Albans. His comments upon farmers must therefore be received, subject to the remark that he is a new convert. It is right here to mention, that in thanking Mr. Clutterbuck for his lecture, Lord Essex had said in the morning:

"He was ready and willing to give his word and his bond to remunerate his tenants for all permanent and unexhausted improvements, or to afford any other security to his tenants to induce them to farm in a liberal manner,"

And he referred to the custom of the late Lord Leicester to require his tenants to possess capital to the extent of 10l. per acre. At the dinner, after the passage before quoted, Lord Essex remarked, that in all great measures, however generally bonefield, some persons usually suffer, and added:

"On this occasion there are two classes of farmers who are more liable to be injured than any others. The first class comprehends all those who have hitherto been farming without capital—men who, I should say, and I say it with greater freedom, because I believe there are none here who are in that situation—men who never should have been farmers at all; because it is clear that if there is an occupation in which, owing to the vicissitudes of the seasons, capital is absolutely necessary, it is the occupation of farming. I, therefore, frankly and freely say, that if those who ought not to be farmers, should suffer from this change, however much we may be sorry for the individuals, yet we shall not be surprised (hear, hear). The next class of men is those who, having capital, possess not sufficient confidence in their own energies, or in the productive powers of the soil, to employ that capital to the best advantage."

For the last class, retirement from husbandry would be the best course, but "There is another class who have capital, and who, I believe, cannot better employ it than by putting it on the land for of this I am convinced, that if you behave liberally and handsomely to the land, she will return a liberal and hand nationally to the man, she was return a moral and mand some interest. Those men who have the courage to ayow and to throw over their ancient prejudices, and who possess minds sufficiently enlightened to induce them to adopt all known improvements—those men, I believe, will live to see the day when those measures will confer the greatest benefit upon themselves and the country, and they will arrive at a pitch of prosperity hitherto unknown. They will find that which they have hitherto been disposed to depend upon is most fallacious; they will find that it robbed them of one half the energy which, as Englishmen of intelligence, they ought to possess; they will find that they have hitherto been ignorant the soil of England is capable of producing; they will find themselves as ignorant in those respects as a man who, baring her supports the soil of England is capable of producing; they will find themselves as ignorant in those respects as a man who, baring her first her support in the source has a man who, having been accustomed to go upon crutches all his life, is of what he could do if the use of his limbs were restored to him (hear); they will find that what is populously called "high farming" is the course which they must in future pursue; that they must not fear liberally to use the great advantages of farming with sheep and artificial manures. which last I look upon as a positive gift of Providence; above all, they will find it necessary to increase their quantity of live stock; they will find it necessary to have such erops of turnips that they may still continue to keep as large an amount of sheep as they now do, and still be able to carry a third, or a fourth, of the crop to the yard to fatten bullocks, and thereby make such an increase in the quantity and quality of the dung as shall report them. Clear, then, and quality of the dung as shall repay them (hear, hear) and quality of the dung as shall repay them (hear, hear). I believe it is more for the advantage of all of us to grow four quarters an acre at forty shillings, than three at fifty shillings. So, with regard to meat; I should wish to see so great a quantity of meat raised in this country that the farmers could afford to sell it at two thirds of the prices it is now fetching. What would be the consequence of that? Why, that those who now cat meat once or twice a week at the utmost, would est it two or three times a week, and thus, as regards the producer, the increased consumption would more than equal the diminution in price."

Now this is just what we have so long been say ing, and for which we have been so roundly abused by his lordship and his fellow monopolists. He then referred to the practice of manufacturers, saying:

"Now, with respect to the manufacturers, I believe that this measure will prove most beneficial to them, and I am firmly convinced, from the sympathy which exists between the manufacturing and the agricultural interest, that whatever is advantageous to, and conduces to the prosperity of the manufacturer, must conduce to the interest of the agricultural. One great cause of the prosperity of the manufacturer was this—notwithstanding he has had taxes of all sorts to contend with, and also a high tax on the raw materials which he manufactured, he has proved himself superior to all the other manufacturers of the world, and has competed with and beaten all the world; he has employed his capital liberally and skilfully. On all occasions he has adopted the new improvements in mechanics, and invariably profited by the advantages which science, in its various pranches, could confer upon him. And I would venture to hold out the same inducement to you, and say, the judicious and liberal employment of capital will enable you, as it has enabled the manufacturer of this country, to compete—and that successfully—with the wide world."

True, most true, Lord Essex.

We cannot, however, avoid the suspicion that his lordship is a recent convert to "high farming" no less than to Free Trade—that he belongs to that numerous and increasing class of landowners who deem the light of agricultural knowledge to have first broken upon the rural world since the formation of the Royal Agricultural Society-look upon guano as a specific, and imagine modern machinery will do as much for the farmer as it has done for the manufacturer. Now we do not undervalue any of these things, so far as they go; but we should be false to that interest we have at heart—that of the industrious agriculturists, the tenant farmers, and farm labourers-did we not protest against the notion that there is any royal road to husbandry. Success in farming, as a business, must be the result of much steady, cautious, and persevering industry. Neither do we think that tenants whose capital does not come up to the approved standard of 10% per acre ought to be regarded as men who should "never have been farmers at all." A very considerable proportion of the tenantry of England are farming with less than half that portion of capital, and it can never be supposed that they can be suddenly replaced by men of full capital, or that landlords will immediately abandon their prejudices and their systems which repel capital from the cultivation of their estates. But the capital the farmer has may be made available for increased production by adopting longer rotations of crops, keeping a smaller portion of his land in grass, and cultivating that portion more completely than he has hitherto done. By such means he may increase his stockand gradually acquire the means of a higher system of farming. For such a style of farming, a lease is no less indispensable than for one by which the whole farm is at once highly cultivated. In many cases the landlord might take away some of a farmer's land, and thereby increase his profits, though so general is the custom of taking too much, that it would be difficult to make the ordinary farmer accede to that proposition. But to return to Lord Essex's speech. He then thus manfully referred to his former errors:

"Many of you, no doubt, have been surprised, after hearing me address you not long ago at the meeting at St. Alban's on the subject of the Corn Laws—you must have been surprised, I say, to hear me express the sentiments I have just uttered (hear, hear). Gentlemen, I own—and I do so with a feeling somewhat akin to shame—that the sentiments I then expressed were adopted by me at the time when Pro took but little interest in this subject. I found myself cast among those whose lot was fixed to the soil, and whose whole interest and prosperity were dependent on the soil, and at a moment when the subject of the Corn Laws first became most interesting. With that facility which most people are too apt to show in adopting opinions that apparently forces their own interests. I adopted the opinions rently favour their own interests, I adopted the opinions of those among whom I was classed, and I take shame to myself, when I say that I did so without duly inquiring and fairly considering the subject. I continued to maintain those opinions until I saw that the question was coming to a crisis; and then I found, after deep consideration and strict inquiry, that those opinions were erroneous. I saw that the opinions that the crisis would shortly arrive, when, in the House of Lords, I should be called upon to give a vote upon this quostion, and I then felt that my preconceived opinions, however honest they might have been, were not sufficient grounds on which to give a vote on this deeply-important subject. I felt that as a member of the House of Lords, I was bound to reconsider the question—as an honest man to give an unbiassed vote; and therefore to devote the same attention and give the same good consideration to every argument and statement made on one side of the question, as, I am ashamed to say, I had hitherto given only to those on the other. The result was, that I came to the conclusion that the fears which are entertained on this subject will prove erroneous. I have already stated that I believe the new measure will be productive of great good. When I consider the progressive state of the population of this country—a population increasing a thousand souls a day—I cannot believe that the farming of this country, however much it has improved, can possibly keep pace with that increase of the population. When you consider that the fifth want of all people is a sufficiency of food, I think you will allow that the measure is justified by the circumstances of the times; and I would have you take my word for it, that the employ-ment of capital, and the exercise of akill, will not be injurious, but will produce this effect—that both the employed and employer will be ultimately more happy and pros-

To such a frank confession every Free Trader must respond, and as frankly adopt his lordship into the brotherhood of those who seek to untrang mel British, ayo human, industry. There is one point, however, on which we wish Lord Essex had spoken as explicitly—namely, game. Our reader will remember his controversy with Mr. Horneste his tenant, on the subject of game preserving in which the earl having been worsted, turned the tenant out of his farm. We hope that his lordship implied his own abandonment of game preserving when he said he was ready "to afford any other security to his tenants to induce them to farm on a liberal scale." Assuredly the tenant can have no "security" unless he has complete power over the game.

GAME LAW JUSTICE.

WHO SHALL WATCH THE WATCHERS?

We have of late rather abstained from adverting to the Game Law nuisance, because we have reason to believe, from the character of the witnesses examined before the Game Law Committee and their opportunities of knowing the evils of game preserving, that a case so conclusively condemnatory of the Game Laws will be made out as to render their speedy abolition imperative. There is, however, a case reported in the Bury Past of last week, which is so characteristic that it ought not to be withheld.

It appears that Mr. Cooper, of Inglam—who was examined before the Game Law Committee last year—had reason to suspect that he was robbed by his farm servants, in connection with some other person; and, after watching for a long time, he discovered that two of his barnsmen, in concert with a man named Dolman, a gamekeeper of the Rev. Mr. Benyon's, Mr. Cooper's landlord, were the thieves. They were apprehended; and though committed for trial for the felony, Dodman was forthwif 's bailed by the head keeper, under their master's direction, and the man is now again prowling about Mr. Cooper's farm.

The Rev. Mr. Benyon, we understand, is much addicted to the evil habit of game preserving. The following passage, from the evidence given before the magistrate need no comment. It was stated:

"When Mr. Cooper received the information in December, he was likewise told that a cave was actually dug in a plantation near his house, which contained about 30 arrs, and was held so sacred for game that Mr. Cooper was not even allowed to go into it; and if his hens laid eggs there, it was almost a trespass if the boy went in after them; and his house and other dogs, if they ventured in, were trapped. Till he made the discovery about the cave, Mr. Cooper had never once entered the plantation, knowing how sacred it was held; but in December he went in, and there he found the cave, and corn in it; he afterwards went, day after day, to the cave, and found that the corn gradually diminished, then it became replenished; still by no possibility could he find how it was got there."

Mr. Cooper, when examined, stated:

"On the 25th of March, Richard Devereux, my yardman and foreman, by my orders placed himself in a blacksmith's shop which commanded a view of the road between my barn and the plantation, and of a path in the plantation leading in a zigzag direction to a spot where a cave was dug. That cave, I should imagine, is not an old cave—it is dug about 6 feet long, 4½ feet wide, and about 4 feet deep. It is covered with spars across it, and clods and moulds are thrown over it, so that it is nearly level with the earth. It would hold perhaps about 12 or 14 coombs of corn. I went to Bury market last Wednesday week about ten A.M., and from information I received I returned home a little after one. I then changed my dress, and went to my yard-man, who was near the blacksmith's shop. He told me what he had seen, and went with me into the plantation, and we found there two sacks with spruce fir boughs covered over them. One of those sacks is mine, my name being on it; the name on the other is obliterated, but I have no doubt that it is also mine. They were filled with the 'spottings' from the machine when barley is dressed. I should say the two sacks contain at the least two, if not three, bushels of the bushely. I then secreted myself in the plantation by covering myself with the sere boughs and leaves. I remained then till a little after b o'clock, when I saw Dodman come into the plantation and go to the spot where the sacks were concealed by boughs, and look at them, and walk round them. He then walked away. A few minutes before six I heard a gun fired in the plantation, I do not know by whom. The planta-tion contains between 20 and 30 acres. A few minutes afterwards James Petch came into the plantation and went to wards the direction from where the gun was fired. I then could see the legs of two persons underneath the trees I about three quarters of an lour after the firing of the gun. Dodman came up (he had then a cap on, but on his first coming into the plantation he had a hat on) with James Peich from the thicker part of the plantation to the spots where the sacks were concealed. Dodman took one of the sacks on his shoulder, being assisted by Peich to get it up, and James Peich tried to take away the ether. Dodman proceeded into the thick of the plantation in the direction of the cave. Petoli being a small man could not get his sack, which weighed about 13 stone, away, thench he tried to do no. The direction to the cave is away from my harn. I immediately got up and went to Dodman and laid my hands on his sliciniders, saying There can be no mistake about this question now: I lieve been watching you though these months, and now; I lieve been watching you plainly enough in the very sot! coming into the plantation he had a hat on) with James Peich

ma

mis

the

BAW

Was not bia . Will insti

gan

A CONTRACTOR OF THE PROPERTY O

least a bushel of barley worth three and sixpence a bushel, and the other parts, consisting of refuse seeds, &c. was worth about a shilling. Dodmen then began to shuse me, and senific with me. I gave a signal, which I had agreed upon became with me. A gave a signal, which I had agreed upon to my/man Devereux, who then came up. When he appeared Dodman said to him, 'Holloa, Devereux, here is some of your old seeds.' Petch had no authority from me to sell seeds, nor has any one else in my employ, from my barn. I consume them myself, boiling them with linseed for the sake of the oil, after the plan recommended by Mr. Warnes. of Norfolk. Last winter I kept a quantity of bullocks on the oil from these seeds mixed with linseed and corn. The seeds were int-hen, and poppy seeds, and seeds of all descriptions. When these seeds have been very dry and very bud I have laid them where they might exhaust themselves by growth, so that they were not carried on the land. I do not allow them to be given away or sold to the keeper for the game, because seeds do not decompose in the bodies of fowls, and when they drop their dung the seeds lie and germinate; my land is too full already of the plants, and I want to prevent the evil being extended further. On the 16th of December, when I first went to the cave, I found in it about 6 counts of colder and ordinary barley (without seeds), of which I took away a sample, now produced. These appeared as if taken from the barn floor when threshing was

Mr. Cooper then identified the sacks as his, and stated that the corn stolen was worth 8s. a sack. And added:

"On one occasion, about a month since, on going to the cave I found an obstruction to my drawing the faggot from the mouth of the cave, and, on stooping down to force the faggot away, I pulled the trigger of a spring gun. The noise and smoke quite unnerved and alarmed me, but I received no shot; I was too frightened to think of looking whether shot had hit any of the trees round about. The gun was a tached to one of the rafters of the cave. Dodman has the care of the plantation, and is keeper. The property belongs to the Rev. E. R. Benyon. My barn door is about 10 yards from the entrance to the plantation.

The following is from the evidence of Deveroux, Mr. Cooper's foreman, who had been set to watch when the discovery was made:

"He was, by his master, stationed as a watch in a black smith's shop, which had a wicker window at the side, from whence he could have a full view of the path from the barn up the plantation. He went into the shop about 10 o'clock in the morning, and at about 11 he saw James Petch go into the little plantation, or neck of the bigger one, in a direction from Mr. Cooper's barn, with a full sack on his back. Witness could not see up to the cave, nor within 40 yards of it. He lost sight of Petch, but in about five minutes he came back again towards the barn without anything on his back. In about another five or ten minutes after that he saw him come again in a direction from the barn with another full sack on his back, and go in the same direction as before. He soon returned without any sack, and went towards the barn, and witness saw nothing further going on. James Petch could not have got the sacks on his shoulders without assistance. In about 20 minutes after witness left the blacksmith's shop, and went into the plantation in the direction he had seen Petch go with the sacks, and he found them under a spruce tree covered up with spruce boughs. They were full of undressed barley. He did not examine sufficiently to see if there were any marks on the sacks. He then left the plantation, and sent off to Bury for his master. He had been in the barn about an hour before he saw James Petch go into the plantation with the sacks. James and Bonjamin Petoli were the two only men at work in the barn. He saw there two heaps, one of spoutings and the other of screenings. One was a small heap—the other a large one. About half an hour after seeing the sacks carried into the plantation he went into the barn, where only the two Petches were. He found the small heap of screenings gone, and the large heap of spoutings much diminished. The Petches were uncle and nephew. In the spoutings there is a portion of good barley, in the screenings very little—the spoutings would be dressed again, but the screenings would not. He should say in the spoutings there would be pretty nearly half of best barley; in a sack of them he was sure there would be a bushel of the best barley. It was considered that spoutings always there would be a bushel of the best barley. It was considered that spoutings always threw off the largest and best barley. Witness by his master's direction was on the look out in the afternoon. About 6 o'clook he heard a go fired in the plantation, and soon after saw James Petch go into it by the same path as before. About half an hour ster Mr. Cooper gave him a call, and he went to him; he found the went to him; he found him with Dodman near, and one of the sacks by his saide. Dodman said to witness.— Devereux, I have got some of your seeds here. He believed this was all that passed then. Dodman said nothing about buying them. On Saturday last witness met Dodman in his walks, and Dodman said. Wall Doubless of late walks, and Dodman said. man said, 'Well, Devereux, we have got into emoke,' or something of that sort. Witness replied, 'I don't know much about how that is.' Dodman said, 'I don't care anything about it, because I had never any thing off the premises expent substance in how that is the plantation and that mises, except what was brought into the plantation, and that I bought (or was allowed); I saw the two sacks lying in the plantation an hoor before ever I touched them; I thought perhaps it might be a trap laid for me, and for that reason I would not meddle with them till the man came. I will defy the men in the yard, or about the premises, ever to say they saw me interfere with anything upon the premises, till the men in this, and they told me they had leave to sell it. He also said he gave sixpense a sack for it, which he was always allowed to give for refuse seeds. Witness did not know of there hadre a case in the plantation till Mr. not know of there being a cave in the plantation till Mr. Copper told him of it. He had never been allowed, nor had Cohper told him of it. Fie had never been allowed, nor had others, to go into the plantation."

"The magistrate, the Rev. Mr. Bidwell, said it would be his duty to send both of the parties for trial; but he was willing to take ball, the majelves for 50th, and two stretches for 21. each, or one good surely for 50th, that they would appear to answer the charge at the next Quarter Besidons.

"Ayres, the head gaindnesper to Mr. Benyon, the at his master's desire had seen present at the hearing of the case, instantly gave buil for Dodiman, for 50th.

Beveral parties take to the property of the ball for Petalt, but on being stationally by Mr. Bidwall of the said and been convicted by Mr. Cooper for being was a man who had been convicted by Mr. Cooper for being; of course his offer of ball was initiallated. The said of the gamekeeper's benefit. We believe Mr. Crantley Borke-ley, and other game-preservers of the "punch-in-thehead" school, assert that the gamekeepers and gamewatchers are, at all events, effective protectors of the farmers' property, or so much of it as is not wanted to feed his landlord's game. What will the vermin-protectors say to this case?

MORE MONOPOLIST EVIDENCE FOR FREE TRADE.

It seems that Lord Abingdon, like the Marquis of Salisbury, is practically giving the lie to the loudlymade "protectionist" assertion, that Free Trade will drive poor land out of cultivation. The very reverse is the truth. Here is the practical testimony of a monopolist witness:

"CULTIVATION OF WASTE LANDS .- The Earl of Abingdon has for some time past caused employment to be given to a great number of labourers, under the superintendence of Mr. Druce, an eminent agriculturist, of Ensham, Oxon, in clearing a large tract of land, thickly studded with furze and gorse, at Cumnor, Berks, situate about three miles west of the city of Oxford, known as Cumnor-heath and Cumnorhurst, a noted warren for rabbits, and also a harbour for other game, very much to the destruction of the adjoining crops, and which from time immemorial has been lying-waste. Last year his lordship caused a portion of it to be cleared for agricultural purposes, and the results of the crops then produced were highly satisfactory, so much so, that during the past winter another portion has been cleared and planted, and during the present spring it is expected that the whole of it will be brought into good cultivation. Whatever the Earl of Abingdon's opinions may be respecting the measures of Sir R. Peel, it is scarcely necessary to inquire if he entertains the notion that Free Trade will either depreciate the value of land in this country, or cause it to go out of cultivation altogether; indeed, if we may judge from the great outlay in bringing this large trant of land into cultivation, and also that it is being carried out on the very eve of the downfull of protection, it may be fairly inferred that the contrary is his lordship's opinion. This is the com-mencement of a system which might be most advantageously carried out in the neighbourhood of Oxford, for within a few miles of that city there are upwards of 1000 acres of land which are comparatively of little value, but might easily be made available for agricultural purposes. allude to Port Meadow, the property of the freemen of the city of Oxford and inhabitants of Wolvercot, containing between 500 and 600 acres of as rich and fertile land as any in the county of Oxford—the meadow is fed without stint all the year round (except when under water), and is only serviceable pecuniarily to those parties who can afford to stock it—the poor freemen not having even the privilege of letting their commons.—Times.

EMIGRATION.—For the last fortnight our quays have been daily thronged with the fine and stalwart peasantry of this and the adjoining counties, preparing to emigrate to various parts of the transatlantic world. Perhaps upon no former occasion, even before the hope of railway employment was held out to the people, and when "Government grants" for their relief were never heard of, did the number of emigrants from this quarter exceed the proportion of the present year. Besides the various large and full freighted vessels which have left the quays of Cork direct for America, several ships were despatched to the west of the county, and had no diffculty in obtaining their full complement of pussengers. The Triumph and the Leviathan, two large ships chartered by Mr. Marmion, of Skibbercen, went round to Berchaven a few days ago, and have since left the shores of that bleak district with over 200 passengers. The St. Laurence, the Ponzola, the Albion, the Brothers, and some other vessels, have proceeded or are about to proceed also for Baltimore and Berchaven, localities in which the destitution of the present year has been severely folt. Three hundred persons have been ready for the last fortnight to embark from Dingle, but not being able to get a ship to visit them sufficiently commodious for their accommodation, have been obliged to make the best of their way to Cork. Several vessels now lying at Passage will sail this day, among which are (from Mr. Murray) the Marian, for Quebec, with 250 passengers; the Ocean, for St. John's, with 200 passengers; and the Bacha M'Evers, for St. Andrews, with 150 passengers. sengers. From the same office the Princess, the Albion, the Lord Glenelg, and his Effughan, will start some time in the present month. The Effingham, now lying at Cove, is one of the largest emigration vessels ever from Cork. She registers 1500 tons, and has accommodation for 500 passengers. The Ellen and Margaret, from the office of Mr. O'Neil, Merhand uay, and the Urania for Quebec, will sail this day for St. John's, New Brunswick, with about 240 passengers. The Thomas Hungerford, with 126 passengers, the Wood land Castle, 106 passengers, the Champlain, with 160, and Princess Royal, are also being despatched by the same agent. Many of these vessels are conveying cabin passengers, comfortable farmers, who do not like the prospects of the times at home. A great number of agricultural labourers are among the emigrants from the counties of Limerick and Tipperary. The Adirapdock for New York, the Pallas for St. John's, and the Coxen, sailed since the middle of March, chartered at the office of Mr. M'Auliffe, and containing over 600 phasengers—the vessels yet to be despatched from this office being the Brilliant, Try Again, Obio, Trident, and Liberty, the aggregate freight of which will be over 1900 passengers. the aggregate freight of which will be over 1200 passengers. At a moderate computation about 9000 emigranis have, or within the next month will have left this port for America. It is to be hoped their anticipations will be realised. There can be little fear, however, that their condition sould be worse, or their proposite more disheartsning, than those which the "potato famine" in this country little mended by the promise of Indian corn, had occasioned—Le faim chaise is loup hors dis bois. To starve or emigrate are the only alternatives of the people.—Cork Reporter.

Stars of Tands.—We regret to state that the trade in like district is in a very languid think and that a failure to a large amount had obsorred divide the last faw days, which will very much affect the small manufacturers of Horion, Claylon and that heighbourhood. Work at Mr. Rouse's mill has been farly resumed, in consequence of the Lord Obstantial of inviting abjointed a readily and manufacturers of the Lord Obstantial of inviting abjointed a readily and manufacturers of the Lord Obstantial of inviting abjointed a readily and manufacturers of the Lord Obstantial of inviting abjointed a readily and manufacturers of the Lord Obstantial of inviting abjointed a readily and manufacturers of the Lord Obstantial of the Lord Obstant

THE EARL OF ESSEX AND FREE TRADE

The first annual meeting of the Watford Farmers' Glub was held on Tuesday, the 7th instant, and was very numerously attended by the landlords and tonant-farmers of the district. After the routine business an animated discussion took place relative to tenants' rights, which terminated in the adoption of a resolution to the effect that the tenant farmer is suitified to receive from the landlord, upon quitting a ferm, full com-pensation for any capital expended in improvements. The members of the club direct together in the evening at the Essex Arms, the President of the Society (the Earl of Essex) taking the chair.

The usual loyal and patriotic toasts baving been drunk,
The Noble Chairman rose to propose "Success to the Watford Farmers' Club." After alluding to the practically useful character of such associations, the noble Lord said, that although hitherto political topics had been excluded, yet he trusted he might be excused if he presumed to offer a few remarks upon a question of great importance to the agricultural community, and which had recently engaged the attention of the Legislature-he need not say that he alluded to the Corn Laws (hear, hear). At no period in our lives (said the noble carl)-indeed, at no period in the history of the country, has it ever been so absolutely necessary for all who are connected with agriculture to exert themselves to the utmost not only to advance themselves in the profession they have chosen, but even to keep their heads above water. prop on which you have hitherto depended-on which you have been accustomed to lean for years, and which you have been accustomed to consider as conducive to your successthat prop, upon which you have so long relied is, I believe, about to be removed. I say that the broken reed, protection, which ireratofore you have depended upon, is about to be taken away from you. The time is coming, gentlemen, when we must assist each other. I think you will all agree with me that if it was ever essential, it is now more than over necessary that you should exert yourselves in order to evade that which you may at present regard as a calamity to the agricultural body. Let us calmly consider what is proposed to be done; and whatever the difficulties may be, let us endeavour to meet them manfully. No doubt, by a great measure of this sort, as by all great measures, however beneficial they may be to the mass of the people at large, some persons must suffer. That is the inevitable consequence of all great changes. On this occasion there are two classes of farmers who are more liable than any others to be injured. The first class comprehends all those who have been farming without capital-men who, I say, and I say it with greater freedom, because I believe there are none here in that situation—men who never should have been farmers at all; because it is clear, that if there is an occupation in which, owing to the vicinstitudes of the seasons, capital is absolutely necessary, it is that of farming. I therefore frankly and freely say, that if those who are farming, as it is called, from hand to mouth—men who ought not to be farmers—if such men should suffer from the change, however much we may be sorry for the in-dividuals, yet we shall not be surprised. The next class likely to be seriously affected is those who, having capital, possess not sufficient confidence in their own energies, or in the productive powers of the soil, to employ that capital to the best advantage. With regard to that class, I say that if, in addition to their unwillingness to employ capital, they should also feel an unwillinguese to throw over their deep-rooted prejudices, and many of those untiquated ideas which still exist in the breasts of many farmers; if they feel themselves unwilling again to go to school, and to benefit by the advantages of science and the experience of others, both of which are now so lavishly offered them; if they are unwilling to enter the race of improvement which is now so general throughout the country; to those men, I must say, as their best friend, that they should leave their profession before they lose the remainder of their fortunes (hear, hear). For if they determine to stand still while others are advancing, they will find that those who are possessed of more energy and enterprise will outrun and cast them down. These are the classes of men who will suffer most from the great changes which are about to take place. There is another class, who have capital, and who, I believe, cannot better employ it than by putting it on the land; for of this I am convinced, that if you behave liberally and handsomely to the land, it will return liberal and handsome interest. Those men who have the courage to avow and throw over their ancient projudices, and who possess minds sufficiently intelligent to induce them to adopt all known improvements, those men, I believe, will live to see the day when these measures from which so much of evil is anticipated by them, will be found to confer the greatest benefit upon themselves, and the country in general; and agriculturists will arrive, I think, at a pitch of prosperity hitherto unknown. They will find that that which they have hitherto been disposed to depend upon as their best protection is most fulfacious in practice; they will find that it robbed them of one-half of the energy, which, as Englishmen intelligence, they ought to possess LIJOY that they have been ignorant of what they themnelven have been capable of doing, and of what the soil of England is capable of producing; they will find themselves as ignorant in these respects as a man who having been accustomed to go upon crutches all his life, is of what he could do were he restored to the use of his limbs. They will find that what is commonly called high farming, is the course which they must in future pursue—that they must not fear liberally to use the great advantages of farming with sheep and artificial manures, which last I look upon as a positive gift of Providence-above all they will find it necessary to increase their quantity of live stock; they will find at necessary to have such crops of turnips that they may still continue to keep as large a stock of slicep as they do now, and still be able to carry a third or a fourth of the crop from the yard to fatten bullocks, and thereby make such an increase in the quantity and quality of the dung as an increase in the quantity and quanty or the dung as shall repay them. A few weeks ago, I saw in the yard of Mr. Reed, a tenant of mine, a number of fine, fresh looking bullooks, all of which had been kept on turnips, and which seemed in good condition, and ready for the butcher, without having cost beyond the value of the turnips upon which sheep had been fed at the same time. I would willingly see the same in the yards not only of my own tenants but of all the farmers of the country 1 and if that were the dase—" a consummation most devoutly to be wished"—we should have consummation most devotily to be wished ——we should have abundance of corn and abundance of ment, the produce of our own soil, brought to market as prices, it is aru, comparatively low with the present prices; but yet, by the abundance of the gridle, remunerative to the producer, and at the same time of the producer, and at the same time of the producer, and at the same time of the representative to the producer, and at the same time of the prices are necessary for our prosperity. I believe that the prosperity of our interest and that of our fellow country-men depend not on the high prices of articles, but rather on their abundance. I bolieve, for instance, it is more advan-tageous for all of us to grow four quarters an agre at 40s. than three quarters at 50s. So with regard to meat, I should wish to see so great a quantity of mest produced in this country, that the farmers could afford to sell it at two thirds of the price it now fetches. What, I ask, would be the con-sequence of that? Why, that those who now only touch most once or twice in the week at the utmost, would be enabled to cat it three times in the week; and thus as regards the producer, the increased consumption would more than equal the diminution in price (hear, hear). Now, with respent to the manufacturers, I believe that the measures to which I have alluded will prove most beneficial to them, and I am firmly convinced, from the sympathy which exists between the manufacturing and agricultural interests, that whatever is advantageous to the one must be conducive to the welfare of the other. We cannot shut our eyes to the fact, that one great cause of the presperity of the manufac-turers was, that, notwithstanding they have bad taxes of all sorts to contend with, and also a high tax on raw materials which they manufactured, they have proved themselves superior to all the manufacturors of the world. And let us see why so? Why, for this simple reason—the British manufacturer has employed his capital skilfully and liberally; he has, on all occasions, adopted new improvements in me chanics, and invariably profited by the advantages which every fresh discovery in science could confer upon him. I would centure to hold out the same inducements to you as agriculturists, and say that the liberal and judicious employmant of your capital will enable you, as it has enabled the manufacturer to compete, and that successfully, with the whole world. I have urged that which I think necessary to onable you, as farmers, to stand up against the coming changes. I recommend you to employ skill, science, energy, and capital. skill and energy will not cost you anything, you may acquire skill from books, and from the publications of all sorts in which is offered the experience of others; the energy must come from yourselves. But, perhaps, you will say that capital costs something. Granted; most of you who are now present, I have no doubt, attended the meeting before dinner, at which the question of tenants' rights was very properly discussed. I need not repeat what was there said in referonce to the employment of capital in agriculture. Perhaps I may be permitted, however, to observe that, as a landlord, I have long been and am still convinced that the tonant-furmers of this country are entitled to ample remuneration for all the improvements which they may make in their landlord's property (cheers). If they have put manure upon the land, or have improved the buildings, and if they leave their farms before the expiration of the value of those improvements, I, as a landlord, do not hesitate to state that they are fully entitled to be remunerated for the value of their unexhausted improvements; and I say to my tenants now, that when they are willing to make im provements in the buildings, or by increasing the value f the soil, I pledge myself that when they leave any of my farms they shall be amply remunerated for the unexpired value of such improvements as they may have (loud cheers). I am now anxious to say a few words in reference to myself, and to the course which I propose taking at this momentous crisis. Many of you, no doubt, have been surprised, after hearing me address you not very long ago, at the meeting at St. Albans, on the subject of the Corn Laws-you must have been surprised, I say, to hear me express the sentiments I have just uttered (hear, hear). Contlemen, I own, and I do so with a feeling somowhat akin to shame, that the sentiments I then exprossed were adopted by me at the time when Providence first cast me amongst you, and previous to which I took little interest in this subject. I found myself cast amongst those whose lot was fixed to the soil; whose whole interests and property were dependent on the soil; and at a moment when the Corn Laws first became a subject of prominent interest among all those connected with the land. With that facility which most people are too apt to show in adopting opinions that apparently favour their own interests, I fell in with the view of those with whom I was chassed; and I take shame to myself that I did so without duly inquiring into and fairly considering the subject. I continued to maintain those opinions until I saw that the question was coming to a crisis, and then I found, after due reflection and strict inquiry, that those opinions were erroneous. I saw that the time was approaching when, in the House of Lords, I should he called upon to give a vote on the question of the Corn Laws. I then felt that my proconceived opinions, however honest they might have been, were not sufficient grounds to give my vote on this important subject. I felt that, as a member of the House of Lords, I was bound to consider the question as an honost man it was my duty to give an unblassed vote, and therefore to devote the same attention, and give the same good and empful consideration to every argument and statement made on one side of the question, as, I am ashamed to confess, I had heretofore given only to those advanced on the other side. The result was, that I came to the conclusion that the fears which are entertained on this aubject will prove unfounded. I have aleady stated that I believe the new measures will be productive of great general good. I see now that we have been accustomed to regeneral good. I see now that we have been accustomed to regard this question only in a partial light—that we have not hitherto taken that wide and comprehensive view of it which its vast importance demands. When I consider the progressive state of the population of this country—a population independent at the rest of that no day—I cannot believe that increasing at the rate of 1900 per day-1 cannot believe that the farming of this country, however much it has improved --and no one is more willing than I am to bear testimony to the fact that It has improved, and is still rapidly improved. ing still, I say, I cannot think that the farming of this country can possibly keep page with the increase of the population. That is a strong argument in favour of the new measure. When you consider that the first want of all people is a sufficiency of food, I think that you will allow that the law is called for by the circumstances of the times; and I would have you take my word for it, that the employ ment of capital and the exercise of skill will not be injurious but will produce the most boneficial offect. Every class will unite for the general good, old animonities be laid aside, and ultimately both the employer and the employed will become more contented, prosperous, and happy. The noble lord concluded by proposing "Success to the Watford Farmers' Club, which was drunk with the usual honours.

Several other toasts followed, amongst which was "The health-of-the Barl of Bess, Prosident of the Association," and, notwittengding the aurprise excited by the noble lard's thulooked for declaration in favour of Free Trade, the toast was drank with much cordinity, even by some of the more scalous advocates of protection, a compliment gaid, no doubt, to Lord Essex in his private character as a landlord. Two or three of the subsequent speakers dissented from his lord-slip's view of the question, but the company separated in perfect good humour.

REGISTRATION APPEALS.

Knowles, Appellant, v. BROOKING, Respondent. Judgment.—Chiev-Justice Tiedal.—The question reserved for our determination by the revising barrieter in this case is, whether the notices of objection against the name of a person being retained on the list of voters for the borough which notices were signed by him as objector, with the addition of the true place of abode, but being another and different to the true place of abode, but being another and different to the little of the contract of the little of the littl ent place from that inserted, against his name on the list of votors, are sufficient? The revising barrister held the no-tices to be sufficient; and although the question may be subject to considerable doubt, and one of my learned brothers, for whose judgment I entertain the greatest respect, thinks differently, the opinion I have been compelled to arrive at is, that the revising barrister's decision was right. The forms of the law notices on which the precise question turns are there numbered 10 and 11 in schedule B in the Registration Act, 6 Vie., c. 18; and it is on the construction of those forms that the question must necessarily turn. But it may receive some light from the consideration of the form numbered 4 and 5 in schedule A of the same Act, and also from the form, since repealed, given in schedules H and J in the statute 2 Wm. IV., c. 45. The form in question, numbered 10 and 11 in schedule B, concludes thus: "Signed, A. B., of then there is "place of abode" in parenthesis-" on the list of voters for the parish of and the appellant contends that these outer words operate as a direction given to the objector that he must fill up the "place of abode" by inserting it against his name "on the list of voters." But the respondent, on the other hand, contends that the words meant no more than a simple allegation that the objector's name is on the list of voters, as it was required it should be by section 17 of the statute; for it is to be observed, that the 17th section requires only that the name of the objector shall have been insorted on the list of voters for the borough, and that he shall give the notice of objection to the overseers, according to the form numbered 10 in the schedule B, " or to the like effect; or that he shall also cause to be given or left at the place of abode of the person objected to, as stated in the same list, the notice according to the form numbered" in the same schedule. So that the question substantially turns upon the construction of the form so referred to in the statute. And it appears to me that, looking to the concluding words of those two forms. they could not in any manner qualify the sense of what had preceded, namely, the "place of abode," or in any manner refer to the "place of abode" contained in the list of voters but that the whole sentence is satisfied if the true place of abode of the objector at the time of giving the notice is in-serted in the notice. The words between the parenthesis are only "place of abode," words which, taken absolutely and by themselves, and in their natural sense, would denote the true place of abode of the party objecting, for the words between the parenthesis are not "place of abode on the list of voters," which necessarily require the construction contended for by the appellant; nor are the words as " in the list of voters; which latter form would also necessarily require the same construction. But the words within the parenthesis are simply "place of abode;" and the words that follow contain the distinction that such "place of abode" is not the "place of abode." of abode " to be found "on the list of voters;" and it appears to me to couffrin this construction of the form, as in the 17th section, that gives the form of notice. The notice that is to be given to the parties, is directed to be left at the "place of abode" of the person objected to, as stated "in the list." Whereas the form itself, when referring to the "place of abode" of the objector, says no more than "place of abode;" and us that may be considered as actually inserted in the body of the 17th section, this distinction, with respect to the place of abode of the person objecting and that of the person objected to, still further sauctions the argument as to the interpretation to be put upon it. The former obviously refers to the corresponding notices in schedule A of the same Act, in cases of objections to the names of voters being retained on the register; and we hold this view of the objection is con-firmed. But schedule A, No. 4, which is the form of notice to be given to the overscers, contains two columns; the one to be given to the overscers, contains two columns; the one headed "Christian and surname of the voter objected to, as described in the list of voters;" the second is, "place of abode as described;" but the signature of the objector himself is only required to be "A. B." (place of abode), simply, and nothing more. In that form, the place of abode of the objector must in its natural sense be construed as the "place of abode" in which he then is, and no other; more narricularly when contrasted with the requisition as to the particularly when contrasted with the requisition as to the place of abode of the party objected to, which is required to be "as described on the register." The form that immediately follows, schedulo A, No. 8, leads to the same conclusion. The name and the "place of abode" of the party objected to, are required to be inserted "as described in the objected to, are required to be inserted as all A.B., of ——, list;" the name of the objector to be signed "A.B., of ——, (place of abode) on the register." We may finish the remainder of this form of notice, by number of in which the words are for the first time signed "on the list of voters." In all the preceding forms, both that given to the overseers, No. 4, and also in all the forms of notice given under the statute 2 Wm. IV., ch. 45, the signature is directed to be "A.B., of ___ (place of abode)," and nothing more. By the notice of objection under the statute of William, with those which direct only the form of notice of objection to be given to the overseerin the schedule A, No. 4, we are satisfied by adopting the place of abode of the objector at the time, no more than the old place of abode being required; while in the one of those cases there is certainly nothing in the reason of the thing that would call for the insertion of the very same place of abode of the objector as given in the list in the other remaining forms given by the statute. I cannot any that such an objection is made necessary by the enacting words of the statute in the forms of the schedule. The words "on the list of voters" appear to me no more than a simple allegation of the existence of a no more than a simple allegation of the existence of a fact that has been made essential by the 17th section, namely, that the objector's name is on the "register" for the county, and the "list of voters" for the borough, as the case may be. The fact is one that may be determined by the oversers without reference to the list, or by the harty objected to by inspecting anoth "rogister" or "list" that he has prepared, which they are not to do; and though it is objected that if the new description is given for the first time of the objector's place of abole, it must give rise to difficulty and confusion, it seems a sumicient answer that no real difficulty can follow, unless there happens to be more than difficulty can follow, unless there happens to be more that one voter on the same register or list having the same Chistian usms and surname; and if there is but one, then it must be that of the objector, and no other; and if there is a proper but one, all the difficulty will be removed if there is a proper description, namely, in the case of the borough franchise. If therefore the identity of the objector must be made out then the mentioning and giving the true place of abode of the objector must afford a better opportunity of inquiry and communication than the adding of the old place of abode, which it must be assumed for some cause or other is incorwhich it must be assumed for some cause or other is incorrest with regard to giving the notice. On the ground, therefore, that the construction above given of the form of notice appears the most natural and correct, and that it is confirmed by the heading of the forms as above adverted to, I have urived at the conclusion that the decision of the revising bar rister is right: It would be futile to enter into an examination of the relative convenience or inconvenience that should arise from this view of the case, because it appears to me that whatever may be the result in that respect, our determination ought to rest on the words of the statute. Mr. JUSTICE COLTMAN. - I concur with the Lord Chief Justice in the opinion he has expressed on the subject of the present appeal. I am not able to go so fully into a consideration of the construction contended for, but I am, however, of the opinion held by the Lord Chief Justice, and I think it the most plain and natural meaning, and it is that which ought to be adopted; for it seems to me the word, "place of abode," at the bottom of the form number 10 in the schedule B of the Act of Victoria, c. 18, in their natural sense do mean the true place of abode; and it must be so under stood, unless some words of quelification are added to it. The following words on the list of voters for the parish of "do describe the quality of the objector bimself, but not, as it seems to me, the quality of the place in which he lives. John Brooking, the objector, is truly said to be ou the list of voters for the parish of St. Saviours," and it can not be said with propriety of language, as of "Higherstreet, Dartmouth, on the list of votors for the parish of $S_{\rm L}$ Saviours." If the intention of the Act had been to require him to state, not the true place of abode, but that described in the list, it would have said so in plain terms, and the forms would have been "place of abode as described in the list, or to the like affect." And I have been rather led to the list, or to the like effect." And I have been rather led to this conclusion from the use of the terms "to that effect," in the form of the schedule A, number 4 and 5, the words used in number 4 being place of abode, as described, and the words in number 5 being place of abode, as described in the The reasons for the construction I have put on the forms principally in question have been already stated, and are so distinctly shown by my Lord Chief Justice that I do not think it necessary to add anything further. Mr. JUSTICH ERLE.—I fully concur in the judgment given by my Lord Chief Justice and by my brother Coltman. It was objected that the notice of objection was void because it did not contain that which is stated on the list of voters to be his place of abode. The question turns upon the proper construction of the words directing the signature in the forms 10 and 11, schedule B, in the 6th of Vic., c. 18, "A. B. (place of abode) on the list of voters for the parish of B." The appellant contends "on the list of voters" is indicative of the place of abode. By the 2d William 4, c. 45, he is required to give the place of abode, signed A. B., place of abode," and those words require the true place of abode. By the 6th of Viewords require the true place of abode. toria, the insertion of the name of the objector in the list of voters is the whole qualification; and the forms 10 and 11 require not only the name, but the addition of " on the list According to the reasonable construction, as it seems to me, of the words used, the two statements denote the same office as the additional words employed, though not really containing a statement as to the qualification. According to the appellant, the words, "on the list of voters," applied to the place of abode, are construed as meaning, "A. B., on the list of voters." To this there were several objections: 1st, the words must be altered before they express this meaning, for they are incapable of such an application; 3d., when so altered, they will contain a material statement when so applied to the name that is material to show the qualification; thirdly, the meaning contended for could not be given to the same words, as the two Acts are in pari materia; and fourthly, if to describe the place of abode was intended, those words would have been used; where they are used in both statements, the notice is referred to the last place of abode. There is no reason to say, on looking at the forms numbers 10 and 11, and what is required to be given in respect of the place of abode, that he is to give any other than his true place of abode. I cannot discover any good effect from requiring "place of abode in the list," instead of the true place of abode. If a communication is contemplated, by giving the true place of abode, where the name occurs only once, the identity is clear without any more being said; if the name occurs twice, the defect is easily remedied. For these reasons I concur in the judgment that has been given. to attend to-day, but he has given his judgment to Mr. Erle, who will read it for him.

[Mr. Justice Enle then read the judgment of Mr. Justice Maule, as follows.] This was an appeal from the decision of the revising barrister for the borough of Dartmouth. It was contended that rister for the borough of Dartmouth. It was contended that the notices of objection which had been given to the overseers, and to the persons objected to, were sufficient. These notices concluded with the words "(signed) John Brooking, Higher-street, Dartmouth, on the list of voters for the parish of St. Saviour's." The place of shode of the objector is mentioned on the list of voters referred to, as "Newroad," and not "Higher street;" the fact being that although he had offices in "Newroad," his place of abods was "Higher-street." The notices were objected to, on the ground that they omitted the place of abode as mentioned in the list referred to. The Act 6th Victoria, c. 11, requires, in section 13, the overseers of every parish in the borough to make out the list of persons entitled to vote scoording to the forms numbered 3 and 4 in sabedule B; that the Christian and surname of each person on the list shall be writted to have columns for the Ghristian and surname, at full each, and the place of abode. Section, I gives to any substantial to have been harded in any list of reference to the country and the place of abode. Section, I gives to any in the borough, nower, to object, name that the list of provides that the forms numbered 3 and 11 quality to the forms numbered 10 and 11 in the list of reference to the forms numbered 10 and 11 in the list of the forms numbered 10 and 11 in the list of the forms numbered 10 and 11 in the list of the forms numbered 10 and 11 in the list of the forms numbered 10 and 11 in the list of the forms numbered 10 and 11 in the list of the forms numbered 10 and 11 in the list of the forms numbered 10 and 11 in the list of the forms of the forms numbered 10 and 11 in the list of the forms of the form the notices of objection which had been given to the over-cepti prob

Act

whic

to, but whateve register tion 34 rister, v *ufficien upon th them, a the who thority person

descrit

the over lairs to have no other pr respond to conta contende tained that the tended to objector out the malerial inmedia tice, and to. Was confusion Aboda" i not to be

The question is, whether this provision as to the notices has been compiled with; in other words, whether a police is deficient which wholly omits all mention of the objection as it appears on the list of voters? For the appellant it was insisted that this asction of the Act required the place of abode of the objector as it appeared on the list of voters to which the notice refers, and that it must appear on the notice; for in cases where there has been a mistake in theflist of voters. or a change of abode since it was made out, it might or might not be necessary to add a mention of "the place of abode" at the date of the objection. For the respondent it was contended, the place of abode required to be mentioned was that at the date of the objection, and that the Act did not require any mention of the place of abode as it appeared on the list of voters. And the question to be decided depends upon the construction of the 17th section of the 6th of Victoria, c. 18, and the notice of abjection therein the 6th of victoria, 6. 16, and the notice of abjection therein prescribed. It may be convenient to consider the general nature and purposes of the Act in which the section in question occurs. The Act 2 Wm. IV., c. 45, "for the better representation of the people of England and Wales," contains, as incidental to the important changes it makes, certain previsions for forming the register of persons entitled to vote for members of Parliament. These provisions having been insufficient, the Act 8th Victoria, c. 18 was passed, of which the principal object was to make a now set of regulations for forming the register of voters. This Act has accordingly made many additions to, and alterations in, the provisions relating to the Registration Act of William, among which are to be noticed, first, the Act of William that gives in section 50 the power of objecting to the names of persons being retained on the list of voters in counties—not only to persons "on the register," but those who had claimed to be inserted "on the list of voters," whether actually inserted or not; while the Act of Victoria, by section 17, contains such a power of objecting to persons whose names are on the register; se-coully, that in the forms given of the list of voters and claimants, and persons objected to in cities and boroughs in the Act of William, no mention of the place of abode is required, except in the cases of freemen, the rights of voting not depending there upon property; whereas, in the case of county voters, the place of abode was to be inserted; so that in the case of borough voters on the register, therefore, many voters under that Act could be described by their Christian and surname only, without any addition of place of abode. This is altered by the Act of Victoria, which requires in all cases, without exception, both in counties and boroughs, the place of abode as well as the name shall appear on the list. The third alteration is the form of notices of objection, which, under the Act of William, did not contain any state ment that the objector was on the register, or was one of the claimants in a county, or was "on the list" of voters in the borough; and did not in any other manner show he was one of the class of persons to whom the right of objecting belonged. The Act of Victoria in all cases, with one exception to be hereafter noticed, requires the objector to de scribe himself as "on the register" or "list of voters; and to refer particularly to the parish "on the regis ter" or "the list." The object of these alterations probably was to identify porsons mentioned in "the list" more completely, so as to enable those whom it concerned to know in an easy and certain manner who the person named was, and to enable the party objected to, on referring to "the list," or portion of the register mentioned, to ascertain whether the objector had shown himself to have a right to object; and in case of its not appearing that he had such a right, to enable him instantly to disregard the objection, which the revising barrister would be bound to treat as not sufficient, and to call upon him to prove his qualification. The alterations are not only more adapted to effect this purpose, but they are Iso in conformity to the law, which in many cases has made it necessary, and which geueral convenience has in almost all cases made it desirable surname, as well as his "place of abode;" and they are in conformity also with the rule which in cases of special authority or results. thority or power to be exercised in writing requires the person assuming to exercise it should be one of those to whom it belongs. The former notice before referred to is an exception to the general rule, and under the Act of Victoria the forms of notices of objection require the objector to describe himself as "on the register," or "list." This confirms the view that the meaning of the form is to enable the party objected to to refer to the "list" or the "register," to escertain whether the objector is to be found upon it. That exception is the form numbered 4 in the schedule of the Act of Victoria which form is not a register to the party objector. of Victoria, which form is not a notice to the party objected to, but to the overseers of the county; and this form concludes with the words "A.B., — (place of abode)," without any statement of the objector being on the register. Now it is to be observed, the overseers have no concern whatever with the question, whether the objector is on the register or not. By the section 8 of the Act of Victoria, they are required to publish a list of persons against whom notices of objection have been given to them; and, by section 34, to bring the original notices before the revising barrister, who, and not the overseers, is to be judge of their authorisms. aufficiency. The overseers have no interest or duty calling upon them to ascertain whether the objector is on the list; and a reference to it would not assist, but might embarrage them, as it might be calling upon them to refer to the list of the whole county. This view is in conformity with section of the Act that requires the clerk of the peace to send to the average of the conformity with section. the overseer a copy only of such part of the register as relates to his parish; thus treating him as a person who could have no concern with the paris of the register relating to other parishes. It was not depled on the part of the repondent that the notices of objection in question ought to contain an assertion of the right to object; but it was to contain an assertion of the right to object; but it was contended that it was sufficiently stated in the words as contained in the words are contained in the words as contained in the words are contained in the words. contended that it was sufficiently stated in the words as contained "in the list of voters for the parish of —;" and that the preceding words "A. B. (place of abode)," were intended to require a statement of the name in addition; the objector is inserted in the list with his name only, and without the addition at the fine of signing the notice. It is material in this part of the discussion to observe that the imaginate object of inquiry is, what is the meaning of a notice filled up according to the form? for it is such a notice, and not the form itself, that is sent to the party objected to. Want of attending to this, has, I think, produced some confusion. The form of notice has the words "place of abode" in taking within a parenthesis; then the words on the list of votice, and this parenthesis is not to be retained in the notice when drawn, but is only meant to show the order pitting it are not to be the very service in the notice, but he offer it is in the notice. But he offer it is not to be the very service in the notice, but he offer it is not to be the very service in the notice, but he offer it is not to be the very service in the notice, but he offer it is not to be the very service in the notice, but he offer it is not to be the very service in the notice, but he offer it is not to be the very service in the notice, but he offer it is not to be the very service in the notice, but he offer it is not to be the very service in the notice, but he offer it is not to be the very service in the notice, but he offer it is not to be the very service in the notice. But he offer it is not to be the very service in the notice, but he offer it is not to be the very service in the notice. But he offer it is not to be the very service in the notice but he offer it is not to be the very service in the notice in the notice is not to be the very service in the notice in the notice is not the name of the name in addition in the name of the name in addition in the name of the name in addition in addition in addition in ad

"of" being not within the parenthesis; so that the notice according to the form, to take an example, would run thus:
—Join Smith, of Broad-street, on the list of voters for the parishof. St. Mary," without any parenthesis. The question is, how a notice in these words should be understood? and it is a mistake to treat it as if the parenthesis was retained. It is to be observed, the right to object given by the Act of Victoria, was not dependent on the right to be put on the list; for a party may have a right to be on the list, but he may for a party may have a right to be on the list, but he may have no right to object. If, in fact, his name is not inserted in the list, he may have no right to be put on; or if on the list, he may yet have a right to object in respect of being, in fact, on the list, the right to object being entirely dependent on some one entry on the list of voters, whether the name and place of abode be correctly stated in such entry or It seems to me where the construction of the form is more in conformity with general rules of law and the intention of the Act of Victoria, which requires the notices to be made out distinctly, that, if all entries on the list is that which is to be relied on as the foundation of the right to obtain ject, thus not morely giving the right of making a general assertion from which it would be inferred, but making it in conformity with the rule that prevails with respect to the objection—the power and authority by correctly stating a particular fact on which the right depends of enabling the voter to ascertain, by a simple inspection of the list referred to, whether the right to object which is relied upon, does really exist. A more minute consideration of the form of notice, drawn according to the Act, confirms this construction of the natural and obvious meaning of the words, "on the list of voters for the parish of St. Mary," following "John Smith, of Broad street, to use the same example; and as the name of "John Smith,' and "Broad-street" are mentioned on the of "John Smith, and " Drond-street were mentioned on the list, the name of the objector is the person whose "name and present place of abode" is "John Smith, of Broadstreet;" but whose "name and place of abode," on the list, may be the same or a different one. It cannot really be denied, in the absence of the parenthesis, the words, "on the parenthesis, the words, "on the parenthesis, the words, "on the parenthesis of 8th Mary" are meant to register of voters for the parish of St. Mary," are meant to operate in like manner over the whole clause, "John Smith, of Broad street," or it operates on no part of it; for it agens difficult to contend that they operate differently on the words, "John Smith," than the intervening words, " of Broad-street," so as to mean that the name of the voter on the list was "John Smith," but not to mean the place of abode at the time was "Broad-street;" and accordingly it was argued for the respondent, that the words, "on the list, &o.," did not import either the name of "John Smith," or the place of abode, "Broad-street," which was mentioned in the list. That is certainly a more reasonable construction than that which treats the words, "on the list, &c.," as operating on the words, "John Smith," and as having no operation on the intervening words, "of Broad-street;" which construction seems to rest on a tacit but erroneous application of the parenthesis which is found in the form, and the words of the actual notice in which it is not found; which notice is to be understood as not merely affirming that the objector is "on the list of voters," but that he has the right to object; and on referring to the particular entry, that is further confirmed by the form requiring the notices to be specified on a particular list in which the objector is to be found. If it were intended as a mere assertion of the right to object, it would be sufficient to state the objector was " on the list of voters for the borough," and, in the corresponding case, of the county, that the objector was "on the register," without sceing to the requirements of the schedule, No. 5, whether it was published. As long as the particular list is referred to, it is needful that the particular entry should also be referred to as being in furtherance of the same object. It was contended for the respondent by the construction contended for by the appellant, the voter who might wish to communicate with the objector must be prevented doing so in the case of an objector whose present place of abode was different from that on the list, as that must be the list referred to whether this difference arises from error or change. It is doubtful whether the Act contemplated any such commination; it does not authorise or require it; it imposes no duty to make, or confers any right on the voter to make such a commination; but it did contemplate such commination, such a case would most probably be very rare, and cases of error or change are a very small portion of the number of cases that can arise; such cases of change as would prevent the objector being reached by a letter directed to him at his place of abode, or the list must be a very small portion of the whole number of cases of error or change; and it may be observed in the case now in judgment, no such inconvenience did occur. The legislature in the more important cases of notices of objection, where, perhaps, it would be more reasonable that the voter would have a right to receive it, have considered that it is sufficient to send the notice to the "place of abode" mentioned in the list; indeed, the whole scope of the Act of Victoria seems to be that, for all purposes connected with the registration, the description on the list, with the name and place of abode, shall be taken to be the true description, and the effect of this provision will unoubtedly be, that every voter who takes an interest in the election, will take care the notices, if directed with the name and place of abode on the list, shall be forwarded to him. But, even supposing it was the object and intent of the Act to enable the party objected to to communicate with the ob jector, a distinct statement of the right of the objector is more important and desirable than the mere mention of the name. Though this purpose be the one which the notice was intended to effect, it may be in cases of error of places of alcode. The notices should actually have the present description of the place of abode, as well as that on the list of votors; but it does not follow it shall suffice if there is a mero mention of the place of abode as mentioned on the list. An argument was drawn from schedule A, No. 5, where in the notice of objection the form was given thus "To Mr. —, of —— (here insert the name and place of abode of the person objected to as described in the list;) and in the case of notice to the tenant of the qualifying property, insert his name and place of abode as described in the list." At the end of the form it is "(signed) A. B. of —— (place of abode) on the register of voters for the parish of ——," in the same words as the form in nuestion only putting if the register "for the list the is "(signed) A. B. of—— (place of abode) on the register of voters for the parish of——," in the same words as the form in question, only putting "the register" for the list of voters." Here it is said the insertion of the words "as described" between the last and the first part of the notice, and the omission of the words: "on the register," in connection with the words "place of abode " within the parsithesis, in the last part, shows the "place of abode in the last part is not to be that on the register; but the insertion or omission of these words may be otherwise accounted for. In the first part, place of abode is mentioned " (place of abode) or the register of voters for the parish of ——," and no such words as "on the list of voters for the parish of words as "on the list of voters for the parish of ____," which occurred in the last part of the notice; and which, as I have said before, alone refer to the place of abode as that muntioned on the registor. In this last it would be suspensage to put within the parenthesis "as described in the register," because "on the register of voters for the parish of ____," means exactly the same thing. With regard to the comparative convenience in practice of the two forms, there is no doubt that of the appellant is to be preferred; it couchles the narry, objected to before the revising barrister, to ascertain party, objected to before the revising barrister, to ascertain by inspection of the notices and the list, without any extenaive evidence, whother the notice is sufficient, linsmuch as under that construction it would appear the place of abode is the same as that or the register. No question at all, in fact, can be made as to its validity; whereas, if the respondent's construction is to provail, many questions of law will probably arise as to what is a sufficient description in the notice as to "place of abode," whether county, parish, or post town is mentioned; and these will be the more numerous and formidable from the uncertainty of what the object was by the insertion of the present place of abode as required by the Act; as in all cases it must be a matter of evidence—it may be of controversy, before the revising barrister, whether the place of abode be truly stated as it appears or not. It was also suggested that the identification of the voter by his "place of abode," " on the list" was unnecessary, except in the case of two voters of the same name being on the list; but this is answered by referring to the convenience arising from the rule by the insertion of the Christian name, surname, and place of abode. All three may be necessary in some cases, and they are required in all for the sake of uniformity, simplicity, and convenience. I think for these reasons that a due consideration of the principles of law that are applicable to the ease, and the general intent of the Registration Act, and the due meaning of the particular provision that relates to the notices, leads to the conclusion that the appellant's construction is the true one, and it avoids great practical inconvenience that would arise from the adoption of that of the respondent; and, consequently, the decision of the revising barrister ought to be reversed.

REVIEW.

FORMON VIEWS OF FREE TRADE.—Rerue Britannique; La Ligue Anglaise. Second Notice. London and Paris: Barthes and Lowell.

We return to the consideration of this very interesting article, and commence our extracts with a description of the present position of the Longue:

"The League has resolved to accept no compromise, orne forward on the shoulders of the working classes, now definitely rallied to its cause, it will address to Parliament its aternal and immutable demand, the total and immuliate abolition of the Corn Laws.' It knows that the ports, now partially opened under the pressure of necessity, may be closed to morrow, and that thus what may be called sliding ports would be substituted for a sliding scale; it knows that the concessions of Government may indefinitely adjourn salutary reforms, and it will continue to agitate in consequence. With respect to the landlords—those, at least, who have not adhered to the new ministerial combinations, and they are tolerably numerous-they believe that the moment is come to make a desperate resistance; and they appear equally disposed to set themselves in opposition to the league and the demands of the nation. Each, like a new Brutus, is ready to immolate the election even of a son on the altar of the Corn-Laws and of protection.

We cannot allow this bitter allusion to the Duko of Newcastle to pass without a word of comment. His Grace appears to approach that mental condition which Junius Brutus simulated, and should therefore be treated with the respect which Mahommedans accord to persons in his unhappy condition. There are other points in which the historical parallel fulls. Brutus sacrificed his son to public justice; the Duke of Newcastle rejected Lord Lincoln merely to preserve consistency; he only applied to his son what he avowed to his tenantry, the principle of doing what he liked with his own. But we resume the description of the protectionist landlords:

"Their law, which Mr. Bright has ingeniously denominated 'a law for fine weather,' is attempted to be maintained in a season of storm and tempest; but have not they themselves given the signal for reform when, pressed by Mr. Huskisson and the exigencies of an industry fully developed, they consented to a modification of the silk duties and the Naviga ion Act, and more recently to the financial reforms of Sir Robert Peel? They believed that the public clamour would stop short before their traditional influence and feudal dignity; they believed that they could emancipate industry without emancipating agriculture; but the one is a necessary consequence of the other. Having lightened one scale, you must lighten the other to restore the balance. Free industry cannot be maintained without perfect freedom of raw material. Now corn is the most important of raw materials, and therefore ought to be free above all others. This logic is rigorous and as infiexible as Destiny. You have abolished manufacturing tariffs, you must abolish agricultural tariffs. The day that you accepted Huskisson, you evoked Cobden.

"But this blindness of the protectionists is explained by the extent of the reforms which the League brings in its train. We have said that it assails not merely the monopoly of coru, but the whole system of commercial monopoly. Now as all parts of the organisation of a people are connected together, political rejuvenescence will follow from economic rejuvenescence. The aristocracy perceives this consequence with far more terror than sugacity. Formerly, when commerce protested against feudalism, it was appeased by protecting it, and opening to it, often at the expense of national honour, distant markets. But now commerce will have nothing more to say to protections; it deems them pernicious, injurious to the rights and interests of citizens individually, and of the nation collectively."

In conclusion, the author tells his countrymen some powerful truths expressed in very foreible language.

"We wish not now to make any formal plea in favour of Free Trade, however useful it may be; but in conclusion we must tell the monopolists that they will not always have consumers to plunder and a country to impoverish. They have taken for their device the maxim of Herenschwand, who considered every economist as the enemy of the public welfare; and they are still, so far as progress is concerned, advanced no further than the system of the Venetian Banuto. But in France, as elsewhere, this blockade of merchandise-which is virtually a blockade of genius and art—cannot endure for ever. The law of expansion is a universal law; it cannot yield to the Franch aristocracy of slik, wool, or iron, no more than to the English aristocracy of acres and of sugar-hogsheads. There was a time when the academies would not allow blood to circulate in our veins; Harvey came and the blood circulated. There was a time when ideas were not allowed to circulate freely; the revolution came, and ideas circulated. We are still at a time when the products of nature and of industry are not allowed to circulate freely; it is reserved for the League and its closure. late freely; it is reserved for the League and its glorious chiefs to remove this last interdict, and thus benefit the cause of humanity, of common sense, and of futurity.

There is one error in this very able article which we cannot pass over without notice. The author, like most of his countrymen, imputes to Pitt personally all the follies and all the infamics perpotrated by his colleagues and successors. Sad, indeed, would be the fate of his memory were he to be held responsible for the bigotry of Perceval, the functicism of Sidmouth, the stupidity of Portland. the despetism of Castlereagh, and the intelerance of Eldon. It is as unjust to take the Pitt Club to be an exponent of Pitt's sentiments as to infer the precepts of the gospel from the practice of the inquisition. The selfish system in commerce was abandoned by Pitt in his great treaty with France, as the selfish system in religion, so far as he is personally concerned, was abandoned at the time of the union with Iroland. But Pitt had neither the strength nor the courage which Peel has recently shown; he succumbed to the aristocratic combinations by which he was surrounded. In justice to his memory, let it be remembered that one element of the combination was a monarch never wholly free from mania, and over exhibiting the mingled cunning and obstinacy of insanity.

