PREFACE

Reader, thou haft here the beginning and end of a discourse concerning government; what fate has otherwife disposed of the papers that should have filled up the middle, and were more than all the reft, it is not worth while to tell thee. Thefe. which remain, I hope are fufficient to eftablish the throne of our great restorer, our prefent King William; to make good his title, in the confent of the people, which being the only one of all lawful governments, he has more fully and clearly, than any prince in Christendom; and to justify to the world the people of England, whole love of their just and natural rights, with their refolution to preferve them, faved the nation when it was on the very brink of flavery and ruin. If these papers have that evidence, I ruin. flatter myfelf is to be found in them, there will be no great mils of those which are loft, and my reader may be fatisfied without them: for I imagine, I shall have neither the time, nor inclination to repeat my pains, and fill up the wanting part of my answer, by tracing Sir Robert again, through all the windings and obscurities, which are to be met with in the feveral branches of his wonderful fy-The king, and body of the nation, ftem. have fince to throughly confuted his Hypo-thesis, that I suppose no body hereaster will have have either the confidence to appear against our common fafety, and be again an advocate for flavery; or the weakness to be deceived with contradictions dreffed up in a popular ftile, and well-turned periods : for if any one will be at the pains, himfelf, in those parts, which are here untouched, to strip Sir Ro-bert's discourses of the flourish of doubtful expressions, and endeavour to reduce his words to direct, positive, intelligible propofitions, and then compare them one with another, he will quickly be fatisfied, there was never fo much glib nonfense put together in well-founding English. If he think it not worth while to examine his works all thro', let him make an experiment in that part, where he treats of usurpation; and let him try, whether he can, with all his skill, make Sir Robert intelligible, and confistent with himfelf, or common fense. I should not speak so plainly of a gentleman, long fince past answering, had not the pulpit, of late years, publicly owned his doctrine, and made it the current divinity of the times. It is neceffary those men, who taking on them to be teachers, have so dangerously misled others, should be openly shewed of what authority this their Patriarch is, whom they have fo blindly followed, that fo they may either retract what upon fo ill grounds they have vented, and cannot be maintained; or elfe justify those principles which they preached up for gospel; though they had no better an author / anthor than an English courtier: for I should not have writ against Sir Robert, or taken the pains to shew his mistakes, inconfistencies, and want of (what he fo much boafts of, and pretends wholly to build on) fcripture-proofs, were there not men amongst us, who, by crying up his books, and espousing his doc-trine, fave me from the reproach of writing against a dead adversary. They have been so zealous in this point, that, if I have done him any wrong, I cannot hope they should spare me. I wish, where they have done the truth and the public wrong, they would be as ready to redrefs it, and allow its just weight to this reflection, viz. that there cannot be done a greater mifchief to prince and people, than the propagating wrong notions concerning government; that fo at last all times might not have reason to complain of the Drum Ecclefiaftic. If any one, concerned really for truth, undertake the confutation of my Hy-pothefis, I promife him either to recant my mistake, upon fair conviction; or to answer his difficulties. But he must remember two things.

First, That cavilling here and there, at fome expression, or little incident of my difcourse, is not an answer to my book.

Secondly, That I shall not take railing for arguments, nor think either of these worth my notice, though I shall always look on myself as bound to give satisfaction to any one, who shall appear to be conficientiously forupulous fcrupulous in the point, and shall shew any just grounds for his scruples.

I have nothing more, but to advertise the reader, that Observations stands for Observations on Hobbs, Milton, &c. and that a bare quotation of pages always means pages of his Patriarcha, Edition 1680.

OF GOVERNMENT

BOOK I

Chap. I. S. I. Slavery is fo vile and miferable an eftate of man, and fo directly opposite to the generous temper and courage of our nation; that it is hardly to be conceived, that an Englishman, much less a gentleman, should plead for it. And truly I should have taken Sir Robert Filmer's Patriarcha, as any other treatife, which would perfuade all men, that they are flaves, and ought to be fo, for fuch another exercise of wit, as was his who writ the encomium of Nero; rather than for a ferious discourse meant in earnest, had not the gravity of the title and epiftle, the picture in the front of the book, and the applause that followed it, required me to believe, that the author author and publicher were both in earneft. I therefore took it into my hands with all the expectation, and read it through with all the attention due to a treatife that made fuch a noife at its coming abroad, and cannot but confers my felf mightily furprifed, that in a book, which was to provide chains for all mankind, I should find nothing but a rope of fand, ufeful perhaps to fuch, whofe skill and businefs it is to raife a dust, and would blind the people, the better to mislead them; but in truth not of any force to draw those into bondage, who have their eyes open, and fo much fense about them, as to confider, that chains are but an ill wearing, how much care foever hath been taken to file and polish them.

§. 2. If any one think I take too much liberty in speaking so freely of a man, who is the great champion of absolute power, and the idol of those who worship it; I beseech him to make this small allowance for once, to one, who, even after the reading of Sir Robert's book, cannot but think himself, as the laws allow him, a freeman: and I know no fault it is to do so, unless any one better skilled in the fate of it, than I, should have it revealed to him, that this treatife, which has lain dormant so long, was, when it appeared in the world, to carry, by strength of its arguments, all liberty out of it; and that from thenceforth our author's thort model was to be the pattern in the mount; and the perfect standard of politics for the future. His system lies in a little compass, it is no more but this.

That all government is absolute monarchy. And the ground he builds on, is this, That no man is born free.

§. 3. In this last age a generation of men has forung up amongst us, that would flatter princes with an opinion, that they have a divine right to abfolute power, let the laws by which they are conflituted, and are to govern, and the conditions under which they enter upon their authority, be what they will, and their engagements to observe them never fo well ratified by folemn oaths and promifes. To make way for this doctrine, they have denied mankind a right to natural freedom; whereby they have not only, as much as in them lies, exposed all subjects to the utmost mifery of tyranny and oppression, but have alfo unfettled the titles, and shaken the thrones of princes: (for they too, by these mens fystem, except only one, are all born flaves, and by divine right are subjects to Adam's right heir;) as if they had defigned to make war upon all government, and fubvert the very foundations of human fociety, to ferve their prefent turn.

§. 4. However we must believe them upon their own bare words, when they tell us, we B 2 are all born flaves, and we must continue fo, there is no remedy for it; life and thraldom we enter'd into together, and can never be quit of the one, till we part with the other. Scripture or reason I am fure do not any where fay fo, notwithstanding the noise of divine right, as if divine authority hath subjected us to the unlimited will of another. An admirable state of mankind, and that which they have not had wit enough to find out till this latter age. For, however Sir Robert Filmer feems to condemn the novelty of the contrary opinion, Patr. p. 3. yet I believe it will be hard for him to find any other age, or country of the world, but this, which has afferted monarchy to be jure divino. And he confesses, Patr. p. 4. That Heyward, Blackwood, Barclay, and others, that have bravely vindicated the right of kings in most points, never thought of this, but with one confent admitted the natural liberty and equality of mankind.

§. 5. By whom this doctrine came at first to be broached, and brought in fashion amongst us, and what fad effects it gave rife to, I leave to historians to relate, or to the memory of those, who were contemporaries with Sibtborp and Manwering, to recollect. My business at present is only to consider what Sir Robert Filmer, who is allowed to have carried this argument farthess, and is supposed to have brought it to perfection, has faid in it; for for from him every one, who would be as fashionable as French was at court, has learned, and runs away with this short system of politics, viz. Men are not born free, and therefore could never have the liberty to choose either governors, or forms of government. Princes have their power abfolute, and by divine right; for flaves could never have a right to compact or confent. Adam was an abfolute monarch, and fo are all princes ever fince.

Of Paternal and Regal Power.

§. 6. SIR Robert Filmer's great position is, that men are not naturally free. This is the foundation on which his absolute monarchy stands, and from which it erects itself to an height, that its power is above every power, caput inter nubila, fo high above all earthly and human things, that thought can fearce reach it; that promifes and oaths, which tye the infinite Deity, cannot confine it. But if this foundation fails, all his fabric falls with it, and governments must be left again to the old way of being made by contrivance, and the confent of men ('A $\nu \Im g \omega \pi i \nu \eta$ zrivis) making use of their reason to unite together into society. To prove this grand position of his, he tells us, p. 12. Men are B 2

are born in fubjection to their parents, and therefore cannot be free. And this authority of parents, he calls royal authority, p. 12, 14. Fatherly authority, right of father-bood, p. 12, 20. One would have thought he would, in the beginning of fuch a work as this, on which was to depend the autho-rity of princes, and the obedience of fub-jects, have told us exprelly, what that fa-therly authority is, have defined it, though not limited it, because in some other treatises of his he tells us, it is unlimited, and * unlimitable; he fhould at leaft have given us fuch an account of it, that we might have had an entire notion of this fatherhood, or fatherly authority, whenever it came in our way in his writings: this I expected to have found in the first chapter of his Patriarcha. But influend thereof having But instead thereof, having, 1. en passant, made his obeysance to the arcana imperii, p. 5. 2. made his compliment to the rights and liberties of this, or any other nation, p. 6. which he is going prefently to null and deftroy; and, 3. made his leg to those learned men, who did not see so far into the matter as himfelf, p. 7. he comes to fall on Bellarmine.

them. Observations, 158. The scripture teaches, that supreme power was originally the father, without any limitation. Observations, 245.

larmine, p. 8. and, by a victory over him, citablishes his fatherly authority beyond any question. Bellarmine being routed by his own confession, p. 11. the day is clear got, and there is no more need of any forces : for having done that, I observe not that he states the queftion, or rallies up any arguments to make good his opinion, but rather tells us the flory, as he thinks fit, of this flrange kind of domineering phantom, called the fatherbood, which whoever could catch, prefently got empire, and unlimited absolute power. He affures us how this fatherbood began in Adam, continued its courfe, and kept the world in order all the time of the patriarcbs till the flood, got out of the ark with Noab and his fons, made and fupported all the kings of the earth till the captivity of the Ifraelites in Egypt, and then the poor fatherbood was under hatches, till God, by giving the Israelites kings, re-established the ancient and prime right of the lineal fuccession in paternal government. This is his business from p. 12. to 19. And then obviating an objection, and clearing a difficulty or two with one half reason, p. 23. to confirm the natural right of regal power, he ends the first chapter. I hope it is no injury to call an half quotation an half reason; for God fays, Honour thy father and mother; but our author contents himself with half, leaves out thy mother B 4 mother quite, as little ferviceable to his purpofe. But of that more in another place.

§. 7. I do not think our author fo little fkilled in the way of writing difcourfes of this nature, nor fo carelefs of the point in hand, that he by over-fight commits the fault, that he himfelf, in his Anarchy of a mixed Mo-narchy, p. 239. objects to Mr. Hunton in these words: Where first I charge the author, that he hath not given us any definition, or description of monarchy in general; for by the rules of method be should have first defined. And by the like rule of method Sir Robert should have told us, what his fatherhood or fatherly authority is, before he had told us, in whom it was to be found, and talked fo much of it. But perhaps Sir Robert found, that this fatherly authority, this power of fathers, and of kings, for he makes them both the fame, p. 24. would make a very odd and frightful figure, and very difagreeing with what either children imagine of their parents, or fubjects of their kings, if he fhould have given us the whole draught together in that gigantic form, he had painted it in his own fancy; and there-fore, like a wary phylician, when he would have his patient fwallow fome harfh or corrofree liquor, he mingles it with a large quan-tity of that which may dilute it; that the scattered parts may go down with less feeling, and caufe lefs averfion.

OF GOVERNMENT.

§. 8. Let us then endeavour to find what account he gives us of this fatherly authority, as it lies fcattered in the feveral parts of his writings. And first, as it was vested in Adam, he fays, Not only Adam, but the fuc-ceeding patriarchs, had, by right of father-bood, royal authority over their children, p. 12. This lordship which Adam by command had over the whole world, and by right descending from bim the patriarchs did enjoy, was as large and ample as the absolute dominion of any monarch, which hath been fince the creation, p. 13. Dominion of life and death, making war, and conminion of life and death, making war, and con-cluding peace, p. 13. Adam and the patriarchs had abfolute power of life and death, p. 35. Kings, in the right of parents, fucceed to the exercise of supreme jurifdiction, p. 19. As kingly power is by the law of God, so it hath no inferior law to limit it; Adam was lord of all, p. 40. The father of a family governs by no other law, than by his own will, p. 78. The superiority of princes is above laws, p. 79. The unlimited jurifdiction of kings is so amply described by Samuel, p. 80. Kings are above the laws, p. 93. And to this purpose fee a great deal more which our author delivers in Bodin's words: It is certain, that all laws, Bodin's words: It is certain, that all laws, privileges, and grants of princes, have no force, but during their life; if they be not ratified by the express consent, or by sufferance of the prince following, especially privileges, Observations, p. 279. The reafon why laws have been 4

been alfo made by kings, was this; when kings were either busied with wars, or distracted with public cares, so that every private man could not have access to their persons, to learn their wills and pleasure, then were laws of necessity invented, that so every particular subject might find his prince's pleasure decyphered unto him in the tables of his laws, p. 92. In a monarchy, the king must by necessity be above the laws, p. 100. A perfect kingdom is that, wherein the king rules all things according to his own will, p. 100. Neither common nor statute laws are, or can be, any diminution of that general power, which kings have over their people by right of fatherhood, p. 115. Adam was the father, king, and lord over his family; a fon, a fubject, and a fervant or flave, were one and the fame thing at first. The father had power to dispose or fell his children or fervants; whence we find, that the first reckoning up of goods in Scripture, the man-fervant and the maid-fervant, are numbred among the possifier fions and fubstance of the owner, as other goods were, Observations, Pref. God also hath given to the father a right or liberty, to alien his power over his children to any other; whence we find the fale and gift of children to have much been in use in the beginning of the world, when men had their servants for a possification and an inheritance, as well as other goods; whereupon we find the power of castrating and making eunuchs much in use in old times, Obfervations, fervations, p. 155. Law is nothing elfe but the will of him that hath the power of the fupreme father, Observations, p. 223. It was God's ordinance that the fupremacy should be unlimited in Adam, and as large as all the acts of his will; and as in him fo in all others that have fupreme power, Observations, p. 245.

5. 9. I have been fain to trouble my reader with these feveral quotations in our author's own words, that in them might be feen his own defcription of his fatherly authority, as it lies feattered up and down in his writings, which he supposes was first vested in Adam, and by right belongs to all princes ever fince. This fatherly authority then, or right of fatherhood, in our author's fense, is a divine unalterable right of fovereignty, whereby a father or a prince hath an absolute, arbitrary, unlimited, and unlimitable power over the Hves, liberties, and estates of his children and fubjects; fo that he may take or alienate their estates, sell, castrate, or use their persons as he pleafes, they being all his flaves, and he lord or proprietor of every thing, and his unbounded will their law.

§. 10. Our author having placed such a mighty power in Adam, and upon that supposition founded all government, and all power of princes, it is reasonable to expect, that he should have proved this with arguments clear and evident, suitable to the weightines of the cause; that fince men had nothing elfe left them, they might in flavery have fuch undeniable proofs of its necessity, that their confciences might be convinced, and oblige them to fubmit peaceably to that abfolute dominion, which their governors had a right to exercise over them. Without this, what good could our author do, or pretend to do, by crecting fuch an unlimited power, but flatter the natural vanity and ambition of men, too apt of itself to grow and encrease with the poffeffion of any power? and by perfuading those, who, by the consent of their fellowmen, are advanced to great, but limited, degrees of it, that by that part which is given them, they have a right to all, that was not fo; and therefore may do what they pleafe, becaufe they have authority to do more than others, and fo tempt them to do what is neither for their own, nor the good of those under their care; whereby great milchiefs cannot but follow.

§. 11. The fovereignty of Adam, being that on which, as a fure bails, our author builds his mighty abfolute monarchy, I expected, that in his Patriarcha, this his main fuppofition would have been proved, and eftablished with all that evidence of arguments, that fuch a fundamental tenet required; and that this, on which the great stress of the business depends, would have been made out with reasons fufficient to justify the confidence with with which it was affumed. But in all that treatife, I could find very little tending that way; the thing is there fo taken for granted, without proof, that I could scarce believe myfelf, when, upon attentive reading that treatife, I found there fo mighty a ftructure raifed upon the bare fupposition of this foundation: for it is scarce credible, that in a discourse, where he pretends to confute In a discourie, where he pretends to confute the erroneous principle of man's natural freedom, he should do it by a bare suppo-fition of Adam's authority, without offering any proof for that authority. Indeed he confidently fays, that Adam had royal au-thority, p. 12, and 13. Absolute lord/hip and dominion of life and death, p. 13. An uni-versal monarchy, p. 33. Absolute power of life and death, p. 35. He is very frequent in such affertions: but, what is strange in in fuch affertions; but, what is strange, in all his whole Patriarcha I find not one pretence of a reason to establish this his great foundation of government; not any thing that looks like an argument, but these words: To confirm this natural right of regal power, we find in the Decalogue, that the law which enjoyns obedience to kings, is delivered in the terms, Honour thy father, as if all power were originally in the father. And why may I not add as well, that in the Decalogue, the law that enjoyns obedience to queens, is delivered in the terms of Honour thy mother, as if all power were originally in the mother? The argument, argument, as Sir Robert puts it, will hold as well for one as the other : but of this, more in its due place.

6. 12. All that I take notice of here, is, that this is all our author fays in this first, or any of the following chapters, to prove the abfolute power of Adam, which is his great principle : and yet, as if he had there fettled it upon sure demonstration, he begins his fecond chapter with these words, By conferring these proofs and reasons, drawn from the authority of the scripture. Where those proofs and reasons for Adam's fovereignty are, bating that of Honour thy father, above mentioned, I confels, I cannot find ; unless what he fays, p. 11. In thefe words we have an evident confession, viz. of Bellarmine, that creation made man prince of bis posterity, must be taken for proofs and reasons drawn from scripture, or for any fort of proof at all: though from thence by a new way of inference, in the words immediately following, he concludes, the royal authority of Adam fufficiently fettled in him.

§. 13. If he has in that chapter, or any where in the whole treatife, given any other proofs of Adam's royal authority, other than by often repeating it, which, among fome men, goes for argument, I defire any body for him to fhew me the place and page, that I may be convinced of my miftake, and acknowledge my overfight. If no fuch arguments

ments are to be found, I befeech those men, who have to much cried up this book, to confider, whether they do not give the worldcause to suspect, that it is not the force of reason and argument, that makes them for abfolute monarchy, but fome other by interest, and therefore are refolved to applaud any author, that writes in favour of this doctrine, whether he support it with reason or no. But I hope they do not expect, that rational and indifferent men should be brought over to their opinion, because this their great doctor of it, in a discourse made on purpose, to set up the abfelute monarchical power of Adam, in opposition to the natural freedom of man-kind, has faid so little to prove it, from whence it is rather naturally to be concluded, that there is little to be faid.

§. 14. But that I might omit no care to inform myfelf in our author's full fenfe, I confulted his Observations on Aristotle, Hobbes, &c. to see whether in disputing with others he made use of any arguments for this his darling tenet of Adam's sovereignty; fince in his treatife of the Natural Power of Kings, he hath been so sparing of them. In his Observations on Mr. Hobbes's Leviatban, I think he has put, in short, all those arguments for it together, which in his writings I find him any where to make use of: his words are these if God created only Adam, and of a piece of bim made the woman, and if by generation ration from them two, as parts of them, all mankind be propagated : if also God gave to Adam not only the dominion over the woman and the children that should iffue from them, but also over all the earth to subdue it, and over all the creatures on it, jo that as long as Adam lived, no man could claim or enjoy any thing but by donation, affignation or permission from him, I wonder, &c. Observations. 165. Here we have the fum of all his arguments, for Adam's fovereignty, and against natural freedom, which I find up and down in his other treatifes : and they are thefe following; God's creation of Adam, the dominion he gave him over Eve, and the dominion he had as father over his children : all which I shall particularly confider.

CHAP. III.

Of Adam's Title to Sovereignty by Creation.

§. 15. SIR Robert, in his preface to his Observations on Aristotle's politics, tells us, A natural freedom of mankind cannot be supposed without the denial of the creation of Adam: but how Adam's being created, which was nothing but his receiving a being immediately from omnipotence and the hand of God, gave Adam a sovereignty over any thing, I cannot see, nor consequently understand, how a supposition of natural freedom is a a denial of Adam's creation, and would be glad any body elfe (fince our author did not vouchfafe us the favour) would make it out for him : for I find no difficulty to suppose the freedom of mankind, though I have always believed the creation of Adam. He was created, or began to exift, by God's immediate power, without the intervention of parents or the pre-existence of any of the fame species to beget him, when it pleased God he should; and so did the lion, the king of beafts, before him, by the fame creating power of God: and if bare existence by that power, and in that way, will give dominion, without any more ado, our author, by this argument, will make the lion have as good a title to it, as he, and certainly the antienter. No! for Adam had his title by the appointment of God, fays our author in another place. Then bare creation gave him not dominion, and one might have supposed mankind free without the denying the creation of Adam, fince it was God's appointment made him monarch.

S. 16. But let us fee, how he puts his creation and this appointment together. By the appointment of God, fays Sir Robert, as foon as Adam was created, he was monarch of the world, though he had no fubjects; for though there could not be actual government till there were fubjects, yet by the right of nature it was due to Adam to be governor of his posserity: C though though not in act, yet at least in habit, Adam was a king from bis creation. I wilh he had told us here, what he meant by God's appointment : for whatsoever providence orders, or the law of nature directs, or politive revelation declares, may be faid to be by God's appointment : but I suppose it cannot be meant here in the first sense, i. e. by providence; becaufe that would be to fay no more, but that as foon as Adam was created he was de facto monarch, because by right of nature it was due to Adam, to be governor of his posterity. But he could not de facto be by providence conftituted the governor of the world, at a time when there was actually no government, no fubjects to be governed, which our author here confesse. Monarch of the world is also differently used by our author; for fometimes he means by it a proprietor of all the world exclusive of the reft of mankind, and thus he does in the fame page of his preface before cited : Adam, fays he, being commanded to multiply and people the carth, and to fubdue it, and having dominion given him over all creatures, was thereby the monarch of the whole world; none of his posterity had any right to poffefs any thing but by his grant or permiffion, or by fuccession from bim. 2. Let us understand then by monarch proprietor of the world, and by appointment God's actual donation, and revealed politive grant made to Adam, i. Gen, 28. as we fee Sir Robert

Robert himself does in this parallel place, and then his argument will stand thus, by the positive grant of God: as soon as Adam was created, he was proprietor of the world, because by the right of nature it was due to Adam to be governor of his posterity. In which way of arguing there are two manifest falsehoods. First, It is false, that God made that grant to Adam, as foon as he was created, fince, tho' it stands in the text immediately after his creation, yet it is plain it could not be fpoken to Adam, till after Eve was made and brought to him : and how then could he be monarch by appointment as foon as created, especially fince he calls, if I mistake not, that which God fays to Eve, iii. Gen. 16, the original grant of government, which not being till after the fall, when Adam was fomewhat, at least in time, and very much distant in condition, from his creation, I cannot see, how our author can fay in this fense, that by God's appointment, as foon as Adam was created, he was monarch of the world. Secondly, were it true that God's actual donation appointed Adam monarch of the world as foon as he was created, yet the reason here given for it would not prove it; but it would always be a false inference, that God, by a politive donation, appointed Adam monarch of the world, becaufe by right of nature it was due to Adam to be governor of his posterity : for having given him the right of government by nature, there was no need of a positive C 2 donation; donation ;

donation; at least it will never be a proof of fuch a donation.

§. 17. On the other fide the matter will not be much mended, if we understand by God's appointment the law of nature, (though it be a pretty harfh expression for it in this place) and by monarch of the world, fovereign ruler of mankind: for then the fentence under confideration must run thus: By the law of nature, as foon as Adam was created he was governor of mankind, for by right of nature it was due to Adam to be governor of bis postcrity; which amounts to this, he was governor by right of nature, because he was governor by right of nature: but supposing we should grant, that a man is by nature governor of his children, Adam could not hereby be monarch as foon as created: for this right of nature being founded in his being their father, how Adam could have a natural right to be governor, before he was a father, when by being a father only he had that right, is, methinks, hard to conceive, unless he will have him to be a father before he was a father, and to have a title before he had it.

§. 18. To this forefeen objection, our author anfwers very logically, be was governor in babit, and not in act: a very pretty way of being a governor without government, a father without children, and a king without fubjects. And thus Sir Robert was an author before he writ his book; not in act it is true, but in babit; for when he had once published it.

it, it was due to him by the right of nature, to be an author, as much as it was to Adam to be governor of his children, when he had begot them: and if to be fuch a monarch of the world, an absolute monarch in habit, but not in act, will ferve the turn, I should not much envy it to any of Sir Robert's friends, that he thought fit graciously to bestow it upon, though even this of act and habit, if it fignified any thing but our author's fkill in diffinctions, be not to his purpofe in this place. For the question is not here about Adam's actual exercise of government, but actually having a title to be governor. Government, fays our author, was due to Adam by the right of nature: what is this right of nature? A right fathers have over their chil-dren by begetting them; generatione jus acqui-ritur parentibus in liberos, fays our author out of Grotius, Obfervations, 223. The right then follows the begetting as arifing from it; fo that, according to this way of reasoning or diftinguishing of our author, Adam, as soon as he was created, had a title only in habit, and not in act, which in plain English is, he had actually no title at all.

§. 19. To fpeak lefs learnedly, and more intelligibly, one may fay of Adam, he was in a poffibility of being governor, fince it was poffible he might beget children, and thereby acquire that right of nature, be it what it will, to govern them, that accrues from C 3 thence:

thence: but what connection has this with Adam's creation, to make him fay, that as foon as he was created, he was monarch of the world? for it may be as well faid of Noah, that as foon as he was born, he was monarch of the world, fince he was in poffibility (which in our author's fense is enough to make a monarch, a monarch in habit,) to out-live all mankind, but his own posterity. What fuch necessary connection there is betwixt Adam's creation and his right to government, fo that a natural freedom of mankind cannot be supposed without the denial of the creation of Adam, I confess for my part I do not see; nor how those words, by the appointment, &c. Observations, 254. how ever explained, can be put together, to make any tolerable fense, at least to establish this pofition, with which they end, viz. Adam was a king from his creation; a king, fays our author, not in act, but in habit, i. e. actually no king at all.

§. 20. I fear I have tired my reader's patience, by dwelling longer on this paffage, than the weightine's of any argument in it feems to require: but I have unavoidably been engaged in it by our author's way of writing, who, hudling feveral fuppolitions together, and that in doubtful and general terms, makes fuch a medly and confusion, that it is impossible to fnew his mistakes, without examining the feveral fenses wherein his

his words may be taken, and without feeing how, in any of these various meanings, they will confift together, and have any truth in them: for in this prefent paffage before us, how can any one argue against this position of his, that Adam was a king from his creation, unlefs one examine, whether the words, from bis creation, be to be taken, as they may, for the time of the commencement of his government, as the foregoing words import, as foon as he was created he was monarch; or, for the caufe of it, as he fays, p. 11. creation made man prince of his posterity? how farther can one judge of the truth of his being thus king, till one has examined being thus king, till one has examined whether king be to be taken, as the words in the beginning of this paffage would per-fuade, on fuppofition of his private domi-nion, which was, by God's politive grant, monarch of the world by appointment; or king on fuppofition of his fatherly power over his off-fpring, which was by nature, due by the right of nature; whether, I fay, king be to be taken in both or one only of these two be taken in both, or one only of these two senses, or in neither of them, but only this, that creation made him prince, in a way different from both the other ? For though this affertion, that Adam was king from his creation, be true in no fense, yet it stands here as an evident conclusion drawn from the preceding words, though in truth it be but a bare affertion joined to other affertions of the fame kind, which confidently put to-C 4 gether gether in words of undetermined and dubious meaning, look like a fort of arguing, when there is indeed neither proof nor connection: a way very familiar with our author: of which having given the reader a tafte here, I fhall, as much as the argument will permit me, avoid touching on hereafter; and fhould not have done it here, were it not to let the world fee, how incoherences in matter, and fuppofitions without proofs put handfomely together in good words and a plaufible ftile, are apt to pafs for ftrong reafon and good fenfe, till they come to be looked into with attention.

CHAP. IV.

Of Adam's Title to Sovereignty by Donation, Gen. i. 28.

§. 21. HAVING at last got through the foregoing passage, where we have been so long detained, not by the force of arguments and opposition, but the intricacy of the words, and the doubtfulness of the meaning; let us go on to his next argument, for Adam's sovereignty. Our author tells us in the words of Mr. Selden, that Adam by donation from God, Gen. i. 28. was made the general kord of all things, not without fuch a private dominion to himself, as without bis grant did exclude bis children. This determination of Mr. Selden, fays our author, is confonant

confonant to the biftory of the Bible, and natural reafon, Observations, 210. And in his Pref. to his Observations on Ariflotk, he says thus, The first government in the world was monarchical in the father of all flesh, Adam being commanded to multiply and people the earth, and to subdue it, and having dominion given him over all creatures, was thereby the monarch of the whole world: none of his posterity had any right to posses any thing, but by his grant or permission, or by successful from him: The earth, faith the Pfalmist, hath he given to the children of men, which shew the title comes from fatherbood.

§. 22. Before I examine this argument, and the text on which it is founded, it is neceffary to defire the reader to obferve, that our author, according to his ufual method, begins in one fenfe, and concludes in another; he begins here with Adam's propriety, or private dominion, by donation; and his conclusion is, which shew the title comes from fatherbood.

§. 23. But let us fee the argument. The words of the text are thefe; and God bleffed them, and God faid unto them, be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth and subdue it, and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the foul of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth, i. Gen. 28. from whence our author concludes, that Adam, baving here dominion given him over all creatures, was thereby the monarch of the whole 26

whole world: whereby must be meant, that either this grant of God gave Adam property, or as our author calls it, private dominion over the earth, and all inferior or irrational creatures, and fo confequently that he was thereby monarch; or 2dly, that it gave him rule and dominion over all earthly creatures whatfoever, and thereby over his children; and fo he was monarch : for, as Mr. Selden has properly worded it, Adam was made general lord of all things, one may very clearly understand him, that he means nothing to be granted to Adam here but property, and therefore he fays not one word of Adam's monarchy. But our author fays, Adam was hereby monarch of the world, which, properly speaking, fignifies fovereign ruler of all the men in the world; and fo Adam, by this grant, must be con-flituted fuch a ruler. If our author means otherwise, he might with much clearness have faid, that Adam was bereby proprietor of the whole world. But he begs your pardon in that point: clear diffinct speaking not ferving every where to his purpole, you must not expect it in him, as in Mr. Selden, or other fuch writers.

§. 24. In opposition therefore to our author's doctrine, that Adam was monarch of the whole world, founded on this place, I shall shew,

1. That by this grant, i. Gen. 28. God gave no immediate power to Adam over men, over over his children, over those of his own species; and so he was not made suler, or. monarch, by this charter.

of the property here given him. §. 25. 1. That this donation, i. Gen. 28. gave Adam no power over men, will appear if we confider the words of it: for fince all positive grants convey no more than the express words they are made in will carry, let us fee which of them here will comprehend mankind, or Adam's posterity; and those, I imagine, if any, must be these, every living thing that moveth : the words in Hebrew are, i. e. Bestiam Reptantem, of which words the scripture itself is the best interpreter : God having created the fishes and fowls the 5th day, the beginning of the 6th, he creates the irrational inhabitants of the dry land, which, v. 24. are defcribed in these words, let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind; cattle and creeping things, and beasts of the earth, after his kind, and, v. 2. and God made the beafts of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and every thing that creepeth on the earth after his kind: here, in the creation of the brute inhabitants of the earth, he first speaks of them all under one general name, of living creatures, tures, and then afterwards divides them into three ranks, 1. Cattle, or fuch creatures as were or might be tame, and fo be the private poffeffion of particular men ; 2. 777 which, ver. 24, and 25. in our Bible, is translated beasts, and by the Septuagint Oneia, wild beasts, and is the fame word, that here in our text. ver. 28. where we have this great charter to Adam, is translated living thing, and is also the fame word used, Gen. ix. 2. where this grant is renewed to Noah, and there likewife tranflated beaft. 3. The third rank were the creeping animals, which ver. 24, and 25. are comprised under the word, mean, the fame that is used here, ver. 28. and is translated moving, but in the former verfes creeping, and by the Septuagint in all these places, $i_{\rho\pi e\tau\alpha}$, or reptils; from whence it appears, that the words which we translate here in God's donation, ver.28. living creatures moving, are the fame, which in the hiftory of the creation, ver. 24, 25. fignify two ranks of terrefirial creatures, viz. wild beafts and reptils, and are fo underftood by the Septuagint.

§. 26. When God had made the irrational animals of the world, divided into three kinds, from the places of their habitation, viz. fifthes of the fea, fowls of the air, and living creatures of the earth, and thefe again into cattle, wild beafts, and reptils, he confiders of making man, and the dominion he fhould have over the terrestrial world, ver. 26. and then

then he reckons up the inhabitants of these three kingdoms, but in the terrestrial leaves out the fecond rank היה or wild beafts: but here, ver. 28. where he actually exercises this defign, and gives him this dominion, the text mentions the fifhes of the fea, and fowls of the air, and the terrestrial creatures in the words that fignify the wild beafts and reptils, though translated living thing that moveth, leaving out cattle. In both which places, though the word that fignifies wild beafts be omitted in one, and that which fignifies cattle in the other, yet, fince God certainly executed in one place, what he declares he defigned in the other, we cannot but understand the fame in both places, and have here only an account, how the terrestrial irrational animals, which were already created and reckoned up at their creation, in three diftinct ranks of cattle, wild beafts, and reptils, were here, ver. 28. actually put under the dominion of man, as they were defigned, ver. 26. nor do these words contain in them the least appearance of any thing that can be wrefted to fignify God's giving to one man dominion over another, to Adam over his posterity.

§. 27. And this further appears from Gen. ix. 2. where God renewing this charter to Noah and his fons, he gives them dominion over the fowls of the air, and the fiftes of the fea, and the terrestrial creatures, expressed by 20 and wild beafts and reptils, the fame words that in the text before us, i. Gen. 28. are translated every moving thing, that moveth on the earth, which by no means can comprehend man, the grant being made to Noab and his fons, all the men then living, and not to one part of men over another: which is yet more evident from the very next words, ver. 2. where God gives every war every moving thing, the very words used, ch. i. 28. to them for food. By all which it is plain that God's donation to Adam, ch. i. 28. and his defignation, ver. 26. and his grant again to Noah and his fons, refer to and contain in them neither more nor lefs than the works of the creation the 5th day, and the beginning of the 6th, as they are fet down from the 20th to 26th ver. inclufively of the 1ft ch. and fo comprehend all the fpecies of irrational animals of the terraqueous globe, tho' all the words, whereby they are expressed in the history of their creation, are no where used in any of the following grants, but fome of them omitted in one, and fome in another. From whence I think it is past all doubt, that man cannot be comprehended in this grant, nor any dominion over those of his own species be conveyed to Adam. All the terrestrial irrational creatures are enumerated at their creation, ver. 25. under the names beafts of the earth, cattle and creeping things; but man, being

being not then created, was not contained under any of those names; and therefore, whether we understand the Hebrew words right or no, they cannot be fuppofed to comprehend man, in the very fame hiftory, and the very next verfes following, especially fince that Hebrew word von which, if any in this donation to Adam, ch. i. 28. must comprehend man, is fo plainly used in contradiftinction to him, as Gen. vi. 20. vii. 14, 21, 23. Gen. viii. 17, 19. And if God made all mankind flaves to Adam and his heirs by giving Adam dominion over every living thing that moveth on the earth, ch. i. 28. as our author would have it, methinks Sir Robert should have carried his monarchical power one step higher, and fatisfied the world, that princes might eat their fubjects too, fince God gave as full power to Noah and his heirs, ch. ix. 2. to eat every living thing that moveth, as he did to Adam to have dominion over them, the Hebrew words in both places being the fame.

§. 28. David, who might be fuppofed to understand the donation of God in this text, and the right of kings too, as well as our author in his comment on this place, as the learned and judicious Ainfworth calls it, in the 8th Pfalm, finds here no fuch charter of monarchical power, his words are, Thou hast made bim, i. e. man, the Son of man, a little lower than the angels; thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things things under his feet, all fheep and oxen, and the beafts of the field, and the fowls of the air, and fifh of the fea, and whatfover paffeth thro' the paths of the fea. In which words, if any one can find out, that there is meant any monarchical power of one man over another, but only the dominion of the whole species of mankind, over the inferior species of creatures, he may, for aught I know, deferve to be one of Sir Robert's monarchs in habit, for the rareness of the discovery. And by this time, I hope it is evident, that he that gave dominion over every living thing that moveth on the earth, gave Adam no monarchical power over those of his own species, which will yet appear more fully in the next thing I am to shew.

§. 29. 2. Whatever God gave by the words of this grant, i. Gen. 28. it was not to Adam in particular, exclusive of all other men: whatever dominion he had thereby, it was not a private dominion, but a dominion in common with the reft of mankind. That this donation was not made in particular to Adam, appears evidently from the words of the text, it being made to more than one; for it was fpoken in the plural number, God bleffed them, and faid unto them, Have dominion. God fays unto Adam and Eve, Have dominion; thereby, fays our author, Adam was monarch of the world: but the grant being to them, i. e. fpoke to Eve alfo, as many interpreters interpreters think with reason, that these words were not spoken till Adam had his wife, must not she thereby be lady, as well as he lord of the world? If it be faid, that Eve was subjected to Adam, it seems she was not so subjected to him, as to hinder her dominion over the creatures, or property in them: for shall we say that God ever made a joint grant to two, and one only was to have the benefit of it?

§. 30. But perhaps it will be faid, Eve was not made till afterward : grant it so, what advantage will our author get by it? The text will be only the more directly against him, and shew that God, in this donation, gave the world to mankind in common, and not to Adam in particular. The word them in the text must include the fpecies of man, for it is certain them can by no means fignify Adam alone. In the 26th verfe, where God declares his intention to give this dominion, it is plain he meant, that he would make a species of creatures, that should have dominion over the other species of this terrestrial globe: the words are, And God faid, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness, and let them have dominion over the fifh, &c. They then were to have do-Who? even those who were to minion. have the image of God, the individuals of that species of man, that he was going to make; for that them should signify Adam. fingly, D fingly, exclusive of the rest that should be in the world with him, is against both scripture and all reason: and it cannot possibly be made sense, if man in the former part of the verse do not fignify the fame with them in the latter; only man there, as is usual, is taken for the species, and them the individuals of that species : and we have a reason in the very text. God makes him in his own image, after his own likenefs; makes him an intellectual creature, and fo capable of dominion: for wherein foever elfe the image of God confifted, the intellectual nature was certainly a part of it, and belonged to the whole fpecies, and enabled them to have dominion over the inferior creatures; and therefore David fays in the 8th Pfalm above cited, Thou hast made him little lower than the angels, thou hast made him to have dominion. It is not of Adam king David speaks here, for verse 4. it is plain, it is of man, and the fon of man, of the species of mankind.

§. 31. And that this grant spoken to Adam was made to him, and the whole species of man, is clear from our author's own proof out of the Pfalmist. The earth, faith the Pfalmist, bath he given to the children of men; which shews the title comes from fatherbood. These are Sir Robert's words in the preface before cited, and a strange inference it is he makes; God hath given the earth to the children of men, ergo the title comes from fatherbood. It is pity pity the propriety of the Hebrew tongue had not used fathers of men, instead of children of men, to express mankind: then indeed our author might have had the countenance of the found of the words, to have placed the title in the fatherhood. But to conclude, that the fatherbood had the right to the earth, because God gave it to the children of men, is a way of arguing peculiar to our author: and a man must have a great mind to go contrary to the found as well as sense of the words, before he could light on it. But the fense is yet harder, and more remote from our author's purpose : for as it stands in his preface, it is to prove Adam's being monarch, and his reasoning is thus, God gave the earth to the children of men, ergo Adam was monarch of the world. I defy any man to make a more pleafant conclusion than this, which cannot be excused from the most obvious absurdity, till it can be shewn, that by children of men, he who had no father, Adam alone is fignified; but whatever our author does, the fcripture speaks not nonsense.

§. 32. To maintain this property and private dominion of Adam, our author labours in the following page to deftroy the community granted to Noab and his fons, in that parallel place, ix. Gen. 1, 2, 3. and he endeavours to do it two ways.

1. Sir Robert would perfuade us againft the express words of the scripture, that what D 2 was

was here granted to Noab, was not granted to his fons in common with him. His words are, As for the general community between Noah and his fons, which Mr. Selden will have to be granted to them, ix. Gen. 2. the text doth not warrant it. What warrant our author would have, when the plain express words of fcripture, not capable of another meaning, will not fatisfy him, who pretends to build wholly on scripture, is not easy to imagine. The text says, God bleffed Noah and his fons, and faid unto them, i. e. as our author would have it, unto him : for, faith he, although the fons are there mentioned with Noah in the bleffing, yet it may best be understood, with a subordination or benediction in succession, Observations, 211. That indeed is best, for our author to be understood, which best serves to his purpose; but that truly may best be understood by any body else, which best agrees with the plain construction of the words, and arifes from the obvious meaning of the place; and then with fubordination and in fuccesfion, will not be best understood, in a grant of God, where he himfelf put them not, nor mentions any fuch limitation. But yet, our author has reasons, why it may best be understood fo. The bleffing, fays he in the following words, might truly be fulfilled, if the fons, either under or after their father, enjoyed a private dominion, Observations, 211. which is to say, that a grant, whose express words give a joint title in in prefent (for the text fays, into your hands they are delivered) may best be understood with a fubordination or in fucceffion; because it is possible, that in fubordination, or in fucceffion, it may be enjoyed. Which is all one as to fay, that a grant of any thing in present possible. may best be understood of reversion; because it is possible one may live to enjoy it in rever-fion. If the grant be indeed to a father and to his fons after him, who is fo kind as to let his children enjoy it prefently in common with him, one may truly fay, as to the event one will be as good as the other; but it can never be true, that what the express words grant in possession, and in common, may best be understood, to be in reversion. The sum of all his reasoning amounts to this : God did not give to the fons of Noab the world in common with their father, becaufe it was possible they might enjoy it under, or after him. A very good fort of argument against an express text of scripture : but God must not be believed, though he speaks it himself, when he fays he dces any thing, which will not confift with Sir Robert's hypothefis.