The letters and diaries of Lord Malmesbury afford disclosures that should make our fathers tremble with rage and shame in their graves. At the beginning of the present century, England was literally "bribed by paupers, bullied by cowards, and duped by idiots." Pitt was a liberal in politics, in commerce, and in religion; but he believed the possession of power necessary to give effect to his liborality, and the means he employed were fatal to the end he pursued. The ambition of becoming another Pitt has been a dominant passion with our present Premier from infancy. So far as intentions go, he has selected no unworthy model; but he has advantages which his master could not command: he has an intelligent public and a patriotic Sovereign. Pitt had neither one nor the other. If he appealed to the sense of the public, some stupid cry of vulgar prejudice was sure to give the victory to nonsense; if he applied to George III., like his futher, in the carlier part of the same reign, he could not trust to professions or rely on promises. Honce his enroor presents a sad series of miserable shifts and trumpery expedients; hence his policy was disastrous abroad, and injurious at home; hence he was the persecutor of those who held his own opinions, and the oppressor of those whose wrongs he was most anxious to redress. Thiers and his followers depict Pitt us the incarnation of propense wickedness; but he was wicked only because he was work; he deseemded to acts in which inferior men were his mastors, and was always beaten in the game. He was, when untrammelled, the advocate of Reform, Emancipation, and Free Trade; he did not abandon any one of those causes, but he adjourned them to "a more convenient season;" and to him, as to the Roman proconsul, that more convenient season nover camo.

The moral of Pitt's life is, that there can be no toring with principle; no compromise with injustice; no concession to pulpable wrong. We trust his illustrious disciple, who now wields the destinies of this country, will read that moral aright. We trust that he will see that bonds are no substitute for broad, or coercion for corn. He is ambitious of future fame; let him seriously reflect how his model and muster stands in the estimate of the posterity which has arrived to pronounce judgment. The "heaven-born Minister" has now his origin assigned to a very different place; the "pilot that weather'd the storm" is now a blundering lubber that stoored the ship into spots of dangor, from which she was not extricated without sad damage and loss of cargo. A great name can only be maintained by great deeds; and no deed is great which contributes not to the good of humanity, the advancement of civilisation, and the common intorosts of all mankind.

The Library of Foreign Romance. Edited by J. C. James, Esq. London. Bruce and Wyld. It is too late to inquire whether it is or is not desirable that flation should form part of our our real popular literature. The demand for it exists. is spreading and increasing; it is an appetite which grows by what it foods on, and we must therefore take it for granted that the demand will in this, as in other cases, ensure supply. Mesers. Bruce and Wyld are the largest caterers for this public appotite; they have brought cheapness of production to the lowest possible point, and it is but justice to add that they have combined with it excellence of selection. Among the eighty works published in their cheap Library of Romance, there are not more than two or three on which a question of admissibility could fairly be raised, and even in these cases we doubt whether a judicious jury would pronounce a verdiet of rejection.

The new series is an enterprise of greater mement. Hitherto most of the translations of French romances have been the speculations of unprincipled traffickers in depravity; they have not only selected the most licentious productions, but have deopened the impurity of their objectionable passages in their translations. Paul de Koch and George Sand have been compelled to give their worst works to the English public, while the historical romances of a host of able writers are left untouched and unknown. Now, though it cannot be denied that there is a greater proportion of objectionable matter in French romance than would be tolerated in England, it must also be added that the productions of the best writers of fiction in France are every day becoming more marked by a tone of high and pure morality; and that the licentious authors are in fact but fourth or fifth-rate writers, who substitute coarseness for strength, and indelicacy for wit. It is, therefore, a useful service to bring before the English public those French works of fiction in which moral purity is combined with intellectual power. The readers once supplied with wholesome food cannot long be induced to prey on Romances illustrative of existing manners are the most popular productions of our day; and it must be confessed that they convey more accurate information and more definite pictures of manners than could be obtained by formal disquisitions and grave dissertation. Miss Bremer's tales afford us clearer views of life in Sweden than could be derived from all the books of travel in that country which have over been published. Soulie's " Mysteries of the Heath" explain the condition of a barbarous race, surrounded by civilisation, more definitely and more forcibly than the report of a Government commission.

The great Duke of Marlborough used to say, that the hest history of England was contained in the historical plays of Shakspere; we too may add that the Waverley Novels have great value as guides and aids to history. Ivanhoe gives a more accurate view of the state of England, under Richard I., than the pages of Hume or Lingard; Old Mortality teaches more of the wars of the Covenanters than the works of any Scottish historian. It is in fletions, illustrative of history, that French literature has become pre-eminently rich in modern times. Dumas, Nodier, and many others, have revived the past with an intensity of vigour and life which give it all the spirit and all the interest of the present. Caroline Pichler, and many others, have pursued the same course in Germany. Even Russia has contributed to this store of historical illustration, and onabled us to comprehend something of the Solavonic and Mongolian revolutions, which have imprinted on the east of Europe a phase of civilisation essentially different from that of the west. We do not regret that there is a Free Trade in these fletions; we wish that the minds of nations should be mutually interpreted to each other. Had we more of national explanations, we should have less of national jealousies and hostilities. It was once an article of popular faith, as Goldsmith tolls us, "to hate the French because they were all slaves, and wore wooden shoes;" it is still too common to view them with dislike, on account of the depravity of what are supposed to be French principles. But depraved principles are as little popular in France as in England. We have judged the French by the worst of their productions, which is just as unfair as if they had estimated English literature by the publications in Holywell-street,

It is our ous that the first origin of this error was simply a blunder of translation. Marmontel, was simply a blunder of translation. Marmontel, to expose the profligacy of his age, published a series of tales illustrative of the licentious manners which prevailed, and called them Contes Moraux. The stupid hack by whom they were "done into English," translated the title into "Moral Tales," and everybody who read lifted his hands in amazoment at such specimens of French morality! Marmoutel thus got credit for the very opposite to his real design; the manners he condemned were supposed to be the morals he inculcated.

The publishers of this Library of Foreign Romance have undertaken an enterprise involving grave responsibilities. The harvest before them is indeed most abundant; but never was there a crop in which targe were more profusely minused with the wheat. The task of selection will require great care, prudence, and caution, in the editor; and will perhaps, demand an conscional exercise of forback approach the public. Cheapness is not valuable, unless accompanied by goodness; on the contrary, it becomes an aggravation of evil when it side the circulation of that which is vicious and deprayed.

We have only the prospectus of the undertaking before us, and that certainly promises very fatrig but as the performance may be either highly beneficial, or extensively mischievous, we shall warn the progress of the series—ready to applaud if its course shall tend to the diffusion of intelligence and virtue, and equally ready to sound an alarm should there be any symptoms of pandering to impure passions or prurient curiosity.

CHILDREN'S BOOKS .- Helix Summerley's House Treasury .- Tales from the German de. 1000 don: Cundall.

It is gratifying to find a taste for the national literature of the Nursory reviving in England; for legends and traditions form an essential part of the mind of the people, and rising intellect runs a chance of being denationalised when they are banished. Mr. Cundall deserves much credit for having decidedly set his face against those novels of the nursery which have been issued from the Minerva Press with such lavish profusion, and which, however moral in their purpose, were far from being wholesome in their influence. They had one and all a direct tendency to transform boys and girls into premature men and women; while, for their own sakes, as well as for the sake of all connected with them, it is desirable that children should simply be children. It has been sometimes doubted whother works of fancy or imagination should be placed in the hands of the young; but the faculty of imagination has been bestowed by the same Omniscient Being who endowed us with reason. He gave it to be cultivated, not to be neglected or destroyed. It is a grievous error to suppose that works of avowed fiction tend to weaken the love of truth. The entire question depends on the child's being deceived. The poet Cowper justly says:

That even the child who knows no better Than to interpret by the letter The story of a cock and bull, Must have a most uncommon skull.

The novel-like stories intended to supersede our hereditary nursery literature were indeed open to this objection; they had a tendency to deceive, for they professed to be pictures of actual life. Now we hold, that an accurate picture of actual life may be, and often is, more deceptive than an extravagant fiction. Take, for instance, that very able collection of stories, Miss Edgeworth's Parent's Assistant, and it will at once be felt that the story impresses the mind as a portraiture, not merely of actual, but of average life. Pictures of vice and crime, delineated with equal acuteness in detecting motive and graphic power in developing character, give an air of stern reality to each tale. The child's impressions are true. but the child's inferences are false. neither character nor incident in its individuality, but he generalises both; and his theory becomes false, delusive, and perhaps dangerous. Who ever dreamed of such a result following from Fables and Fairy Tales? Cinderella gratifies a child's fancy, but has not the slightest tendency to pervert the reason The pet-lamb of Simple Susan is received as a plain truth, but Jack's bean-stalk never finds a moment's credence.

In reviving the national legends of the English nursery, the publisher was fortunate in obtaining the aid of so competent an editor as Mr. Felix Summerley. He is evidently a gentleman gifted with much fancy, and trained to a pure and cultivated But, what is still more important, he has carefully studied the youthful mind, and made overy one of his tales stimulate the curiosity and spirit of enquiry necessary for that self-education which is in truth the only sure means of acquiring intelligence. If Felix Summerley be a real name, which we have no opportunity of determining, it is a little surprising that his name is not more frequently heard in connection with antiquarian and legendary lore. He has in these little works displayed at once a deep knowledge and a thorough appreciation of the elements which constitute the intellectual life of a nation; and he has thus made his work subservient to the preservation of the genuine English character, by teaching the value of genuine English traditions. The illustrations of these little works belong to a much higher style of art than has hitherto been used in turnile works, and had the wearther merit used in juvenile works; and had they no other merit than their effect on the artistic training of the eye, they would deserve very high commendation. But they have singular merit at faithful delinations of character and coatume; the plates in the little volume of Robin Hood, for instance, are parfect lessons in historical sons in history. This is one of the seasons when gift books are usually presented to young talks; and we have the fore desired it a proper simulational attorner which on juvenile literature, separally as the miner than other has a second state.

poetes: ln (tude h but la Armed export it calls coercio famino Irish co Irish pe been ab by the found fa to starve exhauste is purch orator u common Cruel tri danger.

be faced.

difficulty of an in of distro

already t Press, Al

Publi

copio: licatio

J. Ga

Th

popul

the p struct

expor

give a pay a food fi

those as the point rights proofs

may 1

of fiction has found favour with the rising race of booksellers, and that we have selected the meritorious publications of Mr. Cundall merely as types of a olass.

TREE TRADE INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION.

muel Harrison, Req., Potter, Egg., Dr. James Carliston, Req., Dr. James Carlisto, John Gadaby, Req., Wilson, Beq., H. Hull, Req., Uxbridge, elford, Heq., Higherd Durnet, Req., Charles Swaisland, Req., Crayford.

Charles swaisland, 1890, Crayford.
TAPPTANE.
Dr. Thomas Price, 7, Mighbury-terrace, Islington.
George Thompson, 1800, 6. Waterloo place.
Captain Cogah, Upper Mill, Hammersmith.
SAMENDA.
Mears. Preceott, Grote, & Co.
SOLforcon.
Josh. Ivimsy, Esq., 28, Chancery-lane.
SULFORCON.
Mr. Frederick Parrand, Priory Villa, Poekham.
SERRANG.

Mr. Frederick Favrand, Priory Vills, Poekham.

spongram.

Mr. Alfred Lench Saul.

Prospectures may be obtained, gratis, on application at the Scelety's Offices, Rast Temple Chambers, Whitefrians-street, Fleet-street. The Rules (8d. each) are now ready, and may be had as above.

Persons desirous to join the Society are requested to make application immediately.

The Society's Offices will be open for receiving subscriptions and the general transaction of business, every Eucaday and Friday ovenings, from to 9 o'clock.

TREE TRADE INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION. As the Second Subscription is about to be called for, parties intending to avail themselves or the benefits of the Association are requested to make application for shares immediately. Until the Hecond Subscription is called in, shares can be obtained on the same terms as those which have been already taken up. Attendance at the Offices, lisst Tomple Chambers, Whitefirst-street, Pleet-street, every Tuesday and Friday evenings, from six to Nine o'Clock

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS.

Any person forwarding 8s. 8d. by Post-office order to the Publisher, 67, Fleet-street, London, will have one quarter's copies of the LEAGUE forwarded by post on the days of publication. Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with J. Gulsby, Nawell's buildings, Manchester; and the LBAGUE may be had by order of any news-agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, April 18, 1846.

The Corn Laws continue to aggravate the fearful vils of Ireland to such an extent, that the starving population has had recourse to deeds of violence for the purpose of checking their mischievous and destructive operation. These laws offer a prize on the exportation of corn from a starving country; they give an artificial price in the English markets to pay artificial rents for Irish land; they snatch the food from the perishing, and wrest sustenance from those dying of inanition. And yet such reasoners as the O'Briens, the Shaws, and the Bentincks point to these exports—these evidences of landlord rights enforced, and landlord duties neglected—as proofs of present plenty and future sufficiency. Woll may we exclaim with that exquisite and true poetess, Miss Barrett:

"The rich preach 'rights' and future days, And hear no angel scotling;
The poor die mute—with ardent gaze
On corn-ships in the offing."

In Clonmel and Tipperary, the famishing multitude has arrested the corn on its way to the ships; but landlordism has no bowels of compassion. Armed with the terrors of the law, it protects the export of food with cannon and with bayonets; and it calls for additional powers, under the name of a coercion, that it may be protected in spreading famine and extending fever. Had the ministerial Corn Bill passed into law before the Easter recess irish corn would have been kept at home to feed the Irish people, and the English markets would have been abundantly supplied from other quarters. But, by the exquisitely absurd arrangement which has found favour with the legislature, millions are doomed to starve until the powers of monopolist oratory is exhausted. The speech of a Miles, or a Bentinck, is purchased at the cost of as many lives as the orator utters sentences. We protest in the name of common humanity against such preposterous and cruel trifling at a origin of such great and imminent danger. There are yet three months of accreity to be faced, and every hour of delay aggravates the difficulty of providing against the total desolation of an integral part of the empire. The pressure of distress in Ireland cannot be exaggerated; it already transcends every thing that words can expres, and almost every thing that even the bears and the residence of the residence tells us, that "Hunger will break through stone walls;" and assuredly the desperation of its excesses will not be restrained by the clauses of an Act of Parliament. You may set death as a penalty before the perpetrators of outrage, but of what avail is the menace when death in a more cruel form, and with greater certainty of operation, urges him on from bohind? The very journals which raised the ery of exaggeration are now raising the note of alarm in louder tones. The repreach they bring against the Government is, that the measures of relief are suspended and delayed. The responsibility for this delay must rest somewhere, and it may be atoned for by a fearful reckening. We therefore carnestly urgo those who value the salvation of the empire, to allow of no further huxtering and truckling with the destructive agencies of monopoly. We have abundant evidence that if agrarianism slays its thousands in Ireland, landlordism is slaying its tons of thousands. There is still time for the righteons justice of England to interpose, and taking its stand between the living and the dead, to cause that the plague should be stayed. Let us have no more dawdling with worthless points of etiquette. A story is told of a Cantab who saw a fellow-student drowning, and regretted that etiquette prevented him from taking the liberty of saving him, as they had never been formally introduced; but nations must not be sacrificed to such miserable punctilios. The cry from Ireland is, "Save, or we perish!" Rescue life first, and then settle the ctiquetto of first readings and second readings, according to the most approved precedent that comes in your way. To the re-assembled Commons of England, and to the anxious people of England, we address the same warning. Delay, in all cases, is dangerous, but at the present crisis it involves the peril of imminent and wide-spread destruction.

• . •	SAT. Apri li	Mon. Apri 13	Turs. April 14	WED. Apri 16	THUR April 16	Fn1. Apr. 17
Bank Stock 5 per Ct. Red. Ann. 3 per Ct. Con. Ann. 3 per Ct. Red. Ann.	2063 954 958 97	2068 95 96 97	200 951 96 97	2064 954 964 964	206 943 953 96	943 953
Long. An. Ex. 1860 Cons. for Acet Exc. Bills, pm Ind. Bds. un. 1000/.	24-28	10 7-16 961 24 47 25-28	96 24-28 30	-101- 961 27 25:30	18-22 28-30	003
Venezuela 2 per Ct. Do. deferred Belgian 41 per Ct. Brazilian 5 per Ct.	::	ii ii	;; ;;	9H 81	42
Chilian	.: 59a	954	874		901 901	.: .:
Dutch 4 per Cent. Mexican Peruvian Portug. conv.	021 32 571	021 314 679	981 051	92 1 32 58	021 311 672	021 311
Russian 5 per Cent Spanish 5 per Ct. Do. 3 per Ct. ex.dy,	251 361	251 36	110 94 36	211	110 213 304	25 303

THE FUNDS.

MARKETS.

CORN MARKET.

CORN MARKET.

Monday, Apair. 18.—With a very moderate show of samples on all the Wheat stands, there has been some difficulty experienced in effecting sales at last Monday's prices; as before, fine samples meet a better demand than other qualities; no change has taken place in the prices obtained this day week. The Foreign Wheat trade is excessively dull. Late rates are barely maintained on Barley, though the arrivals are not by any means large. About 10,000 qrs. of Irish Oats appear in the return; except this the quantity arrived is very trifling. Buyers continue cautious, but the sales made to day have been pretty considerable, and the prices are the turn in favour of the seller. English Oats are very scarce. Beans and Peas are without variation in prices from this day work.

Bid are were group at	Dahna an	ui tavour (oi me 🛊	oller. Eu	glish ate are very scarce. rices from this day we	ORDINE KUIC	r Lenn ulo	MIMIO	it variati	on in TOOL HOME CALL CAY WO	OK. Obitie	Щ. 1		H. Lvc	AF.
Theat, Beaux,	DIMITIE	PAL DATE	Lorimb	ouin dir	artor
Kant, & Suffolk	• • • • • • • • • •	Bed 54	10 00 A
Libcolnshire & Y	orkahira	14	59	. 56	Q 3
Scotch	O' WOTH I	7/	64	54	62
ate, Lincolnahire & Y	orkabira i	hear	••	00
Ditto	Ditto	Deck			25
DIMO		Palanda	1	Jan 60	6 · 25
DOOLOG FOOD		98 07 	D_	10W #7
DittoVine	New 27 1	0	. Ola t		ne ne
UOTE			•	04	95
Waterford, Yougha	l. & Cork	Black	••••••	04	24
					. 27
UNATED 111111111				10	21
4.49 y				40	ลื่อ .
PARTY DURE BEATT					83
ALLITOW	. 			00	87
Omenica				. 64	40
MODEL TY ILLIAM A REAL AND A CONTROL OF	and the second second second	MAG	I American	. 00	49
Gray	38	A CONTRACTOR	رين کا	89	94
No folk and Suite	process M	FROK-OK	HOUTON	,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,	66-
Violitory with pittle	ELLEVE.	Leg		40	46
Transfer his bearing	Porei	3N.'	PRE		an. I idal Dantele high mis	a A	E.O	r Timbe	تفروك لهار	122
Panisis, high mir	*	eranéauè.	10	5 86	. 66 L
The second second		e i e e e e e e e e e Stati distribuido di	. 75	50 50	25
				3 B	望!
The second second	والمراجع والمعا	e speciel is it	NY 1	y - ' - '	表丨
Ogrand intering	ii ir ii ii i	i että preijä		44	w.

W

Orlean Dallah						******
Odessa Polish				:	50	. 51
Russiau		50ft.,., ,,			7.
I DIWO		hant			, .
			A.1	60		•
			8.6	88
			46
Barley, Grinding	•••••	• • • • • • • • • • •	00	Øυ
The state of the s	,,,,,,,,,,,			84	•
Distilling		*	20	81
Oats, Archangel			95	20	•
J/00)#()
DW0(J18/)			03	24
Straisund				41
Dutch Food	• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •	• • • • • • • • • •	***	-
Dude	• • • • • • • • • • • • •			20	₽0	81
Brew	• • • • • • • • • • •	• • • • • • • • • •	27	20	23	94
Polanda .					25	26
13100K					7"	40
DOME E TYPHAN			22.4	36
Poss, White				00
Ditto Bollers	• • • • • • • • •	*********	• • • • •
Flour Canada Analis a		2 12 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2	4.8
Flour, Canada, front, p	or b a rrei o	L Ind ips'	34	36
United Blates			36	27	28	30
170316218					•••	. 00
AUDITOURN INDE	446 VL 080	13.4	1
Account of CORN, &c	amilani	In the De	1i r
April 6 to An		in the ro	toi i	opac	n, f	rom
April 6 to Ap	111, 11, 1740	, both days	/Inclus	vo.
Whoat.	Barley.	Oata.	Bean	a. 1	Pea	a .
1511K1EMIL	1710	1918	1270	· 1	311
Booteli	l:)	1	1	011	•
Iriah	l ::	103 ia	i	- 1	• •
Foreign	1508	2040	1000	- 1	* * *	_
			1,10081	- 1	٨n	0
riour,	110 RUGKE	2301 barr	ola.	٠,

English | | 6010 Barley

 Oats
 4060
 1480
 2010

 Flour, 1840 sacks.
 Flour, 1840 sacks.
 LONDON AVERAGES for the Wook ending April 14, 1846.
 Price.
 Price.
 Qrs.
 Price.
 Price.
 Price.
 Price.
 Price.
 Price.
 200 85s.
 2d.
 Price.
 350
 30s.
 2d.
 Boans
 1502 33s.
 3d.
 Price.
 200 85s.
 2d.
 Boans
 1502 33s.
 3d.
 Price.
 200 85s.
 2d.
 Price.
 200 85s.
 2d.
 2d.
 Price.
 200 85s.
 2d.
 2d.
 2d.
 Price.
 2d.
 Price.
 2d.
 In London, 442560 17299 61102 ... 6144 8462 119076 61102 ... 6144 8462 119076 807880 1

Duty. Wheat, 17s. Od.; Barloy, 8s., Od.; Oats, 6s. Od.; Ryo 9s. Od.; Bonns, 8s. Od.; Pons, 9s. Od.

MEAT MARKET. The small supply tended to keep up the prices, although trade

The small supply tended to keep up the prices, although trade was exceedingly heavy.

Prime Beef. 3s 10d to 3s 6d | Middl.Mutten 3s 10d to 3s 8d Middling do. 3s 6d to 3s 2d | Yeal, from ... 5s 0d to 4s -0d | Small Pork .. 5s 0d to 4s 4d | Flain, or info-rior Beef. ... 5s 0d to 2s 6d | Large, or info | Large, or info | Prime Mutten 4s 4d to 4s 6d | rior Pork ... 3s 4d to 3s 0d

THE LONDON GAZETTE

FRIDAY, APRIL 10.

BANKRUPTCIES SUPERSEDED.

J. Whalley and C. Whalley, nurserymen, Liverpool.

J. Reding and W. N. Judd, printers, Horseshoe-court, Ludding and W. N. Judd, printers, Horseshoe-court, Luding and W. N. Judd, printers, Horseshoe-court, Hor

BANKRUPTS

BANKRUPTS

E. Foley, victualler, Htoko Nowington-graon. [Mossrs. Dimmick and Burbey, Sizo-land.
Robt. Weatherhog and Rich. Weatherhog, farmers, Stone, Kent. [Mossrs. Tripp, Adelaide-place, London-bridge.
H. C. Langley, apothecary, Suffeik-place, Hackney-road. [Mr. Wheatley, Wallbrook.
T. Matthews, draper, Aldgate High-street. [Messrs. Sole and Turner. Aldermanbury.

gato-hill.

T. Matthews, draper, Angute Ingn-street. Largesta. Commit.
Turner, Aldermanbury.
W. Davey, coal merchant, St. Austell, Cornwall. [Mr. Smith.
T. Rickards, watchmaker, Wootton-under-Edge, Oloucoster-shire. [Mossre. Husband and Wyatt, Gray's-inn-square.
J. B. Oram, brower, Birmingham. [Mr. Bartlett, Blr. Smiredham.

M. Hlingworth, W. Smith, and J. Wright, worsted spinners, Bradford, Yorkshiro. [Mr. Wells, Bradford. C. H. Cartwright, grocer, Warrington. [Messrs. Sharp and Co., Bedford-row. 11. Roo, jeweller, Liverpool. (Mesers. Bridger and Blake, London-wall.

J. Knight, morcor, Preston. [Mossrs. Rood and Laugford, Priday stroot.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.
Fleming and Richardson, Glasgow, accountants.
J. M'Master, Ardrossan, Ayrshire, grocor.
J. Macharg, Glasgow, tea merchant.
D. M. Rose, Bariohies, Rosshire, corn merchant.
TUESDAY, APRIL 14.
BANKRUPTOY ANNULIED.
C. Colling, Kidlankruptoy, varn makes.

C. Collins, Kiddorminster, yarn maker.
BANKRUPTS.
T. Grooman, Chard, Somersstablre, baker. [Mr. Church

Bedford-row.
J. Wallano, Durham, tos dealer. [Mossrs. Soles and Turner, Addermanbury.
J. Roe, Manchester, drysalter. [Mosers. Gregory/and Co. Badford-row.
J. Davice, Shrewsbury, mercer and draper. [Mosers, Clarke and Co., Lincoln's Inn Fields.
SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.
D. Coghill, F. Coghill, and T. Coglill, Ayr, glass and china merchants.

D. Cognin, J. Damieson, Palaley, draper, J. Jamieson, Palaley, draper, J. Oawald, Edinburgh, therebroker, B. Dawson, Dunday, draper, EXECUTATION OF COMMUNIC.—One dealer in Wisk has this second sent unwents of a Lipusard bolls of caining to the solution to the execute from this post, and plus rate to be considerably and plus rate to be considerably and plus rate to be considerably and plus rate to be considerably and plus rate to be considerably and plus rate to be considerably and sended.

On the 1st and 15th of cash Month, every per containing your big ity-fluished Portraits, price One willing,

THE PEOPLE'S NATIONAD, PORTRAITS GALLERY

Of Illustrieus and Eminent Personages of the Ninteenth Contust, engrand by first rate Artists, from Paintings by Lawronce, Reynolds, West, Shie, Hoppiner, Besshey, Phillips, Carriek, Me. Ste.

With Memoirs by W. COOKE TAYLUR, LLD.

Fisher, Son, and Go., the Catton Press, Angal Street, Newsgate street, London.

On the list and 15th of each Month, every Part containing Four highly-finished Steel Engravings, price One Shilling, FISHER'S GALLERY OF SCRIPTURE ENGRAVINGS.

HIBTORICAL AND LANDSCAPE,

Selected from the best Peintings of the Old Return. The Landscape; by Allom and others.

With Descriptions, Historical, Geographical, and Critical,

By JOHN KITTO, D.D., F.S.A.

Editor of "The Pictorial Bible," the "Oyclopedia of Hibitoal Literature," &c. &c.

Pisher, Son, and Co., the Caxion Press, Angel-street, Nowgate-street, London.

Now ready, Vols I., II., III , each containing 64 beautiful Engravings on Steel, elegantly bound, price 22s. THE PEOPLE'S GALLERY OF ENGRAVINGS.

After original pictures and drawings by Lawrence, Turner, Stanfield, Prout, Boberts, Allom, Chalons, Hayter, Parris, Maclisc, Stephanoff, Cattermole, Bardott, Leitch, &c. &c.

Edited by the Rov. G. N. WRIGHT, M.A.

Published also in Parts, each Part containing four beautiful Engravings on Steel, for One Shilling.

Picture, Son, and Co., the Caxton Press, Angel-street, Newgate-street, London.

THE ARISTOCRACY OF ENGLAND;

A HISTORY FOR THE PEOPLE. By JOHN HAMPDEN, JUN.

What then is the great root of all our grievances?

wistocracy! Give us their true history, and you unriddle the secret of every national embarrassment ("

"This is indisputably a remarkable volume."—Morning Advertiser.

"A very clever book."—Weekly Dispatch.

London: J. Chapman, 121, Newgate-street.

Just ready, in Two Volumes, cloth,

THE INDUSTRIAL HISTORY OF FREE

NATIONS, Considered in Relation to their Domestic Institutions and External Volto, By W. Torasses McCent. av.

London: Chapman and Itali, 184, Strand.

Parity in May, small 8vo, price 6s., (with illustrations on Wood, by Samuel Palmer.)

1 C T U R E S F R O M I T A L Y.

By Onably Dickers.

Bradbury and Evans, 90, Ploct Street, Whitefriars.

AD. Mesers. Bradbury and Brans have also the gratification of

A NEW ENGLISH STORY,

To be published in 30 Monthly Parts, price is. each,
is now in Preparation.

Becond Edition, just published, feap. 4to., price 6d., Midlway Traveller's Reasons for adopting NIFORMITY OF GAUGE. Stated in a Letter to
I. K. Baunal, Esq.
Joseph Cundall, 12, Old Bond-atrect.

THE ORRGON QUESTION.
Now ready, fep. 4to., price 3d.,

THE TOPIC, No. 3: containing a complete review of The Topic is a weekly periodical established on a novel plan, which, judging from the specihones already published, promises to be characterised by great shillity."—Morning Chronicle.

"No. 1. contains a condensed history of the Indian War. The casay is cloquent, truthful, and applicationing, evidently written by one to whom the country, its policy and impolicy, are well known. We need scarcely antempt to recommend a work that so forcibly recommends itself by its intimate worth."—Sunday Times.

"The New Tariff forms the subject of the second Number. These papers, or rather casays, are written by first-rate writers."—Weekly Chronicle.

C. Mitchell, ited Lich court, Float-street.

DALUBIGNE—GMLY AUTHERNTICATED EDITION.

C. Mitchell, Red Lien-court, Fleet-street.

D'AUBIONE—ONLY AUTHENTIGATED EDITION.

OLVER and BOYD'S STANDARD EDITION of D'AUBIONEH LIETORY of the REFORMATION. Volumes I. to IV. Being the only English Edition corrected and authonicated by the Author, who has also written a new Proface, and made various Additions not hitherto published. Large type, with Autograph. Post 8vo, cloth. The first three vols 2s. each; the fourth, 4s.

Voi I. is now ready, and will be followed by the others at short intervals. Extract from Dr. D'Aubigne's Proface—"I have revised this translation line by line, and word by word; and I have restored the sonso wherever I did not find it clearly rendered. It is the only one which I have corrected I declare in consequence, that I acknowledge this translation as the only faithful expression of my thoughts in the English language, and I recommend it as such to all my readers."

Megars Oliver and Hoyd, who have purchased the copyright of Vol. IV., and alone possess the right of publishing it in Great Britain, are thus onabled to supply the only authentic and standard edition of the four yolumes of the History of the Reformation Lately published, domy 870, Vol. IV., price 12s cloth.

Oliver and Hoyd, Micholurgh. Slimpkin, Marshall, and Co., London

On March 31, 1840, Part I., in royal 4to, containing & Coloured More at the Lately published, demy fig., Vol. IV., price 12s cloth.

Oliver and Boyd, Kdinburgh. Simpkin, Marshall, and Co., London

On March 31, 1846, Part I, in royal 4to., containing 3 Coloured Maps, at the extraordinary price of is.

ILBERT'S MODERN ATLAS FOR THE PEOPLE; with an Introduction to the Physical Geography of the Globe, and an Alphabetical Index of the Latitudes and Longitudes of 21,600 places.

The Proprietor trust that the public approval which has been so extensively beslowed upon his previous Works on Geography will be continued to the present Publication. He is detormined that it shall not only be by far the cheapest, but the very best work that has ever been issued at troble the price, either in this or any other country.

The distinguishing features of the work will be:—

1. Maps. beautifully engraved on steel, from original drawings, including very copious, and the best accredited information derived from geographers and travellers of decided reputation.

2. Each Part will Contain three Maps, accurately coloured in outline.

3. The Consulting Index, of $1,00 places, which will of itself be a Grazetteer of Reference, has been compiled with the greatest care.

4. The Divisional Maps of the Continents, each has a seals, showing the lineal dimensions of the respective Countries in contrast with England; the same Maps have also the Points of the Compass, within the circle of which is introduced a Miniature Map of the quarter of the globe in which the country is situated—showing at a giance the position and area each particular supire or state occupies in comparison with the Continent to which is belong.

5. The Work will be completed in cleven Parts, and the entire publication issued by Pebruary I, 1817.

6. The work will be completed in cleven Parts, and the entire publication issued by Pebruary I, 1817.

7. To enable the public to Judge of the Work, and decide how far the promises of the Proprictor are borne out by the performance, he undertakes to stupply every bookeller in the United Kingdom

Dr. Robert Culverwell's Guide to Health and Long Life.

(300 pages, pooket volume); price is.; by post, is. 8d.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; with Diet
Tables for all Complaints. By R. J. Colverwell, M.D., M R.C.S., I.A.O., &c. Contents.—How to insure perfootdigation, tranquil facilings, a good night's rest, a clear head, and a contented mind. By an observance of the instructions herein contained, the facility in the revously delicate, even to the most shattered constitution, may acquire the greatest amount of physical happiness, and reach in holith the full period of life allotted to man. To be had of Sherwood, 28, Paternoster-row, and all Rooksellers, or direct from the Author, 21, Arindel-street, Strand, who may be advised with on these matters daily till 3; evenings, 7 till 9.

CORNER'S NEW HISTORICAL WORKS, for School and Family Reading.

Bach History, commencing with the earliest authentic records, is continued to the present time: faithfully pourtraying, also, the Mannors, Quitous, and States of Civilisation of the People.

Remad with Without

Without TICHARD COBDEN, ESQ., MP.—The ENGRAVING of the PORTRAIT of RICHARD COBDEN, ESQ., MP., engraved in the highest style of art by P. C. Lawis, 12aq., engraver to the Queen, is NOW READY. The Portrait has been produced under the patronage and sanction of the Council of the Anti-Copin-Law Leasure, and sthe only authentic ongraved portrait published. The likeness is a most characteristic one, and has received the unqualified approbation of Mr Cobden's personal fields

First class Proofs, with autograph

111 6

111 6

Pronch Paper Proofs

Pronch Paper Proofs

O 0 0 6

Prints

Uniform with the above, Mr. Agnew has published a sories of Portraits of

India Proofs
Pronch Paper Proofs
Pronch Paper Proofs
Pronch Paper Proofs
Pronch Paper Proofs
Pronch Paper Proofs
Pronch Paper Proofs
Pronch Paper Proofs
Pronch Paper Proofs
Pronch Paper Proofs
Pronch Paper Proofs
Pronch Paper Proofs
Uniform with the above, Mr. Agnew has published a sories of Portraits of the Mombers of the Council of the League, all of which are engraved in a fine and finished style. The following are now ready:
Richard Cobden, Eaq., M.P.
Hon. O P. Villicrs, M.P.
Hon. O P. Villicrs, M.P.
Hon. O P. Villicrs, M.P.
Hon. O P. Villicrs, M.P.
Hon. O P. Villicrs, M.P.
Hon. O P. Villicrs, M.P.
Hon. O P. Villicrs, M.P.
William Rawson, Baq., Chairman of the League.
J. Brotherton, Esq., M.P.
William Rawson, Baq., Treasurer of the League.
J. Brotherton, Esq., M.P.
William Brown, Baq., of Liverpool.
Edward Islanes, Esq.
Right Hon. Earl Ducie.
Right Hon. Lord Morpeth.
Robert Hyde Greg, Esq. &c. &c.
All executed the same size, and forming one of the most interesting Galicry of Portraits ever brought before the public. The Portrait of WILLIAM BROWN, Esq., which is being engraved by James Thomson, Esq., of Livers wishing to subscribe will please to forward their names without delay, to secure good impressions.
Manchester: published by THOMAS AUNEW, Repository of Arts, Exchange-street. London: Messrs. Ackornan and Co., 00, Strand.

"HAMES TUNNEL—Brilliantly lighted with "Lowe's" Patent Napthalized Gas, is open as a thoroughfare day and night—
Toll, One Penny.

Tableau of Public Interest, which has been Right Months in The Royal Family at Home, consisting of the Queen and Prince Albert caressing their Pour lovely Children. The Grouping and Colouring by Madanue Tussaud, the Models and Portraiture by Mr. F. Tussaud, its new added to the Collection.—BAZAAR, Baker-street, Portman-square, "This is one of the best exhibitions in the metropolis."—Times. Admittance, is.; Napoleon Roems, 6d. Open from 11 till 4; and from 7 till 18

LICCTROPLATING LIQUID SILVER, 1s. per Bottle, or four in one. 2s., resilvers the coppery parts of worn plated articles, instantly restoring their pristine beauty and durability, equal to the patent process, at one. But the cost, and less trouble than cleaning. Gold Reviver, 2s & d.; Gold Varnish, 1s. 6d, for reviving tarnished and restoring damaged gliding. The above are the original and established preparations, manufactured only by 8 sizin and Co.. 281, Strand (opposite Norfolk-street.

ALANCE IVORY TABLE KNIVES, 10s. per dozen dessert ditto, 9s.; carvers, 3s. 6d. per pair. White bone table knives on forks, from 0s. 6d., per dozen. Bessert ditto, 4s.; carvers, 2s. per pair. Superior kitchen table knives and forks, from 0s. 6d., per dozen. Table knives, with handles—of pur Rickel Sliver, tables, 22s. per dozen; dessert ditto, 18s.; carvers, 6s. 8d. per pair, all marked Richard and John Slack, and warranted.

They also solicit an inspection of their extensive and superior stock of Pender and Fire-irons, as well as overy article in furnishing frommongery of the newest designs, at prices 30 per cont. under any other house. 336, strand, opposite Somerset House. Established, 1818. Their book, with upwards of 200 engravings, gratis, or post free. The money returned for any article not approved of.

The hair is becoming thin and falling off, the only effectual remedy, besides shaving the head, is the use of the two slover named articles, applied alternately—the botanic water to cleanse the roots from sourf, and as a stimulant, and the bear's grease as a nourisher. If any further evidence was required of the virtues of bear's grease for renovating and proserving the hair, Mr. Catlin's account of the quantity used, and the longth of hair obtained by some of the North American Indians, would be a sufficient answer.—ROBS and SONS, 119 and 120, Hishopsgate-street, who first introduced the use of bear's grease in this country, and who fat and kill the animals, recommend the public to purchase none other but with their names and address printed on the pot, or the chances are they are obtaining a spurious article. All vegetable oils applied to the hair are worse than useless.

and address printed on the pot, or the chances are they are obtaining a spurious article. All vegetable oils applied to the hair are worse than tacless.

BVERY MAN HIS OWN LANDLORD

ECOND BRITTISH BUILDING AND INVEST.

MENT COMPANY. Broiled.

Established on Macarthur's Simplified and Improved Plan.

Ment COMPANY. Broiled.

Established on Macarthur's Simplified and Improved Plan.

Monthly Subscription, 10s per share.

No Redemption Fee.

Office, 3, Ivy-Lang, 8f, Paul's, London.

Hours, 15 till 4.

Commenced in March, 1846.

TAVETES.

William Anderson, M.R.G.S., 12, Chadwell street, Myddleton-square.

William Parmer, 29, Charlotte-terrace, Barmabury-road, Islington.

James Staley, Tiberton-square, Islington.

Thomas Shoppard, 5, Gainsford-place, Barmabury-road.

All letters should be directed to "The Second British Building and Investment Company," 3, Ivy-lane, 8c. Paul's, London.

The British Building and Investment Company was sommenced on the 4th September, 1846, in five months espoiled 1600 Shareholders, Issued 2800 Shares, and advanced about £10,850 to its Bhareholders, Issued 2800 Shares, and advanced about £10,850 to its Bhareholders, Issued 2800 Shares, and advanced about £10,850 to its Bhareholders, Issued 2800 Shares, and advanced about £10,850 to its Bhareholders, Issued 2800 Shares, and advanced about £10,850 to its Bhareholders, Issued 2800 Shares, and advanced about £10,850 to its Bhareholders, Issued 2800 Shares, and advanced by Mr. Thomas erried unshipmonally in the London Machanics, Institution, on Tuesday, 17th Feb., 1846, Mr. W. Farmer, is the chair, is the following Recolutions were certified by Mr. Peel, 1840, Mr. W. Farmer, is the chair, the fellowing Recolutions were certified by Mr. Peel, 1840, Mr. W. Farmer, is the chair, the fellowing Recolutions were served unshipmonally appreves of the plan on which the feedom British fullfalls gain all westment Company is established; and cordinates of the British Building and Investment Company is established; and cordinates when the served and the s MBER ONE, ST. PAUL'S CHURCHY IN A Pred concerning the halped by the grant plants by the pred to the strings extended to the pred to the strings extended anufacturers of Combe and Brushes of the bost quality, and on the most approved principles.

LENDERS, STOYLES, and ERRE-IRONS and the most largest assortment of Stoves and Fenders, as well as General Irosmongery, in the world, is now on Sale at WILLIAM S. BURTON'S (far RIPPON and BURTON'S) extensive warehouses. Bright steel steden, to 4 feet, from 30s each; ditto, ditto, with ormolu ornaments, from 6s.; feet, feet, file; wrought iron kitchen fenders, 3 feet, 4 feet, 6s.; ditto bronzed, and fitted writh standards, 5 feet, 1 feet, 11s.; wrought iron kitchen fenders, 3 feet, 4s 6d; 4 feet, 6s.; ditto bronzed, and fitted writh standards, 5 feet, 1 feet, 11s.; wrought iron kitchen fenders, 3 feet, 4s 6d; 4 feet, 6s.; bight register stoves, with bronzed ornaments, and was as to burn, from 5s; ditto, ditto, with ormolu ornaments, from 29; black dining-room register stoves, 2 feet, 16s; 5 feet, 16s; 5 feet, 16s; 5 feet, 16s; 5 feet, 16s; 5 feet, 16s; 5 feet, 16s; 5 feet, 16s; 5 feet, 16s; 5 feet, 16s; 5 feet, 16s; 6 feet, 1 corner of Newman-street). Established in Wells-street, 1820.

COM FORT in SHAVING depends on the proper use of a good RAZOR, an officiont STROP, and a PASTS to reconstitute surface of the Strop when it becomes black and choked with the steat from the Razor; to those must be added a Soap that will not dry suddenly on the face, and a smooth taper-pointed elastic Shaving Brush. Usless six these points are attended to, and the Razor wiped and stropped after shaving, that operation must always be a troublesome, oven if not a painting and the stropped of the same three points are attended to, and the Razor wiped and stropped after shaving, that operation must always be a troublesome, oven if not a painting at J. MECHITS Establishment, No. 6. Lendenhall street, Lordon, where they will not only obtain all they require for the tollet reasonable ind street, the face, where they will not only obtain all they require for the tollet reasonable ind street, to the control of the street, and writing desks, bagatolle tables, &c.

ALDNESS.—The reproductive powers of ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL are constantly and surprisingly shown is cases of Baldness of the Head from whatsoever cause arising (proved by numerous feature, in a liciting numeringly, from the latent stem the active progression of vitality, so that is numerous instances where other specifics have been tried in vais, ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL has superseded the ornaments of art by relastating in full plentude of beauty the permanent graces and willings of nature.

CAUTION.—The words "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" are on the nature.

OAUTION.—The words "ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL" are us the Wrapper of each genuine bottle.

Sold by them at 20, Hatten Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers. . All others are FRAUDULENT IMITATIONS!

"." All others are FRAUDULENT IMITATION

W O N D E
I wonder at the mighty House of MOSBS;
I wonder at the scene which it discloses;
I wonder at the splendour and extent
Which signalise this vast Establiament;
I wonder at the olegant attire
Which connoissours continually admire;
I wonder at the degant attire
Which connoissours continually admire;
I wonder not that Messrs. MOSBS gain Public supporters in ac vast a train;
I wonder at the cutters' matchless fasts,
Ritting and neat, and ologantly chasts;
I wonder at the trousors; and I wonder At MOSES Coats—both over-coats and under
I wonder at the beauty of the vests,
On which the gazing eyo with rapture rests;
I wonder at the dress for juveniles;
I wonder at the hate; and think it proper That MOSES chould provide me with a topper;
I wonder at the the price is so much under;
I wonder altogesher at the wester!

EST OF PRICORS.

[s. d. | Coats in every material Coats in every material adapted for the same a covery variety of style in fashion to area; from the same or for coats and the same or for coats are to the same of sattern coats and the same of sattern coats and the same of sattern coats are to less and the same of same or less and the same of same or less and the same of same or less and the same of same or less and the same of same or less and the same of same or less and the same of same or less and the same of same or less and the same of same or less and the same of same or less and the same of same or less and the same of same or less and the same of same or less and the same or less and the same of same or less and the same or less and t Tweed Taglioni, from 0 7 6
Cashmerotte Codringtons and Taglionis
Summer Coats in every desoription and make, including the Registered Coat cluding the Registered Coat

Blouse in every material 0 2 3

Blouse in every material 0 2 3

Splendid pattern Summer Vests

Cashmere and Persian in encless variety 0 4 6

Black and Fanoy Satins 0 6 0

Fanoy Trousers 0 4 6

Black and Fanoy Batins 0 6 0

Fanoy Trousers 0 4 6

Black date 0 9 8

Brock Coat 1 0 0

Fruck ditto 1 3 0

Dress Coal
Fruck ditto

A new work entitled "Past, Prock ditto

A new work entitled "Past, Prock ditto

A new work entitled "Past, Prock ditto

Mourning to any extinct at Market

Onestys — Any Article prochased of mice any of, will be immediately at the state of t

AND THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND.

All Bubscribers of £1 and upwards to the LEAGUE FUND will be entitled to, and receive, a copy weekly of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their pheription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have toricarded to them a copy of The League, containing an acknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the offices of The League, Newall's-buildings, Manchester, or 67, Fleet-street, London.

NB. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of gold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council of the League would also suggest to their friends in the country the importance of transmitting their copies of THE LEAGUE newspaper, after perusul, to such parties (more especially furmers) as may be either hostile or indifferent to the question of Free Trade.

By order of the Council,

JOSEPH HICKIN, Secretary.

THE DELAY.

"When the time comes, honourable gentlemen will see whether her Majesty's Government are sincers or not in the course which they have taken. I can tell the honourable member, that there is no proof of sincerity with regard to this Bill which shall not be given in the event of its failure or alternation in its progress through Parliament. But I, for one, will not condescend to answer that accusation. I should have thought that the facts themselves would have been a complete refutation of it, in the mind of any honourable member."—Sir Rosert Peel, March 30.

We entirely believe the Premier. We accept the pledge of unflinching devotedness to the national cause, thus proudly and boldly tendered, and await its fulfilment without the shadow of a doubt or misgiving. Even the vexatious and harassing delay, of little less than a month's duration, which has intervened since these words were spoken in the hearing of England and the world, has in no way impaired the force, or perplexed the import, of those "facts" which, of themselves, are a "complete refutation " of any charge or suspicion of unfaithfulness. Sir Robert Peel is in earnest—if ever man was. It were sheer childishness to doubt the Free Trade Minister's determination to carry through, at whatever cost, a measure with which he has linked his name, fame, and fortunes-whose -principle he so thoroughly understands, so heartily espouses, and so luminously and forcibly expounds -and for which he has freely made some of the largest and most painful sacrifices which conviction and the sense of duty ever exacted of a public man. Sir Robert Peel is in earnest—cannot but be in earnest. He will pass his bill—though he dissolve Parliament for it. He will pass his bill—though he create peers for it. He will pass his bill-and hol any other bill that the faction may dare offer him and the country in its stead. He will pass his bill as it stands-or, it may even yet be, with a "total and immediate" amendment—the only sort of amendment his acceptance of which lies within the compass of possibility. He means the whole of what he says—and will do it. We honour uninitiatingly the Premier's draft on our confidence, and rest, with unqualified assurance of faith, on promise, that "THERE IS NO PROOF OF SINCERITY THE BEGARD TO THIS BILL WHICH SHALL ROT BE THE EVENT OF ITS FAILURE OR ALTERA-MOTER ITS PROGRESS THROUGH PARLIAMENT."

the country believes this, too. And this is y the country endures—with a patience that to the wise be inexplicable—that seemingly intible delay which a strange and unlooked for the circumstances has interposed be victimal and the formal realisation of its.

to all public and private interests, is the present stoppage of the business of legislation, whon we were so near the goal—when majorities, so large and sweeping as to be irreversible by any power of political accident, had, after debates universally felt to be exhaustive of the whole question, affirmed the Bill, both in its principle and its dotails, and nothing remained but to put it through its last formal stage, and send it up to "another place," stamped with the flat of the united statesmanship and matured intelligence of the empire—then to have it thrust aside and hung up, to wait for the completion of a tedious and unprofitable formality with respect to a totally different and unrolated measure! Still, we bear it. We can ill afford to wait, yet we do wait, tranquilly relying both on the perfect integrity of purpose of the Prime Minister, and on our own power to bear him and his Bill victoriously through all obstruc-

Disappointing and vexatious as is the present entanglement of the public business, we are not disposed to speak with anything approaching to bitterness, either of the one or the other of those parties whose conflicting views of public duty have occasioned it. We freely credit both the Government and the Irish members with upright intentions, however widely we may dissent from the propriety and prudence of the course which they have respectively taken, and however deeply we must deplore the result. Of the particular motives that have induced the Premier to consent to postpone the third reading of the Corn Bill to the merely formal first reading of the Coercion Bill, we do not profess to give any precise account. Whether his intention was simply to comply with the requisitions of a customary courtesy towards the other branch of the legislature, or whether he had been led to believe that the progress of his Free Trade measures in the Upper House would be thereby smoothed and facilitated—or by whatever other motive, or combination of motives, he may have been actuated—we cannot undertake to say. We have, in any case, no more doubt that his decision was taken in perfect good faith, than we have that it was adopted on erroneous premises, and has been productive of injurious consequences. It must, in common fairness, be borne in mind, that sustained and systematic opposition to a measure on its first reading, is extremely unusual—that the formality which the Government have insisted on maintaining is one which ordinarily passes as a matter of course—and that for a minister to rescind a decision of this sort, when it has once been announced and acted on, requires an exercise of moral courage of which very few public men are capable. It was a great mistake, certainly—but perhaps not an unnatural one, and, once committed, retreat was dif ficult and embarrassing.

Of the conduct of the Irish members in this un fortunate affair, we must likewise speak with the candour and fairness which they are entitled to expect at our hands. We do not assume any right to condemn them for the course which, in their judgment, the duties they owe to that portion of the United Kingdom which they more immediately represent, have imposed on them. Much as we lament all that has happened, we are not aware of anything in the conduct of the Irish members which implies either the absence, or the weakness, of the highest motives that should govern public men; and it is impossible to dony that their departure from the ordinary practice of the house, in such cases, has, thus far, been incidentally productive of some highly useful results, by fastening public attention, with unwonted fixity and carnestness, on the real nature and causes of the disorganisation of society in their landlord ridden country. We trust, however, that they will not think it no cossary further to prolong this course of action, without most fully taking into account all the elements of the case, on which they have to deoide. Without pretending to judge for them, we may express our own strong opinion that the practical purpose of their opposition to the first formal stage of the Coeroion Bill, has been already most abundantly answered. They have sufficiently marked their sense of the obnoxious character of this measure, and their determination to use every possible exertion to prevent it from becoming law; and they have brought home to the public mind and heart an amount of knowledge respecting the real condition and wants of Ireland, to which it is scarcely conceivable that any further protraction of this debate should contribute any material addition. We trust that, remembering that the Corn Bill is, at least, as much an Irish as it is an English measure-that, in fact, the necessity to which we owe its introduction now is mainly an Irish necessity—they will be able to reconcile it to their sonse of duty, to oppose no further obstacle to the observance of a customary Parliamentary formality, and to reserve until another occasion an opposition whose possible and incidental advantages bear now so small a proportion to its certain and direct evils.

At the same time that we are solicitous to reassure those of our friends throughout the country, whose confidence may have been shaken by the present disappointing and mortifying obstruction, we must warn all Free Traders to be on the alert, and hold themselves prepared for all contingencies. We have no desire to take an alarmist tone for which, in truth, we perceive no real occasion-but we cannot too carnestly deprecate everything like over-confidence at a crisis so full of all kinds of contingent possibilities. The delay of the past month may, indeed, in some respects, have operated to increase the security of the Free Trade measures in the House of Lords—but there is no saying, and it is at least equally possible that the effect may have been the other way. any case it is well not to be too sure. anything is to be taken for granted, we say, lake the worst for granted, and be ready accordingly. The political atmosphere is, just now, charged full with those rumours which commonly precede a storm. A dissolution of Parliament is talked ofrejection, or "amendment," by the Lords is talked of,-very likely, without a particle of foundation, other than the wishes, or the fears of the talkers-still, there is no knowing. Very likely, all is right - yet it is quite possible that all is wrong. Sir Robert Pool has nover undertaken to answer for his Bill passing the Lords, without a provious "appoal to the people" nor have we. He has answered for nothing but his own unmoved and immoveable fidelity to its great principle; and we can answer for nothing but our own will and power to see that principle fairly onthe statute book, let who will say nay. The people have done it all thus far-and there is no knowing but that the people's minister may find it necessary now, before all is over, to bid them finish their own

GRANDMAMMA'S VIEWS ON THE MANU. FACTURING SYSTEM.

"The paper, after you, Sir, if you please," said a gentleman of our friend Punch's acquaintance, to a neighbour who was enjoying his chop, and seemed to be enjoying his newspaper, in one of the dining rooms of our metropolis. "It is the Morning Herald, Sir," was the response. "Oh, then," rejoined the applicant, "pray do not trouble yourself—I thought it was a newspaper." Forcour joined part, being very much of Punch's friend's opinion and liking to read only newspapers that are newspapers, it is not often that we dip into that Stygian fluid of nonsense and scurrility which runs-or rather, does not run, but dolefully stagnatesthrough the columns of the Morning Herald. But accident and temptation occasionally overrule the wisest purposes and the most settled habits; and it did so happen, on Wednesday morning last, that the chance sight of a Number of this indescribable print-containing something which presented to the eye the appearance of a leading article, stretched out to the extraordinary length of some two columns and a half-excited a curiosity, which our idleness could not resist, to learn the precise nature of this inordinate impost on the time and patience of elderly and gaitered gentlemen. So we read (if it can be called reading) the article, (if it can be called an article); and as it seems a pity that labours so onerous should be altogether unprofitable, we have thought fit to furnish the public in general with some account of our observations in a rarely-visited and little-explored region.

So far as we can make out what may be called, by courtesy, the "meaning" of a writer whose early grammatical studies were evidently superintended by a preceptor morbidly averse to the infliction of corporeal punishment—and whose logic always gives one the idea of a brain, naturally of the weakest, preternaturally obfuscated by undue indulgence in the coarser descriptions of beverage familiar to the humbler classes of metropolitan topors-the Morning Herald's theory of the present state and prospects of the empire seems to be as follows: The manufacturers of Great Britain are a gang of "desperadoes and profligates," with one "Mirabeau" Peel for their captain, and certain "Cobdens, Ashfords, and Brights" for licutements. -" Ashford" being the Herald's way of spelling the name more usually written "Ashworth." And the said Mirabean Pool and his profligate desperadoes described, for shortness' sake, as a huge collective "mammoth of pampered vanity and cupidity"-have entered into a vast mammoth-like conspiracy for the establishment of a new univer-BAL MONARCHY, the capital of which is to be Manchester. "To accomplish this object," proceeds the dismal monomaniae, "we perceive an array of MIL. LIONS OF COTTON-SPINDLES under the direction of the Chamber of Commerce of Manchester, and BRIGADED and commanded by Cobden, Bright, Sturge, &c, (that essence of philanthropy) ARRAYED TO MARCH and to accomplish the object—the conquest of the world"-and "TO RENDER EVERY NATION SLAVES to their capital and to their manufacturing profits." However, the brigaded millions of cotton spindles, before finally setting out on their march to conquer the world and render every nation slaves, must make sure that they do not leave behind them the elements of a successful revolt, that would nip their hopes of empire in the bud. Tyranny, like charity, to begin well, must begin at home. The first thing, therefore, the brigaded cottou spindles have to do is " to reduce the whole agricultural population everywhere to the condition of serfs;" for it is a well-known fact that "the Free Trade array" uniformly describe the "unfortunate agriculturists" as "beings as ignorant as their cattle, and consequently fit only to be slaves to the manufacturers." Having subjected the unfortunate agriculturists, and completed and scaled the conquest by the original expedient of actually "devouring the land, or real property of the country " (they have stomachs, these ogres, for anything), the brigaded spindles will be at liberty to proceed on their " crusado against the powers, the intelligence, the Industry, and the capital of more than THUEL HUN-DRED MILLIONS OF CIVILISED MEN, INHABITING DIFFERENT COUNTRIES ON THIS GLOBE," For the plan of the campaign, which we regret that our space does not allow of our giving in detail, the curious reader must consult for himself the "amusing print"—where he will likewise learn what dreadful preparations for the war are daily going on in the very bosom of certain Manchester and Glasgow families. Now we add, that the Heraid's facts are all "learned from good authority."

We are not familiar with the statistics of the sale and circulation of this most extraordinary literary and political phenomenon, and we find the densest ignorance on the subject prevailing in the circle of our more immediate friends. Perhaps, however, we may trust to the kindness and research of some of our readers to supply us with information on one or two points on which our curiosity is somewhat vividly excited. We should greatly like to know whether, and to what extent, Manchester and Glasgow gentlemen are in the habit of patronising this singularly enlightened and polite journal? Also, whether, and to what extent, the managers of public news-rooms in the manufacturing districts consider themselves at liberty to expend the fivepences of their subscribers in disseminating a publication, whose fitness to express and guide local opinion is so happily demonstrated by the intimate local knowledge evinced in the allusion to the great manufacturing house of "Ashford?" other points on which our inquisitiveness has been excited, we ask no questions, for we are sure no answer can be forthcoming. How any editor can pen such incomprehensibly stupid trash, and call it a " leading article"—how any proprietor and capitalist can draw a cheque on his bankers to pay ir such leading article being written—and how any news. man can make a living by selling it when it is written—are questions on which we can only resign ourselves at once to absolute and perpetual nescience.

THE NICE YOUNG MAN.

" Let laws and learning, arts and commerce die, But leave us still our old nobility." Poems by Lord John Manners.

The characteristically pompous and silly stuff which this well-meaning, but singularly weak-headed young nobleman, addressed, the other day, to the members of the "Birmingham Athenic Institute" —an association formed for the purpose of reviving old English sympathies, old English affections, old English sports, and old English everything, under a Greek name and a Latin motto—has, on the whole, received ample justice at the hand of the Examiner; and it would be a work of supererogation to repeat the castigation due to the inanities and impertinences of his lordship's harangue. We cannot, however, forbear a word of comment on one point, not touched by our contemporary—the nice young man's sneer at political economy and economists in particular, and philosophy and philosophers in general. Lord John Manners delivered himself to the congregated Athenics in the following strain:

"Political economy has still many abstract votaries; and it rests mainly with you, and with societies like yours, to show that the sobriety, morals, intelligence, ay, and the industry too of the people, is promoted by a fair mixture of recreative leisure and amusement with their time of toil and labour. * * Well, gentlemen, they may call us what they please—these dry philosophers, these party politicians, we will pursue the even tener of our way—lightening the toil, elevating the tastes, giving vigour and health to the frames of the working youths of Birmingham."

So then, it seems, political economy and dry philosophy frown on "recreative leisure and amusement," and hold in particular aversion whatever tends to "lighten the toil, elevate the tastes, and give vigour and health to the frames" of the working classes; that is to say, the science which expounds the laws of the production and distribution of wealth stands in antagonism to the natural and best uses of wealth-and it is the express purpose of philosophy to aggravate the toil, debase the tastes, and impart debility and disease to the frames of the working classes. Political economy and philosophy abominate the "mous sana in corpore sano," and have a decided grudge against the working Athenie youths of Birmingham who have associated themselves for the realisation of this inestimable blessing. The Athenics may, however, be of good cheer. Lord John Manners is in the field against political economy and philosophy, and will enfranchise the degraded-and-opprossed viotims of these common enemies of mankind with orioket matches and maypoles. David and his sling against Goliah of Gath -Lord John Manners and his bat against philosophy, though the came in the guise of Attention self. Lord John Manners and the Athenics will, among them, despite all "obloquy and misrepresentation," redress the evils of "our present arbitrary and artificial state of society "—" disperse the mists of money getting prejudico"—restore "the frankness and freshness of old English character"—and "carry this little island of ours through all straits and dangers," &c. &c.

编码 医侧侧线 经收益的 医动物

After all, Lord John Manners is not so silly as he seems. There is a sort of shrewdness about him, which admirably balances and corrects any over-tendency to frankness and freshness, lie is quite right to be against political economy and philosophy, for political economy and philosophy are most decidedly against him. He feels himself in a false position—this sentimental monopolistthis frank and fresh bread taxer-this fine old English supporter of the shabbiest and dirtiest of legislative iniquities. He feels himself in a false position. Speaking to Birmingham men, whose industry he shuts out from its natural and rightful markets-whose wages he fines down, by enhancing the cost of that on which wages are expendedwhose recreative leisure he abridges by arbitrarily increasing the difficulty of supplying these wants which wait on no man's leisure-whose amusements he invades with those chilling and heart-withering anxieties incident to suspended and irregular trade. which eat out the very faculty for being amusedwhose toils be multiplies, prolongs, and aggravates by superadding to the natural and necessary cost of life the artificial cost of landlordism's black-mailwhose tastes he lowers, by curtailing time and opportunity for their culture—and whose healthful vigour he would prematurely waste away, by maintaining a cruel and vicious system which the economists, the philosophers, and the statesmen, have demonstrated to be "THE CAUSE OF FEVER, MORTALITY, AND CRIME, AMONG THE PEO-PLE!"-Lord John Mannors feels himself to be in a false position; -and he makes believe to put himself right, by running out against the science that shows him to be wrong.

terf

and spok

danc

vulge

he h

that p

comp

with cumin tended fore t

milelic

bate ti

One in enable

the Ba fact of aljean) (

this sp

difficul

the cou

monopoling the saler all come, it curing the 0 7

The

Lord John Manners is a young man-young enough to learn; and, notwithstanding his frivolous and empty sneer at wiser and better men than himself, we are willing to remember that he has given some signs of readiness and ability to learn. May we suggest, that he would do wisely to make at once that final election between right and wrong which, in these times, as he will not be long of finding, no public man can hope to evade. The old English philanthropy that taxes poor men's bread, and the old English frankness and freshness of feeling that plunder poor men's cupboards, are coming very rapidly to be rated exactly for what they are worth. If Lord John Manners means to qualify himself for popularity among Birmingham artisans, he must cease to sneer at truths which even artisan intelligence appreciates, to talk a rhodomontade which artisan common-sense scorns, and to give his vote and interest to a sordid iniquity against which the artisan soul indignantly rovolts. The Athenics themselves will not stand it at the next anniversary. If Lord John Manners cannot put himself through an entirely now course of mental discipline-including liberal and constant doses of "political economy," and "dry philosophy,"-he had better, to save time, trouble, and mortification, go back to the castle and the hounds, and settle down at once into a lord.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY OF MINERAL WEALTH IS THE NORTH OF AYRSHINE.—We understand that Mr. Dixos, of Glasgow, has become lessees of part of an extensive mineral field situated noar Beith. The ore proposed to be wreath is a species of Brown Liesmatite, yielding sometimes as high as 50 per cent. of pure iron; it exists in immense abundance, forming strata of many feet in thiskness, throughout the parishes of Benth, Kilbirnis, and Dalry. In the latter pick, in the farm of Howrat, the property of Gaptain Blar, of in the farm of Howrat, the property of Gaptain Blar, of the light discoverer of the importance of the believe that the first discoverer of the importance of the winding has a strate from files to the internal was John Jack, Esq., manager of the importance of the wealth of this district.—Ay Adv.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

THE FREE TRADE MIRROR OF PARLIAMENT FOR THE SESSION OF 1846.

Fourteenth Week, ending Saturday, April 25. For anything which as yet appears to the contrary, the Easter recess might have lasted a fortuight instead of a week. The House of Commons re-assembled last Friday (wook), and at once proceeded to resume the debate on the first reading of the Irish Coercion Bill. Yet, at the present moment, this debate is just as far advanced as it was three weeks ago. The Irish repeal members have taken a loaf out of the book of Lord George Bentinck; and they seem disposed to "better the instruction" which he has given. All legislative function is paralysed; the Government seems helpless; and rumour runs about, muttering ominous threats of an impending dissolution of Parliament.