§. 33. For it is plain, however he would exclude them, that part of this benediction, as he would have it in fucceffion, must needs be meant to the fons, and not to Noah himfelf at all : Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, fays God, in this bleffing. This part of the benediction, as appears by the fequel, con-D 3 cerned cerned not Noab himfelf at all; for we read not of any children he had after the flood; and in the following chapter, where his pofterity is reckoned up, there is no mention of any; and fo this benediction in fucceffion was not to take place till 350 years after : and to fave our author's imaginary monarchy, the peopling of the world must be deferred 350 years; for this part of the benediction cannot be understood with fubordination, unless our author will say, that they must ask leave of their father Noab to lie with their wives. But in this one point our author is constant to himself in all his discourses, he takes great care there should be monarchs in the world, but very little that there should be people; and indeed his way of government is not the way to people the world : for how much absolute monarchy helps to fulfil this great and primary bleffing of God Almighty, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, which contains in it the improvement too of arts and fciences, and the conveniences of life, may be feen in those large and rich countries which are happy under the Turkish government, where are not now to be found one third, nay in many, if not most parts of them one thirtieth, perhaps I might fay not one hundredth of the people, that were formerly, as will eafily appear to any one, who will compare the accounts we have of it at this

39 this time, with antient history. But this by the by.

§. 34. The other parts of this benediction, or grant, are fo expressed, that they must needs be understood to belong equally to them all; as much to Noab's fons as to Noab himfelf, and not to his fons with a fubordination, or in fuccession. The fear of you, and the dread of you, fays God, shall be upon every beaft, &c. Will any body but our author fay, that the creatures feared and flood in awe of Noab only, and not of his fons without his leave, or till after his death? And the following words, into your hands they are delivered, are they to be understood as our author fays, if your father pleafe, or they shall be delivered into your hands hereafter? If this be to argue from scripture, I know not what may not be proved by it; and I can fcarce fee how much this differs from that fiction and fansie, or how much a fu-rer foundation it will prove, than the opinions of philosophers and poets, which our author fo much condemns in his preface.

§. 35. But our author goes on to prove, that it may best be understood with a subordina-tion, or a benediction in succession; for, says he, it is not probable that the private dominion which God gave to Adam, and by bis donation, affignation, or ceffion to his children, was abrogated, and a community of all things inftituted be-tween Noah and his fons----Noah was left the fole heir of the world; why should it be thought D4 tbat that God would difinherit him of his birth-right, and make him of all men in the world the only tenant in common with his children? Observations, 211.

§.36. The prejudices of our own ill-ground-ed opinions, however by uscalled probable, can-not authorife us to understand scripture con-trary to the direct and plain meaning of the words. I grant, it is not probable, that Adam's private dominion was here abrogated : because it is more than improbable, (for it will never be proved) that ever Adam had any fuch private dominion: and fince parallel places of fcripture are most probable to make us know how they may be best understood, there needs but the comparing this bleffing here to Noab and his fons after the flood, with that to Adam after the creation, i. Gen. 28. to affure any one that God gave Adam no fuch private dominion. It is probable, I confess, that Noab fhould have the same title, the same property and dominion after the flood, that Adam had before it : but fince private dominion cannot confift with the bleffing and grant God gave to him and his fons in common, it is a fufficient reason to conclude, that Adam had none. efpecially fince in the donation made to him, there are no words that express it, or do in the least favour it ; and then let my reader judge whether it may best be understood, when in the one place there is not one word for it, not to fay what has been above proved, that the

the text itself proves the contrary; and in the other, the words and fense are directly against it.

§. 37. But our author fays, Noah was the fole beir of the world; why fhould it be thought that God would difinherit him of his birth-right? Heir, indeed, in England, fignifies the eldeft fon, who is by the law of England to have all his father's land; but where God ever appointed any fuch heir of the world, our author would have done well to have fhewed us; and how God difinherited him of his birth-right, or what harm was done him if God gave his fons a right to make use of a part of the earth for the support of themselves and families, when the whole was not only more than Noab himfelf, but infinitely more than they all could make use of, and the possibility of one could not at all prejudice, or, as to any use, ftreighten that of the other.

§. 38. Our author probably forefeeing he might not be very fuccefsful in perfuading people out of their fenfes, and, fay what he could, men would be apt to believe the plain words of fcripture, and think, as they faw, that the grant was fpoken to Noab and his fons jointly; he endeavours to infinuate, as if this grant to Noab conveyed no property, no dominion; becaufe, fubduing the earth and dominion over the creatures are therein omitted, nor the earth once named. And therefore, fays he, there is a confiderable fiderable difference between these two texts; the first bleffing gave Adam a dominion over the earth and all creatures; the latter allows Noah liberty to use the living creatures for food: here is no alteration or diminishing of his title to a property of all things, but an enlargement only of his commons, Observations, 211. So that in our author's fense, all that was faid here to Noah and his fons, gave them no dominion, no property, but only enlarged the commons; their commons, I should fay, fince God fays, to you are they given, though our author fays his; for as for Noah's fons, they, it feems, by Sir Robert's appointment, during their father's life-time, were to keep fasting days.

§. 39. Any one but our author would be mightily fuspected to be blinded with prejudice, that in all this bleffing to Noah and his fons, could fee nothing but only an enlargement of commons : for as to dominion, which our author thinks omitted, the fear of you, and the dread of you, fays God, shall be upon every beast, which I suppose expresses the dominion, or fuperiority was defigned man over the living creatures, as fully as may be; for in that fear and dread feems chiefly to confift what was given to Adam over the inferior animals; who, as absolute a monarch as he was, could not make bold with a lark or rabbet to fatisfy his hunger, and had the herbs but in common with the beafts, as is plain from i Gen. 2, 9, and 30. In the next next place, it is manifest that in this bleffing to Noab and his fons, property is not only given in clear words, but in a larger ex-tent than it was to Adam. Into your bands they are given, fays God to Noah and his fons; which words, if they give not property, nay, property in possession, it will be hard to find words that can ; fince there is not a way to express a man's being possefield of any thing more natural, nor more certain, than to fay, it is delivered into his hands. And ver. 3. to fhew, that they had then given them the utmost property man is capable of, which is to have a right to destroy any thing by using it; Every moving thing that liveth, saith God, shall be meat for you ; which was not allowed to Adam in his charter. This our author calls, a liberty of using them for food, and only an enlargement of commons, but no altera-tion of property, Observations, 211. What other property man can have in the creatures, but the liberty of using them, is hard to be underftood : fo that if the first bleffing, as our author fays, gave Adam dominion over the creatures, and the bleffing to Noab and his fons, gave them fuch a liberty to use them, as Adam had not ; it must needs give them something that Adam with all his fovereignty wanted, fomething that one would be apt to take for a greater property; for certainly he has no abfolute dominion over even the brutal part of the creatures; and the property he has in them is very narrow and fcanty, who cannot make that use of them, which is permitted to another. Should any one who is abfo-lute lord of a country, have bidden our au-thor fubdue the earth, and given him domi-nion over the creatures in it, but not have permitted him to have taken a kid or a lamb out of the flock, to fatisfy his hunger, I guess, he would fcarce have thought him-self lord or proprietor of that land, or the cattle on it; but would have found the difference between having dominion, which a fhepherd may have, and having full property as an owner. So that, had it been his own cafe, Sir Robert, I believe, would have thought here was an alteration, nay, an enlarging of property; and that Noab and his children had by this grant, not only property given them, but fuch a property given them in the crea-tures, as Adam had not: For however, in respect of one another, men may be allowed to have propriety in their diftinct portions of the creatures; yet in respect of God the maker of heaven and earth, who is fole lord and proprietor of the whole world, man's propriety in the creatures is nothing but that liberty to ufe them, which God has permitted; and fo man's property may be altered and enlarged, as we fee it was here, after the flood, when other uses of them are allowed, which before were not. From all which I fuppose it is clear, that neither Adam, nor Noab. 2

45 Noab, had any private dominion, any property in the creatures, exclusive of his posterity, as they should successively grow up into need of them, and come to be able to make use of them.

§. 40. Thus we have examined our author's argument for Adam's monarchy, founded on the bleffing pronounced, i. Gen. 28. Where-in I think it is impoffible for any fober reader, to find any other but the fetting of mankind above the other kinds of creatures, in this habitable earth of ours. It is nothing but the giving to man, the whole species of man, as the chief inhabitant, who is the image of his Maker, the dominion over the other creatures. This lies fo obvious in the plain words, that any one, but our author, would have thought it necessary to have shewn, how these words, that seemed to say the quite contrary, gave Adam monarchical abfolute power over other men, or the fole property in all the creatures ; and methinks in a bufiness of this moment, and that whereon he builds all that follows, he should have done fomething more than barely cite words, which apparently make against him; for I confess, I cannot see any thing in them, tending to Adam's monarchy, or private dominion, but quite the contrary. And I the lefs deplore the dulness of my apprehension herein, fince I find the apostle seems to have as little notion of any fuch private dominion of Adam 25

as I, when he fays, God gives us all things richly to enjoy, which he could not do, if it were all given away already, to Monarch Adam, and the monarchs his heirs and fucceffors. To conclude, this text is fo far from proving Adam fole proprietor, that, on the contrary, it is a confirmation of the original community of all things amongst the fons of men, which appearing from this donation of God, as well as other places of feripture, the fovereignty of Adam, built upon his private dominion, must fall, not having any foundation to support it.

§. 41. But yet, if after all, any one will needs have it fo, that by this donation of God, Adam was made fole proprietor of the whole earth, what will this be to his fovereignty? and how will it appear, that propriety in land gives a man power over the life of another ? or how will the poffeffion even of the whole earth, give any one a fovereign arbitrary authority over the perfons of men ? The most specious thing to be faid, is, that he that is proprietor of the whole world, may deny all the reft of mankind food, and fo at his pleafure flarve them, if they will not acknowledge his fovereignty, and obey his will. If this were true, it would be a good argument to prove, that there never was any fuch property, that God never gave any fuch private dominion; fince it is more reasonable to think, that God, who bid mankind kind increase and multiply, should rather himfelf give them all a right to make use of the food and raiment, and other conveniences of life, the materials whereof he had fo plentifully provided for them; than to make them depend upon the will of a man for their fubfistence, who should have power to destroy them all when he pleafed, and who, being no better than other men, was in fuccession likelier, by want and the dependence of a fcanty fortune, to tie them to hard fervice, than by liberal allowance of the conveniences of life to promote the great defign of God, increafe and multiply: he that doubts this, let him look into the absolute monarchies of the world. and fee what becomes of the conveniences of life, and the multitudes of people.

§. 42. But we know God hath not left one man fo to the mercy of another, that he may ftarve him if he pleafe: God the Lord and Father of all has given no one of his children fuch a property in his peculiar portion of the things of this world, but that he has given his needy brother a right to the furplufage of his goods; fo that it cannot juftly be denied him, when his preffing wants call for it: and therefore no man could ever have a juft power over the life of another by right of property in land or poffeffions; fince it would always be a fin, in any man of eftate, to let his brother perifh for want of affording him relief out of his plenty. As juftice juffice gives every man a title to the product of his honeft induftry, and the fair acquifitions of his anceftors' defcended to him; fo charity gives every man a title to fo much out of another's plenty, as will keep him from extreme want, where he has no means to fubfift otherwife : and a man can no more juftly make use of another's neceffity, to force him to become his vaffal, by with-holding that relief, God requires him to afford to the wants of his brother, than he that has more ftrength can feize upon a weaker, mafter him to his obedience, and with a dagger at his throat offer him death or flavery.

§. 43. Should any one make so perverse an use of God's bleffings poured on him with a liberal hand; should any one be cruel and uncharitable to that extremity, yet all this would not prove that propriety in land, even in this cafe, gave any authority over the perfons of men, but only that compact might ; fince the authority of the rich proprietor, and the subjection of the needy beggar, began not from the possession of the Lord, but the confent of the poor man, who preferred being his subject to starving. And the man he thus fubmits to, can pretend to no more power over him, than he has confented to, upon compact. Upon this ground a man's having his stores filled in a time of scarcity, having money in his pocket, being in a veffel at fea, being able to fwim, &c. may as well be the

the foundation of rule and dominion, as being poffeffor of all the land in the world; any of these being sufficient to enable me to save a man's life, who would perish if such affistance were denied him; and any thing, by this rule, that may be an occasion of working upon another's necessity, to save his life, or any thing dear to him, at the rate of his freedom, may be made a foundation of sovereignty, as well as property. From all which it is clear, that though God should have given Adam private dominion, yet that private dominion could give him no fovereignty; but we have already sufficiently proved, that God gave him no private dominion.

CHAP. V.

Of Adam's Title to Sovereignty by the Subjection of Eve.

§. 44. THE next place of fcripture we find our author builds his monarchy of Adam on, is iii. Gen. 26. And thy defire shall be to thy busband, and he shall rule over thee. Here we have (fays he) the original grant of government, from whence he concludes, in the following part of the page, Observations, 244. That the supreme power is settled in the fatherbood, and limited to one kind of government, that is, to monarchy. For let his premises be what they will, this is always the conclusion; let rule, in any text, be but once named, and presently absolute mo-E narchy narchy is by divine right established. If any one will but carefully read our author's own reasoning from these words, Observations, 244. and confider, among other things, the line and pofferity of Adam, as he there brings them in, he will find fome difficulty to make fense of what he fays; but we will allow this at prefent to his peculiar way of writing, and confider the force of the text in hand. The words are the curfe of God upon the woman, for having been the first and forwardest in the difobedience; and if we will confider the occasion of what God fays here to our first parents, that he was denouncing judgment, and declaring his wrath against them both, for their difobedience, we cannot fuppose that this was the time, wherein God was granting Adam prerogatives and privileges, invefting him with dignity and authority, eleva-ting him to dominion and monarchy: for though, as a helper in the temptation, Eve was laid below him, and fo he had accidentally a fuperiority over her, for her greater punishment; yet he too had his share in the fall, as . well as the fin, and was laid lower, as may be feen in the following verfes; and it would be hard to imagine, that God, in the fame breath, should make him universal monarch over all mankind, and a day-labourer for his life ; turn him out of paradife to till the ground, ver. 23. and at the fame time advance him to a throne, and all the privileges and eafe of absolute power.

§.45. This was not a time, when Adam could expect any favours, any grant of pri-vileges, from his offended Maker. If this be the original grant of government, as our author tells us, and Adam was now made monarch, whatever Sir Robert would have him, it is plain, God made him but a very poor monarch, fuch an one, as our author himfelf would have counted it no great privilege to be. God fets him to work for his living, and feems rather to give him a fpade into his hand, to fubdue the earth, than a fceptre to rule over its inhabitants. In the fweat of thy face thou shalt eat thy bread, fays God to him, ver. 19. This was unavoidable, may it perhaps be answered, because he was yet without fubjects, and had nobody to work for him; but afterwards, living as he did above 900 years, he might have people enough, whom he might command, to work for him; no, fays God, not only whilft thou art without other help, fave thy wife, but as long as thou liveft, shalt thou live by thy labour, In the fweat of thy face, shalt thou eat thy bread, till thou return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken, for dust thou art, and unto dust (halt thou return, v. 19. It will perhaps be answered again in favour of our author, that these words are not spoken personally to Adam, but in him, as their representative, to all mankind, this being a curfe upon mankind, because of the fall.

more certainty: but when he vouchfafes to fpeak to men, I do not think he fpeaks differently from them, in croffing the rules of language in use amongst them : this would not be to condescend to their capacities, when he humbles himfelf to speak to them, but to lose his defign in speaking what, thus spoken, they could not understand. And yet thus must we think of God, if the interpretations of scripture, necessary to maintain our au-thor's doctrine, must be received for good: for by the ordinary rules of language, it will be very hard to underfland what God fays, if what he speaks here, in the fingular number, to Adam, must be understood to be fpoken to all mankind, and what he fays in the plural number, i. Gen. 26, and 28. must be understood of Adam alone, exclusive of all others, and what he fays to Noah and his fons jointly, must be understood to be meant to Noah alone, Gen. ix.

§. 47. Farther it is to be noted, that these words here of iii. Gen. 16. which our author calls the original grant of government, were not spoken to Adam, neither indeed was there any grant in them made to Adam, but a punishment laid upon Eve: and if we will take them as they were directed in particular to her, or in her, as their representative, to all other women, they will at most concern the female sex only, and import no more, but that subjection they should ordinarily be in

in to their hufbands: but there is here no more haw to oblige a woman to fuch a fubjection, if the circumfrances either of her condition. or contract with her huband, should exempt her from it, than there is, that the faculd bring forth her children in forrow and pain, if there could be found a remedy for it, which is also a part of the fame curfe upon her: for the whole verse runs thus, Unto the woman he faid, I will greatly multiply thy forrow and thy conception; in forrow thou shall bring forth children, and thy defire shall be to thy bashand, and be shall rule over thee. It would, I think, have been a hard matter for any body, but our author, to have found out a grant of monarchical government to Adam in thefe words, which were neither spoke to, nor of him : neither will any one, I fuppofe, by these words, think the weaker fex, as by a law, to subjected to the curse contained in them, that it is their duty not to endeavour to avoid it. And will any one fay, that Eve, or any other woman, finned, if the were brought to bed without those multiplied pains God threatens her here with? or that either of our queens, Mary or Elizabeth, had they married any of their fubjects, had been by this text put into a political fubjection to him? or that he thereby foould have had monarchical rule over her? God, in this text, gives not, that I fee, any authority to Adam over Eve, or to men over their wives, but only E 3

only foretels what should be the woman's lot, how by his providence he would order it so, that she should be subject to her husband, as we fee that generally the laws of mankind and customs of nations have ordered it so; and there is, I grant, a foundation in nature for it.

§. 48. Thus when God fays of Jacob and Efau, that the elder should ferve the younger, xxv. Gen. 23. no body supposes that God hereby made Jacob Efau's sovereign, but foretold what should de facto come to pass.

But if these words here spoke to Eve must needs be understood as a law to bind her and all other women to subjection, it can be no other subjection than what every wise owes her husband; and then if this be the original grant of government and the foundation of monarchical power, there will be as many monarchs as there are husbands: if therefore these words give any power to Adam, it can be only a conjugal power, not political; the power that every husband hath to order the things of private concernment in his family, as proprietor of the goods and land there, and to have his will take place before that of his wife in all things of their common concernment; but not a political power of life and death over her, much less over any body elfe.

§. 49. This I am fure: if our author will have this text to be a grant, the original grant of of government, political government, he ought to have proved it by fome better arguments: than by barely faying, that thy defire shall be unto thy husband, was a law whereby Eve, and all that should come of her, were subjected to the absolute monarchical power of Adam and his heirs. Thy defire shall be to thy husband, is too doubtful an expression, of whole fignification interpreters are not agreed, to build fo confidently on, and in a matter of fuch moment, and fo great and general concernment : but our author, according to his way of writing, having once named the text, concludes prefently without any more ado, that the meaning is as he would have it. Let the words rule and fubject be but found in the text or margent, and it immediately fignifies the duty of a subject to his prince; the relation is changed, and though God fays husband, Sir Robert will have it king ; Adam. has prefently abfolute monarchical power over Eve, and not only over Eve, but all that should come of ber, though the scripture fays not a word of it, nor our author a word to prove it. But Adam must for all that be an abfolute monarch, and fo down to the end of the chapter. And here I leave my reader to confider, whether my bare faying, without offering any reasons to evince it, that this text gave not Adam that abfolute monarchical power, our author supposes, be not as sufficient to destroy that power, as his bare affertion E 4

fertion is to establish it, fince the text mentions neither prince nor people, fpeaks nothing of abfolute or monarchical power, but the fubjection of Eve to Adam, a wife to her husband. And he that would trace our author fo all through, would-make a fhort and fufficient answer to the greatest part of the grounds he proceeds on, and abundantly confute them by barely denying; it being a fufficient answer to affertions without proof, to deny them without giving a reason. And therefore should I have faid nothing but barely denied, that by this text the supreme power was settled and sounded by God bimself, in the satherbood, limited to monarchy, and that to Adam's person and beirs, all which our author notably concludes from these words, as may be feen in the fame page, Observations, 244. it had been a fufficient answer : should I have defired any fober man only to have read the text, and confidered to whom, and on what occasion it was spoken, he would no doubt have wondered how our author found out monarchical abfolute power in it, had he not had an exceeding good faculty to find it himfelf, where he could not fhew it others. And thus we have examined the two places of foripture, all that I remember our author brings to prove Adam's fourreignty, that supremacy, which he says, it was God's erdinance should be unlimited in Adam, and as large as all the acts of his will, Observations, 254.

254. viz. i. Gen. 28. and iii. Gen. 16. one whereof fignifies only the subjection of the inferior ranks of creatures to mankind, and the other the subjection that is due from a wife to her husband, both far enough from that which subjects owe the governors of political societies.

CHAP, VI.

Of Adam's Title to Sovereignty by Fatherbood. §. 50. THERE is one thing more, and then I think I have given you all that our author brings for proof of Adam's fovereignty, and that is a suppolition of a natural right of dominion over his children, by being their father: and this title of fatherhood he is to pleased with, that you will find it brought in almost in every page; particularly he fages, not only Adams, but the fucceeding patriarchs had by right of fatherhood royal authority over their children, p. 12. And in the fame page, this fubjection of children being the fountain of all regal authority, &cc. This being, as one would think by his for frequent mentioning it, the main balis of all his frame, we may well expect clear and evident reason for it, fince he lays it down as a position necessary to his purpose, that every man that is born is so far from being frees, that by bis very birth be becomes a subject of him that begets

begets bim, Observations, 156. fo that Adam being the only man created, and all ever fince being begotten, no body has been bornfree. If we alk how Adam comes by this power over his children, he tells us here it is by begetting them: and fo again, Observations, 223. this natural dominion of Adam, fays he, may be proved out of Grotius bimself, who teacheth, that generatione jus acquiritur parentibus in liberos. And indeed the act of begetting being that which makes a man a father, his right of a father over his children can naturally arife from nothing elfe.

§. 51. Grotius tells us not here how far this jus in liberos, this power of parents over their children extends; but our author, always very clear in the point, assures us, it is supreme power, and like that of absolute monarchs over their flaves, abfolute power of life and death. He that should demand of him, how, or for what reason it is, that begetting a child gives the father fuch an absolute power over him, will find him anfwer nothing : we are to take his word for this, as well as feveral other things; and by that the laws of nature and the constitutions of government must stand or fall. Had he been an absolute monarch, this way of talking might have fuited well enough; proratione voluntas might have been of force in his mouth; but in the way of proof or argument is very unbecoming, and will little advantage advantage his plea for absolute monarchy. Sir Robert has too much leffened a fubject's authority to leave himself the hopes of eftablishing any thing by his bare faying it; one flave's opinion without proof is not of weight enough to dispose of the liberty and fortunes of all mankind. If all men are not, as I think they are, naturally equal, I am fure all flaves are; and then I may without presumption oppose my fingle opinion to his; and be confident that my faying, that begetting of children makes them not flaves to their fathers, as certainly sets all mankind free, as his affirming the contrary makes them all flaves. But that this position, which is the foundation of all their doctrine, who would have monarchy to be jure divino, may have all fair play, let us hear what reasons others give for it, fince our author offers none.

§. 52. The argument, I have heard others make use of, to prove that fathers, by begetting them, come by an absolute power over their children, is this; that fathers have a power over the lives of their children, because they give them life and being, which is the only, proof it is capable of: fince there can be no reason, why naturally one man should have any claim or pretence of right over that in another, which was never his, which he beftowed not, but was received from the bounty of another. 1. I answer, that every one who gives another any thing, has not always thereby thereby a right to take it away again. But 2. They who fay the father gives life to his children, are to dazzled with the thoughts of monarchy, that they do not, as they ought, remember God, who is the author and giver of life: it is in him alone we live, move, and have our being. How can he be thought to give life to another, that knows not wherein his own life confifts? Philofophers are at a kofs about it after their most diligent enquiries; and anatomists, after their whole fives and fludies spent in diffections, and diligent examining the bodies of men, confefs their ignorance in the flructure and ufe of many parts of man's body, and in that operation wherein life confifts in the whole. And doth the rude plough-man, or the more ignorant voluptuary, frame or fathion fuch an admirable engine as this is, and then put life and fense into it? Can any man fay, he formed the parts that are necessary to the life of his child ? or can he suppose himself to give the life, and yet not know what subject is fit to receive it, nor what actions or organs are necessary for its reception or prefervation ?

§ 53. To give life to that which has yet no being, is to frame and make a living creature, failtion the parts, and mould and fuit them to their ufes, and having proportioned and fitted them together, to put into them a living foul. He that could do this, y might indeed have fome pretence to deftroy his own workmanship. But is there any one to bold, that dares thus far arrogate to himfelf the incomprehensible works of the almighty? Who alone did at first, and continues still to make a living foul, he alone can breathe in the breath of life. If any one thinks himfelf an artift at this, let him number up the parts of his child's body which he hath made, tell me their uses and operations, and when the living and rational foul began to inhabit this curious ftructure, when fense began, and how this engine, which he has framed, thinks and reasons : if he made it. let him, when it is out of order, mend it, at least tell wherein the defects lie. Shall he that made the eye not fee? fays the Pfalmift. Pfalm xciv. 9. See these men's vanities! the structure of that one part is sufficient to convince us of an all-wife contriver, and he has fo visible a claim to us as his workmanship, that one of the ordinary appellations of God in scripture is, God our Maker, and the Lord our Maker. And therefore though our author, for the magnifying his fatherbood, be pleased to fay, Observations, 159. That even the power which God himself exerciseth over mankind is by right of fatherbood, yet this fatherhood is fuch an one as utterly excludes all pretence of title in earthly parents; for he is king, because he is indeed maker of us all.

§. 54. But had men skill and power to make their children, it is not fo flight a piece of workmanship, that it can be imagined, they could make them without defigning it. What father of a thousand, when he begets a child, thinks farther than the fatisfying his prefent appetite? God in his infinite wildom has put firong defires of copulation into the conflitution of men, thereby to continue the race of mankind, which he doth most commonly without the intention, and often against the confent and will of the begetter. And indeed those who defire and defign children, are but the occasions of their being, and when they defign and wish to beget them, do little more towards their making, than Deucalion and his wife in the fable did towards the making of mankind, by throwing pebbles over their heads.

§. 55. But grant that the parents made their children, gave them life and being, and that hence there followed an abfolute power. This would give the father but a joint dominion with the mother over them: for no body can deny but that the woman hath an equal fhare, if not the greater, as nourifhing the child a long time in her own body out of her own fubftance; there it is fafhioned, and from her it receives the materials and principles of its conftitution: and it it is fo hard to imagine the rational foul fhould prefently inhabit the yet unformed embrio, as foon as the father has done his part in the act of generation, that if it must be fupposed to derive any thing from the parents, it must certainly owe most to the mother. But be that as it will, the mother cannot be denied an equal fhare in begetting of the child, and fo the abfolute authority of the father will not arife from hence. Our author indeed is of another mind; for he fays, We know that God at the creation gave the fovereignty to the man over the woman, as being the nobler and principal agent in gene-ration, Observations, 172. I remember not this in my Bible; and when the place is brought where God at the creation gave the fovereight where God at the treation gave the fovereighty to man over the woman, and that for this reason, because be is the nobler and principal agent in generation, it will be time enough to confider, and answer it. But it is no new thing for our author to tell us his own fancies for certain and divine truths, tho' there be often a great deal of difference be-tween his and divine revelations; for God in the scripture fays, bis father and bis mother that begot him.

§. 56. They who alledge the practice of mankind, for exposing or felling their children, as a proof of their power over them, are with Sir Robert happy arguers; and cannot but recommend their opinion, by founding it 64

it on the most shameful action, and most unnatural murder, human nature is capable of. The dens of lions and nurferies of wolves know no fuch cruelty as this: these favage inhabitants of the defert obey God and nature in being tender and careful of their off-fpring: they will hunt, watch, fight, and almost flarve for the prefervation of their young; never part with them; never forfake them, till they are able to thift for them-felves. And is it the privilege of man alone to act more contrary to nature than the wild and most untamed part of the creation? doth God forbid us under the feverest pe-nalty, that of death, to take away the life of any man, a stranger, and upon provo-cation? and does he permit us to destroy those, he has given us the charge and care of; and by the dictates of nature and rea-son, as well as his revealed command, requires us to preferve? He has in all the parts of the creation taken a peculiar care to pro-pagate and continue the feveral species of creatures, and makes the individuals act fo strongly to this end, that they fometimes neglect their own private good for it, and feem to forget that general rule, which na-ture teaches all things, of felf-prefervation; and the prefervation of their young, as the ftrongest principle in them, over-rules the constitution of their particular natures. Thus we fee, when their young ftand in need of it, the timorous become valiant, the

the fierce and favage kind, and the ravenous tender and liberal.

§. 57. But if the example of what hath been done, be the rule of what ought to be, hiftory would have furnished our author with inftances of this abfolute fatherly power in its height and perfection, and he might have fhewed us in Peru, people that hegot, children on purpofe to fatten and eat them. The ftory is fo remarkable, that I cannot but fet it down in the author's words. "In fome " provinces, fays be, they were fo liquorifh " after man's flefh, that they would not have " the patience to flay till the breath was " out of the body, but would fuck the blood " as it ran from the wounds of the dying " man; they had public fhambles of man's " flefh, and their madnefs herein was to " that degree, that they fpared not their " own children, which they had begot on " ftrangers taken in war: for they made " their captives their miftreffes, and choicely " nourifhed the children they had by them, " till about thirteen years old they butchered " and eat them; and they ferved the mo-" thers after the fame fashion, when they " grew past child bearing, and ceased to " bring them any more roafters," Garcilaffo de la Vega hist. des Yncas de Peru, 1. i. c. 12. §. 58. Thus far can the bufy mind of man carry him to a brutality below the level of beafts, when he quits his reason, which places.

places him almost equal to angels. Nor can it be otherwife in a creature, whofe thoughts are more than the fands, and wider than the ocean, where fancy and paffion must needs sun him into strange courses, if reason, which is his only star and compass, be not that he steers by. The imagination is always restlefs, and fuggefts variety of thoughts, and the will, reason being laid aside, is ready for every extravagant project; and in this state, he that goes farthest out of the way, is thought fittest to lead, and is sure of most followers: and when fashion hath once established what folly or craft began, cuftom makes it facred, and it will be thought impudence, or madnefs, to contradict or question it. He that will impartially survey the nations of the world, will find so much of their religions, governments and manners, brought in and continued amongst them by these means, that he will have but little reverence for the practices which are in use and credit amongst men; and will have reason to think, that the woods and forefts, where the irrational untaught inhabitants keep right by following nature, are fitter to give us rules, than cities and palaces, where those that call themselves civil and rational, go out of their way, by the authority of example. If precedents are sufficient to establish a rule in this cafe, our author might have found in holy writ children facrificed by their parents, and this amongft amongft the people of God themfelves: the Pfalmift tells us, Pfal. cvi. 38. They field inmovent blood, even the blood of their fons and of their daughters, whom they facrificed unto the idols of Canaan. But God judged not of this by our author's rule, nor allowed of the authority of practice againft his righteous law; but as it follows there, the land was polluted with blood; therefore was the wrath of the Lord kindled againft his people, infomuch that be abborred his own inheritance. The killing of their children, though it were fashionable, was charged on them as innocent blood, and fo had in the account of God the guilt of murder, as the offering them to idols had the guilt of idolatry.

§. 59. Be it then, as Sir Robert fays, that anciently it was usual for men to fell and castrate their children, Observations, 155. Let it be, that they exposed them; add to it, if you please, for this is still greater power, that they begat them for their tables, to fat and eat them: if this proves a right to do fo, we may, by the fame argument, justify adultery, inceft and fodomy, for there are examples of these too, both ancient and modern; fins, which I suppose have their principal aggravation from this, that they cross the main intention of nature, which willeth the increase of mankind, and the continuation of the species in the highest perfection, and the diffinction of families, with F 2 the the fecurity of the marriage bed, as necessary thereunto.

§. 60. In confirmation of this natural au-thority of the father, our author brings a lame proof from the politive command of God in fcripture: his words are, To confirm the natural right of regal power, we find in the Decalogue, that the law which enjoins obedience to kings, is delivered in the terms, Honour thy father, p. 23. Whereas many confess, that government only in the abstract, is the ordinance of God, they are not able to prove any fuch ordinance in the scripture, but only in the fa-therly power; and therefore we find the commandment, that enjoins obedience to superiors, given in the terms, Honour thy father; so that not only the power and right of government, but the form of the power governing, and the perfon having the power, are all the ordinances of God. The first father had not only simply power, but power monarchical, as he was father immediately from God, Observations, 254. To the fame purpofe, the fame law is cited by our author in feveral other places, and just after the fame fashion; that is, and mother, as apochryphal words, are always left out ; a great argument of our author's ingenuity, and the goodness of his cause, which required in its defender zeal to a degree of warmth, able to warp the facred rule of the word of God, to make it comply with his prefent occasion; a way of proceeding not unufual to

to those, who embrace not truths because reason and revelation offer them, but espouse tenets and parties for ends different from truth, and then resolve at any rate to defend them; and so do with the words and fense of authors, they would fit to their purpose, just as Procrusses did with his guests, lop or stretch them, as may best fit them to the fize of their notions: and they always prove like those so ferved, deformed, lame, and useles.

§. 61. For had our author fet down this command without garbling, as God gave it, and joined mother to father, every reader would have feen, that it had made directly against him; and that it was so far from establishing the monarchical power of the father, that it fet up the mother equal with him, and enjoined nothing but what was due in common, to both father and mother: for that is the conftant tenor of the fcripture, Honour thy father and thy mother, Exod. xx. He that smiteth his father or mother, shall surely be put to death, xxi. 15. He that curseth bis father or mother, shall furely be put to death, ver. 17. Repeated Lev. xx. 9. and by our Saviour, Matth. xv. 4. Ye shall fear every man his mother and his father, Lev. xix. 3. If a man have a rebellious fon, which will not obey the voice of his father, or the voice of his mother; then shall his father and his mother lay hold on him, and fay, This our fon is flub-Έ'γ horn born and rebellions, he will not obey our voice, Deut. xxi. 18, 19, 20, 21. Canfed be be that fetteth hight by bis father or his mother, xxvin. 16. My fon, hear the instructions of thy father, and forfake not the law of thy mother, are the words of Solomon, a king who was not ignorant of what belonged to him as a father or a king; and yet he joins father and mother together, in all the inftructions he gives children quite thro' his book of Proverbs. Woe unto him, that fayeth unto his father, What begetteft thou, or to the woman, What haft thou brought forth? Ifa. xi. ver. 10. In thee have they set light by father or mother, Ezek. xxvni. 2. And it shall come to pass, that when any shall yet prophely, then his father and his mother that begat him, shall say unto him, Thou shalt not live, and his father and his mother that begat him, shall thrust him through when he prophefieth, Zech. xiii. 3. Here not the father only, but the father and mother jointly, had power in this cafe of life and death. Thus ran the law of the Old Testament, and in the New they are likewife joined, in the obedience of their children, Epb. vi. 1. The rule is, Children, obey your parents; and I do not remember, that I any where read, *Chil*dren, obey your father, and no more : the fcripture joins mother too in that homage, which is due from children; and had there been any text, where the honour or obedience of children had been directed to the father alone,

it is not likely that our author, who pretends to build all upon fcripture, would have omitted it: nay, the fcripture makes the authority of father and mother, in refpect of those they have begot, fo equal, that in fome places it neglects even the priority of order, which is thought due to the father, and the mother is put first, as Lev. xix. 3. from which fo constantly joining father and mother together, as is found quite through the fcripture, we may conclude that the honour they have a title to from their children, is one common right belonging fo equally to them both, that neither can claim it wholly, neither can be excluded.

§. 62. One would wonder then how our author infers from the 5th commandment, that all power was originally in the father; how he finds monarchical power of government fettled and fixed by the commandment, Honour thy father and thy mother. If all the honour due by the commandment, be it what it will, be the only right of the father, because he, as our author fays, has the fovereignty over the woman, as being the nobler and principler agent in generation, why did God afterwards all along join the mother with him, to fhare in his honour? can the father, by this fovereignty of his, discharge the child from paying this honour to his mother ? The fcripture gave no fuch licence to the Yews, and yet there were often breaches wide enough F 4 betwixt betwixt husband and wife, even to divorce and feparation: and, I think, no body will fay a child may with-hold honour from his mother, or, as the fcripture terms it, fet light by ber, though his father should command him to do so is no more than the mother could dispense with him for neglecting to bonour his father: whereby it is plain, that this command of God gives the father no fovereignty, no supremacy.

§. 63. I agree with our author that the title to this bonour is vested in the parents by nature, and is a right which accrues to them by their having begotten their chil-dren, and God by many positive declarations has confirmed it to them : I also allow our author's rule, that in grants and gifts, that bave their original from God and nature, as the power of the futher, (let me add and mother, for whom God hath joined together, let no man put asunder) no inferior power of men can limit, nor make any law of prescription against them, Observations, 158. so that the mother having, by this law of God, a right to honour from her children, which is not fubject to the will of her hufband, we fee this abfolute monarchical power of the father can neither be founded on it, nor confift with it; and he has a power very far from monarchical, very far from that abfoluteness our author contends for, when another has over his fubjects the fame power he hath, and by the ſamě fame title: and therefore he cannot forbear faying himfelf that be cannot fee how any man's children can be free from fubjection to their parents, p. 12. which, in common speech, I think, fignifies mother as well as father, or if parents here fignifies only father, it is the first time I ever yet knew it to do so, and by such an use of words one may say any thing.

§. 64. By our author's doctrine, the father having absolute jurifdiction over his children, has also the fame over their iffue; and the confequence is good, were it true, that the father had fuch a power : and yet I afk our author whether the grandfather, by his fovereignty, could difcharge the grand-child from paying to his father the honour due to him by the 5th commandment. If the grandfather hath, by right of fatherhood, fole fovereign power in him, and that obe-If dience which is due to the fupreme magistrate, be commanded in these words, Honour thy father, it is certain the grandfather might difpense with the grandson's honouring his father, which fince it is evident in common fense he cannot, it follows from hence, that Honour thy father and mother, cannot mean an abfolute fubjection to a fovereign power, but fomething elfe. The right therefore which parents have by nature, and which is confirmed to them by the 5th commandment, cannot be that political dominion, which our author author would derive from it: for that being in every civil fociety fupreme fomewhere, can difcharge any fubject from any political obedience to any one of his fellow fubjects. But what law of the magistrate can give a child liberty, not to bonour bis father and mother? It is an eternal law, annexed purely to the relation of parents and children, and fo contains nothing of the magistrate's power in it, nor is fubjected to it.

§. 65. Our author fays, God bath given to a father a right or liberty to alien his power over his children to any other, Observations, 155. I doubt whether he can alien wholly the right of bonour that is due from them : but be that as it will, this I am fure, he cannot ahen, and retain the fame power. If therefore the magnitrate's fovereignty be, as our author would have it, nothing but the authority of a supreme father, p. 23. it is unavoidable, that if the magistrate hath all this paternal right, as he must have if fatherbood be the fountain of all authority; then the subjects, though fathers, can have no power over their children, no right to honour from them: for it cannot be all in another's hands, and a part remain with the parents. So that, according to our author's own doctrine, Honour thy father and mother cannot poffibly be underftood of political fubjection and obedience; fince the laws both in the Old and New Testament, that commanded manded children to benour and obey their parents, were given to such, whole fathers were under civil government, and fellow fubjects with them in political focieties; and to have bid them bonour and obey their parents, in our author's sense, had been to bid them be fubjects to those who had no title to it; the right to obedience from fubjects, being all vefted in another; and instead of teaching obedience, this had been to foment sedition, by setting up powers that were not. If therefore this command, Honour thy father and mother, concern political dominion, it directly overthrows our author's monarchy; fince it being to be paid by every child to his father, even in fociety, every father must neceffarily have political dominion, and there will be as many fovereigns as there are fathers : befides that the mother too hath her title, which deftroys the fovereignty of one supreme monarch. But if Honour thy father and mother mean fomething diffinct from political power, as necessarily it must, it is befides our author's bufinefs, and ferves nothing to his purpofe.

§. 66. The law that enjoins obedience to kings is delivered, fays our author, in the terms, Honour thy father, as if all power were originally in the father, Observations, 254: and that law is also delivered, fay I, in the terms, Honour thy mother, as if all power were originally in the mother. I appeal whether the

the argument be not as good on one fide as the other, father and mother being joined all along in the Old and New Testament where-ever honour or obedience is injoined children. Again our author tells us, Obfervations, 254. that this command, Honour thy father, gives the right to govern, and makes the form of government monarchical. To which I answer, that if by Honour thy father be meant obedience to the political power of the magistrate, it concerns not any duty we owe to our natural fathers, who are fubjects; becaufe they, by our author's doctrine, are divested of all that power, it being placed wholly in the prince, and fo being equally fubjects and flaves with their children, can have no right, by that title, to any fuch bonour or obedience, as contains in it political fubjection : if Honour thy father and mother fignifies the duty we owe our natural parents, as by our Saviour's interpretation, Matth. xv. 4. and all the other mentioned places, it is plain it does, then it cannot concern political obedience, but a duty that is owing to perfons, who have no title to fovereignty, nor any political authority as magistrates over subjects. For the perfon of a private father, and a title to obedience, due to the fupreme magistrate, are things inconfistent; and therefore this command, which must neceffarily comprehend the perfons of our natural fathers, must mean a duty we owe them them diffinct from our obedience to the magistrate, and from which the most absolute power of princes cannot absolve us. What this duty is, we shall in its due place examine.