The appalling condition of Ireland was part of the theme of Friday night week. In answer to an appeal from Mr. Smith O'Brien, in which he adduced evidence that the people were starving, Sir James Graham regretted the inadequacy of the remedies to meet the actual exigency, but reminded the house that the Government could not, and did not, undertake the task of feeding the indigent population of Ire land. All they proposed to do was so to regulate the market price, by permitting freedom of supply, as to enable food to be procured at a moderate price. But the Government did more than this. 'They had provided for the possibility of the landlords of Ireland failing in their duty, and had undertaken that the grants of public money might be exceeded on the responsibility of ministers, in order to meet any possible extension of the calamitous circumstances which afflict Ire. land. He appealed to Irish members to permit the first reading of the Coercion Bill, in order that they might afterwards proceed with the Corn Bill.

Similar sentiments were uttered by Sir Robert Peel. He reminded the house that a short time ago the Government had been accused of exaggeration when they pointed to the probability of a famine in Ireland. If it were possible to alleviate the calamity, no pecuniary consideration should interfere. But let them take care that by interference they might not do more harm than good. It was a hazardous experiment to undertake the feeding of a people; no Goant should interfere with the natural course of supply and demand. Their great object was to enable wheat, oats: Indian meal, and other grain, to be supplied at moderate and natural prices; and for the farther mitigation of the impending calamity, the wealthy classes and not the Government were responsible.

The debate, however, went on, the only exception to a dreary night being an excellent speech from Mr. Ward, who spoke with much spirit, temper, and good sense on the subject of Ireland. He complained of the "disgraceful" state of the House, engaged as it was in the discussion of a great constitutional question. This was an allusion to the attendauce of members during the night, which had been scanty. Were they, he asked, for ever to pursue this miserable and vulgar policy of coercion? They had tried it during successive years, and it had continually failed. The first vote he had ever given in Parliament had been in favour of a coercion bill; but at that time he knew less of Ireland than he did of Mexico, and he reposed confidence in the Ministry which proposed it. Universal testimony showed that the lrish endured unexampled privations-was it marvellous that patience should be occasionally exhausted, or that despair should break out into outrage? He depicted the social condition of the people, quoting Kohl's opinion as to the comparative depth of their degradation and misery, borne with religious cheerfulness and content—and was this the people whom we were called on to coerce, and to shut up every night in their hovels, under extreme pains and penalties. Their business was to grapple, not so much with the criminals as with the causes of crime; the evils of Ireland were social, not political; and the remedy for them, he conlended, was not to be found in such measures as the bill before the house, but in large comprehensive plans for the anclioration of the condition of the country.

The Irish members compelled an adjournment of the debate till Monday. On Monday there was "No house." One member only was required to make up the forty, which enables the Spraken to retain the chair; and Dr. Bowring, who had been detained by a tardy omnibus in his way from the Bank to the House, arrived a minute too late. But the fact of there being "No house" immadiately set people to speculation. It was conjectured that the Cabinet was in a (risis, and consequently that a dissolution was at hand. All this spreads about the ides that Sir Robert Peel feels the difficulty of his position, and is losing that disciplinaries firmwhich used to characterise him. It would be a pity for the country, in its present commercial condition, were the monopolists to decales themselves into the folly of predibite. the the content which they affect to desire. But particle, after all, it may be ultimately better that the content should come, for the rousing of a nation might be the cause of so-cuing a larger amount of ultimate advantage for the scople then the blunderbores dream of.

On Therefore the House of Fords in several plays and the House of Common Co. It is the transity of the House of Common Co. It is the transity of the House of Common Co. It is the transity of the House of Common Co. It is the transity of the House of Common Co. It is the transity of the House of Common Co.

way, intended to make a great impression, spoke to the following effect :

Lord George Bentunck rose to obtain some explanation of a false return leid upon the table respecting the prices of Memel timber. He had moved for this document, applicable to the last six years, in the last week of January or in the first week of February, and the part which appeared to be false was dated 13th February; if was then in the hands of the Board of Trade, although it had not been laid upon the table until the lat April. The object his lordship had in view was to throw light on a pending discussion of the timber duties, and the return showed that the following were the prices of Momel timber. (The noble lord here stated a series of figures which turned out to be, as he said, the cor rect prices, and not those given in the return; he accordingly withdraw them.] The following were the prices of Memel timber, duty paid, as they stood in the return of which he complained:

> 1840 1841 1842

The duty which was stated to have been paid being then 55s. per load. The average of those three years, according to the return upon the table, was 8/. Is. Id. In the year 1812, the right honourable baronet at the head of the Government introduced his changes. He then reduced the duty by 20s., and he took of a further 0s. in 1843. The return went on to give the subsequent as the prices after the reduction of the duty:

from £6 5 0 to £5 10 0 5 10 0 5 10 0 5 17 0

Making an average of 5/. 12s. 6d. The result of the return was to show the house and the country that the consumers had gained by the remission of the 30s. duty, not only the whole amount of that duty, but 19s. 2d. over and above it; in other words, that the consumers had gained 49s. 2d. upon every load of Memel timber. He believed the fact to be that so far from this being true, the roturn, if correctly made out, would have shown that the following were the prices:—In 1810, 5l. 10s.; 1841, 5l. 5s.; 1842, 5l. 5s. Showing an average of 5t 6s. 8d., with a duty of 55s. already paid. During the last three years, when the duty had been reduced to the extent of 30s., the subsequent were the correct prices of Memel timber:—In 1844, 4l. 5s.; 1845, 4l. 5s.; 1846, 4l. 12s. 6d., showing an average of tl. 7s. 6d. Thus the consumer, on an average of three years since the duty had been reduced, as compared with the three years before it was reduced, instead of having gained, as represented in the return, 49s. 2d., being all the reduced duty, and 19s. 2d. beyond it, had really gained only 19s. 2d., while 10s. 10d. were put into the pockets of the foreign growers. Comparing the last year with 1842, before the duty was reduced, there was put into the pockets of the British consumers, not 42s. 6d., as represented by the return, but 12s. 6d., out of the 30s. of reduced, there was not the 30s. of reduced that a first reduced the second s duced duty. Out of the reduced duty of 30s. the foreigner, in 1840, was enjoying benefit to the extent of 17s. 0d., while the British consumer was a gainer to the extent of only 12s. 6d. This seemed to him (Lord G. Bentinck) a most important matter, inasmuch as the house expected to be able to rely upon the truth and honesty of the statistical doesments laid upon the table, as veluable guides to legislation. He had at first contemplated the fitness of calling to the bar the subordinate officer who had made out the return, in order that he might explain how the error, or fraud, which had been imposed upon the house had occurred. It was all very well for honourable gentlemen connected with the commercial interests to slight this subject; but he (Lord George Bentinck) maintained that the misrepresentation was an important one, and it could not be denied that it had passed current with the house and the people. So striking was it, that the learned editors of newspapers had remarked upon it in leading articles, and had drawn an argument from it in favour of the reduction of duty on Baltic timber, He had, therefore, thought it right to call upon Ministers to explain how it came to pass that, after so long a delay as seven weeks, the Board of Trade had at length laid upon the table a false return, which had been most appropriately presented on the 1st of April.

Sir Robert Peel thus disposed of this "mare's nest:"

Sir R. PERL did not think that he should be justified in entering into any argument with the noble lord (cheers), but he would simply state the facts of the case as regarded the error in the return. His attention had not been called to error in the return. His attention had not been called to the subject until he heard from the noble lord yesterday. Although, in one sense, documents of the kind were presented by ministers, yet, if only on account of their number, it was utterly impossible that they should undertake to be responsible for their accuracy (hear, hear). At the same time he willingly admitted the great importance of accuracy, and the parties preparing them, and not preparing them accurately, were in truth answerable. Immediately he understood that an error had been committed, he had directed that if that error were found to exist, a document not liable to the same objection should be made out forthwith and laid before the house. He believed that an accurate return would be laid upon the table to-morrow. He had also made would be laid upon the table to morrow. He had also made a communication to the Board of Customs requiring to be certified in what department the mistake had been committed; to this communication an answer had been received, and the best course would perhaps be to real the letter. It was in the following form, and addressed to one of the secretaries of the Trossfiry:—"April 21, 1846,—Sir— In answer to your requisition, calling upon me to state in what department the error in the return of the values on Memel and Canadian timber cross. I have to regret to state that it was in the landing surveyor's department. The nature of the mistake is, that the prioce were necessarily taken from the Prices Ourrent, which are not official Customs documents, but a mercantile list, in which some of the values cuments, but a mercantile list, in which some of the values quoted include the duties, whilst others do not. The head-ing of the space containing the values, viz. "yalue in hond!" led to the effor. It applied only to the upper half of the columns, not to that part in which these prices were entered, and this distinction was not observed. I have to express my regret at this error, and remain, Sir, your most obsellant servant, M. Surt. B. Cartivall, Esd." He (Sir R. Peel) had only to and the expression of his recret that the error had occurred he had again the income. There to correct imballably, but he must repeat that numbers must be hell repositible for initial as of the king.

pends on their nature whother not the discussions on that night are of general importance.

On Wednesday, during the day's sitting, there was a somewhat ourious discussion, showing how fourful the "country gentlemen" are of anything which may tend to diminish their lufluence, or their control over the county constituen-

Mr. Elphinstone moved the second reading of his County Elections Bill, the object proposed by which was to limit the time of polling in counties to the same period as in boroughs, namely, to one day.

Colonel Thomas Wood met the motion by a direct negative, that the bill be read a second time that day six months. In the course of the somowhat curious discussion which Lord Worsley, who supported the bill, adduced evidence to show that the bulk of a county constituency actually polled on the first day of an election.

The noble lord read the following statement:

Return of the number of votes recorded at County Elections in 1841, showing that a large proportion of the registered constituencies recorded their votes on the first day:

Rushingham	R	Total Vates ecorded	•	First Day's Poll.	J	eennd Day'n Poll.
Buckinghamshire	٠.,	8579				1641
South Essay Herffordshire	• • •	7/27		ায়াম	٠.	CHAS
South Northamptonshire	٠.,		٠.	7010	٠.	1408
West Yorkshire	• • •	Miss	٠.	4825	• •	HOU
North Northumberland	• • •		٠.	41 (194)	٠.	EMUH
East Curchardand	• • •	Hind	٠.	2703		. 71H
East Cumberland	• • •	6076		6177		599
North Lincolnshire	٠,	13743	٠.	11103		2010
East Sussex		5302	٠.	4200		1012
South Derbyshire	٠.,	11080	٠.	M(1)		2375
South Leicentershire		7		64836		627
East Cornwall	٠.	7456	٠.	mini (4115
East Norfolk		8313	٠,	6863		1450

Lord Worsley also amused the house by assuring it that he was cognisant of the fact that many county electors imagined, and sometimes attempted to act on their misconception, that as the law allowed two days for polling, they could vote on the first day for one candidate, and on the second for his opponent; and that they supposed they were deprived of a legal right when they were prevented.

Mr. Newdegate expressed his apprehensions that if county elections were limited to one day, associations, much as the Anti-Corn-Law League, would take advantage of the facilities which railways now afforded; and, by concentrating bodies of electors at particular stations, pour down upon the polling booths and decide the contest. Mr. Cobden had threatened that within three years he could unseat one bundred county members, unless they changed their principles, and acted against their own convictions and those of the constituencies which they represented.

Mr. Bright remarked that all the arguments against the present Bill resembled in colour and texture the arguments which had been used in support of the old obnoxious system, on which the present practice was admitted to be a great im-

Mr. Beckett Danison knew of many instances in which the result of an election had boon changed by the interval afforded between the first and second day.

Sir James Graham admitted that the change to one day in boroughs, and two days in countles, had been a great improvement on the old system. But elections in boroughs extended only over a radius of seven miles; while in counties there was no specific limitation, and instanced the county of York. He did not think the Bill to be necessary, and therefore opposed it.

After some further debate - during which Mr. Escott affirmed his knowledge of corrupt practices in the night between the two days, and Colonel Sibtherp hoped that the day was distant when money would not freely circulate at elections, and Lord George Bentinck renewed his attack on Mr. Encott, for alloged abandonment of principle—the house went to a division, when the Bill was thrown out by a majority of 55 to 32.

Thursday night was devoted, in both Houses, to the introduction of the Railway Relief Bill, and the discussion of a new sessional order, for the purpose of stopping all Rullway Bills now before Parliament, until it is ascertained that a majority of the shareholders are clearly in favour of proceeding; while to those who wish to withdraw from their schemes the opportunity is given of winding up their concerns. The subject does not precisely come within our range, except to notice that the "gangway section" are anxious to seize every opportunity of attacking the Government. Lord George Bontinok, on hearing the Chancellor of the Exchequer talk about appealing from "Philip drunk" to "Philip sober," got up and accused Sir Robert Peel personally, and the Government generally, as having heat a great share in making the people railway drunk. And then Bon D'Israeli, the "Philosopher of Bhrewebury," should get up to repeat the same thing, and to presch an essay as to the virtues which should be possessed by a "great stetusman," with a "great idea." Dhildeophic Ben imagines, apparently, that unborn statesmen will yet suckle from him the art of Government.

It is really becoming intolerable that a knot of pedants and pupples "under the gangway," should bestride every public question, like the Old Man of the Sea.

Lette in the evening; (the railway debate lasting dill heat eleven o'clock.) Lord Landon brought on a molton relative to the reduction of the disk on The, which was associated by the Moltas. He had been statistical appears, which the laterages, it is how the process of the low t

IMPORTANT FROM BRAZIL.—PETITION TO LORD ABERDEEN. (From the Economist.)

The question of our relations with Brazil becomes more and more complicated. Our readers will remember that, at various periods last year, we called attention to the dangerous position in which property in Brazil belonging to British subjects, dying either there or here, is placed in such an event by the expiry of our treaty. It is now a year ago since a deputation of merchants from Liverpool had an interview with Lord Aberdeen on this alarming state of our Brazilian relations. At that time Lord Aberdeen, fully admitting the importance of the case, assured those merchants that he had every reason to believe that, at that moment, a treaty of amity was on its way home, which would secure a restoration of the rights of British subjects in Brazil.

To this day no more has been heard of the Brazilian treaty; the truth being, that the disappointment felt at our continued refusal to admit their sugars, by the bill of last year, and further the passing of a law towards the close of last session, giving to our Courts of Admiralty jurisdiction over Brazilian subjects, in certain cases, under the treaty of 1826, and which Act was passed in the face of the most explicit opinion expressed by one of the greatest law authorities in Parliament, and we think we may safely say, under a considerable doubt on the part of all, that it was an Act of direct variance with the law of nations,-under these circumstances, the Brazilian Government immediately instructed the commissioners who had been appointed to negotiate the treaty in question, to suspend all further intercourse on the subject with Mr. Hamilton, until these obnoxious and invidious laws were altered.

Meantime a private committee was appointed at Rio de Janeiro, for the purpose of endeavouring, by every means in their power, to prevail on the Government to grant them the same privilegos regarding the property of deceased British merchants as is possessed by the French, under treaty, and which they also possessed until the expiry of the late treaty. After spending months in futile attempts, without obtaining any concession from the Government, and living in the greatest terror of the operation of the law upon their property, this committee have addressed to Lord Aberdeen through Mr. Hamilton, a petition, of which the following is a copy—the original, no doubt, having been received this week at the Foreign Office. The petition itself fully explains the difficulties and dangers under which from four to five millions' worth of British property is at this moment almost in a state of the most imminent danger. And for what? In order to maintain a distinction with respect to the introduction of slave-labour augar, most ineffective for its pretended objects, and which fairly exposes us, in all our efforts on behalf of the slave, to a suspicion of insincerity and hypocrisy, and exhibits us to the whole world in the daily commission of the most glaring and flagrant inconsistencies. This has become a serious subject which it will be impossible for the British Government to stave off much longer. The following is the petition;

May it please your Lordship, The undersigned British subjects resident in Brazil, request The undersigned British subjects resident in Brazil, request permission, in the most respectful manner, to lay before your lordship, her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, the very exposed and dangerous position in which all property existing in Brazil belonging to British subjects is placed, by a certain law, entitled, "Decreto, No. 160, de 9 de Maio, de 1842, Dando Regulomiento para a arrecadação dos lens dos definitos e Ausentes, vagos e de evento," being made applicable to them, "as subjects of a nation with which Brazil has no treaty." Your memorialists beg leave to state the difference of the positions of French and British subjects. A British subject is bound to make his will according to the forms of the Brazilian law, and is farther obliged to bequeath such of his property as may be existent in Brazil, wheresever he may reside, in obedience to the tener of the law of coheirship (Ley de Partithas), which to the tener of the law of coheirship (Ley de Partithas), which pives certain relatives of the deceased a legal claim on a certain portion of his property, and forbids its being otherwise bequeathed; but a French subject is at liberty to will his property in accordance with French turn. in accordance with French law

On the death of a British subject in Brazil-or, indeed, any part of the world, who may have left property in Brazil, whether he should have died intestate or otherwise, the local authorities claim (under the law alluded to) an intervention in the administration of it, which would render the settlement of any claim against the estate of the deceased so difficult and vexatious, that the credit of any commercial establishment which might come under its influence would, of a certainty, become seriously injured, if not ruined; but, by perpetual articles (of an expired treaty), French subjects are entirely protected from the interference of the law your memorialists have so much reason to dread and complain of; thus the French subject can offer a protection and security to preparty pleased under his charge pro-trend and security to property placed under his charge, no longer enjoyed by the subjects of Great Britain in this country. If a French subject die in this country, or any other, the dispositions he may have made relative to property would be carried into execution here, by the sole intervention of the French consul: and should he have died without leaving any will or dispositions, the French consul has then the power of manning curators. Sec. to administer the property so that a naming curators, &c., to administer the property, so that a French mercantile establishment, under either event (that is, whether a partner had died intestate or otherwise), would not be rum or injury, but might continue its transactions without any interruption.

Should a British morehant die in Brazil, whether he left a without any interruption.

Should a British morchant die in Brazil, whether he left a will or dispositions for the carrying on the catablishment with which he had been connected ornot, the local authorities claim a prejudicial intervention with—and the law insists on the liquidation of—the establishment! and the vexatious proofs required, as well as the tardy attention which would be paid to them, before the most clear commercial claim would be acknowledged, would cause a virtual stoppace of payment, and lead to almost certain ruin; thus involving not only the property of the deceased, but the interests of his partners in Great Britain, and probably of others who might have trusted the establishment with the care of their property in this country.

To be as expressive of their meaning as possible, your memorialists may state to your lordship, that a British subject who might be about to retire from Brazil, under the existence of the law referred to, would leave his property with much greater security in the custody of a French subject than under the care of one of his own countrymen. In the latter case the property would be exposed to a double risk, as either the death of the local authorities, whilst with the French subject, as principal or agent, no interference of the local authorities could coour.

Your lordship's resmorialists have alluded to the case of mercantile establishments, particularly, to show more evidently the risks which those in Great Britain and cleawhere run, who may trust to them as agents, as well as to prove to your lordship how seriously the credit and interest of British commercial establishments connected with the trade to Brazil must be injured by the gircumstances stated.

The British merchant here can be longer over to thiose in by the of coumstances stated.

The British merchant here can no longer offer to those in Europe or elsewhere the same security against the intervention of the local authorities in local affairs as French subjects can; neither, indeed, can they do so now to the natives. A circumstance, which formerly added much to support British credit in Balli, which presided knowledge of the natives, that although a British guidest should die in this country, no interference by the local allighest should take place with his property, and his debte; would be paid without subjecting the claimants on his costate to loss or litigation. Your memorialists did chieffain hopes that the security granted to French subjects by perpetual articles of treaty made between France and Brazil, within twelve months previous to the date of the last treaty made between Great Britain and this country, had been secured by the following part of the 5th article in the said British treaty:

"And, generally, it is agreed, that the subjects of the high contracting parties respectively shall enjoy in all the territories of the others, with respect to their persons, any rights, privileges, favours, or exemptions, which are, or which may be at any time hereafter, granted to the subjects of the most favoured nations."

But recent occurrences have tended to perplex them on the subject, especially the case of the late George March (a British subject), whose estate was administered for a short time by two British subjects, in accordance with the dispositions left by the late Mr. March, and under the authority of her Majesty's consul. Ultimately, however, the local authorities have interfered; and, disavowing the consul's authority, have laid an injunction on the property, named a curator, and subjected the administrators to the law of which your memorialists so much complain. A more recent case has also occurred, where the local anthorities at each took charge of the property of a deceased British subject—a person who belonged to the poorer class; but the circumstees equally shows the principle of the law. If the catenable be the only read object of the law stated and complained splan, namely, to afford protection by preventing embezziement, noupparently justifiable motive can be offered for not resoluble as of ar as regards those foreigners whose Governments might be desirous to release Brazil from the responsibility.

Your memorialists trust to the penetration of your lordship to take a full and correct view of the incalculable evils which mass be entailed on British commercial interests by the novelty of the Brazilian Government establishing one principle of security for the property of the French subject, and another interior for the property of British subjects.

Your lordship's memorialists rely with implicit confidence that her Majesty's Government will give the subject of this not morial that consideration which it may merit.

Rio de Janeiro, the eleventh of February, one thousand eight hundred and forty-six.

REPLY OF THE COUNCIL OF THE LEAGUE TO THE ADDRESS FROM THE "SOCIETÉ DES ECONOMISTES" OF PARIS.

The following letter was forwarded some time ago from the Council of the League to the Society of Political Economists in Paris, in reply to the address transmitted from that Association to the League, which has already appeared in our columns. The letter appears in the last Number of the "Journal des Economistes," and the interval that has elapsed between the transmission and publication is accounted for by the fact that the "Journal des Economistes" is published only once a month. We subjoin a copy of the original letter, together with the translation:

Londres, 18 Mars, 1846.

A Messicurs CHARLES DUNOYER, Membre de l'Institute, Président; HORACE SAY, JOSEPH GARNIER, et les Membres de la Société des Economistes, à Paris.

MESSIEURS,-Veuillez ne pas attribuer le long retard que les chefs de la Ligue ont mis à vous répondre à un manque de courtoisie de leur part, mais simplement à une grave indisposition qui, pendant plusieurs semaines, m'a tenu séparé de mes compagnons de travaux dans la cause du libre echange. En leur nom comme au mien, je vous prie d'agréer cette tardive expression de notre gratitude. Nous avons été sensiblement touchés à la lecture de votre lettre, où vous nous exprimez en termes si éloquents la cordiale sympathie des économistes de Paris pour les Free Traders d'Angleterre.

Je n'ai jamais douté que, lorsque les travaux et les intentions de la Ligue seraient connus au dehors, il n'éveillassent de nombreuses sympathies au sein d'un peuple aussi généreux et aussi éclairé que le peuple de France. Si ces tra vaux, pendant plusieurs années, n'ont point attiré l'attention des étrangers, c'est qu'ils paraissaient n'être dirigés que vers un but special et n'avoir pour objet que le redressement d'un grief purement domestique. Pourtant, des l'origine, les promoteurs de la lutte contre les lois céréales avaient tendu à une sin bien autrement noble et générale que la simple destruction d'un monopole injuste. Dans leur pensée le rap-pel de ces lois devait conduire à l'abolition complète du régime protecteur. Ils sentaient que le grand principe de la liberté commerciale était au fond de la querelle, et qu'a la solution d'une question toute spéciale se liait inévitablement le sort d'un système qui intéressait le présent et l'avenir, non-seulement de l'Angleterre, mais du monde entier.

Je suis charmé, Messieurs, que le retard involuntaire que ai mis vous répondre me permette de vous annoncer que l'événement confirme ces prévisions, et que la réforme aura un objet infiniment plus étendu que n'avait paru l'annoncer son titre:-Le libre échange, non-seulement en matière de subsistances, mais en toutes sortes de produits, devient anjourd'hui la politique commerciale avouée de la nation Anglaise. Non seulement tous nos principaux hommes d'état, abjurant un système erroné, se sont prononcés pour l'introduction pratique dans la législation Anglaise des principes de Smith et de J. B. Say; mais encore la grande charte de nos francises commerciales, promulguée par Sir Robert Peel, a été scellée par le vote des représentants de peuple Britannique.

Je n'ai pas besoin de dire à une Société aussi éclairée que celle des Economistes de Paris, que les suites d'une révolution si considérable ne sauraient se renfermer dans les limites étroites de Royaume-Uni, et que elle est destinée à s'étendre. Vous savez aussi bien que nous, Messieurs, quelle est la vive tendance des idées justes et fécondes à se propager, et combien il est difficile, lorsque une grande nation en a fait l'heureuse application chez elle, que les autres ne soient pas bientôt entraînées à l'imiter. Aussi longtemps que les peuples ont été uniformément soumis au régime des restrictions commerciales, ils ont pu lutter sur le pied de l'égalité: chacun trouvait une sorte de protection dans l'erreur commune à tous. Mais quand une grande nation maritime s'est affranchie des liens du monopole, je ne comprends pas trop comment les autres pourraient consentir longtemps à retenir ce lourd fardeau et à demeurer placées dans des conditions de travail et d'activité désavantageuses. Nous espérons, Messieurs, que la société française, si colairce, ne tardera pas à sentir les désadvantages de cette situation, et qu'elle ne voudra laisser à aucune autre l'honneur de prendre sur le continent l'initiative des mesures favorables à la liberté commerciale. Il n'y a pour votre patriotisme qu'un mo, en de la préparer à cet heureux affranchissement: c'est d'initier vos populations à la connaissance de leurs intérêts et de leurs droits. Il est tout à fait désirable que les saines notions économiques cessent enfin de demeurer confinées dans le cabinet des hommes qui les cultivent ou dans quelque cercle savant, et qu'elles commencent à devenir familières à la masse de vos compatriotes. Il n'est donné à auoun gouvernement, quelque excellentes que puis-sent être sos intentions, de faire prévaloir une législation cessons d'en faire l'expérience en Angleterre. Il y a dix ans, le gouvernement de ce pays n'eût pas même conqu la pense de proposer au Parlement ces mesures au triomphe des quelles est aujourd'hui subordonée la durée du cabinet de Bir Robert Peel, Pour préparer ce résultat, pour donner au peuple d'Angleterre l'intelligence de ses vrais intéréts et le déterminer à manifester constitutionellement aon vœu, il a fallu éorire, discourir, discourir, mprimer durante beaucoup d'annees. Vous n'aures pai moins à faire sans doute. Vous constitutionellement approprie et la presse et la presse, ayant qu'aucun homme d'état intelligence done troits grands agents de lout progrès morral, la parole, la plusie et la presse, ayant qu'aucun homme d'état intelligence consente à vous suivre et à introduire le principe de la allighté dans la vité d'état intelligence de la consente à vous suivre et à introduire le principe de la allighté dans la vité d'état intelligence consente à vous suivre et à introduire le principe de la allighté dans la vité d'état intelligence de le vous suivre et à introduire le principe de la allighté dans la vité de la consente de vous suivre et à introduire le principe de la allighté dans la vité de la consente de vous suivre et à introduire le principe de la allighté de la consente à vous suivre et à introduire le principe de la allighté de la consente à vous suivre et à introduire le principe de la allighté de la consente à vous suivre et à introduire le paritoire les verties de l'experience de la consente a vous suivre et à introduire le paritoire les verties de l'experience de la la consente a vous suivre et à introduire le la vertie de l'experience de la consente a vous suivre et à introduire le la vertie de l'experience de la consente a vous suivre et à introduire le la vertie de l'experience de la consente a vous suivre et à introduire le la consente de la consente de la consente de la consente de la consente de la consente de la consente de la consente de la consente de la consente de la consente de raisonnable, wil n'est soutenu par une opinion publique

London, 18th March, 1846. Messrs. CHARLES DUNOYER, Member of the Institute and Acting President; HORACE SAY, JOSEPH GAR NIER, and the Members of the Economical Society of Paris.

GENTLEMEN, -I entreat you not to attribute the long delay in answering your address to the prominent members of the Anti-Corn Law League to a want of courtesy on their part, but to a tedious illness which has for several weeks separated me from my fellow-labourers in the cause of Free Trade. In their behalf and my own, I beg you to accept this tardy expression of our grateful acknowledgments. Yourst dress has been read by the members of the League with the liveliest feelings of admiration for the eloquent terms in which you have communicated the cordial sentiments entertained by the economists of Paris towards the Free Traders of England.

I never doubted that, when the labours and the motives of the League were comprehended abroad, they would securthe sympathies of the collightened and generous people of France. For many years those labours failed to attract the notice of foreigners, because they seemed isolated in their object, and directed to the removal of one solitary domestic grievance. But the promoters of the struggle against day linglish Corn Law perceived from the beginning, that in the success of their efforts was involved a far mobler triumph than that of the removal of an injurious monopoly. They foresaw that the repeal of the Corn Law would be the signal for the downfall of every protective duty—that the great principle of commercial freedom was at stake; and that not merely England, but the world at large, was now and for all future time, interested in the issue of the struggle of the Anti-Corn-Law League.

Fortunately, the delay which has occurred in answering your address enables me to congratulate you upon the recent confirmation of those views. Free Trade in core, and every other commodity, has now become the recognised policy of the English nation. Not only have all our leading statesmen, with a wise disregard of their former sequiescence in an erroneous system, declared themselves in avour of the practical application of the principles of Adam Smith and B. Say to the legislation of England, but the great Charter of our commercial liberty, promulgated by the Government of Sir R. Peel, has received the sanction of the representatives of the British people.

To a body so instructed as the Economists of Paris, I need not say that this step, on the part of England, involved. as a necessary consequence, a revolution, sooner or later, in the fiscal policy of the whole civilised world. It is a maxim. applicable alike to the discoveries in moral and physical science, that nations cannot afford to stand still whilst other are advancing in the murch of improvement. So long as all countries subjected themselves to the fetters of the restrictive system, they were upon an equality in the race. The folly of all was the protection of each. But when one great manifered was the protection of each. maritime people casts off the trammels of monopoly, it willbe in vain for others who retain the burden to attempt to preserve their true position in the scale of nations.

Pardon me for adding, that if your enlightened body share these opinions, your patriotism will prompt you to endeavour to confer upon France its honour and advantages of leading the Continent of Europe that of commercial freedom. Be saured that there is no collections and but there is no other mode of accomplishing this end but by instructing the people in a knowledge of their economical rights and interests. The theories which have hitherto been confined to the studies of the learned, or the divise of scientific societies must be made families to the minds of the tific societies, must be made familiar to the mints of the mass of your countrymen. No Government, however well disposed, can enforce a wise legislation, unless it be suttained by an enlightened public opinion. This truth is at applicable to England as to France. Ten years ago, the Government of this country could not have drawned of being able to carry through Parliament the measures upon which for Robert Diel now stakes the avistance of his Cakieffect quest: thoug auesti but to there senti

VOL

the od Per will be out for Would lated a Vistula within withou

possible. perhaps trary, t gained tioneeri is rathe elective lempt to den's m constitu lectioni in anoth They to favour, question LO B BLAI hame? CONVERTE gioef the efforts.

With quarter, triampha meral pl indulgin tion, let noble et plus glorieuse mission pourries-vous vous propoacr que de prendre en quelque sorte vos populations par la main et de les conduire, en les instruisant mient de leurs vrais instruis, vers éette sainte fin du christianisme, la rapprochaintérâts, vers cette sainte nu du christianisme, la rapproche-ment des nations, la paix universelle et la fraternité du genre bumain? Ne vous faites pourtant pas illusion sur les difficultés que vous aurez à combattre. Vous allez vous heurter, comme nous, contre l'opposition active et combinés de tous ceux qui éxagérent les profits du monopole, et qui oroient leur fortune liée a la perpétuité du régime exolusif. Vous aurez à les suivre dans les argumentations les plus subtiles, à ré-ture des sophismes qui se produiront sous les formes les a les suivre dans les augumentations les plus subtiles, à ré-fuier des sophismes qui se produiront sous les formes les plus diverses et les plus compliquées, à déraciner des pré-juges aussi anciens que le mende. Ne vous laissez ni surprendre, ni décourager; la vérité est douée d'une si grande energie virtuelle! Nous n'avions pas moins à faire que vous; nous avions à attaquer le monopole sous sa forme la plus formidable, et pourtant nous l'avons vaincu. Pourquoi ce que nous avons si heureusement accompli vous seralt-il done impossible?

PUI POSE

C'est avec une vive émotion, Messieurs, que je rends & voire honorable Societé l'expression des sentiments affectueux qu'elle a bien voulu exprimer au président et aux membres de la Ligue. Oui, c'est une cre glorieuse et nourelle que celle qui est témoin de co généreux échange de sympathiques manifestations entre les citoyons de deux peuples autrefois victimes d'une haine aveugle et d'un antagonisme insensé, mais destinés, j'en al la ferme espérance, à ne rivaliser désormais que dans l'accomplissement de ces exploits pacifiques qui font la prospérité et la vraie gloire des nations civilisées. Recevez, je vous prie, Mossieurs, de la part de mes collègues et de la mienne, l'assurance de mes sentiments de considération et de sincère estime.

(Signé)

AR.

his ad

Le

12

RICHARD COBDEN.

position of those who take an exaggerated view of their vested interests in monopoly. You will have to unravel sophisms the most subtle, to refute fallectes which Proteus-like, will assume different forms; to uproot prejudices as old as France. But be of good courage; truth will enable the champions of Proc Trade to surmount all difficulties. difficulties. We have encountered monopoly in its most for-midable shape, and overcome it. Frenchmen will never find that to be impossible which Englishmon have already accom-

In conclusion, let me avow the heartfelt gratification that feel, whilst reciprocating the affectionate sentiments expressed by your Society towards the President and prominent members of the League. It is a new and glorious era which witnesses this generous interchange of sympathies between the citizens of two great nations, heretofore the victims of mutual hatred and unreasoning hostility, but destined, I fervently hope, to become henceforth rivals only in those peaceful achievements which minister to the prosperity and true glory of civilised communities. I entreat you to accept from my colleagues and myself the assurance of our high-consideration and esteem, and I have the honour to remain Gentlemen, Sincerely and faithfully yours,

RICHARD COBDEN.

THE RUMOUR OF A RUMOUR.

(From the Times.)
There is a rumour of an immediate dissolution; or, to speak more correctly, there is the report of a rumour to that effect. What is the ground and origin of this report—whether the wish is father to it, or the fear is father to it—whether the protectionists wish Sir Robert to think that he must resign, or Sir Robert wishes the protectionists to think that he will resign—whether an immediate dissolution of Parlia. ment is not a mere blunder for an immediate dissolution of railways, or, after all, the report only expresses that indefinite dissatisfaction with the existing state of things which led Miss Squeers to exclaim, "I wish I was deal-I wish all The report exists, and is put about with diligence. The question is propounded. Something is to be gained, it is thought, by looking upon the event as possible. As the question is forced upon us, we have scarcely an alternative out to reply. It is by no means an edifying theme. When there is nothing else to talk of, the public generally begins to talk of a dissolution, just as some men, whenever they have nothing else to do, immediately begin to think of apoplexy, suicide, and such horrors. In fact, every time within these twenty years that things have come to a standstill, there has been a report of a dissolution. Anybody without an opinion in his head, can venture an estimate of the odds for or against that casualty.

Perhaps it is beside the question to ask who is to gain by a dissolution? The Miss Squeers who suggests the idea has probably given up all thought of gain. It is enough that somebody would lose something; or, if not damaged, will be at least disgraced; or, if not disgraced, yet stigmatised. The vision of a dozen agricultural constituencies, in addition to those which have already changed their numbers, turning out four and twenty "apostates," with an immense deal of pother, with much bluster and invective, and giving us in their stead four-and-twenty raw young men who have yet to apostatise, is enough to console these satisfied dreamers for the absence of any tangible advantage. Sir Robert Peel would "get it." Many speeches would be made and circulated at the control of the contr lated at a penny a piece. Many prophecies would be uttered. lleaps of statistics and financial statements would be collected for the benefit of those who are ignorant of facts and not versed in arithmetic. Tamboff and New Orleans, the Vistula and the Ohio, would again become names of terror. We should have a Saturnalia of apooryphal facts and impossible estimates. In the midst of the clamour there would perhaps be a dozen victories; though, perhaps, on the contrary, there would not be one. But granting the said dozen victories, whose would be the gain, whose the loss, in the day of reckoning? What would the protectionists have gained by a dissolution?

It is due to public peace and quiet not to canvass electioneering probabilities till the occasion setually arises. It is rather an American than an English usage to keep the sleetive contest always on foot. Therefore we will not at tempt to go through the counties, and cities, and boroughs, in anticipation of a new Parliament. We expressed at the time a gentle demur as to the wisdom and taste of Mr. Cob-den's masterly and hitherto unanswered review of the British constituencies. But, we certainly do not see where the protectionists can hope to find the means of turning the scale in another Parliament. Why do they not favour us with the names of the constituencies that are to settle the business? They talk of the 112. A balance of 56 changes in their favour, therefore, will be sufficient, not indeed to decide the question in favour of protection, but to bring the legislature to a stand still. Where will you get your 50? Name, name, name? How many cities and boroughs have been lately converted to the sliding soale? But your trust is in the counties—the English counties. They have already done al-most their worst. They have left no margin for extraordinary efforts. All the county seats will be insufficient for the

With so little to encourage even from the most friendly quarter, what is it that the protectionists hope to gain from the disolution? What at least beyond two or three stray trianshis, sounterested by many more defeats, and the other meral pleasure of agitation, misrepresentation, and abuse, of indulging without stipt in false logic, false facts, false statistics, alse finance, false politics during the hubbule of a general election? They would find these a poor compensation for all hist certain results goldies one or the other oblects. It is trivially poursely settled in the seven years loose of a partition to his minds. The abapter of secileum may do make the second to be exampled that the colors of the second to the second of the s With so little to encourage even from the most friendly now is a dissolution on the Corn Law. A Parliament elected now will be a Free Trade Parliament; and if, for the comfort of the agriculturists, the story of the late Westminster election should be repeated a hundred times over, the result will be only more permanently, more decidedly, and more offen-sively adverse to the feelings and supposed interests of the aristooracy.

THE BEDFORD LEVEL CORPORATION.

(From the Morning Chronicle.)
There is life in protection yet. The Easter recess has not converted all the friends of native industry. Lord Essex has succumbed; but the fens are firm. A meeting of the Bedford Level Corporation was held on Thursday last. The Duke of Bedford was in the chair, and the Earl of Hardwicke was among the speakers. At that meeting the corporate seal was affixed to a petition to both Lords and Commons against the repeal of the Corn Laws, as destructive to the prosperity of the Bedford Level.

The Bedford Level Corporation lias a great faith in high prices, and a most ungrateful disregard for science. The petition attributes "the present prosperous state of the Bedford Level mainly to the encouragement given to agriculture by the restrictive duties imposed on the importation of foreign corn," and declares "that the improvements which have been effected in the drainage of the level and the cultivation of the land would not have taken place if the prices of agricultural produce had not been fairly remunerative.' We could imagine a much more faithful statement of the case than this. What if we were to put the advance of science as the primary cause of the prosperity in question, and substitute for the "restrictive duties" the public spirit and enterprise of the successive Dukes of Bedford, aided by the intelligent account and anterprise of the successive Dukes of Bedford, aided by their intelligent agents, whose present representative is Mr. Tycho, Wing?

It is very natural that the dying utterances of protection should rise from the fens. The inhabitants of this Bœotian region have always been staunch protectionists. They were as sturdy protectors of the fens themselves, while they stagnated over the level, as they are now of the Corn Laws. In 16:10, when Sir Cornelius Vanmayden was defeated in his projects for draining the fens of Cambridgeshire by the protectionists of that day, the arguments urged against the scheme by these supporters of domestic industry were exactly parallel to those maintained in favour of the Corn Laws by the speakers at Ely. Imprimis, the draining, said they, was an experiment. Many had burnt their fingers in these operations, and instead of draining the fens, emptied their own estates. So with Free Trade: it is on experiment also, and therefore to be condemned. The argument that water would find us level was disregarded in the one case; the axiom that demand will regulate supply is pook-pooked in the other. Again, there was in the seventeeth century the same marvellous regard for existing rights. "The fens, it was argued by the sapient defenders of things as they are, "afforded great plenty and variety of fish and fowl, not to speak of sedge, turf, and reed, which would be destroyed by The fen-bred mallard, or mud-fattened pike of the Nene or Ouse, was sweeter to your marsh man than the fat ox of Essex or the sheep of Leicestershire, then, just as the small loaf of Level wheat is sweeter than one twice its size of Dantzie flour. Again, there was great consideration for the thousands of poor people maintained by fishing and fowling in the fens, who would be thrown out of employment by the draining of their homestonds, the swamps and flats of Outwell and Ramsey. There is the same, benevolent regard for the half-fed labourer of the present day, and the same forget. fulness that the evils of scanty food and wretched wages are not aggravated by a change which promises to give more both of one and the other.

"However," says Fuller, ingiving the pres and cone of the drainage and anti-drainage parties, "the generality were possessed with a firm opinion that the project was impossible to be brought to pass."

It is a pity that the science which drained the fans cannot be brought to bear upon the fen men. The steam-engine can draw off the muddy waters of the Welland or the Cam, but is powerless against the stagnant settlings of prejudice but is powerless against the stagmant settlings of prejudice and ignorance. We may substitute oom for sedge, and barley-field for bog, but who shall so manure mind that truth shall spring in the place of bigotry, and the green crops of sativity on the ground beauty by the ruk overgrowth of contented stupidity and unquestionable inclosing. The Earl of Blandwick shadowald he billed in a speech worthy of that document and its frameric. Nothing more daring interaction or more issued in logic, has been its little for the logic has been interested in the logic has been an expectation in the logic has been interested in the logic has been an expectation in the logic has been an expectation in the logic has been an expectation in the logic has been an expectation in the logic has been an expectation in the logic has been an expectation in the logic has been an expectation in the logic h

"The manufacturers said that they existed by means of art and science. Now he (Lord Hardwicke) replied that they could use the same language in the Bedford Level, for there they skieted by the very means of which the manufacturers make a boast. They existed there by art and industry; that great country had been brought into its present state of high cultivation by the art, and science, and industry of man (hear, hear). It was drained by the steam-engine; that great mark of the progress of human knowledge had been seized upon, not only by the manufacturers of cotton, but also by the manufacturers of wheat. Therefore they stood in the same position with the manufacturers of the north in that respect, inasmuch as their prosperity was founded, upon art and science." prosperity was founded upon art and science.

We are glad to find agriculture boasting that it stands on the same ground as manufactures. There used to be a disposition to oppose green fields to smoky towns, and village spires to factory chimneys. The Bedford Level, having now found out its sisterbood to Manshester, should go further, and borrow arguments instead of machines-convictions as well as steam-ongines. If the Bi-dford Level cultivators are like the Lancashire cotton-spinners, why do they not, like them, defy the world and disolaim prote. You?

Lord Hardwicks himself gives us a ver voriginal answer to this natural and pertinent query:

"Let the Corn Laws be once repealed, and hofe, a long the progress of science in other countries, and the sdyan, ages we gave them for the purpose of rendering the British agricultural progress of second in other countries, and the savant, "quist gave them for the purpose of rendering the British agricu." Powerless in raising food, would cause the millewher of M. "dechester to supplicate Parliament for protection for his industry, and skill, and capital (cheers). Facts would soon come forth to show that a great pressure upon the cotton manufacturing in terest—caused probably, in some measure, by our souding out steam-engines to facilitate the manufacture of cotton at the very place where the raw material is grown, but been to the manufacturers a fearful notice of the risk they must run by compating unprotected with the advancing science of other countries. The cheap loaf was a sert of last hope to them. They thought if they could get a cheap loaf even for a time, they might so reduce the wages of labour as to hold up a little longeragainst the competition they had brought upon themselves. There might be, doubtions there were, hereous connected with the Free Trade movement who had ulterfor objects, but the immediate object of the movement was personal gain."

This, it must be confessed, is a new view of the subject. The fear that foreigners will manufacture is an argument against supplying them with manufactures of our making. Russia is madly bent on shirt-making-Manchester is paving the way to her own ruln by supplying her with shirts ready made. Europe has corn, but is deficient in broadcloth-England has broad-cloth, and is deficient in corn. Suicidal England, says Lord Hardwicke, which would exchange the fabric of her looms for the grain of her foreign Lord Hardwicke contrasts the disinterested motives of the protectionist peers with the selfishness of the Free Traders. Repeal of the Corn Laws is to have a tremendous effect upon prices. Wheat is to come down by the run, but somehow the great landholders are not to be affected. We have often maintained the latter half of this argument, but we do not remember having coupled it with the former. If the disinterestedness of the protectionist lords is to be supported by this pair of stools, something must come to the ground which it is not decorous to particularise. Lord Hardwicke's remarkable statement is worth preserving :

"He was of opinion that the House of Lords and the highest ranks of society were, of all others, the least interested in this question of Free Trade. Could it be believed that if his noble friend on his left, the Duke of Bedford, were to find his proprient on his left, the Duke of Bedford, were to find his property reduced one-fourth, or more, in value, it would make any very material difference in his comforts as a great and a proud British nobleman -proud from his descent, but noble from his virtues? But look at the condition of the artisan; if he suffer a diminution in his carnings, what a fearful effect is produced upon his comforts and those of his family! It was on this ground that he (Lord Hardwicke)/was prepared to support, in his place in the House of Lords, the present system of protection to the industry of land."

We beg to draw up a case in proportion. As the Duke of Bedford's rental from land is to his whole income, so is the price of his bread to the artisan to his whole expenditure. The repeal of the Corn Laws will diminish the value of land, says Lord Hardwicke, therefore it will diminish the Duke of Bedford's rental. But it will lower the price of bread. We cannot see how Lord Hardwicke makes out that it will, therefore, lessen the comforts of the artisan. However, Lord Hardwicke, like Orlando in "As you Like it," is not asked to please us—he is asked to speak. Ills auditory was not a very critical one. It was of the fens, femish—and the speech was worthy of the hearers. Protection, like the early Britons, has been driven from the haunts of civilisation to swamps and inaccessible morasses, and we can-not hall in Lord Hardwicke the Prince Arthur who is to lead it forth for daring deeds against the sturdy Saxons of the League, or the traiterous band who have forfeited their mationality for the good of the country, and slinken hands with those potent invaders, common sense and sound argument.

THE MANNERS MIXTURE, OR INFALLIBLE SOCIAL SPECIFIC.

(From the Examiner.)
It is a good thing for lords to mix with labourers. It is a good thing to play at orioket and quoits. There is merit in the promotion of sports and pastimes, but nevertheless Lord John Manners is mistaken in supposing himself the regenerator of the nation.

Things might be better than they are if there were more Lord John Mannorses in the world, more cricket and more qubits, but nevertheless things as they are, are not so had as Lord John Manners describes thom. It is, however, the good for-tune of Lord John Manners to be his own specific. He bewalls the alienation of classes; he finds that admixture is what is wanted; and so he mixes Lord John Manners for the improvement of the social elements. At Birmingham, at Manolicator, at Liverpool, the remedy, according to the words of the Apothecaries' label, is, the mixtures as before.

How great must be the happiness to a benevolent man of finding, in his own person; the remedy for a nation's evils, and that for the great work of scotal amalioration he has only to give the people a little more of himself. So when Lord John Manners surveys the wants and wose of the country, he has the comfort of knowing that he has an little mine to supply what is deficient, and to amend what is amise. He confers improvement with his company. He mixes with the people, and they are better, and he is the hater too, as he condescendingly explains; so that the Manners mixture is always improving and the Lord John who respective Birming them by mixing the Lord John who respective Birming them by mixing the times the Lord John who respective by mixing three years and was the more by mixing three years and was the more lightly processed by mixing three years and was the more lightly by the constant of the processor by discussed his mixing very contains. finding, in his own person, the remedy for a nation's evils, ting medium possesses, of imparting its value wherever it goes, and enhancing it at the same time. The nountry then requires him to circulate himself actively. England expects Lerd John Marsons to do his duty. He tallst not apare limself; he must dine diligantly, but and bowl assiduously, and mix coptously. As the demand, "more Manners, the mixture, the mixture," rises, he must bestir himself to confer himself. His spirit of self devotion is happily great. He is the very Curtius of Bonquets, always ready to leap into the guif of the chair; and the vest sacrifice he is ready to make, to give the people the inestimable good of his precence amongst them, may be learnt from this declaration at the Birmingham Athenio Institution. His lordship began with a morel:

"I have learnt one practical lesson, which has taught me that it is not well to talk to one's neighbour at dinner."

We were idle enough to think that Lord John's neighbour had resented the interruption of his feeding; and our sympathies, we confess, we're with his neighbour, whom we get down to be in the right for preferring his meat to his lordwhich moralising, but we wore all at fault, for see what the lesson really was:

Whe I intimated to my friend on my right that but for heims are I should have been at the meet of my father's hounds, and no idea that he would have introduced it as a compliment; asserver, I meuro you that had your arriversary have been on the first day of the hunting-season, instead of the last, it would not have prevented my being present."

Prodigions! Utque magis stupeas ludum Paridemque reliquit. For the great object of mixing with the people he would even desert the hounds! This indeed is patriotism. How great is the bounty of this nobleman! How he gives his presence to his countrymen, knowing that it is the one thing needed, and that wherever he bestows himself he effects regeneration, leaves men wiser, happier, and better. They have only to see the lord along them, and to improve. Considering what his sense of his own patrician attributes is, he way well have written these lines:

44 Let laws and learning, arts and commerce, die, But leave us still our old nobility."

Which, by the way, intimutes very truly, no doubt, that the extinction of learning would be quite compatible with the survivorship of the old nobility, who could continue to exist as well as ever without laws, learning, and arts.

Lord John Manners boasts proudly of the progress he has anade in national regeneration, and the announcement reads liko a pasango in a Royal speech :

"In the sural districts a great advance has been made; the Man pole is again erected in Kint, and cricket and other manly games are festered and encouraged."

We are very glad to hear it, especially of the May-pole in Kent, though we are not without misgivings that the hop pole may have been mistaken for it; and we cannot but regret that Lord John Manners was not a little more particulin as to the whereabouts of the May-pole, as many worthy persons might be disposed to make a pilgrimage to the sign of social regeneration. We rejoice, too, at the news of cricket; but much as we prize these restorations, we do not think it necessary to their welcome and appreciation to represent the whole country as having been a cave of Trophonius before the advent of Lord John Manners, and his juxtaposition with the industrious classes.

What in the world is such language as this about ?-

"Away, gentlemen, I say, with the cant that would have us believe all old feelings are dead—all English sympathics extinguished—all national affections chilled. There is not a sequestored nook in the lakes of Cumberland; in the mines of Cornwall; in the dim/close, hot alleys of Manchester or Stockport in the smoky streets of your own Birm upham, in which the gallant, trustful, manly English spirit is dead. Be it ours, then,—to call it forth; to exercise it, and through it to carry this light little island of ours through all straits, through, all dangers; and this, gentlemen, rely upon it, we can if we will." this, gentlemen, rely upon it, we can if we will.

It is quite unnecessary to cry, Away with the cant that English sympathies are extinguished, national affections chilled, the spirit dead, &c.; no one asserts any nonsense of the kind, and the cant, if cant there be, is Lord John Manners cant of conjuring up a cant that he may have the glory of laying it by exorcisement.

of laying it by exercisement.

Be it ours, says the modest nobleman, to call forth the English spirit. Bah! Pap for the million! Curds and whey for the English spirit. He sets up a May-pole, and conceits it calling forth the English spirit, and glorifies himself as a regenerator. Let him restore the fool's cap to its pristing uses, and that motley costume so symbolic of the Manners mixture, and we shall see his services requited in their suproprints honours. their appropriate honours.

THE THREE YEARS' EXPERIENCE. (From the Topic.) All the elements of proof lie in a small compass. It is y successive to compare the three years before. and that three years subsequent to the introduction of the new system by Sir Robert Peel. From 1830 to 1841 our foreign exports fell off from fifty-three millions in value to forty-seven millions. But in the next three years pending a reduction of duties, the value of the experts rose from forty-seven millions to fifty-eight millions. Nor was the reduction in the customs' duties unpromising to the revenue. The total amount of the various reductions effected in the three years exceeded four millions sterling; and, as many of the duties had been totally repealed, the loss could not be compensated by increased consumption. But these four millions were not lost to the revenue. On the contrary, the revenue had increased, and the returns of the present oth of April prove that it is as buoyant as ever. Neither had these relaxations been inimical to those branches of native industry, believed to be most dependent on protection. Flax afforded a striking instance. It has been freely tion. Flux afforded a striking instance. It has been freely imported, yet, in face of a rapidly increasing foreign importation, the price has been higher. Wool inculcated the same lesson; the import duty was abolished; importation, increased; but prices in the home market was the present by the competition. Foreign cattle was to has examine. The most alarming predictions were industry that the probabilition on the importation of foreign of the probabilition on the importation of foreign of the probabilition on the importation of the probability. Have the graziers been probable to the supply of provisions have been outly for the supply of provisions have been outly. Further, experience has shown that substated between high prices and high prices and high prices and high prices and high prices and high prices and services, wages were depressed; but in the second term of three years, broad was obser, and labour being in demand, wages rosa. But the most gratifying test was of a moral import. Uliminal statistics showed a connection between the increase and decrease of crims, and a declining or prosperous state of the country. In 1840 there had been a decrease of srims to the extent of five and a half per cent. I in 1844, of not less than ten per cent.; in 1845, of live and a half per cent. cent.; and the decrease of last year was especially marked in the most prosperous districts,—those of manufacturing. Thus, while the legislature had been occupied in reducing customs duties, in other words, gradually destroying protection to native industry, the interests of the labouring classes of commerce, and of morality, had been promoted.

In this way were the former prepossessions of the Premier overwhelmed by the evidence of his own executive measures, and he was constrained to advance, if possible, at an accelerated rate, in a course productive of so many public felicities. His first steps had been marked by timidity, if not aversion, to his task; but practice seems to have reconciled, and success emboldened him. Accordingly, the new tariff is more explicit in its principles and more comprehensive in its relaxations than its predecessors. His first aim has obviously been to pre-pare a scheme as closely consistent with his adopted principle of Free Trade, and as extensively satisfactorily as possible; and next—not to attempt too much at once—load himself with a heavier charge than he will be able to carry. Anything short of the ultimate repeal of the Corn Laws would be seen as the control of the corn Laws. would have been scouted, as he himself admits, by the commercial and manufacturing interests, and left a reserved bid of great temptation with he opponents; while immediate reped might have met a lion in the way in the Upper

A second leading principle bears emphatically on the general consumption of the masses. The Corn and Provision Laws had fallen with crushing weight on those who live by labour. The expenditure of the working man is not in luxuries, but in the necessaries of life, in bread, meat, and vegetables, of which the poor consume equally with the rich; but the income of the two classes being unequally apportioned, it is clearly unjust to subject them to the same ratio of pecuniary contribution. Such, however, was the ten-doney of the old system; which absorbed; either through the indirect operation of protective duties, or direct fiscal imposts, a large portion of the wages of labour. In consequence, the industrious orders have not participated equally with the rest of the community in the general progress of the country; and it is to remedy this disparity of condition, as well as mitigate a gross injustice, that the policy of Sir R. Peel is directed. The resources placed at his disposal by the property-tax afforded one means of translation with this evigency of our excitations and the second of the property-tax afforded one means grappling with this exigency of our social state, and the projected alterations of the tariff manifestly embrace the same equitable purpose. All articles that enter into the common sustenance of the nation will be placed more within the reach of the consumer. The bread-tax is at once reduced from a protective duty of 20s. to 5s., and will expire entirely in three years. But corn from Canada, or other colonial possessions out of Europe, will be immediately admitted duty free. On all other articles, apart from grain, that constitute human food, either vegetable or animal, there will be a repeal of the import duties, including cattle of all kinds, sheep and pigs; potatoes and vegetables of every sort; bacon, fresh beef, or slightly salted; pork fresh or salted (not hams). On other articles, considered, we presume, as a species of bucolic manufactures, duties have been retained, but reduced to about one-half; namely, on ale and beer, from 42s, per barrel to 20s.; on butter, from 21s. to 10s. per cwt.; on cheese, from Ils. to 5s. per cwt.; on hops, from 94s. to 45s. per cwt.; on oured fish, from 2s. to 1s. per owt. The duties on rice have been reduced; also those on foreign soup, and on candles the reduction is one half of the import duty. The preference duty one olonial coffee was relaxed in 1842; and in this session, sugar, another item in general use, will be dealt with. No concession, however, will be made in favour of slave-grown sugar, but on the sugar of Cuba and Brazil there will be an abatement of 3s. 0d. per cwt. in the differential duty,

From the alterations essentially affecting the labouring classes we proceed to those affecting their employers, and which may be said to constitute the Premter's third principle of fiscal revision. His aim has obviously been equality of sacrifices. It was not with the landed interest that the protective system originated, but the commercial and manufacturing classes, who till recently, as we have already shown, very tenaciously adhered to the mercantile policy. From the latter, therefore, fully with the former, it was fuir to call for concessions. In favour of the manufacturing interest, for concessions. In favour of the manufacturing interest, every duty on the raw materials of manufacture had been previously abandoned, with the exception of tallow and timber, on both of which relaxations are proposed. These form their compensation for relinquishing the protective duties on the coarser articles of manufacture, in wool, linen, and cotton, and for the reduction of wool, men, and cotton, and for the reduction of protection on the finer description of goods, from twenty to ten per cent. At present, the duty on silks, as before stated, is called thirty per cent., but is often still higher. It is proposed to adopt a new principle in the laying of the silk duties, and to impose 15 per cent. advalorem, instead of 30 per cent. Finally, relaxations are intended on the import duties on manufactured metals, dressed hides, boots, shoes, straw plat, carriages, and paperhaugings. But for every loss the Premier has dexterously made some kind of return to the sufferers, either by affording them greater protection from illicit comgetition, as in the silk manufacture, or by giving them freer access to raw materials The agriculturists are embraced in this principle of equivalents. They may suffer by the free admission of provisions and live cattle, but then, in the fattening of stock, they will save largely in their present outgoings for linesed cake and rape-cake, by the substitution of maise, on which the duty is repealed, as also on buckwheat; further, the reduction of the duties on seeds; especially clovers to about one half, will be favourable to them. Other compensations are intended in place of former invidious monopolies by the removal of special burdens, by an amendment of the law of pauper settlement, and the consolidation of the 16,000 parish authorities of England into 800 district boards, all the state taxes, we should not be accused, by any thought.

MISCELLANEOUS

ful calculator, of attabling an exapterated importants to the mischiefs we the now enduring.—Lightpool discrease.

Hearth of Towns.—In one of the Government reports on the sanitary condition of the country, it is stated but there are more lives annitally lost in England, from removable causes, then were sabrificed at the battle of Waterloo! Nor is there any reason to question the accuracy of the strength of the country of the strength of the country of the strength of the country of the strength of the country of the strength of the country of the strength of the country of the strength of the country of the country of the strength of the strength of the country of the country of the strength of the country of the co that frightful calamity. These can scarcely be exage.
rated. It is fearful to think of hecatomis of human beings offered up to the gory god; of limbs lopped by shining steel, and hodies torn by shattering shot; and of the shining steel, and bodies torn by snattering shot; and of the long train of after evils—the sad heart and sore struggles of the widow, and the untold hardships of the orphan. Such scenes and sufferings appeal alike to the feelings and to the imagination. They are striking and dramatic. Poetry enshrings them in deathless verse—Oratory problaims them to the world in well-turned periods—and history records. them on her enduring page.
But there are other Waterloos—annual Waterloos—whore death strikes down his thousands as surely as in the battle field; where men meet a far more painful end than that of the gallant soldier slain in a good cause: than that or the gallant soldier slain in a good cause, and where the victims, if not "unwept," are, at all event, "unhonourd and unsuing." Fever takes his stand in the undrained street, the nervow alley, and the crowded court, and alays his thousands and tens of thousands. But Pourly sings not of the strong mechanic stretched on his bed by typhus; oratory dwells not on the nameless aliments of the sick wife struggling with daily cars in a noxious atmosphere; and history takes no account of such a noxious atmosphere; and history takes no account of such insignificant units as little children poisoned by miasma from foul sewers and other receptacles of guringe. Yet there is nothing more certain than that "such things are." It has been demonstrated, over and over again, that there are ditrices in our large towns where fever is ever present. I.m. nent physicians have traced the course of undrained distinct by the presence of fatal epidemics; and a higher rate of mora-lity; and a lower state of existence, are the acknowledged consquences of want of water, bad air, and insufficient sewerage.

Let us, then, not lose sight of this "great faci," that "more people die annually in England, from removable cause, than were killed at Waterloo." Intemperance has its victims amongst all classes; but the "removable" causes here alluded to, are those from which the working and poor classes principally, though by no means exclusively, suffer. These are, scarcity and ill-quantity of water, bad air, and deficient drainage and sewerage—the bad air, and deficient drainage and sewerage being generally consequent on the scarcity of water.—Bristol Mercury.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION UNDER THE SEA.—The

British Government, by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and the French Government, by the Minister of the Interior, have granted permission to two gentlemen, the projectors of the sub-marine telegraph, to lay it down from coast to coast. The site selected is from Cape Uninez, or from Cape Blancnez, on the French side, to the South Foreland on the Finglish coast. The sounding between these headlands are gradual, varying from seven fathous on the shore on either side, to a maximum of 37 fathous in midchannel. The Lords of the Admiralty have also granted permission to the same gentlemen to lay down a sub marine telegraph between Dublin and Holyhead, which is to be carried on from the latter place to Liverpool and London. The sub-marine telegraph across the English Channel will however, be the one first laid down. The materials for this are already undergoing the process of insulation, and are in that state of forwardness which will enable the projectors to have them completed and placed in position, so that a telegraphic communication can be transmitted across the Channel about the first week in June. When this is completed, an electric telegraph will be established from the coast to Paris, and thonce to Marseilles. This telegraph throughout France will be immediately under the direction of the French government, as, according to the law of 1837, all telegraphic communications through that pountry are under the absolute control and superintendence of the Minister of the Interior. Upon the completion of the submarine telegraph across the Euglab Channel, it is stated that a similar one, on a most giganic scale, will be attempted to be formed, under the immediate sanction and patronage of the French administration. This is no less than that of connecting the shores of Africa with those of Europe by the same instrumentality; thus opening a direct and lightning-like communication le tween Marseilles and Algeria. It has been doubted by several scientific men whether this is practicable, and, indeed, whether even the project between the coasts of France and periments the most satisfactory in their results, that not only can it be effected, but effected without any considerable diffloulty -Globs.

A FUNERAL-GOING DOG.—A correspondent of the Edin-burgh Courant tells the following dog story:—I knew a dog a few years ago, belonging to Mr. Henderson, late post-master, Fort William, which attended every funeral that took place in the trill the posttook place in that village and neighbourhood. There was nothing remarkable in his appearance. He was a rough, thick-set, atout little animal, a cross between a cocker and a terrier. His master taught him nothing nor seemed to take much notice of him. Gilliemor was his name; and a sulky, early little fellow he was, as all the little urbins that used to play about the next and a sulky in the second to play about the next and a sulky seemed to play about the next and a sulky seemed to play about the next and a sulky seemed to play about the next and a sulky seemed to play about the next and a sulky seemed to play about the next and a sulky seemed to play about the next and a sulky seemed to play about the next and a sulky seemed to play about the next and a sulky seemed to play about the next and a sulky seemed to play about the next and a sulky seemed to play a sulky seemed to pla that used to play about the post-office could testly; for he had a mortal enmity to their noise, as he had also to began, at whom he would bark and enap furiously. He did not seen to he newforded at the care to be particularly attached to any person; nor did be care much about being coressed, neither did he associate with much about being coressed, neither did he associate with other dogs. The only remerkable feature in his character was his predilection for attending funerals with the period of the control of the contr

auy

ampl " l

tion

food f

break which Kilch and c spot ; Hugu

A raw a narr and M flour

Were Laffa: The

tion of

was for the second

DISTRESS IN IRELAND.