§. 67. And thus we have at last got thro' all, that in our author looks like an argument for that abfolute unlimited fovereignty defcribed, fect. 8. which he fuppofes in Adam; fo that mankind ever fince have been all born flaves, without any title to freedom. But if creation, which gave nothing but a being, made not Adam prince of his posterity: if Adam, Gen. i. 28. was not constituted lord of mankind, nor had a private dominion given him exclusive of his children, but only a right and power over the earth, and inferiour creatures in common with the children of men; if alfo Gen. iii. 16. God gave not any poli-tical power to Adam over his wife and children, but only subjected Eve to Adam, as a punishment, or foretold the subjection of the weaker fex, in the ordering the common concernments of their families, but gave not thereby to Adam, as to the hufband, power of life and death, which necessarily belongs to the magistrate : if fathers by begetting their children acquire no fuch power ove them; and if the command, Honour thy father and mother, give it not, but only enjoins a duty owing to parents equally, whe-ther fubjects or not, and to the mother as well as the father; if all this be fo, as I think, 78 QF GOVERNMENT.

think, by what has been faid, is very evident; then man has a netural freedom, notwithstanding all our author confidently fays to the contrary; fince all that fhare in the fame common nature, faculties and powers, are in nature equal, and ought to partake in the fame common rights and privileges, till the manifest appointment of God, who is Lord over all, bleffed for ever, can be produced to shew any particular person's fu-premacy; or a man's own consent subjects him to a superiour. This is so plain, that our author confesses, that Sir John Hayward, Blackwood and Barclay, the great vindicators of the right of kings, could not deny it, but admit with one confent the natural liberty and equality of mankind, for a truth unquestionable. And our author hath been to far from producing any thing, that may make good his great position, that Adam was absolute monarch, and to men are not naturally free, that even his own proofs make against him; so that to use his own way of arguing, the first erroneous principle failing, the whole fabric of this vaft engine of absolute power and tyranny drops down of itself, and there needs no more to be faid in answer to all that he builds upon fo false and frail a foundation.

§. 68. But to fave others the pains, were there any need, he is not fparing himfelf to thew, by his own contradictions, the weaknefs of his own doctrine. Adam's abfolute and

OF GOVERNMENT.

and fole dominion is that, which he is every where full of, and all along builds on, and yet he tells us, p. 12. that as Adam was lard of his children, fo his children under him had a command and power over their own children. The unlimited and undivided fovereignty of The unlimited and undivided inversignty of Adam's fatherbood, by our author's computa-tion, ftood but a little while, only during the first generation, but as foon as he had grand-children, Sir Robert could give but a very ill account of it. Adam, as father of bis children, faith he, bath an abfalute, un-limited royal power over them, and by virtue thereof over those that they begot, and fo to all generations; and yet his children, viz. Cain and Seth, have a paternal power over their children at the fame time: fo that they are children at the fame time; fo that they are at the fame time abfolute lords, and yet vaffals and flaves; Adam has all the authority, as grand-father of the people, and they have a part of it as fathers of a part of them: he is abfolute over them and their posterity, by having begotten them, and yet they are ab-folute over their children by the fame title. No, fays our author, Adam's children under No, lays our author, Adam's children under him had power over their own children, but ftill with fubordination to the first parent. A good diffinction that founds well, and it is pity it fignifies nothing, nor can be reconciled with our author's words. I readily grant, that fuppofing Adam's abfolute power over his posterity, any of his children might have from

from him a delegated, and fo a fubordinate from him a delegated, and to a jubordinate power over a part, or all the reft: but that cannot be the power our author speaks of here; it is not a power by grant and com-mission, but the natural paternal power he supposes a father to have over his children. For 1. he fays, As Adam was lord of bis children, so his children under him had a power over their own children: they were then lords over their own children after the fame manner, and by the fame title, that Adam was, i. e. by right of generation, by right of fatherbood. 2. It is plain he means the natural power of fathers, because he limits it to be only over their own children; a delegated power has no fuch limitation, as only over their own children, it might be over others, as well as their own children. 3. If it were, a delegated power, it must appear in fcrip-ture; but there is no ground in fcripture to affirm, that Adam's children had any other power over theirs, than what they naturally had as fathers.

§. 69. But that he means here paternal power, and no other, is pass doubt, from the inference he makes in these words immediately following, I fee not then how the children of Adam, or of any man else, can be free from subjection to their parents. Whereby it appears that the power on one fide, and the subjection on the other, our author here speaks of, is that natural power and subjection between tween parents and children: for that which every man's children owed, could be no other; and that our author always affirms to be abfolute and unlimited. This natural power of parents over their children, Adam had over his posterity, fays our author; and this power of parents over their children, his children had over theirs in his life-time, fays our author alfo; fo that Adam, by a natural right of father, had an abfolute unlimited power over all his posterity, and at the fame time his children had by the fame right abfolute unlimited power over theirs. Here then are two abfolute unlimited powers exifting together, which I would have any body reconcile one to another, or to common fenfe. For the falvo he has put in of fubordination, makes it more abfurd : to have one abfolute, unlimited, nay unlimitable power in fubordination to another, is fo manifest a contradiction, that nothing can be more. Adam is absolute prince with the unlimited authority of fatherbood over all his posterity; all his posterity are then absolutely his subjects; and, as our author fays, his flaves, children, and grand-children, are equally in this state of fubjection and flavery; and yet, fays our author, the children of Adam have paternal, i.e. absolute unlimited power over their own children: Which in plain English is, they are flaves and abfolute princes at the fame time, and in the fame government; and one part G part of the subjects have an absolute unlimited power over the other by the natural right of parentage.

§. 70. If any one will fuppole, in favour of our author, that he here meant, that parents, who are in fubjection themfelves to the absolute authority of their father, have yet some power over their children; I confess he is fomething nearer the truth : but he will not at all hereby help our author : for he no where speaking of the paternal power, but as an absolute unlimited authority, cannot be supposed to understand any thing else here, unless he himself had limited it, and shewed how far it reached. And that he means here paternal authority in that large extent, is plain from the immediate following words; This subjection of children being, fays he, the foundation of all regal authority, p. 12. the fubjection then that in the former line, he fays, every man is in to his parents, and confequently what Adam's grand-children were in to their parents, was that which was the fountain of all regal authority, i. e. according to our author, abfolute unlimitable authority. And thus Adam's children had regal authority over their children, whilft they themselves were subjects to their father, and fellow-fubjects with their children. But let him mean as he pleases, it is plain he allows Adam's children to have paternal power, p. 12. as also all other fathers to have paternal power over over their children, Observations, 156. From whence one of these two things will necessfarily follow, that either Adam's children, even in his life-time, had, and so all other fathers have, as he phrases it, p. 12. by right of fatherbood, royal authority over their children, or else, that Adam, by right of fatherbood, had not royal authority. For it cannot be but that paternal power does, or does not, give royal authority to them that have it: if it does not, then Adam could not be fovereign by this title, nor any body else; and then there is an end of all our author's politics at once: if it does give royal authority, then every one that has paternal power has royal authority; and then, by our author's patriarchal government, there will be as many kings as there are fathers.

§. 71. And thus what a monarchy he hath fet up, let him and his difciples confider. Princes certainly will have great reafon to thank him for thefe new politics, which fet up as many abfolute kings in every country as there are fathers of children. And yet who can blame our author for it, it lying unavoidably in the way of one difcourfing upon our author's principles? For having placed an abfolute power in fathers by right of begetting, he could not eafily refolve how much of this power belonged to a fon over the children he had begotten; and fo it fell out to be a very hard matter to give all the power, as he does, to Adam, and yet allow a part in his life-time to his children, when they were parents, and which he knew not well how to deny them. This makes him fo doubtful in his expressions, and so uncertain where to place this absolute natural power, which he calls fatherhood. Sometimes Adam alone has it all, as p. 13. Observations, 244, 245. S Pref.

Sometimes parents have it, which word fcarce fignifies the father alone, p. 12, 19.

Sometimes children during their fathers life-time, as p. 12.

Sometimes fathers of families, as p. 78, and 79.

Sometimes fathers indefinitely, Observations, 155.

Sometimes the heir to Adam, Observations, 253.

Sometimes the posterity of Adam, 244, 246. Sometimes prime fathers, all fons or grandchildren of Noah, Observations, 244.

Sometimes the eldest parents, p. 12.

Sometimes all kings, p. 19.

Sometimes all that have supreme power, Observations, 245.

Sometimes heirs to those first progenitors, who were at first the natural parents of the whole people, p. 19.

Sometimes an elective king, p. 23.

Sometimes those, whether a few or a multitude, that govern the common-wealth, p. 23. Sometimes Sometimes he that can catch it, an usurper, p. 23. Observations, 155.

§. 72. Thus this new not bing, that is to carry with it all power, authority, and government; this fatherhood, which is to defign the perfon, and eftablifh the throne of monarchs, whom the people are to obey, may, according to Sir Robert, come into any hands, any how, and fo by his politics give to democracy royal authority, and make an ufurper a lawful prince. And if it will do all these fine feats, much good do our author and all his followers with their omnipotent fatherhood, which can ferve for nothing but to unfettle and deftroy all the lawful governments in the world, and to eftablish in their room diforder, tyranny, and ufurpation.

C H A P. VII.

Of Fatherbood and Property confidered together as Fountains of Sovereignty.

§. 73. IN the foregoing chapters we have feen what Adam's monarchy was, in our author's opinion, and upon what titles he founded it. The foundations which he lays the chief strefs on, as those from which he thinks he may best derive monarchical power to future princes, are two, viz. Father-G 3 bod

bood and property: and therefore the way he proposes to remove the absurdities and incon-veniencies of the dostrine of natural freedom, is, to maintain the natural and private dominion of Adam, Observations, 222. Conformable here-Adam, Objervations, 222. Conformable here-unto, he tells us, the grounds and principles of government necessarily depend upon the original of property, Observations, 108. The subjection of children to their parents is the fountain of all regal authority, p. 12. And all power on earth is ei-ther derived or usurped from the fatherly power, there being no other original to be found of any power what soever, Observations, 158. I will not fland here to examine how it can be faid without a contradiction, that the first grounds and principles of government necessarily dependupon the original of property, and yet, that there is no other original of any power what soever, but that of the father: it being hard to underbut that of the father : it being hard to under-ftand how there can be no other original but fatherhood, and yet that the grounds and prin-ciples of government depend upon the original of property; property and fatherhood being as far different as lord of a manor and father of children. Nor do I fee how they will ei-ther of them agree with what our author fays, Obfervations, 244. of God's fentence against Eve, Gen. iii. 16. That it is the original grant of government : fo that if that were the original, government had not its original, by our author's own confession, either from property or fa-therhood ; therbood ;

therbood; and this text, which he brings as a proof of Adam's power over Eve, neceffarily contradicts what he fays of the fatherbood, that it is the fole fountain of all power: for if Adam had any fuch regal power over Eve, as our author contends for, it must be by fome other title than that of begetting.

§. 74. But I leave him to reconcile these contradictions, as well as many others, which may plentifully be found in him by any one, who will but read him with a little attention : and shall come now to confider, how these two originals of government, Adam's natural and private dominion, will confift, and ferve to make out and establish the titles of fucceeding monarchs, who, as our author obliges them, must all derive their power from these fountains. Let us then suppose Adam made, by God's donation, lord and fole proprietor of the whole earth, in as large and ample a manner as Sir Robert could with ; let us suppose him alfo, by right of fatherhood, abfolute ruler over his children with an unlimited fupremacy; I alk then, upon Adam's death what becomes of both his natural and private dominion ? and I doubt not it will be answered, that they defcended to his next heir, as our author tells us feveral places. But this way, it is plain, in cannot poffibly convey both his natural and private dominion to the fame perfon: for thould we allow, that all the property, all the eftate of the father, ought to defcend to the G 4

the eldeft fon, (which will need fome proof to establish it) and fo he has by that title all the private dominion of the father, yet the father's natural dominion, the paternal power cannot defeend to him by inheritance for it being a right that accrues to a man only by begetting, no man can have this natural dominion over any one he does not beget ; unless it can be supposed, that a man can have a right to any thing, without doing that upon which that right is solely founded. for if a father by begetting, and no other title, has natural dominion over his children, he that does not beget them cannot have this natural dominion over them; and therefore be it true or false, that our author says, Observations, 136. That every man that is born, by his very birth becomes a fubject to him that begets him, this ne-ceffarily follows, viz. That a man by his birth cannot become a fubject to his brother, who did not beget him; unlefs it can be fuppofed that a man by the very fame title can come to be under the natural and absolute dominion of two different men at once; or it be fenfe to fay, that a man by birth is under the matural dominion of his father, only because he begat him, and a man by birth alfo is under the natural dominion of his eldeft brother, though he did not beget him.

§. 75. If then the private dominion of Adam, i. e. his property in the creatures, defcended at his death all entirely to his eldest fon, his his heir; (for, if it did not, there is prefently an end of all Sir Robert's monarchy) and his natural dominion, the dominion a father has over his children by begetting them, belonged immediately, upon Adam's decease, equally to all his fons who had children, by the fame title their father had it, the fovereignty founded upon property, and the fo-vereignty founded upon fatherbood, come to be divided; fince Cain, as heir, had that of property alone; Setb, and the other fons, that of father hood equally with him. This is the best can be made of our author's doctrine, and of the two titles of fovereignty he fets up in Adam : one of them will either fignify nothing; or, if they both must stand, they can ferve only to confound the rights of princes, and diforder government in his posterity: for by building upon two titles to dominion, which cannot descend together, and which he allows may be separated, (for he yields that Adam's children had their distinct territories by right of private dominion, Obfervations, 210. p. 40.) he makes it perpetually a doubt upon his principles where the fovereignty is, or to whom we owe our obedience, fince fatherbood and property are diftinct titles, and began prefently upon Adam's death to be in diftinct perfons. And which then was to give way to the other ?

§.76. Let us take the account of it, as he himfelf gives it us. He tells us out of Grotius, That

That Adam's children by donation, affignation, er some kind of cession before be was dead, had their distinct territories by right of private dominion; Abel bad his flocks and pastures for them : Cain bad bis fields for corn, and the land of Nod, where he built him a city, Observations, 210. Here it is obvious to demand, which of these two after Adam's death was fovereign ? Cain, fays our author, p. 19. By what title? As beir; for beirs to progenitors, who were natural parents of their people, are not only lords of their own children, but also of their brethren, fays our author, p. 19. What was Cain heir to ? Not the entire possessions, not all that which Adam had private dominion in ; for our author allows that Abel, by a title derived from his father, had bis distinct territory for pasture by right of private dominion. What then Abel had by private dominion, was exempt from Cain's dominion: for he could not have private dominion over that which was under the private dominion of another; and therefore his fovereignty over his brother is gone with this private dominion, and fo there are prefently two fovereigns, and his imaginary title of fatherbood is out of doors, and Cain is no prince over his brother : or elfe, if Cain retain his fovereignty over Abel, notwithstand-ing his private dominion, it will follow, that the first grounds and principles of government have nothing to do with property, whatever our 3

our author fays to the contrary. It is true, Abel did not outlive his father Adam; but that makes nothing to the argument, which will hold good againft Sir Robert in Abel's iffue, or in Setb, or any of the posterity of Adam, not defeended from Cain.

§. 77. The fame inconvenience he runs into about the three fons of Noah, who, as he fays, p. 13. had the whole world divided among ft them by their father. I ask then, in which of the three shall we find the establishment of regal power after Noab's death ? If in all three, as our author there feems to fay; then it will follow, that regal power is founded in property of land, and follows private dominion, and not in paternal power, or natural dominion; and fo there is an end of paternal power as the fountain of regal authority, and the fo-much-magnified fatherhood quite vanishes. If the regal power descended to Shem as eldest, and heir to his father, then Noah's division of the world by lot to his fons, or his ten years failing about the Mediterranean to appoint each fon his part, which our author tells of, p. 15. was labour loft; his division of the world to them, was to ill, or to no purpole: for his grant to Cham and Japhet was little worth, if Shem, notwithstanding this grant, as foon as Noab was dead, was to be lord over them. Or, if this grant of private dominion to them, over their affigned territories, were good, here were fet up two distinct forts of power, not subordinate nate one to the other, with all those inconvenate one to the other, with all those inconve-niences which he musters up against the power of the people, Observations, 158. which I shall set down in his own words, only changing property for people. All power on earth is either derived or usurped from the fatherly power, there being no other original to be found of any power whatsoever: for if there should be granted two forts of power, without any subordination of one to the other, they would be in perpetual strife subsche there the same for two subordinations. which should be supreme, for two supremes cannot agree : if the fatherly power be supreme, then the power grounded on private dominion must be fubordinate, and depend on it; and if the power grounded on property be fupreme, then the fatherly power must submit to it, and cannot be exercifed without the licence of the proprietors, which must quite destroy the frame and course of nature. This is his own arguing against two diftinct independent powers, which I have fet down in his own words, only putting power rifing from property, for power of the people; and when he has anfwered what he himfelf has urged here againft two diffinct powers, we fhall be better able to fee how, with any tolerable fenfe, he can derive all regal authority from the natural and private dominion of Adam, from fatherhood and property together, which are diffinct titles, that do not always meet in the fame perfon; and it is plain, by his own confession, prefently feparated parated as foon both as Adam's and Noab's death made way for fucceffion : though our author frequently in his writings jumbles them together, and omits not to make use of either, where he thinks it will found best to his purpose. But the absurdities of this will more fully appear in the next chapter, where we shall examine the ways of conveyance of the fovereignty of Adam, to princes that were to reign after him.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Conveyance of Adam's fovereign Monarchical Power.

§. 78. SIR Robert, having not been very happy in any proof he brings for the fovereignty of Adam, is not much more fortunate in conveying it to future princes, who, if his politics be true, muft all derive their titles from that first monarch. The ways he has affigned, as they lie scattered up and down in his writings, I will set down in his own words: in his preface he tells us, That Adam being monarch of the whole world, none of his posterity had any right to posses any thing, but by bis grant or permission, or by fuccession from him. Here he makes two ways of conveyance of any thing Adam stood possession of the fays, All kings either are, or are to be

be reputed, the next beirs to those first progenitors, who were at first the natural parents of the who were at first the natural parents of the whole people, p. 19. There cannot be any mul-titude of men whatsoever, but that in it, con-fidered by itself, there is one man amongst them, that in nature hath a right to be the king of all the rest, as being the next beir to Adam, Observations, 253. Here in these places inheritance is the only way he allows of conveying monarchical power to princes. In other places he tells us, Observations, 155. All power on earth is either derived or usurped from the fatherly power, Observations, 158. All kings that now are, or ever were, are or were either fathers of their people, or beirs of fuch fathers, or usurpers of the right of such fathers, Observations, 253. And here he makes inheritance or usurpation the only ways makes moernance or ujurpation the only ways whereby kings come by this original power: but yet he tells us, This fatherly empire, as it was of itfelf bereditary, fo it was alienable by patent, and feizable by an ufurper, Obfer-vations, 190. So then here inheritance, grant, or ufurpation, will convey it. And last of all, which is most admirable, he tells us, p. 100. It skills not which way kings come by their power, whether by election, donation, jusceffion, or by any other means; for it is still the manner of the government by supreme power, that makes them properly kings, and not the means of obtaining their crowns. Which I think is a full answer to all his whole bypothefis thefis and difcourfe about Adam's royal au-thority, as the fountain from which all princes were to derive theirs: and he might have fpared the trouble of fpeaking fo much as he does, up and down, of heirs and inheri-tance, if to make any one properly a king, needs no more but governing by fupreme power, and it matters not by what means be came by it.

§. 79. By this notable way, our author may make Oliver as properly king, as any one elfe he could think of: and had he had the happinels to live under Maffanello's govern-ment, he could not by this his own rule have forborn to have done homage to him, with O king live for ever, fince the manner of his government by supreme power, made him properly king, who was but the day before properly a fisherman. And if Don Quixote had taught his fquire to govern with fupreme authority, our author no doubt could have made a most loyal subject in Sancho Pancha's ifland; and he must needs have deferved fome preferment in fuch governments, fince I think he is the first politician, who, pretending to fettle government upon its true basis, and to establish the thrones of lawful princes, ever told the world. That he was properly a king, whose manner of government was by supreme power, by what means soever he obtained it; which in plain English is to fay, that regal and supreme power is properly and truly his, who who can by any means feize upon it; and if this be to be properly a king, I wonder how he came to think of, or where he will find, an ufurper.

§. 80. This is fo ftrange a doctrine, that the surprise of it hath made me pass by, without their due reflection, the contradictions he runs into, by making fometimes inheritance alone, fometimes only grant or inheritance, fometimes only inheritance or ufurpation, fometimes all thefe three, and at last election, or any other means, added to them, the ways whereby Adam's royal authority, that is, his right to supreme rule, could be conveyed down to future kings and governors, fo as to give them a title to the obedience and fubjection of the people. But these con-tradictions lie so open, that the very reading of our author's own words will discover them to any ordinary understanding; and though what I have quoted out of him (with abundance more of the fame strain and coherence, which might be found in him) might well excuse me from any farther trouble in this argument, yet having pro-pofed to myfelf, to examine the main parts of his doctrine, I thall a little more particularly confider how inheritance, grant, ufurpation or election, can any way make out government in the world upon his principles; or derive to any one a right of empire, from this regal authority of Adam, had it been never

OF GOVERNMENT. 97 never fo well proved, that he had been abfolute monarch, and lord of the whole world.

CHAP. IX.

Of Monarchy, by Inheritance from Adam.

§. 81. Hough it be never fo plain, that there ought to be government in the world, nay, should all men be of our author's mind, that divine appointment had ordained it to be monarchical; yet, fince men cannot obey any thing, that cannot com-mand; and ideas of government in the fancy, though never fo perfect, though never fo right, cannot give laws, nor prescribe rules to the actions of men; it would be of no behoof for the fettling of order, and establishment of government in its exercise and use amongst men, unless there were a way also taught how to know the perfon, to whom it belonged to have this power, and exercife this dominion over others. It is in vain: then to talk of fubjection and obedience without telling us whom we are to obey: for were I never to fully perfuaded that there ought to be magistracy and rule in the world ; yet I am never the less at liberty ftill, till it appears who is the perion that hath right to my obedience; fince, if there be no marks to know him by, and diffin-guish him that hath right to rule from other H

other men, it may be myfelf, as well as any other. And therefore, though fubmiffion to government be every one's duty, yet fince that fignifies nothing but fubmitting to the direction and laws of fuch men as have authority to command, it is not enough to make a man a fubject, to convince him that there is regal power in the world; but there must be ways of defigning, and knowing the person to whom this regal power of right belongs: and a man can never be obliged in conficience to fubmit to any power, unlefs he can be fatisfied who is the perfon who has a right to exercise that power over him. If this were not fo, there would be no diftinction between pirates and lawful princes; he that has force is without any more ado to be obeyed, and crowns and fcepters would be obeyed, and crowns and repters would become the inheritance only of violence and rapine. Men too might as often and as in-nocently change their governors, as they do their phylicians, if the perfon cannot be known who has a right to direct me, and whofe prefcriptions I am bound to follow. To fettle therefore men's confciences, under an obligation to obedience, it is neceffary that they know not only, that there is a power fomewhere in the world, but the perfon who by right is vefted with this power over them.

§. 82. How fuccessful our author has been in his attempts, to set up a monarchical absolute power in Adam, the reader may judge by by what has been already faid; but were that abfolute monarchy as clear as our author would defire it, as I prefume it is the contrary, yet it could be of no ufe to the government of mankind now in the world, unlefs he alfo make out thefe two things.

First, That this power of Adam was not to end with him, but was upon his decease conveyed intire to some other person, and so on to posterity.

Secondly, That the princes and rulers now on earth are possefield of this power of Adam, by a right way of conveyance derived to them.

§. 83. If the first of these fail, the power of Adam, were it never so great, never so certain, will fignify nothing to the present government and societies in the world; but we must seek out some other original of power for the government of politys than this of Adam, or else there will be none at all in the world. If the latter fail, it will destroy the authority of the present governors, and absolve the people from source function to them, fince they, having no better a claim than others to that power, which is alone the fountain of all authority, can have no title to rule over them.

§. 84. Our author, having fancied an abfolute fovereignty in Adam, mentions feveral ways of its conveyance to princes, that were to be his fucceffors; but that which he chiefly infifts on, is that of inheritance, which occurs fo often in his feveral difcourfes; and I having in the foregoing chapter quoted feveral of thefe paffages, I fhall not need here again to repeat them. This fovereignty he erects, as has been faid, upon a double foundation, viz. that of property, and that of fatherbood. One was the right he was fuppofed to have in all creatures, a right to possible the earth with the beass, and other inferior ranks of things in it, for his private use, exclusive of all other men. The other was the right he was fupposed to have, to rule and govern men, all the rest of mankind.

§. 85. In both these rights, there being fupposed an exclusion of all other men, it must be upon some reason peculiar to Adam, that they must both be founded.

That of his property our author fuppofes to arife from God's immediate donation, Gen. i. 28. and that of fatherhood from the act of begetting: now in all inheritance, if the heir fucceed not to the reason upon which his father's right was founded, he cannot fucceed to the right which followeth from it. For example, Adam had a right of property in the creatures upon the donation and grant of God almighty, who was lord and proprietor of them all: let this be so as our author tells us, yet upon his death his heir can have no title to them, no such right of property in them, unless the same reason, viz. God's donation.

donation, vested a right in the beir too: for if Adam could have had no property in, nor use of the creatures, without this positive. donation from God, and this donation were only perfonally to Adam, his heir could have no right by it; but upon his death it must revert to God, the lord and owner again; for pofitive grants give no title farther than the express words convey it, and by which only it is held. And thus, if as our author himfelf contends, that donation, Gen. i. 28. were made only to Adam perfonally, his heir could not fucceed to his property in the creatures; and if it were a donation to any but Adam, let it be shewn, that it was to his heir in our author's fenfe, i. e. to one of his children, exclusive of all the rest.

§. 86. But not to follow our author too far out of the way, the plain of the cafe is this. God having made man, and planted in him, as in all other animals, a ftrong defire of felf-prefervation; and furnished the world with things fit for food and raiment, and other neceffaries of life, fubservient to his defign, that man fhould live and abide for fome time upon the face of the earth, and not that fo curious and wonderful a piece of workmanship, by his own negligence, or want of neceffaries, should perish again, prefently after a few moments continuance; God, I fay, having made man and the world thus, spoke to him, (that is) directed him by Hz

by his fenfes and reafon, as he did the inferior animals by their fense and inftinct, which were ferviceable for his fublistence. and given him as the means of his prefervation. And therefore I doubt not, but before these words were pronounced, i. Gen. 28, 29. (if they must be understood literally to have been spoken) and without any such verbal donation, man had a right to an use of the creatures, by the will and grant of God: for the defire, frong defire of preferving his life and being, having been planted in him as a principle of action by God himfelf, reafon, which was the voice of God in him, could not but teach him and affure him, that purfuing that natural inclination he had to preferve his being, he followed the will of his maker, and therefore had a right to make use of those creatures, which by his reason or fenses he could discover would be ferviceable thereunto. And thus man's property in the creatures was founded upon the right he had to make use of those things that were neceffary or uleful to his being.

of their beings, which is all the property man hath in them; and fo Adam's fovereignty built on property, or, as our author calls it, private dominion, comes to nothing. Every man had a right to the creatures, by the fame title Adam had, viz. by the right every one had to take care of, and provide for their fubfiftence: and thus men had a right in common, Adam's children in common with him. But if any one had began, and made himfelf a property in any particular thing, (which how he, or any one elfe, could do, fhall be fhewn in another place) that thing, that poffeffion, if he difpofed not otherwife of it by his pofitive grant, defcended naturally to his children, and they had a right to fucceed to it, and poffefs it.

§. 88. It might reasonably be asked here, how come children by this right of poffeffing, before any other, the properties of their pa-rents upon their decease? for it being perfonally the parents, when they die, without actually transferring their right to another, why does it not return again to the common flock of mankind? It will perhaps be anfwered, that common confent hath difpoled of it to their children. Common practice, we fee indeed, does fo difpofe of it; but we cannot fay, that it is the common confent of mankind; for that hath never been asked, nor actually given; and if common tacit confent hath established it, it would make Η 4 but

but a politive, and not a natural right of children to inherit the goods of their parents: but where the practice is universal, it is reasonable to think the cause is natural. The ground then I think to be this. The first and strongest defire God planted in men, and wrought into the very principles of their nature, being that of self-prefervation, that is the foundation of a right to the creatures for the particular fupport and use of each individual person himself. But, next to this, God planted in men a ftrong defire also of propagating their kind, and continuing themfelves in their posterity; and this gives chil-dren a title to share in the property of their parents, and a right to inherit their posfeffions. Men are not proprietors of what they have, meerly for themselves; their children have a title to part of it, and have their kind of right joined with their parents, in the poffeffion which comes to be wholly their's, when death, having put an end to their parents use of it, hath taken them from their poffeffions; and this we call inheritance: men being by a like obligation bound to preferve what they have begotten, as to preferve themfelves, their iffue come to have a right in the goods they are possesfed of. That children have fuch a right, is plain from the laws of God; and that men are convinced that children have fuch a right, is evident from the law of the land; both which

which laws require parents to provide for their children.

§. 89. For children being by the course of nature, born weak, and unable to provide for themfelves, they have by the appointment of God himself, who hath thus ordered the course of nature, a right to be nourished and maintained by their parents; nay, a right not only to a bare fubfiftence, but to the conveniencies and comforts of life, as far as the conditions of their parents can afford it. Hence it comes, that when their parents leave the world, and fo the care due to their children ceases, the effects of it are to extend as far as poffibly they can, and the pro-visions they have made in their life-time, are understood to be intended, as nature requires they should, for their children, whom, after themselves, they are bound to provide for: though the dying parents, by express words, declare nothing about them, nature appoints the descent of their property to their children, who thus come to have a title, and natural right of inheritance to their fathers goods, which the reft of mankind cannot pretend to.

§. 90. Were it not for this right of being nourifhed and maintained by their parents, which God and nature has given to children, and obliged parents to as a duty, it would be reafonable, that the father fhould inherit the eftate of his fon, and be preferred in the inheritance inheritance before his grand-child : for to the grand-father there is due a long fcore of care and expences laid out upon the breeding and education of his fon, which one would think in justice ought to be paid. But that having been done in obedience to the fame law, whereby he received nourishment and education from his own parents; this fcore of education, received from a man's father, is paid by taking care, and providing for his own children; is paid, I fay, as much as is required of payment by alteration of property, unless prefent necessity of the parents require a return of goods for their necessary support and subfistence: for we are not now fpeaking of that reverence, acknowledgment, respect and honour, that is always due from children to their parents; but of poffeffions and commodities of life valuable by money. But though it be incumbent on parents to bring up and provide for their children, yet this debt to their children does not quite cancel the fcore due to their parents; but only is made by nature preferable to it: for the debt a man owes his father takes place, and gives the father a right to inherit the fon's goods, where, for want of iffue, the right of children doth not exclude that title. And therefore a man having a right to be maintained by his children, where he needs it; and to enjoy also the comforts of life from them, when the neceffary provision due to them and their children will afford it; if his fon die without issue, the father has a right in nature to poffess his goods, and inherit his estate, (whatever the municipal laws of fome countries may abfurdly direct otherwife;) and fo again his children and their iffue from him; or, for want of fuch, his father and his iffue. But where no fuch are to be found. i. e. no kindred, there we fee the poffeffions of a private man revert to the community, and fo in politic focieties come into the hands of the public magistrate; but in the state of nature become again perfectly common, no body having a right to inherit them : nor can any one have a property in them, otherwife than in other things common by nature; of which I shall speak in its due place.

§. 91. I have been the larger, in fhewing upon what ground children have a right to fucceed to the poffeffion of their fathers properties, not only becaufe by it, it will appear, that if Adam had a property (a titular, infignificant, ufelefs property; for it could be no better, for he was bound to nourifh and maintain his children and pofterity out of it) in the whole earth and its product, yet all his children coming to have, by the law of nature, and right of inheritance, a joint title, and right of property in it after his death, it could convey no right of fovereignty to any one of his pofterity over the reft: fince 108

fince every one having a right of inheritance to his portion, they might enjoy their inhe-ritance, or any part of it in common, or fhare it, or fome parts of it, by division, as it beft liked them. But no one could pretend to the whole inheritance, or any fovereignty fuppofed to accompany it; fince a right of inheritance gave every one of the reft, as well as any one, a title to fhare in the goods of his father. Not only upon this account, I fay, have I been fo particular in examining the reason of children's inheriting the pro-perty of their fathers, but also because it will give us farther light in the inheritance of rule and power, which in countries where their particular municipal laws give the whole posseful of land entirely to the first-born and descent of power has some for to born, and descent of power has gone so to men by this custom, some have been apt to be deceived into an opinion, that there was a natural or divine right of primogeniture, to both eftate and power; and that the inheri-tance of both rule over men, and property in things, fprang from the fame original, and were to descend by the fame rules.

§. 92. Property, whole original is from the right a man has to use any of the inferior creatures, for the subsistence and comfort of his life, is for the benefit and fole advantage of the proprietor, fo that he may even deftroy the thing, that he has property in by his ufe of it, where need requires: but government being being for the prefervation of every man's right and property, by preferving him from the violence or injury of others, is for the good of the governed: for the magiftrate's fword being for a terror to evil doers, and by that terror to inforce men to obferve the positive laws of the fociety, made conformable to the laws of nature, for the public good, i. e. the good of every particular member of that fociety, as far as by common rules it can be provided for; the fword is not given the magistrate for his own good alone.

§. 92. Children therefore, as has been shewed, by the dependance they have on their parents for fublistence, have a right of inheritance to their fathers property, as that which belongs to them for their proper good and behoof, and therefore are fitly termed goods, wherein the first-born has not a fole or peculiar right by any law of God and nature, the younger children having an equal title with him, founded on that right they all have to maintenance, fupport, and comfort from their parents, and on nothing elfe. But government being for the benefit of the governed, and not the fole advantage of the governors, (but only for their's with the reft, as they make a part of that politic body, each of whole parts and members are taken care of, and directed in its peculiar functions for the good of the whole, by the laws of fociety) fociety) cannot be inherited by the fame title, that children have to the goods of their father. The right a fon has to be maintained and provided with the neceffaries and con-veniences of life out of his father's ftock, gives him a right to fucceed to his father's property for his own good; but this can give him no right to fucceed also to the rule, which his father had over other men. All that a child has right to claim from his father is nourishment and education, and the things nature furnishes for the support of life: but he has no right to demand rule or dominion from him: he can subsist and receive from him the portion of good things, and advantages of education naturally due to him, without empire and dominion. That (if his father hath any) was vested in him, for the good and behoof of others: and therefore the fon cannot claim or inherit it by a title, which is founded wholly on his own private good and advantage.

§. 94. We must know how the first ruler, from whom any one claims, came by his authority, upon what ground any one has empire, what his title is to it, before we can know who has a right to fucceed him in it, and inherit it from him: if the agreement and consent of men first gave a scepter into any one's hand, or put a crown on his head, that also must direct its descent and conveyance; for the same authority, that made made the first a lawful ruler, must make the fecond too, and fo give right of fucceffion : in this cafe inheritance, or primogeniture, can in its felf have no right, no pretence to it, any farther than that confent, which eftablished the form of the government, hath so fettled the fucceffion. And thus we fee, the fucceffion of crowns, in feveral countries, places it on different heads, and he comes by right of fucceffion to be a prince in one place, who would be a fubject in another.

§. 95. If God, by his positive grant and re-vealed declaration, first gave rule and dominion to any man, he that will claim by that title, must have the same positive grant of God for his succession : for if that has not directed the courfe of its descent and conveyance down to others, no body can fucceed to this title of the first ruler. Children have no right of inheritance to this; and primogeniture can lay no claim to it, unless God, the author of this conftitution, hath fo ordained it. Thus we fee, the pretentions of Saul's family, who received his crown from the immediate ap-pointment of God, ended with his reign; and David, by the fame title that Saul reigned, viz. God's appointment, fucceeded in his throne, to the exclusion of Jonathan, and all pretensions of paternal inheritance : and if Solomon had a right to fucceed his father, it must be by some other title, than that of primogeniture. A cadet, or fuster's fon, must have have the preference in fucceffion, if he has the fame title the first lawful prince had : and in dominion that has its foundation only in the positive appointment of God himself, Benjamin, the youngest, must have the inheritance of the crown, if God so direct, as well as one of that tribe had the first possession.

§. 96. If paternal right, the act of begetting, give a man rule and dominion, inheritance or primogeniture can give no title: for he that cannot succeed to his father's title, which was begetting, cannot fucceed to that power over his brethren, which his father had by paternal right over them. But of this I shall have occafion to fay more in another place. This is plain in the mean time, that any government, whether supposed to be at first founded in paternal right, confent of the people, or the positive appointment of God bimself, which can superfede either of the other, and so begin a new government upon a new foundation; I fay, any government began upon either of these, can by right of succession come to those only, who have the title of him they fucceed to: power founded on contract can defcend only to him, who has right by that contract : power founded on begetting, he only can have that begets; and power found-ed on the pofitive grant or donation of God, he only can have by right of fucceffion, to whom that grant directs it.

§. 97. From what I have faid, I think this is clear, that a right to the use of the creatures, being founded originally in the right a man has to fubfift and enjoy the conveniencies of life; and the natural right children have to inherit the goods of their parents, being founded in the right they have to the fame fubfistence and commodities of life, out of the flock of their parents, who are therefore taught by natural love and tenderness to provide for them, as a part of themselves; and all this being only for the good of the proprietor, or heir; it can be no reafon for children's inheriting of rule and dominion, which has another original and a different end. Nor can primogeniture have any pretence to a right of folely inheriting either property or power, as we shall, in its due place, see more fully. It is enough to have fhewed here, that Adam's property, or private dominion, could not convey any fovereignty or rule to his heir, who not having a right to inherit all his father's poffeffions, could not thereby come to have any fovereignty over his brethren : and therefore, if any fovereignty on account of his property had been vefted in Adam, which in truth there was not, yet it would have died with him.

§. 98. As Adam's fovereignty, if, by virtue of being proprietor of the world, he had any authority over men, could not have been inherited by any of his children over the reft, becaufe they had the fame title to divide the inheritance, and every one had a right to a I portion portion of his father's poffeffions; fo neither could Adam's fovereignty by right of fatherhood, if any fuch he had, descend to any 'one of his children : for it being, in our author's account, a right acquired by begetting to rule over those he had begotten, it was not a power possible to be inherited, because the right being confequent to, and built on, an act perfectly perfonal, made that power fo too, and impoffible to be inherited : for paternal power, being a natural right rifing only from the relation of father and fon, is as impoffible to be inherited as the relation itfelf; and a man may pretend as well to inherit the conjugal power the hufband, whofe heir he is, had over his wife, as he can to inherit the paternal power of a father over his children: for the power of the hufband being founded on contract, and the power of the father on begetting, he may as well inherit the power obtained by the conjugal contract, which was only perfonal, as he may the power obtained by begetting, which could reach no farther than the person of the begetter, unless begetting can be a title to power in him that does not beget.

§. 99. Which makes it a reafonable queftion to alk, whether Adam, dying before Eve, his heir, (fuppofe Cain or Seth) fhould have by right of inheriting Adam's fatherbood, fovereign power over Eve his mother : for Adam's fatherbood being nothing but a right he had to govern his children, because he begot them, he that inherits inherits Adam's fatherbood, inherits nothing, even in our author's fenfe, but the right Adam had to govern his children, becaufe he begot them: fo that the monarchy of the heir would not have taken in Eve; or if it did, it being nothing but the fatherbood of Adam descended by inheritance, the heir must have right to govern Eve, because Adam begot her; for fatherbood is nothing else.

§. 100. Perhaps it will be faid with our author, that a man can alien his power over his child; and what may be transferred by compact, may be possessed by inheritance. I answer, a father cannot alien the power he has over his child : he may perhaps to fome degrees forfeit it, but cannot transfer it ; and if any other man acquire it, it is not by the father's grant, but by fome act of his own. For example, a father, unnaturally careless of his child, fells or gives him to another man; and he again exposes him; a third man finding him, breeds up, cherishes, and provides for him as his own : I think in this cafe, no body will doubt, but that the greatest part of filial duty and subjection was here owing, and to be paid to this foster-father; and if any thing could be demanded from the child, by either of the other, it could be only due to his natural father, who perhaps might have forfeited his right to much of that duty comprehended in the command, Honour your parents, but could transfer none of it to another. He that purchased, and neglected I 2

neglected the child, got by his purchafe and grant of the father, no title to duty or honour from the child; but only he acquired it, who by his own authority, performing the office and care of a father, to the forlorn and perifhing infant, made himfelf, by paternal care, a title to proportionable degrees of paternal power. This will be more eafily admitted upon confideration of the nature of paternal power, for which I refer my reader to the fecond book.

§. 101. To return to the argument in hand; this is evident, That paternal power arifing only from begetting, for in that our author places it alone, can neither be tranfferred nor inherited : and he that does not beget, can no more have paternal power, which arifes from thence, than he can have a right to any thing, who performs not the condition, to which only it is annexed. If one should ask, by what law has a father power over his children? it will be anfwered, no doubt, by the law of nature, which gives fuch a power over them, to him that begets them. If one fhould afk likewife, by what law does our author's heir come by a right to inherit? I think it would be answered, by the law of nature too : for I find not that our author brings one word of fcripture to prove the right of fuch an heir he speaks of. Why then the law of nature gives fathers paternal power over their children, because they did beget them; and the

the fame law of nature gives the fame paternal power to the heir over his brethren, who did not beget them : whence it follows, that either the father has not his paternal power by begetting, or elfe that the heir has it not at all; for it is hard to understand how the law of nature, which is the law of reafon, can give the paternal power to the father over his children, for the only reason of begetting ; and to the first-born over his brethren without this only reason, i. e. for no reason at all : and if the eldeft, by the law of nature, can inherit this paternal power, without the only reason that gives a title to it, so may the youngest as well as he, and a stranger as well as either; for where there is no reafon for any one, as there is not, but for him that begets, all have an equal title. I am fure our author offers no reason; and when any body does, we shall see whether it will hold or no.

§. 102. In the mean time it is as good fenfe to fay, that by the law of nature a man has right to inherit the property of another, becaufe he is of kin to him, and is known to be of his blood; and therefore, by the fame law of nature, an utter ftranger to his blood has right to inherit his effate; as to fay that, by the law of nature, he that begets them has paternal power over his children, and therefore, by the law of nature, the heir that begets them not, has this paternal power over them; or fuppofing the law of the land I 2 gave gave abfolute power over their children, to fuch only who nurfed them, and fed their children themfelves, could any body pretend, that this law gave any one, who did no fuch thing, abfolute power over those, who were not his children?

§. 103. When therefore it can be shewed, that conjugal power can belong to him that is not an hufband, it will also I believe be proved, that our author's paternal power, acquired by begetting, may be inherited by a fon; and that a brother, as heir to his father's power, may have paternal power over his brethren, and by the fame rule conjugal power too : but till then, I think we may reft fatisfied, that the paternal power of Adam, this fovereign authority of fatherbood, were there any fuch, could not defcend to, nor be inherited by, his next heir. Fatherly power, I eafily grant our author, if it will do him any good, can never be loft, because it will be as long in the world as there are fathers : but none of them will have Adam's paternal power, or derive their's from him; but every one will have his own, by the fame title Adam had his, viz. by begetting, but not by inheritance, or fucceffion, no more than hufbands have their conjugal power by inheritance from Adam. And thus we fee, as Adam had no fuch property, no fuch paternal power, as gave him fovereign jurisdiction over mankind; fo likewife his fovereignty built upon either of these titles, if he had any such, could not have have descended to his heir, but must have ended with him. Adam therefore, as has been proved, being neither monarch, nor his imaginary monarchy hereditable, the power which is now in the world, is not that which was Adam's, fince all that Adam could have upon our author's grounds, either of property or fatherbood, necessarily died with him, and could not be conveyed to posterity by inheritance. In the next place we will confider, whether Adam had any fuch heir, to inherit his power, as our author talks of.

CHAP. X.

Of the Heir to Adam's Monarchical Power.

§. 104. O UR author tells us, Obfer-vations, 253. That it is a truth undeniable, that there cannot be any multitude of men what soever, either great or small, tho' gathered together from the feveral corners and remotest regions of the world, but that in the fame multitude, confidered by its felf, there is one man amongst them, that in nature bath a right to be king of all the reft, as being the next heir to Adam, and all the other subjects to him : every man by nature is a king or a fubject. And again, p. 20. If Adam himself were still living, and now ready to die, it is certain that there is one man, and but one in the world, who is next beir. Let this multitude of men be, if I 🛦 our

our author pleafes, all the princes upon the earth, there will then be, by our author's rule, one among it them, that in nature hath a right to be king of all the reft, as being the right heir to Adam; an excellent way to establish the thrones of princes, and settle the obedience of their subjects, by setting up an hundred, or perhaps a thousand titles (if there be so many princes in the world) against any king now reigning, each as good, upon our author's grounds, as his who wears the crown. If this right of heir carry any weight with it, if it be the ordinance of God, as our author settles us, Observations, 244. must not all be subject to it, from the highest to the lowest? Can those who wear the name of princes, without having the right of being earth, there will then be, by our author's of princes, without having the right of being heirs to Adam, demand obedience from their fubjects by this title, and not be bound to pay it by the fame law? Either governments in the world are not to be claimed, and held by this title of Adam's heir; and then the ftarting of it is to no purpose, the being or not being Adam's heir fignifies nothing as to the title of dominion: or if it really be, as our author fays, the true title to government and fovereignty, the first thing to be done, is to find out this true heir of Adam, seat him in his throne, and then all the kings and princes of the world ought to come and refign up their crowns and fcepters to him, as things that belong no more to them, than to any of their subjects.

§. 105. For either this right in nature, of Adam's heir, to be king over all the race of men, (for all together they make one mul-titude) is a right not neceffary to the making of a lawful king, and fo there may be lawful kings without it, and then kings titles and power depend not on it; or elfe all the kings in the world but one are not lawful kings, and fo have no right to obedience : either this title of heir to Adam is that whereby kings hold their crowns, and have a right to subjection from their subjects, and then one only can have it, and the reft being fubjects can require no obedience from other men, who are but their fellow fubjects ; or elfe it is not the title whereby kings rule, and have a right to obedience from their fubjects, and then kings are kings without it, and this dream of the natural fovereignty of Adam's heir is of no use to obedience and government: for if kings have a right to dominion, and the obedience of their fubjects, who are not, nor can poffibly be, heirs to Adam, what use is there of such a title, when we are obliged to obey without it ? If kings, who are not heirs to Adam, have no right to fovereignty, we are all free, till our author, or any body for him, will shew us Adam's right heir. If there be but one heir of Adam, there can be but one lawful king in the world, and no body in confcience can be obliged to obedience till it be refolved who 122 OF GOVERNMENT. who that is; for it may be any one, who is not known to be of a younger houfe, and all others have equal titles. If there be more than one heir of Adam, every one is his heir, and fo every one has regal power: for if two fons can be heirs together, then all the fons are equally heirs, and fo all are heirs, being all fons, or fons fons of Adam. Betwixt thefe two the right of heir can-not ftand; for by it either but one only man, or all men are kings. Take which you pleafe, it diffolves the bonds of govern-ment and obedience; fince, if all men are heirs. they can owe obedience to no body; heirs, they can owe obedience to no body; if only one, no body can be obliged to pay obedience to him, till he be known, and his title made out.

CHAP. XI. Who HEIR?

§. 106. T HE great queftion which in all ages has diffurbed man-All ages has disturbed man-kind, and brought on them the greateft part of those mischiefs which have ruined cities, depopulated countries, and disordered the peace of the world, has been, not whether there be power in the world, nor whence it came, but who should have it. The settling of this point being of no smaller moment than the security of princes, and the peace and and

and welfare of their estates and kingdoms, a reformer of politics, one would think, should lay this fure, and be very clear in it: for if this remain disputable, all the reft will be to very little purpose; and the skill used in dreffing up power with all the splendor and temptation absoluteness can add to it, without shewing who has a right to have it, will ferve only to give a greater edge to man's natural ambition, which of its felf is but too keen. What can this do but set men on the more eagerly to for amble, and so lay a fure and lasting foundation of endless contention and diforder, instead of that peace and tranquillity, which is the business of government, and the end of human fociety?

§. 107. This defignation of the perfon our author is more than ordinary obliged to take care of, because he, affirming that the affignment of civil power is by divine inflitution, hath made the conveyance as well as the power itself facred : fo that no confideration, no act or art of man, can divert it from that perfon, to whom, by this divine right, it is affigned; no necessity or contrivance can fubstitute another perfon in his room: for if the affignment of civil power be by divine institution, and Adam's heir be he to whom it is thus affigned, as in the foregoing chapter our author tells us, it would be as much facrilege for any one to be king, who was not Adam's heir, as it would have been amongst the 5

the Jews, for any one to have been priest, who had not been of Aaron's posterity: for not only the priesthood in general being by divine institution, but the assignment of it to the sole line and posterity of Aaron, made it impossible to be enjoyed or exercised by any one, but those perfons who were the off-spring of Aaron: whose successful obferved, and by that the perfons who had a right to the priesthood certainly known. §. 108. Let us see then what care our author has taken, to make us know who is. author has taken, to make us know who is this beir, who by divine institution has a right to be king over all men. The first account of him we meet with is, p. 12. in these words: This subjection of children, being the fountain of all regal authority, by the ordination of God himsfelf; it follows, that civil power, not only in general, is by divine institution, but even the assignment of it, specifically to the eldest parents. Matters of fuch confequence as this is, fhould be in plain words, as little liable, as might be, to doubt or equivocation; and I think, if language be capable of expressing any thing distinctly and clearly, that of kindred, and the feveral degrees of nearness of blood, is one. It were therefore to be wished, that our author had ufed a little more intelligible expressions here, that we might have better known, who it is, to whom the affignment of civil power is made by divine inftitution; or at least would have told us what he meant by elde ft eldest parents: for I believe, if land had been affigned or granted to him, and the eldest parents of his family, he would have thought it had needed an interpreter; and it would fcarce have been known to whom next it belonged.

§. 109. In propriety of speech, (and cer-tainly propriety of speech is necessary in a discourse of this nature) eldest parents signifies either the eldest men and women that have had children, or those who have longest had iffue : and then our author's affertion will be, that those fathers and mothers, who have been longeft in the world, or longeft fruitful, have by divine institution a right to civil power. If there be any absurdity in this, our author must answer for it : and if his meaning be different from my explication, he is to be blamed, that he would not fpeak it plainly. This I am fure, parents cannot fignify heirs male, nor eldest parents an infant child : who yet may fometimes be the true heir, if there can be but one. And we are hereby still as much at a lofs, who civil power belongs to, notwithstanding this assignment by divine institution, as if there had been no fuch affignment at all, or our author had faid nothing of it. This of eldest parents leaving us more in the dark, who by divine institution has a right to civil power, than these who never heard any thing at all of heir, or descent, of which our author is fo full. And though the chief

chief matter of his writing be to teach obedience to those, who have a right to it, which he tells us is conveyed by descent, yet who those are, to whom this right by descent belongs, he leaves, like the philosophers stone in politics, out of the reach of any one to discover from his writings.

§. 110. This obscurity cannot be imputed to want of language in fo great a mafter of ftyle as Sir Robert is, when he is refolved with himfelf what he would fay : and therefore, I fear, finding how hard it would be to fettle rules of defcent by divine inftitution, and how little it would be to his purpose, or conduce to the clearing and eftablishing the titles of princes, if fuch rules of descent were fettled, he chose rather to content himself with doubtful and general terms, which might make no ill found in mens ears, who were willing to be pleafed with them, rather than offer any clear rules of descent of this fatherhood of Adam, by which men's consciences might be satisfied to whom it defcended, and know the perfons who had a right to regal power, and with it to their obedience.

§. 111. How elfe is it poffible, that laying fo much stress, as he does, upon defcent, and Adam's beir, next beir, true beir, he should never tell us what beir means, nor the way to know who the next or true beir is? This, I do not remember, he does any where express

prefly handle; but, where it comes in his way, very warily and doubtfully touches; though it be fo neceffary, that without it all difcourses of government and obedience upon his principles would be to no purpose, and fatherly power, never fo well made out, will be of no use to any body. Hence he tells us, Observations, 244. That not only the conflitution of power in general, but the limitation of it to one kind, (i. c.) monarchy, and the determination of it to the individual perfon and kine of Adam, are all three ordinances of God; neither Eve nor her children could either limit Adam's power, or join others with him; and what was given unto Adam was given in his perfon to bis posterity. Here again our author informs us, that the divine ordinance hath limited the defcent of Adam's monarchical power. To whom ? To Adam's line and posterity, fays our author. A notable limitation, a limitation to all mankind : for if our author can find any one amongst mankind, that is not of the line and posterity of Adam, he may perhaps tell him, who this next heir of Adam is: but for us, I defpair how this limitation of Adam's empire to his line and posterity will help us to find out one beir. This limitation indeed of our author will fave those the labour, who would look for him amongst the race of brutes, if any fuch there were; but will very little contribute to the discovery of one next beir amongst men, though it make a fhort and eafy determination of the question sbout about the descent of Adam's regal power, by telling us, that the line and posterity of Adam is to have it, that is, in plain English, any one may have it, that is, in plain English, any one may have it, fince there is no per-fon living that hath not the title of being of the line and posterity of Adam; and while it keeps there, it keeps within our author's limitation by God's ordinance. Indeed, p. 19. he tells us, that fuch heirs are not only lords of their own children, but of their brethren; whereby, and by the words following, which we shall confider anon, he feems to infinuate, that the eldeft fon is heir; but he no where, that I know, fays it in direct words, but by the inftances of Cain and Jacob, that there follow, we may allow this to be fo far his opinion concerning heirs, that where there are divers children, the eldeft fon has the right to be heir. That primogeniture cannot give any title to paternal power, we have already shewed. That a father may have a natural right to fome kind of power over his children, is eafily granted; but that an elder brother has fo over his brethren, remains to be proved : God or nature has not any where, that I know, placed fuch jurifdiction in the first-born; nor can reason find any such natural fuperiority amongst brethren. The law of Moles gave a double portion of the goods and poffessions to the eldest; but we find not any where that naturally, or by Ged's inflitution, fuperiority or dominion belonged to him, and the inftances there brought by

by our author are but flender proofs of a right to civil power and dominion in the first-born, and do rather shew the contrary.

§. 112. His words are in the forecited place : And therefore we find God told Cain of bis brother Abel; his defire shall be subject unto thee, and thou shalt rule over him. To which I answer,

1. These words of God to Cain, are by many interpreters, with great reason, underflood in a quite different sense than what our author uses them in.

2. Whatever was meant by them, it could not be, that Cain, as elder, had a natural dominion over Abel; for the words are conditional, If thou doft well: and fo perfonal to Cain: and whatever was fignified by them, did depend on his carriage, and not follow his birth-right; and therefore could by no means be an eftablifhment of dominion in the first-born in general: for before this Abel had his diftinct territories by right of private dominion, as our author himfelf confesses. Observations, 210. which he could not have had to the prejudice of the heirs title, if by divine institution, Cain as heir were to inherit all his father's dominion.

3. If this were intended by God as the charter of primogeniture, and the grant of dominion to elder brothers in general as fuch, by right of inheritance, we might expect it should have included all his brethren : for

we may well suppose, Adam, from whom the world was to be peopled, had by this time, that these were grown up to be men, more fons than these two: whereas Abel himself is not fo much as named; and the words in the original can fcarce, with any good conftruction, be applied to him.

4. It is too much to build a doctrine of fo mighty confequence upon fo doubtful and obfcure a place of fcripture, which may be well, nay better, underftood in a quite dif-ferent fenfe, and fo can be but an ill proof, being as doubtful as the thing to be proved by it; especially when there is nothing else in scripture or reason to be sound, that favours or fupports it.

§. 113. It follows, p. 19. Accordingly when Jacob bought his brother's birth-right, Ifaac bleffed him thus; Be lord over thy brethren, and let the fons of thy mother how before thee. Another inftance, I take it, brought by our author to evince dominion due to birth-right, and an admirable one it is: for it must be no ordinary way of reasoning in a man, that is pleading for the natural power of kings, and against all compact, to bring for proof of it, an example, where his own account of it founds all the right upon compact, and fettles empire in the younger brother, unlefs buying and felling be no compact; for he tells us, when Jacob bought his brother's birthright. But passing by that, let us confider the

the hiftory itfelf, with what use our author makes of it, and we shall find these following miftakes about it.

1. That our author reports this, as if Ifaac had given Jacob this bleffing, immediately upon his purchasing the birth-right; for he fays, when Jacob bought, 1 faac bleffed him; which is plainly otherwife in the fcripture: for it appears, there was a distance of time between, and if we will take the ftory in the order it lies, it must be no small distance; all Isaac's fojourning in Gerar, and tranfactions with Abimelech, Gen. xxvi. coming between; Rebecca being then beautiful, and confequently young; but Ifaac, when he bleffed Jacob, was old and decrepit : and Esau allo complains of Jacob, Gen. xxvii. 36. that two times he had supplanted him; He took away my birth-right, fays he, and behold now he hath taken away my bleffing; words, that I think fignify distance of time and difference of action.

2. Another mistake of our author's is, that he supposes Isaac gave Jacob the bleffing, and bid him be lord over his brethren, because he had the birth-right; for our author brings this example to prove, that he that has the birth-right, has thereby a right to be lord over his brethren. But it is also manifest by the text, that Isaac had no confideration of Jacob's having bought the birth-right; for when he bleffed him, he confidered him not 28

as Jacob, but took him for Efau. Nor did Efau understand any such connection between birth-right and the bleffing; for he fays, He hath supplanted me these two times, he took away my birth-right, and behold now he bath taken away my bleffing: whereas had the bleffing, which was to be lord over bis brethren, belonged to the birth-right, Efau could not have complained of this second, as a cheat, Jacob having got nothing but what Efau had fold him, when he fold him his birth-right; fo that it is plain, dominion, if these words fignify it, was not understood to belong to the birth-right.

§. 114. And that in those days of the patriarchs, dominion was not understood to be the right of the heir, but only a greater portion of goods, is plain from Gen. xxi. 10. for Sarah, taking Ifaac to be heir, fays, Cast out this bondwoman and her fon, for the fon of this bondwoman shall not be heir with my fon: whereby could be meant nothing, but that he should not have a pretence to an equal share of his father's estate after his death, but should have his portion presently, and be gone. Accordingly we read, Gen. xxv. 5, 6. That Abraham gave all that he had unto Ifaac, but unto the fons of the concubines which Abraham had, Abraham gave gifts, and fent them away from Ifaac his fon, while he yet lived. That is, Abraham having given portions to all his other fons, and fent them away, away, that which he had referved, being the greatest part of his substance, Ifaac as heir possesses as heir being heir, he had no right to be lord over bis bretbren; for if he had, why should Sarab endeavour to rob him of one of his fubjects, or less the number of his flaves, by defiring to have Is the away?

§. 115. Thus, as under the law, the privilege of birth-right was nothing but a double portion : fo we fee that before Mofes, in the patriarchs time, from whence our author pretends to take his model, there was no knowledge, no thought, that birth-right gave rule or empire, paternal or kingly authority, to any one over his brethren. If this be not plain enough in the flory of Ifaac and Ishmael, he that will look into I Chron. v. 12. may there read thefe words: Reuben was the firstborn; but for a fmuch as he defiled his father's bed, his birth-right was given unto the fons of Joseph, the fon of Israel: and the genealogy is not to be reckoned after the birth-right; for Judah prevailed above his brethren, and of him came the chief ruler; but the birth-right was Joseph's. What this birth-right was, Jacob bleffing Joseph, Gen. xlviii. 22. telleth us in these words, Moreover I have given thee one portion above thy brethren, which I took out of the hand of the Amorite, with my fword and with my how. Whereby it is not only plain, that the birth-right was nothing but a double K 3 portion, portion; but the text in Chronicles is express against our author's doctrine, and shews that dominion was no part of the birth-right; for it tells us, that Joseph had the birth-right, but Judah the dominion. One would think our author were very fond of the very name of birth-right, when he brings this inftance of facob and Efau, to prove that dominion belongs to the heir over his brethren. §. 116. 1. Becaufe it will be but an ill example to prove, that dominion by God's ordination belonged to the eldeft fon, be-caufe Jacob the youngeft here had it, let him come by it how he would: for if it prove any thing, it can only prove, againft our author, that the affignment of dominion to the eldest is not by divine institution, which would then be unalterable: for if by the law of God, or nature, abfolute power and empire belongs to the eldeft fon and his heirs, fo that they are fupreme monarchs, and all the reft of their brethren flaves, our author gives us reason to doubt whether the eldest fon has a power to part with it, to the prejudice of his posterity, fince he tells us, Observations, 158. That in grants and gifts that have their original from God or nature, no inferior power of man can limit, or make any lass of preservation grain a them law of prefcription against them. §. 117. 2. Because this place, Gen. xxvii. 29. brought by our author, concerns not at all the dominion of one brother over the other,

other, nor the fubjection of Esau to Jacob: for it is plain in the history, that Efau was never subject to Jacob, but lived apart in mount Seir, where he founded a distinct people and government, and was himfelf prince over them, as much as Jacob was in his own family. This text, if confidered, can never be underftood of Esau himfelf, or the perfonal dominion of Jacob over him : for the words brethren and fons of thy mother, could not be used literally by Ifaac, who knew Jacob had only one brother; and these words are fo far from being true in a literal fense, or establishing any dominion in Jacob over Esau, that in the ftory we find the quite contrary, for Gen. xxxii. Jacob feveral times calls Efau lord, and himfelf his fervant; and Gen. xxxiii. he bowed himself seven times to the ground to Esau. Whether Esau then were a fubject and vaffal (nay, as our author tells us, all fubjects are flaves) to facob, and facob his fovereign prince by birth-right, I leave the reader to judge; and to believe if he can, that these words of Isaac, Be lord over thy brethren, and let thy mother's fons bow down to thee, confirmed Jacob in a fovereignty over Esau, upon the account of the birth-right he had got from him.

§. 118. He that reads the flory of Jacob and Efau, will find there was never any jurifdiction or authority, that either of them had over the other after their father's death : they K 4 lived 126 lived with the friendship and equality of brethren, neither lord, neither flave to his bro-ther; but independent each of other, were both heads of their diffinct families, where they received no laws from one another, but lived feparately, and were the roots out of which fprang two diftinct people under two diftinct governments. This bleffing then of Isaac, whereon our author would build the dominion of the elder brother, fignifies no more, but what Rebecca had been told from God, Gen. xxv. 23. Two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people shall be se-parated from thy bowels, and the one people shall be stronger than the other people, and the elder shall ferve the younger; and fo Jacob bleffed Judah, Gen. xlix. and gave him the scepter and dominion, from whence our author might have argued as well, that jurifdiction and dominion belongs to the third fon over his brethren, as well as from this bleffing of Ifaac, that it belonged to facob: both these places contain only predictions of what fhould long after happen to their posterities, and not any declaration of the right of inheritance to dominion in either. And thus we have our author's two great and only arguments to prove, that heirs are lords over their brethren.

1. Becaufe God tells Cain, Gén. iv. that however fin might fet upon him, he ought or might be matter of it: for the most learned interpreters interpreters underftood the words of fin, and not of Abel, and give fo ftrong reafons for it, that nothing can convincingly be inferred, from fo doubtful a text, to our author's purpofe.

2. Because in this of Gen. xxvii. Isaac foretels that the Israelites, the posterity of Jacob, should have dominion over the Edomites, the posterity of Esau; therefore fays our author, heirs are lords of their brethren: I leave any one to judge of the conclusion.

§. 119. And now we fee how our author has provided for the defcending, and conveyance down of Adam's monarchical power, or paternal dominion to posterity, by the inheritance of his beir, fucceeding to all his father's authority, and becoming upon his death as much lord as his father was, not only over his own children, but over his brethren, and all defcended from his father, and fo in infinitum. But yet who this heir is, he does not once tell us; and all the light we have from him in this fo fundamental a point, is only, that in his inftance of Jacob, by using the word birth-right, as that which passed from Efau to facob, he leaves us to guess, that by heir, he means the eldest fon; though I do not remember he any where mentions expresly the title of the first-born, but all along keeps himfelf under the shelter of the indefinite term beir. But taking it to be his meaning, that the eldeft fon is heir, (for

(for if the eldeft be not, there will be no pretence why the fons should not be all beirs alike) and fo by right of primogeniture has dominion over his brethren; this is but one ftep towards the fettlement of fucceffion, and the difficulties remain still as much as ever, till he can fhew us who is meant by right heir, in all those cases which may happen where the prefent poffessor hath no fon. This he filently paffes over, and perhaps wifely too: for what can be wifer, after one has affirmed, that the perfon having that power, as well as the power and form of government, is the ordinance of God, and by divine institu-tion, vid. Observations, 254. p. 12. than to be careful, not to flart any question con-cerning the person, the resolution whereof will certainly lead him into a confession, that God and nature hath determined nothing about him? And if our author cannot shew who by right of nature, or a clear positive law of God, has the next right to inherit the dominion of this natural monarch he has been at fuch pains about, when he died without a fon, he might have fpared his pains in all the reft, it being more neceffary for the fettling men's confciences, and determining their fubjection and allegiance, to fhew them who by original right, fuperior and antecedent to the will, or any act of men, hath a title to this paternal jurifdiction, than it is to fhew that by nature there was fuch fuch a jurifdiction; it being to no purpose for me to know there is such a paternal power, which I ought, and am disposed to obey, unless, where there are many pretenders, I also know the person that is rightfully invested and endowed with it.

§. 120. For the main matter in question being concerning the duty of my obedience, and the obligation of confcience I am under to pay it to him that is of right my lord and ruler, I must know the perion that this right of paternal power refides in, and fo impowers him to claim obedience from me : for let it be true what he fays, p. 12. That civil power not only in general is by divine institution, but even the assignment of it specially to the eldest parents; and Observations, 254. That not only the power or right of go-vernment, but the form of the power of go-verning, and the person baving that power, are all the ordinance of God; yet unless he shew us in all cafes who is this perfon, ordained by God, who is this eldest parent; all his abftract notions of monarchical power will fignify just nothing, when they are to be reduced to practice, and men are confcientioufly to pay their obedience : for paternal jurifdiction being not the thing to be obeyed, becaufe it cannot command, but is only that which gives one man a right which another hath not, and if it come by inheritance, another man cannot have, to command and be

be obeyed; it is ridiculous to fay, I pay obedience to the paternal power, when I obey him, to whom paternal power gives no right to my obedience: for he can have no divine right to my obedience, who cannot fhew his divine right to the power of ruling over me, as well as that by divine right there is fuch a power in the world.

§. 121. And hence not being able to make out any prince's title to government, as heir to Adam, which therefore is of no use, and had been better let alone, he is fain to refolve all into prefent possession, and makes civil obedience as due to an usurper, as to a lawful king; and thereby the usurper's title as good. His words are, Observations, 253. and they deferve to be remembered: If an usurper dis-possible the true beir, the subjects obedience to the fatherly power must go along, and wait upon God's providence. But I shall leave his title of ulurpers to be examined in its due place, and defire my fober reader to confider what thanks princes owe fuch politics as this, which can suppose paternal power (i. e.) a right to government in the hands of a Cade, or a Cromwell; and fo all obedience being due to paternal power, the obedience of fubjects will be due to them, by the fame right, and upon as good grounds, as it is to lawful princes; and yet this, as dangerous a doctrine as it is, must necessarily follow from making all political power to be nothing else, but Adam's

Adam's paternal power by right and divine inflitution, defcending from him without being able to fhew to whom it defcended, or who is heir to it.

§. 122. To fettle government in the world, and to lay obligations to obedience on any man's confcience, it is as neceffary (fuppofing with our author that all power be nothing but the being poffeffed of Adam's fatherhood) to fatisfy him, who has a right to this power, this fatherhood, when the possefor dies without fons to fucceed immediately to it, as it was to tell him, that upon the death of the father, the eldest fon had a right to it : for it is still to be remembered, that the great question is, (and that which our author would be thought to contend for, if he did not fometimes forget it) what perfons have a right to be obeyed, and not whether there be a power in the world, which is to be called paternal, without knowing in whom it refides : for fo it be a power, i. e. right to govern, it matters not, whether it be termed paternal or regal, natural or ac-quired; whether you call it fupreme fatherbood, or fupreme brotherhood, will be all one, provided we know who has it.

§. 123. I go on then to alk, whether in the inheriting of this paternal power, this fupreme fatherhood, the grandfon by a daughter hath a right before a nephew by a brother? Whether the grandfon by the eldeft fon, being an infant, 142

infant, before the younger fon, a man and able? Whether the daughter before the uncle? or any other man, descended by a male line? Whether a grandfon by a younger daughter, before a grand-daughter by an elder daughter? Whether the elder fon by a concubine, before a younger fon by a wife? From whence alfo will arife many queftions of legitimation, and what in nature is the difference betwixt a wife and a concubine? for as to the municipal or positive laws of men, they can fignify nothing here. It may farther be asked, Whether the eldest fon, being a fool, shall inherit this paternal power, before the younger, a wife man? and what degree of folly it muft be that fhall ex-clude him? and who fhall be judge of it? Whether the fon of a fool, excluded for his folly, before the fon of his wife brother who reigned? Who has the paternal power whilft the widow-queen is with child by the deceafed king, and no body knows whether it will be a fon or a daughter ? Which shall be heir of the two male-twins, who by the diffection of the mother were laid open to the world? Whether a fifter by the half blood, before a brother's daughter by the whole blood ?

§. 124. Thefe, and many more fuch doubts, might be proposed about the titles of fucceffion, and the right of inheritance; and that not as idle speculations, but fuch as in history history we shall find have concerned the inheritance of crowns and kingdoms; and if our's want them, we need not go farther for famous examples of it, than the other kingdom in this very island, which having been fully related by the ingenious and learned author of Patriarcha non Monarcha, I need fay no more of. Till our author hath refolved all the doubts that may arife about the next heir, and shewed that they are plainly determined by the law of nature, or the revealed. law of God, all his suppositions of a monarchical, abfolute, fupreme, paternal power in Adam, and the descent of that power to his heirs, would not be of the least use to establish the authority, or make out the title, of any one prince now on earth; but would rather unfettle and bring all into queftion : for let our author tell us as long as he pleafes, and let all men believe it too, that Adam had a paternal, and thereby a monarchical power; that this (the only power in the world) defcended to his heirs; and that there is no other power in the world but this : let this be all as clear demonstration, as it is manifest error, yet if it be not past doubt, to whom this paternal power defcends, and whose now it is, no body can be under any obligation of obedience, unless any one will fay, that I am bound to pay obedience to paternal power in a man who has no more paternal power than I myfelf; which is all one as to fay, I obey a man, because he has a right to govern; and

and if I be asked, how I know he has a right to govern, I should answer, it cannot be known, that he has any at all: for that cannot be the reason of my obedience, which I know not to be so; much less can that be a reason of my obedience, which no body at all can know to be so.

§. 125. And therefore all this ado about Adam's fatherhood, the greatness of its power, and the neceffity of its fuppofal, helps nothing to establish the power of those that govern, or to determine the obedience of subjects who are to obey, if they cannot tell whom they are to obey, or it cannot be known who are to govern, and who to obey. In the ftate the world is now, it is irrecoverably ignorant, who is Adam's heir. This fatherbood, this monarchical power of Adam, defcending to his heirs, would be of no more use to the government of mankind, than it would be to the quieting of mens confciences, or fecuring their healths, if our author had affured them, that Adam had a power to forgive fins, or cure difeafes, which by divine institution defcended to his heir, whilst this heir is impoffible to be known. And fhould not he do as rationally, who upon this affurance of our author went and confeffed his fins, and expected a good absolution; or took physic with expectation of health, from any one who had taken on himfelf the name of prieft or phyfician, or thrust himself into thole employments, faying, I acquiesce in the I the abfolving power defcending from Adam, or I shall be cured by the medicinal power defcending from Adam; as he who says, I submit to and obey the paternal power defcending from Adam, when it is confessed all these powers defcend only to his single heir, and that heir is unknown?

§. 126. It is true, the civil lawyers have pretended to determine fome of these cases concerning the fucceffion of princes; but by our author's principles, they have meddled in a matter that belongs not to them : for if all political power be derived only from Adam, and be to defcend only to his fucceffive heirs, by the ordinance of God and divine institution, this is a right antecedent and paramount to all government; and therefore the politive laws of men cannot determine that, which is itfelf the foundation of all law and government, and is to receive its rule only from the law of God and nature. And that being filent in the cafe, I am apt to think there is no fuch right to be conveyed this way : I am fure it would be to no purpole if there were, and men would be more at a lois concerning government, and obedience to governors, than if there were no fuch right; fince by politive laws and compact, which divine institution (if there be any) shuts out, all these endless inextricable doubts can be safely provided against: but it can never be understood, how a divine natural right, and that of fuch moment as is all order and peace in the world, fhould be conveyed Ŧ.

veyed down to pofterity, without any plain natural or divine rule concerning it. And there would be an end of all civil government, if the affignment of civil power were by divine inftitution to the heir, and yet by that divine inftitution the perfon of the heir could not be known. This paternal regal power being by divine right only his, it leaves no room for human prudence, or confent, to place it any where elfe; for if only one man hath a divine right to the obedience of mankind, no body can claim that obedience, but he that can fhew that right; nor can men's confciences by any other pretence be obliged to it. And thus this doctrine cuts up all government by the roots.

§. 127. Thus we fee how our author, laying it for a fure foundation, that the very perfon that is to rule, is the ordinance of God, and by divine inflitution, tells us at large, only that this perfon is the heir, but who this heir is, he leaves us to guess; and fo this divine institution, which affigns it to a perfon whom we have no rule to know, is just as good as an affignment to no body at all. But whatever our author does, divine inflitution makes no fuch ridiculous affignments : nor can God be fupposed to make it a facred law, that one certain person should have a right to something, and yet not give rules to mark out, and know that perfon by, or give an heir a divine right to power, and yet not point out who that heir is. It is rather to be thought, that an beir beir had no fuch right by divine inflitution, than that God fhould give fuch a right to the beir, but yet leave it doubtful and undeterminable who fuch heir is.

§. 128. If God had given the land of Canaan to Abraham, and in general terms to fome body after him, without naming his feed, whereby it might be known who that fomebody was, it would have been as good and useful an affignment, to determine the right to the land of Canaan, as it would be the determining the right of crowns, to give empire to Adam and his fucceffive heirs after him, without telling who his heir is: for the word heir, without a rule to know who it is, fignifies no more than fome body, I know not whom. God making it a divine institution, that men should not marry those who were near of kin, thinks it not enough to fay, None of you shall approach to any that is near of kin to him, to uncover their nakednefs; but moreover, gives rules to know who are those near of kin, forbidden by divine infitution; or elfe that law would have been of no ufe, it being to no purpofe to lay re-ftraint, or give privileges to men, in fuch general terms, as the particular perfon concerned cannot be known by. But God not having any where faid, the next heir shall inherit all his father's eftate or dominion, we are not to wonder, that he hath no where appointed who that heir fhould be ; for never having intended any fuch thing, never defigned 1. 2

figned any heir in that fense, we cannot expect he should any where nominate, or appoint any perfon to it, as we might, had it been otherwife. And therefore in scripture, though the word heir occur, yet there is no fuch thing as heir in our author's fenfe, one that was by right of nature to inherit all that his father had, exclusive of his brethren. Hence Sarab fuppofes, that if Ishmael staid in the house, to share in Abraham's estate after his death, this fon of a bond-woman might be heir with Ifaac ; and therefore, fays fhe, cast out this bond-woman and her son, for the son of this bond-woman shall not be heir with my fon: but this cannot excuse our author, who telling us there is, in every number of men, one who is right and next beir to Adam, ought to have told us what the laws of defcent are: but he, having been fo fparing to inftruct us by rules, how to know who is heir, let us fee in the next place, what his hiftory out of fcripture, on which he pretends wholly to build his government, gives us in this necessary and fundamental point.

§. 129. Our author, to make good the title of his book, p. 13. begins his hiftory of the descent of Adam's regal power, p. 13. in these words: This lord/hip which Adam by command had over the whole world, and by right descending from him, the patriarchs did enjoy, was a large, &c. How does he prove that the patriarchs by descent did enjoy it?

for dominion of life and death, fays he, we find Judah the father pronounced fentence of death against Thamar bis daughter in law for playing the harlot, p. 13. How does this prove that Judah had abfolute and fovereign authority? be pronounced fentence of death. The pronoun-cing of fentence of death is not a certain mark of fovereignty, but ufually the office of inferior magistrates. The power of making laws of life and death is indeed a mark of fovereignty, but pronouncing the fentence according to those laws may be done by others, and therefore this will but ill prove that he had fovereign authority: as if one fhould fay, Judge Jefferies pronounced fen-tence of death in the late times, therefore Judge Jefferies had fovereign authority. But it will be faid, Judah did it not by com-miffion from another, and therefore did it in his own right. Who knows whether he had any right at all? Heat of paffion might carry him to do that which he had no authority to do. Judab had dominion of life and death : how does that appear ? He exercifed it, he pronounced fentence of death against Thamar: our author thinks it is very good proof, that because he did it, therefore he had a right to do it : he lay with her also: by the fame way of proof, he had a right to do that If the confequence be good from dotoo, ing to a right of doing, Abfalom too may be reckoned amongst our author's fovereigns, Ĺ3 reigns, for he pronounced fuch a fentence of death againft his brother Amnon, and much upon a like occasion, and had it executed too, if that be fufficient to prove a dominion of life and death.

But allowing this all to be clear demonfiration of fovereign power, who was it that had this lord/hip by right defcending to him from Adam, as large and ample as the abfolutest dominion of any monarch? Judah, fays our author, Judah a younger fon of Jacob, his father and elder brethren living; fo that if our author's own proof be to be taken, a younger brother may, in the life of his father and elder brothers, by right of descent, enjoy Adam's monarchical power; and if one fo qualified may be monarch by descent, why may not every man? if Judah, his father and elder brother living, were one of Adam's heirs, I know not who can be excluded from this inheritance; all men by inheritance may be monarchs as well as Judah.

§. 130. Touching war, we fee that Abraham commanded an army of 318 foldiers of his own family, and Efau met his brother Jacob with 400 men at arms: for matter of peace, Abraham made a league with Abimelech, &c. p. 13. Is it not possible for a man to have 318 men in his family, without being heir to Adam? A planter in the West Indies has more, and might, if he pleased, (who doubts?) muster them up and lead them out againft against the Indians, to seek reparation upon any injury received from them; and all this without the absolute dominion of a monarch, descending to him from Adam. Would it not be an admirable argument to prove, that all power by God's institution descended from Adam by inheritance, and that the very perfon and power of this planter were the ordi-nance of God, because he had power in his family over servants, born in his house, and bought with his money? For this was just Abraham's cafe; those who were rich in the patriarch's days, as in the West Indies now, bought men and maid fervants, and by their increase, as well as purchasing of new, came to have large and numerous families, which though they made use of in war or peace, can it be thought the power they had over them was an inheritance descended from Adam, when it was the purchase of their money? A man's riding in an expedition against an enemy, his horse bought in a fair would be as good a proof that the owner enjoyed the lordship which Adam by command had over the whole world, by right descending to him, as Abraham's leading out the fervants of his family is, that the patriarchs enjoyed this lordship by defcent from Adam: fince the title to the power, the master had in both cafes, whether over flaves or horfes, was only from his purchase; and the getting a dominion over any thing by bargain and money, L 4

§. 134. To give our author the honour of this new invention, for I confess it is not I have first found it out by tracing his principles, and to charged it on him, it is fit my readers know that (as abfurd as it may feem) he teaches it himfelf, p. 23. where he ingenuoufly fays, In all kingdoms and commonwealths in the world, whether the prince be the supreme father of the people, or but the true heir to fuch a father, or come to the crown by usurpation or election, or whether some few or a multitude govern the common-wealth; yet still the authority that is in any one, or in many, or in all these, is the only right, and natural au-thority of a supreme father; which right of fatherhood, he often tells us, is regal and royal authority; as particularly, p. 12. the page immediately preceding this instance of Abrabam. This regal authorisy, he fays, those that govern common-wealths have; and if it be true, that regal and royal authority be in those that govern common-wealths, it is as true that common-wealths are governed by kings; for if regal authority be in him that governs, he that governs must needs be a king, and so all common-wealths are nothing but down-right monarchies; and then what need any more ado about the matter? The governments of the world are as they should be, there is nothing but monarchy in it. This, without doubt, was the furest way our author could have found, to turn all other of difpofing those to exercise or cease acts of enmity for whom he makes it; and this power in many cases any one may have without any politic supremacy: and therefore the making of war or peace will not prove that every one that does so is a politic ruler, much less a king; for then common-wealths must be kings too, for they do as certainly make war and peace as monarchical government.

§. 133. But granting this a mark of fove-reignty in Abraham, is it a proof of the defcent to him of Adam's fovereignty over the whole world? If it be, it will furely be as good a proof of the defcent of Adam's lord/hip to others too. And then common-wealths, as well as Abraham, will be heirs of Adam, for they make war and peace, as well as he. If you fay, that the lordship of Adam doth not by right defcend to common-wealths, though they make war and peace, the fame fay I of Abraham, and then there is an end of your argument : if you ftand to your argument, and fay those that do make war and peace, as common-wealths do without doubt, do inherit Adam's lord/bip, there is an end of your monarchy, unlefs you will fay, that common-wealths by defcent enjoying Adam's lordship are monarchies; and that indeed would be a new way of making all the governments in the world monarchical.

§. 134. To give our author the honour of this new invention, for I confess it is not I have first found it out by tracing his prin-ciples, and so charged it on him, it is fit my readers know that (as abfurd as it may feem) he teaches it himfelf, p. 23. where he in-genuoufly fays, In all kingdoms and commonwealths in the world, whether the prince be the supreme father of the people, or but the true heir to fuch a father, or come to the crown by ufurpation or election, or whether some few or a multitude govern the common-wealth; yet still the authority that is in any one, or in many, or in all these, is the only right, and natural authe an interest in the only right, which right of the father bood, he often tells us, is regal and royal authority; as particularly, p. 12. the page immediately preceding this inftance of Abrabam. This regal authorisy, he fays, those that govern common-wealths have; and if it be true, that regal and royal authority be in those that govern common-wealths, it is as true that common-wealths are governed by kings; for if regal authority be in him that governs, he that governs must needs be a king, and fo all common-wealths are nothing but down-right monarchies; and then what need any more ado about the matter? The governments of the world are as they should be, there is nothing but monarchy in it. This, without doubt, was the fureft way our author could have found, to turn all other

other governments, but monarchical, out of the world.