In our last Number we gave accounts of the state of distress in Ballylongford, Bray, Ennis, Headford, Cork, see, up to the 14th inst., when riots of a very serious nature broke out in Clonmel, and the military were called out. The following details will show that the calamity is increasing, and that provision riots of a very serious nature are becoming of ordinary occurrence :

CARRICK-ON-SUIR, APRIL 10 .- Letters from the town announce the breaking out of riots similar to those which have already taken place in Clonmel and Tipperary; and which, it is to be feared, are but the forerunners of many scenes of turbulonce consequent upon the scarcity, or panio-it signifies but little which—together with the want of permanent employment for the labouring classes. The riots occurred here on the day after those at Clonmel, which is another town in Tipperary, higher up the Suir. It was evidently a premeditated outbreak. The bells both of the Carrick and the Carrickbeg chapel tolled, and the mob increased to a fearful gathering of all the country round about. With this reinforcement they paraded the principal streets, and having fixed on Mr. O'Donnell's stores, rushed with one according it, and in a second completely emptied it. Flushed with this success, they attacked Mr. O'Neill's, and succeeded in like manner in emptying his store. They then went to Mr. Rourke's, but he had prudently sent his stock away. At last the military appeared, which checked their progress in a de gree; and the stipendiary magistrate, Mr. Redmond, having read the Riot Act twice, and assuring the mob if they persevered in their outrageous course he would be commelled to order the military to fire, had, in a degree restored quiet. Of this you may be entisfied, that neither famine nor fever bud anything to say to this insurrection. It was a deliberate attempt to begin a general plunder; and whether the attack will be renewed again to-morrow, time only will tell. There is not a sufficient military force here, and the police are totally unable to repress such an audacious outbreak as the CORK .- The reports from Cork are of the usual unfavour able nature. The Southern Reporter says :- "We have at this moment at least 30,000 people destitute in Cork, and of this number our workhouse cannot safely accommodate 3000. The labouring class has no employment, and their daily food has more than doubled in price, as will be seen by the following returns from the mayor's office:

Return of Londs of Potatoes brought to Cork Markets for six days, ending April 12, 1841, 1842, 1843, 1844, 1845, and 1846, with price per weight of 21 lbs.

1	Londs.	Whites,	4.4 11111111111111111111111111111111111
1841—April 12tl	l. 070	d. d.
1041—April 120	U	· 93 10 93	54 to 6
1743- do.	622	. 41≸ to ∂	6 10 7
1843 do.	926	. 25 to 34	4 to 44
1811 do.	864	. 31 to 5	6 to 7
1845— do,	022	. 31 to 41	5 to 6
1846— do.	467	. 7\frac{1}{3} to 10"	10 to 12

According to the Constitution, symptoms of insubordination had, it seems, manifested themselves in that town on Tuesday :

"A number of people assembled, and went, it is said, to, among others, Mr. Collins, parish priest, and demanded food. He reasoned with them, as did some of the gentry, endeavouring to dissuade them from violence, and told them that what could be done towards procuring them food should be done as soon as possible. He succeeded in inducing them to disperse; but they did so with a threat that, unless something was done soon, they would return and help themselves from his potato pits. We give this matter as we have heard it; but we are not able to vouch for it, though we should not mention it had we not reason to believe it true.

The demands for Indian meal are daily growing stronger; but complaints of its dearness are still prevalent, as example:

"In consequence of the supply of Indian meal which the relief committee procured from Liverpool being rather of an inferior quality, for which, however, they were not to blame, they deemed it advisable to make a pressing application to the commissary for a loan of a portion of that which the Government have in store. Mr. Hewetson having kindly complied with their request, 20 tons of the best description of white Indian meal was yesterday sont to the depots established by the committee, and thus any prejudice which might be created against this wholesome article of food by reason of the bad quality of that purchased in Liverpool, will be affected by the committee of the particular affects of the particular be effectually removed. The whole meal, which is also being sold at the rate of 1½d, per lb., is considered by the people much too dear, and they profer purchasing coarso flour at 10d, per weight of 7 lbs., than taking the whole meal at 10½d. We are assured that the whole meal is by far more multiple to the computation thought it advisable to make nutritious; and if the committee thought it advisable to make some reduction in the price, it would be a better class of food for the poor people. The demand for Indian meal is very great; and of course the fund in the hands of the committee must be proportionably diminished."

Tipperany County.—More Provision Riots on April 10.—The Tipperary Free Press announces the APRIL 16.—The Tipperary Free Press announces the breaking out on Thursday evening, the 16th, of further note at a place called Kilsheelan and Fethard. The accounts, which are very brief, say :

"The boats coming up from Waterford were attacked at Kilshaelan on this day by a numerous band of men, women, and children, and the miscellaneous goods with which they were laden carried off in all directions. Informations being were laden carried off in all directions. Informations being received, the military and police were immediately on the spot; a considerable quantity of wheat belonging to Mesers. It liughes was recovered, and 18 persons made prisoners. It was almost barefaced robbory, as the articles taken were in a raw state. The stipendiary magistrate, Major Shaw, had a narrow escape; his horse having taken fright, jumped into the river with him, and swam a considerable distance."

"Fermann Thursday—There was a rising here to-day, and Mr. Harvey's store attacked, from which three sacks of four were taken; the mob attacked Mrs. Wilson's store, but were repulsed. They were flually dispersed through the Praiseworthy exertions of the parish priest, the Archdeacon repulsed.

The Drogleda Conservative severely consures that portion of the press which denies the existence of more than ordinary distress in the country, and asks:

"How can any man with Us., or even 7s., per week—and there are hundreds of labouring men working for 8d. per set a similarity of food! Possibles in this town are the pressure of the country set as a finite way are for something of a possible of the pressure of the country by the country of food in the country—more corn in store! It is of this we complain—that in the midst of plenty, so much distress should exist in this unfortunate country. The staple food of the Irish (potatoes) has failed, and the low rate of wages paid the labouring classes procludes them from obtaining a sufficiency of bread or other food. Let us take a case in point — A labourer same fla par week—he has a family of point:-A labourer earns 0s. per week-he has a funily of five to support out of this (we speak of towns like Droghada). His expenditure may be reckoned as follows

Rent, per wook Yuel One stone of oaimeal One stone mealin meal and baking Milk, &c.		#. 0 1 2 1 0	d. 9 9 9 7 6
•	. •	(1	0

"Thus, the whole of his miserable pittance is expended on procuring a scanty supply of food; as for potatoes, they are out of his reach. Now, will any man in his senses dare maintain, that the poor labouring class can live on such scanty diet? Why, the paupers in the workhouse are far better fed. As to the lodgment of the poor, we are informed, by an agent who collects the rents of 70 cabins weekly, that in almost every instance the inmates are destitute of bedsteads, blankets, sheets, and coverlets; and that he has seen several grown-up girls, who toil from early dawn to eight in the evening in the factories, lying on straw, with no other covering over them save the clothes which they were during the day. At market on this day potators were 8d. per stone. Oatmeal, Indian corn, &c., are on the advance; the prospect before the poor is getting more gloomy; three long months must intervene before the new potato-crop can come into market; and in the name of an all wise Providence, are the poor to be allowed to suffer all the accumulating horrors of

In the mean time large supplies of Indian corn and meal continue to arrive at the Irish ports. The Cork papers announce the arrival in that port on Friday of the American packet-ship Camelia, register 1090 tons, with a cargo (about 25,000 bushels) of Indian corn, and 10,000 barrels of meal. Money alone is all that seems to be required to render perfect the precautionary measures of Government to counteract the evils of scurcity.

EMIGRATION.—The Waterford Chronicle of yesterday gives returns of the number of passengers in the vessels which have left that port for America; by which it appears that 2162 persons have already emigrated, and that several emigrant ships have not yet sailed. In addition to this, three large vessels have sailed from Ross, containing, it is supposed, between the three, some 800 persons. The Onronicle thus comments upon these facts:

There will have gone after the season is over upwards of 3000 individuals from this country by this port alone. Not to talk of the rearing of these people—the trouble and expense of bringing up a healthy man, woman, or child, and specially leaving out the freparable loss to society in this country of their affections, hopes, and family ties—all now sundered and destroyed—not to talk of the countless living deaths of wholesale emigration from a feeling and warm hearted mother country—the amount of capital taken by these 3000 is immense. Assuming that each individual expends 10% in his passage, and before he settles; and that he has 10% more to establish himself, here is direct taking away of hard cash to the amount of 60,000l., gone out of one of the bleeding pores of Ireland to increase the misery which We are in possession of facts which show that many cunning landlords are sending the people away yearly, but by degrees, and not in such a manner as to sub ject themselves to a 'clearance' notice. If this system be continued, we shall be tempted to give names. After these things, who will blame the people for outbreaks occasioned by famine? There is nothing plentiful in the land but ruin! Employment is scarce—money is scarce—the people are being thinned—farms are being consolidated—bullock land is progressing:

" Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,

Where cows accumulate and men decay. "Since the foregoing was in type, we have learned that lon pigs, on their way from the fair of Fethard to Carrickon Suir, were seized at Thornney bridge by the country people, and carried off towards the foot of Slievnaman moun tain. We have also been informed that a vast number of persons are still watching for the hoats laden with provisions, in the neighbourhood of Kilsheelan, where the attack was

A letter from Carrick-on-Suir, of Friday's dato, says: Yesterday there was a meeting of magistrates, gentlemen, and merchants held in the Temperance-hall of this place, when the demands of the people of getting 1s. a day wages were yielded; and this morning 200 men were set to work on the roads, under the direction of Capt. Peebles, who has been indefatigable in his exertions to forward the intentions of the Government and to direct the labour in some useful channel; and accordingly he has selected the reads in the vicinity of the town, which are in a wrotched state. Triffing as the increase of wages is, still I look on this concession as laying the foundation for other demands, which you may rely on it will give rise to other outbreaks, which it will not be in the power of the small military force stationed here to repress."

The intelligence from the west to day is of a very unfavourable character. In the district of Annaghdown, in the county of Galway, distress is represented to prevail to a most alarming extent. One account says:

"The people of the place have openly declared that if employment be not immediately given, they can no longer withstand the distress they are labouring under."

A meeting of the gentry has been held, and a petition for relief forwarded to the Irish Government. One of the resolutions adopted on the occasion thus describes the prospects of the poor as affected by the potato blight :-

"Our parish was remarkable for its great and abundant crop of potatoes. It was the storehouse of the summer supply to our neighbouring towns, and we may say, county, list, unhappily, in our flohest shill and best tilled-props the rot prevailed to the most away extent, which leaves the parrot prevailed to the most awful extent, which leaves the parper, who in other years would get provisions on arealis, now dependent on a benign Government, and a very limited benefaction of the neighbours."

Brark of Tipperant—Tim Ranths.— (From the special Reports—of the Francis) at Cahir, Tursday April 21c—I am firstly persuaded, that were it not for the prelianworthy exercions of the Roman Cathelle plergy of the and other districts, it would be a difficult task to restrain a pertion of the Sooils, at leaks, from a lining till violance.
I in object the course of the sooils, at leaks to restrain a pertion of the Sooils, at leaks, from a lining till violance.
I in object the course of the sooils, the sooils are the course of the sooils.

with enduring success. At the same time, if the Government do not step in and essist the local committee. I cannot say how the business will terminate. The reli at present afforded is all owing to the local committees; and much apprehension is entertained for the coming summer; and I now repeat, what I have already stated, that not only within twenty miles round Clonmel there will not be a single potato on the 10th of May, but there will not be one in the entire county of Tipperary by the end of that month, or, parinps, before it. This I give you on the most satisfactory authority, coupled with the evidence apparent to my ofen eyes.

The stop-keepers of the town have contributed very hand: somely. On Sunday Mr. Bianconi, the respected mayor of Clon-mel, proceeded to his newly-purchased property at Longfield, herout Carlied and Carlied Carlied. beyond Cashel, and made arrangements to give such of line tenantry as wanted it work at fair remuneration, and he sist. gave orders to have a sufficiency of provisions supplied to those not able to work and not having the means of procuring food. Mr. Power, of Gurteen, subscribed 2001. on Sunday, and employed over one hundred men at one shilling per day, and told the people he would do all in his power for thein I regret I cannot say as much for the generality of land-owners in the county. There appears to be a kind of drowsy sputhy on the part of the landed gentry as regards the wants of the people; but amongst this class I cannot include Capt. Bernal Osborne, whose conduct on the late oc-casion and since has endeared him to all the county. At a place called Barnes, about three miles from Clonmel, I mes 64 large drays containing 100 tons of flour, escorted by Mr. Swan, stipendiary magistrate, and two officers with a heavy body of the 13th Light Dragoons. The flour belonged to Mr. Sergeant and Mr. Grab, of Clonmel. Both these gen tlemen possess large mills here (Cabir); and as they feared an attack on the drays, the dragoons were called out to escort them to Cloumel, where the provision is to be shipsed for Waterford, and thence to England! There was no attempt made on the drays.

The little village of Barnes contains a great many cottages. Several persons were picking potatoes behind their houses. I went into about 20 languards (farm yards), where the people where engaged at this work, and I protest I never beheld anything so uttorly deplorable. One sound potato there was not in every ten. The people were absolutely orying over-them; and the invariable answer to my question of "What will you do?" was, "God is good; and we have hope still." The houses I mention were rather of the better sort, the occupiers possessing from two to five acres of The remaining portion of the houses—about 30 in number-had not a single potate at all, The people I observed picking the potatoes, told mo they were endoavouring to pick out a few for seed; but, as in other places, they said that any already sown in the neighbourhood had failed, and the only hope they had for next year was oats, if they could procure the means of purchasing the seed. There never was, they said, a year, for the last fifteen, that they and such a prospect of pointoes as they had had souson:

but now all were gone.

The village of New Lnn is on the road leading to Cashel; and in this extensive parish, with about 1500 inhabitants, you would with difficulty find as many sound potatoes as there are persons. These assertions may startle, but they are true, and beyond the power of human contradiction. There is another small village at a place called the Pass of Longh Loughler, a beautiful glon through which the direct road passes, and sweeps away round the mountain. Not a solitary potato with any person here. For two miles at either side of the road from this place to Cahir, there is not with the inhabitants even the trace of a potato. I was prepared, from all I had heard, to meet with great misery and dis-tress; but I confess the actual reality for outstepped my worst anticipations; and at every step the horrors of in-creasing scarcity in the prime article of food were terribly manifested. Between Clonmel and Cahir I visited every liamlet worth calling at, and also very many isolated dwelfings, and I found the same prevailing distress everywhere:

On arriving in Cahir I at once put myself in communication with gontlemen who, from their position and knowledge of the country, and the state of the people, were best calculated to afford me accurate information.

The town and surrounding districts belong to Lord Glengall, who resides here. After the attack on the flour drays, a meeting of the inhabitants and gentry was held, and subscriptions entered into in order to give employment to the people. Lord Glengall, the proprietor of all the soil, gave 50°, whilst the Rev. Mr. Tobyn, P. P., contributed, out of his own scanty purse, Twenty Guineas. Government has done nothing here yet, but I understand that a person has arrived from the easile to make inquiry as to the state of the people. In order to afford some temporary relief to the people, about 100 persons were put to work, making sewers, breaking stones, and repairing the streets and adjoining roads. The wages allowed are from 10d. to 1s. a day, but this is considered totally inadequate to support persons having more than one in a family—and the majority of them have five each—in consequence of the high price of provisions. I saw a number of the men at work; most of them had a pale, yellow, sickly-looking hue; and I assert, on the best authority, that the majority of these poor people subsist on one meal a day, and that previous to their being employed, they had not a meal of victuals once in forty eight hours! As I before stated, the people in this locality are very quiet; but when the temporary relief is exhausted, there is no calculating what may occur. There are a few potatoes in the neighbouring, farmers' places, but three out of every five are black (diseased), and these roots were selling here to day—bad and good, without being picked or engaged—at 8s. 6d. per barrel. The Rev. Mr. Tobyn, P. P. gave me a fearful ploture of the state of his large and populous parish. Seven eighths of the people have not a potato, and the remainder—even the more that farmers—won't possess one on the 10th of May. whality farmers—won't possess one on the 10th of May. The landlords, as a body, are doing nothing—this opinion is not of my forming—either by giving or endeavouring to procure employment for the people. Employment is all that is looked for. There are over 17,900 sores of incollivated land in Tipperary, and most of this is limited employment and the people be engaged in some probable manner, on this land? The country also about it, it is in dether mines, and there are very rich veins of collisioning discrete that could be worked with great advantage. I have also intentioned that Mr. Bargeant, the discrete formulation of the parish 10th cache. Every nine is Consultated that Mr. Bargeant, the discrete formulation of the parish 10th cache. Every nine is Consultated that the parish 10th cache.

Wilkinson and Co., flax-spinners, Hun-

*Holdsworth, W. B. and Co., do

*Ransfield and Wise

*Bower, Joshus, Hunslet, near
A Friend, per Charles Hindle, 4, Wellington-street

*Webster, A. 4. Wellington-street

20 0 10 0

MR. on	COBDEN'S SPECIAL in the Hor Friday, Pebruary 27th, 1846.—Revised. P	use of Commons rice One Penny, 16
MR.	BRIGHT'S SPEECH in the law, on Tuesday Night, Feb. 17. Price One 1	House of Com-
Ideantra and 8, Old	Monday night, Fob. 18. Price One Penny, Office. 77, Fisetatreet, London; J. Gadeby, Milligate, Manalegier. Where mey be had, THE GOATACHE MEETING. Just published, price One Penny, or 5e, p RBATIM REPORT OF THE J BLOULTURAL LABOURERS AT GOATA	Newsli's buildings,
A VE	Just published, price One Penny, or 5s. p RBATIM REPORT OF THE BIOULTURAL LABOURERS AT GOATA	er 100, MEETING OF CRE, printed in a
PREE	12 pages. 12 pages. Upwards of 100,000 copies have been pr Any of the above may be had at 6s. per TRADE TRACTS, selected by , is., in cloth.	inted. 100. the Council of
JOHN NOMY. R TWE	I HOPKINS'S NOTIONS of POL 17 Mrs. Marcer. Recommended by Mr. Cob NTY TRACTS AND SPERCULE	ITICAL ECO-
	By Earl Ducle, Messrs. Villers, Cobden, Bri lagh, Balnes, &c. 1s. stitched. 12mo. size.
	MILLION FUND.
N.B -	riptions received during the day, April 22, 1846. As the Subscription List is a	made un from
Thursda	day to Wednesday, contribution ys and Fridays are not pub- of the Saturday immediatel	ns received on l
As the	regulations of the Post Office	k following.
Office Of	isuan Name of the party to	whom Post
Chinees, 1	are respectfully requested to in future for George Win Manchester, or Abraham Walk-street, London.	son, League rer Paulton,
	A., and Brothers, Todmorden	£ 0. a.
*Atherton,	uil, Davizes T. and H., Lees, near Manchester ion, Richard, 19, Roundary street, trui	50 0 0 10 0 0 3 0 0 lme, do 1 1 0
*Burrown, *Parr, Jam *Piggott, E	o Orenning, Farmon-street, Butler Thomas, and Friends, 14, Hadfield-str es, 22, Oxford-street His, Browley-street, Asbley Jone	wat da 1 1 Al
Bedford, John *Acton Th	minon, 10. Mickle-atreet times, 33, Dorset-street, London in, Broud Holden, near Haslingden omes, Changlians, Wiscon	do 1 0 0 1 0 0 1 0 0
lancoine.	James, Wallgate, do Wm., Halesworth, Suffolk II., 9, Barbican terrace, Barnstaple	1 0 0
Btockport	(*Leigh, John, Wellington-st., Port	100
Halifax,	*A Free Trader Washington, John, Lighteliffe, nea Wood, James, Brighouse, near Michell, James	1 0 0
,	Mitchell, James, do Raynor, Henry, do Noble, John, do Greenwood, Richard, do	0 10 0 0 10 0 0 10 0 0 8 0
	*Harris, Richard, and Sons *Biggs, John, and Sons *Stokes, Thomas, and Nophows	40 0 0
	*Brewin and Whetstono *Fielding, Joseph *Kills, J., and Son *Whetstone and Gittons *Orango, D., and Co.	40 0 0 20 0 0 20 0 0
		10 0 0 10 0 0 10 0 0
	*Billson, Charles *Biggs, Thomas *Birgess, Alfred *Stone and Paget *Westermann, N. *Carter, R., and Son	10 0 0 10 0 0 10 0 0
	I I I I I I I I I I I I I I I I I I I	10 0 0 0 10 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
	Marston, Robert, and Co. Frisby and Chawner Bodells, C., and Co. Noble, J. W., M.D. Whitmore, J. Kirby, B.	10 0 0 0 = 10 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
Leicester.	*Paget, Thomas, surgeon *Thorp, John and G.	10 0 0 10 0 0
	*Sunderland, Thomas *Fielding and How *Tollor, R. and G. *Cripps, Joseph *Hult and Shenton *Baines, John	5 0 0 ot m
	*Baines, John *Higginson and Coleman *Sargeant, T. and Sons	4 0 0 to
	*Higginson and Coleman *Hargeant, T. and Sons *Eames, W. K. *Loggo, Rov. Goo., L.L.D. *Hife and Breward *Bates. Wm.	4 0 0 rd
	*Bates, Wn. *Borry, Rev. C. *Clarkson, M. *Bowniar, Charles *Harvey, J. and J.	3 0 0 gr
	*Newton, E. *Archer, T. and W. *Autohinson, W. E.	2 0 0 2 0 0 3 0 0 sh
	*Swain, Joseph *Viceare, Geo. and Son *Hainos, Samuel *Thompson, Thomas, and Son	1 0 0 Le 1 0 0 fac 1 0 0 ho
	*Barton, J. and G. Smallfiold *Baines, W. and G. *Palmer, Robert	1 0 0 800
	*Curtis, James Peppercorn, John Kingstone, Francis, House Rutherford, Peter Batcholor, Richard Rills, John	9 0 0 du 1 0 0 Du arpenden, {	A Friend	0 10 0 life 0 5 0 Fr
	Simone, Wm. Swain, Stephen Walker, Wm. Simpson, Haury	. 0 8 0 Wa
,	Bayley, Thomas Aitken, Henry, Reid's Park Gibson, Rov. James Russell, John	0 9 6 nia
)ine.	Small Sums, per Robert Kilpetri	0 2 6 eng
	Managery Tower Green	5. 1.0.11.00

	lington-sireet	Wel		0	0	. (
	Webster, A., 4, Wellington-street Firth, Wm., 178, Wellington-street		į		ŏ	í
	17mb, Wm., 178, Wellington-street	iari	١ ۽	0	0	1
	Diokinson, Jonath., and Son, Wa Bmalpage, Robert, Albion-street		۵.	š	ŏ
	I DIOWE, COURS, MILE GOD, MICHOLD		•	0	0	(
Lecds.	Moorhouse, John, Park-lane *Pearson and Bons, Holbeck	•		5 3	0	. (
	Burras, Joseph, New Park street	•
	Burras, Joseph, New Park-street, Hartley, Wm, Kirkgato Hindle, Charles, 16, Meadow-lane-ro Hoaps, C., jun., Burman Totts Hell "Naylor, Abraham, Basinghall stree		,	1) 1	(
	Hanne C. iup. Burner Tree Hall	ad.	-		ļ	(
	*Navlor. Abraham. Basinghall atree	£		1	1	-
	Linu, win., Corporation-street	•			î	i l Hall, Matthew/Wortley				0	(
	Heap, George, Cross Bank-street Asquith, D., at Cash and Toths	m'a	,	1	0	(
	Bishopsgate-street			1	0	(
•	Pool, Robert, Briggate				8	(
	(Winpenny, J., West-street	• • •	•	0	5	(
Blackburr		••	20		0	(
27.00 EDUII	*Knox, George, Lord-street	¢0			0 0	(
	(*Veevers, Thomas, St. Alban's-place	•	,		ő	i
				_	0
	Parker, Griffith, Broad-street				ŏ	ì
Melanboo	I. K JODGB, Ceorge, do	• •			2	(
•	Hughes, Wm., High-street Small Sums	• •	(2 2	(
*Morrison		••				(
*Gosnell, J	Charles, 104, Fore street, City and Co., Three King's court, Lombar	Lat.	41 90	′ ′	D D_	(
TITONBUIL,			10	, (Ü	ì
A Barrister	• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •	• •	- 5	•)	C
*Gibson T	ohn, and Sons, 8, Jewin-croscent homas F., 22, Spital-square	••)	Ç
•Wild, Rob	ert. 45. Houndaditch	••	5		ζ.	0
"Boutham.	Henry, Lansdowne Crescent, Wordeste	r ::	5	ì)	0
Wansey, W	m., Lime-street, City		2)	0
*Reddish.	, Timothy, 67, King William street, City	· · ·	2			0
TUIIIOD, C.	, Frenchwood-street, Preston	• •	î			Ö
-Myatt. J	Manor Parm, Debliora	1.	1	1		0
Constable.	orge, 4, High-street.do George, Horloy Mill, Surrey	••	1			Ü
"Constable.	Charles, do do		. 1			0
TINKS, WIN.	. 45. Newington-blace. Kennington	•	ī	ī		ž
~Gumey, Jo	ohn, Oakley-street, Lambeth , Alex., 4, St. James's-place, Greyhou		1	0	(0
road, Ber	mondaev	na-	1	0		n
Townshop	d. John. 17. Howland-st., Fitzrov-square	•••	i	õ		ó
-wansov.F	rancis, Arbor Field Mill, near Reading	• •	1	0)
Westrone.	and S., Church-street, Wolverhampton W. G., Burford	• •	1	0		2
Duthie, A.,	and Co., Bervie, N.B.	••	î)
"Illomson.	Andrew, New-street, Kendal		1	0	()
Pollard. W	obert, Hanovor-square, Newcastle-on-T m., Brunswick-square, Bristol		1	0		,
· wade, John	1, Lower-road, Deptford	••	1	0
Linnk, James	i. 22 and 23. Queen's huildings. Troms.	t on	ō	10	~
'An Associ	ation of Operatives held at George agnigge Wells Road, 9th Subscription	the	_	_
Lilova, Mr., 1	datiicidastreet. Stemfowlatroot	•	-8	-6
Pike, Freder	ick, High-street, Borough rge, Saw Mills, York-street, Lambeth es, baker, High Fulham	••	ŏ	5	Ö
Smart, Georg	rge, Saw Mills, York-street, Lambeth	••	0	2	e	į
watts, Charl		• •	0	2	0
St. Albans,	Bennett, Joseph	• •	1	0	0
Herts, per	Peppercorn, James Langridge, Edward	• •	ļ	0	0
Herts, per). H. Latti-	Lewis, John	• •	1	0	0 more.	(Richardson, Thomas	••	î	ŏ	ő
	Dale, Joseph, 40, King street		1	0	0
Dauannaut	Cowlyn, Wm., 11, Chapel-street Hill, Jonathan, 1, York-place, Stoke		ō	.2	6
Dovonport.	Porry, Richard, 42, St. John-street	• •	0	2	6
	A Man without a Shirt	• •	0	2 2	6
	Small Sums	••	ŏ.	2	_ŏ
	(*Browning, John		1	0	0	ĺ
	Sturt, Francis	• •	0	2	Ğ
	Jeffrey, W. Vince, C., jun,		0	2	Ø
Farnham,	Tiley, T.		U O	2 2	6
Surrey.	Joffrey, Samuel		Ü	2	6
	Williams, Charles	(Ó	2	6	I
	Hackman, T		=	2	6	١
	Wareham, James			2 1	O	ı
• mt	·				-	I
Those n	ames marked with an asterisk are ren	ewo	d i	sut)-	۱
riptions.	`					l
_	`

ENGLAND AND AMERICA AT BLOWS FOR WANT OF BETTER TO DO.

NARRATIVE OF A SAILOR.

"To enable us to anney the commerce of Great Britain, or to otherwise operate against her to her injury, through naval nears, we would recommend that the number of her steamers like the Mississippi, but rather onlarged, should be increased of thirty, and our sloops of war to forty."—The Secretary of the increased Naval Department to the Legislature, March, 1840.

"The bond of nations is free commerce."—Mr. Walker, Secre-iry to the American Treasury, 1845.
"Commercial intercourse is the only sure guarantee of the eace of nations "—The League.
"The keystone of monopoly is the Corn Law; remove it, and he whole fabric of injustice and impolicy must fall to the round."—Mr. Cobben.
"We will struck for the Corn League, he had a "The League."

"We will struggle for the Corn Law inch by inch."—Duke of ichmond and Lord George Bentinck.

At the village of Bladen, near Woodstock, in Oxfordaire, on the 12th of July, 1810, a boy named Samuel eech was seen by the inhabitants of that place with his ce turned towards London, and his back turned on his ome and on them, trudging up the green lanes with the ttled thought in his head of going as a sailor-boy on board

He joined the Macedonian frigate at Gravesend, and in e time was initiated into the duties of the naval service. nie, the Macedonian was chiefly employed in blockading the French fleet in Brest Harbour, and in harassing the commerce of the ports situated on the Bay of Biscay. A trip was also made as far as Madeira, and from thence to the coast of Virginia in America, where on board the Macedo nian the conversation became common that England and America were likely to go to war with each other. They returned, however, to the coast of France, and were again engaged in the blockade and the prohibition of Franch commerce before they heard any positive rumours that England and I had to spring with allowing the wounded arm, and sent the poor fellow below to the wounded arm, and sent the wounded arm, and sent the wounded arm, and sent the wounded arm, and sent the wounded arm, and sent the wounded arm, and sent the wounded arm, and sent the wounded arm, and sent the wounded arm, and sent the wounded arm, and sent the wounded arm, and sent the wounded arm, and sent the wounded ar uring the first two years and five months of this lad's sea they heard those rumours, they, the men before the man did not know their truth, but the conduct of the captain, who had been officially informed of the fact, indicated that he knew something not known to the crew.

He was on deck almost all the time (says Samuel Leech): the look-out sloft was more rigidly observed, and every little while the cry of "Mast-head there," arrested our attention. Thus we passed several days, the captain running up and down, and constantly bailing the man at the mast head Early in the morning he began his charge to keep a good look-out, and repeated it until evening. The crew of the Macedonian had no doubt that if there was to be war with America their success was certain.

On each Sunday they were dressed and paraded in their best clothes, and enjoyed a kind of holiday, the captain frequently reading the church service. On Sunday, December 20, 1812, which was also Christmas Day, they found some other work to do. A stiff breeze was blowing favourable to fast sailing; they had hardly finished breakfast when the man at the mast-head shouted, "Sail-ho!" The captain rushed upon deck, exclaiming, "Mast-head there!" "Sir!" "Where away is the sail?" The man aloft replied. Then the captain asked, "What does she look like?" "A square rigged vessel, sir." After a few minutes, the captain shouted again, "Mast head there!" "Sir?" "What does she look like?" "A large ship, sir, standing towards us."

By this time most of the crew were upon deck, eagerly straining their eyes to obtain a glimpse of the approaching ship, and murmuring their opinions to each other on her probable character. Then came the voice of the captain, shouting, "Keep silence, fore and aft!" Silence being secured, he hailed the look-out, who, to his question of "What does she look like?" replied, "A large frigate bear ing down upon us, sir."

A whisper ran along the crew that the stranger was an American frigate, which was confirmed by the command, "All hands clear the ship for action, alloy !" The drum and fife beat to quarters, bulkheads were knocked away, the guns were released from their confinement; the whole dread paraphernalia of battle was produced; and, after the lapse of a few minutes of hurry and confusion, every man and boy was at his post, ready to do his best service for his country, except the band who, claiming an exemption from the affray, safely stowed themselves away in the cable tier. We lad only one sick man on the list, and he at the cry of battle hurried from his cot, feeble as he was, to take his post of danger. A few of the junior midshipmen were stationed below on the berth deck, with orders, given in our hearing, to shoot any man who attempted to run from his quarters.

As the approaching ship showed American colours, all doubt of her character was at an end. We must fight her, was the conviction of every breast. Every possible arrangement that could possibly ensure success, was accordingly made. The guns were shotted and the matches lighted. A lieutenant then passed through the ship, directing the marines and boarders, who were furnished with pikes, cutlasses, and pistols, how to proceed, if it should be necessary to board the enemy. He was followed by the captain, who exhorted the men to fidelity and courage, urging upon their consideration the well known motto of Nelson, "England expects every man to do his duty." In addition to all these preparations on deck, some mer were stationed in the tops with small arms, whose duty it was to attend to trimming the sails, and to use their muskets provided we came to close action. There were others also below, called sail trimmers, to assist in working the ship should it he necessary to shift her position during the battle. My station was at the fifth gun on the main deck. It was my duty to supply my gun with powder, a boy being appointed to each gun in the ship on the side we engaged for this purpose. A woollen screen was placed before the entrance to the magazine with a hole in it through which the cartridges were passed to the boys. We received them there, and covering them with our jackets, hurried to our respective guns. These precautions were observed, to prevent the powder taking fire before it reached the gun. Thus we all stood awaiting orders in motionless suspense. At last we fired three guns from the larboard side of the main deck. This was followed by the command, "Cease firing, you are throwing away your shot." Then came the order to wear ship and prepare to attack the enemy with our starboard guns. after this, I beard a firing from some other quarter, which I at first supposed to be a discharge from our quarter deck guns, but it proved to be the roar of the enemy's cannon. A strange noise, such as I had never heard before next arrested my attention. It sounded like the tearing of sails just over our heads. This, I soon ascertained to be the wind of the enemys shot. The firing, after a few minutes' cessation, recommenced. The rouring of cannons could now be heard from all parts of our trembling ship; and mingling as it did with that of our foes, it made a most hideous noise. By and by I heard the shots strike the sides of our ship. The whole scene grew indescribably confused and horrible; it was like some awfully tremendous thunder storm, whose designing roar is attended by incessant streaks of lightning, carrying death in every flash, and strewing the ground with the victims of its wrath; only in our case, the scene was rendered more horrible than that by the presence of torrents of blood which dyed our decks.

Though the recital may be painful, yet as it will reveal the horrors of war, and show at what a fearful price a vistory is won or lost. I will present the reader with things as they met my eye during the progress of this dreadful fight. I was have busily supplying my gun with powder, when I saw block suddenly fly from the arm of a man stationed at our gus. I saw nothing strike him; the effect alone was visible. In an instant, the third lieutenant tied his handkeroble round the wounded arm and any the manufallow halos in the same lieutenant. hoth ticah

moch to fig agais fight

had l -141016 Loys The l had b finish men l Even евсари

m the pair de withou utterly Vieto: many The e poor l

few in tion. 1 resista licuter side, i told he мая в Sabbat His B prize o Who frigate.

by the exhibit rougly good fe the ship that de aided in bring a the Am Framen

of thei

All idea epotija together ct uni among (Xisted) Soon ervice ; employe of Great her inju can Sec done in America The o Lurn, an English more the the off In nothir extendin Those W wore adiplen hey for it had a de

of MAL ST of war, to wound; the other had a grape or canister shot sent through his ancle. A stout Yorkshireman lifted him in his arms, and hurried with him to the cookpit. He had his He had his Two of the foot cut off, and was thus made lame for life. foot cut off, and was thus made lame for life. Two of the hors stationed on the quarter-deck were killed; they were both Portuguese. A man who saw one of them killed afterwards told me that his powder caught fire, and burned the fiesh almost off his face. In this pitiable condition the agonised boy lifted up both hands, as if imploring relief, when a passing shot instantly out him in two. I was an eye-witness to a sight equally revolting. A man, named Aldeiteb had to a sight equally revolting. A man, named Aldritch, had one of his hands out off by a shot, and almost at the same moment he received another shot, which tore open his bowels in a terrible manner. As he fell, two or three men caught him in their arms, and, as he could not live, threw himoverboard. One of the officers in my division also fell in my sight. He was a noble-hearted fellow, named Van kivell. A grape or canister shot struck him near the heart. lle fell, and was carried below, where he shortly afterwards

Mr. Scott, our first lieutenant, was also slightly wounded by a grummet, or small iron ring, probably torn from a ham-mack den by a shot. He went below shouting to the men to fight on. Having had his wounds dressed, he came up again, shouting to us at the top of his voice, and bidding us light with all our might. The battle went on. Our men kept cheering with all their might. I cheered with them, though I confess I scarcely knew for what. Certainly there was nothing very inspiring in the aspect of things where I was stationed. So terrible had been the work of destruction around us, that it was terned the slaughter house. Not only had we had several boys and men killed and wounded, but several of the guns were disabled. The schoolmaster received a death wound. The brave boatswain, who had come from the sick cot to the die of battle, was fastening a stopper on a backstay which had been shot away, when his head was smashed to pieces by a cannon ball. Another man, going to complete the unfinished task, was also struck down. One of our midshipmen likewise received a severe wound; and the wardroom steward was killed. A fellow named John, who for some petty offence had been sent on board as a punishment, was carried past me wounded. I distinctly heard the large blood drops full pat, pat, on the deck. His wounds were mortal. Even a poor goat, kept by the officers for her milk, did not escape the general carpage; her bind legs were shot off, and poor Nan was thrown overboard. Suddenly, the rattling of the iron hail ceased. We were ordered to cease firing; a profound silence ensued; broken only by the stifled groams of the brave sufferers below. It was soon ascertained that the enemy had shot a head to repair damages, for she was not so disabled but she could sail without difficulty; while we were so cut up, that we lay unterly belpless. Our head braces were shot away; the fore and main topmasts were gone. The mizen must hung over stern, and carried several men over in its fall. We were in the state of a complete wreck.

A council was now held among the officers on the quarter deck. Our condition was now perilous in the extreme. Victory or escape was alike hopeless. Our ship was disabled many of our men were killed, and many more wounded The enemy would without doubt bear down upon us in a few moments; and as she could now choose her own position, would doubless rake us fore and aff. Any farther resistance was therefore folly; so in spite of the hot brained lientenant who advised them not to strike, but to sink alongside, it was determined to strike our columns. This was done by a brave fellow named Watson, whose saddened brow told how sincerely it pained his lion heart to do it. To me it was a pleasing sight, for I had seen fighting enough for one Sabbath, more than I wished to see again on a week day. His Brittanic Majesty's frigate, Macedonian, was now the prize of the American frigate, United States.

When the crew of the United States first boarded our frigate, to take possession of her as their prize, our men, heated with the fury of the battle, exasperated with the sight of their dead and wounded shipmates, and rendered furious by the rum they had obtained from the spirit room, felt and exhibited some disposition to fight their captors. But after the confusion had subsided, and part of our men were snugly stowed away in the American ship, and the remainder found themselves kindly used in their own, the utmost good feeling began to prevail. We set to work to cleanse the ship, using hot vinegar to take out the scent of the blood that dyed the white of our planks with crimson. We also aided in fitting our disabled frigate for her voyage. This being accomplished, both ships sailed in company towards the American coast.

I now felt myself perfectly at home with the American reamen; so much so, that I chose to mess with them. My shipmates also participated in similar feelings, in both ships. All ides that we had been trying to shoot each other so shortly before, seemed forgotten. We are together, drank together, joked, sung, laughed, told yarns; in short, a perfect union of ideas for the same and to a state of the same and the feet union of ideas, feelings, and purposes, seemed to exist hands. A corresponding state existed, I was told, among the officers.

Soon after reaching America, Samuel Leech entered that service; and in the United States brig of war, Syren, was employed on the coast of Africa in "annoying the commerce of Great Britain, and in otherwise operating against her to her injury," doing in the spring of 1813 what the American Secretary of the Navy recommends as requisite to be done in the spring of 1840, in the event of England and America going to war.

The orders of the commander of the Syren was to sink, hum, and destroy all English merchantmen, and every other English vessel with which they might engage and prove more than a match for. Leech says:

"The first land we made was Cape Mount. The natives came off to a considerable distance in their cances, clothed in nothing but a piece of cloth fastened round the waist, and extending downward to the feet.

Those people needed clothing, were desirous of obtaining it, were offered it by the merchants of Liverpool and manufactures of the contract of y, were citized it by the merchants of Liverpool and manufacturers of Manchester, and were willing and anxious to pay for it by exchanging the products of their country, which the merchants of Liverpool and manufacturers of Manchester had a desire to obtain ; but the orders to the American ships of war and to the English ships of war had been in the spirit of war, to sink have and destroy the trading ships of war, to sink have and destroy the trading ships of war. of wir, to sink, burn, and destroy the trading ships of each others scenttry, consequently the half-paked inhabitants of Africa had to the could free had to go with such imperfect dicting as they could be had to me with such imperfect dicting as they could be in the months three and it is months three and it is months three and it is months three and it is months to one in the months of the month

And why was this? Because England and France work at war; because England and America quarrelled, in so far that America would not refrain from trading with France. Samuel Leech continues to say of the natives at Capo Mount and of the English traders:

"As we approached the shore, we saw several fires burning; this we were told, in the broken English spoken by our sable visitors, was the signal for trade. We bought a quantity of oranges, limes, comon nuts, tamarinds, plantains, yarns, and bananas. We lay here for several days looking out for any English vessel that might come here for the purposes of trade." (After much cruising and little and the purposes of trade." poses of trade." (After much cruising and little success), "We saw a sail standing in towards St. Thomas. Hoisting English colours, our oilicers also donned the British uniform. We soon came near enough to hail her; for not doubting that we were a British brig, the merchantman made no effort to escape us. Our captain hailed her, 'Ship aloo! hallo! what ship is that?' 'The ship Barton.' 'Where do you belong?' 'To Liverpool.' 'What is your cargo?' 'Redwood, palm oil, and ivory.' 'Where are you bound to?' 'To St. Thomas."

Just at that moment, our English flag was hauled down; and to the inexpressible annoyance of the officers of the Barton, the stars and stripes of America supplied its place.

"Haul down your colours," continued Captain Nicholson.

The old captain, who up to this moment had been enjoying a comfortable nap in his very comfortable cabin, now came upon deck in his shirt sleeves, rubbing his oyes and looking so exquisitely ridiculous, that it was scarcely possible to avoid laughing. So surprised was he at the unexpected ter-mination of his dreams, that he could not command skill enough to strike his colours, which was accordingly done by the mate.

"After taking out as much of her cargo as we desired, we proceeded to set her on fire. It was an imposing sight to behold the wild antics of the flames leaping from rope to rope, and from spar to spar, until she looked like a flery cloud resting on the surface of the water. Presently her spars began to fall; her masts went by the board, her loaded guns went off, the hull was burned to the water's edge; and what a few hours before was a fine trim ship, looking like a winged creature of the deep, lay a shapeless charred mass, whose blackened outlines, shadowed in the clear still waves, looked like the grim spirit of war lurking for his prey."

This was not all; but it is all of the naval engagements we have room to quote here. Those who incline to read more, as related by Samuel Leech, may find it in a book entitled "Thirty Years from Home: or, A Voice from the Main Deck, being the experience of Samuel Leech."

At the conclusion of his narratives of the two years of unnatural war between England and America—a war all the more disastrous that it was directed against the commerce of each other; all the more unnatural that each nation had an equal interest in the preservation of peace; and all the more horrible that the crews and officers of the war ships of each spoke the same language, and used that language, as we have seen in the case of the brig Syren and the brig Barton, to delude, by tricks and falsehoods, the unwary merchantmon into destruction— 'annoying each other's commerce, and operating to each other's injury"—as recommended against Great Britain in this year, 1846, by the American Secretary, in the event of a devartation of war :-- when Samuel Leech concludes his narrative of that war of 1812, which began because England insisted that America and France should not trade together, and which ended in 1814, when peace with France and England removed the cause of quarrel between America and England, he says:

"The Americans, as is well known, were most successful in their naval warfare (more successful than in their field warfare); but after all, that was a trifling compensation for ruined commerce, and for being brought to the very verge of national dismemberment. The losses of the British never made any distinct impression on the nation, otherwise than in teaching a tolerably sound lesson in discretion, and leading to many important improvements in naval affairs. I sincerely trust that both nations, united by a thousand inextricable ties, and profiting by experience, will in all time coming, avoid every description of warlike collision, and exist on the happiest terms of amity and peace.'

Amen. But the extremes of the democracy of America, and the extremes of England, seem to exist beyond the pale of common senso. We have it in our power to stop the tongues of the western men of America, who speak so loudly for war; or if not their tongues, we may stop their hands. We can instantly—by the next packet, if our lords so will it-send those men to their spades and their ploughs to grow corn for us, to help us to live and make clothes and implements of labour for them. We may do more than beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-knives. The virgin steel now fushioned for bloodshed lies yet on the anvil, and it rests with us to fushion it for peace or for war, for swords or for ploughshares.

REUDEN.

DAGUERREOTYPE PORTRAITS.—The improvements made in these portraits by the recent discoveries is truly astonishing. By the use of improved leuses, a much more distinct drawing is obtained, exhibiting not only the extremes of light and shade, but an case semitone as well. But the principal alteration consists in the application of an entirely new process of colouring. Hitherto a coating of paint has been aid on, which has had an opaque and plastered appearance; but now the colours are so applied that they harmonise and blend with the metal, by which the transparent effect and the mellow softened tints of drawing on ivory are secured. In examining the collection of portraits at Mr. Board's rooms, in King William street, we were much pleased with some very striking likenesses of several of the leading men in the political as well as the religious world. Mensieur Phœbus is in reality a brilliant genius. It may be said of him literally that he takes a high walk in the art, and that no artist of audient or modern days can touch him, or indese come anywhere near him.

A MUSICAL BED,-The last novelty from Germany is musical bed, which receives the weary body and immediately "laps it in Elysium." It is an invention of appendiance in Bohemia, and is so constructed that by means of hidden modernia, and is so constructed that by medic of hidden mechanism, pressure upon the bed causes a soft and gentle sit of Antier to be played, which continues long enough to full the most watchil to size. At the head is a clock, the hand of which being placed at the hour the sleeper wishes to his, when the time arrives, the his playe, a march of Spontial, will drains and symbols, and in bort, with holic constitutions the same arrives the history with holic constitutions the same arrives that the state of the same arrives the history with holic constitutions the same arrives the same arrives and symbols.

AGRICULTURE.

LEASES AND TENANT RIGHTS. A DAWN OF HOPE FOR THE TENANT PARMERS.

It has been protended that the tonant farmers of England are rabid, unreasoning protectionists,—that the band of Parliamentary monopolists who talk, in the name of the farmers, incoherencies leading to doubts whether the speakers betray most of the ruffian or the simpleton, are the expounders of the farmers' opinions; yet nothing is further from the fact. The Bentincks, the O'Briens, the Mileses, and the Bankeses, the representatives and advocates of the tonant farmers!! - as much as wolves represent the shoopfeld, or fexes the poultry yard: and no more. But, in truth, farmers have been, and are more entirely unrepresented than any class in this country. Landlords are the legislature, and holp themselves to all that legislation can give them. The commercial, manufacturing, and trading classes, by their activity, combination, and intelligence, have, year by year, acquired greater power of enforcing attention to their interests, and their grievances; whilst fears of driving the masses to desporation. visions of riots in the populous districts, and of incendiarism in the agricultural, have ever compolled our dominant landouracy to pay a cortain degree of attention to the complaints and more pressing wrongs of the labouring classes. But who over heard the tenant furmers mentioned in public affairs, except to cover some scheme for enhancing rents, or diminishing the charges on landed proporty? Mr. Cobden, Mr. Bright, and Mr. Villiors, are literally the only members of Parliament from whose speeches a stranger to rural affairs could have suspected that any diversity exists between the interests of landlords and tenants. Doop and growing dissatisfaction has long existed on the part of tenant farmers with the state of the relations of landlord and tenant, and with the law by which those relations are governed; and in proportion as agriculture has improved has that dissatisfaction been growing deeper and deeper.

Nor is this surprising when we consider that the art of husbandry, as practised by our best farmers, is of very modern origin. Fifty years ago, the farmer was a sort of appendage to an estate, who gathered by means of a rude system of cultivation, a humble livelihood, and looked up to his landlord as almost a master. The independent cultivators of those days were the yeomen, the men who lived on their own little farms. The tenant farmer was but one degree better than "his honour's" bailiff. Now, however, the business of a farmer has become one requiring capital, energy, and enterprise, to an extent altogether incompatible with that humble bearing and dependent position formerly deemed the natural condition of a farmer, and to which the landowners would gladly tio him still. But then, if they do so, they cannot derive that increased income from their land which im proved husbandry will afford; and it has now be come a question, whether landowners shall reduce their rents to something like the standard of 1792, or accede to a new system in the economy of landed property which the spirit of the times demands?

Eventually, we have no doubt that the landowners will adopt the new and improved system which their own interests and those of the community alike require; but, to the actual occupiors of land, the present race of tenants, it is of vital importance that a new system should commence without delay. It has been the fushion to say that farmers are slow to improve; and it is undeniable that the soil is not usually made to produce anything like what it is capable of doing; but we utterly deny that the farmers as a class are to blame. On the contrary, farmers are vastly ahead of their landlords. The cultivation of the land is far better than, from the tenures on which it is held, and from the burdens to which it is subjected by the landlords, could have been expected. At this moment, a very large proportion of English farmers, holding their farms from your to year, have so invested their property in the soil, that they could not quit at a year's notice without sustaining very serious loss. Yet nothing stands between them and the caprice or supidity of landlords but yearly egreements; and it must be remembared that landowners are more dangarons. persons to deal with then men of braining they are the spoiled children of society. And then they are, as a body, profoundly ignorant of the business and requirements of agriculture. The best farmer can nover be sure that some offence given to the steward, some fracas with the gamekeeper, or some political difference with the landlord himself, may not cause him to be turned out of his farm, and subjected to a heavy confiscation of property: Then there is no doubt, that after the farmer has greatly improved his farm for a few years, the landowner begins to think that he should have some share of the improvement the tenant has effected by his own capital and industry, and the rent is advanced Thus it is that rents have been got up, and kept up, under the system of yearly tenancies. The state of the cultivation of this country is far inferior to what it might be if the tenants generally had long and liberal leases; but it is far better than can be continued with safety to the farmers under yearly tenures. The farmers are now becoming fully aware of this, and in consequence are very generally discussing the questions of "leases and tenants' rights." The following passages from a reported discussion of the sort at the Burton-on-Trent Farmers' Club, which we extract from the Herby Reporter, will show the practical way in which the farmers deal with the subject. It seems that a circular from the London Farmers' Club induced the Burton Olub to depute some of its membors to draw up a report on the subject; which, after stating the hazard at which yearly tenants carry on their business, proposed the following resolutions for the adoption of the Club:

"That a tenant of land from year to year, ought to enjoy a legal claim to compensation for such improvements as he shall have made during his tenancy, and for which he shall not have received the whole benefit which he is fairly entitled to claim.

tled to claim.

"That the tenant has under a tenancy at will a fair claim to the enjoyment of his improvements for as long a period as a good farmer would require, if the length of his occupancy were made a matter of agreement beforehand.

"That impartial arbitrators chosen mutually by the landlord and tenant would, without difficulty, form a correct estimate as to what belonged to the tenant on this principle of adjustment.

"That it uppears to the Club to be advisable for the general body of farmers to join in petitioning the legislature to make a law which would give to the tenant a legal right to recover from the landlord such compensation for improvements made by him as impartial and competent arbitrators would decide to be his equitable right."

This does not go to the full extent of the necessity of the case, but it goes a good way in the right direction. But why is this confined to yearly tenants? Assuming this can be effected by the legislature, which, however, is not quite so simple an affair as some persons not fully acquainted with the law of real property in this country, seem to suppose. Upon that point, however, we shall not enlarge at present. The discussion on these resolutions was opened by Mr. Bass, who remarked that as the tenant is now liable for any dilapidations he may make upon the land, he ought to have an equivalent right to recover improvements against the landlord. And he appealed to the experience of the farming body to say, "whether improving tenants compelled, from the force of circumstances, to quit their farms before they have had time to reap the benefit of their improvements, ever do re-coire fair compensation for them?" The tenant commonly quits under circumstances which do not conciliate towards him the good will of the landlord or his agent; and the claims for improvements are not, therefore, often considered in a friendly spirit. The time for making a safe arrangement for the tenant is upon his entry. To rely on the personal character of any landlord, however honourable, is to trust to the chapter of accidents; he may change, he may become embarrassed, he may sell his estate, or he may die, and so the property pass into other hands, at whose morey the tenant will be. Mr. Bass said:

"The state of agriculture is changing every year, and new modes of outture are discovered by which land may be made to grown a larger amount of produce, and at a less expense, than is possible until those now means are tried. The furmer who adheres to the old system is brought into competition with others who have abandoned it, and his profits are every year becoming less. To enable him to keep page with the forward movement, he must begin by investing additional capital on his land. Without reckoning such improvements as draining, the merely increasing the fertile power of the soil by manures cannot be done without considerable outlay. Without a stronger guarantee than he now has, the tonant-at-will capnot prudently incur a large outlay, and without such outlay he cannot prosper."

Yet landlords are averse to giving the requisite security. He added:

"The longer I attend to the subject, the more I become convinced that the many impediments to proper agreements between landlords and tenants will not be overcome, except by giving the tenants a legal claim where there is no special agreement. There are impediments on both sides. Though many landlords are destrous of having their land highly farmed by their tenants, and are willing to give security for the capital invested in improvements, yet there are two many who are careless, or even averse to putting the tenant in an independent position. On the other hand there are many tenants too timid to undertake leases, and many others occupying small farms with small means, to whom it would not be advisable to grant them. Nothing but agreements from year to year, with clauses providing for compensation for improvements, would be accepted by this numerous class of tenants."

Now these last propositions are unsound. The weaker the tenant's capital, the longer must be his rotation of crops, if he is to farm well, and therefore to such tenants a lease is indispensable. But if it be meant that these tenant rights will enable the system of small capitals and yearly tenancies to be continued, then we say that they will do more harm than good, for it is only by tenants being "placed in independent positions" that any general improvement will take place.

There is, however, no practical difficulty in the way of such valuations of improvements as are proposed. Mr. Bass said:

"I have observed that in the discussion of this subject at the London Farmers' Club, none of the eminent farmers who spoke seemed to have any doubt that a just valuation of tenunts' rights could always be made by competent land valuers. If a farmer has a beneficial interest in a lease, and is at liberty to dispose of it to another, there is never any difficulty in estimating its worth, and in what does this case differ from that of a tenant leaving unenjoyed improvements in a farm held at will?"

The only way of effecting it is to appoint arbitrators in each case, and he added:

"It seems to me that the whole subject relating to the mutual claims of the off-going and in-coming tenants and of the landlord, requires a thorough revisal by the legislature."

This is a position nobody can doubt, who has known anything of the management of landed preperty.

The next speaker was Mr. Richard Chawner, whose remarks bespeak a fuller knowledge of the requirements of agriculture than is commonly met with. He said, he must make one objection to the report, that it placed the subject on too narrow a basis by not recognising the interest of the consumer. But, in fact, that is comprised in the consideration of what is best for the tenant, who, like the consumer, is interested in growing the largest quantity at the least proportional cost. Mr. Chawner thus enforced the necessity of a lease:

"In what position then ought the tenant to be placed? First of all he requires security of tenure. He must have the security of a lease for years, say 21, renewable every seven with the consent of the contracting parties. A long connection with college property has satisfied me upon this point, No prudent man will expend his capital—no skilful man can have the opportunity of carrying out his projected improvements (the result frequently requiring years for its development) unless he be insured in the possession of his farm for a certain term of years (Cries of "Heav, hear"). The next point of importance relates to the conditions of the tenure, the covenants in the lease,—and here the same principle must be kept steadily in view—viz., the good cultivation of the soil. This may be called the landlord's right; and in order to secure it, he should have the power of entering by himself or agent to inspect the state of cultivation, and of referring any question of dilapidation or neglect of the rules of good husbandry to competent and impurial authority. The schedule which should be appended to every lease, containing the system and state of cultivation of the farm, would be a very sufficient guide to any competent arbitrators between the parties. In addition to the respectability and capital of the tenant, the ever-ruling principle of self-interest is a security to the landlord; for it is notorious that in the good cultivation of the soil, and in that only, can the tenant hope for any adequate return for the expenditure of his capital and labour (hear, hear). On the other hand, the tonant ought to be allowed the uncontrolled power over his own skill and capital; he must be allowed to cultivate his furm as he thinks proper."

This is the just and sound view of the subject, and it is that to which farmers must adhere, if they mean to effect any sufficient alteration in the present system. And this we believe is more likely to be obtained by contract than by legislative interference; and it is far better that farmers should try to improve their own contracts with their landlords than rely upon legislative aid. They have had somewhat too much of that already; and he must be but an indifferent observer who supposes our landlord legislators will, at present, consent to pass any general measure tending to promote the independence of the farmers. Mr. Chawner well said:

pendence of the farmers. Att. Chawher wen said.
"We talk of confidence in landlords; but where is the confidence in the tenant, who is required to cultivate his farm according to a cortain and unvarying system, to pursue the same course of cropping under all difficultations. We have but to reflect upon our changeful cliffies, our weeping alles, the cliffest in markets, the difficulty of recenting markets, the cliffest in markets, the difficulty of recenting markets, the cliffest in markets, the difficulty of recenting markets, the cliffest in certain order, to be convinced as energy.

of the absurdity of the present system. And here I would ask those objectors to the ignorance of the English farmen to reflect upon the restrictions and difficulties under which the tenant farmer has hitherto pursued his useful avocation.

That goes home to the mark; and he added.

"And now, gentlemen, I would gladly pause, but that it is necessary to consider that worst of all tenures, tenancy will. Unfortunately there are circumstances under which this system will be continued; I deeply regret it, because the soil can never be cultivated according to its capabilities ander such a system of tenure. Some members of our (lab may consider that I lay too much stress upon the good cultivated districts with neglected ones. Compare Lincolnshire and districts with neglected ones. Compare Lincolnshire and parts of Norfolk with Wilts and Dorsetshire. In the former case it is well with all interests—the owner, the occupier, and the labourer; but in the latter how true—miserably true—is the reverse. The unsatisfactory state of tenant rights may be illustrated by what takes place in courts of lay. Evidence is produced for the plaintiff as to the custom of the country: equally respectable is the evidence for the defendant; but how conflicting, how totally opposed each to the other. The learned Judge, in despair, declares there is no law in the case; it must be referred, and it is, to a gentleman as remarkable for his impartiality as for his total ignorance of the subject in dispute."

And he further said:

"If this miserable system of tenancy-at-will must be continued, I would venture to make a suggestion, which, if it please neither landlord nor tenant, mey at least proper the soil. It is this: As the off-going tenant seeks to do as little as possible for the farm which he quits, so the on-toming tenant schemes to pay as little as possible, and the soil (i.e., the consumer) suffers; and as every practical man knows, the farm where the tenant is frequently changed required a constant increase of capital to restore its cultivation; it stay the plague,' I would place the landlord as the in-coming tenant. Let him pay the off-going tenant liberally for his cultivation up to the end of his term, and then charge the outlay upon the succeeding tenant in the shape of rent. The tenant will thus have his capital in hand to proceed at once with the cultivation of his farm. And here I would all you to consider the difference of entering upon a farm in a good state of cultivation, and one in a dilapidated condition. I have trespassed too long upon your attention. The importance of the subject must be my excuse. It must be sifted to the bottom; it must be discussed at every Farmers Clab—aye, and at every market table in England (cheers). We take no selfish view of tenant rights; we desire, showe all things, the good cultivation of the soil. If we succeed in placing tenant rights upon a secure basis, we shall equally protect the rights of landlords, and promote to the utmost of our ability the prosperity of the land we live in."

These remarks were deservedly received with much applause.

Mr. Govan said:

"He hoped to see the day when the landlord and tenant would be placed on a footing of equality. He never yet saw an agreement that he was disposed to sign, because agreements were generally all on one side; and he was satisfied that the day was about to dawn when one-sided things could exist no longer" (cheers).

Mr. Greaves advocated a legal right to be paid for improvements; saying:

"A law declaring the tenant to be entitled to just compensation for unexhausted improvements would at once effect more than would be effected by 50 years agitation of the subject by the farmers. I am not prepared to deny that the common system of tenancy-at-will is favourable to a certain class of tenants where they hold under the best landlends; but I take the liberty to say that it is only in the case of the best landlerds and the worst tenants, that it is the most favourable."

This seems to say but little for tenancies at will, even in the excepted cases.

He then asks:

"Can the tenant's rights be fairly ascertained? I have not the least doubt that they can; and I agree with the report of our Committee that this can only be done by a valuation made by arbitrators having a discretionary power to award compensation according to the particular circumstances under which the improvements have been made. It is sometimes said that a tenant's permanent improvements alone ought to be allowed for; but, as the report of our committee very justly argues, all improvements are more or less permenent, for there are none for which the tenant is immediately repaid. If a tenant took land for two or three years, would be expend money in manures, or lay part of it down to gran, or subsoil it, or even give it a thorough oleaning? The tenant has just as good a claim to compensation for tuch improvements as he has for building, erected, or for dring indi in the soil. In one respect, I think the report of the Committee falls short of what is required to ensure food farming in all cases. It only recommends compensation from the case of tenancy from year to year; but it was very properly remarked, that in the case of a lease, farmers were obliged to remit their improvements towards the interests of all would be better cared for. By the law, with the everybody acquainted with farming must be award for now is, the landlord can recover for dissillation of his land to the everybody acquainted with farming must be award now in the inproved his land to the amount of the law, with they improved his land to the same be award of pounds, but if he has omitted to copy a few substants of pounds, but if he has omitted to the party was a large compensation would be due to the party was a large compensation would be due to the party was a large compensation would be due to the party was a large compensation would be due to the party was a large compensation would be due to the party was

Mr. Basa, in reply, observed the question is to the base of the production of the control of the

And Mi formal of the tion in lords e

The cultur main, farme shows able a tho ru

the nec

coming various siderable reighborent, hi from te a park of first thre the fith fetched brought Unevious that the of Sir C the Rd estate, elyent's le a triffin spected of Man vise of Glasgar And fort an

you do
"Alto farm sto ceeds the regards double, to rent wit from the causes market,
olds, wh
market, owing which he slock ar attribute upon at last year under th
the six-o up stock

Let u dangers ence of monopo dence, i pro hee and per steadity day by on there we gaged in men. In men, and year, the gaged, githere we one force for Britt (with 52 Registra 11th ult.

Double and whose soft with a fall acy.

however, high proreat. H

especial

lord. Por himself, he was of opinion that the whole law of landlord and tenant regulred revisal."

"Mt. Charmer suggested the propriety of sending a formal notice to the landlords of the district, informing them of the decision of the club, and requesting their co-operation in petitioning the legislature. He had heard many landlords express themselves favourable to the resolutions."

That some of the landlords will aid in this "agricultural movement," we have no doubt; but in the main, it must be carried out by the exertions of the farmers; and the discussion at Burton-ou-Trent shows that there are men amongst them who are able and willing to work out the independence of the rural middle classes.

HOPE FOR THE SQUIRES YET.

In Scotland, at all events, the landlords are not under the necessity of abandoning their land on account of coming Free Trade in corn, as witness the following :

"GRASS PARKS AND CATTLE SALES IN SCOTLAND .- In various places in the south, grass purks are letting at a considerable advance-ou-the-prices of-former years. In the neighbourhood of Dundee prices are from seven to eight per cent. higher than last year. In Perthshire, the average is from ten to twenty per cent. higher. At Clow, in the Ochile, a park of nearly twenty acres, well laid down, and for the first time depastured, brought upwards of 80% on Monday, the 6th instant. At a sale of stock at the same place, cattle fetched very high prices. Blackfaced three year-old wedders brought from 23s. to 20s. a head; ewes, from 20s. to 25s. 0d.; Theriot hogs, 20s. to 21s. The Dunifries Courier states that the far famed Closebirn annual grass let; on the estate of Sir Charles Monteath, Bart., came off at Brownhill, on the 8d instant. Those upon the western side, or Shaw's estate, commanded upwards of 16 per cent. above the last year's let, while those on the eastern, or Hall side, were only a trifling shade below a similar per centage. The same respected proprietor and eminent agriculturist, on his estate of Mansfield, Ayrshire, last week, let his grazing fields at a rise of fully 10 per cent, above that of the preceding year."-

And as we have peculiar satisfaction in giving comfort and support to the agricultural mind, we reprint the following for its consolution and instruction. lessons it conveys are, Beware of panie; and whatever fou do, don't lessen your stock :

"High Price of Cattle and Sheep .- The prices which farm stock have brought at all the markets this year far exceeds the average of many preceding years, and indeed, as regards fat sheep, the rates are wholly unprecedented. No doubt, to some extent, the higher wayes for labour now current will account for so much of the rise as has been caused from the increased demand; but we understand that other causes have concurred in producing the present state of the market. The chief want in cattle is in two and three-yearolds, which are those usually bought for fattening for the market, and there is a great deficiency in the supply of these, owing to the panic caused by the tariff three years ago, which had the effect of checking the operations of many stock growers. As regards sheep, the high price is generally attributed to the great demand for England, consequent upon the extensive losses from foot-rot in many districts last year. At late markets the supply has uniformly been under that of the previous year, owing to the large sales of the six quarters and two year-olds last autumn; and to make up stocks adequate to the demand is attributed the rise in rents of pastures of all kinds this year."—Perthshire Courier.

Let us offer the furmers a word of advice: whatever dangers take place, let them never act under the influence of panie, induced by the representations of the monopolist landlords, until those landlords give evidence, real evidence, that they have belief in their own pro beeies, by coming forward and offering handsome and permanent reductions of rent. Let farmers act steadily on this advice, and they need fear no panic.

FANCIFUL DISTINCTIONS.

"GUANO TRADE.—It appears from a return issued yester-day by order of the House of Lords, that in the year 1841, there were seven British vessels (and no foreign ones) enthere were seven British vessols (and no foreign ones) engaged in the grano trade, of 1,733 tons, and engaging 87 men. In 1842, there were 41 British vessels, occupying 500 men, and 30 foreign ships, employing 50 men. In the next year, there were only 13 British (and no foreign vessels) engaged, giving occupation to 202 seamen. In 1844, however, there were 246 British vessels (engaging 4,313 men), and one foreign ship to the 12 men), and in 1845 no fewer than one foreign ship (with 18 men); and in 1845 no fewer than 670 British (engaging 11,434 men) and four foreign vessels (with 52 men). This return is prepared from John Covey, Registrar of Shipping at the Custom-house, and is dated the

Doubtless the peer-perhaps the Duke of Richmondat whose instance this return was ordered, hugged himself with the notion that he should thereby show what an important article, to the commercial classes, foreign manare had become, and to build upon it some monopolist fallacy. These artificial scaroity gentlemen are always especial advocates of the use of guano,—against which, however, in fit circumstances we do not say a word,— Publish because they imagine it to be a short cut to high produce without accuraty of tonure or reduction of rank. But what is grano, I laik reddy-made, com-feeding of stock-which, during the process of manufacture, would afford profit to our farmers, and supply great additions to the animal food of the people. Yet the protectionists exult over the extension of the guano trade, and deny the farmers of this country liberty to import cheap food for their stock.

BLOOD FOR THE MARE!

"GAMBERERER SHOT.—Henry Jackson, head game-keeper to Sir George Sitwell, Renishaw Hall, and who has only recently been appointed such, went out near the hall on his rounds on Tuesday night. He had not been out long before three men suddenly came towards him, and one of thom fired a gun at him, but missed his aim. The same man fired again and shot him in the thigh. By some means he got into the hall, when medical aid was soon procured for him, and about a dozen of the shots extracted. Information was forwarded to the Sheffield police early in the morning, and an officer who had a knowledge of the locality and its inhabitants was promptly disputched to apprehend the offenders, who were known by the wounded man. In the course of the day the police succeeded in apprehending four of the persons who were suspected to have been concerned in the murderous attentpt. They were taken before a magistrate at Eckington, and remanded to Sheffield."-Sheffield

Are these the deeds of civilised, Christian men? We know not whether the poor men who have to risk their lives in defence of the game, or those who, having been demoralised by game preserving, would madly have murdered their fellow-creature, are most to be pitied. Towards the game preservers and the upholders of the Clame Laws, there can be but one sentiment, that of Indignant condemnation. We are glad to see, however, that some landowners are becoming alive to the mischievousness of game preserving:

"DESTRUCTION OF CAME.—During the last season up wards of 21,000 hares and rabbits were killed upon the es tates of Thomas Clifton, Esq., of Lytham, besides a large number of pheasants, partridges, and other game. We understand it is intended to thin the number still further, as Mr. Clifton is determined that the destructive rayages of game shall not be a source of complaint amongst his tenants another year."-Lancashire Paper.

We wish we could say the practice of game preerving was decreasing. But game preservers must have the public eye of the intelligent and humane of this country strongly directed towards them, before they will abandon their selfish and pernicious pleasures.

INDIAN CORN.

The following has been sent us by a lady, and we recommend her practical receipts as deserving of wide circulation: " Heigham, near Norwich, April 14, 1846.

"We lived six years in New York state, and have used Indian corn almost daily for the last fourteen years in our family, which is large. I always have found that our servants, after a very short time grew as fond of it as we are. I venture to send you my receipts, which I had printed in hopes of 'diffusing' this branch of 'useful knowledge." I sont some to Father Mathewat Cork, and he tells me he has had a few thousand copies reprinted for circulation. I have just sent a sheet to Dr. Lindley, and Mr. Gedge, of the Bury Post, hoping they will aid in the circulation; and perhaps you will find a vacant corner in the LEAGUE."

A DOZEN RECEIPTS FOR COOKING INDIAN

By a Person who has used it many years in her Family. By a rerson who has used it many years in her ramity.

Bread of Indian Meal and Flour.—2. Indian Meal Dumplings.—3. Johnny Cake. — 4. Mush.—5. Fried Mush.—6. Boiled Indian Pudding.—7. Baked ditto.—

S. Plain ditto,—9. Indian Meal Gruel.—10. Indian Pancakes.—11. Corn Cake, or Corn Bread.—12. Sweet Corn Cakes.—13. Light Corn Bread.—14. Plain Corn Bread.—Remarks.—10. Hominy, to make.—10. Hominy, to

Yellow Indian Corn is far more nutritious, and tastes better, than White Indian Corn.

Indian Corn Meal must not be ground too fine; it generally requires to be sifted, and the coarsest bran taken out;

this when boiled is good food for pigs.

Bread cannot be made of Indian meal alone: one-third of meal to two-thirds of wheat flour is quite as much as the bread will bear; more meal would make it too sweet and sticky. To make bread, take for example 71bs. of Indian meal, and pour boiling water on it till it is all wet; it never knots like flour: then let it stand till it becomes milk-warm, and stir in one stone and a half of flour with the hauds; proceed then exactly as you would with wheaten bread; of course but little more water will be required. It takes rather longer to bake than wheaten bread.

Indian Meal Dumplings are made exactly like suct dumplings; or if you prefer them without suct, mix them with milk instead of water; they require longer time in boiling than flour dumplings. If any is left to be cold, it is good out in slices and fried Johnny Cake, which is in fact a pudding, and caten hot, is made thus. Take about two pints of Ludian meal and mix with it about one table spoonful of melted pork lard or clear beef dripping. Dissolve one tea-spoonful of sait, and half a tea-spoonful of soda in a tea-cup, with cold water; pour milk into the meal till it forms a stiff batter; and the sait and water, and one beaten egg. Grease a shallow tin, such as is used for Yorkshire puddings, and pour the batter in the best oven for shirts two hours. in. Bake it in a brisk oven for about two hours. You may in. Bake it in a brisk oven for about two hours. You may make Johnny Cake without milk, by putting rather more lard-in-it-or its you please you may make it with milk and water, as convenient. N I Johnny Cake should never be made think; an inch deep is enough.

Mach is a minch deep is enough.

Mach is a minch deep is enough.

Mach is palian med surred into cold water, or milk and yeller milk thin, and then bolled for about half, an hour.

Mach is palian med surred into cold water, or milk and yeller milk thin, and then bolled for about half, an hour.

Fried Mush.—If any much be left, when it is cold stir in more Indian meal till it is very stiff: out it out of the pan ire pieces about balf an inch thick, and fry it in beef or poris lard. It is excellent, Boiled Indian Pudding .- Make a suff better by attrings Indian meal into a quart of milk or water. Add two cablespoonfuls of flour, three of brown sugar, two test spoonfuls of ginger, and two of salt. If you make it with water, mix in a little chopped anet and one egg, but with milk those are not required. The rather loose, and boil for three hours as Baked Indian Padding .- Boll three or four pints of milk, according to the size of the dish you mean to fill, and stir in Indian meal till it becomes about as thick as stiff batter. Stir in two or three onnees of butter, and half a tes-oupful of brown sugar. Add according to taste either a little grated lemon peel, or any spice you like. Butter a shaflow earther baking dish, and bake in a moderate oven for three quarters of an hom, or longer if needful. When cold it will casily turn out, and this pudding is better cold than hot.

Plain Indian Pudding.—Scald a quart of milk, and stir fra seven table-spoonfuls of Judini meal, one too spoonful of salt, one of ginger or circumon, and half a ten cupful of treacle. Grease a baking dish, and bake for about two

Indian Meal Gruel.—Stir a table spoonful or two of meal into cold water; boil it till it is thickened as much as you

Indian Pancakes. - Mix about a plut of mest with sufficient milk or water, and one beaton egg to make a thin butter; fry them in as small a quantity of land us possible.

Corn Cakes, or Corn Bread. Pour boiling water with a little sait in it on Indian meal; mix it asstiff as you can with the hands; roll it into balls the size of an orange, them flatten the balls, till the cakes are about half an inch thick. Fry them in a small quantity of beef land, merely sufficient to prevent their sticking to the pan, or hurning. They are to be eaten hot, generally as a breakfast disb.

Sweet Corn Cakes .- Mix one quart of milk, one beaten egg, a tea-spoonful of salt, and half as much sods, and two table-spoonfuls of treacle. Pour this on meal and stir it well till it becomes thoroughly mixed, and stiff enough to make into that cakes like those in the last receipt. Fry them for Light Corn Bread. -- Stir four pints of Indian meal into three pints of tepid water; add one large tea spoonful of sal; ; let it rise for 5 or 6 hours, then stir it up with the hand; use as much dough for each roll as can be conveniently shaped in the hand; make oblong rolls about an inclu and a half or two inches thick; bake in a brisk oven.

Plain Corn Bread. - Take six pints of Indian meal, one tea spoonful of salt, four pints of hot water, and mix the roughly with the hands; let it stand for half an hour or more, then form it as in the last receipt, and bake it in a hot Remarks.-All kinds of corn bread require a hotter oven than flour bread.

Never grind the corn too fine, or wift it through a fine sieve; no matter how course the meal if the husk is re-

The hotter the oven or Dutch oven, so that it will not burn the dough, the softer and sweeter will be the bread.

Hominy is a dish hardly known in this country except by name. It is a western word, and a dish most common for the Western States of America; it is simply "hulled core." The way to prepare it is this: Send the corn to the mill. and have it cracked or ground as coarse as possible. If there is any meal amongst it, sift it out, and retain only the cracked corn for hominy. The mill will have disengaged the skin, so that the cook can wash it off; this should be cone in cold water, rubbing it with the hands, and changing the water two or three times. Another method of getting vid of the skin is to souk the corn for about ten minutes in soda and water, or in lye, and then pound it in a mortar, but this is tedious. When the hominy is thus prepared, put it sto a large pot of cold water, and boil it steadily for six or eight hours. Add hot water frequently whilst boiling, otherwise the hominy will burn and become dark. It should be perfectly white, like well boiled rice. Send it to table dry and

The usual way in the Western States is to boil hominy twice a wock, and set it by in an earthen vessel for daily use. When wanted for breakfast or dinner, put a piece of butter into a baking-dish, melt it, then fill the dish with hominy well mashed down; let it heat thoroughly, and it is fit to eat. Some people allow the bottom to bake, then turning it topsyturvy in the dish, the crust serves to keep it hot.

For frying fish, use coarse Indian meal instead of bread

For stuffing, use Indian meal instead of grated broad.

PROSPECTS OF CHEAP AND GOOD FOOD.—Amongst the matters at present exciting interest, nothing as more important, or displays more the character of the commercial cuterprise of the day, than the steps new taking for insuring a future supply of food. Within a very few days, there has been rivalry between the American and Norwegian mer-chants in ice, turkeys, and capons, many of which have ar-rived in a state fit for the domestic table. Within the last rived in a state fit for the domestic table. Within the last three years, nearly 500,000 pine apples have been imported from the West Indies: turde in abundance; and even preserved spricots from Port Philip, in Australia. The measured spricots from Port Philip, in Australia. sures of the proposed tariff have, in many instances, been anticipated by intelligent speculators in the city, and reciprocated by agriculturists abroad. One intelligent firm in Monument Yard alone have added, within the last two years, many luxuries and necessaries to the table, including pine apples and turtle from the Baliamas; new potatoes from the zores; salmon from Labrador, imported by the Hudson's Bay Company; pork and bacon from Lisbon; preserved mosts from Australia; hope, smoked beef, and tongues, from the United States, &c. The most extraordinary results, however, perhaps from anticipated From Trade, have been in the importation of American choose. The pointoes, introduced as neverties from the Accountage of the pointoes, introduced as neverties from the Accountage of the pointoes, introduced as neverties from the Accountage of the pointoes. the importation of American cheese. The potetoes, introduced as novelties from the Azores last spring, have now become absolute necessaries, as they are the chief source on which a future healthy crop can be looked forward to. The Hordenhural Society has not been babling in animpositie the future wants of the community, by introducing swifting ware of food. Two new articles in farinaceous food lays been added recently in the importation of years and hadanes. In considerion with these statements, it is a matrix of motoristy there his wants of frust integrand but the slips provisions is such, and has been so for senting that the statements in the considerior in the future of the such as the considerior is such, and has been so for senting the considerior in the future of the such as the considerior is such, and has been so for senting the considerior.

REVIEW.

Economic Fallacies (Sophismes Economiques, par M. F. Bastiat.) Paris: Guillaumin; London:

M. Frederic Bastiat's able work, entitled, "Cobden and the League," has already introduced him to the favourable notice of our readers. He is a philosophical economist of the highest order—a man who unites profound science to active henevolence. a sincere love of truth to a firm resolution to assert its cause, and who combines a thorough hatred of falsehood with large power and resolute will to expose its delusions. The greater part of the work before us is devoted to the exposure of the fallacies of protection, which, though confuted here to the satisfaction of the great bulk of the people, have still some influence over public feeling in France, where the monopolists have been far more successful than they have been on this side of the Channel in feneing round their selfish interests by appeals to popular prejudice. But M. Bastiat does more than overthrow: he builds up. We may say of him, in a different sense from the poet-

" Diruit, ædificat, mutat quadrata rotundis."

That is, he throws down sophistry, he crects the system of sound principle, and he changes the angular forms of mere superficial extent for the circular of greatest capacity. In bringing this work before our readers, we believe that an analysis of the reasoning will be more instructive to them, and more equitable to the author, than a mere selection of specimens. In this instance, quotations would too closely resemble the brick which, according to Hierocles, the Greek blockhead carried round as a specimen of his house. Instead of picking out a few bricks, we shall endeavour to give a plan of the

M. Bastiat opens the discussion by stating as the first point in issue the comparative merits of PLENTY and SCARCITY.

There is something repulsive to common sense and common humanity in supposing that any man would deliberately assert abundance to be an evil to be deprecated; and want, a good to be sought. But we have sad evidence that this monstrous assertion finds advocates in the press and the senate. will be inundated with foreign corn," exclaims Lord Stanley; "Deprive not the Irish of your markets for their corn, else they will die of a plethora when consuming at home," whines forth that most self-complacent patriot, W. S. O'Brion; "Let bread be dear, and the farmers will be rich," is the great aphorism of M. Bugeaud on one side of the water, and Lord George Bentinck on the other. It is sometimes attempted to disguise the naked wickedness of this legislation to produce want by substituting the word cheapness for abundance, and the words high price for scarcity: but the terms are obviously identical. Cheapness is merely the sign of abundance, as dearness is of scarcity. High prices and famine price are one and the same thing; and those who legislate to seeme high prices for food are speculating in scarcity, and driving a trade in starvation. They deliberately plan the destruction of one portion of the population to extort high prices from the survivors. But we may be told that this view of the case carries the protective system to an extreme not intended by monopolists. But we say, if their principle is sound, it must sustain all its consequoncos; it must be valid for famine if it be valid for insufficiency of supply. The question between protection and Free Trade is simply a question between artificial scarcity and natural abundance; the extent of the scarcity is indifferent to the issue. Protection, however, has its logic, and we shall fairly state the argument by which it is supported. The producer who obtains a high price for his products, generally obtains a high profit—that is, a large remuneration for his industry. By rendering these products artificially scarce, he increases their price in the market, and therefore increases the amount of reward obtained for his labour. If, then, any special branch of industry be protected from competition, the price of its products will be thereby raised, and the remuneration of all engaged in the production will be increased in the sumo proportion. Apply this to all branches of production in a country, and you will secure the prosperity of all classes of producers. Such is the logic of scarcity as it is enunciated very distinctly every morning in the Post, and sometimes stated with great rhotorical skill. The same principles are maintained by Mrs. Harris and Mrs. Gamp, but the unfortunate creatures have not the skill to give it even the form of an argument.

We do not dony that this argument, as it has often been stated by the Morning Post in its special application to some one branch of industry, is specious: in fact, the syllogism is not false, it is simply incomplete. It presents the truth, but not the whole with; and it may decrive, because the truth asserted must be present to the mind, while the truth omitted may escape the cognisunce even of the imagination.

and a greater; which, however, are intertwined with each other. Let us consider the lesser first. It is assumed in the reasoning that high prices are coincident with high profits, and that consequently artificial scarcity will always increase the remuneration for production. But if instead of producing one article at a profit of five shillings, the producer at the same proportionate outlay can bring three articles to market at a profit of half-a-crown, though the price of each article is lowered by 2s. 0d., his ultimate gain is increased by the same amount. This at all events shows a possibility of profits being realised on abundant production, as well as by a system of artificial scarcity, and points to a serious flaw in the logic of protection, even when applied exclusively to the interests of the producer.

But men produce to consume; every man is a consumer, as well as a producer. The logic of scarcity only regards him under the productive aspeet. Let M. Bastiat state the supplementary

"The consumer is so much the richer, as he purchases the articles of which he is in need at a cheaper rate; he pur chases them cheap in proportion to their abundance, and consequently abundance enriches him; and this reasoning extended to all consumers forms the theory of abundance."

M. Bastiat very justly remarks that the theory of scarcity would never have been put into opposition with the theory of abundance, had not men been misled by illusive notions of exchange. Were man a solitary animal, incapable of making exchanges, the theory of want would be a palpable absurdity. Robinson Crusoe in his desert island would never have complained that the fruits of the earth grew in too great a quantity, or that the chests of the seamen which floated ashore contained too large a supply of clothes. But, as Archbishop Whately has well observed, "Man is essentially a catallactic animal,"—that is, an animal which makes exchanges. For this description of man, in his economic relations, the archbishop has been severely rated by some ignorant and conceited sentimental ists, who would substitute for sound science pedantic vanities and puerile conceits. But exchange, as M. Bastiat shows, is the principal fact in the inquiry; and the fallacies which prevail, arise from misapprehension of its nature and import. Let us first take M. Bastiat's comparison of the theory of want and the theory of abundance as applied to an individual and isolated human being:

"If man had been a solitary animal, labouring exclusively for himself, and consuming the fruit of his toil,—in a word, if he made no exchange, the theory of want would never have been introduced into the world. It would be too evident that abundance would be advantageous to him, from whatever source it might be derived; whether it had been the result of his own industry, or of ingenious implements and powerful machines which he had invented; whether it was due to the fertility of the soil, the liberality of nature, or even to a mysterious invasion of products which the waves might have brought him from abroad and cast upon the shore. The man would never have deemed it necessary to encourage himself, to find employment for his labour, by breaking the implements which abridge his toil, neutralising the fertility of the soil, or throwing back into the sea the articles which it had brought to his shore. He would easily comprehend that labour is a means, not an end, and that it would be absurd to reject the object of labour, through fear of injuring the means. He would understand that, if he spends two hours of the day to provide for his wants, every circumstance (no matter whether it be machinery, fertility, or gratuitous gift) which spares him an hour of this toil, the results remaining the same, places this hour at his disposal to make some further addition to his welfare; in fact he would comprehend that the saving of labour is progress."

But exchange raises two antagonistic interests. On the one hand, it is our interest to sell dear; on the other hand, it is our interest to buy cheap. The question then arises, whether legislation is to be guided by the interests of producers, or by the interests of consumers? Now it is, in the first place, evident, that all men are consumers, including the producers themselves; and in the next place, it is evident that it is impossible, and idle if it were possible, to extend protection to all classes of producers. So far, then, as the greatest happiness of the greatest number should be an influential principle in legislation, the interest of the consumers and the theory of abundance are unquestionably entitled to the preference.

All legislation for the exclusive benefit of pro ducers is obviously and essentially anti-social, being designed to restrict the supply of the wants of society. The system of protection, that of the Corn Laws, for instance, stands in this dilemma; it either excludes provisions, and thus produces artificial scarcity, or it does not. If it does, then the advocates of protection confess that they are injuring consumers—that is, the entire nation, to the utmost extent of their power. If they deny that these laws produce such scarcity, it follows that they do not raise prices, and consequently they are of no use to producers. Profession, then, is either mis-OHIEVOUS or USELESS: there is no other alternative.

The second sophism exposed by M. Bastlat is that which confounds wants with wealth, and obstacles with causes:

serted must be present to the mind, while the action of the large area of the large area of the large area of the large area. There are, in fact, two truths omitted—a lesser of his patient. The more numerous, the more intense, and the more frequent these diseases are, the more people are willing, and indeed the more they are compelled to labour for his personal interest. In his point of view, disease, that is, the general obstice to he harmings is the cause of caneral promarity. All productions In his point of view, also see, that is, the general overacte to man happiness, is the cause of general prosperity. All produces make use of the same reasoning in whatever personally concerns themselves. The carrier derives his profits from the obstacle called distance; the agriculturist from that name bunger; the weaver from that named cold; the schoolman lives on ignorance; the jeweller on vanity; the lawyer of cupidity, just as the physician does on disease. It is then true that each profession has an immediate interest in the continuation, and even the extension of the special obtack which is the object of his efforts."

Intimately connected with this sophism is a third which attributes economic value to efforts instead of to results. It is the sophism of the Post on thene. cessity of employing the population irrespective of the consideration whether the employment be productive or unproductive. As this sophism, pushed to its remote but legitimate consequences, would find its full development in the fable of Sisyphus, eternally doomed to roll a huge stone up a hill, which tumbled back again so soon as it approached the summit, M. Bastiat calls the system Sisyphism. Let us remember the description of that hero's punish

"With many a weary step, and many a groan, Up the high hill be hurls the huge round stone; The huge round stone, resulting with a bound Thunders impetuous down, and smokes along the ground.

There are two systems with regard to labour; one recommends the production of the greatest amount of result with the least possible expenditure of toil the ther avers that to abridge toil and economisa labour is an injury to society. The clamour against machinery is pure Sisyphism. Sentimentalists, when they hear that the steam engine saves the labour of hundreds and thousands of men, exclaim that machinery is taking away employment. Sistphism is particularly eloquent on behalf of native industry. In Ireland it expends an abundance of bad rhetoric travestied from Ossian and Carlyle in recommending the exclusive use of Irish manufactures. Its first and last panacea for all the evils of humanity is, "give employment." Now we, who are not Sisyphists, believe it advantageous to give employment, when the labour employed leads to remunerative production; but so far as the result is unremunerating, the employment is but a rolling of the stone of Sisyphus, with the additional hardship that the toil is imposed where no punishment is merited.

But Sisyphism is a sad hypocrite; there is not one of its professors who does not exercise his intelligence to economise his own time and his own toil as much as possible. What Sisyphist, aspiring to be a statesman, does not look for a short cut to Parliament or place? What Sisyphean agriculturist does not endeavour to obtain the richest harvest by the least proportional outlay? What Sisyphist on the turf does not aim at winning as much as he can on every race? In fact, no man ever applies Sisyphism to his own individual cause. The conduct of every Sisyphist in the world is a practical refutation of his own doctrines.

We have only goue through one division of M. Bastiat's work, for which we venture to predict a permanent European reputation. We hope that the friends of Free Trade beyond the Atlantic will exert themselves to secure for it an extensive circu lation in the United States. The lessons which it inculcates are not more important to France than they are to America.

The Topic, Nos. 1—4. London: Mitchell. This is a new periodical, designed to furnish a condensed view of all the information necessary to comprehend the nature and bearing of whatever great question has the most prominent claim on public attention. The four numbers published respectively discuss the state of the Punjaub, the Oregon question, the new tariff, and the condition of Poland. Each is a very fair digest of the know. ledge attninable on the several subjects, written in a calm style, and with an impartial temper. We wish every success to this new literary enterprise. So far as it has gone, we find it perfectly satisfactory: but a larger experience is necessary before we can fairly estimate the skill required of the conductors in selecting subjects, or the ability displayed in their discussion.

THE COLISEUM. To those who love to spend an eren ing of quiet and innocent recreation, this place continued ing of quiet and innocent recreation, this place continue afford an agreeable attraction. The magnificent circular room, in which are placed the statues, forms a delighted promenade. In the evening, the whole establishment is promenade. In the evening, the whole establishment is brilliantly lighted up. The most placing and attraction feature in the exhibition is the view of London by modellighted the property of the state of the s feature in the exhibition is the view of London by modular. This is maneged so well, that any one, unless periodic quainted with the place, might suppose that he was ing the great and busy city at his feet, and this allow moon and stars were shining over his bead. The mississive well worth self.

Verus of Heidelburg are well worth self.

Value or a Marker build holdst all day of the accounts from New Orleans there foreign ports 21,000 briesting in the self.

The postour western posts to be accounted to the self.

tivity sound these treated regret two fr

Londo

coach don, i

THE

Westn miscu fered i comin

which

-forth 4

butter

above cloth v ormam wear g

ster, or Londo: that the ceeding posed i cloth d

lustorie to eat t and we Afterwa WAS AS it is no Presed p gage th abourd to us of elemen King I legialat restrict the Kir all fair days o times .

THE PLYMOUTH FREE TRADE ASSO-CIATION.

The Free Trade Association of Plymouth has rendered good service to the cause of commercial freedom by its activity and earnestness. For several years gratultous courses of winter lectures have been delivered under its auspices, and sound principles disseminated in a healthy and attractive form. We have just received a printed copy of the last of these lectures delivered, on the 26th of February, by the Rev. W. J. Odgers, "On the tendency of Free Trade to promore permanent and universal Peace." The lecturer has treated the subject with great eloquence and ability. We regret that our space will only allow us to give an extract or two from its pages:

MONOPOLY IN THE OLDEN TIME.

"In 1306 a law was passed prohibiting the use of coal in London, because some of the nobility and gentry complained that it infested the air with a noisome smell. Hackney coaches are said to have made their first appearance in Lon-con, in the year 1626. They were then only 20 in number for the whole of the capital and contiguous parts, and they did not ply in the streets, but were sent for, by those who wanted them, to the stables of certain inns where they stood. Ten years later, however, we find the King publishing a proclamation, in which he declares that the great number of hackney coaches of late time seen and kept in London, Westminster, and their suburbs, and the general and promiscuous use of coaches there, were not only a great disturbance to his Majesty, his dearest consort, the Queen, the nobility, and others of place and degree, in their passage through the streets, but the streets themselves were so pestered, and the pavements so broken up, that the common passages were hindered and made dangerous; and besides, the prices of hay and provender made exceeding dear.
'Wherefore,' concludes the proclamation, 'we expressly command, that no hackney or bired coaches be used or suffered in London, Westminster, or the suburbs thereof, except they be to travel at least three miles out of the same. And also, that no person shull go in a coach, in the said streets, except the owner of the coach shall constantly keep up four able horses for our service (the King's service) when required. Such an edict as this, so insolent in its tone, so arbitrary and absurd in its exactions, enables us to measure the distance between the 18th and 18th century. Yet I am fully persuaded that to those who may be living 50 years hence, many of the restrictions which now fetter the commerce of this country, will appear little less abourd than this law about the backney coaches appears to us. I must beg leave to offer you one specimen more of this vexatious Parliamentary interference with the trading concerns of the community. In 1363, an Act of Parliament was passed, from which the following are quotations. The preamble sets forth the extra agant and excessive apparel of several sorts of people beyond their estate and degree, to the destruction and impoverishment of all the land.' And then it prescribes the food and dress of different classes of the people. It enacted, that 'men-servants of lords, as also of tradesmen and artisans, shall be content with one meal of fish or flesh every day; and the other meals daily shall be of milk, cheese, butter, and the like. And the cloth they wear shall not exceed the price of two marks for the whole piece; neither shall they use any ornaments of gold, silver, silk, or embroidery; nor their wives and daughters any veils above the value of twelve-pence.'

"Further, 'Artisans and yeomen shall not wear cloth above the value of forty shillings the whole piece' (our finest cloth was then worth about six pounds per piece), ' nor the ornaments before named. Nor their women any veils of silk, but only those of thread made in England.'

Ploughmen, carters, sh spherds, and such like, not having 40s value in goods or chattels, shall wear no sort of cloth, but blanket or russet lawn of twelve-pence, and shall wear girdles or belts; and they shall only eat and drink suitable to their stations. And whoever wears other apparel than is prescribed by the above laws, shall forfeit the same.'

"Lastly: 'Clothiers shall make suitable quantities of cloth of all the before-named prices; and mercers and shopkeepers in towns and cities shall keep due sortments thereof, so that these laws may be duly observed.'

"But the best specimen I have met with of restrictions on our inland trade, in the olden time, is that imposed by Henry III., in 1245. He proclaimed a fair to be held in Westminster, on which occasion he ordered that all the traders of London should shut up their shops, and carry their goods to be sold at the fair, and that all other fairs throughout England should be suspended during the 15 days it was appointed to last. The King's object, no doubt, was to obtain a supply of money from the tolls and other dues of the market. What made this interference to be felt as a greater hardship was, that the weather all the time of the fair happened to be exceedingly bad, so that not only the goods were spoiled, exposed to the rain as they were in tents covered only with cloth, and that probably imperfectly enough; but (the historian tells us) the dealers themselves, who were obliged to eat their victuals with their sect in the mud, and the wind and wet about their ears, suffered intolerably. Four years afterward the king repeated the same piece of tyranny, and was again seconded by the elements in a similar fashion. This time, too, scarcely any buyers came to the fair; so that it is no wonder the unfortunate merchants were loud in expressing their dissatisfaction.

"Now this is a picture of monopoly, worthy, I think, to engage the inimitable penoil even of Punch himself; and yet, about and unjust as this great Westminster market seems to us of the market seems. to us of the present day, do we not see combined in it all the clements of the larger monopolies of subsequent times? As Ring Henry III. caused this fair to be proclaimed that he might raise money for his own use, just so the land holding legislators framed and supported the Gorn Laws: and other restrictive edicts to put money into their own pockets. As the King ordered all the shops to be closed in London, and all fairs to be suspended throughout England during the 15 days of his Westminster market, just so legislators of after times would not allow Toutleb an appropriate the purphased times would not allow English manufactures to be purchased except at certain 'staple towns,' with they chose to fix es.
The mearable condition of the dealess themselves, expendition to the wind and rain with their feet in the mud for 10 days. to the wind and rain with their feet in the mud for 10 days, and the absence of customers, may serve to represent the section, and the physical sufferings produced by monocytus at costs. And the physical sufferings produced by monocytus at costs.

show you) restrictions on a larger scale have repeatedly set nationa at war.

WARB WAYN GROWN OUT OF COMMERCIAL RESTRICTIONS. "I shall now point you to some facts to prove how, on the other hand, inonopoly leads to contention, plunder, and bloodshed. In 1429, the Court of Denmark, for their own private advantage, prohibited the resort of foreign ships to fish on the coasts of Iceland; and required that they should, instead, come to Bergen, in Norway, and nowhere clae, and there buy fish from the Norwegians, at their own price. The ship-owners of London, Bristol, Hull, and other places, refusing to comply with such an unreasonable demand, resorted, as formerly, to the coast of locland, for the fishery of cod and ling. The consequence was, that contentions frequently took place between the crews of the English and Danish ships, and damage to such an extent ensued, that an Act of Parliament was passed, in the reign of Henry V for the purpose of obtaining redress for the extensive plunder that had been committed, and prohibiting any Danish sub-jects from coming to this country to trade, until restitution was obtained. Similar contentions continued in later times to be produced by the same cause.

"As the next illustration of the tendency of monopoly

I refer to the atroclous massacre at Amboyna, in 1023 Amboyna is one of the Molucca or Spice Islands, in the eastern seas. In 1531 this island was taken possession of by the Portuguese, who practised on the natives every species of tyranny and cruelty. At the commencement of the 17th century, the Spice Islands were taken from the Portuguese by the Dutch. The natives, however, experienced very little better treatment from the Dutch than they had done from their former oppressors. I lence the inhabitants of Amboyna were continually in arms, and the country became the constant scene of strife and desolation. At a very early period after its first formation, the English East India Company endeavoured to appropriate to itself a share of the Spice trade. In 1612, the Company formed a settlement at Cambello, in this island, from which the settlers were forced to retire in June, 1614. An attempt was made to accommodate the dispute between the English company and the Dutch, relative to the right of trading with the Spice Islands, and a treaty for this purpose was concluded in London, in July, 1619. But so many disputes occurred in executing the provisions of this treaty, that the grounds of contention appear to have been multiplied, rather than reduced, and at length reached such a point, that, under the accusation of conspiring to surprise the garrison and expel the Dutch from the island, Captain Towerson, and nine Englishmen, with nine Japanese and a Portuguese sailor, were seized at Amboyna, tried, pronounced guilty, and executed. This event, known as the "Massacro of Amboyna," excited the greatest indignation in England, and became the subject of the most formal remonstrances on the part of the British Government.

"During the war with Holland, in 1798, Amboyna was captured by a British force under Admiral Raineir. It was restored at the peace in 1801, was taken again by the English in 1801, and was again given up to Holland, at the treaty of

"And what was it that led to all this contention and bloodshed? It was in one word, monopoly. The main object of the different European powers, who endeavoured to possess themselves of Amboyna, was to monopolise the trace in cloves, the cultivation of which spice forms the principal object of industry with the natives. With the desire of keeping the cultivation of the clove-tree completely within their own power, the Dutch caused it to be extirpated from every island, with the exception of Amboyna, where they provided for a sufficient production of the spice, by compelling every native family to rear a certain number of clove trees. In the prosecution of their plans the island was divided into 4000 allotments, each one of which was expected to support 125 trees; and a law was passed in 1792, rendering it compulsory upon the natives to make up the full complement. Such are the tender mercies' of monopoly! According to this statement the number of trees upon the island amounted to 5(N),(NX) the average produce of which exceeded one million of pounds

" The next evidence I shall adduce to show that monopoly leads to war, is the famous Navigation Act, framed and passed for the purpose of monopolising all the carrying trade of Great Britain. The foundation of this Act was laid during the protectorate, and the system was perfected by the 12th of Charles II. This Act provided that no merchandise of either Asia, Africa, or America, should be imported into Great Britain in any but English-built ships, navigated by an English commander, and having at least three fourths of their crew English. The system now described continued to be steadily and pertinaciously maintained during more than 100 years, and was looked upon as a monument of wisdom and prudence, to which was mainly attributable the degree of commercial greatness to which we had attained.

"But Adam Smith very justly says, 'The Act of Navigation is not favourable to foreign commerce, or to the growth of that opulence that can arise from it. The interest of a nation in its commercial relations to foreign nations is, like that of a merchant with regard to the different people with whom he deals, to buy as cheap and to sell as doar as possible. But it will be most likely to buy cheap, when by the most perfect freedom of trade, it encourages all nations to bring to it the goods which it has occasion to purchase; and for the same reason, it will be most likely to sell dear, when its markets are thus filled with the greatest number of

"But what was the effect of this monopolising Navigation Act? One of its first consequences was undoubtedly the war with Holland, which broke out the year after it was passed. It is admitted also by a writer who ranks amougst the most zealous eulogists of this Act, that it 'occasioned at first loud complaints that, though our people had not shipping enough to import from all parts whatever they wanted, they were, nevertheless, by this law, debarred receiving due supplies of merchandise from other nations, who only could, and till then did, import them. In reference to the war coccasioned by the Navigation Ant, the ame writer (Anderson) says, 'In the year 1052 and the following year almost incredible destruction and quetures were made of merchant ships, as well as of ships of war and sailors, on both sides : there having been, in only nine months of the year 1009, four general naval engagements, besides lesser ones.' And four general havel engagements, besides lesser ones. And all this is to be laid to the charge of monopoly.

"I have next to refer to M. Colbert's famous tariff of 1007, by which the importation of all manufactures into France was prohibited. Upon this, the Duich immediately in talliated by prohibiting the wines, brandles, and other productions of the prohibiting the wines, brandles, and other productions of the prohibiting the wines, brandles, and other productions of the prohibiting the wines, brandles, and other productions of the prohibiting the wines, brandles, and other productions of the problems of the problems of the problems.

"I may next refer to the war with Spain commenced th 1780. as another illustration of the 'tender mercies' of monopoly. The English merchants claimed the right of cutting logwood on the shores of the bay of Campeachy, in Mexico. But the Spaniards wished to monopolise this power, and resolved to annihilate the claims of the English. Great cruelties were inflicted on the crews of many of the English merclient ships, some of whom were seized and sent to dig in the mines of Potosi. Loud complaints were made by the English merchants to the House of Commons. The consequence was, that this matter of cutting logwood in the bay of Campeachy, which, as Goldsmith says, was considered as an object of too little importance to make a separate article in any negotiation,' finally led to a war which lasted nine years and cost us nearly fifty-four millions of money! This, again, is to be placed to the account of monopoly!
"Thus, how small a matter often leads to war!

was an equally small matter which led to the war between this country and France, which immediately followed that between England and Spain. In reference to that war, a celebrated French historian says, 'France lost in the course of this fatal war, the flower of her youth, more than built the current coin which circulated in the kingdom, her fleet, her commerce, and her oredit. It was believed (he continues), that it would have been easy to have prevented so many misfortunes, by accomodating matters with England for a small disputed territory, in the neighbourhood of Canada; but some ambitious persons, to gain importance, and render themselves necessary, precipitated France into this fatal war. The same thing happened in 1741, when the vanity of two or three people was sufficient to spread desolution through Europe. We see another illustration of the blighting and hostile influence of commercial restrictions, in Napoleon's Berlin Decrees, whereby he declared all the ports of Great Britain in a state of blookade, and forbade all trading with us, or in the articles of our produce and manufactures. This led the English Government to adopt measures of retaliation, which, as Porter says, ' proved directly and immediately injurious to our trade, in a greater degree than all the efforts of the enemy would probably have succeeded in accomplishing.' And many who now hear me can well remember the mischief and misery occasioned by these retaliatory measures.

"I might also refer to the American revolutionary war, as having been likewise occasioned mainly by monopoly. Whoer, r,' says the celebrated Daniel Webster, of America - whoever has looked deeply into the causes which pro-auced our revolution, has found, if I mistake not, the original principle for back, in this claim, on the part of England to monopolise our trade, and a continued effort on the part of the colonies to resist or evade that monopoly. And what were the consequences of that war to this country It involved us in a debt of more than a hundred millions sterling, lost us the colonies altogether, and excited in them a hostile spirit fraught with evils, which have been ever since and will long continue to be felt. THE HORRORS OF WAR.

"The expense of war is only one item, and a comparatively small one in the great account. The next item, and it is a larger one, is the amount of suffering produced by it. War is necessarily associated with suffering. Read the ac-counts just received from India, of forced marches immediately followed by fierce and protracted engagements, and then attempt to picture to yourselves the field of battle, with the 4000 killed and wounded men on the one side, and probably an equal or a larger number on the other. Bring home to yourselves only a single instance from that awful and uncounted aggregate of horrors, and how can you be unmoved by it! 'Death, come when and where it may be it on the bed of down, or on the supporting bosom of affection-is a solemn visitation. The agenies and shudderings of nature proclaim it to be the great trial hour of human deatiny. But that hour-in the hot assault, or amidst the lingering agonies of the battle field, or where the grouns of the crowded hospital are its harbingers -- how does it come? No pillow of down, no supporting arms are there to receive the victim; no kind voice speaks to him; no noiseless step of affection approaches, nor looks of love hang over him, like a pitying angel's countenance; but he goes down—man as he is, with all a man's sensibility, it may be with all a man's ties to earthly home and love-he goes down amidst grouns and executions, and horrors darker than the shadow of death that is passing over him. This is but one death, such as war visits upon the human race; and yet it would not be in human nature actually to witness one such instance, without the most agonising desire to afford relief. But now, what facts are these which the history of war unfolds to us? The single campaign of Buonaparte in Russia carried death, and such death —not to one thousand, nor to five thousand, nor to fifty thousand, but to five hundred thousand human beings. Alexander and Cosar, it is computed, caused, each of them, the death of two millions of the human race; and the wars of Napoleon bring up the whole number of victims sacrificed to the ambition of three men, to six millions! Bix millions of human beings! The aged, the young, the manly and strong, the fair and lovely, the imploring mother, the innocent child-and death, death to each one, without dis-crimination and without mercy! Six millions of human beings; sacrificed to but three ministers in the dark kingdom of war! But this is only an item, a single passage in the history of its fearful dominion. There have been in Christendom, since the reign of Constantine, nearly three hundred wars. What a mass of columities, of ranino and violence, of crime and misery, is included within the brief description of these three words, three hundred wars—what wante of the treasures of nations, what wer in the abodes of millions, it passes all human power to calculate! But all this, nevertheless, has been experienced, though it cannot be calculated or imagined. If uman hearts have felt it all. Not one drop of this ocean of ills but has fallen, a burning drop, upon nerves and fibres that have quivered with agony at its

"One who was an eye-witness to the horrors of the sacking of Moscow, in 1812, says, 'On one side, we saw a son carrying a sick father; on the other, women, who poured the torrent of their tears on the infants whom they clasped in their arms. Old men, overwhelmed by grief still more than by years, weeping for the ruin of their country, lay down to die, near the houses where they were born. No respect was paid to the nobility of blood, to the innocence of youth, or to the team of beauty. The late Sir Charles Ball youth would in the brankels after the battle of Walersaw the wounded in the hospitals after the battle of loop and he says, 'It is impossible to conceive of their suffirings. Turn which way I might, I encountered every form of enhanced from those whose condition left no need of words to sith competition. I know not, he continued when notions my fellow countrymen have of 80,000 wounded men they will into a town and its violaity. They still that compassionate emotions by subscriptions; but what avails this to those who would exchange gold for a bit of rag to hind up their smarting wounds. My heart sickens at the conup their smarting wounds. My heart sickens at the con-templation, he says in conclusion, and I am obliged to turn away from this picture of human imsery caused by pride, ambition, a love of military glory, and the folly of mankind, in paying adoration to their destroyers. Would not angels weep at such a scene as this? But is this all? Ah! no! Each of these dead or wounded soldiers had a mother, who had watched over his cradle, and had attended him in his sickness, and shed over him the tears of maternal soldingle. wickness, and shed over him the tears of maternal solicitude. Many had wives and lovers, to whom they were dearer than the light of the sun; many had children, who had looked to them for support and protection. We may rationally sup-pose, that for every man who was killed or wounded in this deadly conflict, the hearts of at least ten persons—parents, wives, children, brothers and sisters, were incerated. Oh, what hecatombs of sacrifices on the bloody altar of Moloch! How long, he adds, ' will mankind continue to be accessory to such crimes, by bestowing praises upon their perpetra-tors? How long will it be, ere every human being will deem it his imperious and solemn duty to disseminate the principles of peace, and extend her empire?'

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of THE LEADUR. Crediton, Tuesday, April 21st, 1816. 81s,—If any proof were wanting of the perfect indifference with which the agriculturists in this part of the kingdom regard the effect which a repeal of the abominable Corn Laws will have on the value of land (however they may in their after-dinner speeches at agricultural meetings and else-where pretend to regard it), the following fact will supply

On Thursday last, the 16th instant, an auction was held by Mr. Thomas Hussey, auctioneer, at the Ship Hotel, in this town, for selling the fee of a small estate in this parish, about one mile and a half from the town, belonging to John Pidsley, Esq., called Yeo, otherwise Yew, containing 00 acres of land, now rented as an overland by Mr. Philip Francis (who lives on a small estate of his own, called Moore, adjoining Yew estate) at the yearly rent of 140%. and whose term therein will expire at Ladyday, 1848, at which time he will have held the estate for two terms, one of 14 and the other of 10 years), which, after a smart competition, was knocked down to Mr. Francis, the occupier, at the sum of 5520%, being but a fraction less than 39½ years value at the present rent of the farm.

It must be observed that scarcely any improvement can be effected on this property. Mr. Francis, who is an excellent practical farmer, and for many years following a suc-cessin competitor for prizes for sheep at the Devon Agricul-Shows, held in the Castle Yard, at Exeter, having, during his tenancy, got the estate into a high state of cultivation, as has been, without hesitation, admitted by all who looked at the property with a view to purchase, previous to the day of sale. I am, Sir, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

G. E.

To the Editor of THE LEADUE.

Sir,-In addition to the observations made in your paper of the 11th inst, regarding both the benefit to the agriculturist and the country to be derived from the culture of flax, it may be stated, that land in the limestone districts of Yorkshire, not found to be worth more than 5s. per acre to rent, has, since the discovery has been made of the beneficial culture of flax, acquired a value of 15s, and 20s, per acre, entirely owing to the benefits derived from the culture of this article, it having been found the best preparation for a wheat crop succeeding bountifully afterwards, and that the stimulus has been so great, as for even limestone lands, perhaps scarcely three inches depth of soil, producing 25 or 30 bushels of wheat per acre.

As it has been remarked, flax or line is not an exhausting crop, as during its growth it covers and smothers the land, as well as fertilises in a superior manner to any other system of management, even far superior to the benefits of a summer fallow; but as to the crop itself, the best management, preparing it for such culture, is giving to the land from one-third to half a ton of rape-cake, broken into nuts, or ground into dust, to the acre, and from which as bountiful crops of wheat have been produced as from the best clay soils in certain limestone districts in Yorkshire, alternately hearing a crop of flax, wheat, and seeds, the latter one year mown and a second year entirely for sheep pasturage that system has substituted in a great measure the necessity of using rape-seeds or dust for the next rotation of crops.

FREE TRADE MEETING IN PARIS.—From fifty to sixty of the principal representatives of the industrial interests of Paris met on the evening of Tuesday, the 14th, in the Casino des familles, Custom-House Street, (rue de la Douane), to be present at a conference on Free Trade, in which MM. Louis Leelerc, D. Polonic, Frédéric Bastiat, Aloido Fontoyrand, Joseph Garnier, and Pepin, gave utterance to their sentiments. The details and illustrations into which these different speakers entered were listened to, for reach three bours with the nearly three hours, with the most lively interest. Before separating, the meeting unanimously adopted the following resolution: "This meeting approves the formation of a Free Trade Association, and rosolves to give thereto its cordial ulheronce and support." At the request of the greater part of the members of this assembly, a new conference will be held in a few days, at which a greater number of the producers of Paris will be called together. This first attempt at a meeting (in front of the Custom House!) augurs well; and, besides, the question is everywhere becoming the order of the day. The Agricultural Club of the Rue de Beaune, frequented by the greatest proprietors of France, has like-wise expressed a wight to hear from M. Blauqui an account of the struggles of the League, and its great champion Mr. Cohden.-Journal des Economistes, Paris, April, 1840.

SNUTTERS.-A gentleman once asked the celebrated Abernethy if he thought that the moderate use of snuff would injure the brain? "No, Sir," was Abernethy's prompt reply, "for no man with a single ounce, of brains would ever think of taking snuff!"

A Chester contemporary complains that England should be "daily and hourly bearded by a shillingless vagabond, whom the saum of circumstances has made the President of the United States. This is outdoing Jouathan at his own

CORN LAWS OF ATHENS AND ROME.

Attica is a promontory about fifty-four miles in length, and with an area of only seven hundred square miles, equal to a with an area of only seven hundred square miles, equal to a moderate-sized English county. Its surface is mountainous and rocky, but it is situate in the neighbourhood of more fruitful regions. In the well-known introduction to his history, Thucydides states that Thessaly, Bootia, and the chief part of the Peloponnese were fertile; but that Attica was an unproductive district, on account of the scantiness of its soil. Owing to the remarkable intelligence and practical energy of the Athenians, and the excellence of their political institutions as compared with those of other Greek communities, their numbers and wealth increased and became great, notwithstanding the barrenness of their territory. In the prosperous times of Attica, the population was about 020,000, of whom not less than 400,000 were slaves; which gives an average of about 7(8) initializants to a square mile. The population, however, was not equally diffused over the country but a long part of it was called a linear the country. entire country, but a large part of it was collected in Athens, which, with its appendages, Pirmus, Munychia, and Phalerum, must have contained nearly 200,000 inhabitants.

In comparing the food of an ancient with that of a modern nation, it must not be forgotten how many articles, now in general consumption, were then unknown; bread, meat, fish, cheese, with some of the commoner garden vegetables; wine milk, and honey, formed nearly the whole range of their diet, both solid and liquid. Tea, coffee, cocoa, sugar, spices, spirits, beer, butter, rice, potatoes, and oranges, as well as to bacco, were not consumed in ancient Greece or in Italy. From a very early time wheat and burley were the two sorts of grain used by the Greeks for food, as well as by the inhabitunts of Palestine; oats and rye were not cultivated. The Athenians claimed the honour of having first made wheaten bread, and taught the use of it to mankind;—a topic derived from their mythological story, on which their eulogists were fond of dwelling; and in the historical age, the common or household bread of Athens was considered by gourmands as the best which was made in Greece. The stuple article of food for the large population of Attica, and particularly for the slaves, who formed nearly four-fifths of the whole, was wheaten bread. The annual consumption of corn probably amounted to about 2,800,000, or 3,000,000 medimni, (556,638 quarters); and we learn from Demosthenes, who appeals to he official record, that of this quantity about 800,000 me dimni (148,437 quarters) were imported by sea from foreign countries,—one-half of the imports being obtained from the Black Sea. Strabo informs us that the Tauric Chersonese. now the Crimea, was the district on the Black Sea, which supplied this corn; the flat part of this peninsula was, he states, exceedingly fertile in grain, yielding a return of as much as 30 to 1, and was inhabited by a more civilised race than the Nomads of the neighbouring region. Pericles, in his funeral oration in Thucydides, extelling the power of Athens, says, that on account of its greatness and wealth all things were imported into it from all countries; and Demosthenes affirms that no other nation in the world consumed so large a proportion of imported corn as the Athe-

In the first place, it may be observed, that the Roman Corn Law was, in fact, a Poor Law. The existence of slavery seems to render a poor law both unnecessary and impracticable; unnecessary, because the working classes are slaves, and therefore maintained by their masters; impracticable, because an inducement is afforded by it to emancipate old and unserviceable slaves, in order to entitle them to public relief. The number of needy freemen at Rome was, however, sufficient to render them dangerous to the Government, and to create a accessity for appearing them by dougtions of food. Notwithstanding the existence of slavery in the ancient Republics, there was always a large body of indigent citizens—a wretched and hungry populace, as Cicero calls it—who exercised a most important influence upon the character and administration of the Government. Every reader of Aristotle's "Politics" knows, that all his characteristics of democracy are founded upon the preponderance and supposed interests of the poorer section of the citizens, This class existed in Rome, as in other less powerful commonwealths. Philip, during his tribuneship in the year 105 B.C., said that there were not 2000 men of property in the state. From its first introduction, therefore, the system the state. From its first introduction, therefore, the system of free gifts of corn increased rapidly. The feeling which led to its extension is illustrated by an anecdote of Piso, surnamed Fragi (the honest), who had always spoken against the Corn Law of C. Cracchus. After the law had passed, Gracchus, seeing him standing among those who had come to receive their allowance, reproached him for his inconsistency. Piso's answer was that he should not wish inconsistency. Piso's answer was, that he should not wish his own property to be divided amongst the citizens; but if it were so divided, he should plaim his share. The system of corn distributions was reprobated by Cicero, on account of its tendency to destroy industry; and of its large drains upon the treasury. Both Cæsar and Augustus diminished the number of the recipients of the public corn; but the improvident system, which they could not eradicate, was naturally continued by their successors. With respect to the emancipation of slaves, in order to entitle them to receive the public corn, it seems that the existence of a permanent list, and the examination which took place before a new name was admitted upon it, afforded a sufficient security against this abuse. We read, however, that many manumis sions were made for the sake of extraordinary largesses of Pompey and Augustus.

Not only was the Roman Corn Law in fact a poor law but it was a partial poor law. It was confined to the city of Rome. The distributions of corn were made only to the indigent freemen of the capital. Italy at large derived no benefit from them. Sicily is called by ancient writers (as we have already remarked) the granary, not of Italy, but of Rome. This restriction of the public bounty tended to give a disproportionate size to the capital, and to attract to it a worthless and needy multitude from all parts of Italy and the empire. Above all, it was a poor law derived, not from local funds, Above all, it was a poor law derived, not from local funds, or even from a taxation common to the empire at large, but from the tributes of the provinces. The corn was not purchased from the proceeds of a tax levied on Rome or Italy: it was not a poor law in which the wealthier inhabitants of a district contributed from their surplus means to the maintenance of their poor neighbours. It was a poor law in which the populace of the conquering city were maintained at the expense of the conquered cities. It was as if several hundred thousand of the poorer classes of Paris had, during the government of Napoleon, been supported by taxas levied in government of Napoleon, been supported by taxes levied in Italy or Germany; as if the populace of Madrid had, in the sixteenth century, been fed at the cost of Flanders and the Indies; or as if the paupers of Vienna were maintained by a poor rate collected in Lombardy. This poor law, therefore, bad neither, on the one hand, the spirit of charity, nor, on bad neither, on the one hand, the spirit of charity, nor, or the other, the safeguards against abuse which belong to such a poor law as that which exists in Great Britain. It was a countibution wrung from the weak by the strong; not as a sistance given voluntarily by the richer to the poorer chasses. Being a tribute exacted by the dominant part of the empire, and being used for the purpose of appearing the hungry population of Rome, it grew rapidly, and there was little inducement for those who administered it to check in little inducement for those who administered it to check it increase."-Edinburgh Review.

REGISTRATION APPEALS.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

WILLS, Appellant; ADY, Respondent, JUDGMENT.—CHIEF JUSTICE TINDAL: There was a care JUDGMENT.—CHIEF JUSTICE TINDAL: There was a care which stood over among the appeals, the only one remaining that of the borough of New Surum. It is a case which trust upon the very same points as the former case from Data mouth, Knowles v. Brooking (given in the Number of The LEAGUE for April 18th), in which the Court gave their judgment. We can see no difference between them. My brother Maule wishes me to say that he still retains his opinion and the view he took of that case, but the majority of the and the view he took of that case, but the majority of the Court decide that the same judgment must be given for the

TREE TRADE INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION.

A. W. Paulton, Eag., Michard Potter, Eag.,
William Leavers, Req.,
William Wilson, Eag.,
R. G. Welford, Heq.,
Sidney Smith, Heq.,
Charles Swalsland, Eag., Crayford.

Charles Swaisland, Faq., Crayford.
TROST ESS.
Dr. Thomas Price, 7, Highbury-terrace, Islington.
George Thompson, Esq., 6, Waterloo place.
Cuptuin Cogan, Upper Mill., Hasmoremits.
BANKERS.
Messrs. Prescutt, Grote, & Co.
solutions.

Josh. Ivimey, Esq., 20, Chance y-lane. Mr. Frederick Farrand, Priory Villa, Poskham, Personal Priory Villa, Pockham, SECRETARY.

Mr. Alfred Lench Saul.

Prospectuses may be obtained, gratis, on application at the Soder's Offices, East Temple Chambers, Whitefriers-street, Fleet-street. The Rela
(6d. each) are now ready, and may be had as above.

Persona desirous to Join the Society are requested to make applicate immediately.

The Society's Offices will be open for receiving subscriptions and the general transaction of business, every Puesday and Friday everlags, from 6 to 9 o'clock.

TREE TRADE INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION THE TRADE INVESTMENT ASSOCIATION—
The Second Subscription is now called for, and will be paid on Today, May 5th, up to which time parties wishing to join the Society matake up Shares without additional entrance fees. Atterdance at the Society's Hoons (Feat Temple Chambers, Whiterfarm street, Fiel sirri.) for the purpose of enrolling new members, on Tuesday, the 2th April, ad Friday, the 1st May, from 6 to 9 o'clock in the evening.

The Pirst Meeting for the sale of Shares will be held on Tuesday, the 12th
May, at 7 o'clock in the evening.

TO COUNTRY SUBSCRIBERS

Any person forwarding 3s. 3d. by Post-office order to the Publisher, 67, Fleet-street, London, will have one quarters copies of the LEAGUE forwarded by post on the days of publication.

Subscriptions for the paper may also be left with
J. Gadsby, Newall's-buildings, Manchester; and the League may be had by order of any news-agent in town or country. Subscribers who receive coloured envelopes on their papers must bear in mind that their subscriptions are due.

POSTSCRIPT.

LONDON, Saturday Morning, April 25, 1840.

We live in strange times. Lord G. Bentinck denounces gambling, and Mr. D'Israeli preaches up cousistency. There would be a perfect trie if Ikey Solomons distinguished himself as an advocate of honesty. The petty importinence, the vulgar taunts. and the malignant sarcasms with which Sir Robert Peel is assailed by the champions of protection, are so utterly contemptible in themselves, and so the roughly naked in their motive, that they have be come not merely offensive, but disgusting. Such splenetic offusions of mortified vanity and disal pointed ambition are, however, not unacceptable as ovidences that a bad cause always prompts bad advocacy. Lord George Bentinck has had large opportunities for studying the pernicious nature of gambling; and there are probably few legislators who could better explain the niceties of that ornithological operation, denominated "pigeon plucking." The turf is an admirable school for offciont training in gambling morality; and as his lordship is said not to be wholly destitute of shillties, we may believe that he has profited by that course of education which has the stable for its solicol, and the race-course for its university. He may have obtained no honours in Cambride, but we question not his title to the rank of senior wrangler at Newmarket. We are however all surprised to find him reprosching the Brome, it the encouragement of gambling. Color with notorious that the only legislative methods his lordship's name is constituting the control of their field that the control of their field that the control of their field that the control of their field that the control of their field that the control of their field that the control of their field that the control of their field that the control of their field that the control of their field that the control of their field that the control of their field that the control of their field that the control of their field that the control of the though nister for the from t practic been p startliz that in practic unexpo that L practic mier, i he affo it; but is a litt The matter dental forms o diency weakne bitterne wisdom

grasp of

by his 1 countrie Sir Rob endange who, in of sarca self, for rememb of brief pen that sonalitie dont che in a spe of manly Mr. B able men did not in choose to and unger

from rails

The f

praise of t they forme to any sys (hear, hear the restriction of the cceded by to obtain i ordinary ci years. An ments of Ca more stead earth one from the in y, and he the measure accusations her Majorty speculation: e the very When he found the place for the had been in to the spirit little, he wo

Ten Par every at vicar, a Thi of the churc begatived be sisted obtain with apecula

NO TO THE PROPERTY OF A PARTY OF THE PARTY O

thought then, as we think now, that the Mipister and the Parliament earned no honour for themselves by shielding aristocratic delinquency from the panal consequences of immoral and illegal practices. We believe, that had the qui tam actions been permitted to proceed, there would have been startling revelations of systematic frauds, so gross. that indelible disgrace would have been attached to practices which still endure, because they remain unexposed. We are, of course, bound to believe that Lord George Bentinck knows nothing of such practices, and that the holy horror of gambling to which he gave utterance, when assailing the Premier, is a conscientious atonement for the shelter he afforded to the delinquents of the turf. As we are bound to believe this, of course we must believe it; but we confess that the domand on our credulity is a little excessive.

The course adopted by Mr. D'Israeli is purely a matter of taste. Spite and malevolence are incidental to literary humanity as well as to the other forms of social existence; but we doubt the expediency of yoking intollectual strength to moral weakness; we question the utility of presenting the worst motives in the best language. Sarcastic bitterness is a very different thing from senatorial wisdom; it is the sting of the wasp instead of the grasp of the eagle. Mr. D'Israeli has been misled by his historical precedents. It is only in despotic countries that Ministers are overthrown by epigrams. Sir Robert Walpole was never in the slightest degree endangered by the quips and cranks of Bolingbroke, who, in our estimation was a greater master of sarcasm than the author of Vivian Grey himself, formidable as that gentleman may be in his own estimation. Parliamentary wasps should remember that the pain of the sting is, after all, but of brief duration; and that it does sometimes happen that these annoying insects leave their life in the wound.

The feeling with which those petty provish personalities inspire men of plain sense and independent character was admirably stated by Mr. Bright in a speech, which we quote entire, as a specimen of manly sense and sturdy English spirit:

MR. BRIGHT said it might be as well to remind honourable members opposite that her Majesty's Government did not intend to stop any railway companies which might choose to proceed with their bills. The noble member for Lynn (Lord G. Bentinck) had taken a most unjust and ungenerous course in laying all the distress resulting from railway speculation at the door of the ministry. Time was when the noble lord was as loud as any in the praise of the present Government, and it was only when they formed their determination to lend themselves no longer to any system to keep up the price of food that the noble lord discovered they were not worthy of his confidence (hear). The great cause of railway speculation was the restriction which existed on trade. Through the operation of that restriction they had years of depression succeeded by years of excitement, when men who had carried on business with little or no profit, following as they thought the advice of the old adage, to make their hay while the sun shone, were seized with a rash and almost insane desire to obtain in one year that amount of profit which under ordinary circumstances would be spread over two or three years. After those resolutions had been passed, the invest-ments of capital and the state of the markets would be much more steady. They would be no longer prostrate on the carth one year and elevated to the clouds another. The fluctuations which had such an injurious effect, had arisen from the interference of the house with the trade of the coun ty, and he firmly believed they would exist no longer after sures of Government bad been carried. accurations of the noble lord (Lord George Bentinck) against her Majanty's Government for having encouraged gambling speculations, he (Mr. Bright) thought the noble lord should be the very last person in that house to make such a charge. When he (Mr. Bright) first took his seat in that house, he found the poble lord might after night, attending in his band the noble lord, night after night, attending in his place for the purpose of watching over a bill to defend persons who had been engaged in mad speculation, and who had been implicated in very dangerous gambling, contrary to the spirit and the letter of the law (hear, hear, hear). He thought if the noble lord were to look back and reflect a little, he would have he was the vary lost man in that house to set himself up as a grave authority in matters connected with speculation and gambling (hear, hear.)

THE PROTECTIONISTS AND THE GRUNOR.—At a numerously strended meeting of the ratepayers of the parish of Northbest Kant, on Easter Monday, the proposition of the vicar, "That it is expedient to enlarge the accommodation of the church," and proposing a rate for that purpose, was securived by a true majority; the meeting, which consists chiany of supporters of Lagricultural protection," using of opinion, that they were allegity sundently taxed the respect of the sample; and now that the Georgian proposed to proceed them all protection, and at the charge of the sample; and now that the Georgian proposed to proceed them all protection, and at

ROYAL POLYTHOUNIO INSTITUTION .- This admirable institution has been visited during the week by perfect mobe of the Easter sight-score. There was something to suit all tastes; and amongst those which seemed to exolie more extraceditary extension were the portraits of the distinguished leaders of the Sikhs, together with several of our own gallant officers, who by their taients and courage have left an undying name. The "Dissolving Views" exolted nearly as much attention as the last-named pictures, as they consist of many views in the Oregon territory. This series of views is well worthy of public patronage. They are taken from sketches, made on the spot by a gontleman, who resided there for nine years, and they convey a much better notion of the appearance of the country than can be understood by reading, or by the generality of engravings. Bosides these, there were lectures on Chemistry, by Dr. Ryan, and on Natural Philosophy, by Dr. Bacholiner. Both gentlemen deserve great commendation for the able and pleasing manner with which they illustrate and deliver the discourse. The Swing Bell and the Diver are among the wonders of the place, and excited particular among the wonders of the place, and excited particular attention; more particularly the Diver, who exhibits vaattention; more particularly the Diver, who exhibits various evolutions in the water, both above and below; more especially one in which he proved the advantages to be derived by using Wilson's patent coat, as it is quite capable of keeping three persons affoat at the same time, and does not alter the appearance of the garment. The music, conducted by Dr. Wallis, is one of the most pleasing features of the establishment; for while it pleases the car, it gives an agreeable finish and zest to the whole. Another machine is also able finish and zest to the whole. Another machine is also deserving of notice; it is for the purpose of cutting envelopes for letters, which is done with extraordinary rapidity. precision, and power. The museum is now arranged with great taste, and with a proper knowledge of what sejence requires, and the public are entitled to, by those who have the management. We therefore must do justing to the extraordinary exertions of the secretary, Mr. Longottom, who devotes his whole time and abilities to carry out this truly national task, which hitherto by him has been so ably done.

THE FUNDS.
st difference to	SAT. Apri 18	Mon. Apri 20	TURS: Aprl 21	WRB. Aprl 22	Tuon. Apri 23	Fur. Apr. 24
Bank Stock	95 96	2041 95 95 96 10 96 26 22 28 30	2054 917 957 964 103-16 95 25-22	205 94 96 96 96 96 96 96 96	2051 961 97 10:3-16 961 25-26 30-27	951 96 97 97 903
Belgian 41 per Ct. Brazilian 5 per Ct. Cnilian Columb. ex. Venez.		 084	82			••
Danish Dutch 21 por Cent. Dutch 4 por Cent. Moxican Peruvian Portug. conv. Russian 5 por Cent Spanish 5 per Ct.	87 59 924 110	501 921 311 58	593 923 314 573 110 254	021 073 673	591 92 317 86 67	594 924 314
Do. 3 per Ct. ex.dv.		96	367	_::	37	30

MARKETS.