§. 135. But all this fcarce proves Abra-ham to have been a king as heir to Adam. If by inheritance he had been king, Lot, who was of the fame family, must needs have been his subject, by that title, before the fervants in his family; but we see they lived as friends and equals, and when their herdimen could not agree, there was no pretence of jurifdiction or fuperiority between them, but they parted by confent, Gen. xiii. hence he is called both by Abraham, and by the text, Abraham's brother, the name of friendship and equality, and not of jurifdiction and authority, though he were really but his nephew. And if our author knows that Abraham was Adam's heir, and a king, it was more, it feems, than Abraham himfelf knew, or his fervant whom he fent a wooing for his fon; for when he fets out the advantages of the match, xxiv. Gen. 35. thereby to prevail with the young woman and her friends, he fays, I am Abraham's fervant, and the lord hath bleffed my master greatly, and he is become great; and he hath given him flocks and herds, and filver and gold, and men-fervants and maid-fervants, and camels and affes; and Sarah, my master's wife, bare a son to my master when fhe was old, and unto him hath he given all he bath. Can one think that a difcreet fervant, that was thus particular to fet out his mafter's greatness, greatness, would have omitted the crown Isac was to have, if he had known of any fuch? Can it be imagined he should have neglected to have told them on such an occassion as this, that Abraham was a king, a name well known at that time, for he had nine of them his neighbours, if he or his master had thought any such thing, the likeliest matter of all the rest, to make his errand successful?

§. 136. But this discovery it seems was referved for our author to make 2 or 3000 years after, and let him enjoy the credit of it; only he should have taken care that some of Adam's land should have descended to this his beir, as well as all Adam's lordship : for though this lordship which Abraham, (if we may believe our author) as well as the other patriarchs, by right descending to him, did enjoy, was as large and ample as the absolutest dominion of any monarch which hath been fince the creation; yet his estate, his territories, his dominions were very narrow and fcanty, for he had not the possession of a foot of land, till he bought a field and a cave of the fons of Heth to bury Sarah in.

§. 137. The inftance of Efau joined with this of Abraham, to prove that the lord/hip which Adam had over the whole world, by right descending from him, the patriarchs did enjoy, is yet more pleasant than the former. Efau met his brother Jacob with 400 men at arms; he i therefore therefore was a king by right of heir to Adam. Four hundred armed men then, however got together, are enough to prove him that leads them, to be a king and Adam's heir. There have been tories in Ireland, (whatever there are in other countries) who would have thanked our author for fo honourable an opinion of them, especially if there had been no body near with a better title of 500 armed men, to question their royal authority of 400. It is a shame for men to trifle so, to say no worse of it, in so serious an argument. Here Esau is brought as a proof that Adam's lordship, Adam's absolute dominion, as large as that of any monarch, descended by right to the patriarchs, and in this very chap. p. 19. Jacob is brought as an inftance of one, that by birth-right was lord over his brethren. So we have here two brothers absolute monarchs by the fame title, and at the fame time heirs to Adam; the eldeft, heir to Adam, because he met his brother with 400 men; and the youngest, heir to Adam by birth-right : Efau enjoyed the lordship which Adam had over the whole world by right descending to him, in as large and ample manner, as the absolutest dominion of any monarch; and at the fame time, Jacob lord over him, by the right heirs have to be lords over their bretbren. Rifum teneatis? I never, I confels, met with any man of parts fo dexterous as Sir Robert at this way of arguing: but it was his misfortune to light light upon an bypothefis, that could not be accommodated to the nature of things, and human affairs; his principles could not be made to agree with that conftitution and order, which God had fettled in the world, and therefore must needs often clash with common fenfe and experience.

§. 138. In the next fection, he tells us, This patriarchal power continued not only till the flood, but after it, as the name patriarch doth in part prove. The word patriarch doth more than in part prove, that patriarchal power continued in the world as long as there were patriarchs, for it is neceffary that patriarchal power should be whilst there are patriarchs; as it is necessary there should be paternal or conjugal power whilst there are fathers or husbands; but this is but playing with names. That which he would fallacioufly infinuate is the thing in queftion to be proved, viz. that the lordship which Adam had over the world, the supposed absolute universal dominion of Adam by right descending from him, the patriarchs did enjoy. If he affirms fuch an abfolute monarchy continued to the flood, in the world, I would be glad to know what records he has it from; for I confess I cannot find a word of it in my Bible : if by patriarchal power he means any thing elfe, it is nothing to the matter in hand. And how the name patriarch in some part proves, that those, who are called by that name, name, had abfolute monarchical power, I confefs, I do not fee, and therefore I think needs no answer till the argument from it be made out a little clearer.

§. 139. The three fons of Noah had the world, fays our author, divided amongst them by their father, for of them was the whole world overspread, p. 14. The world might be overfpread by the offspring of Noah's fons, though he never divided the world amongst them ; for the earth might be replenished without being divided : fo that all our author's argument here proves no fuch division. However, I allow it to him, and then ask, the world being divided amongst them, which of the three was Adam's heir? If Adam's lordship, Adam's monarchy, by right descended only to the eldest, then the other two could be but his fubjects, his flaves: if by right it descended to all three brothers, by the fame right, it will defcend to all mankind; and then it will be impoffible what he fays, p. 19. that heirs are lords of their brethren, should be true; but all brothers, and confequently all men, will be equal and independent, all heirs to Adam's monarchy, and confequently all monarchs too, one as much as another. But it will be faid, Noah their father divided the world amongst them; fo that our author will allow more to Noah, than he will to God almighty, for Observations, 211. he thought it hard, that God himfelf should give the world to Noab and his fons, to the prejudice of Noab's birthright : 2

tight: his words are, Noab was left fole beir to the world: why should it be thought that God would difinherit him of his birth-right, and make bim, of all men in the world, the only tenant in common with bis children? and yet here he thinks it fit that Noab should difinherit Shem of his birth-right, and divide the world betwixt him and his brethren; so that this birthright, when our author pleases, must, and when he pleases must not, be sacred and inviolable.

§. 140. If Noah did divide the world between his fons, and his affignment of dominions to them were good, there is an end of divine inftitution; all our author's discourse of Adam's heir, with whatfoever he builds on it, is quite out of doors; the natural power of kings falls to the ground; and then the form of the power governing, and the perfon having that power, will not be (as he fays they arc, Observations, 254.) the ordinance of God, but they will be ordinances of man: for if the right of the heir be the ordinance of God, a divine right, no man, father or not father, can alter it: if it be not a divine right, it is only human, depending on the will of man : and fo where human inftitution gives it not, the first-born has no right at all above his brethren; and men may put government into what hands, and under what form, they pleafe.

§. 141. He goes on, Most of the civilest nations of the earth labour to fetch their original from

from some of the sons, or nephews of Noah, p. 14. How many do most of the civilest nations amount to? and who are they? I fear the Chinefes, a very great and civil people, as well as feveral other people of the Eaft, West, North and South, trouble not themfelves much about this matter. All that believe the Bible, which I believe are our author's most of the civilest nations, must neceffarily derive themfelves from Noah; but for the reft of the world, they think little of his fons or nephews. But if the heralds and antiquaries of all nations, for it is thefe men generally that labour to find out the originals of nations, or all the nations themfelves, should labour to fetch their original from fome of the fons or nephews of Noah, what would this be to prove, that the lord/hip which Adam had over the whole world, by right defcended to the patriarchs ? Whoever, nations, or races of men, labour to fetch their original from, may be concluded to be thought by them, men of renown, famous to posterity, for the greatness of their virtues and actions; but beyond these they look not, nor confider who they were heirs to, but look on them as fuch as raised themselves, by their own virtue, to a degree that would give a luftre to those who in future ages could pretend to derive themselves from them. But if it were Ogyges, Hercules, Brama, Tamberlain, Pharamond; nay, if Jupiter and Saturn were the names, from M from whence divers races of men, both ancient and modern, have laboured to derive their original; will that prove, that those men enjoyed the lordship of Adam, by right descending to them? If not, this is but a flourish of our author's to mislead his reader, that in itself fignifies nothing.

§. 142. To as much purpose is what he tells us, p. 15. concerning this division of the world, That fome fay it was by Lot, and others that Noah failed round the Mediterreanean in ten years, and divided the world into Afia, Afric and Europe, portions for his three fons. America then, it feems, was left to be his that could catch it. Why our author takes fuch pains to prove the division of the world by Noab to his fons, and will not leave out an imagination, though no better than a dream, that he can find any where to favour it, is hard to guess, fince such a di-vision, if it prove any thing, must necessarily take away the title of Adam's heir; unless three brothers can all together be heirs of Adam; and therefore the following words, Howfoever the manner of this division be uncertain, yet it is most certain the division itself was by families from Noah and his children, over which the parents were heads and princes, p. 15. if allowed him to be true, and of any force to prove, that all the power in the world is nothing but the lordship of Adam's defcending by right, they will only prove, that the

the fathers of the children are all heirs to this lordship of Adam: for if in those days Cham and Japhet, and other parents, befides the eldeft fon, were heads and princes over their families, and had a right to divide the earth by families, what hinders younger brothers, being fathers of families, from having the fame right? If Cham and Japhet were princes by right defcending to them, not-withftanding any title of heir in their eldeft brother, younger brothers by the fame right defcending to them are princes now; and fo all our author's natural power of kings will reach no farther than their own children, and no kingdom, by this natural right, can be bigger than a family : for either this lordship of Adam over the whole world, by right defcends only to the eldeft fon, and then there can be but one heir, as our author fays, p. 19. or elfe, it by right descends to all the fons equally, and then every father of a family will have it, as well as the three fons of Noab : take which you will, it deftroys the prefent governments and kingdoms, that are now in the world, fince whoever has this natural power of a king, by right defcending to him, must have it, either as our author tells us Cain had it, and be lord over his brethren, and to be alone king of the whole world; or elfe, as he tells us here, Shem, Cham and Japhet had it, three brothers, and fo be only prince of his own family, and all M 2 families families independent one of another: all the world must be only one empire by the right of the next heir, or elfe every family be a diffinct government of itself, by the lord/bip of Adam's defcending to parents of families. And to this only tend all the proofs he here gives us of the descent of Adam's lordship: for continuing his story of this descent, he fays,

S. 143. In the differ fion of Babel, we must certainly find the establishment of royal power, throughout the kingdoms of the world, p. 14. If you must find it, pray do, and you will help us to a new piece of history: but you must shew it us before we shall be bound to history. believe, that regal power was established in believe, that regal power was established in the world upon your principles: for, that regal power was established in the kingdoms of the world, I think no body will dispute; but that there should be kingdoms in the world, whose feveral kings enjoyed their crowns, by right descending to them from Adam, that we think not only apocryphal, but also utterly impossible. If our author has no better foundation for his monarchy than a better foundation for his monarchy than a supposition of what was done at the dispersion of Babel, the monarchy he erects thereon, whofe top is to reach to heaven to unite mankind, will ferve only to divide and fcatter them as that tower did; and, instead of establifhing civil government and order in the world, will produce nothing but confusion.

§. 144. For he tells us, the nations they were divided into, were distinct families, which had fathers for rulers over them; whereby it appears, that even in the confusion, God was eareful to preferve the fatherly authority, by distributing the diversity of languages according to the diversity of families, p. 14. It would have been a hard matter for any one but our author to have found out fo plainly, in the text he here brings, that all the nations in that difperfion were governed by fathers, and that God was careful to preferve the fatherly authority. The words of the text are; Thefe are the fons of Shem after their families, after their tongues in their lands, after their nations; and the fame thing is faid of Cham and Japhet, after an enumeration of their poherities; in all which there is not one word faid of their governors, or forms of government; of fathers, or fatherly authority. But our author, who is very quick fighted to fpy out fatherhood, where no body elfe could fee any the least glimpses of it, tells us positively their rulers were fathers, and God was careful to preferve the fatherly authority; and why? Because those of the same family spoke the fame language, and fo of neceffity in the division kept together. Just as if one should argue thus : Hanibal in his army, confifting of divers nations, kept those of the fame language together; therefore fathers were captains of each band, and Hanibal was careful of

of the fatherly authority: or in peopling of Carolina, the English, French, Scotch and Welch that are there, plant themselves together, and by them the country is divided in their lands after their tongues, after their families, after their nations; therefore care was taken of the fatherly authority: or because, in many parts of America, every little tribe was a diftinct people, with a different language, one should infer, that therefore God was careful to preserve the fatherly authority, or that therefore their rulers enjoyed Adam's lordship by right descending to them, though we know not who were their governors, nor what their form of government, but only that they were divided into little independent focieties, speaking different languages.

§. 145. The fcripture fays not a word of their rulers or forms of government, but only gives an account, how mankind came to be divided into diffinct languages and nations; and therefore it is not to argue from the authority of fcripture, to tell us politively, fathers were their rulers, when the fcripture fays no fuch thing; but to fet up fancies of one's own brain, when we confidently aver matter of fact, where records are utterly filent. Upon a like ground, i. e. none at all, he fays, That they were not confufed multitudes without beads and governors, and at liberty to choofe what governors or governments they pleafed.

§. 146. For I demand, when mankind were all yet of one language, all congregated in the plain of Shinar, were they then all under one monarch, who enjoyed the lordship of Adam by right descending to him? If they were not, there were then no thoughts, it is plain, of Adam's beir, no right to government known then upon that title; no care taken, by God or man, of Adam's fatherly authority. If when mankind were but one people, dwelt all together, and were of one language, and were upon building a city together; and when it was plain, they could not but know the right heir, for Shem lived till Ifaac's time, a long while after the division at Babel; if then, I fay, they were not under the monarchical government of Adam's fatherhood, by right descending to the heir, it is plain there was no regard had to the fatherhood, no monarchy acknowledged due to Adam's beir, no empire of Shem's in Afia, and confequently no fuch division of the world by Noah, as our author has talked of. As far as we can conclude any thing from fcripture in this matter, it feems from this place, that if they had any government, it was rather a common-wealth than an absolute monarchy: for the scripture tells us, Gen. xi. They faid: it was not a prince commanded the building of this city and tower, it was not by the command of one monarch, but by the confultation of many, a free people ; let us build M 4 us, us a city: they built it for themselves as free-men, not as flaves for their lord and master: that we be not fcattered abroad; having a city once built, and fixed habitations to fettle our abodes and families. This was the confultation and defign of a people, that were at liberty to part afunder, but defired to keep in one body, and could not have been either neceffary or likely in men tied together under the government of one monarch, who if they had been, as our author tells us, all flaves under the absolute dominion of a monarch. needed not have taken fuch care to hinder themselves from wandering out of the reach of his dominion. I demand whether this be not plainer in scripture than any thing of Adam's heir or fatherly authority? §. 147. But if being, as God says, Gen.

§. 147. But if being, as God fays, Gen. xi. 6. one people, they had one ruler, one king by natural right, abfolute and fupreme over them, what care had God to preferve the paternal authority of the fupreme fatherbood, if on a fudden he fuffer 72 (for fo many our author talks of) diftinct nations to be erected out of it, under diftinct governors, and at once to withdraw themfelves from the obedience of their fovereign ? This is to intitle God's care how, and to what we pleafe. Can it be fenfe to fay, that God was careful to preferve the fatherly authority in those who had it not ? for if these were fubjects under a fupreme prince, what authority had they? Was it an inftance instance of God's care to preferve the fatherly authority, when he took away the true fupreme fatherhood of the natural monarch? Can it be reason to say, that God, for the prefervation of fatherly authority, lets feveral new governments with their governors flart up, who could not all have *fatherly autho-*rity? And is it not as much reafon to fay, that God is careful to deftroy *fatherly autho*rity, when he fuffers one, who is in posseffion of it, to have his government torn in pieces, and thared by feveral of his fubjects? Would it not be an argument just like this, for monarchical government, to fay, when any monarchy was shattered to pieces, and divided amongst revolted subjects, that God was careful to preferve monarchical power, by rending a fettled empire into a multitude of little governments? If any one will fay, that what happens in providence to be preferved, God is careful to preferve as a thing therefore to be efteemed by men as necessary or useful, it is a peculiar propriety of fpeech, which every one will not think fit to imitate : but this I am fure is impoffible to be either proper, or true fpeaking, that Shem, for example, (for he was then alive,) fhould have fatherly authority, or fovereignty by right of fatherhood, over that one people at Babel, and that the next mo-ment, Shem yet living, 72 others fhould have fatherly authority, or fovereignty by right of fatherhood, over the fame people, divided into

into fo many diffinct governments : either these 72 fathers actually were rulers, just before the confusion, and then they were not one people, but that God himfelf fays they were; or elfe they were a common-wealth, and then where was monarchy? or elfe these 72 fathers had fatherly authority, but knew it not. Strange ! that fatherly authority should be the only original of government amongst men, and yet all mankind not know it; and stranger yet, that the confusion of tongues should reveal it to them all of a sudden, that in an inftant these 72 should know that they had fatherly power, and all others know that they were to obey it in them, and every one know that particular fatherly authority to which he was a fubject. He that can think this arguing from scripture, may from thence make out what model of an Eutopia will beft fuit with his fancy or intereft; and this fatherbood, thus difpofed of, will justify both a prince who claims an universal monarchy, and his subjects, who, being fathers of fa-milies, shall quit all subjection to him, and canton his empire into less governments for themselves, for it will always appears a doubt themfelves; for it will always remain a doubt in which of these the fatherly authority refided, till our author refolves us, whether Shem, who was then alive, or these 72 new princes, beginning fo many new empires in his dominions, and over his fubjects, had right to govern, fince our author tells us, that

that both one and the other had fatherly, which is supreme authority, and are brought in by him as instances of those who did enjoy the lordships of Adam by right descending to them, which was as large and ample as the absolutes dominion of any monarch. This at least is unavoidable, that if God was careful to preferve the fatherly authority, in the 72 newerected nations, it necessarily follows, that he was as careful to deftroy all pretences of Adam's heir; fince he took care, and therefore did preferve the fatherly authority in fo many, at least 71, that could not possibly be Adam's heirs, when the right heir (if God had ever ordained any fuch inheritance) could not but he known, Shem then living, and they being all one people.

§. 148. Nimrod is his next inftance of enjoying this patriarchal power, p. 16. but I know not for what reason our author seems a little unkind to him, and fays, that he against right enlarged his empire, by feizing violently on the rights of other lords of families. These lords of families here were called fathers of families, in his account of the difpersion at Babel: but it matters not how they were called, so we know who they are; for this fatherly authority must be in them, either as heirs to Adam, and so there could not be 72, nor above one at once; or else as natural parents over their children, and so every father will have paternal authority over his his children by the fame right, and in as large extent as those 72 had, and so be independent princes over their own offspring. Taking his lords of families in this later fenfe, (as it is hard to give those words any other fense in this place) he gives us a very pretty account of the original of monarchy, in these following words, p. 16. And in this fense he may be faid to be the author and founder of monarchy, viz. As against right seizing violently on the rights of fathers over their children; which paternal authority, if it be in them, by right of nature, (for elfe how could those 72 come by it?) no body can take from them without their own consents; and then I defire our author and his friends to confider, how far this will concern other princes, and whether it will not, according to his conclusion of that paragraph, refolve all regal power of those, whose dominions extend beyond their families, either into tyranny and usurpation, or election and con-fent of fathers of families, which will differ very little from confent of the people.

§. 149. All his inftances, in the next fection, p. 17. of the 12 dukes of Edom, the nine kings in a little corner of Afia in Abra-bam's days, the 31 kings in Canaan deftroyed by Joshua, and the care he takes to prove that these were all sovereign princes, and that every town in those days had a king, are fo many direct proofs against him, that it was not

not the lordship of Adam by right descending to them, that made kings: for if they had held their royalties by that title, either there must have been but one sovereign over them all, or elfe every father of a family had been as good a prince, and had as good a claim to royalty, as thefe: for if all the fons of E fau had each of them, the younger as well as the eldeft, the right of fatherbood, and fo were fovereign princes after their fathers death, the fame right had their fons after them, and fo on to all posterity; which will limit all the natural power of fatherhood, only to be over the iffue of their own bodies, and their descendents; which power of fatherhood dies with the head of each family, and makes way for the like power of fatherhood to take place in each of his fons over their respective posterities : whereby the power of fatherhood will be preferved indeed, and is intelligible, but will not be at all to our author's purpofe. None of the inftances he brings are proofs of any power they had, as heirs of Adam's paternal autho-rity by the title of his fatherhood descending to them; no, nor of any power they had by virtue of their own: for Adam's father bood being over all mankind, it could descend but to one at once, and from him to his right heir only, and fo there could by that title be but one king in the world at a time: and by right of fatherhood, not defcending from Adam, it must be only as they themfelves felves were fathers, and fo could be over none but their own posterity. So that if those 12 dukes of Edom; if Abraham and the nine kings his neighbours; if Jacob and Efau, and the 31 kings in Canaan, the 72 kings mutilated by Adonibefeck, the 32 kings that came to Benhadad, the 70 kings of Greece making war at Troy, were, as our author contends, all of them fovereign princes; it is evident that kings derived their power from fome other original than fatherbood, fince fome of these had power over more than their own posterity; and it is demonstration, they could not be all heirs to Adam: for I challenge any man to make any pretence to power by right of fatherbood, either intelligible or poffible in any one, otherwife, than either as Adam's heir, or as progenitor over his own descendents, naturally fprung from him. And if our author could fnew that any one of these princes, of which he gives us here fo large a catalogue, had his authority by either of these titles, I think I might yield him the cause ; though it is manifest they are all impertinent, and directly contrary to what he brings them to prove, viz. That the lordship which Adam bad over the world by right descended to the patriarchs.

§. 150. Having told us, p. 16, That the patriarchal government continued in Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, until the Egyptian bondage, p. 17. he tells us, By manifest footsteps we may trace this paternal government unto the 3

Israelites coming into Egypt, where the exercife of supreme patriarchal government was intermitted, because they were in subjection to a stronger prince. What these footsteps are of paternal government, in our author's fenfe, i. e. of absolute monarchical power descending from Adam, and exercised by right of *fa*therbood, we have feen, that is for 2290 years no footsteps at all; fince in all that time he cannot produce any one example of any perfon who claimed or exercised regal authority by right of father bood; or fhew any one who being a king was Adam's heir : all that his proofs amount to, is only this, that there were fathers, patriarchs and kings, in that age of the world; but that the fathers and patriarchs had any absolute arbitrary power, or by what titles those kings had their's, and of what extent it was, the fcripture is wholly filent; it is manifest by right of fatherhood they neither did, nor could claim any title to dominion and empire.

§. 151. To fay, that the exercise of supreme patriarchal government was intermitted, because they were in subjection to a stronger prince, proves nothing but what I before suffected, viz. That patriarchal jurisdiction or government is a fallacious expression, and does not in our author signify (what he would yet infinuate by it) paternal and regal power, such an absolute sovereignty as he supposes was in Adam.

*S: 152. For how can he fay that patriarchal jurifiction was intermitted in Egypt, where there was a king, under whole regal government the Israelites were, if patriarchal were absolute monarchical jurisdiction? And if it were not, but fomething elfe, why does he make fuch ado about a power not in queftion, and nothing to the purpose? The exercife of patriarchal jurifdiction, if patriarchal be regal, was not intermitted whilft the Ifraelites were in Egypt. It is true, the exercife of regal power was not then in the hands of any of the promifed feed of Abraham, nor before neither that I know; but what is that to the intermiffion of regal authority, as defcending from Adam, unless our author will have it, that this chosen line of Abraham had the right of inheritance to Adam's lordship? and then to what purpole are his instances of the 72 rulers, in whom the fatherly authority was preferved in the confusion at Babel? Why does he bring the 12 princes fons of Ismael; and the dukes of Edom, and join them with Abraham, Ifaac, and Jacob, as examples of the exercise of true patriarchal government, if the exercise of patriarchal jurifdiction were intermitted in the world, whenever the heirs of Jacob had not supreme power ? I fear, Jupreme patriarchal jurifdiction was not only intermitted, but from the time of the Egyptian bondage quite loft in the world, fince it will be

be hard to find, from that time downwards, any one who exercifed it as an inheritance defeending to him from the patriarchs Abrabam, Ifaac, and Facob. I imagined monarchical government would have ferved his turn in the hands of Pharaob, or any body. But one cannot eafily difcover in all places what his difcourfe tends to, as particularly in this place it is not obvious to guefs what he drives at, when he fays, the exercife of fupreme patriarchal jurifdiction in Egypt, or how this ferves to make out the defeent of Adam's lordship to the patriarchs, or any body elfe.

§, 153. For I thought he had been giving us out of scripture, proofs and examples of monarchical government, founded on paternal authority, descending from Adam; and not an hiftory of the Jews: amongft whom yet we find no kings, till many years after they were a people: and when kings were their rulers, there is not the least mention or room for a pretence that they were heirs to Adam, or kings by paternal authority. I expected, talking fo much as he does of foripture, that he would have produced thence a feries of monarchs, whofe titles were clear to Adam's fatherhood, and who, as heirs to him, owned and exercised paternal jurisdiction over their subjects, and that this was the true patriarchical government; whereas he neither proves, that the patriarchs were kings; nor that either kings or patriarchs N were were heirs to Adam, or fo much as pretended to it: and one may as well prove, that the patriarchs were all abfolute monarchs; that the power both of patriarchs and kings was only paternal; and that this power defcended to them from Adam: I fay all these propositions may be as well proved by a confused account of a multitude of little kings in the West-Indies, out of Ferdinando Soto, or any of our late histories of the Northern America, or by our author's 70 kings of Greece, out of Homer, as by any thing he brings out of fcripture, in that multitude of kings he has reckoned up.

§. 154. And methinks he should have let Homer and his wars of Troy alone, fince his great zeal to truth or monarchy carried him to fuch a pitch of transport against philosophers and poets, that he tells us in his preface, that there are too many in these days, who please themselves in running after the opinions of philosophers and poets, to find out such an original of government, as might promise them some title to liberty, to the great scandal of Christianity, and bringing in of atheism. And yet these heathens, philosopher Aristatle; and poet Homer, are not rejected by our zealous Christian politician, whenever they offer any thing that seems to ferve his turn; whether to the great scandal of Christianity and bringing in of atheism, let him look. This I cannot but observe, in authors who it is visible write

not for truth, how ready zeal for interest and party is to entitle Christianity to their defigns, and to charge atheism on those who will not without examining submit to their doctrines, and blindly swallow their nonfense.

But to return to his fcripture history, our author farther tells us, p. 18. that after the return of the Israelites out of bondage, God, out of a special care of them, chose Moses and Joshua successively to govern as princes in the place and slead of the supreme fathers. If it be true, that they returned out of bondage, it must be into a state of freedom, and must imply, that both before and after this bondage they were free, unless our author will fay, that changing of masters is returning out of bondage ; of that a flave returns out of bondage, when he is removed from one gally to another. If then they returned out of bondage, it is plain that in those days, whatever our author in his preface fays to the contrary, there were difference between a fon, a fubject, and a flave; and that neither the patriarchs before, nor their rulers after this Egyptian bondage, nambered their fons or fubjects among fi their poffeffions, and disposed of them with as absolute a dominion, as they did their other goods.

§. 155. This is evident in Jacob, to whom Reuden offered his two fons as pledges; and Judah was at last surety for Benjamin's safe N 2 return return out of Egypt: which all had been vain, fuperfluous, and but a fort of mockery, if Jacob had had the fame power over every one of his family, as he had over his ox or his afs, as an owner over his fubftance; and the offers that Reuben or Judab made had been fuch a fecurity for returning of Benjamin, as if a man fhould take two lambs out of his lord's flock, and offer one as fecurity, that he will fafely reftore the other.

§. 156. When they were out of this bondage, what then ? God out of a fpecial care of them, the Ifraelites. It is well that once in his book he will allow God to have any care of the people; for in other places he fpeaks of mankind, as if God had no care of any part of them, but only of their monarchs, and that the reft of the people, the focieties of men, were made as fo many herds of cattle, only for the fervice, ufe, and pleafure of their princes.

§. 157. Chofe Mofes and Joshua fucceffively to govern as princes; a shrewd argument our author has found out to prove God's care of the fatherly authority, and Adam's heirs, that here, as an expression of his care of his own people, he chooses those for princes over them, that had not the least pretence to either. The persons chosen were, Moses of the tribe of Levi, and Joshua of the tribe of Epbraim, neither of which had any title of fatherbood. But fays our author, they were in the place and

and stead of the supreme fathers. If God had any where as plainly declared his choice of such fathers to be rulers, as he did of Moses and Josbua, we might believe Mases and Josbua were in their place and stead: but that being the question in debate, till that be better proved, Moses being chosen by God to be ruler of his people, will no more prove that government belonged to Adam's heir, or to the fatherbood, than God's choosing Aaron of the tribe of Levi to be priest, will prove that the priesthood belonged to Adam's heir, or the prime fathers; fince God would choose Aaron to be priest, and Moses ruler in Ifrael, though neither of those offices were fettled on Adam's heir, or the fatherbood.

S. 158. Our author goes on, and after them likewife for a time he raifed up judges, to defend his people in time of peril, p. 18. This proves fatherly authority to be the original of government, and that it defeended from Adam to his heirs, just as well as what went before; only here our author feems to confefs, that these judges, who were all the governors they then had, were only men of valour, whom they made their generals to defend them in time of peril; and cannot God raife up fuch men, unless fatherhood have a title, to government?

But fays our author, when God gave the Ifraelites kings, he re-established the ancient and N 3 prime prime right of lineal fuccession to paternal government, p. 18.

§. 160. How did God re-eftablish it ? by a law, a positive command? We find no such thing. Our author means then, that when God gave them a king, in giving them a king, he re-established the right, Sc. To reestablish de facto the right of lineal succession to paternal government, is to put a man in poffeffion of that government which his fathers did enjoy, and he by lineal fucceffion had a right to: for, first, if it were another government than what his anceftors had, it was not fucceeding to an ancient right, but beginning a new one: for if a prince fhould give a man, befides his antient patrimony, which for fome ages his family had been diffeized of, an additional effate, never before in the possession of his ancestors, he could not be faid to re-establish the right of lineal fucceffion to any more than what had been formerly enjoyed by his anceftors. If therefore the power the kings of Ifrael had, were any thing more than Ifaac or Jacob had, it was not the re-eflabilfbing in them the right of fuccession to a power, but giving them a new power, however you pleafe to call it, paternal or not: and whether Iface and Jacob had the fame power that the kings of Ifrael had, I defire any one, by what has been above faid, to confider; and I do not think they will

will find, that either Abraham, Ifaac, or Jacob, had any regal power at all.

§. 161. Next, there can be no re-establishment of the prime and ancient right of lineal fucceffion to any thing, unlefs he, that is put in possession of it, has the right to fucceed, and be the true and next heir to him he fucceeds to. Can that be a re-eftablishment, which begins in a new family? or that the re-establishment of an ancient right of lineal fucceffion, when a crown is given to one, who has no right of fuccession to it, and who, if the lineal fucceffion had gone on, had been the lineal fuccettion had gone on, had been out of all possibility of pretence to it? Saul, the first king God gave the Ifraelites, was of the tribe of Benjamin. Was the ancient and prime right of lineal fuccefion re-established in him? The next was David, the youngest fon of Jesse, of the posterity of Judab, Jacob's third fon. Was the ancient and prime right of lineal fucceffion to paternal government re-established in him? or in Solomon, his younger fon and fucceffor in the throne? or in Jere-beam over the ten tribes? or in Athaliah, a woman who reigned fix years an utter firanger to the royal blood? If the ancient and prime right of lineal fucceffion to paternal government were re-established in any of these or their posterity, the ancient and prime right of lineal fuccession to paternal government belongs to younget, brothers as well as elder, and may be re-established in any man living; for what-N ⊿ ever ever younger brothers, by ancient and prime right of lineal fucceffion, may have as well as the elder, that every man living may have a right to, by lineal fucceffion, and Sir Robert as well as any other. And fo what a brave right of lineal fucceffion, to his paternal or regal government, our author has re-effablifbed, for the fecuring the rights and inheritance of crowns, where every one may have it, let the world confider.

§. 162. But fays our author however, p. 319. Whenfoever God made choice of any special perfon to be king, be intended that the iffue also should have benefit thereof, as being comprehended fufficiently in the person of the father, altho' the father was only named in the grant. This yet will not help out fucceffion ; for if, as our author fays, the benefit of the grant be intended to the iffue of the grantee, this will not direct the fucceffion ; fince, if God give any thing to a man and his iffue in general, the claim cannot be to any one of that iffue in particular; every one that is of his race will have an equal right. If it be faid, our author meant heir, I believe our author was as willing as any body to have used that word, if it would have ferved his turn : but Solomon, who fucceeded David in the throne, being no more his heir than Jerobsham, who fucceeded him in the government of the ten tribes, was his iffue, our author had reason to avoid faying, That God intended it to the the heirs, when that would not hold in a fucceffion, which our author could not except againft; and fo he has left his fucceffion as undetermined, as if he had faid nothing about it: for if the regal power be given by God to a man and his iffue, as the land of Canaan was to Abraham and his feed, muft they not all have a title to it, all fhare in it? And one may as well fay, that by God's grant to Abraham and his feed, the land of Canaan was to belong only to one of his feed exclusive of all others, as by God's grant of dominion to a man and bis iffue, this dominion was to belong in peculiar to one of his iffue.

§. 163. But how will our author prove that whenfoever God made choice of any fpecial perfon to be a king, he intended that the (I fuppole he means his) iffue alfo fhould have benefit thereof? has he fo foon forgot Mofes and Joshua, whom in this very section, he fays, God out of a special care chose to govern as princes, and the judges that God railed up? Had not these princes, having the authority of the supreme fatherhood, the fame power that the kings had; and being specially chosen by God himself, should not their iffue have the benefit of that choice, as well as David's or Solomon's? If these had the paternal authority put into their hands immediately by God, why had not their iffue the benefit of this grant in a fuccefion to this this power? or if they had it as Adam's heirs, why did not their heirs enjoy it after them by right descending to them? for they could not be heirs to one another. Was the power the fame, and from the fame original, in Mofes, Joshua and the Judges, as it was in David and the Kings; and was it inheritable in one, and not in the other? If it was not paternal authority, then God's own people were governed by those that had not paternal authority, and those governors did well enough without it: if it were paternal au-thority, and God chose the perfons that were to exercife it, our author's rule fails, that whensoever God makes choice of any person to be fupreme ruler (for I suppose the name king has no spell in it, it is not the title, but the power makes the difference) be intends that the iffue also should have the benefit of it, fince from their coming out of Egypt to David's time, 400 years, the iffue was never so fuf-ficiently comprehended in the person of the fa-ther, as that any son, after the death of his father, fucceeded to the government amongst all those judges that judged Ifrael. If, to avoid this, it be faid, God always chose the perfon of the fucceffor, and fo, transferring the fatherly authority to him, excluded his iffue from fucceeding to it, that is manifeftly not fo in the flory of Jephtha, where he ar-ticled with the people, and they made him indee over them are in aloin. judge over them, as is plain, Judg. 11.

§. 164. It is in vain then to fay, that whenfoever God choofes any fpecial perfon to have the exercise of paternal authority, (for if that be not to be king, I defire to know the difference between a king and one having the exercise of paternal authority) be intends the iffue also should have the benefit of it, fince we find the authority, the judges had, ended with them, and descended not to their iffue; and if the judges had not paternal authority, I fear it will trouble our author, or any of the friends to his principles, to tell who had then the paternal authority, that is, the government and sufficient they must confess that the chosen people of God continued a people feveral hundreds of years, without any knowledge or thought of this paternal authority, or any appearance of monarchical government at all.

§. 165. To be fatisfied of this, he need but read the ftory of the Levite, and the war thereupon with the Benjamites, in the three last chapters of Judges; and when he finds, that the Levite appeals to the people for justice that it was the tribes and the congregation, that debated, refolved, and directed all that was done on that occasion; he must conclude, either that God was not careful to preferve the fatherly authority amongst his own chosen people; or elfe that the fatherly sutherity may be preferved, where there is no monarchical monarchical government: if the latter, then it will follow, that though fatherly authority be never fo well proved, yet it will not infer a neceffity of monarchical government; if the former, it will feem very ftrange and improbable, that God fhould ordain fatherly authority to be fo facred amongst the fons of men, that there could be no power, or government without it, and yet that amongst his own people, even whils the is providing a government for them, and therein prescribes rules to the feveral states and relations of men, this great and fundamental one, this most material and neceffary of all the rest, should be concealed, and lie neglected for 400 years after.

§. 166. Before I leave this, I must alk how our author knows that when seever God makes choice of any special person to be king, he intends that the iffue should have the benefit thereof? Does God by the law of nature or revelation fay fo? By the fame law alfo he must fay, which of his iffue must enjoy the crown in fucceffion, and fo point out the heir, or elfe leave his iffue to divide or fcramble for the government: both alike abfurd, and fuch as will destroy the benefit of fuch grant to the iffue. When any fuch declaration of God's intention is produced, it will be our duty to believe God intends it fo; but till that be done, our author must shew us some better warrant, before we shall be obliged to receive ceive him as the authentic revealer of God's intentions.

S. 167. The iffue, fays our author, is com-prehended fufficiently in the perfon of the fa-ther, although the father only was named in the grant: and yet God, when he gave the land of Canaan to Abraham, Gen. xiii. 15. thought fit to put his feed into the grant too: fo the priefthood was given to Aaron and his feed; and the crown God gave not only to David; but his feed alfo: and however our author affures us that God intende, that the iffue the affures us that God intends, that the iffue fould have the benefit of it, when he chooses any perfor to be king, yet we see that the kingdom which he gave to Saul, without mentioning his seed after him, never came to any of his iffue: and why, when God chose a perfon to be king, he should intend, that his iffue should have the benefit of it, more than when he chose one to be judge in Ifrael, I would fain know a reason; or why does a grant of rain know a reason; or why does a grant of fatherly authority to a king more comprehend the iffue, than when a like grant is made to a judge? Is paternal authority by right to defcend to the iffue of one, and not of the other? There will need fome reason to be fhewn of this difference, more than the name, when the thing given is the fame fa-therly authority, and the manner of giving it, God's choice of the perfon, the fame too; for I suppose our author, when he fays, God raifed raifed up judges, will by no means allow, they were chosen by the people.

§. 168. But fince our author has fo confidently affured us of the care of God to preferve the fatherhood, and pretends to build all he fays upon the authority of the fcripture, we may well expect that that people, whofe law, conflitution and hiftory is chiefly contained in the fcripture, should furnish him with the clearest instances of God's care of preferving the fatherly authority, in that people who it is agreed he had a most peculiar care of. Let us fee then what state this paternal authority or government was in amongst the Jews, from their beginning to be a people. It was omitted, by our author's confeffion, from their coming into Egypt, till their return out of that bondage, above 200 years: from thence till God gave the Ifraelites a king, about 400 years more, our author gives but a very flender account of it; nor indeed all that time are there the least footfteps of paternal or regal government amongst them. But then fays our author, God re-established the ancient and prime right of lineal fuccession to paternal government. §. 169. What a lineal fuccession to paternal government was then established, we have already seen. I only now consider how long this lasted, and that was to their captivity, about 500 years: from thence to their destruction by the Romans, above 650 years 4

OF GOVERNMENT. 191 after, the ancient and prime right of lineal fucceffion to paternal government was again loft, and they continued a people in the pro-mifed land without it. So that of 1750 years that they were God's peculiar people, they had hereditary kingly government amongft them not one third of the time; and of that time there is not the leaft footftep of one moment of paternal government, nor the re-establishment of the ancient and prime right of lineal fuccesfion to it, whether we suppose it to be derived, as from its fountain, from David, Saul, Abrabam, or, which upon our author's principles is the only true, from Adam. Adam.

Chap. I. §. 1. It having been shewn in the foregoing discourse,

1. That Adam had not, either by natural right of fatherhood, or by positive donation from God, any fuch authority over his children, or dominion over the world, as is pretended :

2. That if he had, his heirs, yet, had no right to it :

3. That if his heirs had, there being no law of nature nor politive law of God that determines which is the right heir in all cafes that may arife, the right of fucceffion, and confequently of bearing rule, could not have been certainly determined :

4. That if even that had been determined, yet the knowledge of which is the eldest line of

of Adam's posterity, being fo long fince utterly lost, that in the races of mankind and families of the world, there remains not to one above another, the least pretence to be the eldest house, and to have the right of inheritance:

All these premises having, as I think, been clearly made out, it is impoffible that the rulers now on earth fhould make any benefit, or derive any the least shadow of authority from that, which is held to be the fountain of all power, Adam's private dominion and paternal jurifdiction; fo that he that will not give just occasion to think that all government in the world is the product only of force and violence, and that men live together by no other rules but that of beafts, where the strongest carries it, and so lay a foundation for perpetual diforder and mischief, tumult, fedition and rebellion, (things that the followers of that hypothesis fo loudly cry out against) must of necessity find out another rife of government, another original of political power, and another way of defigning and knowing the perfons that have it, than what Sir Robert Filmer hath taught us.

§. 2. To this purpose, I think it may not be amifs, to set down what I take to be political power; that the power of a magistrate over a subject may be distinguished from that of a father over his children, a master over his servant, a busband over his wife, and a lord over his flave. All which diftinct powers happening fometimes together in the fame man, if he be confidered under these different relations, it may help us to diffin-guish these powers one from another, and shew the difference betwixt a ruler of a common-wealth, a father of a family, and a captain of a galley.

§. 3. Political power, then, I take to be a right of making laws with penalties of death, and confequently all lefs penalties, for the regulating and preferving of property, and of employing the force of the community, in the execution of fuch laws, and in the defence of the common-wealth from foreign injury; and all this only for the public good.

CHAP. II.

Of the State of Nature.

§. 4. T O understand political power right, and derive it from its original, we must confider, what state all men are naturally in, and that is, a flate of perfect freedom to order their actions, and dispose of their possession and persons, as they think fit, within the bounds of the law of nature, without asking leave, or depending upon the will of any other man.

A flate also of equality, wherein all the power and jurifdiction is reciprocal, no one 0 2 having having more than another; there being nothing more evident, than that creatures of the fame fpecies and rank, promifcuoufly born to all the fame advantages of nature, and the ufe of the fame faculties, fhould alfo be equal one amongft another without fubordination or fubjection, unlefs the lord and mafter of them all fhould, by any manifeft declaration of his will, fet one above another, and confer on him, by an evident and clear appointment, an undoubted right to dominion and fovereignty.