CORN MARKET.

MONDAY, April 20.—The show of English Whoat is again moderate to-day; the quality of most of it is inferior, and the trade slow, but about 1s. advance is obtained from the prices of this day week. There is another large arrival of Foreign Wheat; without any extensive transactions taking place. The malting season is nearly over: the consequence is, that though there is by no means a liberal supply of Barley to-day, all, except the very finest description of Chevaller, are 1s. cheaper than this day week. Oats come forward very sparingly, both from Ireland day week. Oats come forward very sparingly, both from Ireland and this country; there has been a large business done to day at fully 1s. over the prices of last Monday. Beans and Peas continue the same as last week.

5. H. Lucas.

	BRITISH.	Por In	norla	LOn	ariar
Wheat, Essex,	Red	84 to 60	White	0.08	to 60
Kant, & Buffolk		4U 68		56	6:1
Lincolushire & Y	orkahire d	47 04		54	62
Bootch					,
Uats, Lincolnahira & Y	orkshire Feed			23	25
Ditto	Ditto Black			23	0 26
Ditto	Ditto Poland	8 , ,	.New	27
Scotch Food	26	27 1	ointo)	SH	20
Limerick				25	26
DittoFine	Now 27 29	Ohi	Fine	nc	me
Cork	7778 STREET		• • • • •	24	25
Waterford, Yought	u, & Cork Minck.		• • • • •	23	24
Bligo		******	• • • • •	'',
Galway		• • • • • • • •	• • • • •	. 10	21
Boans, Mazagan	*	• • • • • • • •	• • • • • •	41	33 33
Harrow		•••••	• • • • • •	.01	33 37
8mall		•••••	•••••	30	. 40
Peas, White		Rollers		AB.	42
Grey30,	32	Manla		30	34
Flour, Town-made		of 280 1	h a	48	66
Flour, Town-made Norfolk and Suffe	ik			13	46
					•
••	FOREIGN.	Por Im	EE.	IN B	OMD.
		T. MI. I III	MIT I BU		FIRE
Wheat, Danisla, high mi	vad .	40	~ AA
Wheat, Danisig, high mi	xed	A8 i	0 66	64	60
Rostock			0 60 60	64 60	60 64
Rostock Statun		88	00 60 68	64 60 60	60 64 64
Rostock		68	0 60 60	64 60	60 64 64 68
Rostöok. Stattin Hamburgh. Odessa Odessa Polish.	*	68	00 60 68	64 60 60 60	60 64 64 62 80
Rostöck. Statiin Hamburgh Odessa Odessa Polish Russian	soft	68	00 60 68	64 60 60 60 48	60 64 64 68
Rostôck Steitin Hamburgh Odessa Odessa Polish Russian Ditto	soft	68	00 60 68	64 60 60 60 48	60 64 64 62 80
Rostôck. Stattin Hamburgh Odessa Odessa Polish Russian Ditto Spanish	eoftiard	68	00 60 68	64 60 60 60 48	60 64 64 62 80
Rostock. Statiin Hamburgh Odessa Odessa Polish Russian Ditto Spanish Blanquillo	soft		0 60 60 68 67	64 60 60 60 48	60 64 64 62 80
Rostôck Steitin Hamburgh Odessa Odessa Polish Russian Ditto Spanish Manquillo Australian	soft		60 60 68 67 60 60 60 89	64 60 60 60 48	60 64 64 62 80
Rostôck Stattin Hamburgh Odessa Odessa Polish Russian Ditto Spanish Blanquillo Australian Barley, Orinding	soft		60 60 68 67	64 60 60 60 48	60 64 64 62 80
Rostock Stattin Hamburgh Odessa Odessa Polish Russian Ditto Spanish Blanquillo Australian Barley, Grinding	softiard		60 60 68 67 60 99 89	64 60 60 60 48	60 64 64 62 80
Rostock Stattin Hamburgh Odessa Odessa Polish Russian Ditto Spanish Manquillo Australian Distiling Oats, Archangel	softhard		60 60 68 67	64 60 60 60 48	60 64 64 62 80
Rostock Stattin Hamburgh Odessa Polish Russian Ditto Spanish Bianquillo Australian Barley, Orinding Distilling Oats, Archangel Dantsh	soft		60 60 68 67 60 69 69 69	64 60 60 60 48	60 64 64 62 80
Rostock Stattin Hamburgh Odessa Odessa Odessa Rostan Ditto Spanish Manquillo Australian Distilling Oats, Archangel Danish Swadish	softliard		60 60 68 67 60 99 89	64 60 60 60 48	60 64 64 62 80
Rostock Stattin Hamburgh Otiessa Odessa Polish Russian Ditto Spanish Manquillo Australian Distilling Oats, Archangel Danish Swadish Stratsund	softhard		60 60 68 67 60 09 69 69 81 25	64 60 60 60 48	60 64 64 62 80 61
Rostock Steitin Hamburgh Odessa Odessa Odessa Russian Ditto Spanish Manquillo Australian Barley, Grinding Oats, Archangel Danish Swadish Stratsund Dutch Feed	soft		60 60 68 67 60 09 69 69 81 25	64 60 60 60 48	60 64 64 62 80 81
Rostock Stattin Hamburgh Odessa Odessa Polish Russian Ditto Spanish Bianquillo Australian Distilling Oats, Archangel Danish Stralsund Dutch Feed Brew	soft		60 60 68 67 60 69 69 69	64 60 60 60 48	60 64 64 62 80 81
Rostock Stattin Hamburgh Odessa Odessa Odessa Polish Russian Ditto Spanish Blanquillo Australian Distilling Oats, Arohangel Danish Straisund Dutch Feed Brism	softliard		60 60 68 67 60 09 69 69 81 25	64 60 60 60 48	60 64 64 62 80 81
Rostock Steitin Blamburgh Odessa Odessa Odessa Polish Russian Ditto Spanish Blanquillo Australian Barley, Grinding Oate, Arohangel Danish Stralsund Dutch Feed Brew Polande			60 60 68 67 69 89 81 26 24	64 60 60 60 48	60 64 64 62 80 81
Rostock Stattin Hamburgh Odessa Odessa Odessa Russian Ditto Spanish Manquillo Australian Barley, Grinding Distilling Oats, Archangel Danish Stratsund Dutch Feed Brew Polande Plank Brew Polande Brew Responde			60 60 68 67 60 09 69 69 81 25	64 60 60 60 48	60 64 64 62 80 81
Rostock Stattin Hamburgh Odessa Polish Russian Ditto Spanish Bianquillo Australian Distilling Oats, Archangel Danish Straishnd Dutch Feed Braw Polands Polands Polands Polands Polands Polands Polands Polands Polands Polands			60 60 68 67 69 89 81 26 24	64 60 60 60 48	60 64 64 62 80 81

Account of GORN, &c.	71 IN. 1840.	both days	et of Tone	lon, Gam
English 7850	Harley.	Onte.	Deans.	Pean,
Rooteli Irikii Foreigu kansa	.	350 1187 7706	9160	(80
		Mile barr	ola,	rav

FRIDAY, APRIL 24.—We have again to report a liberal supply of Foreign Wheat, which is of course being landed in bond. Small quantities are liberated by means of certificates. There is very little English Wheat offering; and the domand is limited. Barley, Reans, and Peas are purchiased sparingly for immediate consumption. There are fair arrivals of English and Foreign Cats; but of Irish, the quantity come to hand is not so large. There has been a moderate sais to-day, at fully Monday's prices; but no further advance can be established.

Account of CORN As a servined to the Best of Levine. Account of CORN, &c., arrived in the Port of London, from the 17th of April	i to me sam or	April, both i	Dollleive.

· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	English.	krish.	Foreign.
Wheat	4600	••	18130
Dariey	3810		1
Oata	3920	0620	1 4800
•	Flour, 4670 and		1 11100
LONDON AWED AC	112d C l 117

ONDON AVERAGES for the Work onding April 21, 1846. Qrs. Price, 5674 58s, 2d. Qrs. Pr 179 34s. Ryo Barley 2008 Sla. 10d. Bonns Beans Stock of Corn in Bond, Mar. 5, 1846.

Wheat, Barley, Oats, Ryo. Brans, Peas. In London, 449560 17900 61109 Unit. King. 1138050 82910 96981 .. 6144 8469 .. 13413 M147 837386

Pous, Sec. 110.

Duty. Wheat, 17s. Od.; Barley, 8s. Od.; Outs, 0s. Od.; Ryc 8s. Od.; Beans, 8s. Od.; Pous, 9s. Od.

MEAT MARKET. The wet weather had considerable influence or the trade; otherwise prices would have been higher.

otherwise prices would have been higher.

PER STONK OF 5 lbs, BY THE CARCARE.

Prime Beef... 3s 10d to 3s 6d | Middl. Mutton 4s 6d to 3s 8d

Middling do. 3s 6d to 3s 2d Vesil, from ... 5s 6d to 4s 6d

Phino, or inferior Beef... 3s 6d to 2s 8d | Large, or infePrime Mutton 4s 4d to 4s 6d | rior Pork ... 3s 4d to 3s 6d

THE LONDON GAZETTE

FRIDAY, APRIL 17. BANKRUPTCIES SUPERSEDICO.

G. A. Absahom, victualler, Portaca.

8. Evens, cotton-spinner, Aspul, Lancashire.
W. J. Idenden, taffor, Salmon's lane, Limehouso, J. H. Bunks, engraver, Oreat Newport street.

BANKRUPTS.

BANKRUPTS.

T. Bedford, baker, Croydon Common. [Messes, Rüssell and Co., High street, Borough.
E. Bankey, surgeon, Canterbury. [Messes, Richardson and Co., Bedford-row.]
B. Billings, victualler, Harlow, Essex. [Mr. Butt, Great Russell-street, Bhoomsbury.
W. Steurman, carpantor, Princoss-street, Chelsen. [Mr. Smith, New Inn., Strand.
W. Mills, glove inanufacturer, Foster-lane, City. [Mosses, Esher and Co., Alderseste street.
H. R. Morley, marchant, Kingston-upon-Hull. [Messes, Hobblen and Co., Hull.
A. M. Beaumont, merchant, Honley, Yorkshire. [Mr. Cumming, King-street, Cheapside.

ming, King street. Cheapsido.

G. J. Juckson, sharebroker, Liverpool. [Messes. Cornthwalle and Co., Old Jewry Chambers.]

T. Figden, shoemaker, Liverpool. [Mr. Kirk, Symond's Inn.

A. Lord, dyer, Collyburst, Manchester: [Mosses, Gregory and Co., Bodford-row.

TUESDAY, APRIL 21. BANKRUPTCY ANNUELED. C. Goldsmith, Bristol, saddler.
BANKRUPTS.

8. M. Latham, Dover, banker. [Messra Bridges and Co. Rad Lion-square.

Red Lion-square.
R. Stephenson, Southwick street, Hyds Park, apothocary.
[Messrs. Chamberlayne and Meadon, Oreat James-street.
T.E. Descon, Comer Hall, Hortford, tanner. [Mr. Matthews, King William-street.
R. Brailsford, Enfled. common brower. [Messrs. F. and H. Palmer, Mitre-court-chambers, Temple.
J. Biggs, Houndsditch, undertaker: [Messrs. J. T. H. Baddelsy, Loman-street.

J. Biggs, Houndsmen, unusciazor. Local merchant. J. B. Crampern. Wharf-road, City-road, coal merchant. J. B. Crampern. Wharf-road, City-road, coal merchant. [Messrs. Parker and Co., Raymond's buildings. J. and H. Pace, St. Michael stalley, Cornhill, merchants. [Mr. N. Lindo, Kling's Arms yard, Moorgato-street. J. Balmon, Beaumont, Essex, carpenter. [Mr. Ambrose, Changewelson.

J. Clarkson, Barnsley, plumber, Mossrs, Jacques and Co.,

Ely-place.
J. Walker and B. Wilkinson, Loads, sharebrokers. (Messrs. Wiglesworth and Co., Gray's Inn.
W. Gross, Weymouth, shipowner. [Mr. Sowton, Great James-

T. Taylor, Newcastle-upon-Tyno, grocer. [Massrs. Chisholme and Co., Lincoln's Inn.
T. Allen, J. Litleworth, Staffordshire, hotel-keeper. [Massrs. Resi and Langford, Loudon.
J. Topham, Brewood, read-contractor. [Mr. Turner, Wolver-lampton.

D. Antrobus, Audley, Staterdehire, apothecary. [Mr. Williams, Hanloy. W. Bennett, Wolverhampton, Huplato, worker, [Mr. C. Brown, Bilaton. W. Bolshaw, Manchester, victualler. [Mossrs. Gregory and Co., Bodford-row B. Dawson; Buerstil, Lancashire, woollen manufacturer, [Messiv. Norris and Co., Bartlett-buildings.

C. Stephenson, Coinc, Lancashire, worsted manufacturer, [Messiv. Johnson and Co., Temple.

H. Powkes, Manchester, sharebroker. [Messrs. Milno and Co., Temple.

1). Johnstone, Cherkon-upon-Medicek, Manchester, joiner.

[Mesers. Gregory and Co., Bedford now. H. L. Fitzjaines, Walsot, Bath, furrier. [Mesers. Wobb and Son, Dath. H. Hulelinson, Liverpool, merchant. [Messre. Sharps and

H. Hutchinson, Liverpool, merchant. [Measrs. Sharps and Co. Bestord-row. W. Kelly, Onester, brower. [Measrs. Humphrays and Co., Christic Liverpool, commission merchant. [Mozing Vincom 44, Co. Liverpool, commission merchant. [Mozing Vincom 44, Co. Christic Liverpool, commission merchant. [Mozing Vincom 44, Co. Christic Liverpool, commission merchant.]

BRITISH CONSULT OF ICE. PHIL DELPHIA. Know all Persons to warm those presents shall come. But I, GILBERT ROBBUTS IN Seq., his Britannia dialesty's Consultation hereby corruly, that R. was stron, Req. (was attosts to the onleady of COLUMBIA).

IN RESTORING HAIR), is Mayor of this City, and that M. RAMDALL, Req., is Prothonotary of the Court of Common Plans, to both whose signatures full faith and credit is and that I sam personally acquainted with J. L. INDLIE, Req., another of the signers, and that he is a personally acquaited with J. L. INDLIE, Req., another of the signers, and that he is a personal respectability; and that I heard him express his unqualified approbation of the effects of OLDRIDGE B BALM, in restoring his Rair. Given under my hand and seal of Office, at the City of Philadelphia, December 29, 1823.

Price de éd. 6s. and ils per bottle. No other prices are genuine. OLDRIDOE'S BALM of COLUMBIA, 1, Wellington street, the second house from the Strand.

On the 1st and loth of each Mouth, every Part containing Sour highly-finished Portraits, price One Shilling, THE PEOPLE'S NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY

Of Illustrious and Eminent Personages of the Mineteenth Century, engraved by first rate Artists, from Paintings by Lawrence Reynolds, West, Shee, Hoppner, Beschey, Phillips, Carrick, &c. &c.

With Memoirs by W. COOKE TAYLOR, LLD.

Fisher, Son, and Co., the Caxton Press. Angel-street, Nowgate-street, London.

On the let of May will be published,

OUGLAS JERROLD'S SHILLING MAGAZINE.

No. XVII.

London: Published at the Punch Office, 85, Floot street.

V E R T W With Illustrations by George Cruikshank, and the latest Corrections and Alterations of the Author.

No. V. will be published on the Soth instant, price is. To be completed in Ten Numbers

London: Published for the Author, by Hradbury and Evans, No. 90, Fleetstreet, and Whitefriars

MUSIC POR THE MANY. THE MUSICAL HERALD, Edited by an Eminent Writer, containing four quarto pages of Relect Music, and four of entertaining and instructive Musical Literature, will be published on the 2nd of May, and every succeeding week, for the small charge of only TWO-PINOS. Not with standing its unprecedented cheapness, all lovers of music are invited to inspect this specimen of a new era. To be had ef all these believes the succeeding week.

WINDOM AND CHEERPULNESS.

THE FAMILY HERALD, Parts 34 and 35 of this popular and interesting literary miscellany, price only Sixpence each, contain Malina Gray; by Mrs. Stephons—The Lady Helen—Valerie, or the Young Italian—The Selfish Wife—The Bierp. Walker; by Zyschołka—La Vendetta, or the Feud; by Balxec—Unclo John and his Nophew—Alonzo and Zamora—Tho Professor's Daughter—and several other charming tales, with a variety of useful, moral, ontertaining, and instructive reading for the intelligent and reflecting of all classes. Everybody reads the FAMILY HERALD, the most universal favourite ever published, and just the kind of periodical for whiling away a loisure moment agreeably and profitably. To be had of all Booksellers.

With No 187 (the commissionement of a New Yolume) will be presented, ORATIS, the First Number of the MUSICAL HIERALD, containing eight the published down from the last of the last wall and Musical Literature.

Just published, domy 8vo., price 10s. 6d., cloth,
THE PHILOSOPHY OF TRADE, or Outlines of a Theory of Profits and Prices: including an Examination of the Principles which determine the relative Value of Corn, Labeur, and Currency.
By Parkick James Brikingo.
"A valuable treatise—clear and convincing Every merchant and trader in the land should make himself master of it, and legislators and political womonmists may gienn useful information from its pages."—Critic.
"With calmness and simplicity, the author proceeds from generals to particulars, nowhere leaping over a step in the demonstration or arrangement to reach a more attractive subject, and never giving a - ord of partisan argument or rhetorical embolishment. It is that species of writing which Lord Kampas compared to leveling work—the more the labour the less it is apparent. By his manner of treating the authoct, Mr. Stirling has been able singularly to discubarrase blusself of those misleading influences which have so often led economists astray."—Scotsman.
"Clear, methodical, and well written, we have no doubt that it will speedily take its place among the standard works of the ago."—Glaagow Courlor.

Oliver and Boyd, Edinburgh. Simpkin, Marshall, and Co., London.

NEW EDITIONS of DR. COMBE'S WORKS:—
1. On DIGESTION and DIFT. Sixth, or People's Edition, PHYSIOLOGY APPLIED to HEALTH and EDUCATION, People's

11. PHYSIOLOGY APPLIED to REALTH and EDUCATION, People's Edition, price 4s. 6d.
The Twelth Edition of the same work in a neat volume, 8vo, price 7s. 6d.
III. On the PHYSIOLOGICAL and MORAL MANAGEMENT of INFANCY, for the Use of Parents. Pifth Edition. 6s. (Just published.)
Maclachian, Stewart, and Co., Edinburgh. Simpkin, Marshall, sud Co., London; and all Bookscilers

Just published, People's Edition, price 2s., rayal 8vo, MORAL PHILOSOPHY; or, The Duties of Man Considered, in his individual, Domestic, and Social Capacities. By Gannes Comes. Third Edition, revised, corrected, and enlarges. Also, inform with the above,
THE CONSTITUTION OF MAN. Price 1s. 6d.
London: Simpkin, Marshall, and Co.; Longman and Co.; and W. S.
Orrand Co. Edinburgh: Machiachlau, Stewart, and Co.

Becond Edition, just nublished, feep. 4to., price 8d.,
A Railway Traveller's Reasons for adopting UNIFORMITY OF GAUGE. Stated in a Letter to
I K. Brunze, Esq.
Joseph Cundall, 12, Old Bond-street.

Joseph Cundall, 12, 0ld Blond-street.

IRADY WITH THE MAGAZINES.

Part I., fep. 4to., price is., sewed.

THE INDIAN WAR—THE TARIFF—THE OREGON QUBSTION—201AND. Reviewed and fully discussed in Part I. of "The TOPIC," each article by an enument writer. Also published weekly, price 3d. each number.

"The plan of this new periodical is original; it is to furnish one article each week of the same kind that the catablished reviews do quarterly; and to fulfil this object, authors whose talents have already been acknowledged in such mediums will alternately provide the requisite essay. Be far the engagement with the public, and, judging from what has appeared, it has been fully carried out. If persovered in as commenced, the public will be gainers by the undertaking, and we heartly wish it, success. It has an advantage over the slower march of the quarterlies by seizing the topic of the day at the precise inoment of its interest and urgency, and of submitting it to a searching investigation."—Atlas.

"As a husiness-like digrest of facts, "The Oregon Question" may be recommended to those who wish to have a succincity complete view of all its parts."—Apectator.

"Judging from the specimens already published, promises to be characterised by great ability."—Morning Chronicle.

"No. I. contains a condensed history of the Indian War. The casay is elequent, truthful, and apirit-attring, evidently written by ong to whom the country, its policy and impolicy, are well known. We need scarcely attempt to recommend a work that so forcibly recommends itself by its intrinsic worth, "Runday Times.

"The New Tariff forms the subject of the second Number. Those papers, or rather essays, are written by first-rate writers."—Woekly Chronicle.

Or Altchell, Red Lion-court, Fleet-street.

Dr. Robert Culverwell's Quide to Health and Long Life.

(300 pages, pooket volume); price is.; by neat, is. id.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; with Diet
Tables for all Complaints. By R. J. Colverwell, M.D., M.R.O.S., I.A.C., &c. Contents.—How to insure perfect digestion, tranquil freilings, a good night's rest, a clost head, and a contented mind. By an observance of the instructions herein contained, the freelle, the nervously delicate, even to the upest shattered consistation, may acquire the greatest amount of physical happiness, and reach in health the full period of life allotted to man. To be had of Sherwood, 33 Paterinoster-row, and all Rooksellers, or direct from the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand, who may be advised with on these matters daily till 3; evenings, 7 till 9.

CORNER'S NEW HISTORICAL WORKS, for School and Pamily Reading.

Bach History, commencing with the earliest authentic records, is contited to the present time; faithfully pourtraying, also, the Manners. Customs, and States of Civiliantion of the Pe-	ople.		, tori	U.U .~	-	•, •	- -

		Hour	d wi	th	v	Vitho	rat i t	be Qu	estio	ne.	Qu	estic	ne :
England and Wales; five fine plates, an	d ma	p,	41.			3s. (
treiand: throe fine blates, and man -	. •	•	34.	- ' -	. •	94. (
Scotland; three tine plates, and map -	•	•	3 4	-, ' -	•	20.
Prance; three one plates, and map -	-	•	34.				던.
spain and Portugal; three plates, and m	*P		Se.		•	$1. (
Denmark, Sweden, and Norway; with t	MO D	no bu	ree i	og m	ap -	30.
Germany and the German Empire; Sine	n pur	COS, RI	a mi	P .	•	20.
Poland and ituesia; with three fine plate	pute	e, and	mal			5 i. i
Isaly and Switzerland; three the plates,	0.00	man				34.
"IN OXIDED AND DOUBLING, WITH THE DESIGNATION."	35. 37	100				1	М.
The object of those works-peculiarly is furnish the reader with a faithful His	au to	d to b	hool	a and	Pam	ilioo-	-16
so furnish the reader with a faithful His	story	of en	h N	tion,	inter	i përi	od
WILD BD BDCUPED BOODHI Of the Hallein	· ~ / `	*	. N			mante	1
didin, State of Civiliantion, and Domontic	o Haj			PHOP	.	A PLYO	W.
by builty of language and clearness of pleasant the attalament of a knowledge of	geta	III, AR	إجريا		3	M. 9	M
Andre Does and Co., Threaduredle-	or the	1000	Æ.	reg w	or an	448	. I
Charles deskimining And december Aria.	MARI	i) waa	, T	or nite	ज स	ببير	e. I Patronia.

.

THE LADIES' GAZETTE OF FASHION for MAY, price is, contains Double the Number of Summer Pashions given in any other work, and is the only Work that contains the Royal Dresses, the Paris Fashions, and every nevelty. A superb coloured Giant Plate (size 186) inches), and Walking Dresses, Children's Dresses, Bonnets, Pelises, &c., in extraordinary variety: 100 Figures, 150 New Patterns; Portraits of the Queen, Albort, and Royal Children; Patterns of their Dresses; Descriptions, Tales, Poetry, Music, Guide to the sights of London, &c. Postfree, 1s. 6d.

G. Berger, Holywell-street, Strand; and all Booksellers.

THAMES TUNNEL—Brilliantly lighted with "Lowe's"
Patent Napthalized Gas, is open as a thoroughfare day and night—Toll, One l'enny.

Tableau of Public Interest, which has been Right Months in Preparation.

THE Royal Family at Home, consisting of the Queen and Prince Albert caressing their Pour lovely Children. The Grouping and Colouring by Madame Tusacud, the Models and Portraiture by Mr. P. Tusacud, the Costumes by Mrs. P. Tusacud, and Portraiture by Mr. P. HAZAAIt, Baker-street, Portman-square.

"This is one of the best exhibitions in the metropolis."...Trass. Admittance, is.; Napoleon Roems, Ed. Open from 11 till 4; and from 1 till 1.

Admittance, 1s.; Napoleon Rosens, 3d. Open from 11 till 4; and from 7 till 18

Tohad Doorber, Esq., MP.—The Engraving from 6 the Portrait of Richard Comben, Esq., MP., engraved in the highest style of art by P.C. Lewis, Esq., engraver to the Queen, is NOW READY. The Portrait has been produced under the patronage and sanction of the Council of the Anti-Corn-Law Longue, and is the only authentic engraved portrait published. The likeness is a most characteristic one, and has received the unqualified approbation of Mr Cobden's personal friends

Es. d.

Prints

Obden's personal friends

First class Proofs, with autograph

I 1 6

India Proofs

Prints

Obden's personal friends

Es. d.

First class Proofs, with autograph

I 1 6

India Proofs

Prints

Obden's personal friends

Es. d.

Sinch autograph

I 1 6

First class Proofs

Prints

Obden's personal friends

It is a considered and first law and finished style. The following are now ready:—

It is a construction of Prortraits of the Members of the Council of the League. Both Bright, Esq., M.P.

It is then is art Radnor.

George Wilson, Esq., Chairman of the League.

John Bright, Esq., M.P.

Henry Ashworth, Esq.

Miner Gibson, Esq., M.P.

John Brooks, Esq.

Arrangements have also been made to publish the Portraits of William Brown, Esq., Tensurer of the League.

Right Hon. Earl Ducie

Robert Hyde Greg, Esq., &c. &c.

All executed the same size, and forming one of the most interesting Gal-

William Brown, Esq., of Liverpool.

Edward Baines, Esq. Lawrence Heyworth, Esq.
Right Hon. Earl Ducie Light Hon. Lord Morpeth.

Robert Hyde Greg, Esq. &c. &c.

All exceuted the same size, and forming one of the most interesting Gallery of Portraits very brought before the public. The Portrait of WillLIAM BROWN, Esq., which is being engraved by James Thomson, Esq., of London, will be ready very shortly, and parties wishing to subscribe will please to forward their names without delay, to secure good impressions.

Manchester: published by THOMAS AGNEW, Repository of Arts, Exchange-street. London: Messrs. Ackerman and Co., 98, Strand.

HENRY N R Y P E A C H B U C K L E R,

Foreign and Colonial Wool Broker, 79, Basinghall-street, London.

Samples sent per post to any part of the country,
Orders executed at the Public Sales.

THE VETERINARY ART.—A Veterinary Surgeon, practising within a few miles of London, and who has been the tutor of several successful practitioners, will engage to instruct any persons of persevering habits in the Veterinary Art, so as to enable them in a very few months to practise satisfactorily to themselves and their employers. Premium, 230. Also every branch of the Castrating Art taught, which valuable addition may be acquired in two or three months. Premium £2.—N.B. If both branches are studied at the same time, a reduction of £3, will be made upon the lust-mentioned premium. Board and lodging, if required, at 12s. per week. Address, post-paid, C. J., care of Mr. Westron, 23, High-street, Whitechapel. London.

CEORGE and JOHN DEANE, SADDLERS and Carriage Harness, manufactured on their orig, Tandem, and Carriage Harness, manufactured on their own premises, by workmon of much experience, and under the direction of foremen of superior ability and skill. Their leather is invariably dressed by first-rate London curriers, the furniture is also of the best town manufacture, and G. and J. Deane warrant that the productions of their manufactory cannot be surpassed for beauty, strength, and cheapness, by any other house. Horse clothing made to order; canteens of best seasoned wood. Deane's London-made whips, and all articles for stable and travelling use in large variety.—No. 2, Arthur-street East, opening to the Monument, London-bridge.

PENDERS AND FURNISHING IRONMONGERY. PENDERS AND FURNISHING IRONMONGERY.

—RICHARD AND JOHN SLACK, 336, Strand, opposite Someract Itouse, have just added to their hitherto immense stock of Fonders many quite new designs of most elaborate finish, surpassing in elegance of style any before offered. Bronzed scroll and steel bar fenders from 10s.; ornamental iron ditto from 4s. 6d. Also the best selected stock of furnishing ironmongery in London, at prices 30 per cent, under other houses. The money returned for any article not approved of. Their book of prices, containing upwards of 20 Jengravings, gratis, or post free. Established 1818.

SECOND BRITISH BUILDING AND INVESTMENT COMPANY. Enrolled.
Established on Macarthur's Simplified and Improved Plan.
Monthly Rubscription, 10s per Shara.
No Redemption Fes.
Office, 3, lvy-Lane, 8t. Paul's, London.
Hours, 10 till 4.
Commenced in March, 1846.
TRUSTERS.

Office, 3, Ivy. Lano, Mt. Paul's, London.

Hours, 10 till 4.

Communeed in March, 1846.

Taustes.

William Anderson, M.R.C.S., 12, Chadwell street, Myddleton-square.

William Farmer, 29, Charlotte-forrace, Barasbury-road, Islington.

James Blaiey, Tibberton-square, Islington.

Thomas Sheppard, 5, Gainsford, place, Barasbury-road.

All letters should be directed to "The Second British Building and Investment Company," 3, Ivy.lane, St. Faul's, London.

The British Building and Investment Company was commenced on the 4th September, 1845, in five months carolled 1500 Sharcholders, issued 2900 Shares, and advanced about £10,685 to its Shareholders for the purchase of property. Such success is unprecedented in the annals of Building Scoleties.

At a Public Meeting, at which upwards of 1100 persons were present, held at the London Mechanics' Institution, on Tuesday, 17th Feb., 1846, Mr. W. Farmer, in the chair, the fellowing Resolutious were sarried unanimously: Moved by Mr. Baal, seconded by Mr. Lovejoy,—That this meeting highly approves of the plan on which the Second British Building and Investment Company is established; and cordially recommends it to the public as being based on equal justice to all, and providing for the members, desirous of purchasing property, the greatest advantages consistent with security to the whole body of mombers.

Moved by Mr. Alexander, seconded by Mr. Thomas.—That this meeting considers the conduct of the Directors, in wairing their right to receive et alim any advance from the Company during their right to receive et alim any advance from the Company during their right to receive et alim any advance from the Company during the first 12 months, sa highly honourable, and deserving of the sincere thanks of the meeting.

"We hold Macarthur's plan for forming Building Societies to be a decided improvement."—Weekly Dispatch

"He has really simplified and improved the plan on which Building colaties are condocted. "—Temperance Mrs., in the Mrs., of the Directors, and at Euceta lies, it is

London—sia follo tips sample per lage is recommended in the landon—sia follo tips sample per lage is recommended in the landon—sia follo tips sample per lage is recommended in the landon per lage is recommended in the landon per lage in the landon per lage in the landon per lage in the landon per lage in the landon per lage in the landon per lage in the landon per lage in the landon per lage in the landon per lage in the landon per lage in the landon per lage in the landon per lage in the lage

All goods afterwards ordered will be sent warranted equal to the

OUTFITS to AUSTRALIA, INDIA, and the GOLO.

NIER. Parties leaving England will and it to their advantage to purchase their Outfits at B. J. MONNERY and CO. 7, 166, Franking of the City, where a large assortment of Shirts, Ciothing, Hostery, Gauss and City, where a large assortment of Shirts, Ciothing, Hostery, Gauss and Shirts, Sco., adapted for cach particular colony, as well as for the viage, is kept ready for immediate use, and at prices far more reasonable the usually charged for the same articles.

Bedding, Military Accountements, Cabin and Camp Furniture of every description. Lists, with Prices affixed, forwarded by post.

HEAL and SON'S LIST of BEDDING, containing a full description of weights, sizes, and prices, by which purchased interesting the purchased in the colonial colo

JONES'S £4, 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week, present the Manufactory, 838, Strand, opposite Someract house. The text of a mathematical instrument with the elegance of an organic strate. On receipt of a Post-office order for is, above the price, a waitlibe sent free to any part of the kingdom. Read Jones's Skrick of Watch Work, "sent free for a 2d. stand

LUXURY IN SHAVING.

LUXURY IN SHAVING.

OFIN GOSNELL and CO.'S AMBROSIAL SHAVING

CREAM (Patronised by Prince Albert). This inestinable Grap pasesses all the good qualities of the Pinest Naples Boap, without its distriable small inseparable from that article in a gonuine state. It is of a visipearly silvery appearance, produces a conany lather, which will not dry at the face, and emits in use the delightful flavour of the almost.

In Pots, price 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., &c

Perfumers to her Majesty, 12, Three King-court, Lombard-street, Lesse.
Manufacturers of Combs and Brushes of the best quality, and on the seast approved principles.

Manufacturers of Combs and Brushes of the best quality, and on the mapproved principles.

TENDERS, STOVES, and FIRE-IRONS,—The largest assortment of Stoves and Fenders, as well as General hamongery, in the world, is now on Halo at WILLIAM 8. BURTON's his RIPPON and BUILTON'S) extensive warehouses. Bright teste finders, 4 feet, from 30s each; ditto, ditto, with ermoin ornaments, from 6.; rich bronzed across dar, los 6d; iron fanders, 4 feet, 11s.; wrought from kits steel had r, los 6d; iron fanders, 4 feet, 11s.; wrought from kits the har, los 6d; iron fanders, 4 feet, 11s.; wrought from kits the hard litted with translated; from the register stoves, with bronzed ornaments, and two sets of bars, from kits ditto, with ormolu ornaments, from E0; black diding room register stoves, 2 feet, 18s; 3 feet, 7 feet, 18s; 1

THE ATRAPILATORY, or LIQUID HAIR DYE, the only dye that really answers for all colours, and does not require re-doing but as the hair grows, as it never fades or acquires that unsiemed or purple tint common to all other dyes. ROSS and SONS as, who the greatest confidence, recommend the above dye as infallible, if does at their establishment; and ladi s or gentlemen requiring it are requested to bring a friend or servant with them, to see how it is used, which will easile them to do it afterwards without chance of foliure. Sayari Frinat apartments devoted entirely to the above purpose, and, some of their astablishment having used it, the effect produced can be at once see. They think it necessary to add that, by attending strictly to the instructions give with each bottle of dye, numerous persons have succeeded equally well without coming to them.

Address Ross and Sons, 119 and 120, Bishopsgate-street, the calching et their own residences, whintever the distance.

ROWLAND'S ODON'TO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE.

A White Powder for the Toeth, compounded of the Choicest and most Reckerche Ingredients of the Oriental Herbal; the leading requisites of elegininess and efficiely being present in the highest possible degree. It hestows on the teeth a possible whiteness and frees them from tartar; impariste the guars a healthy are ness, and to the breath a grateful systemess and perfume. Price 3s. M.

ness, and to the breath a gracetar system.

CAUTION.—To protect the public from Fraud, the Hos. Commissioners of Stamps have directed the Proprietor's Name and Address to be sugraved on the Government Stamp thus—

"A. RUWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton Garden;"
Which is affixed on each box.

Sold by them and by Chemists and Permany.

All other Odontos are FRAUDULENT IMITATIONS.

LORD MAYOR'S DINNER-THE

All other Odontos are FRAUDULENT IMITATIONS

The recent dinner given by the Mayor Reems to have been a tery fine affair. The papers tell us it what very splendid, And that the Manhion house was well attended. The dresses of the ladies ald their duty In giving to the scene at extra beauty. Nor can wo justly pass unnoticed by The lords and gentlemon who may be averaged by The lords and gentlemon who may be averaged by The lords and gentlemon who may be averaged by The lords and gentlemon who may be averaged by The lords and gentlemon who may be averaged by The lords and RON, by this display of set. If averaging the shings by the display of set. If averaging the shings by the display of set. If averaging the shings by the display of set. If averaging the shings by the display of set. If averaged what will be uncaulify stand. In England or in any other lend. Render! we wish sincerely you'd been there!

Not only to have toasted to the Mayor, but to hiave seen what will must much sample. Allos in a very was and English. And English and EON'S display of choice attire.

ILIST OF PRICES.

Allouwes in every description and make, including the Rogistored Coat.

Cashimere Coat in a very description and make, including the Rogistored Coat.

Cashimere Coat in avery description and make, including the Rogistored Coat.

Procedure the recent of the ship of the seed of the ship of the seed of the ship of the seed of the ship of the seed of the ship of the seed of the ship of the seed of the ship of the seed of the ship of the ship of the seed of the ship of the ship of the seed of the ship of the seed of the ship of Dost free.

Communication of the communication of t

18 (g)

THE LEAGUE.

No. 186.—Vol. III.]

SE LERENCE E

001,0.

TCHES

DYF, of require annaturel can, with the control of

R.-

SATURDAY, MAY 2, 1846.

[8d.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

LEAGUE FUND.

All Bubscribers of £1 and upwards to the LEAGUE FUND will be entitled to, and receive, a copy weekly of this publication for twelve months from the date of the receipt of their subscription.

Subscribers of half-a-crown, and under £1, will have forwarded to them a copy of THE LEAGUE, containing an ecknowledgment of their subscription; and it is requested that all subscribers will be kind enough to send their names and addresses to the offices of THE LEAGUE, Newall'sbuildings, Manchester, or 67, Fleet-street, London.

N.B. As there is considerable risk in the transmission of cold and silver by post, parties wishing to forward small contributions to THE LEAGUE FUND are particularly requested to make their remittances by post-office orders.

The Council of the League would also suggest to their friends in the country the importance of transmitting their copies of THE LEAGUE newspaper, after perusul, to such parties (more especially farmers) as may be either hostile or indifferent to the question of Free Trade.

> By order of the Council, JOSEPH HICKIN, Secretary.

THE FREE TRADE MINISTER COMPLETE.

"The progress of the discussion, the lapse of time, and intervening events, have more strongly confirmed the feeling with which I spoke when I proposed the permanent and final settlement of the corn question. I will not deny that, during the debase on the question, my opinions on the subject have undergone a change, and it is this—that restrictions, which I at first believed to be impolitic, I now believe the BE UNJUST. Consequently, the sense of their injustice PRECLUDES ANY COMPROMISE ON MY PART. That which I have proposed, both as to the amount of duty, and as to the continuance of that duty, is all I AM ABLE TO OFFRE; and in answer to those injurious suspicions, I think it enough to say that I shall be perfectly ready to testify, BY ANY PUBLIC ACT, the sincerity of my intentions."—Sir ROBERT PEEL, April 27.

We were sure it would be so. The affinities of truth with right-of policy with justice-of sound economical doctrine, with broad and honest moral principle are too close and all-pervading, not to force themselves on the mind that has once heartily espoused either the one or the other half of this great dualism.

There is no such thing as partitioning off the domain of intellect from that of morals. Whatever holds in the one, will by-and-bye be seen to hold equally in the other. Force of moral volition is next of kin to clearness and fulness of intellectual perception; and a great truth, once fairly apprehended and comprehended by the understanding, will gradually surround itself with all the sanctities of ethical obligation, and become transfigured into a great duty. Those who have watched Sir Robert Peol's public course, since his first unreserved and practical adoption of Free Trade principles, and noted the course of thought indicated by his successive Parliamentary defences and expositions of those principles, must have perceived the traces of that mental process, whose final result was an nounced to the world on Monday night. The last stage of one of the most remarkable and important political conversions on record, is now finished the FREE TRADE MINISTER is now complete.

These words of the Premier's evidently come from a great depth of conviction. He is now at the root of the matter. His opinion has become a principle. He has long since believed monopoly to be impolitio—he now sees and feels it to be unjust. Before, it was a gross mistake—now, it is a monstrong fraud. Bofore, it was a grievous mischief Militar orying oppression and iniquity. Demilitar will not compromise the totality of its abilities—now be common. "The anness of its intitle statement opposite." The thing and the common to be said.

Even the compression of the last the common to be said.

The common to be said.

same designation of the state o

viction thus grounded and fortified is far more to be relied upon than one that rests on the basis of mere induction from an accumulated mass of exterior facts. It is simpler and grander. goes deeper down. There is more of motive force in it. All mon understand it. All mon can put faith in it. It is somothing to build There can be no mistake about it. It excludes uncertainty, and repels modification. It is essentially intolerant of negociation, compromise, and "adjustment." Policy and expediency have their shades and degrees-and very puzzling these are to the common eye. There is always a latitude of choice—a margin open for "arrangement"— a question of a little more or a little less. Morality is absolute and unqualified-speaks only in the imperative mood. When we come to a question of right and wrong, there is an end of choice—the answer must be a simple Yes or No.

This is the view which we of the League have always taken from the first. We have over held that monopoly was a wrong, in any and every of its actual or possible shapes and forms-and that neither truce nor treaty could be made with an iniquity. And our stoady and unwavering assertion of that principle of social justice, of which the totality of our domand is the obvious corollary, has been our sheet-anchor through all that storm and stress of Parliamentary conflict and popular agitation in which we have been working for upwards of seven years. We cannot express in too strong terms the satisfaction we feel at seeing this broad and plain view of the matter publicly and solemnly authenticated by the First Minister of the Crown. In any other sort of advocacy we have never been able to place much faith. The men who say, "A moderate or fixed duty would be a good enough thing in itself-perhaps the best thing, if we could only get it passed quietly-but we don't so much care about it; and as no other alternative seems open, why, suppose we say 'total repeal,' as anything is better than the sliding scale," are not the champions to be relied upon in those moments of difficulty and peril, which try what mon are made of. Give us the man who says, "The landlords tax on the people's broad is essentially and intrinsically unjust, and I can make no terms with injustice—I am precluded from a compromise with wrong." This is the man to brave the storms of open enmity, and baffle the chicane of treacherous intriguing, and lukewarm partisanship, and carry the people's cause, through all difficulties and obstructions, to a triumphant consummation.

It was hardly necessary for Sir Robert Peel to assure us, in so many words, that he "will be perfeetly ready to testify, by any public act, the sincerity of his intentions." That is a thing of course. It is already sufficiently implied in the very nature of his present convictions. The moral protest against monopoly, as not only an impolicy, but an injustice, tells us all we'desire to know. The vigorous denunciation of the wrong is pledge enough of the energy and effort needed for its extirpation.

This is a most timely and cheering manifesto from our Free Trade Minister. It makes our way very clear before us. It dissipates a host of per plexing rumours, and "reports of rumours." We see exactly where we are. What will the Lords do, and what will the Rigbys do-what curious and cumping scheme of "adjustment" has been, or may be, concocted among the select and secret committees of Pallmall—are questions now of extremely elender moment. We know the worst. There would undoubtedly, be great temporary inconvenishes in the protracted delay consequent on a Par mior's ultimatum-the Bill, and the whole Bill, or something petter than the Bill-something more thoroughly in accordance with those views of the morality of the question which the author of the Bill has now deliberately espoused, and which would constitute the basis of his "appeal to the people."

We can remember no Mact or utterance of any English minister more strongly entitling him to an unreserved and entire popular confidence, than this of Sir Robert Peel's. Ho throws himself loose of all other reliances; easts away all other aids; plants himself and his policy firmly on the otornal rock of PRINCIPLE - and leaves the people to do the rest. And perhaps, after all, the people may have to do it. Nobody knows. It was, no doubt, a highly prudent and politic declaration of the Premier's-but only in that largest sense of the word, in which courage is prudence, and honesty policy. This bold and broad assertion of principle, this resolute refusal of compromise, while it gives him invincible strongth with the country, may not by any means strengthen him in Parliament. It will be beyond measure offensive in many quarters where he might else have counted on quiescouce or co-operation. It will raise up against him not a few bitter and determined enomies. Those who have hitherto amused themselves with the dream that he might he induced to allow certain protectionist modifications of his bill, and who have accordingly given him a dubious and half-hearted support, are now once for all undeceived, and we may look to see their precarious friendship changed into settled and volument hostility. It now remains for the people of the United Kingdom to show themsolves worthy of the Minister who, first among English statesmen, has onunciated the highest of social and political truths from the seat of official authority-staked official existence on the successful realisation of popular rights-and plodged the uttermost resources of official power to the subversion of an old-established and deeply-rooted public wrong.

PROTECTION TO NATIVE INDUSTRY IN BHETLAND.

The case of the Shetlandors, to which Mr. Forster and Mr. Milner Gibson so urgently besought the attention of the House of Commons on Wednesday last, is one of the completest and most palpable illustrations we know, of the iniquitous cruelty of that monopoly which hestrides the industry of these realms like a night-mare. There seems no escaping from landlordism anywhere. This baneful power pervades the entire circuit of the Queen's dominions with a sort of malignant omnipresence, and makes its detestable domination felt, in full force and potoncy of mischiof, even at the Ultima Thule of the empire.

It is a very simple story—the case of these hardy and honest islanders. Their soil is poor, their climate cold and ungenial, their agriculture rude and unimproved, and incapable, even in ordinary years, of feeding more than half of their little population of 82,000 souls. They are miserably ill off for corn-have next to no money-and manufacture nothing for the foreign market. Yet they are far from destitute of native wealth, and are very rich in native industry -if they could protect this from being "protected." Their seas swarm with excellent fish; and they have the stoutest hearts, the strongest and skilfullest hands, and the best tackle of any fightermen in her Majesty's dominious. And they have or might have—the best of customers for their fish. It seems liamentary success of the monopolists; but nothing that Shetland fish is particularly religion in Spain, and that Spain; in the World of the first state of the first print print

laugi make whic Engl

occu

irrea

eubse

prote Calde

"nb s

Wars

den's :

while dacity

a bein

that he

Prime !

of the

cool, co

imbibe

houere

U large

the folic

Mr.

umstan

time or i making favoured indulge i reprobati

DIADY Bre

nition of

The and its localit meinber i acepuon-

the people

n's exbise

ejaske me out this co hind Mr.

and severs

ion, baron

that the la

the count

ter of the breatened batten of the and

question

haro of manufactures, the transaction can be complated only on one condition; - the Shatlanders must take out the price of their fish in com and flour-commodities in which it so happens that Bpaln is particularly righ. There is an obstacle, however. The landlords stop the way. Landlordism keeps a Custom-house in Shetland (under the same roof with her Majesty's commissioners,stops in between these two parties, just as the mutually gainful and necessary bartor is about to he consummated - and says to each, No. you Brain shall not have the fish, and Shetland shall not have the corn, except on torms which neither Shetland nor Spain can conveniently comply with. There is a little trade done, it seems, between the two. Some eight or ton sail of Spanish vessels are in the habit of annually sailing northward for a cargo of fish, but they carry no corn. At this very moment, we are informed, " a vessel from Spain is now actually on the way to Shetland, in Ballast, to load a cargo of fish, and would have taken a cargo of flour could the repeal of the Corn Laws have been depended

Why landlordism does this—what claim landlordism has on the Shotlandors, that it refuses them the right of exchanging their fish for other people's corn-landlordism does not say. Oppression is nover fond of exhibiting its title deeds. Our landlords have done nothing to further or facilitate this native Shotland industry, They do not catch the fish, nor find the boats and tackle. They have nover so much as given the Shetlanders a new idea in the art and science of fish-catching. Shetland industry is altogether "native," in the strictest sense of the term. Shetlanders know nothing even of the existence of the landlords, except through the medium of the law that prohibits Shetland from buying in the cheapest market and selling in the dearest—that chains down Shetland industry, and takes toll of Shetland hunger. Possibly, some of them may have heard the name of RICHMOND, the chivalrous protector of the Great British fish interest-but all that these fishermen really know about the fish protection, is, that they are disabled from carning and cating bread.

This standing case of grievance and oppression has lately received a fearful aggravation in the shape of failing corn crops, and rotting potato stores. In the document read to the house on Wednesday, by Mr. Forster, we are informed, that

"Letters recently received from Shotland all concur in stating that the islands are on the brink of famine. The crops of corn, at no time adequate to the subsistence of more than half the population (about $2,000 souls), were very ill got in last season; and to add to the calamity, the stock of potatoes which the people are in the habit of keeping in pits during the winter, and on which they rely in a great measure for austenance during the spring and early part of the summer, have been found, on opening the pits, nearly all destroyed

Accordingly, the Shetlanders have petitioned Parliament for relief. A more moderate and simple potition Parliament never saw from a distressed interest. There is not a particle of mondicity about it. The poor Shetlanders' prayer is not for grants of money out of the taxes, nor for leans to promote public works and private employment. Poor as they are, they seem perfectly able to manage the interest on their own mortgages-and they are absolutely silent on the subject of portions for their daughtors. Nor do they say a syllable about protection for their fish. The people of England, Scotland, Wales, and Iroland, may buy fish where they will, and at what price they can, and Shotland will make no objection. There is nothing eleemosy nary in the relief prayed for by our brave Shotlanders. They only ask to be allowed to do what they will with their own, and dispose of the products of their native industry to the best advantage. If they could but buy their bread, as they are ready to sall their fish, at the honest market price of Liuropa and the world, they would be absolutely without a gridyance to complain of.

Such is the Shetlanders' petition. As it is respecially and constitutionally worded, the House of Ohnimons lies no objection to receive it and her Core hay be core bill and over gone his long to open the life on the land the control of the life. But any attempt to discuss it, to press and. The only that of the only chance of enforce it, to bring home its simple facts and logic to the Floure's understanding and conscience, is ruled to be "wasting the time of the House." The meital of this touching narrative of cruelty and wrong was, it seems, received with "expressions of impationce from the protectionist benches, which were very much crowded"-crowded not with a view to the better protection of native industry in Shetland, but to trip up the heels of a Free Trade Government on a factory and philanthropy question.

Well might Mr. Milner Gibson ask, in his excellent speech on the subject, "whether this Shotland case was not quite conclusive with reference to the corn question ?' Every honest man's answer will bo, Yes; quite conclusive—conclusive not only with reference to the corn question, but with reference to the moral pretensions of Corn-Lawing landlords as protectors of " native industry."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

THE BREE TRADE MIRROR OF PARLIAMENT FOR THE SESSION OF 1846.

Fifteenth Week, ending Saturday, May 2.

On Friday night week the protracted debate on the Irish Coercion Bill produced some remarkable and noticeable "circumstances and accidents." First, Mr. Smith O'Brien intimated to the House that he had been privately coquetting with Lord George Bentinck, the object of both being a double defeat, to be brought about by a diagraceful coalition-Lord George Bentinck is one of those who say that the Operation Bill is essential, Imperative, and should be passed without delay. His principles of protection, he loudly protested, did not lead him to protect "the broad day assassing or the midnight murderer." Yet to effect the paltry, miserable advantage of annoying Sir Robert Peel, and still farther protracting and delaying the Corn Bill, Lord George Bentinck did not hesitate to enter into a private correspondence with Mr. Smith O'Brien, the object of which was to defeat the Coercion Bill, which the noble lord is panting for, as well as the Corn Bill, which he deprecates! Alas, for this country, if it is any longer to be governed by men whose political morality is infected by the flavour of the turf! Lord George Bentinck has never, of course, been an agricultural labourer; but the art, the science, the mystery of " nepotko" is quite familiar to him.

On the "order of the day" for resuming the debate on the Irish Coercion Bill, Mr. Smith O'Brien made a long speech, in the course of which he avowed that he was not a Free Trader, but an advocate of a fixed duty; and concluded by the following question :- "Although he was not prepared for a total and immediate repeal of the Corn Laws, yet, looking at the existing necessities of the people of Ireland be considered the crisis must be met by admitting outs and wheat free of duty till the next winter; and he begged to ask the noble lord (Lord G. Bentinck) whether he and his friends would consent to suspend for three months the operation of the present Corn Laws, so as to admit those descriptions of grain, free of duty, into Ireland?"

Lord George Bentinck was " under the gangway," waiting for the question. He commenced his reply in this way:

"Under ordinary circumstances, it would not be fair towards an independent member of this house to ask him what course he would assent to with regard to particular measures introduced by her Majesty's Ministers. But under the peculiar circumstances in which we are placed, when we have a minister endeavouring to govern the country with but 112 members who place confidence in him, and when the party with which I have the honour to serve numbers 240, which with the Irish members constitute a majority of this house, I think the hon, gentleman (Mr. W. S. OBrien) is entitled to put the question to me, and I will endeavour to give him a frank and an honest answer (hear, hear). The question put to me is this-Whether my friends around me would support her Majosty's Ministers were they to introduce a measure, not for the abplition but for the suspension of the Corn Laws as regards Ireland for a few months ?"

And then be went on to say, in effect, if not precisely in terms, that though disbelieving in the universality of Irish distress, he and his friends were nevertheless prepared to adopt what, on his own showing, was the needless and useless proposition of opening the ports for three months-not in Great Britain, no !- but in Iroland!

In the course of the discussion, Mr. O'COMMELL, true to his principles, thus mildly but emphatically rebuked Mr. Smith O'Brian :

"Sir, I was sorry to hear my honourable friend, the mem-ber for Limerick, so adverse to the total repeal of the Corr ber for Limerick, so adverse to the total repeal of the Corn Laws. My sonviction is that nothing san "to good to the Laws. My sonviction is that nothing san "to good to the Laws. My son one of "hear, hear"). The excitations of the Corn Laws has done us no good (hear, hear). They have been concomitant with increasing milery—concomitant with increasing destitution; and therefore, if any man palls the Corn Laws to me, he must keep an his lattering that the corn Laws to me, he must keep an his lattering that the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal would be reason municipal to the corn law episal to the corn l

Corn Laws, and I wish to Heaven Jou would set shout one (hear, and shears)

Mr. amith Officien after this, had the singular infelicity to get up, and sak Sir Robert Peel if he would substitute a three mouths opening of the parts for a total shallion of the Corn Laws! Here is the question, and the answer:

Mr. SMITH O'BRIDN: Perhaps the right honourile gentleman would tell me whether he has made up his miss gentleman would ten his whether he has have up his mind as to my question? If not, I shall repeat it on Monday.

Sir R. Puzz: Whough somewhat indistinctly put, I can answer the question at once, and without hesitation. The honourable gentleman wishes to know, as I take it, whether I am willing to substitute for the measure of the Government, leading ultimately to the utter abolition of the Con Laws, a proposal for a suspension of those laws for three mouths. As regards Ireland, I say at once I can consent no such proposal (loud cheers).

After that, we had Mr. Cobden, and every wont of his telling speech must be read:

Mr. Condex: I think we have rather lost sight of the origin of this discussion. This somewhat irregular discus. sion arose from a question put by the honourable member for Limerick to the noble member for Lynn, in consequence of a private communication which took place between them (loud cries of "hear" from the Opposition). The question was this whether the noble lord and the party soting with him were willing to vote for the suspension of the Com Lave for three months, and that immediately, and to make that suspension applicable only to Ircland? Now we have another proposition before the house, not to suspend, but to abolish the Corn Laws (loud ories of "bear" from the Opposition); and I presume that the proposal of the bonourable member for Limerick is, that, instead of their abolitions to England, Scotland, and Ireland, we should substitute their abolition for three months in Ireland alone (loud cree of "hear" from the Opposition). Now, I beg in the first place to say that, before the honourable member for Limrick and the noble member for Lynn, there are other parties to be consulted as to this proposition. There are the people of England (loud obsers from the Opposition). I do not mean the "country party," but the people who live in town, and who will ultimately govern this country. I tell him (loss ironical "obsers" from the protectionists) the English people, the Scotch people, and, I believe, the Irish people, too, are determined not to be content with the suspension of those laws, but are bent on their abolition (loud cries of "hear," amongst others from Mr. O'Connell). I think this matter has been taken out of the hands of this bouse altogether; and I rejoice that this question of the Com Law can no longer be affected by the manouvring or private communications or compacts of any members of the legislature (cheers from the Opposition). It has been disposed of and settled out of doors; and though artifice may delay the measure of Government, though it may occasion great anxiet out of this house, the more certain is the bill to be carried (loud cheers); and the only proposal which can be successfully substituted for that of the Government is the total and immediate repeal (renewed cheers). When I hear the noble member for Lynn talk with a complete unconsciousness of past arguments which have been utterly refuted—showing an obtuseness which I can only account for by supposing that for several years past he has given his attention to sabjects wholly unconnected with public affairs (much laughter from both sides)—when I hear him boast that he is backed by 240 of the gentlemen of England—while I hear them cheer bim while he is giving such proofs of atter delusion as to the state of public opinion on this subject, I do feel anxious that the right honourable baronet should, if possible, appeal to the country (loud cheers from both sides), if it could be done without great inconvenience to the trade of the country and great derangement of the husiness of this house (ironical cheers from the protectionists). I say I wish the right honourable gautismen could appeal to the country, and the country would make a moral example of the gentlemen below the gangway, which they little anticipate (loud and longcontinued cheers from the Opposition). Now, as to the proposition of the honourable member for Limerick, has that honourable gentleman considered the practicability of opening the ports in Ireland, and keeping tham shut in England. Is he ready with another measure, or can he give us the details of a bill to be brought in by the honourable member for Limerick and by the noble member for Lynn (loud cries of these licer). "hear, hear" amongst others from Sir R. Peel)? I suppose he has planned some contrivance for preventing the introduction of provisions from Ireland to England; because if be has not, seeing that there is no Cuatom house at present be tween the two countries, there is no possible means of pre-venting the free circulation of corn from one to the other, and substituting for that brought from Ireland to the country the wheat of America and the Baltic (loud cree of "bear, hear"). The noble lord told us that what the wanted in Ireland was money, and not provisions, and heard the softlement re-cohoed on this side. Why, if I understand the accounts rightly, there is a failure, to positive defloiency of the stants food of millions of the scale food of Ireland ("hear, hear" from Mr. O Conneil). Bresume that no one here will now deny that Well, how is menor to annuly that deficiency of food. Why, if they deal change into ingots of gold thair perishing postered it would not feed the people. There is planty of corn, an benowable member below me says, and it is gent to Engage. He proposal is to:keep in Ireland this food for the people. But it is not in the well well not in the well well not in the well well not in the well well not in the well well not that sunnly is kept back, of course the million in the member for Limerick leaves out of his confidences the member for Limerick leaves out of his confidences the people of this country; may more he would intend the break leaves in Reglands while would continue the breaklast in Reglands while nfelicky lilule a n of the anni is mini rhether

overn.

of his

of the

them

stion.

with

LATE

prising (which I utterly deny)—or they will avail themselves prising (which a tractly soul) of the west coast of Ireland and its magnificant streams and varifalls for the establishment of those manufactures with which they can purchase the provisions to be written for their shores across the Atlantic (absers). I am most mixtons not should be made in most mixtons not to take up the time of the house by making any lengthened observations so as in any way to impede the progress of the great measure on the Corn Laws. I have intraded little in these debates, and deeply regret that the measures before the house have come to a dead look (hear, hear). Lam quite sure that the people of England are utierly puzzled and permitted that the people of England are utierly puzzled and permitted that the people of England are utierly puzzled. plexed at the present state of things. I am almost as much so myself (hear, and a laugh). During the recess I was called on to hold great public meetings in Manchester and in London, to remonstrate as to the present position of the Corn Laws. I asked, "remonstrate with whom?" I declare, on my honour, I can't tell now with whom we could fairly remonstrate. I can't blame the Government; and even if I were disposed to do so, I can't agree to add to the weight of censure heaped on them with an unsparing hand thear, and a laugh). I have no right to blame the members for Ireland; and inasmuch as I claim for myself the right of deciding what course I shall take in opposition to measures introduced into this house, I consider them catilled to judge for themselves how far they may be entitled to resist the first reading of the Coercion Bill (lond cheering). I deeply regret, however, the obstruction which has taken place. May I remind the homographic member for Limerick that the Liberal members on this side are quite as near in alliance with him for the mod of Ireland as the noble member for Lynn and his supponers (cheers from the Opposition). It is rather hard to hear consures dispensed on the Liberal members in the same breath in which compliments are paid to the noble lord and his followers. I do hope that, on this side at all events, there will be good humour and cordial feeling (bear, hear, and a laugh), and I don't despair that on another evening we shall make some advance in the Corn Bill; in the passing of which I believe sincerely Ireland is more interested even than England (much cheering).

Mr. Cobdon's speech produced a marked effect on the House; and Sir Robert Peal, Sir James Graham, and other occupants of the Treasury benches, were amongst the most emphatic of the cheerers. Happening to be closely observing the House, we feel convinced that Sir Robert Peel did not cheer the particular sentiment which provoked the subsequent personal altercation. The secret of the whole sfluir is this. Mr. Miles, Mr. Newdegate, and others of the protectionists, were terribly annoyed by the speech of Mr. Colden. Meantime, Lord George Bentinck had retired "up stairs," to refresh himself, after his speech on the terms of the "Holy Alliance." We are not quite sure that Mr. Plaracli was in the house during the whole of Mr. Cobden's speech ; we rather think that he was brought down while the member for Stockport was on his legs, and eagerly informed by Mr. Miles, Mr. Newdegate, and others that Sir Robert Peel had committed the unpardonable au dacity of cheering Mr. Couden's definition of " the people," a being those who lived in towns! Of course, he was told that he must get up, and try his hand once more at flaying a Prime Minister. We were struck by the peculiar loudness of the tones of Mr. D'Israeli, so different from his usual cool, cold, succeing style: it looked as if he had suddenly imbibed an impulse, and was exoterically excited. This, however, is an exoleric matter, and be it as it may, Mr. b Israeli proceeded to pin the First Lord of the Treasury in the following style:

Mr. D'ISRAELI: Before we go to a division on this quesion I wish to say a few words with reference to a circumstance which occurred during the discussion. I cannot help noticing an observation made use of by the honourable herber for Stockport, relative to a subject which in any line or in any place is well deserving of notice. I therefore that I may be permitted to advert to it in a few words. In making that observation the honourable gentleman has favoured us with a definition—which, if public men were to indulge in very often, might be considered advantageous. Its did moto. He has threatened us with impulations (hear, hear), he has held up to us the terrors of popular reprobation (hear, hear), and has imitated the conduct of many great examples in not shrinking from adding a definition of that with which he has menced, us (hear, hear). The authority he has followed is familiar to all of us—even its locality is recollected—but I can inform the honourable member that the streat in which the three celebrated individuals who conceived they were the people of England lived are told by the honourable gentleman, without the alightest reception—without the lonest modifying qualification, that he people of England are the people of England are the people of England are the people who live in the lowing and that definition was loudly cheared by one gentleman, destreading must be people of England are the people who live in the lowing and that definition was loudly cheared by one gentleman, destreading must be people of England are the people who live in the lowing detailed the transmitted of "no, no, "from Sir R. Peel and stays make a great impression on this hoase and disjoughment and several iron, members quest from some long manners, the right has the hon, member for Stockport lied, by Willy in Galled and several lion, members quest from the country of the remain of the people when the the country of the people when the threatened by the bean mamber for Stockport with the lower has a member of the country of the pe

ing into a furious speech (for, as we have already remarked, he was more impotuous than usual). Sir Robert Pool rose, and raising life hat, exclaimed, in a very murked manner, a That I totally dony?"

Mr. D'Israeli, thus arrested, in the full swing of his speech, paused, and said: "If the right honourable baronet means to say that anything I have said is false, of course I cease—I sit down."

In justice to Mr. D'Israeli, we must remark that Sir Robert Peel's interruption was far more significant than the reporters have indicated. In all the newspapers, Sir Robert Peal is reported as saying, "I totally deny that," which to a reader looks comparatively harmless. But the actual words were, and they were uttered in a very marked manner, "That I totally deny!"

We need not enter into the particulars of the various speeches which followed. The Parliamentary quarrel was succeeded by a Parliamentary reconciliation; and Mr. ('obden gave the following explanation of the meaning of the phrase which had excited the "scene:"

Mr. Cobden begged to remind the house that the language used by the hon, member for Shrewsbury, which had been adopted by the right honourable baronet, had not been used by him. That language was not his (hear, hear). What he said was, that the majority of the people ought necessarily to control the minority, and he was strictly correct in saying that the majority of the people—the bulk of the constituencies—lived in towns. In all constitutional states that would necessarily be the case (hear).