§. 5. This equality of men by nature, the judicious Hooker looks upon as fo evident in itfelf, and beyond all queftion, that he makes it the foundation of that obligation to mutual love amongst men, on which he builds the duties they owe one another, and from whence he derives the great maxims of justice and charity. His words are,

The like natural inducement hath brought men to know that it is no lefs their duty, to love others than themfelves; for feeing those things which are equal, must needs all have one measure; if I cannot but wish to receive good, even as much at every man's hands, as any man can wish unto his own soul, how should I look to have any part of my defire herein satisfied, unlefs myself be careful to satisfy the like defire, which is undoubtedly in other men, being of one and the same nature? To have any thing offered them repugnant to this defire, must needs in all respects respects grieve them as much as me; so that if I do harm, I must look to fuffer, there being no reason that others should shew greater measure of love to me, than they have by me shewed unto them: my desire therefore to be loved of my equals in nature, as much as possible may be, impose the upon me a natural duty of bearing to them-ward fully the like affection; from which relation of equality between ourselves and them that are as ourselves, what several rules and canons natural reason hath drawn, for direction of life, no man is ignorant. Eccl. Pol. Lib. 1.

§. 6. But though this be a flate of liberty, yet it is not a flate of licence : though man in that state have an uncontroulable liberty to difpose of his person or possessions, yet he has not liberty to destroy himself, or so much as any creature in his poffession, but where fome nobler use than its bare prefervation calls for it. The state of nature has a law of nature to govern it, which obliges every one : and reason, which is that law, teaches all mankind, who will but confult it, that being ell equal and independent, no one ought to harm another in his life, health, liberty, or possefions : for men being all the workmanthip of one omnipotent, and infinitely wife maker; all the fervants of one fovereign master, fent into the world by his order, and about his bufines; they are his property, whose workmanship they are, made to laft during 03

during his, not one another's pleafure: and being furnished with like faculties, sharing all in one community of nature, there cannot be supposed any such fubor dination among us, that may authorize us to destroy one another, as if we were made for one another's uses, as the inferior ranks of creatures are for our's. Every one, as he is bound to preferve bimfelf, and not to quit his station wilfully, so by the like reason, when his own prefervation comes not in competition, ought he, as much as he can, to preferve the rest of mankind, and may not, unless it be to do justice on an offender, take away, or impair the life, or what tends to the prefervation of the life, the liberty, health, limb, or goods of another.

§. 7. And that all men may be reftrained from invading others rights, and from doing hurt to one another, and the law of nature be observed, which willeth the peace and prefervation of all mankind, the execution of the law of nature is, in that state, put into every man's hands, whereby every one has a right to punish the transgressors of that law to fuch a degree, as may hinder its violation : for the law of nature would, as all other laws that concern men in this world, be in vain, if there were no body that in the state of nature had a power to execute that law, and thereby preferve the innocent and reftrain offenders. And if any one in the state of nature may punish another for any evil he has done, 4

done, every one may do fo: for in that flate of perfect equality, where naturally there is no fuperiority or jurifdiction of one over another, what any may do in profecution of that law, every one must needs have a right to do.

§. 8. And thus, in the state of nature, one man comes by a power over another; but yet no absolute or arbitrary power, to use a criminal, when he has got him in his hands, according to the paffionate heats, or boundlefs extravagancy of his own will; but only to retribute to him, fo far as calm reafon and retribute to him, to far as calm reason and conficience dictate, what is proportionate to his transgreffion, which is fo much as may ferve for reparation and restraint: for these two are the only reasons, why one man may lawfully do harm to another, which is that we call punishment. In transgreffing the law of nature, the offender declares himself to line by exother who then that of another live by another rule than that of reafon and common equity, which is that measure God has let to the actions of men, for their mutual fecurity; and fo he becomes danmutual lecurity; and to he becomes dan-gerous to mankind, the tye, which is to fecure them from injury and violence, being flighted and broken by him. Which being a trefpafs against the whole species, and the peace and fafety of it, provided for by the law of nature, every man upon this fcore, by the right he hath to preferve mankind in general, may restrain, or where it is necef-04 fary, fary, deftroy things noxious to them, and fo may bring fuch evil on any one, who hath tranfgreffed that law, as may make him repent the doing of it, and thereby deter him, and by his example others, from doing the like mifchief. And in this cafe, and upon this ground, every man hath a right to punifh the offender, and be executioner of the law of nature.

S. 9. I doubt not but this will feem a very ftrange doctrine to fome men: but before they condemn it, I defire them to refolve me, by what right any prince or flate can put to death, or punish an alien, for any crime he commits in their country. It is certain their laws, by virtue of any fanction they receive from the promulgated will of the logiflative reach not a ftranger: they (peak) legislative, reach not a stranger : they speak not to him, nor, if they did, is he bound to hearken to them. The legislative authority, by which they are in force over the fubjects of that common-wealth, hath no power over him. Those who have the supreme power of making laws in England, France or Holland, are to an Indian, but like the rest of the world, men without authority: and therefore, if by the law of nature every man hath not a power to punifh offences againft it, as he foberly judges the cafe to require, I fee not how the magistrates of any com-munity can punifh an alien of another coun-try; fince, in reference to him, they can have no no more power than what every man na-turally may have over another. §. 10. Befides the crime which confifts in violating the law, and varying from the right rule of reason, whereby a man so far be-comes degenerate, and declares himself to quit the principles of human nature, and to be a noxious creature, there is commonly injury done to fome performer of other done to fome perfon or other, and fome other man receives damage by his transgreffion : in which cafe he who hath received any damage, has, befides the right of punishment common to him with other men, a particular right to feek reparation from him that has done it: and any other perfon, who finds it just, may also join with him that is injured, and affift him in recovering from the offender fo much as may make fatisfaction for the harm he has fuffered.

§. 11. From these two diffinct rights, the one of puni/hing the crime for restraint, and preventing the like offence, which right of punishing is in every body; the other of taking reparation, which belongs only to the injured party, comes it to pass that the ma-gistrate, who by being magistrate hath the common right of punishing put into his hands, can often, where the public good demands not the execution of the law, remit the punishment of criminal offences by his own authority, but yet cannot remit the sa-tisfaction due to any private man for the damage damage he has received. That, he who has fuffered the damage has a right to demand in his own name, and he alone can remit : in his own name, and he alone can remit: the damnified perfon has this power of ap-propriating to himfelf the goods or fervice of the offender, by right of felf-prefervation, as every man has a power to punifh the crime, to prevent its being committed again, by the right be has of preferving all mankind, and doing all reafonable things he can in order to that end: and thus it is, that every man, in the facts of pature has a power to kill a in the state of nature, has a power to kill a murderer, both to deter others from doing the like injury, which no reparation can compensate, by the example of the punishment that attends it from every body, and alfo to fecure men from the attempts of a criminal, who having renounced reafon, the common rule and measure God hath given to mankind, hath, by the unjust violence and flaughter he hath committed upon one, declared war against all mankind, and therefore may be deftroyed as a lion or a tyger, fore may be deltroyed as a non or a tyger, one of those wild favage beafts, with whom men can have no fociety nor fecurity: and upon this is grounded that great law of na-ture, Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall bis blood be shed. And Cain was fo fully con-vinced, that every one had a right to destroy fuch a criminal, that after the murder of his brother, he cries out, Every one that findeth me, me, shall flay me; fo plain was it writ in the hearts of all mankind.

§. 12. By the fame reafon may a man in the ftate of nature punifh the leffer breaches of that law. It will perhaps be demanded, with death? I anfwer, each transgreation may be punifhed to that degree, and with fo much feverity, as will fuffice to make it an ill Jeveraty, as will lumce to make it an ill bargain to the offender, give him caufe to repent, and terrify others from doing the like. Every offence, that can be committed in the flate of nature, may in the flate of nature be also punished equally, and as far forth as it may, in a common-wealth : for though it would be besides my present pur-pose, to enter here into the particulars of the law of nature, or its mediance of thumilbourder law of nature, or its measures of punishment; yet, it is certain there is such a law, and that too, as intelligible and plain to a rational creature, and a studier of that law, as the positive laws of common-wealths; nay, pos-fibly plainer; as much as reason is easier to be understood, than the fancies and intricate contrivances of men, following contrary and hidden interests put into words; for fo truly are a great part of the municipal laws of countries, which are only fo far right, as they are founded on the law of nature, by which they are to be regulated and interpreted. §. 13. To this ftrange doctrine, viz. That in the ftate of nature every one has the executive power of the law of nature, I doubt not but it will

will be objected, that it is unreafonable for men to be judges in their own cafes, that felf-love will make men partial to themfelves and their friends: and on the other fide, that ill nature, paffion and revenge will carry them too far in punishing others; and hence nothing but confusion and diforder will follow, and that therefore God hath certainly appointed government to restrain the partiality and violence of men. I eafily grant, that civil government is the proper remedy for the inconveniencies of the state of nature, which must certainly be great, where men may be judges in their own cafe, fince it is eafy to be imagined, that he who was fo unjust as to do his brother an injury, will fcarce be fo just as to condemn himself for it : but I shall defire those who make this objection, to remember, that abfolute monarchs are but men ; and if government is to be the remedy of those evils, which necessarily follow from men's being judges in their own cafes, and the state of nature is therefore not to be endured, I defire to know what kind of government that is, and how much better it is than the state of nature, where one man, commanding a multitude, has the liberty to be judge in his own cafe, and may do to all his subjects whatever he pleases, without the least liberty to any one to question or controul those who execute his pleasure? and in whatfoever he doth, whether led by reason, mistake or paffion, must be submitted to? much better it it is in the ftate of nature, wherein men are not bound to fubmit to the unjuft will of another: and if he that judges, judges amifs in his own, or any other cafe, he is anfwerable for it to the reft of mankind.

§. 14. It is often asked as a mighty objection, where are, or ever were there any men in fuch a state of nature? To which it may fuffice as an answer at prefent, that fince all princes and rulers of independent governments all through the world, are in a state of nature, it is plain the world never. was, nor ever will be, without numbers of men in that state. I have named all governors of independent communities, whether they are, or are not, in league with others : for it is not every compact that puts an end to the state of nature between men, but only this one of agreeing together mutually to enter into one community, and make one body politic; other promifes, and compacts, men may make one with another, and yet still be in the state of nature. The promises and bargains for truck, &c. between the two men in the defert island, mentioned by Gar-cilasso de la Vega, in his history of Peru; or between a Swifs and an Indian, in the woods of America, are binding to them, though they are perfectly in a state of nature, in reference to one another: for truth and keeping of faith belongs to men, as men, and not as members of fociety.

§. 15. To those that fay, there were never any men in the state of nature, I will not only oppose the authority of the judicious Hooker, Eccl. Pol. lib. i. fect. 10. where he fays, The laws which have been hitherto mentioned, i. e. the laws of nature, do bind men abfolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any fettled fellowship, never any folemn agreement among ft themfelves what to do, or not to do: but for a finuch as we are not by ourfelves sufficient to furnish ourfelves with competent store of things, needful for such a life as our nature doth desire, a life sit for the dignity of man; therefore to supply those desects and impersections which are in us, as living fingle and folely by ourfelves, we are naturally induced to feek communion and fellowship with others : this was the cause of men's uniting themfelves at first in politic societies. But I moreover affirm, that all men are naturally in that state, and remain so, till by their own confents they make themfelves members of fome politic fociety; and I doubt not in the fequel of this discourse, to make it very clear.

CHAP. III.

Of the State of War.

a paffionate and hasty, but a sedate settled defign upon another man's life, puts him in a ftate of war with him against whom he has declared such an intention, and so has exposed his life to the other's power to be taken away by him, or any one that joins with him in his defence, and espouses his quarrel; it being reasonable and just, I should have a right to deftroy that which threatens me with deftruction : for, by the fundamental law of nature, man being to be preferved as much as poffible, when all cannot be preferved, the fafety of the innocent is to be preferred : and one may deftroy a man who makes war upon him, or has discovered an enmity to his being, for the fame reafon that he may kill a wolf or a lion; because fuch men are not under the ties of the commonlaw of reason, have no other rule, but that of force and violence, and fo may be treated as beafts of prey, those dangerous and noxious creatures, that will be fure to deftroy him whenever he falls into their power.

§. 17. And hence it is, that he who attempts to get another man into his abfolute power, does thereby put bimfelf into a flate of war with him; it being to be underftood as a declaration of a defign upon his life: for I have reason to conclude, that he who would get me into his power without my consent, would use me as he pleased when he had got me there, and destroy me too when

when he had a fancy to it; for no body can defire to have me in his absolute power, unlefs it be to compel me by force to that which is against the right of my freedom, i. e. make me a flave. To be free from fuch force is the only fecurity of my prefervation; and reafon bids me look on him, as an enemy to my prefervation, who would take away that freedom which is the fence to it; fo that he who makes an attempt to enflave me, thereby puts himfelf into a state of war with me. He that, in the ftate of nature, would take away the freedom that belongs to any one in that state, must necessarily be supposed to have a defign to take away every thing else, that freedom being the foundation of all the reft; as he that, in the state of society, would take away the freedom belonging to those of that fociety or common-wealth, must be supposed to design to take away from them every thing elfe, and fo be looked on as in a state of war.

§. 18. This makes it lawful for a man to kill a thief, who has not in the leaft hurt him, nor declared any defign upon his life, any farther than, by the ufe of force, fo to get him in his power, as to take away his money, or what he pleafes, from him; becaufe ufing force, where he has no right, to get me into his power, let his pretence be what it will, I have no reafon to fuppofe, that he, who would take away my liberty, would not,

not, when he had me in his power, take away every thing elfe. And therefore it is lawful for me to treat him as one who has put bimfelf into a flate of war with me, i. e. kill him if I can; for to that hazard does he justly expose himself, whoever introduces a flate of war, and is aggreffor in it. §. 19. And here we have the plain dif- ference between the state of nature and the state of war, which however some men have confounded, are as far distant, as a state of peace, good will, mutual affiftance and pre-fervation, and a flate of enmity, malice, violence and mutual destruction, are one from another. Men living together according to reason, without a common superior on earth, with authority to judge between them, is with authority to judge between them, is properly the flate of nature. But force, or a declared defign of force, upon the perfon of another, where there is no common fuperior on earth to appeal to for relief, is the flate of war: and it is the want of fuch an appeal gives a man the right of war even against an aggreffor, tho' he be in fociety and a fellow fubject. Thus a thief, whom I cannot harm, but by appeal to the law, for having ftolen all that I am worth, I may kill, when he fets on me to roh me but of my horfe or coat: on me to rob me but of my horse or coat; because the law, which was made for my prefervation, where it cannot interpose to se-cure my life from present force, which, if lost, is capable of no reparation, permits me P my

my own defence, and the right of war, a liberty to kill the aggreffor, becaufe the aggreffor allows not time to appeal to our common judge, nor the decifion of the law, for remedy in a cafe where the mifchief may be irreparable. Want of a common judge with authority, puts all men in a ftate of nature: force without right, upon a man's perfon, makes a ftate of war, both where there is, and is not, a common judge.

§. 20. But when the actual force is over, the flate of war ceafes between those that are in fociety, and are equally on both fides fubjected to the fair determination of the law; because then there lies open the remedy of appeal for the past injury, and to prevent future harm : but where no fuch appeal is, as in the flate of nature, for want of politive laws, and judges with authority to appeal to, the flate of war once begun, continues, with a right to the innocent party to deftroy the other whenever he can, until the aggreffor offers peace, and defires reconciliation on fuch terms as may repair any wrongs he has already done, and fecure the innocent for the future ; nay, where an appeal to the law, and conftituted judges, lies open, but the remedy is denied by a manifest perverting of justice, and a barefaced wrefting of the laws to protect or indemnify the violence or injuries of some men, or party of men, there it is hard to imagine any thing but a state of war: for

for where-ever violence is ufed, and injury done, though by hands appointed to adminifter juffice, it is fill violence and injury, however coloured with the name, pretences, or forms of law, the end whereof being to protect and redrefs the innocent, by an unbiaffed application of it, to all who are under it; where-ever that is not bona fide done, war is made upon the fufferers, who having no appeal on earth to right them, they are left to the only remedy in fuch cafes, an appeal to heaven.

§. 21. To avoid this state of war (wherein there is no appeal but to heaven, and wherein every the least difference is apt to end, where there is no authority to decide between the contenders) is one great reason of men's putting themfelves into fociety, and quitting the ftate of nature: for where there is an authority, a power on earth, from which relief can be had by appeal, there the continuance of the flate of war is excluded, and the controverfy is decided by that power. Had there been any fuch court, any fuperior jurifdiction on earth, to determine the right between Jephtha and the Ammonites, they had never come to a state of war: but we fee he was forced to appeal to heaven. The Lord the Judge (fays he) be judge this day between the children of Ifrael and the children of Ammon, Judg. xi. 27. and then profecuting, and relying on his appeal, he leads out his army to battle: and P 2 therefore therefore in fuch controverfies, where the queftion is put, who fhall be judge? It cannot be meant, who fhall decide the controverfy; every one knows what fephtha here tells us, that the Lord the fudge fhall judge. Where there is no judge on earth, the appeal lies to God in heaven. That queftion then cannot mean, who fhall judge, whether another hath put himfelf in a ftate of war with me, and whether I may, as fephtha did, appeal to heaven in it? of that I myfelf can only be judge in my own confcience, as I will anfwer it, at the great day, to the fupreme judge of all men.

Of SLAVERY.

§. 22. THE natural liberty of man is to be free from any fuperior power on earth, and not to be under the will or legiflative authority of man, but to have only the law of nature for his rule. The liberty of man, in fociety, is to be under no other legiflative power, but that eftablished, by confent, in the common-wealth; nor under the dominion of any will, or restraint of any law, but what that legislative shall enact, according to the trust put in it. Freedom then is not what Sir Robert Filmer tells us, Observations, A. 55. a liberty for every one 4

to do what he lifts, to live as he pleafes, and not to be tied by any laws: but freedom of men under government is, to have a ftanding rule to live by, common to every one of that fociety, and made by the legislative power erected in it; a liberty to follow my own will in all things, where the rule preferibes not; and not to be fubject to the inconstant, uncertain, unknown, arbitrary will of another man: as freedom of nature is, to be under no other reftraint but the law of nature.

§. 23. This freedom from absolute, arbitrary power, is fo neceffary to, and clofely joined with a man's prefervation, that he cannot part with it, but by what forfeits his prefervation and life together: for a man, not having the power of his own life, cannot, by compact, or his own confent, enflave himfelf to any one, nor put himself under the absolute, arbitrary power of another, to take away his life, when he pleafes. No body can give more power than he has himfelf; and he that cannot take away his own life, cannot give another power over it. Indeed, having by his fault forfeited his own life, by fome act that deferves death; he, to whom he has forfeited it, may (when he has him in his power) delay to take it, and make use of him to his own fervice, and he does him no injury by it: for, whenever he finds the hardship of his flavery outweigh the value of his life, it is in his power, by refifting the P 2 will

will of his mafter, to draw on himfelf the death he defires.

§. 24. This is the perfect condition of flavery, which is nothing elfe, but the flate of war continued, between a lawful conqueror and a captive: for, if once compact enter between them, and make an agreement for a limited power on the one fide, and obedience on the other, the flate of war and flavery ceafes, as long as the compact endures: for, as has been faid, no man can, by agreement, pafs over to another that which he hath not in himfelf, a power over his own life.

I confeis, we find among the Jews, as well as other nations, that men did fell themfelves; but, it is plain, this was only to drudgery, not to flavery: for, it is evident, the perfon fold was not under an abfolute, arbitrary, defpotical power: for the mafter could not have power to kill him, at any time, whom, at a certain time, he was obliged to let go free out of his fervice; and the mafter of fuch a fervant was fo far from having an arbitrary power over his life, that he could not, at pleafure, fo much as maim him, but the lofs of an eye, or tooth, fet him free, Exod. xxi.

OF PROPERTY.

§. 25. W Hether we confider natural rea-fon, which tells us, that men, being once born, have a right to their prefervation, and confequently to meat and drink, and fuch other things as nature af-fords for their fubfistence : or revelation, which gives us an account of those grants God made of the world to Adam, and to Noah, and his fons, it is very clear, that God, as king David fays, Pfal. cxv. 16. has given the earth to the children of men; given it to mankind in common. But this being fupposed, it seems to some a very great difficulty, how any one fhould ever come to have a property in any thing: I will not content myself to answer, that if it be difficult to make out property, upon a supposition that God gave the world to Adam, and his pofterity in common, it is impossible that any man, but one universal monarch, should have any property upon a supposition, that God gave the world to Adam, and his heirs in fucceffion, exclusive of all the rest of his pofterity. But I shall endeavour to shew, how men might come to have a property in feveral parts of that which God gave to mankind in common, and that without any express compact of all the commoners.

§. 26. God, who hath given the world to men in common, hath also given them reason to make use of it to the best advantage of life, and convenience. The earth, and all that is therein, is given to men for the fup-port and comfort of their being. And tho' all the fruits it naturally produces, and beafts it feeds, belong to mankind in common, as they are produced by the fpontaneous hand of nature; and no body has originally a private dominion, exclusive of the reft of mankind, in any of them, as they are thus in their natural flate : yet being given for the use of men, there must of necessity be a means to appropriate them fome way or other, before they can be of any ufe, or at all beneficial to any particular man. The fruit, or venifon, which nourishes the wild Indian, who knows no inclosure, and is still a tenant in common, must be his, and so his, i.e. a part of him, that another can no longer have any right to it, before it can do him any good for the support of his life.

§. 27. Though the earth, and all inferior creatures, be common to all men, yet every man has a property in his own perfon: this no body has any right to but himfelf. The labour of his body, and the work of his hands, we may fay, are properly his. Whatfoever then he removes out of the state that nature hath provided, and left it in, he hath mixed his labour with, and joined to it fomething that that is his own, and thereby makes it his property. It being by him removed from the common ftate nature hath placed it in, it hath by this labour fomething annexed to it, that excludes the common right of other men: for this labour being the unqueftionable property of the labourer, no man but he can have a right to what that is once joined to, at leaft where there is enough, and as good, left in common for others.

§. 28. He that is nourished by the acorns he picked up under an oak, or the apples he gathered from the trees in the wood, has certainly appropriated them to himfelf. No body can deny but the nourishment is his. I ask then, when did they begin to be his? when he digested ? or when he eat ? or when he boiled? or when he brought them home? or when he picked them up? and it is plain, if the first gathering made them not his, nothing else could. That labour put a diftinction between them and common: that added fomething to them more than nature, the common mother of all, had done; and fo they became his private right. And will any one fay, he had no right to those acorns or apples, he thus appropriated, because he had not the consent of all mankind to make them his? Was it a robbery thus to affume to himfelf what belonged to all in common ? If fuch a confent as that was necessary, man had ftarved, notwithftanding the plenty God had had given him. We fee in commons, which remain fo by compact, that it is the taking any part of what is common, and removing it out of the ftate nature leaves it in, which begins the property; without which the common is of no ufe. And the taking of this or that part, does not depend on the express confent of all the commoners. Thus the grafs my horfe has bit; the turfs my fervant has cut; and the ore I have digged in any place, where I have a right to them in common with others, become my property, without the affignation or confent of any body. The labour that was mine, removing them out of that common ftate they were in, hath fixed my property in them.

in, hath fixed my property in them. §. 29. By making an explicit confent of every commoner, neceffary to any one's appropriating to himfelf any part of what is given in common, children or fervants could not cut the meat, which their father or mafter had provided for them in common, without affigning to every one his peculiar part. Though the water running in the fountain be every one's, yet who can doubt, but that in the pitcher is his only who drew it out? His labour hath taken it out of the hands of nature, where it was common, and belonged equally to all her children, and batb thereby appropriated it to himfelf.

§. 30. Thus this law of reason makes the deer that Indian's who hath killed it; it is allowed to be his goods, who hath bestowed his labour upon it, though before it was the common right of every one. And amongst those who are counted the civilized part of mankind, who have made and multiplied mankind, who have made and multiplied politive laws to determine property, this ori-ginal law of nature, for the beginning of pro-perty, in what was before common, ftill takes place; and by virtue thereof, what fifh any one catches in the ocean, that great and ftill remaining common of mankind; or what ambergrife any one takes up here, is by the labour that removes it out of that common flate nature left it in, made his property, who takes that pains about it. And even amongft us, the hare that any one is hunting, is thought his who purfues her during the chafe: for being a beaft that is ftill looked upon as common, and no man's private possed upon as whoever has employed fo much labour about any of that kind, as to find and pursue her, has thereby removed her from the state of nature, wherein she was common, and hath begun a property.

§. 31. It will perhaps be objected to this, that if gathering the acorns, or other fruits of the earth, Sc. makes a right to them, then any one may ingrofs as much as he will. To which I answer, Not so. The fame law of nature, that does by this means give us property, property, does also bound that property too. God has given us all things richly, I Tim. vi. 12. is the voice of reason confirmed by in-fpiration. But how far has he given it us? To enjoy. As much as any one can make use of to any advantage of life before it fpoils, fo much he may by his labour fix a property in : whatever is beyond this, is more than his fhare, and belongs to others. Nothing was made by God for man to fpoil or deftroy. And thus, confidering the plenty of natural provisions there was a long time in the world, and the few spenders; and to how fmall a part of that provision the industry of one man could extend itfelf, and ingrois it to the prejudice of others; especially keeping within the bounds, fet by reason, of what might ferve for his ufe; there could be then little room for quarrels or contentions about property fo established.

§. 32. But the chief matter of property being now not the fruits of the earth, and the beafts that fubfift on it, but the earth itfelf; as that which takes in and carries with it all the reft; I think it is plain, that property in that too is acquired as the former. As much land as a man tills, plants, improves, cultivates, and can use the product of, fo much is his property. He by his labour does, as it were, inclose it from the common. Nor will it invalidate his right, to fay every body else has an equal title to it; and therefore he cannot cannot appropriate, he cannot inclose, without the confent of all his fellow-commoners, all mankind. God, when he gave the world in common to all mankind, commanded man also to labour, and the penury of his condition required it of him. God and his reafon commanded him to subdue the earth, i. e. improve it for the benefit of life, and therein lay out something upon it that was his own, his labour. He that in obedience to this command of God, subdued, tilled and sowed any part of it, thereby annexed to it fomething that was his property, which another had no title to, nor could without injury take from him.

§. 33. Nor was this appropriation of any parcel of land, by improving it, any prejudice to any other man, fince there was still enough, and as good left; and more than the yet unprovided could use. So that, in effect, there was never the lefs left for others because of his inclosure for himself: for he that leaves as much as another can make use of, does as good as take nothing at all. No body could think himfelf injured by the drinking of another man, though he took a good draught, who had a whole river of the fame water left him to quench his thirst: and the case of land and water. where there is enough of both, is perfectly the fame.

§. 34. God gave the world to men in common; but fince he gave it them for their benefit, and the greatest conveniencies of life they were capable to draw from it, it cannot be fuppofed he meant it fhould al-ways remain common and uncultivated. He gave it to the use of the industrious and rational, (and labour was to be his title to it;) not to the fancy or covetousness of the quarrelfome and contentious. He that had as good left for his improvement, as was already taken up, needed not complain, ought not to meddle with what was already improved by another's labour : if he did, it is plain he defired the benefit of another's pains, which he had no right to, and not the ground which God had given him in common with others to labour on, and whereof there was as good left, as that already poffeffed, and more than he knew what to do with, or his industry could reach to.

§. 35. It is true, in land that is common in England, or any other country, where there is plenty of people under government, who have money and commerce, no one can inclofe or appropriate any part, without the confent of all his fellow-commoners; becaufe this is left common by compact, i. e. by the law of the land, which is not to be violated. And though it be common, in refpect of forme men, it is not fo to all mankind; but is the joint property of this country, or this parifh.

parish. Besides, the remainder, after such inclosure, would not be as good to the reft of the commoners, as the whole was when they could all make use of the whole; whereas in the beginning and first peopling of the great common of the world, it was quite - otherwise. The law man was under, was rather for appropriating. God commanded, and his wants forced him to labour. That was his property which could not be taken from him where-ever he had fixed it. And hence fubduing or cultivating the earth, and having dominion, we see are joined together. The one gave title to the other. So that God, by commanding to fubdue, gave authority fo far to appropriate : and the con-dition of human life, which requires labour and materials to work on, neceffarily introduces private poffeffions.

§. 36. The measure of property nature has well fet by the extent of men's labour and the conveniencies of life: no man's labour could fubdue, or appropriate all; nor could his enjoyment confume more than a finall part; fo that it was impossible for any man, this way, to intrench upon the right of another, or acquire to himself a property, to the prejudice of his neighbour, who would still have room for as good, and as large a possifion (after the other had taken out his) as before it was appropriated. This measure did confine every man's possible for a very moderate proportion, portion, and fuch as he might appropriate to himfelf, without injury to any body, in the first ages of the world, when men were more in danger to be loft, by wandering from their company, in the then vaft wildernefs of the earth, than to be straitened for want of room to plant in. And the fame meafure may be allowed still without prejudice to any body, as full as the world feems: for fuppofing a man, or family, in the state they were at first peopling of the world by the children of Adam, or Noah; let him plant in fome in-land, vacant places of America, we fhall find that the poffeffions he could make himfelf, upon the meafures we have given, would not be very large, nor, even to this day, prejudice the reft of mankind, or give them reason to complain, or think themfelves injured by this man's incroachment, though the race of men have now fpread themfelves to all the corners of the world, and do infinitely exceed the fmall number was at the beginning. Nay, the extent of ground is of fo little value, without labour, that I have heard it affirmed, that in Spain itself a man may be permitted to plough, fow and reap, without being disturbed, upon land he has no other title to, but only his making use of it. But, on the contrary, the inhabitants think themselves beholden to him, who, by his industry on neglected, and confequently wafte land, has increased the flock flock of corn, which they wanted. But be this as it will, which I lay no ftrefs on; this I dare boldly affirm, that the fame rule of propriety, (viz.) that every man fhould have as much as he could make use of, would hold ftill in the world, without ftraitening any body; fince there is land enough in the world to suffice double the inhabitants, had not the invention of money, and the tacit agreement of men to put a value on it, introduced (by confent) larger possefilions, and a right to them; which, how it has done, I shall by and by shew more at large.

§. 37. This is certain, that in the beginning, before the defire of having more than man needed had altered the intrinfic value of things, which depends only on their ufefulnefs to the life of man; or had agreed, that a little piece of yellow metal, which would keep without wasting or decay, should be worth a great piece of flesh, or a whole heap of corn; though men had a right to appropriate, by their labour, each one to himfelf, as much of the things of nature, as he could use : yet this could not be much, nor to the prejudice of others, where the fame plenty was still left to those who would use the fame industry. To which let me add, that he who appropriates land to himfelf by his labour, does not lessen, but increase the common flock of mankind: for the provisions ferving to the support of human life, produced 0

duced by one acre of inclosed and cultivated land, are (to fpeak much within compass) ten times more than those which are vielded by an acre of land of an equal richness lying waste in common. And therefore he that incloses land, and has a greater plenty of the conveniencies of life from ten acres. than he could have from an hundred left to nature, may truly be faid to give ninety acres to mankind : for his labour now fupplies him with provisions out of ten acres, which were but the product of an hundred lying in common. I have here rated the improved land very low, in making its product but as ten to one, when it is much nearer an hundred to one: for I afk, whether in the wild woods and uncultivated wafte of America, left to nature, without any improvement, tillage or hufbandry, a thousand acres yield the needy and wretched inhabitants as many conveniencies of life, as ten acres of equally fertile land do in Devonshire, where they are well cultivated?

Before the appropriation of land, he who gathered as much of the wild fruit, killed, caught, or tamed, as many of the beafts, as he could; he that fo imployed his pains about any of the fpontaneous products of nature, as any way to alter them from the ftate which nature put them in, by placing any of his labour on them, did thereby acquire a propriety in them: but if they perifhed, in

in his possession, without their due use; if the fruits rotted, or the venifon putrified, before he could spend it, he offended against the common law of nature, and was liable to be punished; he invaded his neighbour's share, for he had no right, farther than his use called for any of them, and they might ferve to afford him conveniencies of life.

§. 28. The fame measures governed the posses find too: whatsoever he tilled and reaped, laid up and made use of, before it fpoiled, that was his peculiar right; whatfoever he enclosed, and could feed, and make use of, the cattle and product was also his. But if either the grafs of his inclosure rotted on the ground, or the fruit of his planting perished without gathering, and laying up, this part of the earth, notwithstanding his inclosure, was still to be looked on as waste, and might be the possession of any other. Thus, at the beginning, Cain might take as much ground as he could till, and make it his own land, and yet leave enough to Abel's sheep to feed on ; a few acres would ferve for both their poffessions. But as families increased, and industry inlarged their stocks, their posseffions inlarged with the need of them; but yet it was commonly without any fixed property in the ground they made use of, till they incorporated, fettled them-Telves together, and built cities; and then, by confent, they came in time, to fet out the Q 2

the bounds of their diftinct territories, and agree on limits between them and their neighbours; and by laws within themfelves, fettled the properties of those of the fame fociety: for we fee, that in that part of the world which was first inhabited, and therefore like to be best peopled, even as low down as Abraham's time, they wandered with their flocks, and their herds, which was their fubstance, freely up and down; and this Abraham did, in a country where he was a stranger. Whence it is plain, that at least a great part of the land lay in common; that the inhabitants valued it not, nor claimed property in any more than they made use of. But when there was not room enough in the fame place, for their herds to feed together, they by confent, as Abraham and Lot did, Gen. xiii. 5. separated and inlarged their pasture, where it best liked them. And for the fame reason Esau went from his father, and his brother, and planted in mount Seir, Gen. xxxvi. 6.

§. 39. And thus, without fuppoling any private dominion, and property in Adam, over all the world, exclusive of all other men, which can no way be proved, nor any one's property be made out from it; but fuppoling the world given, as it was, to the children of men in common, we fee how labour could make men diftinct titles to feveral parcels of it, for their

their private uses; wherein there could be no doubt of right, no room for quarrel.

§. 40. Nor is it fo ftrange, as perhaps before confideration it may appear, that the property of labour should be able to overbalance the community of land: for it is labour indeed that puts the difference of value on every thing; and let any one confider what the difference is between an acre of land planted with tobacco or fugar, fown with wheat or barley, and an acre of the fame land lying in common, without any hufbandry upon it, and he will find, that the improvement of labour makes the far greater part of the value. I think it will be but a very modest computation to fay, that of the products of the earth useful to the life of man nine tenths are the effects of labour : nay, if we will rightly estimate things as they come to our use, and cast up the several expences about them, what in them is purely owing to nature, and what to labour, we shall find, that in most of them ninety-nine hundredths are wholly to be put on the account of labour.

§. 41. There cannot be a clearer demonftration of any thing, than feveral nations of the Americans are of this, who are rich in land, and poor in all the comforts of life; whom nature having furnished as liberally as any other people, with the materials of plenty, i. e. a fruitful foil, apt to produce in abundance, what might Q 3 ferve ferve for food, raiment, and delight; yet for want of improving it by labour, have not one hundredth part of the conveniencies we enjoy: and a king of a large and fruitful territory there, feeds, lodges, and is clad worfe than a day-labourer in England.

§. 42. To make this a little clearer, let us but trace some of the ordinary provisions of life, through their feveral progreffes, before they come to our use, and see how much they receive of their value from human industry, Bread, wine and cloth, are things of daily use, and great plenty; yet notwithstanding, acorns, water and leaves, or fkins, must be our bread, drink and cloathing, did not labour furnish us with these more useful commodities: for whatever bread is more worth than acorns, wine than water, and clotb or filk, than leaves, fkins or mofs, that is wholly owing to labour and industry; the one of thefe being the food and raiment which unaffisted nature furnishes us with ; the other, provisions which our industry and pains prepare for us, which how much they exceed the other in value, when any one hath computed, he will then fee how much labour makes the far greatest part of the value of things we enjoy in this world: and the ground which produces the materials, is fcarce to be reckoned in, as any, or at moft, but a very small part of it; so little, that even amongst us, land that is left wholly to nature, nature, that hath no improvement of pasturage, tillage, or planting, is called, as indeed it is, waste; and we shall find the benefit of it amount to little more than nothing.

This shews how much numbers of men are to be preferred to largeness of dominions; and that the increase of lands, and the right employing of them, is the great art of government : and that prince, who shall be fo wise and godlike, as by established laws of liberty to secure protection and encouragement to the honess industry of mankind, against the oppression of power and narrowness of party, will quickly be too hard for his neighbours : but this by the by. To return to the argument in hand,

§. 43. An acre of land, that bears here twenty bushels of wheat, and another in America, which, with the fame hufbandry, would do the like, are, without doubt, of the fame natural intrinsic value : but yet the benefit mankind receives from the one in a year, is worth 5 l. and from the other poffibly not worth a penny, if all the profit an Indian received from it were to be valued, and fold here; at least, I may truly fay, not one thousandth. It is labour then which puts the greatest part of value upon land, without which it would fcarcely be worth any thing : it is to that we owe the greatest part of all its useful products; for all that the straw, bran, bread, of that acre of wheat, is more worth Q 4

worth than the product of an acre of as good land, which lies waste, is all the effect of labour : for it is not barely the plough-man's pains, the reaper's and thresher's toil, and the baker's fweat, is to be counted into the bread we eat; the labour of those who broke the oxen, who digged and wrought the iron and stones, who felled and framed the timber employed about the plough, mill, oven, or any other utenfils, which are a vast number, requifite to this corn, from its being feed to be fown to its being made bread, must all be charged on the account of labour, and received as an effect of that : nature and the earth furnished only the almost worthless materials, as in themfelves. It would be a ftrange catalogue of things, that industry pro-vided and made use of, about every loaf of bread, before it came to our use, if we could trace them; iron, wood, leather, bark, timber, ftone, bricks, coals, lime, cloth, dving drugs, pitch, tar, maste, ropes, and all the materials made use of in the ship, that brought any of the commodities made use of by any of the workmen, to any part of the work; all which it would be almost impossible, at least too long, to reckon up.

§. 44. From all which it is evident, that though the things of nature are given in common, yet man, by being master of himfelf, and proprietor of bis own perfon, and the actions or labour of it, had ftill in himfelf the great of CIVIL-GOVERNMENT. 233 great foundation of property; and that, which made up the great part of what he applied to the fupport or comfort of his being, when invention and arts had improved the conve-niencies of life, was perfectly his own, and did not belong in common to others. §. 45. Thus labour, in the beginning, gave a right of property, wherever any one was pleafed to employ it upon what was com-mon, which remained a long while the far greater part, and is yet more than mankind makes use of. Men, at first, for the most part, contented themselves with what unpart, contented themfelves with what un-affisted nature offered to their necessities: and though afterwards, in fome parts of the world, (where the increase of people and ftock, with the use of money, had made land fcarce, and fo of some value) the several communities settled the bounds of their distinct territories, and by laws within themfelves regulated the properties of the private men of their fociety, and fo, by compact and agreement, fettled the property which labour and industry began; and the leagues that have been made between feveral flates and kingdoms, either expressly or tacitly difowning all claim and right to the land in the others possefiion, have, by common consent, given up their pretences to their natural common right, which originally they had to those countries, and so have, by positive agreement, fettled a property amongst themselves, in distinct parts and parcels of the earth; yet there are still great great tracts of ground to be found, which (the inhabitants thereof not having joined with the reft of mankind, in the confent of the use of their common money) lie waste, and are more than the people who dwell on it do, or can make use of, and fo still lie in common; the this can scarce happen amongst that part of mankind that have confented to the use of money.

§. 46. The greatest part of things really useful to the life of man, and such as the neceffity of fubfifting made the first com-moners of the world look after, as it doth the Americans now, are generally things of fbort duration; fuch as, if they are not confumed by use, will decay and perish of them-, felves : gold, filver and diamonds, are things that fancy or agreement hath put the value on, more than real use, and the necessary fupport of life. Now of those good things which nature hath provided in common, every one had a right (as hath been faid) to as much as he could use, and property in all that he could effect with his labour; all that his industry could extend to, to alter from the ftate nature had put it in, was his. He that gathered a hundred bushels of acorns or ap-ples, had thereby a property in them, they were his goods as foon as gathered. He was only to look, that he used them before they spoiled, elfe he took more than his share, and robbed others. And indeed it was a foolifh thing, as well as diffioneft, to hoard up more than I

OF CIVIL-GOVERNMENT. 235 than he could make use of. If he gave away a part to any body else, so that it perished not useless in his possible of that it perished made use of. And if he also bartered away plums, that would have rotted in a week, for nuts that would last good for his eating a whole year, he did no injury; he wasted not the common stock; destroyed no part of the portion of goods that belonged to others, so long as nothing perished useless in his hands. Again, if he would give his nuts for a piece of metal, pleased with its co-lour; or exchange his sheep for shells, or wool for a sparkling pebble or a diamond, and keep those by him all his life, he invaded not the right of others, he might heap up keep those by him all his life, he invaded not the right of others, he might heap up as much of these durable things as he pleased; the exceeding of the bounds of his just property not lying in the largeness of his possession, but the perishing of any thing uselely in it. §. 47. And thus came in the use of money, some lasting thing that men might keep with-out spoiling, and that by mutual confent men would take in exchange for the truly useful, but perishable supports of life would take in exchange for the truly uleful, but perifhable fupports of life. §. 48. And as different degrees of industry were apt to give men possible fillions in different proportions, so this invention of money gave them the opportunity to continue and en-large them: for fupposing an island, separate from all possible commerce with the rest of the world, wherein there were but an hun-dred families but there were theen borter dred families, but there were sheep, horses and cows, with other useful animals, wholfome fruits, and land enough for corn for a hundred thousand times as many, but nothing in the island, either because of its commonnels, or perishableness, fit to supply the place of money; what reason could any one have there to enlarge his possessions beyond the use of his family, and a plentiful supply to its confumption, either in what their own industry produced, or they could barter for like perishable, useful commodities, with others? Where there is not fome thing, both lafting and scarce, and so valuable to be hoarded up, there men will be apt to enlarge their poffeffions of land, were it never fo rich, never fo free for them to take ; for I alk, what would a man value ten thousand, or an hundred thousand acres of excellent land, ready cultivated, and well stocked too with cattle, in the middle of the inland parts of America, where he had no hopes of commerce with other parts of the world, to draw money to him by the fale of the product? It would not be worth the inclosing, and we should fee him give up again to the wild common of nature, whatever was more than would fupply the conveniencies of life to be had there for him and his family.

§. 49. Thus in the beginning all the world was America, and more fo than that is now; for no fuch thing as money was any where known. Find out fomething that hath the $\frac{1}{2}$

use and value of money amongst his neighbours, you shall see the same man will begin presently to enlarge his possessions.

you man de the lame man win begin pre-fently to enlarge his poffeffions. §. 50. But fince gold and filver, being little ufeful to the life of man in proportion to food, raiment, and carriage, has its value only from the confent of men, whereof only from the confent of men, whereof labour yet makes, in great part, the measure, it is plain, that men have agreed to a dispro-portionate and unequal possible of the earth, they having. by a tacit and voluntary con-fent, found out a way how a man may fairly possible more land than he himself can use the product of, by receiving in exchange for the overplus gold and filver, which may be hoarded up without injury to any one; these metals not spossible of the partage of things in an inequality of private possible of the second the product of the possible of the possible of the partage of the negative of the possible of the possi nands of the possess. This partage of things in an inequality of private possession, men have made practicable out of the bounds of fociety, and without compact, only by put-ting a value on gold and filver, and tacitly agreeing in the use of money: for in go-vernments, the laws regulate the right of property, and the possession of land is deter-mined by positive constitutions.

§. 51. And thus, I think, it is very eafy to conceive, without any difficulty, how labour could at first begin a title of property in the common things of nature, and how the spending it upon our uses bounded it. So that there could then be no reason of quarrelling about about title, nor any doubt about the largenefs of possefilion it gave. Right and conveniency went together; for as a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, fo he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of. This left no room for controversy about the title, nor for incroachment on the right of others; what portion a man carved to himself, was easily seen; and it was useless, as well as dishoness, to carve himself too much, or take more than he needed.

CHAP. VI.

Of Paternal Power.

§. 52. I T may perhaps be cenfured as an impertinent criticifm, in a difcourfe of this nature, to find fault with words and names, that have obtained in the world: and yet poffibly it may not be amifs to offer new ones, when the old are apt to lead men into miftakes, as this of paternal power probably has done, which feems fo to place the power of parents over their children wholfy in the father, as if the mother had no fhare in it; whereas, if we confult reafon or revelation, we fhall find, the hath att equal title. This may give one reafon to afk, whether this might not be more properly called parental power? for whatever obligation nature and

and the right of generation lays on children, it must certainly bind them equal to both the concurrent causes of it. And accordingly we see the positive law of God every where joins them together, without distinction, when it commands the obedience of children, Honour thy father and thy mother, Exod. xx. 12. Whossever curset bis father or bis mother, Lev. xx. 9. Ye shall fear every man bis mother and bis father, Lev. xix. 3. Children, obey your parents, &c. Eph. vi. 1. is the still of the Old and New Testament.

§. 53. Had but this one thing been well confidered, without looking any deeper into the matter, it might perhaps have kept men from running into those gross mistakes, they have made, about this power of parents; which, however it might, without any great harshness, bear the name of absolute dominion, and regal authority, when under the title of paternal power it seemed appropriated to the father, would yet have founded but oddly, and in the very name shewn the abfurdity, if this supposed absolute power over children had been called parental; and thereby have discovered, that it belonged to the mother too: for it will but very ill ferve the turn of those men, who contend to much for the abfolute power and authority of the fatherbood, as they call it, that the mother should have any share in it; and it would have but ill supported the monarchy they contend for, when when by the very name it appeared, that that fundamental authority, from whence they would derive their government of a fingle perfon only, was not placed in one, but two perfons jointly. But to let this of names pafs.

§. 54. Though I have faid above, Chap. II. That all men by nature are equal, I cannot be fupposed to understand all forts of equality : age or virtue may give men a just precedency : excellency of parts and merit may place others above the common level: birth may fubject fome, and alliance or benefits others, to pay an observance to those to whom nature, gratitude, or other respects, may have made it due: and yet all this confifts with the equality, which all men are in, in respect of jurifdiction or dominion one over another; which was the equality I there fpoke of, as proper to the bufinefs in hand, being that equal right, that every man hath, to his natural freedom, without being fubjected to the will or authority of any other man.

§. 55. Children, I confeis, are not born in this full ftate of equality, though they are born to it. Their parents have a fort of rule and jurifdiction over them, when they come into the world, and for fome time after; but it is but a temporary one. The bonds of this fubjection are like the fwaddling clothes they art wrapt up in, and fupported by, in the weaknefs of their infancy: age and reafon reason as they grow up, loosen them, till at length they drop quite off, and leave a man at his own free disposal.

§. 56. Adam was created a perfect man, his body and mind in full poffettion of their ftrength and reason, and so was capable, from the first instant of his being to provide for his own fupport and prefervation, and govern his actions according to the dictates of the law of reafon which God had implanted in him. From him the world is peopled with his defcendants, who are all born infants, weak and helpless, without knowledge or understanding: but to supply the defects of this imperfect state, till the improvement of growth and age hath removed them, Adam and Eve, and after them all parents were, by the law of nature, under an obligation to preferve, nourifh, and educate the children they had begotten; not as their own workmanship, but the workmanship of their. own maker, the Almighty, to whom they were to be accountable for them.

§. 57. The law, that was to govern Adam, was the fame that was to govern all his posterity, the law of reason. But his offfpring having another way of entrance into the world, different from him, by a natural birth, that produced them ignorant and without the use of reason, they were not presently under that law; for no body can be under a law, which is not promulgated R to

to him; and this law being promulgated or made known by reafon only, he that is not come to the use of his reason, cannot be faid to be under this law; and Adam's children, being not prefently as foon as born under this law of reafon, were not prefently free : for law, in its true notion, is not fo much the limitation as the direction of a free and intelligent agent to his proper interest, and prefcribes no farther than is for the general good of those under that law : could they be happier without it, the law, as an useles thing, would of itfelf vanish; and that ill deferves the name of confinement which hedges us in only from bogs and precipices. So that, however it may be mistaken, the end of law is not to abolish or restrain, but to preferve and enlarge freedom : for in all the flates of created beings capable of laws, where there is no law, there is no freedom : for liberty is, to be free from restraint and violence from others; which cannot be, where there is no law: but freedom is not, as we are told, a liberty for every man to do what he lists: (for who could be free, when every other man's humour might domineer over him?) but a liberty to difpofe, and order as he lifts, his perfon, actions, poffeffions, and his whole property, within the allowance of those laws under which he is, and therein not to be fubject to the arbitrary will of another, but freely follow his own.

§. 58. The power, then, that parents have over their children, arifes from that duty which is incumbent on them, to take care of their off-fpring, during the imperfect flate of childhood. To inform the mind, and govern the actions of their yet ignorant nonage, till reafon shall take its place, and ease them of that trouble, is what the children want, and the parents are bound to: for God having given man an understanding to direct his actions, has allowed him a freedom of will, and liberty of acting, as properly belonging thereunto, within the bounds of that law he is under. But whilft he is in an estate, wherein he has not understanding of his own to direct his will, he is not to have any will of his own to follow: he that understands for him, must will for him too; he must prescribe to his will, and regulate his actions; but when he comes to the estate that made his father a freeman, the fon is a freeman too.

§. 59. This holds in all the laws a man is under, whether natural or civil. Is a man under the law of nature ? What made him free of that law ? what gave him a free difpoing of his property, according to his own will, within the compass of that law ? I answer, a state of maturity wherein he might be supposed capable to know that law, that so he might keep his actions within the bounds of it. When he has acquired that state, he is R 2 prefumed

prefumed to know how far that law is to be his guide, and how far he may make ufe of his freedom, and fo comes to have it; till then, fome body elfe must guide him, who is prefumed to know how far the law allows a liberty. If fuch a ftate of reafon, fuch an age of discretion made bim free, the fame shall make his fon free too. Is a man under the law of England? What made him free of that law? that is, to have the liberty to difpofe of his actions and poffeffions according to his own will, within the permiffion of that law? A capacity of knowing that law; which is supposed by that law, at the age of one and twenty years, and in fome cafes fooner. If this made the father free, it shall make the fon free too. Till then we fee the law allows the fon to have no will, but he is to be guided by the will of his father or guardian, who is to understand for him. And if the father die, and fail to fubflitute a deputy in his truft; if he hath not provided a tutor, to govern his fon, during his minority, during his want of understanding, the law takes care to do it; fome other muft govern him, and be a will to him, till he hath attained to a state of freedom, and his understanding be fit to take the government of his will. But after that, the father and fon are equally free as much as tutor and pupil after nonage; equally fubjects of the fame law together, without any dominion left

OF CIVIL-GOVERNMENT. 245 eft in the father over the life, liberty, or eftate of his fon, whether they be only in the flate and under the law of nature, or under the politive laws of an eftablished government.

§. 60. But if, through defects that may happen out of the ordinary course of nature, any one comes not to fuch a degree of reaany one comes not to fuch a degree of rea-fon, wherein he might be fuppofed capable of knowing the law, and fo living within the rules of it, he is never capable of being a free man, he is never let loofe to the difpofure of his own will (becaufe he knows no bounds to it, has not understanding, its proper guide) but is continued under the tuition and go-vernment of others all the time his vernment of others, all the time his own understanding is uncapable of that charge. And fo lunatics and ideots are never fet free from the government of their parents; chilfrom the government of their parents; chi-dren, who are not as yet come unto those years whereat they may have; and innocents which are excluded by a natural defect from ever having; thirdly, madmen, which for the pre-sent cannot possible have the use of right reason to guide themselves, have for their guide, the reason that guideth other men which are tutors over them, to feek and procure their good for them, fays Hooker, Eccl. Pol. lib. i. fest. 7. All which feems no more than that duty, which God and nature has laid on man, as well as other creatures, to preferve their offfpring, till they can be able to shift for themfelves. R₂ felves, and will fcarce amount to an inftance or proof of parents regal authority. §. 61. Thus we are born free, as we are born rational; not that we have actually the exercife of either : age, that brings one, brings with it the other too. And thus we fee how natural freedom and subjection to parents may confift together, and are both founded on the fame principle. A child is free by his father's title, by his father's understanding, which is to govern him till he hath it of his own. The freedom of a man at years of diference, and the fubjection of a child to his parents, whilst yet short of that age, are so confistent, and fo diftinguishable, that the most blinded contenders for monarchy, by right of fatherhood, cannot mils this difference; the most obstinate cannot but allow their confiftency : for were their doctrine all true, were the right heir of Adam now known, and by that title fettled a monarch in his throne, invefted with all the abfolute unlimited power Sir Robert Filmer talks of; if he should die as soon as his heir were born, must not the child, notwithstanding he were never so free, never so much sovereign, be in fubjection to his mother and nurfe, to tutors and governors, till age and education brought him reason and ability to govern himfelf and others? The neceffities of his life, the health of his body, and the information of his mind, would require him to be directed directed by the will of others, and not his own; and yet will any one think, that this restraint and subjection were inconsistent with, or spoiled him of that liberty or sovereignty he had a right to, or gave away his empire to those who had the government of his nonage? This government over him only prepared him the better and sooner for it. If any body should alk me, when my fon is of age to be free? I shall answer, just when his monarch is of age to govern. But at what time, fays the judicious Hooker, Eccl. Pol. l. i. fect. 6. a man may be faid to have attained fo far forth the use of reason, as suf-ficeth to make him capable of those laws whereby he is then bound to guide his actions: this is a great deal more easy for sense to discern, than for any one by skill and learning to determine. §. 62. Common-wealths themselves take notice of, and allow, that there is a time when men are to begin to act like free men, and therefore till that time require not oaths of fealty, or allegiance, or other public owning of, or fubmiffion to the government of their countries.

§. 63. The freedom then of man, and li-berty of acting according to his own will, is grounded on his having reafon, which is able to inftruct him in that law he is to govern himfelf by, and make him know how far he is left to the freedom of his own will. To turn him loofe to an unreftrained liberty, R 4 before before he has reason to guide him, is not the allowing him the privilege of his nature to be free; but to thrush him out amongh brutes, and abandon him to a state as wretched, and as much beneath that of a man, as their's. This is that which puts the authority into the parents hands to govern the minority of their children. God hath made it their business to employ this care on their offfpring, and hath placed in them suitable inclinations of tenderness and concern to temper this power, to apply it, as his wisdom defigned it, to the children's good, as long as they should need to be under it.

§. 64. But what reason can hence advance this care of the parents due to their off-spring into an abfolute arbitrary dominion of the father, whose power reaches no farther, than by such a discipline, as he finds most effectual, to give such strength and health to their bodies, such vigour and rectitude to their minds, as may best fit his children to be most useful to themselves and others; and, if it be neceffary to his condition, to make them work, when they are able, for their own such the mother too has her share with the father.

too has her fhare with the father. §. 65. Nay, this power to little belongs to the father by any peculiar right of nature, but only as he is guardian of his children, that when he quits his care of them, he lofes his power over them, which goes along with their

their nourishment and education, to which it is infeparably annexed; and it belongs as much to the foster-father of an exposed child, as to the natural father of another. So little power does the bare att of begetting give a man over his iffue; if all his care ends there. and this be all the title he hath to the name and authority of a father. And what will become of this paternal power in that part of the world, where one woman hath more than one husband at a time? or in those parts of America, where, when the hufband and wife part, which happens frequently, the children are all left to the mother, follow her, and are wholly under her care and provision? If the father die whilst the children are young, do they not naturally every where owe the fame obedience to their mother, during their minority, as to their father were he alive? and will any one fay, that the mother hath a legiflative power over her children? that the can make ftanding rules, which shall be of perpetual obligation, by which they ought to regulate all the concerns of their property, and bound their liberty all the course of their lives? or can the inforce the observation of them with capital punishments? for this is the proper power of the magistrate, of which the father hath not fo much as the shadow. His command over his children is but temporary, and reaches not their life or property: it is but a help to the weakness and imperfection imperfection of their nonage, a discipline neceffary to their education: and though a father may dispose of his own possessions as he pleases, when his children are out of danger of perishing for want, yet his power extends not to the lives or goods, which either their own industry, or another's bounty has made their's; nor to their liberty neither, when they are once arrived to the infranchisement of the years of discretion. The father's empire then ceases, and he can from thence forwards no more dispose of the liberty of his fon, than that of any other man: and it must be far from an absolute or perpetual jurifdiction, from which a man may withdraw himself, having licence from divine authority to leave father and mother, and cleave to bis wife.

§. 66. But though there be a time when a child comes to be as free from fubjection to the will and command of his father, as the father himfelf is free from fubjection to the will of any body elfe, and they are each under no other reftraint, but that which is common to them both, whether it be the law of nature, or municipal law of their country; yet this freedom exempts not a fon from that bonour which he ought, by the law of God and nature, to pay his parents. God having made the parents inftruments in his great defign of continuing the race of mankind, and the occafions of life to their children :

dren; as he hath laid on them an obligation to nourish, preferve, and bring up their offfpring; so he has laid on the children a perpetual obligation of honouring their parents, which containing in it an inward effectm and reverence to be fhewn by all outward expreffions, ties up the child from any thing that may ever injure or affront, disturb or endanger, the happiness or life of those from whom he received his; and engages him in all actions of defence, relief, affistance and comfort of those, by whose means he entered into being, and has been made capable of any enjoyments of life: from this obligation no state, no freedom can absolve children. But this is very far from giving patents a power of command over their children, or an authority to make laws and difpofs as they please of their lives or liberties. It is one thing to owe honour, respect, gratitude and affiftance; another to require an abfolute obedience and fubmiffion. The bonour due to parents, a monarch in his throne owes his mother; and yet this leffens not his authority, nor fubjects him to her government.

§. 67. The subjection of a minor places in the father a temporary government, which terminates with the minority of the child : and the bonour due from a child, places in the parents a perpetual right to respect, reverence, support and compliance too, more or less, as the father's care, cost, and kindness in his education, has been more or lefs. This In his education, has been more of lets. This ends not with minority, but holds in all parts and conditions of a man's life. The want of diftinguifhing these two powers, viz. that which the father hath in the right of tuition, during minority, and the right of bonour all his life, may perhaps have caused a great part of the mistakes about this matter : for part of the miftakes about this matter: for to fpeak properly of them, the first of these is rather the privilege of children, and duty of parents, than any prerogative of paternal power. The nourishment and education of their children is a charge fo incumbent on parents for their children's good, that nothing can absolve them from taking care of it : and though the power of commanding and chassifing them go along with it, yet God hath woven into the principles of human nature such a tenderness for their off-spring, that there is little fear that parents should use their power with too much rigour; the excess is feldom with too much rigour; the excefs is feldom on the fevere fide, the ftrong byafs of nature drawing the other way. And therefore God almighty when he would express his gentle dealing with the Ifraclites, he tells them, that though he chaftened them, be chaftened them as a man chastens bis fon, Deut. viii. 5. i. e. with tenderness and affection, and kept them under no feverer discipline than what was absolutely best for them, and had been lefs kindnefs to have flackened. This is that power to which children are commanded obedience.

§. 68. On the other fide, bonour and fupport, all that which gratitude requires to return for the benefits received by and from them, is the indifpenfible duty of the child, and the proper privilege of the parents. This is intended for the parents advantage, as the other is for the child's; though education, the parents duty, feems to have most power, because the ignorance and infirmities of childhood stand in need of restraint and correction; which is a vifible exercise of rule, and a kind of dominion. And that duty which is comprehended in the word bonour, requires lefs obedience, though the obligation be stronger on grown, than younger children: for who can think the command, Children obey your parents, requires in a man, that has children of his own, the fame fubmiffion to his father, as it does in his yet young children to him; and that by this precept he were bound to obey all his father's commands, if, out of a conceit of authority, he should have the indiferentian to treat him ftill as a boy?

§. 69. The first part then of paternal power, or rather duty, which is education, belongs fo to the father, that it terminates at a certain seafon; when the business of education is over, it ceases of itself, and is also alienable before: for a man may put the tuition of his fon in other hands; and he that has made his fon an apprentice to another, has difcharged him, during that time, of a great part of his obedience both to himself and to his mother. But all the duty of bonour, the other part, remains never the lefs entire to them; nothing can cancel that: it is fo infeparable from them both, that the father's authority cannot disposses the mother of this right, nor can any man discharge his son from bonouring her that bore him. But both thefe are very far from a power to make laws, and inforcing them with penalties, that may reach oftate, liberty, limbs and life. The power of commanding ends with nonage; and though, after that, honour and respect, fupport and defence, and whatsoever gra-titude can oblige a man to, for the highest benefits he is naturally capable of, be always due from a fon to his parents; yet all this puts no scepter into the father's hand, no fovereign power of commanding. He has no dominion over his fon's property, or actions; nor any right, that his will should preferibe to his fon's in all things; however it may become his fon in many things, not very inconvenient to him and his family, to pay a deference to it.

§. 70. A man may owe bonour and refpect to an ancient, or wife man; defence to his child or triend; relief and fupport to the diffreffed; and gratitude to a benefactor, to fuch a degree, that all he has, all he can do, cannot cannot fufficiently pay it : but all these give no authority, no right to any one, of making laws over him from whom they are owing. And it is plain, all this is due not only to the bare title of father; not only because, as has been faid, it is owing to the mother too; but because these obligations to parents, and the degrees of what is required of children, may be varied by the different care and kindnefs, trouble and expence, which is often employed upon one child more than another.

§. 71. This shews the reason how it comes to pais, that parents in focieties, where they themselves are subjects, retain a power over their children, and have as much right to their fubjection, as those who are in the state of nature. Which could not poffibly be, if all political power were only paternal, and that in truth they were one and the fame thing : for then, all paternal power being in the prince, the fubject could naturally have none of it. But these two powers, political and paternal, are so perfectly diffinct and separate; are built upon so different foundations, and given to fo different ends, that every fubject that is a father, has as much a paternal power over his children, as the prince has over his: and every prince, that has parents, owes them as much filial duty and obedience, as the meaneft of his subjects do to their's; and can therefore contain not any part part or degree of that kind of dominion, which a prince or magistrate has over his fubject.

§. 72. Though the obligation on the parents to bring up their children; and the ob-ligation on children to bonour their parents, contain all the power on the one hand, and fubmiffion on the other, which are proper to this relation, yet there is another power ordinarily in the father, whereby he has a tie on the obedience of his children; which tho' it be common to him with other men, yet the occasions of shewing it, almost constantly happening to fathers in their private families, and the inftances of it elfewhere being rare, and lefs taken notice of, it paffes in the world for a part of paternal jurifdiction. And this is the power men generally have to before their eflates on those who please them best; the possession of the father being the ex-pectation and inheritance of the children, ordinarily in certain proportions, according to the law and cuftom of each country; yet it is commonly in the father's power to bestow it with a more sparing or liberal hand, according as the behaviour of this or that child hath comported with his will and humour.

§. 73. This is no fmall tie on the obedience of children: and there being always annexed to the enjoyment of land, a fubmiffion to the government of the country, of which that land is a part; it has been commonly supposed, that a father could oblige his posterity to that government, of which he himself was a subject, and that his compact held them; whereas, it being only a necesfary condition annexed to the land, and the inheritance of an eftate which is under that government, reaches only those who will take it on that condition, and fo is no natural tie or engagement, but a voluntary fubmiffion: for every man's children being by nature as free as himself, or any of his ancestors ever were, may, whilst they are in that freedom, choofe what fociety they will join themfelves to, what common-wealth they will put themselves under. But if they will enjoy the inberitance of their ancestors, they must. take it on the fame terms their anceftors had it, and fubmit to all the conditions annexed to fuch a poffeffion. By this power indeed fathers oblige their children to obedience to themfelves, even when they are past minority, and most commonly too subject them to this or that political power: but neither of these by any peculiar right of fatherhood, but by the reward they have in their hands to inforce and recompence fuch a compliance; and is no more power than what a French man has over an English man, who by the hopes of an estate he will leave him, will certainly have a ftrong tie on his obedience: and if, when it is left him, he will enjoy it, he s he must certainly take it upon the conditions annexed to the possibilition of land in that country where it lies, whether it be France or England.

§. 74. To conclude then, tho' the father's power of commanding extends no farther than the minority of his children, and to a than the minority of his children, and to a degree only fit for the difcipline and go-vernment of that age; and tho' that bonour and refpect, and all that which the Latins called piety, which they indifpenfibly owe to their parents all their life-time, and in all effates, with all that fupport and defence is due to them, gives the father no power of governing, i. e. making laws and enacting penalties on his children, though by all this penalties on his children; though by all this he has no dominion over the property or actions of his fon: yet it is obvious to conactions of his ion: yet it is obvious to con-ceive how eafy it was, in the first ages of the world, and in places still, where the thinness of people gives families leave to separate into unposses or plant themselves in yet vacant habitations, for the father of the family to become the prince of * it; he had been

[•] It is no improbable opinion therefore, which the archphilosopher was of, that the chief person in every houshold was always, as it were, a king: so when numbers of houholds joined themselves in civil societies together, kings were the first kind of governors amongst them, which is also, as it seemeth, the reason why the name of fathers continued still in them, who, of fathers, were made rulers; as also also also also be the set of the set

been a ruler from the beginning of the infancy of his children : and fince without fome government it would be hard for them to live together, it was likelieft it should, by the express or tacit confent of the children when they were grown up, be in the father, where it feemed without any change barely to continue; when indeed nothing more was required to it, than the permitting the father to exercise alone, in his family, that executive power of the law of nature, which every free man naturally hath, and by that permiffion refigning up to him a monarchical power, whilf they remained in it. But that this was not by any paternal right, but only by the confent of his children, is evident from hence, that no body doubts, but if a stranger, whom chance or bufiness had brought to his. family, had there killed any of his children, or committed any other fact, he might condemn and put him to death, or otherwise have punished him, as well as any of his children : S 2

also the ancient custom of governors to do as Melchizedee, and being kings, to exercise the office of priests, which fathers did at the first, grew perhaps by the same occasion. Howbeit, this is not the only kind of regiment that has been received in the world. The inconveniences of one kind have caused fundry others to be devised; so that in a word, all public regiment, of what kind foever, feemeth evidently to have risen from the deliberate advice, confultation and composition between men, judging it convenient and behoveful; there being no impassibility in nature confidered by itelf, but that man might have lived without any public regiment. Hosker's Eccl. P. lib. i. fræ. 10.

children; which it was impoffible he fhould do by virtue of any paternal authority over one who was not his child, but by virtue of that executive power of the law of nature, which, as a man, he had a right to: and he alone could punish him in his family, where the respect of his children had laid by the exercise of such a power, to give way to the dignity and authority they were willing should remain in him, above the rest of his family.

§. 75. Thus it was eafy, and almost na-tural for children, by a tacit, and fcarce avoid-able consent, to make way for the father's authority and government. They had been accustomed in their childhood to follow his direction, and to refer their little differences to him; and when they were men, who fitter to rule them? Their little properties, and lefs covetousness, feldom afforded greater con-troversies; and when any should arife, where could they have a fitter umpire than he, by whofe care they had every one been fustained and brought up, and who had a tendernefs for them all? It is no wonder that they made no diftinction betwixt minority and full age; nor looked after one and twenty, or any other age that might make them the free difpofers of themfelves and fortunes, when they could have no defire to be out of their pupilage: the government they had been under, during it, continued fill to be more their

OF CIVIL-GOVERNMENT. 261 their protection than reftraint; and they could no where find a greater fecurity to their peace, liberties, and fortunes, than in the rule of a father.

§. 76. Thus the natural fathers of families, by an infenfible change, became the politic monarchs of them too: and as they chanced to live long, and leave able and worthy heirs, for feveral fucceffions, or otherwife; fo they laid the foundations of hereditary, or elective kingdoms, under feveral conftitutions and mannors, according as chance, contrivance, or occasions happened to mould them. But if princes have their titles in their fathers right, and it be a fufficient proof of the natural right of fathers to political authority, because they commonly were those in whose hands we find, de facto, the exercise of government: I fay, if this argument be good, it will as ftrongly prove, that all princes, nay princes only, ought to be priefts, fince it is as certain, that in the beginning, the father of the family was prieft, as that he was ruler n his own houshold.

CHAP. VII.

Of Political or Civil Society.

§. 77. GOD having made man fuch a creature, that in his own judgment, it was not good for him to be alone, S 3 put put him under strong obligations of necessity, convenience, and inclination to drive him into fociety, as well as fitted him with un-derstanding and language to continue and enjoy it. The first fociety was between man and wife, which gave beginning to that between parents and children; to which, in time, that between mafter and fervant came to be added : and though all these might, and commonly did meet together, and make up but one family, wherein the master or mistress of it had some sort of rule proper to a family; each of these, or all together, came fhort of political fociety, as we shall see, if we consider the different ends, ties, and bounds of each of thefe.

§. 78. Conjugal fociety is made by a voluntary compact between man and woman; and tho' it confift chiefly in fuch a communion and right in one another's bodies as is necelfary to its chief end, procreation; yet it draws with it mutual support and affistance, and a communion of interests too, as necesfary not only to unite their care and affection, but also necessary to their common off-spring, who have a right to be nourifhed, and maintained by them, till they are able to provide for themselves.

§. 79. For the end of conjunction, between male and female, being not barely procreation, but the continuation of the species; this conjunction betwixt male and female ought to laft.

last, even after procreation, fo long as is necessary to the nourishment and support of the young ones, who are to be fuftained by those that got them, till they are able to thift and provide for themfelves. This rule, which the infinite wife maker hath fet to the works of his hands, we find the inferior creatures fleadily obey. In those viviparous animals which feed on grafs, the conjunction between male and female lasts no longer than the very act of copulation ; because the teat of the dam being fufficient to nourish the young, till it be able to feed on grafs, the male only begets, but concerns not himfelf for the female or young, to whole fultenance he can contribute nothing. But in beafts of prey the conjunction lasts longer : because the dam not being able well to fubfift herfelf, and nourish her numerous off-spring by her own prey alone, a more laborious, as well as more dangerous way of living, than by feeding on grafs, the affiftance of the male is neceffary to the maintenance of their common family, which cannot fubfift till they are able to prey for themselves, but by the joint care of male and female. The same is to be observed in all birds, (except fome domeftic ones, where plenty of food excuses the cock from feeding, and taking care of the young brood) whole young needing food in the neft, the cock and hen continue mates, till the young are able $ 4 to

to use their wing, and provide for themfelves.

§. 80. And herein I think lies the chief, if not the only reason, why the male and fe-male in mankind are tied to a longer conjunction than other creatures, viz. because the female is capable of conceiving, and de facto is commonly with child again, and brings forth too a new birth, long before the former is out of a dependency for fupport on his parents help, and able to fhift for himfelf, and has all the affiftance is due to him from his parents: whereby the father, who is bound to take care for those he hath begot, is under an obligation to continue in conjugal fociety with the fame woman longer than other creatures, whofe young being able to fubfift of themfelves, before the time of procreation returns again, the conjugal bond diffolves of itfelf, and they are at liberty, till Hymen at his ufual anniverfary feafon fummons them again to chufe new mates. Wherein one cannot but admire the wifdom of the great Creator, who having given to man fore-fight, and an ability to lay up for the future, as well as to fupply the prefent neceffity, hath made it neceffary, that fociety of man and wife should be more lasting, that force of man and wife should be more lasting, than of male and female amongst other creatures i that fo their industry might be encouraged, and their interest better united, to make provision and lay up goods for their common iffue, which uncertain uncertain mixture, or eafy and frequent folutions of conjugal fociety would mightily difturb.

§. 81. But tho' thefe are ties upon mankind, which make the conjugal bonds more firm and lafting in man, than the other fpecies of animals; yet it would give one reafon to enquire, why this compact, where procreation and education are fecured, and inheritance taken care for, may not be made determinable, either by confent, or at a certain time, or upon certain conditions, as well as any other voluntary compacts, there being no neceffity in the nature of the thing, nor to the ends of it, that it fhould always be for life; I mean, to fuch as are under no reftraint of any positive law, which ordains all fuch contracts to be perpetual.

§. 82. But the hufband and wife, though they have but one common concern, yet having different understandings, will unavoidably fometimes have different wills too : it therefore being neceffary that the last determination, i. e. the rule, should be placed fomewhere; it naturally falls to the man's share, as the abler and the stronger. But this reaching but to the things of their common interest and property, leaves the wife in the full and free possession of what by contract is her peculiar right, and gives the hufband no more power over her life than the has over his; the power of the hufband being fo 4

to far from that of an abfolute monarch, that the wife has in many cafes a liberty to feparate from him, where natural right, or their contract allows it; whether that contract be made by themfelves in the ftate of nature, or by the cuftoms or laws of the country they live in; and the children upon fuch feparation fall to the father or mother's lot, as fuch contract does determine.

§. 83. For all the ends of marriage being to be obtained under politic government, as well as in the state of nature, the civil magiftrate doth not abridge the right or power of either naturally neceffary to those ends, viz. procreation and mutual support and affistance whilft they are together; but only decides any controverly that may arile between man and wife about them. If it were otherwife, and that absolute fovereignty and power of life and death naturally belonged to the hufband, and were necessary to the fociety between man and wife, there could be no matrimony in any of those countries where the husband is allowed no fuch abfolute authority. But the ends of matrimony requiring no fuch power in the hufband, the condition of conjugal fociety put it not in him, it being not at all neceffary to that state. Conjugal fociety could subfist and attain its ends without it; nay, community of goods, and the power over them, mutual affiftance and maintenance, and other things belonging to conjugal fociety, might

might be varied and regulated by that contract which unites man and wife in that fociety, as far as may confift with procreation and the bringing up of children till they could fhift for themfelves; nothing being neceffary to any fociety, that is not neceffary to the ends for which it is made.

§. 84. The fociety betwixt parents and children, and the diffinct rights and powers belonging refpectively to them, I have treated of fo largely, in the foregoing chapter, that I fhall not here need to fay any thing of it. And I think it is plain, that it is far different from a politic fociety.

§. 85. Master and servant are names as old as hiftory, but given to those of far different condition; for a freeman makes himfelf a fervant to another, by felling him, for a certain time, the fervice he undertakes to do, in exchange for wages he is to receive : and though this commonly puts him into the family of his mafter, and under the ordinary discipline thereof; yet it gives the master but a temporary power over him, and no greater than what is contained in the contract between them. But there is another fort of fervants," which by a peculiar name we call flaves, who being captives taken in a just war, are by the right of nature subjected to the absolute dominion and arbitrary power of their masters. These men having, as I fay, forfeited their lives, and with it their liberties. 5 liberties, and loft their eftates; and being in the state of slavery, not capable of any property, cannot in that flate be confidered as any part of civil fociety; the chief end whereof is the prefervation of property. §. 86. Let us therefore confider a mafter of a family with all these fubordinate rela-tions of wife, children, fervants, and flaves, united under the domestic rule of a family; which what refer blance for a real barrier. which, what refemblance foever it may have in its order, offices, and number too, with a little common-wealth, yet is very far from it, both in its conftitution, power and end: or if it must be thought a monarchy, and the paterfamilias the absolute monarch in it, absolute monarchy will have but a very shattered and short power, when it is plain, by what has been faid before, that the master of the family has a very diffinct and differently limited power, both as to time and extent, over those feveral perfons that are in it; for excepting the flave (and the family is as much a family, and his power as paterfamilias as great, whether there be any flaves in his family or no) he has no legislative power of life and death over any of them, and none too but what a mistress of a family may have as well as he. And he certainly can have no absolute power over the whole family, who has but a very limited one over every individual in it. But how a family, or any other fo-ciety of men, differ from that which is properly perly political fociety, we shall best see, by confidering wherein political fociety itself confist.

§. 87. Man being born, as has been proved, with a title to perfect freedom, and an un-controuled enjoyment of all the rights and privileges of the law of nature, equally with any other man, or number of men in the world, hath by nature a power, not only to preferve his property, that is, his life, liberty and estate, against the injuries and attempts of other men; but to judge of, and punish the breaches of that law in others, as he is persuaded the offence deserves, even with death itself, in crimes where the heinousness of the fact, in his opinion, requires it. But because no political fociety can be, nor subsist, without having in itself the power to preferve the property, and in order thereunto, punish the offences of all those of that society; there, and there only is *political fo-*ciety, where every one of the members hath quitted this natural power, refigned it up into the hands of the community in all cafes that exclude him not from appealing for protection to the law established by it. And thus all private judgment of every particular member being excluded, the community comes to be umpire, by fettled ftanding rules, indifferent, and the fame to all parties; and by men having authority from the community, nity, for the execution of those rules, decides all the differences that may happen between any members of that fociety concerning any matter of right; and punishes those offences which any member hath committed against. the fociety, with fuch penalties as the law has established : whereby it is easy to discern, who are, and who are not, in political fociety together. Those who are united into one body, and have a common established law and judicature to appeal to, with authority to decide controversies between them, and punish offenders, are in civil fociety one with another : but those who have no fuch common people, I mean on earth, are still in the ftate of nature, each being, where there is no other, judge for himself, and execu-tioner; which is, as I have before shewed it, the perfect state of nature.

§. 88. And thus the common-wealth comes by a power to fet down what punifhment fhall belong to the feveral transgreffions which they think worthy of it, committed amongst the members of that fociety, (which is the power of making laws) as well as it has the power to punifh any injury done unto any of its members, by any one that is not of it, (which is the power of war and peace;) and all this for the prefervation of the property of all the members of that fociety, as far as is possible. But though every man who has entered entered into civil fociety, and is become a member of any common-wealth, has thereby quitted his power to punish offences, against the law of nature, in profecution of his own private judgment, yet with the judgment of offences, which he has given up to the legiflative in all cafes, where he can appeal to the magistrate, he has given a right to the common-wealth to employ his force, for the execution of the judgments of the commonwealth, whenever he shall be called to it; which indeed are his own judgments, they being made by himfelf, or his reprefentative. And herein we have the original of the legif-lative and executive power of civil fociety, which is to judge by ftanding laws, how far offences are to be punished, when committed within the common-wealth; and also to determine. by occafional judgments founded on the prefent circumstances of the fact, how far injuries from without are to be vindicated; and in both these to employ all the force of all the members, when there shall be need.

§. 89. Where-ever therefore any number of men are fo united into one fociety, as to quit every one his executive power of the law of nature, and to refign it to the public, there and there only is a political, or civil fociety. And this is done, where-ever any number of men, in the flate of nature, enter into fociety to make one people, one body politic, politic, under one fupreme government; or elfe when any one joins himfelf to, and in-corporates with any government already made: for hereby he authorizes the fociety, or which is all one, the legiflative thereof, to make laws for him, as the public good of the fociety shall require; to the execution where-of, his own affistance (as to his own decrees) is due. And this puts men out of a flate of nature into that of a common-wealth, by fetting up a judge on earth, with authority to de-termine all the controversies, and redress the injuries that may happen to any member of the common-wealth; which judge is the degifiative, or magistrates appointed by it. And where-ever there are any number of men, however affociated, that have no fuch decifive power to appeal to, there they are ftill in the ftate of nature. §. 90. Hence it is evident, that abfolute

§. 90. Hence it is evident, that abfolute monarchy, which by fome men is counted the only government in the world, is indeed inconfiftent with civil fociety, and fo can be no form of civil-government at all: for the end of civil fociety, being to avoid, and remedy those inconveniencies of the state of nature, which neceffarily follow from every man's being judge in his own case, by setting up a known authority, to which every one of that society may appeal upon any injury received, or controversy that may arise, and which

which every one of the * fociety ought to obey; where-ever any perfons are, who have not fuch an authority to appeal to, for the decifion of any difference between them, there those perfons are ftill in the flate of nature; and fo is every abfolute prince, in respect of those who are under his dominion.

§. 91. For he being fuppofed to have all, both legiflative and executive power in himfelf alone, there is no judge to be found, no appeal lies open to any one, who may fairly, and indifferently, and with authority decide, and from whole decifion relief and redrefs may be expected of any injury or inconviency, that may be fuffered from the prince, or by his order : fo that fuch a man, however intitled, Czar, or Grand Seignior, or how you please, is as much in the state of nature, with all under his dominion, as he is with the reft of mankind: for where-ever any two men are, who have no ftanding rule, and common judge to appeal to on earth, for the determination of controverfies of right betwixt them, there they are still in the state of

• The public power of all fociety is above every foul contained in the fame fociety; and the principal use of that power is, to give laws unto all that are under it, which laws in fuch cases we must obey, unless there be reason shewed which may necessarily inforce, that the law of reason, or of God, doth enjoin the contrary, Hook. Eccl. Pol. 1. i. Jea. 16.

of * nature, and under all the inconveniencies of it, with only this woful difference to the fubject, or rather flave of an abfolute prince: that whereas, in the ordinary flate of nature, he has a liberty to judge of his right, and according to the beft of his power, to maintain it; now, whenever his property is invaded by the will and order of his monarch, he has not only no appeal, as those in fociety ought to have, but as if he were degraded from the common flate of rational creatures, is denied a liberty to judge of, or to defend his right; and fo is exposed to all the misery and inconveniencies, that a man can fear from one.

* To take away all fuch mutual grievances, injuries and wrongs, i. e. fuch as attend men in the flate of nature, there was no way but only by growing into composition and agreement amongst themfelves, by ordaining some kind of government public, and by yielding themselves subject thereunto, that unto whom they granted authority to rule and govern, by them the peace, tranquillity and happy effate of the reft might be procured. Men always knew that where force and injury was offered, they might be defenders of themfelves; they knew that however men may feek their own commodity, yet if this were done with injury unto others, it was not to be fuffered, but by all men, and all good means to be withstood. Finally, they knew that no man might in reason take upon him to determine his own right, and according to his own determination pro-ceed in maintenance thereof, in as much as every man is towards himfelf, and them whom he greatly affects, partial; and therefore that strifes and troubles would be endless, except they gave their common confent, all to be ordered by · fome,- whom they flould agree upon, without which confent there would be no reason that one man should take upon him to be lord or judge over another, Hooker's Eccl. Pol. 1. 1. fect. 10.

one, who being in the unreftrained ftate of nature, is yet corrupted with flattery, and armed with power.

§. 92. For he that thinks absolute power purifies men's blood, and corrects the basenes of human nature, need read but the hiftory of this, or any other age, to be convinced of the contrary. He that would have been infolent and injurious in the woods of America, would not probably be much better in a throne; where perhaps learning and religion shall be found out to justify all that he fhall do to his fubjects, and the fword prefently filence all those that dare question it: for what the protection of abfolute monarchy is, what kind of fathers of their countries it makes princes to be, and to what a degree of happinels and fecurity it carries civil fociety, where this fort of government is grown to perfection, he that will look into the late relation of Ceylon, may eafily fee.

§. 93. In absolute monarchies indeed, as well as other governments of the world, the fubjects have an appeal to the law, and judges to decide any controversies, and restrain any violence that may happen betwixt the fubjects themfelves, one amongst another. This every one thinks neceffary, and believes he deferves to be thought a declared enemy to fociety and mankind, who should go about to take it away. But whether this be from a true love of mankind and fociety, and fuch a charity as Ť2 we

we owe all one to another, there is reafon to doubt : for this is no more than what every man, who loves his own power, profit, or greatness, may and naturally must do, keep those animals from hurting, or destroying one another, who labour and drudge only for his pleafure and advantage; and fo are taken care of, not out of any love the master has for them, but love of himfelf, and the profit they bring him : for if it be afked, what fecurity, what fence is there, in fuch a state, against the violence and oppression of this absolute ruler? the very question can scarce be borne. They are ready to tell you, that it deferves death only to alk after fafety. Betwixt subject and fubject, they will grant, there must be meafures, laws and judges, for their mutual peace and fecurity: but as for the ruler, he ought to be abfolute, and is above all fuch circumstances; because he has power to do more hurt and wrong, it is right when he does it. To ask how you may be guarded from harm, or injury, on that fide where the ftrongeft hand is to do it, is prefently the voice of faction and rebellion : as if when men quitting the state of nature entered into fociety, they agreed that all of them but one, should be under the restraint of laws, but that he should still retain all the liberty of the state of nature, increafed with power, and made licentious by impunity. This is to think, that men are fo foolish, that they take care to avoid what mischiefs

OF CIVIL-GOVERNMENT. 277 chiefs may be done them by pole-cats, or foxes; but are content, nay, think it fafety, to be devoured by lions.