The debate on the Irish Coercion Bill was adjourned from Friday till Monday. On that night, Monday, Sir Robert Peel spoke: and uttered the following emphatic declaration as to his intentions with respect to the Corn Bill:

"I need bardly," said Sir Robert Peel, "refer to the ungracious surmise which I beard held out during the debute, that the Government had become indifferent to the progress of the Corn Bill, and had interposed this discussion with the view of defeating or delaying the bill I have mentioned (crics of "No, no," from the Opposition). I heard some honourable gentleman say that, though he did not think this himself, such was the public opinion. I declare (without any unnecessary protestation as to the sincerity of my conviction), that I hope it is sufficient for me now to state, that the progress of discussion, the lapse of time, and intervening events, have more strongly confirmed the opinion 1 entertained as to the necessity of the permanent and final adjustment of the Corn Laws (loud and long-continued cheers from the Opposition). I will not deny that my opinion on this question has lately undergone much change; but it is that restrictions which I first believed impolitic I now believe to be unjust (cheers). Consequently, my sense of their injustice precludes any compromise on my part (renewed obcors). What I proposed in the shape of the amount of duty, and as to the time of its continuance, is all I am enabled to offer; and in answer to those injurious suspicions which have been expressed, I think it enough to say that I am ready to attest, by any public act or declaration that is thought seccessary, the sincerity of my motives (loud and long-continued olicering). So fur then from urging the uniform usage of Parliament, with respect to such a bill as this, as a ground of obstruction to the commercial measures which Government has proposed, I have no wish to defer for a single day the final decision as to those measures

Another adjournment took place on Monday, but with the understanding that another night would terminate the discussion on the first reading of the bill for the Protection of Life and Property in Ireland.

In the House of Lords, on Tuesday, Lord Brougham delivered the following significant speech:

Lord Bupuchan called the altention of the noble and learned lord upon the woolsack, and also of the noble duke (the Duke of Wellington), to a motion he was about to make for five returns connected with the question of the importation of corn from Ireland. The production of these papers could not be objected to, because they had already been produced in the other House. It might naturally suggest itself to noble lords that he was rather premature in moving for returns which went to affect the discussion they were about to have upon that most important measure, the Corn Bill, which, he perceived by the votes of the other House of Parliament, had at various times and in different manners occupied its attention during many weeks of the present session. It was a measure which he perceived from the same votes—for of course he could only look to the votes for information—had made no considerable progress in that house. The state into which the business of the country had been brought, expording to the votes—which were the conjugative time had access to by the constitution of the country-base law of Parliament, and with the most perfect regularity he was bound to admit, was such that in the foreign capital from which he had lately returned he had heard grave doubts expressed respecting the expediency of our system system has persons with whom no doubt he differed upon passing all political questions. He had in value defended our system system has been such that friends at the French bar, and among franch politicinus. Fig had argued with them, that what they, looked upon as the radical defeat and vice of our system system system is always, temporary, and accidental nature which they had been as the radical defeat, and vice of our system which he had bearts lies, had been be against the present seate of seines which it had bearts lies, had no extra positions of the production of the production of the production of the production of the production of the production of the production of the production of the production of mischief from the friction of the parts of the machine, or any resistance in the medium through which it moves, there is in that great political engine—(the perfection of human polity, as he firmly, conscientionally, and seriously believed—a well-regulated constitutional monarchy, acting by means of a well-regulated representative system)—a virineditative, a newer of re-adjustment, soft-normalize and adaptative, a power of re-adjustment, self-corrective and adeptative, which never failed to get rid of any temporary obstruction, and to restore harmony in the working of the great machine. Their lordships possessed a power within themselves of applying the corrective, and of administering an effectual remedy. If in any quarter, of whatever colour of politics, the desperate hope was entertained of frustrating the intentions of Parliament, and of the country, by endless and vexatious delays, or of postponing the arrival of that great, and, in his conscience he believed, most salutary measure into their lordships house till it should be too late to discuss it (for without ample discussion God forbid it should be carried) this session, then the remody was in their lordships own hands, for they had the power of anticipating the dis-cussion, and of coming to a deliberate and well considered opinion. And if, in the course of a fortnight, he should, by having recourse again to the votes, still find the same obstruction to this, and indeed to all business elsewhere for it was not to the Corn Bill, but to all other business that the obstruction referred-he should deem it his bounden duty, as their lordships had the unquestionable right, to bring on the subject for discussion without waiting for the and thus give noble lords an opportunity of discussing, and deliberating, and pronouncing their opinion upon the general principle of that great and most important commercial change. And when their lordships, after discussion, should have pronounced a favourable opinion upon the principle, as he carnestly hoped and confidently expected would be the case, then he might venture, without any gift of prophecy, to foretell that the passage of that and other measures would no longer meet with obstruction elsewhere, With the view, therefore, of preparing for the discussionwhich might be wholly unnecessary, but which might also become absolutely necessary—he took leave to move for the

The House of Commons on Tuesday, was ongaged in a discussion on the conduct of Mr. Smith O'Brien, who had deliberately refused to attend a Committee, on the plea that as at Irish member he would only attend to Irish offairs. This was adjudged to be a contempt of the jurisdiction of the house; and he was allowed till Thursday to consider whether or not he would submit, or else take the courses quences.

The care of Lord Ashley's Ten Hours' Bill has devolved on Mr. Fielden; and on Wednesday the second reading came on. The "gangway" section have been making great exertions to bring up country gentlemen to vote on this occasion—the only object being the impotent and contemptible one of finding, if possible, another occasion for injuring the Government.

On Wednesday, after the disposal of a mass of railway and other business, the order of the day for the second reading of the Factories Bill was proposed.

Mr. Humo urged the inconvenience of proceeding with the bill at a period when so much private and public bustness remained for consideration, and pressed Mr. Fielden to withdraw it for the present, and to obtain the assent of the Government to its being brought forward on some future Government night.

A desultory conversation arose, during which Sir Robert Peel intimated an opinion that he could not assent to any arrangement of the nature proposed. Various members having urged that the debate should proceed,

Mr. Fieldon rose, and, in a speech of considerable length, moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Ainsworth seconded the motion, referring to the progress of public opinion on the subject, and suggesting that a compromise might be effected by which the duration of factory labour might be limited to 11 hours.

Mr. Hume, after arguing that the bill would be an anjuntifiable interference with the freedom of commerce and trade, and an undue restriction on the employment of labour, moved that the bill be read a second time that day given months.

Mr. Ward seconded the amendment,

Sir George Strickland urged the expediency of regulating factory labour to the extent proposed by the bill, which he consequently supported.

Sir James Graham assigned reasons why the Government had determined to support the amendment. In our four great staple branches of manufacture, the cotton, woolien, silk, and linen, there were half a million of people employed, the amount of wages paid weekly was about a quarter of a million sterling, and the proportion to our whole annual exports borns by the exports of these four branches was no less than three-fourths, amounting to from 35,000,0001. to 40,000,000l. An error, therefore, would prove of vital fmportance. They were told not to treat this question as one of pounds, shillings, and pence. But capital, profit, and wages all resolved themselves into pounds, shillings, and pence; and they could not treat it otherwise than with reference to acknowledged principles. A diminution of chacent. on the capital amployed; and they could, therefore, only uphold wages by raising the price of the critale manufactured. But the competition in foreign merical rendered this impossible, and the reduction must like the full of wages. It was the hard lot of a min function the hard lot of a min function in the like his brow he should eat bready? and a like only copie to the working man was his labous, let thems he the only septial of the property of the control of the

He halleved that the repeal of the Corn Law would effect more good to the working population, believing as he now did that it was not merely unwise, but unjust. On this entheat he had shauged his opinion, and had been exposed to some obliquy on account of it. But having had an opportunity of calmly reviewing his judgment on this matter, he was more and more convinced that the Corn Law was the great obstacle to the prosperity of the capitalist and the walters of the working classes. On these grounds he joined in opposing the bill.

Mr. Mark Philips expressed his satisfaction with the statesmanlike specoli which had been delivered by Sir James Graham, and urged the practical objection to the interference with adult labour.

Mr. Bankes then moved the adjournment of the debate, which after some conversation was agreed to, being fixed for Wednesday week.

On Thursday, Mr. Smith O'Brien, still persisting in his refusal to obey the order of the house to attend a committee, was formally committed to the custody of the Serjeant at-Arms. The remainder of the evening was occupied by business of a varied nature. Mr. Hawes gained a victory over the Government on the subject of the long-disputed Danish claims; carrying a motion for componention by a majority of 18. Mr. Bouverie also obtained the appointment of a select committee, to inquire into the condition of labourers employed on railways and other public works, and to devise ameliorative measures.

In the House of Lords, the Lord Chancellor proposed the second reading of the Government bill, called the Religious Opinions Relief Bill, the object of which is to repeal the various penal statutes which still slumber on the statutebook, against Papists, " recusants," Dissenters, and so forth. The introduction of such a bill, and its reception in the House of Lords, is a very striking proof of our progress. The Bishop of Exeter gave a slight note of opposition; but generally speaking the poers indicate that they have moved with the rest of the world on the subject of toleration. It is to be hoped that they will exhibit equal liberality on the subject of corn, NOMINATION FOR THE FALKIRK DIS-TRICT OF BURGHS.

FALRIBE, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 29 .- The nomination of candidates for the representation of the burghs of Falkirk, Airdrie, Hamilton, Linlithgow, and Lanark, took place here to-day, upon a huntings erected on a vacant space of ground called the Calender-Rigs, tused occasionally as a marketplace for the sale of cattle A good deal of interest was excited on the occasion, and but one feeling seemed to prevail, that Lord Lincoln ought to have taken the pledge proscribed to him-namely, that he should retire in Mr. Wilson's favour when a general election took place. The Liberal interest is divided to some little extent. Many are willing, under present circumstances, to give Lord Lincoln the benefit of their suffrages on account of the position he occupies in the present Ministry; but the great proportion of the Free Trade electors are determined to adhere to Mr. Wilson, the man of their choice, as they maintain that while Lord Lincoln goes along with them in the repeal of the Corn Laws, he will not be so fair an exponent of their views on other great questions of civil and commercial liberty.

The opnyans has been prosecuted with great vigour, short as is the time since the candidates came into the field. According to Mr. Wilson's party, that gentleman has a majority of 100 as regards those electors who have pledged on both sides; but as there are fully more than 200 of the constituency who at present stand neutral, it is difficult to say who will be the successful candidate. The protectionist party are said to be united in their support of Lord Lincoln; and it is reported that all the influence of Lord Lincoln's fatherin-law, the Duke of Hamilton, will be brought to bear on the constituencies of Hamilton and Lanurk, in favour of his noble relative.

The two candidates, Lord Lincoln and Mr. Wilson, appeared on the hustings shortly after 12 o'clock, surrounded by a large body of friends. The crowd assembled on the sociation would not number much above 500 persons, who gave the candidates a fair and impartial hearing. After the Shoriff had read the writ, and the Act against bribery and corruption, Colonel Hamilton, of Cairnhill, came forward and proposed Lord Lincoln, whose nomination was seconded by Ballie Swim, of Hamilton.

Provost Dawson, of Linlithgow, seconded by Dr. Hamilton, Airdrie, nominated Mr. Wilson, of Dundyvan. Lord Lincoln then presented himself, and was but coldly received. His lordship commenced by referring to the position which he occupied as a member of the Cabinet, and the absolute necessity there was for strengthening the hauds of the Government at the present moment by sending him to Parliament. He declared that he had no knowledge of the requisition which had been sent by so large a body of the electors some time ago to his opponent, Mr. Wilson, also he would not have come forward. In reference to not agreeing to the condition which was asked of him, that in the event of his receiving the support of Mr. Wilson's requisitionists, he would retire in that gentleman's favour when a general election occurred, his lordship stated that his sole objection to such a pledge was, that it would impose a condition on the constituency which was unconstitutional, insemuch as it would prevent them, if they should be pleased with the manuer in which he discharged his duties, from again asking him to come forward at a general elec-tion, which, however, he had no intention of doing. It sould not be unknown to them, it was known to the whole world, and he wished to make no scoret of the matter, and his colleagues did not wish to make any secret of it, that the force of the Government had been greatly weakened by their force of the Government had been greatly weakened by their adopting measures of Free Trade. Nobody could read the marspapers without observing that the Government were not apported by the large body that used formerly to support the large body that used formerly to support the large body that used formerly to support the large body that used formerly to support the large body that party were bent, not only on defeating their large body of that party were bent, not only on defeating their passing. Was it not not been that within these few days an alliance had been at the large body their passing. Was it not not be forced between the agricultural proposed by the large their passing the life flower of Commons, and the rescalery of Ireland? Nobody could have falled to see that an attempt of this kind had been made, and was in progress of completion, unless others should come forward and support miniaters (hear, hear). Could anybody witness these things without seeing that nothing but the position in which the Government found themselves placed towards the country and towards the Ouege could induce them to paragraps with and towards the Queen, could induce them to persevere with these measures? Could anything be more painful, more irksome, and more onerous, than the position of the Ministers of the Crown at the present moment? They had not placed themselves in that position from a regard to any selfish object, or from a regard to any private feeling, or from any wish to retain power. For what, then, had they placed themselves in this position? It was done from a conscientious conviction that the measures which they had proposed were essentially necessary for the interests of the country. It must, however, be borne in mind that the protection party had more than once thrown it in the teeth of the Government that the country were not with them. They say, look at the election of South Nottingham. There their lrish Scoretary was defeated by a considerable majority. Look at their Colonial Secretary. He was unable to obtain his re-election. The protection party say that in both these instances the members of the Government were defeated by the protectionists. Now he would come to the third instance. Did not the protectionists point, and with still greater force, to the defeat of Captain Rous in Westminster? Do they not say, Here was a man who professed himself an advocate of Free Trade measures? (A voice from the crowd—"He was a turncoat, as well as yourself.") They might call him (Lord Lingoln) a turncoat. He could assure them that such a phrase passed him unheeded and unconcerned (hear, hear, hear). He had not the slightest hesitation in avowing that he was not always a Free Trader, and therefore he gave the person who had made use of the term the full benefit of his observation (hear). But he was referring to the case of Captain Rous. Captain Rous was defeated, and he was defeated by the union of the protection party with the extreme Free Trade Liberal party (hear, hear). The protection party in Parliament pointed, and with justice, to such a victory, and said, " Was this a proof of the desire of the country for Free Trade measures?" It was true that there was a love for Free Trude, but the country loved individuals more. Could it be possible that if the country were so interested in the progress of Free Trade measures as was said to be the case, they would reject him who was not only able to give asmuch assistance as another in carrying them out, but who also, from his connection with the Government would be able more efficiently to do them service? This was the manner in which the protectionists reasoned upon the subject, and the use they made of the rejections he had referred to (hear, hear, hear). He had very little doubt that Mr. Wilson's powers and abilities were greater than his; but he did say that it had been proved, at this particular juncture, that the Government now in power was the only one which would be able to carry these measures out ("hear, hear," and "Oh.") When it was found that the interests of the country demanded these measures, which could no longer with safety be postponed, did not the present Government endeavour to land over to others the power to carry them into effect? And what was the result? They were unable to do so. Lord John Russell himself had since stated, in the House of Commons, that he would have failed if he had attempted it. This being the case, he (Lord Lincoln) must ask, was it wise, in reference to these measures, to reject a member of the Government? Lord John Russell had failed, and it was proved that he could not carry them. Was it wise to reject a member of the Government, when by so doing they were destroying the moral effect which must attend the re-election of a member of the Cabinet as a representative in the House of Commons at the present moment? He was sure that if they were playing the game of the protection party, they could not play it more effectually and better than they were now doing (cries of "No, no," from the crowd). He heard a voice saving "No." But he would appeal to them whether, if saying "No." But he would appeal to them whether, if Lord George Bentinck, or any of those acting with him in the House of Commons, were to dictate the course which a constituency like this should pursue, where he knew that the majority of the Free Traders was so great, they would not desire that they should take that course which had been taken in Westminster, and when they had two Free Traders to deal with, that the electors should reject the one connected with the Government and take the other? He besought the electors to consider the consequences that must attend his rejection. He was confident that his anticipations would be realised and that they would find that the Government measures would be retarded, he should not say even for a time, but absolutely defeated. He was confident that if the result of the election should turn out to be that Mr. Wilson was returned, however much the Free Traders of Glasgow, Liverpool, Manchester, and other places, at other times might occusion they would deeply regret it. was confident that in these great marts of commerce there would be lamentation and regret. He was equally certain that it would be the cause of joy and exultation in No. 17, New Bond-street ("hear, hear," and laughter). He would not, he was sure, ask any man to wave his political opinions to him. He would not do it himself to any man; and he would set no man; and he would set no man to do what he himself was not he would ask no man to do what he himself was not prepared to do; but he must say that no political opinion would be compromised by this course, and he was quite confident that if the electors took the course which he recommended, they would be furthering in the only way which they possesse the measures which they had so much at heart. Had h Had he been addressing another constituency, he would have entered at some length into the question which was now before the House of Commons. He did so when addressing the constituency of South Nottingham, before he was defeated, because he felt that it was his incumbent duty to endeavour to convince them, however feeble might be his efforts. He felt, however, that the constituency he was now addressing required no conviction. Alle than that they were satisfied of the importance of the measure of that they were satisfied of the importance of the measure of Free Trade, and, therefore, he felt that it would be a more waste of time. An elector had called out to him that he was a turnoost, and Mr. Wilson, in his address, had stated that he was no new convert to Free Brade. He (Lord Lincoln) knew that such was the case, and he supposed that he meant to draw a contrain between himself and him (Lord Lincoln). If such was the case, and he would say that he thought that if they taxed him with being a turnocat and a convert to Brede, they do this to have in the searches he had made in the house of they had like a sarrioos he had made in the house of they had like a taxed by they had like a taxed of they had be said that he house he had made in the house of they had like a taxed of they had like a taxed of the high country to continue the motive which they ought to continue the motive which they had be said that he had made in the was like they had like a taxed to they had like a taxed of the him which they had like a taxed they had like a taxed they had like they had like the motive which they had like they them who could assign any motive of a personal and in-proper character, they might brand him, if they would, and kick him out of the town (applause). Why, every interest connected with the maintenance of power, every interest in regard to his personal friends, every interest in regard to constituency that he respected and loved, every intensi of a domestic and private kind was at variance with the step he took (hear, hear). But he would not ask them to attach too much importance to that. He would not eak them to acquit him of any improper motives became his interests were all one way while his conduct we another; but he did say, that even as regarded this election the fact of his being a convert to these measures did no make him less fit to be the representative of these opinion than Mr. Wilson (hear, hear); and for this reason, that most frequently in public life nineteen twentieths of the men who went into Parliament adopted their principles, not from & curate observation and study, but because they were brought up in a certain society, and because they were educated in those principles. If the men who have been brought up in these principles have subsequently, after mature reflection and study, and after testing them by observation and expe rience, changed their views without any appearance of corrupt and improper motives, he thought that was rather an additional reason not only of the proof of the soundres of those principles, but a security that he was a fit and proper person to carry them into effect. Lord Lindoln then said that he had entered into this contest believing that he was acting in accordance with the wishes of the electors unammously, or something nearly so. He concluded by request ing those who had promised to support him at the poll to come early on Friday morning, and to bring their friends along with them, and said that although the contest would be a close one, he had every reason to anticipate success.

Mr. Wilson, who was received with great applause, made some introductory remarks as to the poor effect which the remarks he intended to make would have upon the meeting. coming, as they did, after the able address of the Est of Lincoln, who was not only high in rank, but held the distinguished position of a Cabinet Minister. (A Voice: "It, not men, but measures that we want.") As, however, the electors who had been so kind as to put him in this position had not asked him to make any apology for them, he considered that he now stood in the high position of being for the first time on an equality with his lordship, as they were both seeking the same thing-the suffrages of the electors (cheers). The noble lord having stated his claims, it was now his (Mr. Wilson's) duty to do the same; but, before doing this, it might be necessary that he should say a few words on the position in which they respectively stood, as great part of this contest, particularly as regarded Lord Lincoln himself, was in reference to the relation in which they stood to each other. He hoped and trusted that be would be able to show that this contest was not of his seek. ing. It had been already stated, but he would take the liberty of stating it to them again, that a requisition from the electors of five different burghs had been presented to him some months ago. That requisition, so numerously signed as to secure, in his opinion, his election, asked him when a dissolution took place—a vacancy was not the word, but he considered them the same thing-to allow himself to be named as a candidate for their suffrages. In answer to this requisition, he sent a letter to each of the elector, siating that he agreed to pledge himself to come forward whenever they required him to do so. Things remained in this position till Monday week, when an application was made to him on the part of the friends of Lord Lincoln, but not by himself, that, in the event of the late member. Mr. Baird, resigning his seat, he, (Mr. Wilson) would waive his claim upon the electors at this time. The arguments used to induce him to do this were, in the first place, that Lord Lincoln was a Cabinet Minister. and that being a Cabinet Minister without a seat in the House of Commons, it was of great consequence that he should have a seat, so as to enable the prosent Government to carry through their Free Trade mes sures. His (Mr. Wilson's) answer at once was that for him self, he had not the slightest objection; but the question was, would the constituency go along with him? In order to ascertain this, he consulted the electors in the different burghs who had signed the requisition, and in three of the burghs it was carried unanimously to allow him to waive his privilege for the present in favour of Lord Lincoln. In two of the burghs there was a slight difference of opinion, but a motion to the same effect was ultimately carried by a majority. In allowing him to waive his claims for the present they attached to it a condition, that his lordship should pledge himself not to come forward when a general election took place, as it was their intention to give their suffrages to a candidate whose principles were more in accordance with their own upon questions of general politics. After being through all the burghs, he (Mr. Wilson) called spon Lincoln and communicated to him what had passed, see pointed out to him the condition to which he had allosed. His lordship frankly and immediately said, that that was condition with which he feared he could not comply. He asked his lordship to reconsider the matter, because if that was to be his answer, he was afraid that the arrangment would be broken up. The pext morning he received a communication from his lordelity, reiterating the same statement—that he still held that it was his duty to decise the same what statement—that he still held that it was his dud, such a pledge. He was glad, however, to hear from what his lordship had stated in the address which he had put himself. delivered, that he had now no intention to offer him again as a candidate for those burgins. (Lord Lincoln and add so throughout.) He wished his lordship had some him (Mr. Wilson), when he applied to him what he had be stated to he would be a second to the wind the second to the him (Mr. Wilson), when he applied to him what he had not stated; he would have felt it to be his duty to have commissed it to the constituency, and he would almost like spen himself to say that they would have so modified its witten pledge, and allowed the field to be left often for low life coll. (A Voice—"Leave it yet.") He would have so modified its witten coln. (A Voice—"Leave it yet.") He would have here is with them to judge of the causes which his less to the contest." He thought the pulley pledge which his less to be not so versed his fourth pulley more than reasonable tween his to diship a year that he would like to he had not intention of granding (with his ways distinction without adding to the had not intention of granding (with his contest in the ball district with the contest in the contest in the life of the

The to which an exte

balmo

Ho form

STATI Maxes here that then will trath of prins den It is di ened, as t quainted . Areat-fo and neces least a ti which con of truth at anids of or atrictions act a tebs arraing the anticipated anywhere b in place re knd to ove If such fe bour of dan coming evil ensuces. I be wise in a Frace and land might lieir own cy be exceeding ing stateme orations and protectionia of the norther the fattering kingdom are soires. To i

Solding will tionists mus

of the man

He considered that they were all under a debt of great trailinds to the present Ministry, who had come forward with this bold measure—the boldest measure proposed in this country since the Beform Bill; and he hoped and trasted that, notwithstanding all the drags which were put upon it, it would yet come out of the House of Commons upsesthed. (A Voice—"What length will you go in extendinsestiled. (A voice— write length will you go in extending the franchise) "? He would answer that question by and-bye. While he thought they were under the despest chilgstions to the present Ministry for proposing so enlarged a measure of Free Trade, he thought it would not do to leave the subject without expressing regret that they had not gone But it was not the present Ministry that were enided to all the honour councited with these measures. They must go farther back. They must go back to the people, who had brought their weight to bear upon the question. That great body, the Anti-Corn Law League, were the chief instruments in carrying this matter forward (cheers). In fact, that League had set up a new sort of representation in opposition to the representation of the House of Commons: and the members of that League formed a body which acted so energetically on Govern ment, that they found there was no resisting it. then there also came to the assistance of Government an ally of a very extraordinary kind in the shape of a failure ally of a very extraordinary and in the sumper of a major in the potato crop; so that Ministers were obliged to consider the subject, and to devise the present measures. He thought that Government ought over to have clogged the measure for the repeal of the Corn Laws with the condition of three years. They ought to have repealed them at once (cheers). More than that, he would have had them to include, in this present bill, all the protective duties which exist, as protection was the worst of all ways to raise a revenue. He would also have all the import taxes taken off every article of food; especially of such articles as ton and sugar. He was also opposed to that clause in the Irish Coercion Bill, which declared that all parties who were found out of their houses between supset and suprise, and who were not able to give a reason for so being out of their houses, should be subject to such a heavy punishment as transportation (hear, hear, He considered that this was unduly interfering with the liberty of the subject, and was actually a sort of forging fetters for the people of Ireland (hear). Other laws should be adopted for the state of Ireland than these. Mr. Wilson went on to say, that he claimed their suffrages because he knew that his political opinions were more in harmony with theirs than those of his lordship; and that it would be altogether an anomaly for such a Liberal constituency to return as their representative a Conservative. Mr. Wilson then answered the question put to him as to the extension of the franchise; and stated, that while he was for an extension of it beyond the present 101, qualification, he had not made up his mind as to the exact length he would He concluded amidst great applause.

The sheriff then called for a show of hands, when only about a dozen were held-up-for-Lord Lincoln. A poll was demanded, on the part of his lordship, by Colonel Hamilton, and the polling was fixed by the sheriff to take place on

At this stage of the proceedings a person asked Lord Lincoin what length he would go in the extension of the suffrage; to which his lordship at once frankly replied that he would not extend it further than it was at present.

The assemblage then quietly dispersed.

STATE OF THE MANUFACTURING DIS-TRICTS OF LANCASHIRE.

(From a Correspondent of the Times.) MANCHESTER, APRIL 25 .- There is a whisper floating here that it is the intention of the "protection" party, by means of an unholy alliance, to extinguish the Ministerial Corn Bill and Tariff.

If there be truth in this rumour-which Heaven forbid !then will there he, for once at least, a fatal realisation of the trail of the well-known phrase, "Quos Deus vult perdere

It is difficult to believe that men professing to be culightened, as the "protectionists" do, and pretending to be acquainted with the condition and the wants of the country, would venture to exhibit so besotted a state of mind as to arrest—for that is all they could do—a measure, the justice and necessity of which have been proved and re-proved at least a thousand times, by mon of all ranks of life, and which could be enforced again and again, with the cloquence of truth and nature, and with a withering sarcasm, by thoumads of our horny-handed and fustian-jacketed operatives in this district. Were it not that we have the history of the Reform Bill before our eyes, and the absurd and futile ob sinctions thrown in its way by men said to possess hereditary wisdom, we could scarcely give credit for a moment to such a report. But well recollecting that period, and wit seeing the escapades of dukes, earls, and barons, who all antisingular countries are such a such a such as the second such a anticipated revolutions anywhere but in their heated imaginations, we are disposed to place reliance on the statement that the monopolists inand to overthrow the Bill,

If such folly and wickedness he contemplated, the protectionists must have most erroneous views as to the condition of the manufacturing districts, and, like the estrich in the bour of danger, must imagine that, by shutting their eyes to coming soils. coming evils, they will thereby escape from their comedensures. Defore such an act was perpetrated, would it not be wise in some of them to visit this hive of human intelligence and take of them to visit this hive of human intelligence and take of human intelligence. nce and industry, that an honest report of "the goodly Frace and industry, that an honest report of the surface with their own save would doubtless their own eyes and hear with their own sars would doubtless be exceedingly inconveniont, as staggering facts and alarming statements, painfully true, might derange impending endous and produce some serious conversions. But if the metestionists will be a staggering facts into the relation of the stage of the sta orations and produce some serious conversions. But if the critical state will not examine for themselves into the estate of the northern manufacturing districts let them. But if the of the northern manufacturing districts let them. "Inv not the fattering unation to their souls "shat all the resv of the kingdom are as blind, and partial, and indolent as themselves. To the great mans of the enlightened and liberal state feeple of Bugland (in whom may be comprised men's every political stade of opinion) the state—this fearful how as the manufacturing districts, is milly and scourselve how as the habitation of some political stade of opinion) the state—this fearful how as the habitation of some political stade of opinion to the state of the fearful how as the habitation of some political with (all works only learned to the state of the state walls. How wise must be the policy of that Minister whose object is the maintenance of honest employment for our ingenious and ablebodied artisans and operatives, the continugenious and autopodied armans and operatives, the continuation to them of good wages in return for their labour, and the plentiful supply of sound, wholesome and cheap food! In these gifts the Minister would form the best and chonpest defence of this and every other part of the nation, and without them the tranquillity of no populous manufacturing district oan be proserved.

It may have been inferred, from the dead calm that appears to pervade all classes in respect to the great Ministerial measure of the session, that no public interest or anxiety is felt on the question. If such a notion provail in any influential circle, a great error has been fallen into. The interest, the anxiety, the intense desire on the subject, are strong and powerful as ever; and it would have been strange indeed had it not been so; for the struggle here has not been one of party, but of principle. After the first week's debate in the Commons on the measure, some impatience was exhibited from the frivolous nonsense dealt forth by tenthrate "Protection" orators; but, as it was felt that these gentlemen were indulging in a sort of last-dying speeches, charity and patience were extended to them with a liberal hand, in the hope that the farce of opposition would soon pass away, and be followed by a measure of substantial luatice.

The people here now appear to be in the transition state, from the passive to the active mood. Surprise and indignation seem to be spreading; and, if trickery or procrastination be tried as a hoodwink, the united voice of Lancashire, Yorkshire, and Cheshire, will reverberate among the valles and hitle that the sound will be begand within 2. Standard and bitls, that the sound will be heard within St. Stephen's, as on memorable occasions gone by.

Then, with reference to the League. A notion has been Then, with reference to the League. A notion has been entertained that that organization is virtually extinct, and that its resuscitation would be impossible. "The wish is father to the thought." The League had never more vital elements within it than at this moment. Let the "Protectionists" kick out Peel's bill, and the League, in 48 hours afterwards would be reanimated and full of vigour "as a giant refracted." its strides would be even the league. giant refreshed;" its strides would be over the length and preadth of the land; if a quarter of a million fund should be sufficient, a half million, or a million fund would be raised to meet monopoly in its strongholds, and to vindicate the justice of Free Trade. This is no idle boast, as the Protectionists and their allies would soon flud to their cost. The vast population in the manufacturing districts have set their hearts upon freedom from monopoly; and from the achievements of the past an opinion may be formed as to the successes of the future.

The opposition hitherto given to Sir Robert Peel's bill, too frequently "frivolous and vexatious," has been productive of extensive mischief. The suple manufacture of this district has been almost paralysed, and both masters and men have been driven nearly to the verge of ruin. The delay has been detrimental to all classes, and if much longer conlimied the effects will be disastrous. On all sides do we hear that the stagnation in trade will increase in proportion as the Corn Bill and the tariff are delayed. Manufacturers, merchants, and shopkeepers are haunted with uncertainty and indecision, not knowing, in this doubtful state of things, what to do for the best.

A gentleman here, very extensively engaged in manufactures, communicates as ffollows :- " The present state of trade is much depressed, there being no demand. The spinning department is a good deal depressed, compared with the last year; still, that may be considered to be about the best part of the cotton trade. The hands, generally speaking, are pretty fully employed, with the exception of handloom weavers; nor is there any alteration in wages. In the present state of the market, parties who have to manufac ture even by power have great difficulty in maintaining their There seems to be a deep regret that the progress of the Ministerial measure is so much retarded, as the delay tends to depress manufactures. It is thought that, if it were to pass into a law, a revival of trade would immediately follow; but, on the other hand, if it be delayed too long, there is very little hope of experiencing a brisker trade before the latter end of the year.

Another letter from a leading merchant, with no strong party predilections, has the following passage: "That the present Free Trade measure before Parliament tends to depresent Free trade measure perore transment tends to de-press there can be no doubt, arising from the uncertainty as to its results. But eventually, if passed, it is the opinion of parties in political society, whether Whig or Tory, that it will do a great deal of good; and the majority are anxious

It is proper to add, that at present there are upwards of 1500 hand-loom weavers in this town entirely unemployed A communication made by two of the unemployed weavers to the writer of this letter is as follows:—"The present statement is to inform you that there is a great number of hand-loom weavers thrown on the streets for want of employment. The workpeople of Messrs, Aspinall, Turner, and Co., are 200 in number, all idle; of Messrs. Swainson and Birchwood, 300, all idle; of Messrs. George Fankner and Co., 300, all unemployed; of Mesars. Peter Dixon and Sons, 400, a few employed. The fabrics of work manufactured by those gentlemen are oblofly coarse handkerchiefs, buff checks, and occasionally coarse ginghams. We are told that our misery at present is caused by Sin R. Peel's measure in the House of Commons not taking its proper

Such is the present state of this populous district. It is placed in imminent peril, and the consequences no man can predionte.

One word as to the result of Sir R. Peel's measures. Should the bill be passed, the offset would immediately bessed in the restoration of trade to general activity, ir. the employment of all classes of the working community, and in the ployment of all classes of the working community, and in the diffusion of content and happiness among all ranks of the people in the manufacturing districts. On the other hand, if this bill, should be thrown out, or further delayed, there would be no outbreak, no resort to physical force or violence, no tumnition outbreak, no resort to physical force or violence, no tumnition outbreak, no resort to physical force or violence, no tumnition outbreak, no resort to physical force or violence, no tumnition outbreak, no resort to physical force or violence, then dependence on riot and insubordination. Their appeals have constantly been to the initial, to the judgment, the resort the entire thinking provest attacker additionates the content of the initial to the judgment, the resort the entire thinking provest attacker additionates. The provest in the physical state of the district of the physical state of the district of the physical state of the district of the physical state of the district of the physical state of the district of the physical state of the district of the physical state of the district of the physical state of the district of the physical state of the district of the district of the physical state of the district of the physical state of the district of the physical state of the district of the district of the physical state of the district of the distric immediate ropeal. The my will be for present, not procreetinated justice; and the victory will be decided in favour of the many, as surely as friduph has already crowned their

It is to be hoped, however, that the folly and hopelessness of arresting public opinion will be abrodoned, and that decent submission to a force so irrealstible will at longth be recent submission to a force so irrecistible will at longth by rescolved upon. By continuing their crusade, the protectionistic can gain nothing but odium, contempt, and defeat. The people are too many for them; and the claims of justice are too powerful and too highly prized by the industrial millionis of Great Britain to be given up, with recream feeling, at the summons of a select party of men, whom a breath has much, and whom a breath can uppeak. and whom a breath can unmake.

FOREIGN NATIONS AND FREE TRADE.

(From the Times.)
The Continent of Europe and the United States are infosted with one class of polisicians and political writers, whose blind and ignorant hostility towards this country has led them first to ascribe to the Government of England oertain general characteristics, infinitely remote from the true spirit of our policy; and, secondly, to shape all the incidents spirit of our poncy; and, secondry, to support in the incidence of our history to fit their preconceived errors. To support the doctrine that the views of the British Cabinet are invariably dictated by the most long-sighted cunning to the most seefish ends, these wiseacres indulge themselves with unif-mited perversion of fact, and they invent the strongest theories to account for their construction of the simplest occurrences. According to this absurd class of observers, Great Britain mule war upon the Chinese solely to enforce the sale of optim in the Celestial Empire, and it was not Sir Henry Pottinger, but the French Envoy, who opened the five Chinese ports to the trade of all nations. The Right of Search Treaties were crafty conventions, framed solely to comble British cruisers to harass the commerce of all other states. The emancipation of the negroes was a scheme for improving the cultivation of sugar and cotton in India by the voluntary sacrifics of 20 millions of money and the des Struction of the permanent prosperity of the West Indian colonies. The late campaign upon the Sutley was not the result of an unprovoked aggression by the Sikhs, but of the grasping designs of England upon the Panjab. So that, by dint of misstatements and misconstructions, the most glorious, humane, and praiseworthy traits of our history are obsenred, and an attempt is made to throw suspicion upon each of those great changes in national policy which have of late years originated with England, but which are destined to make the circuit of the globe when they have triumphed over the prejudices of less enlightened communities. The onward course of this country is, indeed, by no these childish cavillings of our foreign detractors. We have no fear but that the best men of our Own contamporaries and of all time will do justice to the services which England has rendered in this generation to the interests of freedom, religion, civilisation, and liumanity. As long as public opinion at home is enlightened, and the public conscience sound, we care as little as any people ought to do for the consure or applause of the world; but we are conscious, and we may reasonably regret, that the complete accomplishment of the great public objects we have in view is sometimes postponed by the imperfect comprehension or the unfounded mistrust of These remarks may be applied with particular cogency to the progress of Free Trade in foreign countries, and to the impression which the measure now before the Honse of Commons has produced in the world. It has at once stult! fied all the predictions and belied all the arguments of the Continental protectionists with reference to the policy of this country, and it has shaken the ground beneath them at home. After having denounced in every shape those com-mercial treaties by which England was, in their opinion, seeking to compass the destruction of every country with which she has an established trade, they see her, disdaining to make a mero political bargain where the laws of commerce insure her success, strike down the barriers even of protection, whilst they are still hugging the chains of probibition. The competition which they dreaded before becomes infinitely more formidable since the industrious classes of England are to be supplied with food at the same rate as the rest of Europe. The protection which we are removing in not so much protection to the British farmer as to the foreign manufacturer; and instead of imitating our example, or the example of the unprotected manufactures of Switzerland, there never was a time when foreign Governments have been more likely to encounter a vigorous resistance to a reform of their tariffs.

But these delusions, these mistakes, and these pernicious remedies for artificial diseases, will ore long be corrected and discarded by the force of example, truth, and time. The whole argument against Free Trade is already narrowed from a general defence to back the laws of public economy were themselves denied, and their application altogether resisted. But experience, and, above all, the example of this country in a variety of public and private transactions, have put down these absurdities. The defence of protection is now conducted by what the lawyers call confession and avoidance. Its foreign partisans do not vonture to deny its general advantages, and they acquit England of any intention to commit a deliberate suicide; but they allege some peculiar obstacle or disquali-fication for the introduction of Free Trade measures amongst themselves. Frae Trade principles have supported the public revenue in England, lowered prices, kept up wages, extended trade, and opened a new era of greatness to the people of this country; but the German minor States shrink with alarm from the moderate suggestions of commercial re-form made by the Prussian Government. The Russian official journal declares that a long course of rigorous protec-tion is an indispensable preparation for the dangerous indul-gence of Pres Trade; and that until the imperorubles created a Manchester by bountles and prohibitions, a president shall be indirectly given to the cultivation of her agricultural shall be indirectly given to the cultivation of her agricultural produce elsewhere; so that, like the dog and the shadow in the fable, he drops the solid interests of the empire to grasp at a system of imaginary and fallacious improvement. In France, upon two necessions, the Minister of Commerce and of Finance have held language which, indeed, we expected from them; but which their adjusts of Chinact and M. Duchetel; must bare blushed to held the most openion of the condensating the principles of high the reliable of understanding the principles of high the reliable of the condensating the principles of high the reliable of the condensating the principles of high the reliable of the condensating the principles of high the reliable of the condensating the principles of high the reliable of the condensating the principles of high the reliable of the condensating the principles of high the reliable of the condensating the principles of high the reliable of the condensating the principles of the condensating the principles of the condensating the principles of the condensating the principles of the condensating the principles of the condensating the principles of the condensating the principles of the condensating the principles of the condensating the principles of the condensating the principles of the condensating the principles of the condensating the principles of the condensating the principles of the condensating the principles of the condensating the principles of the condensating the principles of the condensating the principles of the condensating the principles of the condensating the co enriched by the system of probibliton, and of man who them selves declare that without prohibition they should be nothing. But at no distant period the real interest of the con sumor and of the people will be hetter understood. The French nation will inquire what it is that constitutes the difference between themselves and their neighbours, and makes prohibition so indispensable on one side of the Changel and Free Trade on the ofter. They will ascertain that in England a vast system of financial reform has been in progress for many years, by which the burden of many millions sterling of taxe tion has been removed from the people, from the necess ries of life, and from raw materials. They will remomentiat since the Revolution of July no remission of taxation whatever has taken place, with the single exception of the duty on the sale of wine in 1831, though during the whole of that period the prosperity of the country and the public revenue have gone on to increase. A private momber of the Chamber of Deputies recently brought forward a measure for the reduction of the salt duty from 3d. to Id per kilogramme and so irresistible was the case he es tablished, that in spite of the Minister of Fluance, the Chamber adopted the proposal. For the first time for many years the interest of the consumer has thus been beldly and fairly pressed upon the French Legislature. M. de Lamartine, more aspeolally, has distinguished himself by the enlightened sagacity with which he has taken up the cause of the labouring population; and we have no doubt that if he will apply his eminent capacity and his independent character to promote the application of a more liberal commercial policy, he will render the greatest services to his country.

It is true that we confidently anticipate that Free Trade will secure great advantages to this country, and we are far more anxious to make those advantages our own than to obtain the assent of foreign nations to the principles we profess. This is now the extent of those interested and designing views which some of those nations impute to us. vited them to accompany us; upon their refusal, we con-tlemn them to follow us. They will seek in vain to strengthen the bolts and bars of protection. The wall of Uhina would not save them now; for men will not always believe that the welfare of society depends on making things artificially dear which are naturally cheap, or on raising obstacles to the free intercourse of mankind, to which they mainly owe whatever of wealth, enjoyment, and civilisation they already possess.

THE OBRIEN AND BENTINCK COALITION.

(From the Morning Chronicle.)

The well-timed and most effective speech in which, on Friday night, Mr. Cobden brought back the wandering attention of the house to the real question before it, and did prompt and sharp justice on the authors and the objects of the O'Brien and Bontinck convention, may, probably, have a use beyond the immediate occasion. Other parties, besides the honourable members for Limerick and Lynn, are too much in the habit of "leaving out of their consideration the people of this country;" and the very dangerous blunder of rather losing sight of the origin of the discussion" which has been so long dragging about, and seems still to have an indefinite futurity of duration, is one to which dircumstances offerjust now so many plausible inducements, that we must lay our account with seeing the weaker headed sort of politicians altogether unable to sustain a concentrated attention to the facts before their eyes. We must, in common kindness, recall these wandering wits, and brush up these cloudy memories—for the consequences might be serious of carrying this kind of forgetfulness too far. It is really a work of charity no less than of patriotism, to keep perpetually present to the protectionist mind that unaltered and unalterable state of facts on which the responsible beads of the party will eventually have to form a judgment. They will have their attention brought back, one of these days, to the "origin of the discussion"—either by Sir Robert Poel and the House of Commons, or by the League, the constituencies, and the country; and it is highly desirable that their attention should not, in the meantime, be suffered to wander so far as to require a harsher and more disagreeable species of memento.

We beg then to remind all those extremely imprudent persons who dream that the question now before the country is ausceptible of some cunning sort of compromise, or # adjustment," that the whole business has long since been taken out of their hands altogether. As the discussion now lingering through Parliament had not its origin in any Parliamentary party, or combination of parties, it lies not within the power of party men to settle it by private compaot among themselves. It is not a thing to be "arranged." Mr. D'Israel's "gentlemen of England," and Lord George Bentinck's patriots who "reign in the heart" of Ireland, /did not set this question going, and caunot stop it or turn it aside now that it is going. Parliamentary parties did not oreste that revolution of opinion which has prepared the people of the United Kingdom to expect and demand a legislative revolution to match; nor can they control that fearful necessity which has given sudden development and materity to a force that might else have taken another year or two to fluish its growth. The question is not theirs, in either of its great elements—and any protension on their states of the state of the stat part to dispose of it by way of "arrangement," is a sheer impertinence. After all their arrangements are completed, they will discover that "there are other parties to be consulted," namely, those who, whether living in towns or villages, buy and sell, and receive wages, and pay taxes, and est bread, and have votes, and make Houses of Commons, and are, de jure and de facto, the rulers of the empire in the last resort. For the answer which these "other parties" would make to that question on which the fauatics of the protectionist faction pretend a desire to ascertain their opi-nion, we are contented to refer to Mr. Cobden's well-remembered analysis of the state of the constituencies, the data and results of which have not yet been confronted by any counter-statement or calculation that has chanced to come counter-statement or calculation that has chanced to come under our observation.

The percet and unbesttating conviction felt by those who have most carefully studied and best understand the great practical problem of electoral dynamics, as to the results of that "appeal to the people" which would instantly ensure that "appeal to the people" which would instantly ensure of any serious attempt at compromise, is the chief source of the country now exhibited the country now exhibited the country now exhibited the country now exhibited the country and absolute assurance of faith in a supply all Bir Robert Peel-mainly because the backet things and absolute assurance of faith in a supply all Bir Robert Peel-mainly because would be a doelly and onested by stocking and should be a doelly and onested by stocking and should be a doelly and onested by stocking and should be a doelly and onested by stocking and should be a doelly and onested by stocking and should be a doelly and onested by stocking and should be a doelly and onested by stocking and should be a doelly and onested to be a doelly and onested by stocking and should be a doelly and onested to be a doelly and ones to, because the Premier really has (generally epacking) a very happy way of managing these things, and there is a prevalent impression that the protection is have tolerably prudent men among them, in that "other place," where alone imprudence could have any practical consequences. Still, the feeling is—if it must he, let it be. If they are ready, we are ready. If they will have it so, they shall have it so. And though we have the shortest political memories and the best hearts of any neo-ple on the face of the earth, have the simplest possible spice of vindictiveness in our composition, and are fond of economising our expenditure of the ways and means of moral and political warfare—still, there would be a sort of satisfaction in "making a moral example of the gentlemen below the gangway," the idea of which tends to abute the repulsiveness of this onerous and disagreeable necessity.

For our own part, we enjoy, on the whole, a hopeful and comfortable faith that all this is sufficiently well understood by those with whom the responsibility really lies. We are not without our apprehension, at times. The present signs of public opinion and feeling are so liable to be misinterproted, that the possibility at least of an erroneous construction being put on them is an cloudint which cannot be safely excluded from our calculations. We are alive to the risk which exists of the repose of conscious strength being mistaken for indifference and lassitude. The subsimistaken for indifference and lassitude. The subsi-dence of agitation, where activity is felt to be superfluous, may very possibly be confounded, in some quartors, with "reaction." Yet we must allow, that any year exclose and Yet we must allow, that any very serious and painful apprehensions on this score contain an implied imputation on the judgment and patriotism of those with whom the question really rests, which cannot be justified in the absence of direct cyldence. Where the consequences of a false step would be so palpably and so gratuitously mischievous, it is but fair to presume on the exercise of at least than constitutional decorring, indicates the propriety of assuming that a body of legislators, charged with so vast a responsibility cappet he found greatly wanting in the first sponsibility, cannot be found greatly wanting in the first and most elementary of political virtues. At the same time, we must warn the Promier, that there ought to be no need-less experimenting on the prudence and sagacity even of the most august tribunal of the empire. Computations with an unknown quantity for one of their elements are intrinsically uncertain and deceptive -- A pradent minister should beware of making superfluous exactions of the prudence of others, whose means of correct judgment are necessarily inferior to his own.

MORE NEW CONVERTS.

(From the Economist, April 25.) It afforded us great pleasure, last week, to allude to the sound reasons which Lord Essex adduced for his conversion to the principles of Free Trade. But we have been even more struck by the singular ability and clear comprehension of those principles, as exhibited by another recent convert, contained in a letter addressed by the Rev. Christopher Nevile to Mr. Alison. This letter is a remarkably clever and racy production, of less than fifty pages, in which the writer, who had acquired some considerable reputation as an advocate of protection, gives an account of the process of observation and reasoning by which his convictions became changed, and by which he furnished himself with the most unanswerable arguments to all the fallacies of protection. For the space occupied, we have seen no production which has in a more satisfactory manner disposed of all the leading errors and prejudices against Free Trade. Mr. Nevile adopts as his motto, "Change of opinion is not inconsistency," and we are satisfied that no one will read this pamphlet without being convinced that, in the writer's case, change has only been in accordance with the enlightened convictions of a powerful and vigorous mind, which has with feli-city grasped at the truth and thrown error aside. It appears that, five years ago, Mr. Nevile published a pamphlet in defence of protection, which had a flattering reception from Mr. Alison and others. After a laborious inquiry, we have understood with a view of following up his first pamphlet in further attempts to defeat Free Trade doctrines, Mr. Nevile has found their truth to be irresistible, and his opinions are ontirely changed." He says to Mr. Allson:

"I address my recantation to yon, on grounds which, perhaps, may surprise you. I trace my conversion to an attentive perusal of your works. I am indebted to the most distinguished protectionist writer for my conviction that our protective system has been most injurious to the country."

The process by which Mr. Nevile first doubted the accuracy of his former opinions, and at length fully embraced his "new views," is strikingly expressed in the following words:

"A review of our position was enough, indeed, to shake my faith in my political system. I found great distress existing; the only assignable causes by the advocates for protection, being over-production and over-population. And under what circumstances were we placed? An overflow of capital, driven abroad, to our ultimate loss; for want of profitable employment at home—an immense number of workpeople, especially agricultural labourers. in vain seeking employment—millions of sores of land uncultivated, and many millions capable of great improvement—the markets apparently glutted with manufactured articles we could not consume, and with agricultural produce which could not be sold! I asked myself how could any nation be duced to anything like distress with a superfluity ejevery element of prosperity and comfort? An answer there must be; but I could not find it then. I now believe it can be found. The word is monopoly. I have become convinced that protection to native industry, where it has had any affact at all, has been distribution."

Mr. Nevile draws a clear and striking contrast of the actual free competition, notwithstanding a nominal protective duty, which has existed with respect to our manufacturers, and the real and operative monopoly which the owners of the land have unwisely secured to themselves, and shows in the land have unwisely secured to themselves, and shows in what way competition has been so favourable to the advancement and prosperity of the former, while monopoly has been so injurious and destructive to the latter; and he habply exposes the great fallacy and error of referring the prosperity and existence of a pursuit to some nominal price, as the lowest at which production can be repaid. In all such resconding, the power of committing processes, of indiseased quantity, and of generally improved management, are entirely, explicitly, and of generally improved management, are entirely explicitly, and of generally improved management, are entirely tooks of the price negative to repay production in 1411 downward to those made by land villuers of the breamtidity there has negative to the price of the other branches of industry, we are indebted entirely to the system of protection with which, unfortunately for themselves, the proprietors of land have had the logislative power to burdien their properties. If ad the same "baueful prisciple" been applied to manufactures, the result would have been the same

been the same:

"If the first twenty or a hundred cotton mills erected had been protected from competition, can any one conceive that an inactionery would have improved as rapidly as it has done? It would have been easy to show that after calculating the rost of row material, wages, with profits, interest, &c., that a year of cloth could not be made under a certain price, and that price might have been artificially sustained. It is evident what the consequences would have been. It has, however, been open for any man with capital and skill, to build a mill and manufacture cloth, and the price was regulated, not by what all could make the for, but by what any one individual could afford to sell it at the improvement in machinery, any economy in the manufacture. for, but by what any one individual could afford to sell it at; we improvement in machinery, any economy in the manufacture, must eventually be adopted by all parties, or they could not set tain themselves in the market. The moment they were not dersold, their business was at an end. The duties levied at foreign goods were of no avail, for the competition at home desoit, their business was at all state turns leviel a foreign goods were of no avail, for the competition at home was unlimited.

"How different has been the case with our agriculture! The legislation was in the hands of landowners: they calculated his cost of growing wheat, and they advanced the duties on ferencern so as to exclude it under that price. The land could be multiplied, and the inevitable consequence was, they acquire a monopoly of the market. According to the well-known principle, it might have been expected that agricultural imposement would be slow. Necessity, the great mother of inventee heing removed, the probability was, that the progress in the cultivation of the soil has been retarded. Has it been the record or not? Has British skill, capital, and industry, probable or not? Has Pritish skill, capital, and industry, probable corresponding effects in the production of food? Has the last owner, who is the real manufacturer, however indirectly has be made the fullest use of all the means at his disposal? I will take an answer from yourself, the most able writer on the sit of protection. I could confirm your testimony by numerous clety."

This extract really explains the whole secret of the rand progress and prosperity of our manufactures, and the sutionary and depressed condition of our agriculture. The landowner who goes to Parliament and votes for protection to land, virtually offers a premium or encouragement to the occupiors of his land for indolence and neglect. He vir tually and voluntarily deprives himself of all the advantage which would arise from an active exercise of ingendered economy; while he introduces a new and additional closest of uncertainty, wholly inseparable from all artificial systems. and especially such as impose great abuses upon societ, which deters the free application of capital. From these causes the landlord has injured himself infinitely more, in the mere amount of rent which he now receives, than are advantage which he has obtained by restriction. We have not the slightest doubt that had the trade in com been perfeetly free since 1815, the rents of lands and the profit of farmers would have been much higher than at present, while the price of food would probably have been little more than half its present rate. This is exactly what has been the ray in manufactures, by the operation of the principle so well explained by Mr. Nevile. High rents and high farmer profits are not inconsistent with cheap food.

Mr. Nevile disposes, in a most satisfactory way, of all usual pleas set up for protection in the shape of special bar-

"The titles never belonged to the landowner. The land he been bought and sold liable to this payment, which has recently been converted into a corn rent."

"The titlesare therefore is in the situation of a mortgagee; and the titles are, therefore." no tax whatever in growing corn on this tract of land."
"The highway-rates are wholly made up of labour, those rates would, therefore, accommodate themselves to any diminished scale of agricultural prices; besides, good roads are conductive to the profitable occupation of the land."
"The expense of improved implements might, with nearly are non-investigative by the profit forward as a tax was investigative. much justice, be brought forward as a tax or an impediment producing corn at a lower price." * "The poor name producing corn at a lower price."

* "The poornies are not proquiting to land; all real property is equally character.

* "It is true that the capital ongaged in manufacture is not rated to the poor, neither is that employed in agricultur. And if the protectionists are justified in their assertion, that freevery pound embarked in manufactures, lbt. are engaged a synculture, the less we say on that score the better."

* The mait-tax falls upon the consumers, and not upon the grown, and cannot be considered a burden upon the land in particular.

The indirect taxacters are supported by the constitution of the constitution of the considered and control of the constitution of the co

The indirect taxes, amounting to about 80,000,000. of 48,000,000l., are "levied upon production or consumption of the whole nation, and are by no means paid by the land or agricultural classes in particular." To the common segument, that protection becomes needful in consequence of the national debt, Mr. Nevile gives the following unamers able reply and apt illustration of his reasoning:

"If the price of any article is artificially raised to enable the producer to pay his share of any national debt, that prorument inconsumity render the consumer less able to pay it. Seppose a community consisting of A, B, C, D, E, and that A produces corn, B cloth, and C hardware, and that there was just debt to D and E. If all these articles are protected, and the prices raised, the protection is nugatory. If form and is the price if the price is the price is the price is the price in the protection in the protection is nugatory. debt to D and E. If all these articles are protected, in prices raised, the 'protection is mystory. If born lives is sentially raised in price, it is unjust; but in neither case on the joint power of A. B. and G. to meet their common debt be creased. If in this country we should assume that there are the look of the protection is unitarily that the artificial price order is advantage to any one party, as he will lose as mich is commodities he buys, as he can gain in the one he sail. If the protection is unequal, it will enrich one party an improved the protection is unequal, it will enrich one party an improved to force the canital, the skill, and injustry of the tone party for increased. Be far from it, it is very possible, that or simple to force the canital, the skill, and injustry of the tone particular channels, which they would not take in their ham course, the whole trade, commerce, and prosperly as any particular increased. The national debt desired he can many particular included by a tax upon the season in from any particular included by a tax upon the season in from the arminist, that one immense debt is a reason in from the arminist, that one immense debt is a reason in from a constant the most unlimited from Trade.

Alt. As view particular in the dear upon the season in from a constant that any one production of the season in from a constant the world and the season in from a constant the party of the constant the season in from a constant the party of the constant the season in from a constant the most unlimited from Trade.

Alt. As view particular in the dear upon the season in from a constant that one production of the season in from the constant the season in from the constant the constan offe

897. 4497. WOS know

crea

then

of brin are int CHIRDS cach of Portuni Produce bringin daily m the cau tuvity o try, whe pelon (obtain and a Prices. It is addition: make th those of

One

works on suited to ard, are knowled Club en WIII I AM OLIVE

FREE TRADE CLUB.

TRUDYRAG The Right Hon, the Barl of Rednor. The Hon, Charles Palham Villiers, M.P. John Lewis Ricardo, Esq., M.P.

Jöhn Lewis Ricardo, Esq., M.P.

GOÉMITTER,
Briggs, Major-General, F.R.S., F.G.S.
Briglit, John, Esq., M.P.
Olark, William, Esq.
Cobden, Richard, Esq., M.P.
Cogan, Captain Robert Ducle, The Earl
Davy, Edward, Esq.
Fitzroy, Lord Charles, M.P.

Gibaon, Thomas Milner, Esq., M.P. Gibson, Thomas Milner, Esq., M.P. Ivimey, Joseph, Eaq. Moore, Robert R. R., Esq. Raduor, The Earl of Ricardo, John Lewis, Esq., M.P. Ricardo, Ralph, Esq. Thompson, George, Esq.
Villiers, The Hon. Charles Polham, M.P. Wilkinson, Norman, Esq. Wilkinson, William Arthur, Esq. Wilson, James, Esq. White, William, Jun., Esq.

BANKERS. Messrs. Ransom and Co., Pallmall East, SKORETARY. Mr. James Adolphus Moore.

ANNUAL REPORT.

The committee of management, in accordance with the rules of the club, now renders an account of its stewardship for the past year.

The estimate for receipts and expenditure laid before the general meeting of the members of the club, on the 19th of May, 1845, contemplated an expenditure for the year 1845, of 1772l. 10s., and receipts amounting to 2480l. 6s. The receipts were calculated upon the then charges for entrance-fee and annual subscription. Since that time, however, a large reduction has taken place in the anticipated income, in accessquence of a considerable number of possons, originally offering as members, not have joined the club. The result has been that the actual receipts have fallen short by 5612. 10s. of the original estimate.

The current disbursements of the year fell within the estimate, but the purchase of plate, linen, and cutlery, which was rendered necessary in August last, when the household management was transferred from a steward, who had contracted to provide these articles, to the house-committee, tracted to provide these articles, to the house-committee, created an extra expense of 4721. 10s. 3d., to meet which there was cash in the hands of the bankers, 3411. 14s. 2d., and arrears recoverable of 1701. 2s., making a total of 5111. 16s. 2d., showing a balance in favour of the club of 1701. St. 11d. The resolution of the club of the c 801.58.11d. The property of the club at that period was 449/. 14s. 6d.

The number of subscribers, at the end of the year 1845 was two hundred, but the committee felt confident that as the objects and advantages of the club became more widely known, its numbers would rapidly increase; and, during the present year, they have found their expectations realised, 120 members having been admitted, makes the number this

On the 31st of March, 1846, after clearing off all liabilities, there was a balance in hand of 397t. 18s. 5d., and 386t. to receive, which affords a gross sum of 7331. 13s. 5d. towards the expenditure of the current year.

The committee feel assured that the foundation of a most valuable institution is laid, and that the rapid increase of members will soon ensure the results which its originators

Such an increase is confidently expected, the Committee relying on the exertions of the members to aid in the accomplishment of this object, which will render the club one of the most prosperous and useful institutions in the metropolis. (Signed) John Briggs, Chairman. 27, Regent-street, St. James's, 6th April, 1840.

OBJECTS OF THE CLUB.

The Prec Trade Club has been established for the purpose of bringing into more immediate and friendly contact those who are interested in procuring for British capital and industry emancipation from the restrictions which have been placed upon their productive powers. Many distinguished and highly respectable advocates and supporters of commercial freedom are spread over the country, at great distances from each other. The Free Trade Club offers to all these the general country. cach other. The Free Trade Club offers to all these the opponunity of inter-communication in reference to the evils produced by monopoly in their several professions and localities, as well as for concerting the means of more effectually bringing their grievances before the legislature of the

One of its immediate objects is, to afford a place for the the cause in the metropolis, where they may have an oppor-tually of seeing their friends from different parts of the country, when they visit London.

The terms of admission have been reduced to a scale much below those of any similar fusitution: the members will obtain the usual secommodations of a London Club; and a supply of all ordinary refreshments at moderate trices.

and a supply of all ordinary refreshments at moderate prices.

It is the intention, also, of the Committee to make such additions to their present library, from time to time, as shall make that department of the alub directive and valuable to those of the members who may desire to refer to the best works on social and coopenate solding. Donigious of books, suited to the objects of the alub and the pressite of the members with the objects of the alub and the pressite of the members and friends, whose seed the library requested, and will be grassfully solutioned add the library so-objection of his members and friends, on, it is trivial ordinary and objects of the library so-objection of his members and friends, on, it is trivial ordinary of the members and friends, on, it is trivial ordinary of the members and friends. The want of the color of the library of constitution of the members and friends of the color of the

As this club is formed for a specific purpose, it must be well indenstood that no gentlemen is eligible as a member, who is not opposed to the principle of all protective and differential duties. To this he will be pledged by his application to be admitted as a modification to be admitted as a modification.

There is the content of th

Entrance Fee .. 1. Aupual Subsoription Non-ARRIDENT MEMBERS, (beyond fifty miles from Loudon), Annual Bubscription

No entratice fee is regulied from non-resident members. RULE V.—Each candidate for admission shall be proposed as a Free Trader, by one member (on personal knowledge), and seconded by another; and the candidate's name and usual place of residence, his rank, profession, or other description, must be forwarded to the secretary at the time of Foreigners may be admitted by the committee for one month, without payment: after which period they may be admitted for the further term of one year, on payment of the annual subscription.

It is suggested, for the convenience of members, that they should leave with the secretary orders on their bankers, or agents in London, to pay their subscriptions to the bankors of the club, on the 1st of January in each year. Blank forms of such orders will be supplied by the N.B.—The situation of the present house is peculiarly convenient for country members—intersecting, as it does, the great thoroughfares of Piccadilly and Regent-street; public conveyances to all parts of the town and its suburbs pass the door at all times of the day and night.

A list of sleeping apartments in the immediate neighbourhood of the club is kept by the secretary, and members intending to come to town can, by writing to him, and stating particulars, have an apartment engaged, and ready for them on arrival.

MEETING OF CORN FACTORS IN MARK-LANE.

(From the Globe.)

A very numerous meeting of corn factors, and other persons connected with the corn trade, was held on Morday in the large room of the Corn Exchange, Mark Lane, immediately after the business of the market was concluded. Its object was to take into consideration the present deranged state of the corn trade, and the extensive injuries inflicted on the interests of both importers and purchasers by the continued delay of the Corn Bill. Several statements, illustrative of this state of things, were made by some of the oldest and most extensive factors, who represented that the overloaded state of the granaries, and the continued arrivals, without any immediate prospect of clearance, keep the foreign trade in a state of stugnation. After an animated discussion, it was determined to embody the views of the meeting in a memorial; and a deputation was appointed to wait on Sir Robert Peel, to urge on the right hon. baronet the necessity of pressing through Parliament the measures agreed upon by his Government, and sanctioned by the House of Commons, with all possible despatch.

This movement on the part of the corn trade of London will produce similar demonstrations from the provinces. The corn trade at present suffers partially. The full measure of its embarrassments and losses has not yet been poured upon the market. The manufacturing and commercial interests are now chiefly affected. Every week supplies additional proofs of the stagnation to foreign and domestic trade, which delay in proceeding with the measure has caused to the manufacturer of, and trader in, our staple commo-

But further delay will produce injury upon the class which the protectionists blindly intend to serve by their obstructive policy. Suppose that they succeed in keeping the bill in the Louse of Commons until the commoncement or middle of June. The price of grain is remunerative at present; and no quantity now in bond, or that can be brought in from abroad, will have any considerable effect upon it. But if the present accumulations should continue in bond until a few weeks before harvest, and if all the grain and flour which will arrive in the spring months should go into bond, instead of passing into consumption, the whole quantity accumulated before the bill can leave the House of Lords will then be poured into the market, and will necessarily have the effect of greatly depressing prices. Let the furmers he wise in time. Of all classes they are most immediately interested in protesting against delay. Their "friends" will, if allowed to proceed in the course they throaten, prove their worst foes. The remunerative prices in which they now re-joice are delusive. A resulton is at band—caused by the very policy which they think will protect and preserve them—which will assuredly lay bare the fallacy, and show them the refuge of lies in which they were taught to trust.

FREE TRADE.—MEMORIAL OF COTTON-SPINNERS.

The following is a copy of the memorial which has been forwarded to Sir Robert Poel, But., &c. &c., as agreed upon at the last general meeting of the operative cotton spinners of Manchester:

To the Right Hon. Bir Robert Peel, Bart., M.P., &c. &d., the Memorial of the Operative Cotton-Spinners of Manchester and Salford. Sheweth and Salford.

Sheweth,
That your memorialists are cotton-spinners in the boroughs of Manchaster and Ralford, and deeply interested morally, provided and deeply interested morally, in the prosperity of the manufacturing and commercial enterprise of the country, interested is their cape. It is the commercial enterprise of the country, interested is their cape. It is the commercial enterprise of the country, interested is their cape. It is a support of the ball to the conformation of the deeply state of trule in these statings with the conformation of the trade, and manufactures of single-send would be constituted to be vell-being it lie that of the community. It is that the conformation of trade of other purelitation within they are entered in the conformation of the conformatio ment of all classes of the civilised world; and more especially ment of all classes of the civilised world; and more especially the happiness of your memorialists.

Analyzour memorialists have, for many years; witnesses with respect the missiv and destitution, and in too many hasances, the immorality of the working classes of this country, which which, in the chimon of your memorialists, have been destrict and extended by the restrictions on traid and commercial intercourse with other nations, which the messaless of first tercourse with other nations, which the messaless of first halesty's Government are calculated to remove. Your memorialists when with great alarm the indurious effects upon field, which the delay of the passing of the Corn Bill is now catality, and firmly believe, that further obstruction will materially injure, if not rain, the prospects of your memorialists, insamuch as commercial confidence is to a great extent destroyed by the innertainty which prevaile as to the motion of the settlement of the whole question.

the certainty which prevails as to the motion of the settlemen's of the whole quastion.

Your memorialists, therefore, most respectfully but firmly recommend that you will, without further delay, insist on the immediate passing of the Cora Bill, believing as they do, that every argument that can be arged against it has been heard, and that all the attempts now making to delay the settlement of the question are distated by a desire to retard, rather than to reason on the merits of the subject, as affecting the industrious community of England.

munity of England.
Your memorialists further beg most respectfully to state, that they are quits prepared to stand by your Government, and, if need be, to defend the Queen and her responsible savisers, from the factious attempts that are now making to allens to the people from their Queen and her Government.

Signed, on behalf of the meeting.

GEORGE JOHNSON, Chairman.

DISTRESS IN IRELAND.

DUBLIN, APRIL 28 .- The Clare Journal, which reached Dublin to-day, brings the following circumstantial and substantiated account of the destitution of a portion of the people on the western coast of the county of Clare, Can anything be more harrowing than this detail?

" Kilmurry Ibrickano, April 24, 1846. "Two copies of the following memorial, from about two hundred poor housekeepers, a list of their familius, sveraging shout one thousand souls, have been forwarded—one to the Relief Commissioners, and snother to the Lord Lieutenant:

"The humble Memorial of the poor resident cotifers on the ploughlands of Cleunogarnane and Clohanes, in the parish of Kilard, and barony of Ibrickane.

"Humbly Shawath."

of Klard, and barony of Ibrickane.

"Humbly Shawath,
"That in consequence of the mysterious affliction of an allwise Providence of the potato crop, memoialists (from the swampy nature of the soil of these localities) have, by the potato rot, it en deprived of all means of subsistence for themselves and families, and are at present the most miserable beings on the face of the earth.

"That a read was passed by special sessions presentment, lat Vict., chap 21, and for which a sum of 450t, was granted to give relief on the premises—that said read, leading from Occupe O Neil's by Lough Donnell to Ciohanneinchy, was approved of by the civil engineer.

by the civil engineer.

by the civil engineer.

"That in daily expectation of relief on the premises by opening of said road, memorialists have, from time to time, pawned all their day and night covering, and are at present suffaring from cold and hunger in a state too much for human endurance.

"That memorialists would long since have taken rofuge in the poorhouse, but, being under the impression that they would have neither house nor home on their return to sholter themsolves and families, and would, consequently, for evermore go to ruin.

solves and families, and would, consequency, to ruln.

"That the memorialists respectfully, yet fervently, crave your honourable bloard will be ginefously pleased to take their wretched condition into consideration, and order such immediate relief on the premises, as may be the means of saving the lives (if not of memorialists will ever pray.

"Being the nearest resident magistrate, I regret to have to state that this memorial is too true, and that it rather underrates the state that this memorial is too true, and that it rather underrates the state of destitution the poor are in.

"Burron Machamana, J.P.

"As magistrates of the barony above named, we have made

"As magistrates of the barony above maned, we have made inquiry into the condition of the memorialists, and find, that some local public-work is actually necessary for heirsustainined and support.

FRANCIS G. MORONY, J.P. THOMAS H. MORONY, J.P. THOMAS MORONY, SCH., J.P.

DUNGARVAN, APRIL 23.-Under this date a correspondent of the Waterford Freeman writes as follows :- "On Tuesday a crowd of labouring men presented themselves at the Reverend Dr. Heally's door, and called on him to get the Reverend Dr. Heally's door, and called on him to get them work. The Doctor exhorted them against the com-mission of any violence or breach of the public peace, and assured them that every one of them would be employed on the following day, at one shilling per day. The "Tipperary boy," from the thick of the crowd, cried out that a shilling a day was too low, and called on the people not to work for loss than is, 6d, per day. At the request of Dr. Heally, the "peelers" were sent for, and "my bould Tipperary boy" was marched into "quod," where he remained till the temperature of his cell reduced his excited and foolish the temperature of his cell reduced his excited and foolish notions and feelings to the standard of cool reason; and after expressing compunction for his conduct, and promising to behave himself like an honest and peaceful man for the time to come, he was discharged. Many believed him to be an incendiary. The demand for the Indian meal here is most pressing and extraordinary, so much so that two or three hundred persons are waiting to be served. uuparga persons are waiting to be served every morning opposite the house in which it is retailed. The accounts from the surrounding districts relative to the condition of the peasantry are heartrending and alarming in the extreme. In Killongford, Kilrosenty, Comeragh Killnafrelian, &c., the stock of potatoes is consumed, and the inhabitants of these places are now using their seed potatoes, which will last them but a very short time; this is the case with many of the farmers, but the condition of the cottler and labourer is far more deplorable. Some of them had no potatoe gardens tilled at all, on others they failed; they have no relief committee to get them " meel or mait," and are left to their fate—to starve, perish, or plunder. A carrier from this town, as he was coming from Clonmel, a few days since, called into a house which he saw convenient to the roadside, for the purpose of lighting his pipe. It was ten o'clock in the morning, and there were five or six little boys and girls squatted on the floor of the wretched house, crying. "Have you any fire?" said the commin. "No," replied the father of the children, "and what is worse, I have not a morsel of food to give them pour children whom you see there bawling with hunger; not that I get work to carn it."

work to sarn it."

ADVANCES OF EARLYS.—The time him artired when it can no longer be denied that upon the research of their wife plays the means denied that upon the research of their wife plays population, and plays a chieff of their wife population, and plays the research of their strains of

B. COBDEN'S SPERCH in the House of Commons on Friday, Palvanary 25th, 1846—Heviced. Price One Print, 18 The BRIGHT'S SPRECH in the House of Commons, on Tweeder Right, Peb. 17. Price One Penny.

All GIBSON'S SPRECH in the House of Commons
Live Royal wight, Peb 1s. Price One Penny.

Live Royal wight, Peb 1s. Price One Penny.

Live Royal wight, Peb 1s. Price One Penny.

The Royal wight, Peb 1s. Price One Penny.

Australiant of the Penny of the e League, te., in cloth.

JOHN HOPKINS'S NOTIONS of POLITICAL ECO-NOW, By Mrs. Mecommended by Mr. Cobden. Is. &d.
TWENTY TRACTS AND SPEECHES ON FREE
TRADE. By Bart Ducle, Mesors. Villers, Cobden, Bright, Gibson, O'Connell, M'Cullegh, Baines, &c. 1s atteched. 12mo, size,

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE QUARTER OF A MILLION FUND.

Subscriptions received during the week ending Wednesday, April 29, 1816.

N.B -As the Subscription List is made up from Wednesday to Wednesday, contributions received on Thursdays and Fridays are not published in the LEASUR of the Saturday immediately succeeding, but are included in the list of the week following.

As the regulations of the Post Office require that the Christian Name of the party to whom Post Office Orders are sent should be given in full, subscribers are respectfully requested to procure their Orders in future for GEORGE WILSON, League Offices, Manchester, or Abraham Walter Paulton, 67. Fleet-street, London

67, Flee	t-street, London.	٠			-
Mercer	J., Oakonshaw, near Agerington		d	C e	_
	, Benjamin, Lancaster , Hannah, do		• •	2	0 0
Rowland	unes, Mawdeley street, Great Bolton tichurd, Millingva, near Falmouth Rev. E., Pontypool, Monmouthshire				0
Cooke, B	emanto Hope Home Washadas	.•		1 (0
"Pairley,	i, Bobert, Amiestreet, Belficut George, 198, Aroyla strock (1985)		•	1 - (()
*Eyre, He Manches	PRODUCTOR OF THE PROPERTY OF T	1811	i,	1 (()
Roberts, G	Win 8 Strotford New and Mannet	er.	•	1 ()
ATT TO CALLS IN THE	Rev. John, Yewport, Monmouthshiro	 	$\overline{\cdot}$	0 2
-Hughes-1	hands to the city of the test (Str.) (10)		•	0 2	-
Maradon, I	mus, do do David, draper do do	:	•	0 2	1
Bwidenban Ellie, Rev	k, Edw., groeer, do . Moses, Mynyddisllwyn, near Nown	•		0 2 0 2
Monmon	timility	ort 		1) 2
Moffat, N.J	McMillan, Bannel	٠.		1 0
	Anderson, James drawer	• •	. 1
	(*Dickson, James, Dye Mill (Mortimore, Thomas	••	1		( Andoyer,	Baker, Samuel Wild, Win.	٠,.	. 1		. (
- i	Baker, James	••	0		(
	*Marshes and Shepherd, Pond-street *Smith, John Wm., East Parado		20	0 .	- (
BlicMeld.	TUILS, John, Trafillmr street	••	5 1		(
•	*Cutta, Joseph, Hermitage-street Elliet, John, Hollis Croft	• •	10	10	0
	· Haworth, James, Fitzwilliam street	••	O		(
. ;	Clay, J. Travis, Rastrick, near Buttorworth and Sons		50 50	0	0
•	Heaps, T. A., Westonto	• •	30	0	0
	I TITEWINDEN TELEVISION ASSISTANT ASSISTANT	• •	.8 .8	0	0
	Trowner, George, and Brothers, Pa	d-	н	0	0
	dock, none Learnyd, Wm., jun., Lane	• •	4		0
	*Johnson, J. and C. Ramedon, stroot	• •	4	n	0
	Robinson, Thomas solicitor		2	0 -	()
	1 Mobile and Swallow Workingto		2	0	0
	1 Tours, Win., at Mosses, J. and T. (₹.	2	0 1	O
Huddors.	I Vickers, Win., Market Walk	:	1		n n field,	Blaw, Thos., Low Westwood, Golcar, o		1	0	D U
* .	Lenthwaite Drower, Brond Oal	۲,	1		_
	Kayo, John, Woolpack Inn Crowland, George, Lindley, near		1	0 0
	LOgora, Thomas, mason, Kirkgato	. 1		0 0
	Small Subscriptions, Rastrick Sugdon, John, Paddeckfoot Mill, near,	. (8 0
	Quarmly, Joseph	. (_	3 0	۱.
	Mallinano, Henry do Biggall, John do	. ()	2 0	1
	Lacey, Enoch	. ()	9 0 9 0	١
1.0	Smith, Henry Small Bunna Newton Wm at We Salaman	. ()	1 0	1
	Newton, Wm., at Mr. Schwan's Beaumont, George do	· (4 0 4 0
	Briggs, John F. do Burtuok, A. do	Ô) :	Ò	ĺ
	Craven, Edward do Small Subscriptions, do	ç	-	ف	1 dis bus esu	ath 3A Lima stuart Olan	De.	•	1 6	I
TOURSE, JOHN	, 18, Cheapside Geo., Vicarese, Bredfield, nr Woodbride	30			1

Crabbe, Rev. Goa., Vicarage, Bredfield, in Woodbridge. 9
Smith, B., and Son. 8, Loudon Wall
Plokford, J. H., 13, Whittham's buildings. Old-at.-rd.
Harrison, Abraham, 16, Haverstook Hill, Hampstond Dye, John, 9, Alfred place, Bedford-square
Hardesque, John, Old Malton
Xoung, Joseph. Chastophysics Toung, Joseph, Chostor-le-atrect
Colman, S., 5, Wyndham-place, Bryanstone-square
Calman, S., 5, Wyndham-place, Bryanstone-square
Cann, Thomas and Wm., Easterte, Gloucester Live Scholary Comply, Newmarket-street, Birmingham Man, Wm., Browley, Middlesox

Bew, Robert Higgins lesso Laylor, Montague Overton, Will, wine merchant

Thompson, Wm., orape manufacturer 1
Flousion, Henry
Burgass, Samuel
Gregory, Samuel, card maker
An Enemy to Monopoly
Subscription Frome. Bridport. Subscriptions, per Wm. Hayas

· Those names marked with an asterisk are renewed subscriptions,

A JOURNEY TO THE MEADOWS OF HERTFORDSHIRE.

No. I .- GETTING OUT OF TOWN.

Persons acquainted with the thoroughfares of London know that they are sometimes choked, blocked, or locked with their traffic. It is as difficult to ascertain, when a look occurs, which of the draymen shouting, cabmen whipping. or butchers' hoys "chaffing," has been the cause of the stoppage, as it is to discover who have caused the lock in the political world. But there is a lock in the political world. Never was the line of street, from St. Paul's to Temple Bar, more completely and inextricably choked, by its vehicles locking together, than is the Parliamentary thoroughfare at this moment, by which bills travel from the House of Commons to the House of Lords, and from the House of Lords to the House of Commons. And yet in the line of Fleet-street, and Ladgate-hill, with the crossing of Farringdon-street, there are occasionally lockages in the traffic so inextricable that the most skilful of the police are bafiled in making a clearance; and no clearance is made until some unlooked-for condescension on the part of a few drivers, who back out, leads to a general movement forward, as the unlooked for perseverance of a few jolly waggoners, "all of a row," with their ponderous vehicles from the country-a " country party" in the street, formidable enough to obstruct the traffic, dogged enough to get into a fix and remain in it, led at first to the stoppage.

Being a passenger the other day for the country, to obtain a glimpse of the spring, the fresh green of grassy Hertford shire, the new buttercups and daisies among the grass; the suckling lambs and their fleecy mothers among the buttercups and daisies; the farm fields, with new crops upon them; the farmers, with new notions in their heads about their fields and crops of corn; and, perchance, the lord of Essex, or his park and mansion, or his farms, who has become a kind of Lengue lecturer, putting new notions into the heads of farmers about crops of corn, and Corn Laws, and competition with foreigners ; being a passenger for the country on the outside of one of those busses which gathers from the multitudes of the metropolis, one by one, the railway passengers, and transfers them by the score to the mouth of the iron giants, who swallow them by the hundred, I got fixed in one of those locks in the street which are unpleasant at any time, and particularly so when one's appointment is with a railway train. Still, it was not all lost time. Having no thing to do but to look and listen, to sit and see, I looked and listened, and sat and saw; and the parallel between the street police and the political police in urging onward the loads which would not be urged onwards, seemed to be remarkable enough to justify me in drawing my pen on the subject, as some of them drew their batons, or as others have been drawing, or threatening to draw, their pistols.

There were several waggons loaded with grain or with flour. From their bulk, they were conspicuous among the other vehicles. They had come down the street, and were warned in their progress by others loaded with straw crossing from the bridge, and halted at the crossing. One or two butcher's boys in light carts, whether in joke or in earnest I did not know, demanded that the policeman should turn the worn-loaded waggons back, and allow them, the said boys in the carts, to get past, they being charged with the safe and early delivery of joints of meat for that day's dinners, to those rich enough to have prime joints of meat sent home in light spring earls. But though these impetuous youths, with all the volubility of tongue, all the forwardness, most of the impudence, and some of the "chaff" and the "clang" peculiar to them, insisted that the police should make the loaded waggons go backward to let them and others in light vehicles get on, no such counter movement could be effected. I do not know that the street police said, but they might have said, as one of the political police did-one not unknown in Fleet Street and elsewhere, for his services in clearing a passage for obstructed traffic, "that as well might the corn resolutions of the House of Commons move backwards, or be turned aside, and left in the siding, as to think that those ponderous corn waggons, each with a tonuage of loading, should be backed up hill to let butchers' boys, and the light fry of vehicles go by."

I say, I do not know that the street police spoke thus; nor am I sure that the political policeman, to whom I allude, us celebrated for his services in cleaning obstructed thoroughfares, used the comparison as it is given here; I rather think it is roversed from him: at all events, whether speaking of corn-loaded wagons in the streets, or corn-charged resolutions in Parliament, he said it was impossible that they could remove backwards, or even be set aside, to make room for butchers' boys, or the butchers themselves, who had come whip in hand at an impetuous pace into the street, getting into a fix by their impetuosity, and only stopped from running over some one (some of those poor Irishmen with heavy loads on their breks) by being stopped in their headlong ourgor,

And speaking of Irishmen with loads on their backs, I am reminded that in the street stoppage the humblest carrier of alload mass worst when he carrier set stoppage it is him black our legisless.

only to bear his his that had make no from the, but very often and particularly if an Irlahman, and known to be one, he has to bear the "chaff" of the thoughtless, and even the best. banded cuts of the impetuous boys, who have whips is their liands, and who drive, or attempt to drive, others that they themselves may get along.

I cannot say that I observed any Irish gontleman with his onb and his tiger, though gentlemen with cabs and tiger were there, who at a moment when there was some hope of an early extrication, drove into the confusion, to the locking up of himself and the hindrance of all who were about to move; and yet there were cases not unlike this, of vehicles being driven in which might have been kept out for no pur. pose apparently but the strange satisfaction of being locked up, to the great annoyance of those seriously active in clear. ing the thoroughfare, and to the pleasure of their own drivers—if pleasure it could be—of being in the midst of confusion, delay, angry words, and personal accusations.

Of which there were enough to serve all the street of London, Meluding Billingsgate-market, for as long a time u the length of a session of Parliament.

Some brewers' drays, loaded with beer, had stopped the countrymen loaded with straw; or, which amounted to the same thing, the men of straw would not move, because they said-and swore it as they said it-that the brewers stood in their way, and that they had done nothing to be called on to make way for the beavy waggons of the millers and the commerchants, which were coming down Pleet-street, and were

The police took hold of the reins and led horses, diverand vehicles where they found an opening, whether the drivers assented to it or not. They did so even against the loud protests of such drivers, that they were not to be led in that way by the "Peelers" (a phrase more commonly applied to the police in London than any other), yet allowing themselves to be led notwithstanding.

Then one driver shouted to another, that the lockage and confusion had been all that other driver's fault; and that other retorted the accusation; and cabmen shook their while at one another, and gave significant hints of what each would do to each, if they had not happened to be where the were. And the drivers of such light vehicles as those we see in every street, with soda water and ginger beer, interfered with the stormy cabmen to quiet them, but made the confusion greater by adding new elements of discord. The tradesmen of the streets had their business suspended; ca tomers could not approach the shops; or if they were in ther could not move out; and passengers who could move on some parts of the pavement were obstructed at other, at could not proceed on such business as they had intended to proceed upon. The very dogs of the street seemed to join in, and add to the noise and confusion by their barking; and to the great hindrance and annoyance of those actively engaged in effecting a clearance, men, snarling more suppishly than the dogs, barked at and found fault with everything and every body that was engaged doing something useful. Were it not a daring flight of imagination almost equal to that of the author of the "Revolutionary Epic." one might have thought that some snarling dogs had been bitten by some other dog labouring under Peelphobia-that sad looking dog for instance, which was unmuzzled at Shrewsbury in 1841, and became Peelphobious two years after, and bit the hand that he begged a bone from.

But a riddance was made at last, and the lighter carriages were obliged to give way to the heavier, and the heavier moved on and got out of the way; and we at last reached the railway station too late for the train.

But as there were other trains, and other means of getting into the green meadows of Hertfordshire, I ultimately got there; and if there should be nothing better next week to fill these columns, I may contribute to two or three of them such posies of cowslips and daisies, and buttercups, as ! have found in the fields, with such other field and farm-yard affairs as possess any interest for readers engaged in the emancipation and advancement of English agriculture.

ONE WHO HAS WHISTLED AT THE PLOUGH.

THE PIN TRADE.—There is much talk amongst scientific persons, and those to whom the welfare of our own manufer ture is of interest, respecting the improvements recent made in pin making; improvements which have dress; caused preparations for closing many large works on the caused preparations for closing many large works on the Continent. The machinery by which the new pin is make to which Mr. Kirby, of Newgate-street, the holder of pates, has given the name of "Regina," is of the most extraord; nary character. Strings of wire enter it upon the bire side by thousands, and almost immediately appear at the other pins in the most perfect form, literally besded and goings to a degree of perfection. Activing microscopic nower to detect pins in the most perfect form, literally headed and goings to a degree of perfection, defying microscopic power to eated a fault in shape and finish. The sticking of the pin into paper is likewise completed by the same machinery is as is credibly regular and rapid order; and it is a carrous paper into the least gratifying, that, although the lating operation is accomplished by this invention, the great damage broadly the enormous reduction of although the lating operation in the enormous reduction of although the properties by their "preparation" and Smaking by and a many their "preparation" and Smaking by and a many their preparation and smaking by and a many their preparation and smaking by and a many their preparation and smaking by and a many their preparation and smaking by and a many their preparation and smaking by and a many their preparation and smaking by and a many their prepara

reti Fre Wh

No

Yo

the mean and i Mr. succe He extin to ba 8))00C their flam

sente

hower ing cl these hausti draine bricf noxiou

though nopoly the di literall natura word, j moro c

Tho tion wa to drain "Thai of agriculing circul Dada alo and a hal that with been exp Level, by into chill fertile pro Pelitioner are produ

So far die and

AGRICULTURE.

AGRICULTURAL WILL-O'-THE-WISP.

A MONOPOLIST GROAK FROM THE FENS.

One of the last, porhaps the very last, petitions which will ever be made in favour of that flitting and mischievous illusion, "protection," has lately exhaled from the fens. At a meeting of the corporation of the Bedford Lovel, held at Ely, when the Duke of Bedford was in the chair, and the Earl of Hardwicke, and his brother, Mr. Yorke, one of the members for Cambridgeshire, were present, after the business was over, which, the report tells us, "occupied a very short time"-(how true it is idleness leads to mischief!) - a Mr. Layton got up and proposed a petition by the corporation "not to alter or repeal the present Corn Laws." The Earl of Hardwickedisclaimed all previous knowledge of the petition; but not so his brother, Mr. Yorko, for whose benefit the scene was obviously got up. Our readers will recollect that some time in last autumn Lord Hardwicko gave utterance to sentiments on rural affairs which the local monopolists thought betraved an intention to leave monopoly in the lurch; and his brother, Mr. Yorke, was so enigmatical and pragmatical upon the subject of the Corn Laws, that his constituents-monopolist and antimonopolist-combined to exhibit their supremo contempt for him, and to testify their just appreciation of his doubtful dodges and shallow artifices. Now there can be no question, that at the period we refer to, both Lord Hardwicko and his cadet, Mr. Yorke, had prepared, or were preparing, to cast their lot with Sir Robert Peel, and to cut themselves adrift from monopoly-that foundering hulk. But suddenly the lord and his shadow took a short turn, returned to their vomit, swallowed all their semi-Free Trade words, and the one resigned his court lackeyship, and the other stuck to his county seat Whether the Premier refused some monstrous demand on the part of the lord—for his lordship is a very likely man to rate his own importance in a proportion inverse to that at which it would be rated by others-or whether the snug family seat in the pocket county was deemed too valuable to be lost-we cannot say. But whatever be the cause, both lord and brother have now reappeared as flaming monopolists. The petition, suddenly presented, pistol·like, to the Level corporation, was a means intended to induce the farmers, squires, and squireens of Cambridgeshire not to turn out Mr. Yorke at the next election. Will the dodge

However, as the last of a species soon to become extinct, it may not be uninteresting to our readers to have a few passages of the petition, and the speeches by which it was supported, presented to their notice. Like the unrolling of a mummy, it is, however, a somewhat nauseous task; and its disgusting character is not redeemed by its usefulness-for these monopolist fallacies will soon die of sheer exhaustion. Like rushes on land which has been drained, though they seem to live unharmed for a brief season, nothing can long maintain their noxious vitality. As a relic of a former world of thought, or rather no-thought, this last croak of monopoly is not the least curious. It retains to the last the distinctive characteristics of its kind. It is literally a bundle of fallacies; its conclusions seem naturally not to follow from its premises. In a word, it is a monopolist plea for monopoly. What more can be said?

The petition begins by stating that the corporation was founded in the reign of Charles the Second, to drain the fens:

"That owing, as your petitioners believe, to the low prices of spricultural produce in this kingdom, and other discouraging circumstances, the embankment and draining of the Lovelmade slow and unsatisfactory progress for the first century and a hair, after the establishment of the corporation, but that within the last fifty years many millions of capital have been expended in the improvement of the draining of the Level, by their is produced in the improvement of the draining of the into cultivation, and the Level is becoming one of the most feeling provinces in the Level is becoming one of the most feeling provinces in the Level is becoming one of the most feeling provinces in the Level is becoming one of the most feeling provinces in the Level is becoming one of the most feeling provinces in the Level is becoming one of the most feeling provinces in the Level is becoming one of the most feeling provinces in the Level is becoming one of the most feeling provinces in the Level is becoming the feeling provinces in the level is becoming the feeling provinces in the level is becoming the feeling provinces in the level is becoming the feeling provinces in the level is becoming the feeling provinces in the level is becoming the level in her Majesty's dominions.

So larse good selected of the monopolists of the land appose all the rest of the thing blants of the design to be a laborated at the Wallaw in the land a continuous of the land and the land at the l

That your petitioners believe that the present prosperous state of the Bedford Level is mainly to be altributed to the encouragement given to agriculture by the restrictive duties imposed on the importation of foreign own, and that the improvements that have been effected in the drainage of the Level and the cultivation of the land would not have taken place if the prices of agricultural produce had not been fairly remunerative."

That monopoly has not oncouraged agriculture is now admitted oven by the monopolists. Bosides, why, in spite of the great natural fertility of the fens, is their cultivation so generally inferior? They have been reclaimed, it is true; but we ask any farmer, who is a farmer, whether they are more than half cultivated? Of Peel's measures the petitition says, that "If carried into a law they will be attended with most disastrons consequences to the landed interests of this country, as well as to all classes of the community dependent upon them, and more especially to the small farmer and the labourer."

So said the older feumon of the period of marsh and morass; and their resistance for a time was a great impediment to the reclamation of the fens; and the petition concludes with this bouncing non sequitur:

"That the protection afforded by the Corn Laws against the importation of foreign grain, while it has been beneficial to the agriculturist, has been instrumental to the welfare of all other classes of society, since, during the existence of those laws, large masses of capital have been created by those engaged in manufacturing and commercial pursuits; our foreign and home trades have been placed in a state of unexampled prosperity; and this nation has risen to a degree of wealth and splandour unparalleled amongst the various States in the habitable globe."

But our manufactures and commorce have flourished, so far as they have flourished, in spite of the Corn Laws. Indeed, as the system of restriction of which the Corn Laws form the key stone has been weakened, national prosperity—agricultural as well as trading—has tended to increase. Mr. Layton and Mr. Ball, the mover and seconder, seem to have contented themselves with the simple assertion, that the reasons Sir Robert Peel-has given for his measure—which nine-tenths of the community doem unanswerable, and which certainly have not been answered—according to the fen lights, should have induced him to give "greater protection." Who shall estimate fenman logic? Mr. Ball said:

"What so proper as to appeal to the House of Peers, and ask that body if the opinions and arguments of the last thirty years were all to be abandoned in one moment, because a power was rising up not recognised by the laws, threatening to sweep away the rights of the British community, and abolish all that it had long been thought necessary to preserve!

Fancy the rights of the British community being swept away with the Corn Laws! We always supposed those rights to have had root in deeper and more wholesome soil. But so it is with the monopolists; they ever try to hitch their rotten cause on to something else—just as an auctioneer lots an article nobody eares for, with some useful ones—and hope to carry on their rottenness under cover of that to which they have appended it. But that won't do now—the trick is found out. Lord Hardwicke, however, out-spoke the other fen monopolists, for he thus argued the case of monopoly on local grounds:

"There was no part of the British dominions, which, from its position, had more right to express a strong opinion on this question than the Bedford Level, inasmuch as there was no part of the country in a position resembling it. The manufacturers said that they existed by means of art and science. Now he (Lord Hardwicke) replied that they could use the same language in the Bedford Level, for there they existed by the very means of which the manufacturers made a boast. They existed there by art and industry; that great country had been brought into its present high state of oultivation, by the art and science, and industry of man (hear, hear). It was drained by the steam engine; that great mark of the progress of human knowledge had been seized upon, not only by the manufacturers of cotton, but also by the manufacturers of wheat. Therefore they stood in the same position with the manufacturers of the north in that respect, inasmuch as their prosperity was founded upon art and science."

If they stand in the same position as the manufacturers, why is it they do not repudiate monopoly as the manufacturers do? And read this, oh people of England, as a specimen of hereditary wisdom and aristocratic information:

"That was the ground which he took as a supporter of the principle of protection. And he was satisfied, upon looking controlly as the grantion, that the manufacturer of handshakes before heavy years of his existence had passed, would be the manufacturer of handshakes before heavy years of his existence had passed, would be the manufacturer of handshakes before he will be allowed to have protected to the produce of his mills. Let, the Corn, have be once repealed and before long the progress of salence in the countries and the advantages we gave them for the long the produce of his mills of the light had been to be allowed to and capital. Facts would soon come forth to show that a great pressure upon the cotton manufacturing interest, caused probably in some measure by sending out steam-engines to facilitate the manufacture of cotton at the very place where the raw material is grown, had been to the manufacturers a fearful notice of the risk they must run by competing unprotected with the advancing science of other countries. The chesp loaf was a sort of last hope to them, they thought if they could get a cheap loaf even for a time, they might so reduce the wages of labour as to hold up a little longer against the competition they had brought upon themselves."

That is not to be surpassed. There were, however, a few rational men present, one of whom, Mr. Gay, in opposing the potition, said:

"If it were certain that agriculturists had gained by the Corn Laws, then the owners of land had a right to call upon the legislature not to repeal those laws. But were they not begging the question! Itad not agriculturists respect the benefit from circumstances independent of the Corn Laws? True, the land did bear peculiar burdens; but it was rather their duty to get those burdens removed, than to insist upon protection, in opposition to the interests of those who were not directly connected with the land. If the Corn Laws had produced benefit to the agricultural interest, to what extent had other interests been damnified! If it had raised the price of corn, although the farmers had put more money into their pockets, they had extracted it from the pockets of others. No doubt the owners and occupiers of land must fear any change in the present system, for they had embarked their capital in the purchase and cultivation of land, and were naturally fearful lest any alteration should damnify them. He once thought protection was necessary, but like the 120 spoken of, he had changed his mind, and was in clined to think that farmers had not reaped any banefit from the Corn Laws."

And this is the view of sensible men who were once protectionists. But we have before stated what was the real object of the petition.

WHAT DO THE FARMERS SAY?

Perhaps there is no class of tradesmen who suffer more from the prolonged opposition of the monopolists to Sir Robert Peel's Corn Bill than the farmers; and they and their real organs hesitate not to speak of the obstruction and the obstructives in terms of strong disapproval. Now, the eventual success of Free Trade measures is no longer doubtful; and though a temporary delay may serve the purpose of politicians who fight their party fight by means of jockey lords, and men of that sort, it can do nothing but harm to those who live by their industry rather than their wits, and especially to the farmers. Let us hear what the Mark Lane Express, the only cool-headed upholder of monopoly amongst the professed "farmers' friends'" organs, says on the subject. Indeed, so absurd are the speculations of most of the "farmers' friends" newspapers which advocate monopoly, that we doubt whether they over heard a real live farmer speak, except in the presence or under the dictation of the landlord. They appear to have about as deep an insight into rural affairs as those who would take their notions of the British peasantry from the labourer and peasant, as represented on the London stage, have of the condition of the agricultural working classes. Let the farmers judge whether the following passages from the Mark Lane Express do not convey a far more accurate idea of the actual state of affairs than the bombastic twaddle of landlord-inspired organs:

"Whatever view parties may take of the commercial scheme proposed by Sir Robert Peel, none will be disposed to dispute the evil consequences arising from the delay now taking place in the progress of the measure to an issue, he that issue what it may. Trade and commerce are now experiencing a taste of the paralysing effect under which agriculture has suffered since the advent of Sir Robert Peel to office in 1811. So soon as the plan of the Premier for aftering the Corn and Provision Laws was propounded to the Legislature and the country, at the beginning of the session of 1812, no one who was not wifully blind or lamentably obtuse could doubt the ultimate result of such measures. It was the beginning of a system, the complete establishment of which at no distant period was as certain as the relation of cause and effect. We feel convinced that, if the opinious of all the intelligent farmers in the United Kingdom could be ascertained, there is not a lithe of them but would admit that, when the question of outlay, dependent upon time for return, occurred in the course of his business, a doubt would intrude itself on his mind of the perneived that the concession made to Free Trade principles was but an earnest of a yielding up of the whole. There can be no question that, during the last three years, considerable expenditure has been made upon improvements in the soil; but if these could be minutely unalyzed, we believe they mould the found to be principally made by the owners of the soil, who foresaw the necessity of preparing themselves for a change of circumstances."

The farmers, he says, show no disposition to take an active part against Free Trade, but remain in a state of quiescence; and, in truth, it has ever been so, except when they have been goaded or cajoled into temporary activity by the landowners. The landovds know, however, that the cry of wolf had been made too often and that it would not make any impression how. The writer then speculates on the proposal of the material now before Parliament, and gives it as his deliberate on that the Materials.

now before Parliament, and gives it as his deliberate opinion that the House of Lord will be a light of the seems to us, their the deliberate that the light of the seems to us, their the deliberate the seems to us, their the deliberate that the light of the light o

Upper Mother is a diretimetance ralities enteritated Upper Mouse, is a bircumstance ration estended to instance the chances of its being passed by the Lords. We incline to the opinion that the image time the measure, particled no change takes place in the Commons, and no active resistance is made by the landed interest, both land lord and tended, the mome optimise it is that the mamber of the supportors of the Ministerial measure will increase. We know that the 'farmers' friend' journals assume to repudiate this view, and foster false hopes as much as they can, ancavraging the farmer to believe that the Government scheme will be rejected by the House of Lords."

But this, like most of the statements of the "fariners' friends," will probably prove a delusion. The writer then cites, as evidences in support of his view, some passages from the Bankers' Circular, a thorough-going monopolist print, which are to this effect:

"We have been credibly informed that every resident Hertfordshire nobleman, except one, is prepared to support the Minister's Free Trade measures in the House of Lords; and a surious exhibition they will make of their souse and consistency when they have done so. Some time about Christmas the Herifordshire noblemen and gentry assem-blad in county meetings to put down Mr. Cobden and his confederates, so far as their interference with the electoral franchise is concerned; and we inserted a resolution, moved by Lord Daore, setting forth their intention. This interference was nothing more than a means to an end; and a means too, however unjustifiable and unconstitutional it may be, which noblemen of both parties had frequently before recorded to for the same purpose—viz., the acquisition of political power. Cobden was but following their example; and when he found, by such meetings as the Herifordshire, that his proceedings had alarmed the aristocrapy there were that his proceedings had alarmed the aristocracy, there was no measure to his expression of delight that he had touched a spring that had produced such an effect; which, he said, would only stimulate him to further similar exertions till he had accomplished his object. The Minister, however, suddenly proposes to grant him all he asks."

And afterwards the wailing monopolist (the Circular) adds:

"This, if rumour speaks truth, is the exhibition of Hertfordshire valour, consistency, and judgment, in the persons

Now we are not disposed to fight the battle of the Hertfordshire landocracy; but we must say that though, as a class, they may be violent, pucile, ignorant, and solfish, they do not materially differ from the landocracy of other counties. And the inference drawn by the Mark Lane Express is inevitable. He says :

"' Four months' have, it seems, produced a wonderful affect on the Hertfordshire members of the Upper House: Is there any reason to suppose that the 'conversion' is confined to Hertfordshire? Is it not fair reasoning to presume that the like 'change of opinion' may have taken place in noblemen residing in other counties? and who can tell how far the 'contagion' may have spread?"

There may not be many of the landowners who have the moral firmness to avow the error of the opinion they had taken up without examination, and acted ons through life, as Lord Essox lately did; yet there are many who will quietly make the same "short turn," which has been made by the "brains of the aristoeracy," if, as the lawyers say, "any such there be."

THE BRITISH LION TO THE LORDS.

A correspondent of the Mark Lanc Express, who signs himself "An Essex Tenant," sends a memorial to the House of Lords as a specimen of the way in which the "British lion" should address the lion's protector, the House of Lords. A passage will put our readers in possession of the force and elequence of the "lion" language. The memorial or petition, after stating that the country does not demand Free Trade; that the agricultural interest is intensely anxious to oppose Sir Robert Pool's measure; that the farmers are not acquiescent; and sundry other assertions, for which his lionship has obviously drawn upon his imagination; thus power-

"There is hardly one in a thousand who does not anticipate the sanction of your lordships to that measure but with horror; and, my lords, were low prices for agricultural pro-duce now prevalent, England at the present moment would be as distracted as ill-used Ireland; every element of disor-ganisation and discontent is only repressed by the present state of the averages. Let the Premier's Bill but pass your lordship's house, and the present averages fall but 10 or 20 per cent., and anarchy and discontent would cooks the same foul spirits of mischief and of evil which always attend-and are ready to do their bidding; and having marshalled the victims of Free Trade and injustice into one united and compact phalanx, tremble, my lords, to auticipate the torror; and, my lords, were low prices for agricultural proand compact phalanx, tremble, my lords, to auticipate the direction that mass of discontent and poverty might pursue. Hitherto, my lords, the attachment of the landed interest to the church and to the throne has been proverbial. Will not the paupertantion of that interest diminish the ability to mot the pauperisation of that interest diminish the ability to maintain the expenses of the one, and the interests of body and soul clash fearfully in upholding the other? My lords; agination receives the laurel of victory; and discharged now by the party in whose service she has been so successful, the will glue her services to the party the has plundered; and those, two great interests, which united might defy the jealousy of a world, will had towards each other a mallerant hatter of the party of the part world, will feel towards each other a malignant hatred, a world, will feel towards each other a malignant hatred, a flame so interms and accrebing that will blast every kindly feeling towards each other; the maniferances of intermities and the social disruption will exhibit to the world a national plature, over which angels might weep—a scene as which the patriot will tremble; and there will follow consequences from which the agricultural interest imposes its deliverance at your hands. Within your localities during deliverance at your hands.

by unternished hanour and consistency. Thank heaven, there is many a heart guiltless of perflip and urong, strong for the coming contest for our country's eafety; and your reward, my lords, either in triumph or defeat, shall be a nation's gratifieds, and the yel more glorious approval of your own unbiqued consolonces. Under the foetening care of your fordship's house, England has triumphed over foreign foce, and trampled on the sag of every enemy; in the nineteenth century of our country's greatness the mighty junction is to be selved. Will your honourable house, supported as it is by all that is great and powerful, succumb to that foul confederacy whose avoised object is to himble, nay, to tread the herediflery peerage in the dust? Muy heaven avert so terrible a calastrophe!"

Oh, British Ilon, British Ilon, how can you utter such burning words? How can you say such fierce things of the betrayed "agricultural interest?" represented as that interest, when advocating monopoly, is, by political lords, mortgaged squires, roaring land-agents, and the most subservient class of yearly tenants whose capital is absorbed by the protective system into the landlord's pocket. After reading this effusion, we rubbed our eyes to see whether we had not misrcad the signature as "An Essex Tenant" instead of an "Essex Calf," for certain it is that the bleatings of the poor animal leads to the suspicion, that in this case the skin only is that of the lion, and that the creature covered by it is of a less ferocious and less generous class.

AGRICULTURAL COMMON SENSE.

When the history of the decline and fall of the corn monopoly comes to be written, the Harleston Farmers' Club will deserve honourable mention as amongst the carliest agriculturists who repudiated protection and the claim to live upon profits derived from artificial scarcity. The following brief account of the last meeting of the Club, which we extract from a local journal, shows that the Club is still keeping the lead of the majority of Farmers' Clubs in England:

"HARLESTON FARMERS' CLUB—Fifth Meeting for 1846, April 8th.—Subject: 'The Cost and Value of Protection to the Farmer; the Statistics of the Question rather than the Principle' Previous to the discussion it was decided, at the unanimous wish of the members present, that the terms of the question should be altered. It was considered that any arguments founded on a compaprobably be deceptive, because it is not accurately known what portion of the former have been owing to the law, or what share of any depreciation in the latter may be due to its repeal. The principles of Free Trade in general, and of Free Trade in corn in particular, with the past effects of protection on agriculture, and particularly on the tenant farmers, and the probable future effects of Free Trade on these interests, were therefore discussed, instead of the cost and value of protection statistically considered. After an interesting and protracted debate, it was unanimously decided—That a Free Trade in corn will benefit the nation without injuring the agricultural interest, provided those requests of the farmers for the repeal of the malt-tax, for an improved tenure embracing more liberal covenants, and the other just claims on the legislature and the landowners which this club has always advocated, be at the same time conceded. The club desires also to express its opinion, that the proposed Government measure errs in not making Free Trade total and immediate, believing that the delay of three years will act injuriously in deferring the settlement of these necessary arrangements.

LEASES IN THE OLDEN TIME.

The following curious extract from an old book has been sent to us by a correspondent, and bearing, as it does, upon the vital question of leases, now so much agitated amongst farmers, will be interesting to our agricultural readers:

"Agriculture Leases, 1688.—The right honourable Henry Lord Delamer and Earl of Warrington's advice to his children." His lordship was born 1651; lived in the reigns of kings—Charles I. and II., James II., William and Mary, in which latter he was made Earl of Warrington and Change of the Freeheaven. cellor of the Exchequer.

"To my dear Sons.

"In the management of your estate" (Defamer Forcet, "In the management of your estate" (Deramer Forces, Cheshire), "take these directions along with you. In the letting of your demeans or other farms, it being supposed you will get the best rent you can, it seems advisable to let them for twenty-one years; and as often as you can take a fine of about a year's value, and then the yearly rent to about proportionably to what the fine and interest of it will amount to at the aird of the taken. For sa by this you can be not to at the end of the term. For as by this you can be no looser if your rent be duely paid, so it is the most probable way to have it well paid, in regard that if your tenant be behind with his rent, if it be not above a year, this fine will set you right. In the next place, the payment of the fine is a strong argument of the ability of your farmer; and besides, a rent that is less than the full worth of the farm is better paid, than when it is at the utmost value. And farthermore, by paying of a lesser rent, farmers are encouraged to make improvements, whereby your rent is not only better secured, but also at the expiration of their lease the farm is "In the next place, tye your farmers to repairs, for they will do that for sixpence, which they will set down to you at will do that for sixpence, which they will set down to you at eighteen pence.

"And because plouping is the desiruction of most farms, hind out your farmer from ploughing sither headout or the next other ground that is not project to be brokened." In the next place like it least one that of the feet of the ground be in proved only in passage. Then oblige him to make to make the least that is make as he plought every year, and he proved the same arranged in the project to any ground that he had already make the property and the project to the least the same arranged to the project the same arranged to the project that the life already make the project that the life already make the project that the life already make the project that the life already make the life arranged to t (1088) "your farm will be it formed panuyworth at the end of the term as which he took it. Desides these general of the term as whom he was to take good severy rules, I can prescribe you none, save to take good security rules, I can prescribe you none, save to take good security for the performance of his coverants, and to appoint some person to see whether he fall in any of them.

"As for such part of your citate as is highly leases for lives or years, my opinion is, that if all of it were for leases of the second of the second se or years, my operation and the best for tenant and landled twenty-one years, it would be best for tenant and landled. First, because it would put the tenants upon some son of First, because it would put the tenants upon some sont of industry, which is too much neglected by such as have least for three. And secondly, because the landlord would be a certainty, and accordingly he knew how to dispose his affairs. Therefore, if you renew such leases, as are upon lease and if you lease are the years, let it be again for years; and if you lease any that fall out of lease, let them also be for twenty-one years. "Then, as to renewing leases for lives, if one life is to be added to two yet remaining, take two years value to do it, added to two yet remaining, take two years value to do it, unless one or both of the remaining lives be very aged or is ferior, for then you may expect half, or a year's value more, as the case may fall out. If but one life remain, and two more are to be added to it, then take five years' value, unless extreme age and infirmity alter the case. For the changing of a life, take one year's value, unless the aforesaid object. of a life, take one years value, timess the moresaid objections lye in the way. But never change any life save where there are three lives in the lease, neither add one life when one only remains, unless upon an extraordinary consideration. Now, as to the value of a tenement, my intention is soluti it is worth when your old rent and services are deducted; for if those be not abated out of the value, you make your tenants pay for what they have not; and secondly, your treatment of them would be unequal; because some are much higher rented than others, and an equal hand give great content to tenants

Tenants may well afford to give these rates, and grownick by their landlord, because they are under the worth of what they would take of a stranger. And if the tenants will keep their leases full, landlords may afford to take these rate, though under the true value. And that you may as wellfer the real advantage, as have the reputation of such an entate, as I hope by God's blessing to leave you."

"Landen: Drinted for Lahr Larrence at the stranger of the stranger of the stranger of the stranger.

London: Printed for John Lawrence, at the Angel, and John Dunton, at the Raven, in the Poultrey, 1694."

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of THE LEAGUE.

5, New-street, Covent Garden. Sin,-Observing an article in your paper of last week, upon Indian corn, in which it is stated that "bread caunot be made of Indian meal alone: one third of meal to two thirds of wheat flour is quite as much as the bread will bear, I take the liberty of sending you a specimen of bread made from Indian corn in the ratio of seven pounds of Indian meal to one pound of flour. I have also made bread entirely of Indian corn, although it has not given such general sainfaction as that made partly of English flour.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant, April 28, 1846, THOMAS INCLIS. [We beg to acknowledge the receipt of the two small loaves referred to above, and to assure our readers that we found them equal to the best wheaten bread we ever ate-ED. LEAGUE.]

THE CORN LAWS.

Ne crescat populus, scribit Malthusius ardens; Ut quoque decrescat Lex Cerealis adest.

Pous olim capitis populum decrescere fecit; Nuno facit hand allter Lex Cercalis idem. Trinity College, Cambridge. C. DE LA PRYME.

Which may perhaps be thus rendered:

Malthusians write with earnest pen-"Don't multiply, ye sons of men!"
Th' obedient Corn Law waves her mace, And checks the propagating race.

Once on a time this swarming world Was thinn'd by gibbet, sword, and flame; But now the Corn Law, flag-unfurl'd, Goes forth and perpetrates the same. (P. D.)

THE NEW TARIFF.—The Commissioners of the Costoms' Department have issued instructions to the collectors and controllers of the revenue at the several ports and places throughout the United Kingdom, to prepare and transmit to the Impertor-General of Imports and Exports with the as the same relate to their respective ports, viz.:—A return of the quantity of each description of goods ordered for cossumption, free of duty, or upon payment of a decreased me of duty, in pursuance of the resolutions of the Home of Commons, and in accordance with their orders to those offoers in March last, to carry, such resolutions into impediate effect, distinguishing those cases in which bonds have been required from the importers to pay the duties herefore chargeable, in the event of the repeal or reduction of day not receiving the sauction of Parliament. It will be need lected that the first resolution of the house, and the Trelected that the first resolution of the house, and the free sury order consequent upon the same, had resisted the admission of maine, or Indian norn, mast, back-order, and rice, at new and reduced rates of duty, on a series boud, adapted and framed for the inproce, binding articles so delivered, in the aven, of the resolution of the rice as law, and which appeared in full in ohr columns the time; and the second comprised the special resistant foreign produce and manufacture. The of conditions of the triple of the conditions of the resulting and the second comprised the special resistant number of others. At restricting fractions of the return is to be made up to the striple of the second conditions of the return be required for Parlament of the return be required for Parlament of the return be required for Parlament of the first had been also up to the second conditions of the return be required for Parlament of the first had been also up to the second conditions of the return be required for Parlament of the first had been also be made up to the second conditions of the parlament of the conditions of the return be required for Parlament of the conditions of the parlament of the conditions of the parlament of the conditions of the parlament of the conditions of the parlament of the conditions of the parlament of the conditions of the parlament of the conditions of the parlament and the second of the second o simil: expai fertill land. einou tream

whi

duce

Acial

WILL

requ

plied.

In

W. C. A. L. W. C. A. L. W. C. C.

FALLACIES OF PROPERTION. - (Sophismes Economiques, par F. Battat, do.) Paris: Guillamin; London; Dulau. Second Notice.

M. Bastiat very justly observes that many ex-ploded fallacies are abandoned by the advocates of protection in their words, and maintained in their actions. The most important of these is the fallacy of "the balance of trade," which lies at the basis of the pernicious mercantile system, which has been so long the hane of civilisation and the main impediment of human progress. According to this theory, a nation is in the course of being impoverished when the value of her imports exceeds that of her exports. If a principle be sound in itself, it must be valid in the widest extent to which it can be carried. Suppose, then, that the country exported everything, and imported nothing;-we should like to know who and what is to pay for the exports? The blunder is simply that the protectionists do not see that imports are the price paid for exports, and that a check upon imports must depreciate the returns for the goods exported. theory of the balance of trade is just the reverse of truth; the excess of imports over exports is the precise measure of the profit that the nation makes by its system of exchange, just as the profits of a merchant are measured, not by the quantity of the goods he sells, but by the amount of what he re-

If it be once acknowledged a sound principle of legislation that the State should artificially encou rage producers without any regard to the interests of consumers, there is no assignable absurdity which may not be deduced from such a thesis. M. Bastiat best exposes the fallacy in the following clever parody of protectionist petitions:

To the Right Honourable and Honourable the Members of the Legislature, the petition of the Manufac-turers of Candles, Tapers, Lamps, Chaudeliers, Candlesticks, &c., and the producers of Tallow, Oil, Resin, Alcohol, and all other matters employed in giving light.

Humbly Showeth,

That your Right Honourable and Honourable protectionists are in the right road. You reject abstract theories; abundance and cheapness have no charms for you. The fortunes of the producer are your only care. You wish to fortunes of the producer are your only care. You wish to save him from foreign competition; in a word, you wish to reserve the national markets for national industry

We are about to offer you an admirable opportunity of applying your—whatshell we call it?—your theory? No, nothing is more deceptive than theory. Your doctrine? your system? your principle ?- But you love not doctrines; you have a horror of systems; and, with respect to principles, you deny the very existence of one in social economy;—let us, then, call it your practice—your practice, without theory

We endure the horrible competition of a foreign rival, placed, as it appears, in conditions so superior to ours for the production of light, that he inundates our national markets at an extravagantly low price: for so soon as he appears, our sale is at an end—all the consumers apply to him, and a branch of French industry, having innumerable rami fications is at once struck with the most complete stagnation. This rivel, which is no other than the Sun, wages such desperate war against our interests, that we suspect him to be instigated by perfidious Albion, inasmuch as he withholds from that haughty island much of that radiance with which he appropriate our ill most Proposed in the complete our illustration in the complete our interest our interes which he overwhelms our ill-used France.

We pray you, therefore, to pass a law commanding the closing of all windows, skylights, vontilators, fanlights, curtains, shutters, blinds, doors, and, in a word, the shutting up of all openings, apertures, and holes, by which the light of the sun is allowed to open into houses, to the prejudice of the sun is allowed to onter into houses, to the prejudice of the thriving branches of industry with which we flatter ourselves that we have enriched the country, as it would be ungrateful for the country to expose us to such unequal rivalry and competition.

We pray, noble lords and gontlemen, that you will not mistake our petition for a joke, and that you will not reject it without at least listening to the reasons which we can address in the seasons. duce in its support.

In the first an the first place; if you close the ports against the free admission of natural light, and thus create a demand for artificial light, what branch of industry is there in France which will not gradually feel-she benefits of the protection?

If more tailow be gonerimed, more sheep and oxen will be required; artificial meadows will; in consequence, be multiplied meat, wool, hides, and especially manure, that basis of all agricultural prospority.

If more oit be consumed, the cultivation of the olive, and similar trace.

irmore oil be consumed, the cultivation of the onve, and similar troos, will be indefinitely increased. These rich and exhausting plants will enable us to profit by the increased fertility which the multiplication of cattle will give to the land. Our moors and wastes will be covered with the resinous trees. Countless swarms of bees will collect honied treasures on your mountains from those flowers which now

"Are born to blush unseen, And waste their sweetness on the desart air." You will realise everywhere the pools description of his

"The best perfuming the air with minds, All for to adorn sweet, Castle Hyde?!... stora premote of all-toniture and second increointy of The state of the s guaines, sempared with which the show-rooms of the present day are no batter, siten soldiers bulles.

There is no class in society, even if we go to the gatherer of resin on the top of his sand hill, or the and inliner at the bottom of his pit, whose washs and comforts will not be increased by conceding our prayer.

Reflect upon this, noble lords and goatlemen, and you will be convined, that there is not a single Frenchman, from the wesltby banker of Auxin down to the humble vendor of matches, whose condition will not be ameliorated by your granting our humble potition.

We foresse your objections, noble lords and gentlemen, but there is not one of them which you will not be compelled to take from the books of the advocates of commercial freedom. We venture to defy you to niter a word against our

dom. We venture to defy you to uiter a word against our claims which does not instantly turn against yourselves, and the principles by which your policy is directed.

Will you tell us, that if we gain by this protection, France will be no gainer, because the consumer must defray the expense ?

We will answer you:

You have no longer a right to invoke the interests of the consumer. Whenever he has come into competition with the producer, you have enorificed him without any regard to circumstances. You have done so to encourage industry, to enlarge the field of employment. For the same reason you should do so now.

You have yourselves anticipated the objection. When you were told "the consumer is interested in the free import of iron, coal, sesame, cheese, yams, and wefts"—"Yes," you replied, "but the producers are interested in their exclusion." Well, then, if consumers are interested in the free admission of natural light, the producers of artificial light are interested in its exclusion.

But you will say, the producer and the consumer are the same. If the manufacturer gains, the farmer will gain likewise. If agriculture prospers, it will create a demand for the shopkeepers. Well, then, if you confer upon us the monopoly of lighting France during the day, we will buy more tallow, charcoal, oil, resin, wax, gold, silver, bronze, crystal, glass, to support our industry: and furthermore, we. crystal, glass, to support our industry; and furthermore, we and those from whom we derive our supplies, as we become enriched by our gains, will consume more, and will diffuse prosperity through all branches of national industry. Will you say that the light of the sun is a gratuitous gift, and that to refuse gratuitous gifts would be to reject wealth itself, under pretence of encouraging the means of its acquisition?

But take care that you do not destroy the very essence of your policy; hitherto you have always rejected foreign produce because cheapness brought it near to a gratuitous git, and your prohibition became more stringent the nearer it approached a gratuitous gift. To obey the exigencies of other monopolists, you had only a half motive; to grant our demand, you have a complete motive; and to reject us on the precise foundation on which we are more firmly founded that all the others, would be to establish the equation that is, continued multiplication is equivalent to subtraction, or in other terms, to heap absurdity upon absurdity.

Nature and industry combine in different proportions, according to soil and climate, in the creation of a product. The part which nature takes is always gratuitous; it is the part taken by labour that fixes value and determines price.

If an orange of Lisbon sells for half the price of an orange grown at Paris, it is because a natural, and therefore gratuitous heat, effects for the one what the other owes to artificial and costly heat.

Hence when an orange comes to us from Portugal, it may be said that one half is given to us gratuitously, and the other half at a price; or in other terms, that, relatively to Paris, we get the orange at half-price.

Now it is precisely on this semi gratuitousness (excuse the word) that you found your arguments of exclusion. You say, how can national industry sustain the competition of foreign industry when the former has to do every thipg, and the latter has only to do half the work, the Sun taking charge of the rest? But if semi-gratultousness determines you to oppose competition, why should complete gratuitousness induce you to admit competition? Either you are no logicians, or you ought, when you reject semi-gratuitousness as injurious to your national industry, à fortlori, and with double zeal, reject perfect gratuitousness.

Once more, when a product, coal, iron, obcess, or manufactured goods, comes from abroad, and we can acquire it with less labour than we could produce it ourselves, the difference is a gratuitous gift hastowed upon us. This gift is more or less considerable, according as the difference is greater or less. It is the fourth, the half, or three fourths of the value of the product, if the foreigners ask us but three fourths, one half, or one fourth of the price we should otherwise have to pay: It is as complete as it can be; when the giver, as is the case of the Sun with light, asks us for nothing in return. The question then is, and we state it formally, whether you desire for France the blessings of gratuitous consumption, or the advantages of expensive production? Ohoose, but be logical; for whilst you reject, as you do, cost, iron, oheese, and manufactured goods, in proportion as their price empraches zero, it is a monstrous incongenity to admit the light of the sun, the price of which is at zero all the day

Were a similar petition prepared in England, we doubt not that Lord Stanley would present it to the peers, vouching for the respectful tenor of its lunguage, and the constitutional justness of its argumonte:

"You laugh-'tis well-the tale applied May make you laugh at tother side."

Put corn for light, and Tamboff for the Sun, and you have the noble lord's memorable speech, only stratly improved in temper, and much strengthened in the cogency of its arguments. In fact, the light-taxers in England could quote the window-duties as a precedent, and they might also use the argument and they might also use the argument of independence of foreigners, whose caprice may induce them to withhold supplies by referring to the normal of the supplies by referring to the supplies of the first of the supplies of The True Grandeur of Nations: an Oration. By Changes Summer, Esq., Boston, Musskolmistic.

London, Smith.

This cloquent cration, advocating the principles of universal peace, and denouncing the barburism of war, was delivered in the principal church of Boston, on the festival commemorating the anniversary of the Declaration of American Independence. It was no small proof of confidence in principle,no slight exhibition of moral courage, to soize such an opportunity for denouncing those appeals to popular prejudices and vulgar passions, by which a party in the United States have ondeavoured to force their country into hostile collision with Great Brituin. He has, however, proved hispself equal to the occasion; and we doubt whother any audiversary oration has over been pronounced in Boston exhibiting so large a combination of brilliant oldquence with resisticss argument.

As the work has been republished in England, at a choap rate, and is likely to obtain a wide airculation, it is not necessary to give any formal analysis of its contents; we shall, therefore, only make a few extracts, which require neither introduction her comment. The first we have to bring before our readors describes the honourable nature of peace:

"IN OUR AGE THERE CAN BE NO PRACE THAT IS NOT HOOUR AGE THREE CAN HE BO PRACE THAT IS NOT DIS-HONOURABLE; THERE CAN BE NO WAR THAT IS NOT DIS-HONOURABLE. The true honour of a nation is to its found only in deeds of justice and in the happiness of its people, all of which are inconsistent with war. In the clear eye of Christian judgment, vain are its victories; infamous are its spoils. He is the true benefactor and alone worthy of honour who brings comfort where before was wretchedness; who dries the tear of sorrow; who pours oil into the wounds of the unfortunate; who feeds the hungry and clothes the naked; who pulposes the fatters of the slave; who does jus-tice; who collisities the ignorant; who collisons and exaits, by his virtuous genius, in art, in literature, in science, the hours of life; who, by words or actions, inspires a love for God and for man. This is the Christian here; this is the man of honour in a Christian land. He is no benefactor, nor descrying of honour, whatever may be his worldly renown, whose life is passed in acts of force; who renounces the great law of Christian brotherhood; whose vocation is blood; who triumphs in battle over his fellow man. Well may old Sir Thomas Brown exclaim, 'The world does not know its greatest men; for thus far it has chiefly discorned the violent broad of battle, the armed men springing up from the dragon's teeth sown by Hate, and cared little for the truly good men, children of Love, 'Cromwells guildess of their country's blood, whose steps on earth have been as noiseless us an angel's wing.'

The application to nations of the Rule of Right recognised in the case of individuals, is very ably

"Who has told you, fond man! to regard that as a glory when performed by a nation, which is condemned as a crime and a barbarism, when committed by an individual? In what vain conceit of wisdom and virtue do you find this in-congruous morality? Where is it declared that God, who is no respector of persons, is a respector of multitudes? Whence do you draw these partial laws of a powerful and impartial Gol? Man is immortal; but States are mortal. He has a higher destiny than States. Shall States be less amenable to the great moral laws? Each individual is an atom of the mass. Must not the mass be like the individuals of which it is composed? Shall the mass do what individuals may not do? No. The same moral laws which govern individuals govern masses, as the same laws in nature prevail over large and small, controlling the fall of an apple and the orbits of the planets. It was the beautiful discovery of Newton, that gravity is a universal property of matter, a law obeyed by every particle in reference to every other particle, and connecting the celestial mechanism with terrestrial phenomena. So the Rule of Right, which binds the single individual, binds two or three when gathered together—binds conventions and congregations of men—binds villages, towns, and cities—binds states, nations, and empires—clasps the whole human family in its sevenfuld embrace; nay more :

Beyond the flaming bounds of place and time, The living throne, the sapphire blaze, it binds the angels of heaven, the seraphim, full of love, the cherubin, full of knowledge; above all, it binds, in self-imposed bonds, a just and omnipotent God. It is of this, and not of any cartily law, that Hooker speaks in that magnificent period which sounds like an authem, Of law po loss can be said, than that her seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world; all things in heaven and earth do her liomage, the very least as feeling her care, the greatest as not exempted from her power; both angels and men, and creatures of what condition seever, though each in different sort and manner, yet all with uniform consent admiring her as the mother of their peace and joy."

The distinctions between true and false patriot ism are ably drawn:

"I do not inculcate an indifference to country. We incline by a natural sentiment to the spot where we were born, to the fields which witnessed the sports of childhood, to the sent of youthful studies, and to the institutions under which we have been trained. The fluger of God writes in: indollike colours all these things upon the heart of man, so flust in the dread extremities of death, he reverts, in fondiess, to narly associations, and longs for a drainglift officially water from the bucket in his fathers well. This semimons is independent of railection, for it begins before redestion, grows with our growth, and strengthens vitit our strength. It is blind in its nature; and it is the duty of seal of his to take care that it does not absorb this whole antistances, its the morel night, which has any closed. He would easier with the morel night, which has any closed. The world seal resident in the marries of others, which it imports all a seal resident of the marries of others, which it imports all a seal resident of the marries of others, which it imports all a seal resident of the marries of others, which it is included a seal resident. It is marries of others, which it is included a seal resident of the marries of others, which it is included a seal resident. "I do not inculcate an indifference to country, . We inan inborn sentiment of attachment to the place of hirth, in-guines into the nature of the allegiance which is due to the flate. The old idea, still too much conceived, is, that man is made for the fitate, and not the flate for man. Far other-wise is the truth. The flate is an artificial body, intended for the security of the people. How constantly do we find, in bomen instory, that the people have been sacrificed for the fitate; to build the Roman name, to secure to England the trident of the acc. This is to sacrifice the greater for the trident of the aca. This is to sacrifice the greater for the less ; for the fleating possessions of earth to barter the immortal soul. Let it be remembered that the State is not worth preserving at the cost of the lives and happiness of

It is not that I love country less, but humanity more that now, on this national anniversary, I plead the cause of a higher and truer patriotism. Remember that you are men by a more sacred bond than you are citizens; that you are children of a common father more than you are Americans."

We shall conclude by extracting the noble pero-