§. 94. But whatever flatterers may talk to amuse people's understandings, it hinders not men from feeling; and when they perceive, that any man, in what station soever, is out of the bounds of the civil fociety which they are of, and that they have no appeal on earth against any harm, they may receive from him, they are apt to think themselves in the state of nature, in respect of him whom they find to be fo; and to take care, as foon as they can, to have that fafety and fecurity in civil fociety, for which it was first instituted, and for which only they entered into it. And therefore, though perhaps at first, (as shall be shewed more at large hereafter in the following part of this discourse) some one good and excellent man having got a pre-eminency amongst the reft, had this deference paid to his goodnefs and virtue, as to a kind of natural authority, that the chief rule, with arbitration of their differences, by a tacit confent devolved into his hands, without any other caution, but the affurance they had of his uprightness and wifdom; yet when time, giving authority, and (as fome men would perfuade us) facredness of cuftoms, which the negligent, and unforefeeing innocence of the first ages began, had brought in fuccessors of another stamp, the people finding their properties not fecure under T 3 the

the government, as then it was, (whereas, government has no other end but the prefervation of * property) could never be fafe nor at reft, nor think themselves in civil fociety, till the legiflature was placed in collective bodies of men, call them senate, parliament, or what you pleafe. By which means every fingle perfon became subject, equally with other the meanest men, to those laws, which he himfelf, as part of the legiflative, had eftablifhed; nor could any one, by his own authority, avoid the force of the law, when once made; nor by any pretence of fuperiority plead exemption, thereby to licenfe his own, or the miscarriages of any of his dependents. + No man in civil fociety can be exempted from the laws of it : for if any man may do what he thinks fit, and there be no appeal on earth, for redrefs or fecurity against any harm he shall do; I ask, whether he be not perfectly still in the ftate

* At the first, when fome certain kind of regiment was once appointed, it may be that nothing was then farther thought upon for the manner of governing, but all permitted unto their wisdom and discretion, which were to rule, till by experience they found this for all parts very inconvenient, fo as the thing which they had devised for a remedy, did indeed but increase the fore, which it should have cured. They faw, that to live by one man's will, became the cause of all men's misery. This constrained them to come unto laws, wherein all men might fee their duty beforehand, and know the penalties of transforefing them. Hooker's Eccl. Pol. 1, i. feet. 10.

OF CIVIL-GOVERNMENT. 279 ftate of nature, and fo can be no part or member of that civil fociety; unlefs any one will fay, the ftate of nature and civil fociety are one and the fame thing, which I have never yet found any one fo great a patron of anarchy as to affirm.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Beginning of Political Societies.

§. 95. MEN being, as has been faid, by nature, all free, equal, and independent, no one can be put out of this eftate, and fubjected to the political power of another, without his own confent. The only way whereby any one divefts himfelf of his natural liberty, and puts on the bonds of civil fociety, is by agreeing with other men to join and unite into a community, for their comfortable, fafe, and peaceable living one amongst another, in a secure enjoyment of their properties, and a greater fecurity against any, that are not of it. This any number of men may do, because it injures not the freedom of the reft; they are left as they were in the liberty of the state of nature. When any number of men have so consented to make one community or government, they are thereby prefently incorporated, and make one body politic, wherein the majority have a right to act and conclude the reft.

§. 96. For when any number of men have, by the confent of every individual, made a community, they have thereby made that community one body, with a power to act as one body, which is only by the will and determi-nation of the majority: for that which acts any community, being only the confent of the individuals of it, and it being neceffary to that which is one body to move one way; it is neceffary the body fhould move that way whither the greater force carries it, which is the confent of the majority: or elfe it is impoffible it should act or continue one body, one community, which the confent of every individual that united into it, agreed that it fhould; and fo every one is bound by that confent to be concluded by the majority. And therefore we fee, that in affemblies, impowered to act by positive laws, where no number is fet by that politive law which im-powers them, the act of the majority passes for the act of the whole, and of course determines, as having, by the law of nature and reason, the power of the whole.

§. 97. And thus every man, by confenting with others to make one body politic under one government, puts himfelf under an obligation, to every one of that fociety, to fubmit to the determination of the majority, and to be concluded by it; or elfe this original compact, whereby he with others incorporates into one fociety, would fignify nothing, and be

be no compact, if he be left free, and under no other ties than he was in before in the ftate of nature. For what appearance would there be of any compact? what new engagement if he were no farther tied by any decrees of the fociety, than he himfelf thought fit, and did actually confent to? This would be ftill as great a liberty, as he himfelf had before his compact, or any one elfe in the ftate of nature hath, who may fubmit himfelf, and confent to any acts of it if he thinks fit.

§. 98. For if the confent of the majority shall not, in reason, be received as the act of the whole, and conclude every individual; nothing but the confent of every individual can make any thing to be the act of the whole: but fuch a confent is next to impoffible ever to be had, if we confider the infirmities of health. and avocations of bufiness, which in a number, though much lefs than that of a common-wealth, will neceffarily keep many away from the public affembly. To which if we add the variety of opinions, and contrariety of interests, which unavoidably happen in all collections of men, the coming into fociety upon fuch terms would be only like Cato's coming into the theatre, only to go out again. Such a conftitution as this would make the mighty Leviathan of a fhorter duration, than the feeblest creatures, and not let it outlast the day it was born in: which cannot be fupposed, till we can think, that rational creatures

tures fhould defire and conftitute focieties only to be diffolved: for where the majority cannot conclude the reft, there they cannot act as one body, and confequently will be immediately diffolved again.

§. 99. Whofoever therefore out of a flate of nature unite into a community, must be understood to give up all the power, necessary to the ends for which they unite into fociety, to the majority of the community, unless they expressly agreed in any number greater than the majority. And this is done by barely agreeing to unite into one political fociety, which is all the compact that is, or needs be, between the individuals, that enter into, or make up a common-wealtb. And thus that, which begins and actually constitutes any political fociety, is nothing but the consent of any number of freemen capable of a majority to unite and incorporate into such a fociety. And this is that, and that only, which did, or could give beginning to any lawful government in the world.

§. 100. To this I find two objections made.

First, That there are no inflances to be found in ftory, of a company of men independent, and equal one among ft another, that met together, and in this way began and fet up a government.

in this way began and set up a government. Secondly, It is impossible of right, that men should do so, because all men being born under government, they are to submit to that, and are not at liberty to begin a new one.

§. 101. To the first there is this to answer, That it is not at all to be wondered, that history gives us but a very little account of men, that lived together in the state of nature. The inconveniences of that condition, and the love and want of fociety, no fooner brought any number of them together, but they prefently united and incorporated, if they defigned to continue together. And if we may not fuppose men ever to have been in the state of nature, because we hear not much of them in such a state, we may as well suppose the armies of Salmanasser or Xerxes were never children, because we hear little of them, till they were men, and imbodied in armies. Government is every where antecedent to records, and letters feldom come in amongst a people till a long continuation of civil fociety has, by other more necessary arts, pro-vided for their fafety, eafe, and plenty: and then they begin to look after the hiftory of their founders, and fearch into their original, when they have outlived the memory of it: for it is with common-wealths as with particular perfons, they are commonly ignorant of their own births and infancies: and if they know any thing of their original, they are beholden for it, to the accidental records that others have kept of it. And those that we have, of the beginning of any polities in the world, excepting that of the Jews, where God him-felf immediately interposed, and which favours vours not at all paternal dominion, are all either plain inftances of fuch a beginning as I have mentioned, or at leaft have manifest footsteps of it.

§. 102. He must shew a strange inclination to deny evident matter of fact, when it agrees not with his hypothefis, who will not allow, that the beginning of Rome and Venice were by the uniting together of feveral men free and independent one of another, amongst whom there was no natural superiority or fubjection. And if Josephus Acosta's word may be taken, he tells us, that in many parts of America there was no government at all. There are great and apparent conjectures, fays he, that thefe men, speaking of those of Peru, for a long time had neither kings nor commonwealths, but lived in troops, as they do this day in Florida, the Cheriquanas, those of Brasil, and many other nations, which have no certain kings, but as occasion is offered, in peace or war, they choose their captains as they please, 1. i. c. 25. If it be faid, that every man there was born fubject to his father, or the head of his family; that the fubjection due from a child to a father took not away his freedom of uniting into what political fociety he thought fit, has been already proved. But be that as it will, these men, it is evident, were actually free; and whatever fuperiority fome politicians now would place in any of them, they themselves claimed it not, but by confent confent were all equal, till by the fame confent they fet rulers over themfelves. So that their politic focieties all began from a voluntary union, and the mutual agreement of men freely acting in the choice of their governors, and forms of government.

§. 103. And I hope those who went away from Sparta with Palantus, mentioned by Justin, 1. iii. c. 4. will be allowed to have been freemen independent one of another, and to have fet up a government over themfelves, by their own confent. Thus I have given several examples, out of history, of people free and in the flate of nature, that being met to-gether incorporated and began a common-wealth. And if the want of fuch inftances be an argument to prove that government were not, nor could not be fo begun, I fuppose the contenders for paternal empire were better let it alone, than urge it against natural liberty : for if they can give fo many inftances, out of history, of governments begun upon paternal right, I think (though at best an argument from what has been, to what fhould of right be, has no great force) one might, without any great danger, yield them the caufe. But if I might advise them in the cafe, they would do well not to fearch too much into the original of governments, as they have begun de facto, left they should find, at the foundation of most of them, fomething very very little favourable to the defign they promote, and fuch a power as they contend for.

§. 104. But to conclude, reafon being plain on our fide, that men are naturally free, and the examples of hiftory shewing, that the governments of the world, that were begun in peace, had their beginning laid on that foundation, and were made by the confent of the people; there can be little room for doubt, either where the right is, or what has been the opinion, or practice of mankind, about the first erecting of governments. §. 105. I will not deny, that if we look back as far as hiftory will direct us, towards the original of common-wealths, we shall generally find them under the government and administration of one man. And I am alfo apt to believe, that where a family was numerous enough to fubfift by itfelf, and continued entire together, without mixing with others, as it often happens, where there is much land, and few people, the govern-ment commonly began in the father: for the father having, by the law of nature, the fame power with every man else to punish, as he thought fit, any offences against that law, might thereby punish his transgreffing children, even when they were men, and out of their pupilage; and they were very likely to fubmit to his punifhment, and all join with him against the offender, in their turns, giving him thereby power to execute his his fentence against any transgression, and so in effect make him the law-maker, and go-vernor over all that remained in conjunction with his family. He was fitteft to be trufted; paternal affection fecured their property and intereft under his care; and the cuftom of obeying him, in their childhood, made it eafier to fubmit to him, rather than to any other. If therefore they must have one to rule them, as government is hardly to be avoided amongft men that live together; who fo likely to be the man as he that was their common father; unlefs negligence, cruelty, or any other defect of mind or body made him unfit for it? But when either the father died, and left his next heir, for want of age, wifdom, courage, or any other qualities, less fit for rule; or where several families met, and confented to continue together; there, it is not to be doubted, but they used their natural freedom, to set up him, whom they judged the ableft, and most likely, to rule well over them. Conformable hereunto we find the people of America, who (living out of the reach of the conquering fwords, and fpreading domination of the two great empires of Peru and Mexico) enjoyed their own natural freedom, though, cæteris paribus, they commonly prefer the heir of their deceased king; yet if they find him any way weak, or uncapable, they pass him ·by,

by, and fet up the ftoutest and bravest man for their ruler.

§. 106. Thus, though looking back as far as records give us any account of peopling the world, and the hiftory of nations, we commonly find the government to be in one hand ; yet it destroys not that which I affirm, viz. that the beginning of politic fociety depends upon the confent of the individuals, to join into, and make one fociety; who, when they are thus incorporated, might fet up what form of government they thought fit. But this having given occasion to men to mistake, and think, that by nature government was monarchical, and belonged to the father, it may not be amifs here to confider. why people in the beginning generally pitched upon this form, which though perhaps the father's pre-eminency might, in the first infitution of fome common-wealths, give a rife to, and place in the beginning, the power in one hand; yet it is plain that the reason, that continued the form of government in a fingle perfon, was not any regard, or respect to paternal authority; fince all petty monarchies, that is, almost all monarchies, near their original, have been commonly, at least upon occasion, elective.

§. 107. First then, in the beginning of things, the father's government of the childhood of those sprung from him, having accustomed them to the rule of one man, and taught taught them that where it was exercised with care and skill, with affection and love to those under it, it was fufficient to procure and under it, it was fufficient to procure and preferve to men all the political happiness they fought for in fociety. It was no wonder that they fhould pitch upon, and naturally run into that form of government, which from their infancy they had been all accustomed to; and which, by experience, they had found both eafy and fafe. To which, if we add, that monarchy being fimple, and most obvious to men, whom neither experience had instructed in forms of government, nor the ambition or infolence of empire had taught to beware of the encroachments of prerogative, or the inconveniencies of ab-folute power, which monarchy in fucceffion was apt to lay claim to, and bring upon them; it was not at all ftrange, that they fhould not much trouble themfelves to think of not much trouble themfelves to think of methods of reftraining any exorbitances of those to whom they had given the authority over them, and of balancing the power of government, by placing several parts of it in different hands. They had neither felt the oppression of tyrannical dominion, nor did the fashion of the age, nor their possession, or way of living, (which afforded little matter for covetous fields or ambition) give them any reason to apprehend or provide against it; and therefore it is no wonder they put them-felves into such a frame of government, as was felves into fuch a frame of government, as was not

not only, as I faid, most obvious and fimple, but also best fuited to their present state and condition; which flood more in need of defence against foreign invasions and injuries, than of multiplicity of laws. The equality of a fimple poor way of living, confining their defires within the narrow bounds of each man's small property, made few controversies, and fo no need of many laws to decide them, or variety of officers to fuperintend the procefs, or look after the execution of juffice, where there were but few trespaffes, and few offenders. Since then those, who liked one another fo well as to join into fociety, cannot but be fuppofed to have fome acquaintance and friendship together, and some trust one in another; they could not but have greater apprehensions of others, than of one another : and therefore their first care and thought cannot but be fuppofed to be, how to fecure themfelves against foreign force. It was natural for them to put themselves under a frame of government which might best serve to that end, and chuse the wifest and bravest man to conduct them in their wars, and lead them out against their enemies, and in this chiefly be their ruler.

§. 108. Thus we fee, that the kings of the Indians in America, which is ftill a pattern of the first ages in Asia and Europe, whils the inhabitants were too few for the country, and want of people and money gave men no temptation temptation to enlarge their possessions of land, or contest for wider extent of ground, are little more than generals of their armies; and though they command absolutely in war, yet at home and in time of peace they exercise very little dominion, and have but a very moderate fovereignty, the refolutions of peace and war being ordinarily either in the people, or in a council. Tho' the war itself, which admits not of plurality of governors, naturally devolves the command into the king's fole authority.

§. 109. And thus in Israel itself, the chief business of their judges, and first kings, seems to have been to be captains in war, and leaders of their armies; which (befides what is fignified by going out and in before the people, which was, to march forth to war, and home again in the heads of their forces) appears plainly in the flory of Jepbtha. The Ammonites making war upon Ifrael, the Gileadites in fear fend to Jephtha, a bastard of their family whom they had caft off, and article with him, if he will affift them against the Ammonites, to make him their ruler; which they do in thefe words, And the people made him head and captain over them, Judg. xi. 11. which was, as it feems, all one as to be judge. And be judged Ifrael, Judg. xii. 7. that is, was their captain-general fix years. So when Jotham upbraids the Shechemites with the obligation they had to Gideon, who had been U 2 their

their judge and ruler, he tells them, He fought for you, and adventured his life far, and delivered you out of the hands of Midian, Judg. ix. 17. Nothing mentioned of him, but what he did as a general: and indeed that is all is found in his hiftory, or in any of the reft of the judges. And Abimelech parti-cularly is called king, though at most he was but their general. And when, being weary of the ill conduct of Samuel's fons, the children of Ifrael defired a king, like all the nations to judge them, and to go out before them, and to fight their battles, I Sam. viii. 20. God granting their defire, fays to Samuel, I will fend thee a man, and thou shalt anoint him to be captain over my people Israel, that he may fave my people out of the hands of the Philistines, ix. 16. As if the only business of a king had been to lead out their armies, and fight in their defence; and accordingly at his inauguration pouring a vial of oil upon him, declares to Saul, that the Lord had anointed him to be captain over bis inheritance, x. 1. And therefore those, who after Saul's being folemnly chofen and faluted king by the tribes at Mifpab, were unwilling to have him their king, made no other objection but this, How shall this man fave us? v. 27. as if they should have faid, this man is unfit to be our king, not having skill and conduct enough in war, to be able to defend us. And when God refolved to transfer transfer the government to David, it is in these words, But now thy kingdom shall not continue: the Lord hath fought him a man after his own heart, and the Lord hath com-manded him to be captain over his people, xiii. 14. As if the whole kingly authority were nothing elfe but to be their general: and therefore the tribes who had fluck to Saul's family, and opposed David's reign, when they came to Hebron with terms of submiffion to him, they tell him, amongst other arguments they had to fubmit to him as to their king, that he was in effect their king in Saul's time, and therefore they had no reason but to receive him as their king now. Alfo (fay they) in time past, when Saul was king over us, thou wast he that leddest out and broughtest in Israel, and the Lord faid unto thee, Thou Shalt feed my people Ifrael, and thou Shalt be a captain over Ifrael.

§. 110. Thus, whether a family by degrees grew up into a common-wealth, and the fatherly authority being continued on to the elder fon, every one in his turn growing up under it, tacitly fubmitted to it, and the eafinefs and equality of it not offending any one, every one acquiefced, till time feemed to have confirmed it, and fettled a right of fucceffion by prefcription: or whether feveral families, or the defcendants of feveral families, whom chance, neighbourhood, or bufinefs brought together, uniting into fociety, the need of a U 2 general, general, whose conduct might defend them against their enemies in war, and the great confidence the innocence and fincerity of that poor but virtuous age, (fuch as are almost all those which begin governments, that ever come to last in the world) gave men one of another, made the first beginners of commonwealths generally put the rule into one man's hand, without any other express limitation or restraint, but what the nature of the thing, and the end of government required : which ever of those it was that at first put the rule into the hands of a fingle perfon, certain it is no body was intrusted with it but for the public good and fafety, and to those ends, in the infancies of common-wealths, those who had it commonly used it. And unless they had done fo, young focieties could not have fubfisted; without such nursing fathers tender and careful of the public weal, all governments would have funk under the weakness and infirmities of their infancy, and the prince and the people had foon perifhed together.

§. 111. But though the golden age (before vain ambition, and amor fceleratus babendi, evil concupifcence, had corrupted men's minds into a miftake of true power and honour) had more virtue, and confequently better governors, as well as lefs vicious fubjects; and there was then no ftretching prerogative on the one fide, to opprefs the people; nor confequently on the other, any difpute about privilege, privilege, to leffen or reftrain the power of the magiftrate, and fo no conteft betwixt rulers and people about governors or government : yet, when ambition and luxury in future ages * would retain and increase the power, without doing the bufiness for which it was given; and aided by flattery, taught princes to have distinct and separate interests from their people, men found it necessary to examine more carefully the original and rights of government; and to find out ways to refirain the exorbitances, and prevent the abuses of that power, which they having intrusted in another's hands only for their own good, they found was made use of to hurt them.

§. 112. Thus we may fee how probable it is, that people that were naturally free, and by their own confent either fubmitted to the government of their father, or united together out of different families to make a government, fhould generally put the rule into one man's bands, and chufe to be under the con-U 4 duct

* At first, when fome certain kind of regiment was once approved, it may be nothing was then farther thought upon for the manser of governing, but all permitted unto their widdom and diferction which were to rule, till by experience they found this for all parts very inconvenient, fo as the thing which they had devised for a remedy, did indeed bat increase the fore which it should have cured. They faw, that to live by one man's will, became the caufe of all men's mifery. This confirmed them to come unto laws wherein all men might fee their duty before hand, and know the penalties of transgreffing them. Hoster's Eccl. Pol. 1. i. jett. 10.

duct of a fingle perfon, without fo much as by exprefs conditions limiting or regulating his power, which they thought fafe enough in his honefty and prudence; though they never dreamed of monarchy being *fure Di*vino, which we never heard of among mankind, till it was revealed to us by the divinity of this laft age; nor ever allowed paternal power to have a right to dominion, or to be the foundation of all government. And thus much may fuffice to fhew, that as far as we have any light from hiftory, we have reafon to conclude, that all peaceful beginnings of government have been laid in the confent of the people. I fay peaceful, becaufe I fhall have occasion in another place to fpeak of conqueft, which fome efteem a way of beginning of governments.

The other objection I find urged against the beginning of polities, in the way I have mentioned, is this, viz.

§. 113. That all men being born under government, fome or other, it is impossible any of them should ever be free, and at liberty to unite together, and begin a new one, or ever be able to erect a lawful government.

If this argument be good; I alk, how came fo many lawful monarchies into the world? for if any body, upon this fuppofition, can fhew me any one man in any age of the world free to begin a lawful monarchy, I will be bound to fhew him ten other free men men at liberty, at the fame time to unite and begin a new government under a regal, or any other form; it being demonstration, that if any one, born under the dominion of another, may be fo free as to have a right to command others in a new and diffinct empire, every one that is born under the dominion of another may be fo free too, and may become a ruler, or fubject, of a diffinct feparate government. And fo by this their own principle, either all men, however born, are free, or elfe there is but one lawful prince, one lawful government in the world. And then they have nothing to do, but barely to fnew us which that is; which when they have done, I doubt not but all mankind will eafily agree to pay obedience to him.

§. 114. Though it be a fufficient answer to their objection, to shew that it involves them in the fame difficulties that it doth those they use it against; yet I shall endeavour to discover the weakness of this argument a little farther.

All men, fay they, are born under government, and therefore they cannot be at liberty to begin a new one. Every one is born a fubject to his father, or his prince, and is therefore under the perpetual tie of fubjection and allegiance. It is plain mankind never owned nor confidered any fuch natural fubjection that they were born in, to one or to the other that tied them,

§. 115. For there are no examples fo frequent in hiftory, both facred and profane, as those of men withdrawing themselves, and their obedience, from the jurifdiction they were born under, and the family or community they were bred up in, and fetting up new governments in other places; from whence fprang all that number of petty commonwealths in the beginning of ages, and which always multiplied, as long as there was room enough, till the ftronger, or more fortunate, fwallowed the weaker; and those great ones again breaking to pieces, diffolved into leffer dominions. All which are fo many teftimonies against paternal sovereignty, and plainly prove, that it was not the natural right of the father descending to his heirs, that made governments in the beginning, fince it was impoffible, upon that ground, there should have been so many little kingdoms; all must have been but only one univerfal monarchy, if men had not been at liberty to feparate themfelves from their families, and the government, be it what it will, that was fet up in it, and go and make diftinct common-wealths and other governments, as they thought fit.

§. 116. This has been the practice of the world from its first beginning to this day; nor is it now any more hindrance to the freedom

OF CIVIL-GOVERNMENT. 299 freedom of mankind, that they are born under constituted and ancient polities, that have established laws, and set forms of government, than if they were born in the woods, amongst the unconfined inhabitants, that run loofe in them : for those, who would perfuade us, that by being born under any government, we are naturally fubjects to it, and have no more any title or pretence to the freedom of the state of nature, have no other reason (bating that of paternal power, which we have already answered) to produce for it, but only, because our fathers or progenitors passed away their natural liberty, and thereby bound up themselves and their posterity to a perpetual fubjection to the government, which they themselves submitted to. It is true, that whatever engagements or promifes any one has made for himfelf, he is under the obligation of them, but cannot, by any compact whatsoever, bind his children or posterity: for his fon, when a man, being altogether as free as the father, any act of the father can no more give away the liberty of the fon, than it can of any body elfe: he may indeed annex fuch conditions to the land, he enjoyed as a fubject of any common-wealth, as may oblige his fon to be of that community, if he will enjoy those possessions which were his father's; because that estate being his father's property, he may dispose, or settle it, as he pleases.

§. 117. And this has generally given the occasion to mistake in this matter; because common-wealths not permitting any part of their dominions to be difmembered, nor to be enjoyed by any but those of their community, the fon cannot ordinarily enjoy the possessions of his father, but under the fame terms his father did, by becoming a member of the fociety; whereby he puts himfelf prefently under the government he finds there eftablished, as much as any other subject of that common-wealth. And thus the confent of freemen, born under government, which only makes them members of it, being given feparately in their turns, as each comes to be of age, and not in a multitude together; people take no notice of it, and thinking it not done at all, or not neceffary, conclude they are naturally fubjects as they are men.

§. 118. But, it is plain, governments themfelves understand it otherwise; they claim no power over the fon, because of that they had over the father; nor look on children as being their subjects, by their fathers being so. If a subject of England have a child, by an English woman in France, whose subject is he? Not the king of England's; for he must have leave to be admitted to the privileges of it: nor the king of France's; for how then has his father a liberty to bring him away, and breed him as he pleases? and who ever was judged as a traytor or deserver, if he left, or warred

warred against a country, for being barely born in it of parents that were aliens there ? It is plain then, by the practice of govern-ments themfelves, as well as by the law of right reason, that a child is born a subject of no country or government. He is under his father's tuition and authority, till he comes to age of difcretion; and then he is a freeman, at liberty what government he will put himfelf under, what government he will pat himfelf under, what body politic he will unite himfelf to: for if an Englifhman's fon, born in France, be at liberty, and may do fo, it is evident there is no tie upon him by his father's being a fubject of this kingdom; nor is he bound up by any compact of his anceftors. And why then hath not his fon, by the fame reason, the fame liberty, though he be born any where elfe? Since the power that a father hath naturally over his children, is the fame, where-ever they be born, and the ties of natural obligations, are not bounded by the politive limits of kingdoms and common-wealths.

§. 119. Every man being, as has been fhewed, naturally free, and nothing being able to put him into fubjection to any earthly power, but only his own confent; it is to be confidered, what fhall be underftood to be a fufficient declaration of a man's confent, to make bim fubject to the laws of any government. There is a common diffinction of an express and a tacit confent, which will concern our prefent present cafe. No body doubts but an express confent, of any man entering into any fociety, makes him a perfect member of that fociety, a fubject of that government. The difficulty is, what ought to be looked upon as a tacit confent, and how far it binds, i.e. how far any one shall be looked on to have confented, and thereby fubmitted to any government, where he has made no expressions of it at all. And to this I fay, that every man, that hath any pofferfions, or enjoyment, of any part of the dominions of any government, doth thereby give his tacit confent, and is as far forth obliged to obedience to the laws of that government, during fuch enjoyment, as any one under it ; whether this his poffeffion be of land, to him and his heirs for ever, or a lodging only for a week; or whether it be barely travelling freely on the highway; and in effect, it reaches as far as the very being of any one within the territories of that government.

§. 120. To understand this the better, it is fit to confider, that every man, when he at first incorporates himself into any commonwealth, he, by his uniting himself thereunto, annexed also, and submits to the community, those possession, which he has, or shall acquire, that do not already belong to any other government: for it would be a direct contradiction, for any one to enter into society with others for the securing and regulating gulating of property; and yet to suppose his land, whose property is to be regulated by the laws of the fociety, should be exempt from the jurifdiction of that government, to which he himself, the proprietor of the land, is a fubject. By the fame act therefore, whereby any one unites his perfon, which was before free, to any common-wealth; by the fame he unites his poffessions, which were before free, to it alfo; and they become, both of them, perfon and poffeffion, fubject to the government and dominion of that common-wealth, as long as it hath a being. Whoever therefore, from thenceforth, by inheritance, purchafe, permiffion, or other-ways, enjoys any part of the land, fo annexed to, and under the government of that common-wealth, must take it with the condition it is under; that is, of fubmitting to the government of the common-wealth, under whole jurifdiction it is, as far forth as any subject of it.

§. 121. But fince the government has a direct jurifdiction only over the land, and reaches the possession of it, (before he has actually incorporated himself in the fociety) only as he dwells upon, and enjoys that; the obligation any one is under, by virtue of fuch enjoyment, to fubmit to the government, begins and ends with the enjoyment; fo that whenever the owner, who has given nothing but fuch a tacit confent to the government, will, by donation.

donation, fale, or otherwife, quit the faid poffeffion, he is at liberty to go and incorporate himfelf into any other commonwealth; or to agree with others to begin a new one, in vacuis locis, in any part of the world, they can find free and unpoffeffed: whereas he, that has once, by actual agreement, and any exprefs declaration, given his confent to be of any common-wealth, is, perpetually and indifpenfibly obliged to be, and remain unalterably a fubject to it, and can never be again in the liberty of the ftate of nature; unlefs, by any calamity, the government he was under comes to be diffolved; or elfe by fome public act cuts him off from being any longer a member of it.

being any longer a member of it. §. 122. But fubmitting to the laws of any country, living quietly, and enjoying privileges and protection under them, makes not a man a member of that fociety: this is only a local protection and homage due to and from all thofe, who, not being in a flate of war, come within the territories belonging to any government, to all parts whereof the force of its laws extends. But this no more makes a man a member of that fociety, a perpetual fubject of that common-wealth, than it would make a man a fubject to another, in whofe family he found it convenient to abide for fome time; though, whilft he continued in it, he were obliged to comply with the laws, and fubmit to the government he found found there. And thus we fee, that foreigners, by living all their lives under another government, and enjoying the privileges and protection of it, though they are bound, even in confcience, to fubmit to its administration, as far forth as any denifon; yet do not thereby come to be *fubjects or members of that com*mon-wealtb. Nothing can make any man fo, but his actually entering into it by positive engagement, and express promife and compact. This is that, which I think, concerning the beginning of political focieties, and that confent which makes any one a member of any common-wealth.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Ends of Political Society and Government.

§. 123. IF man in the flate of nature be fo free, as has been faid; if he be abfolute lord of his own perfon and poffeffions, equal to the greateft, and fubject to no body, why will he part with his freedom? why will he give up this empire, and fubject himfelf to the dominion and controul of any other power? To which it is obvious to anfwer, that though in the flate of nature he hath fuch a right, yet the enjoyment of it is very uncertain, and conftantly exposed to the invafion of others: for all being kings as X much much as he, every man his equal, and the greater part no ftrict obfervers of equity and juffice, the enjoyment of the property he has in this ftate is very unfafe, very unfecure. This makes him willing to quit a condition, which, however free, is full of fears and continual dangers : and it is not without reafon, that he feeks out, and is willing to join in fociety with others, who are already united, or have a mind to unite, for the mutual prefervation of their lives, liberties and eftates, which I call by the general name, property.

which I call by the general name, property. §. 124. The great and chief end, therefore, of men's uniting into common-wealths, and putting themfelves under government, is the prefervation of their property. To which in the ftate of nature there are many things wanting.

First, There wants an established, settled, known law, received and allowed by common confent to be the standard of right and wrong, and the common measure to decide all controversies between them: for though the law of nature be plain and intelligible to all rational creatures; yet men being biassed by their interess, as well as ignoraat for want of study of it, are not apt to allow of it as a law binding to them in the application of it to their particular cases.

§. 125. Secondly, In the ftate of nature there wants a known and indifferent judge, with authority to determine all differences according cording to the effablished law: for every one in that flate being both judge and executioner of the law of nature, men being partial to themselves, passion and revenge is very apt to carry them too far, and with too much heat, in their own cases; as well as negligence, and unconcernedness, to make them too remiss in other men's.

§. 126. Thirdly, In the flate of nature there often wants power to back and support the sentence when right, and to give it due execution. They who by any injustice offended, will feldom fail, where they are able, by force to make good their injustice; such resistance many times makes the punishment dangerous, and frequently destructive, to those who attempt it.

§. 127. Thus mankind, notwithftanding all the privileges of the flate of nature, being but in an ill condition, while they remain in it, are quickly driven into fociety. Hence it comes to pafs, that we feldom find any number of men live any time together in this flate. The inconveniencies that they are therein exposed to, by the irregular and uncertain exercise of the power every man has of punishing the transgreffions of others, make them take fanctuary under the eftablished laws of government, and therein feek the prefervation of their property. It is this makes them to willingly give up every one his fingle power of punishing, to be X_2 exercised exercifed by fuch alone, as fhall be appointed to it amongft them; and by fuch rules as the community, or those authorized by them to that purpose, shall agree on. And in this we have the original right and rise of both the legislative and executive power, as well as of the governments and societies themfelves.

§. 128. For in the state of nature, to omit the liberty he has of innocent delights, a man has two powers.

The first is to do whatfoever he thinks fit for the prefervation of himfelf, and others within the permission of the law of nature: by which law, common to them all, he and all the rest of mankind are one community, make up one society, distinct from all other creatures. And were it not for the corruption and vitious of degenerate men, there would be no need of any other; no neceffity that men should separate from this great and natural community, and by positive agreements combine into smaller and divided allociations.

The other power a man has in the flate of nature, is the power to punifb the crimes committed against that law. Both these he gives up, when he joins in a private, if I may to call it, or particular politic fociety, and incorporates into any common-wealth, separate from the rest of mankind.

§. 129. The first power, viz. of doing whatfoever be thought for the prefervation of him-felf, and the reft of mankind, be gives up to be regulated by laws made by the fociety, fo far forth as the prefervation of himfelf, and the reft of that fociety fhall require; which laws of the fociety in many things confine the liberty he had by the law of nature.

§. 130. Secondly, The power of punishing be wholly gives up, and engages his natural force, (which he might before employ in the exe-cution of the law of nature, by his own fingle authority, as he thought fit) to affift the executive power of the fociety, as the law thereof shall require : for being now in a new ftate, wherein he is to enjoy many conveniencies, from the labour, affistance, and society of others in the fame community, as well as protection from its whole ftrength; he is to part also with as much of his natural liberty, in providing for himfelf, as the good, prosperity, and fafety of the society shall re-quire; which is not only necessary, but just, fince the other members of the society do the like.

§. 131. But though men, when they enter into fociety, give up the equality, liberty, and executive power they had in the ftate of nature, into the hands of the fociety, to be fo far difposed of by the legislative, as the good of the fociety shall require; yet it being only only with an intention in every one the better to preferve himfelf, his liberty and property; (for no rational creature can be supposed to change his condition with an intention to be worfe) the power of the fociety, or legislative constituted by them, can never be supposed to extend farther, than the common good; but is obliged to fecure every one's property, by providing against those three defects above mentioned, that made the ftate of nature fo unfafe and uneafy. And fo whoever has the legislative or fupreme power of any commonwealth, is bound to govern by established flanding laws, promulgated and known to the people, and not by extemporary decrees; by indifferent and upright judges, who are to decide controverfies by those laws; and to employ the force of the community at home, only in the execution of fuch laws, or abroad to prevent or redrefs foreign injuries, and fecure the community from inroads and invafion. And all this to be directed to no other end, but the peace, fafety, and public good of the people.

CHAP. X.

Of the Forms of a Common-wealth.

§. 132. THE majority having, as has been thewed, upon men's first uniting into fociety, the whole power of the community

munity naturally in them, may employ all that power in making laws for the community from time to time, and executing those laws by officers of their own appointing; and then the form of the government is a perfect democracy: or elfe may put the power of making laws into the hands of a few felect men, and their heirs or fucceffors; and then it is an oligarchy: or elfe into the hands of one man, and then it is a monarchy: if to him and his heirs, it is an *bereditary mo*narchy: if to him only for life, but upon his death the power only of nominating a fucceffor to return to them; an elective monarchy. And fo accordingly of these the community may make compounded and mixed forms of government, as they think good. And if the legiflative power be at first given by the majority to one or more perfons only for their lives, or any limited time, and then the fupreme power to revert to them again; when it is fo reverted, the community may difpose of it again anew into what hands they pleafe, and fo conftitute a new form of government: for the form of government depending upon the placing the fu-preme power, which is the legiflative, it being impoffible to conceive that an inferior power should prefcribe to a fuperior, or any but the fupreme make laws, according as the power of making laws is placed, fuch is the form of the common-wealth.

§. 133. By common-wealth, I must be understood all along to mean, not a democracy, or any form of government, but any independent community, which the Latines fignified by the word civitas, to which the word which beft answers in our language, is common-wealth, and most properly expresses fuch a fociety of men, which community or city in English does not; for there may be fubordinate communities in a government; and city amongst us has a quite different notion from common-wealth : and therefore, to avoid ambiguity, I crave leave to use the word common-wealth in that fense, in which I find it used by king James the first; and I take it to be its genuine fignification; which if any body diflike, I confent with him to change it for a better.

CHAP. XI.

Of the Extent of the Legislative Power.

§. 134. T HE great end of men's entering into fociety, being the enjoyment of their properties in peace and fafety, and the great inftrument and means of that being the laws eftablished in that fociety; the first and fundamental positive law of all common-wealths is the establishing of the legislative power; as the first and fundamental natural law, law, which is to govern even the legislative itfelf, is the prefervation of the fociety, and (as far as will confift with the public good) of every perfon in it. This legiflative is not only the supreme power of the common-wealth, but facred and unalterable in the hands where the community have once placed it; nor can any edict of any body elfe, in what form foever conceived, or by what power foever backed, have the force and obligation of a law, which has not its fanction from that legislative which the public has chosen and appointed: for without this the law could not have that, which is abfolutely neceffary to its being a law, * the confent of the fociety, over whom no body can have a power to make laws, but by their own confent, and by authority received

* The lawful power of making laws to command whole politic focieties of men, belonging fo properly unto the fame intire focieties, that for any prince or potentate of what kind foever upon earth, to exercise the fame of himfelf, and not by express commiffion immediately and perfonally received from God, or elfe by authority derived at the first from their confent, upon whole perfons they impose laws, it is no better than mere tyranny. Laws they are not therefore which public approbation hath not made fo. Hooker's Eccl. Pol. 1. i. feet. To. Of this point therefore we are to note, that fith men limiturally have no full and perfect power to command whole politic multitudes of men, therefore utterly without our confent, we could in fuch fort be at no man's commandment fiving. And to be commanded we do confent, when that fociety, whereof we be a part, hath at any time before confented, without revoking the fame after by the like universal agreement.

We Laws therefore human, of what kind to ever, are available by confent. Ibid.

ceived from them; and therefore all the abedience, which by the most folemn ties any one can be obliged to pay, ultimately terminates in this fupreme power, and is directed by those laws which it enacts: nor can any oaths to any foreign power whatfoever, or any domestic fubordinate power, discharge any member of the fociety from his obedience to the legislative, acting pursuant to their trust; nor oblige him to any obedience contrary to the laws fo enacted, or farther than they do allow; it being ridiculous to imagine one can be tied ultimately to obey any power in the fociety, which is not the fupreme.

allow; it being ridiculous to imagine one can be tied ultimately to obey any power in the fociety, which is not the fupreme. §. 135. Though the legiflative, whether placed in one or more, whether it be always in being, or only by intervals, though it be the fupreme power in every common-wealth; yet, yet, Fir/t, It is not, nor can poffibly be abfo-Intely arbitrary over the lives and fortunes of the people: for it being but the joint power of every member of the fociety given up to that perfon, or affembly, which is legiflator; it can be no more than those perfons had in a ftate of nature before they entered into fociety, and gave up to the community: for no body can transfer to another more power than he has in himself; and no body has an abfolute arbitrary power over himself, or over any other, to deftroy his own life, or take away the life or property of another. A man, as has been proved, cannot fubject himfelf to the arbitrary power of another; and having in the state of nature no arbitrary power over the life, liberty, or possession of another, but only fo much as the law of nature gave him for the prefervation of himfelf, and the reft of mankind; this is all he doth, or can give up to the common-wealth, and by it to the legislative power, fo that the legislative can have no more than this. Their power, in the utmost bounds of it, is limited to the public good of the fociety. It is a power, that hath no other end but prefervation, and therefore can never * have a right to destroy, enflave, or defignedly to impoverish the fubjects. The obligations of the law of nature cease not in society, but only in many cases are drawn clofer, and have by human laws known

^{*} Two foundations there are which bear up public focieties; the one a natural inclination, whereby all men define fociable life and fellowship; the other an order, expressly or fecretly agreed upon, touching the manner of their union in living together: the latter is that which we call the law of a common-weal, the very foul of a politic body, the parts whereof are by law animated, held together, and fet on work in fuch actions as the common good requireth. Laws politic, ordained for external order and regiment amongst men, are never framed as they fhould be, unless prefuming the will of man to be inwardly obstinate, rebellious, and averse from all obedience to the facred laws of his nature; in a word, unless prefuming man to be, in regard of his deprayed mind, little better than a wild beast, they do accordingly provide, notwithstanding, fo to frame his outward actions, that they be no hindrance unto the common good, for which focieties are infituted. Unlefs they do this, they are not perfect. Hooker's Eccl. Pol. 1, i. fest. 10.

known penalties annexed to them, to inforce their observation. Thus the law of nature stands as an eternal rule to all men, legiflators as well as others. The rules that they make for other men's actions, must, as well as their own and other men's actions, be conformable to the law of nature, i. e. to the will of God, of which that is a declaration, and the fundamental law of nature being the prefervation of mankind, no human fanction can be good, or valid against it.

§. 136. Secondly, * The legiflative, or fupreme authority, cannot affume to its felf a power to rule by extemporary arbitrary decrees, but is bound to difpense justice, and decide the rights of the subject by promulgated flanding laws, and known authorized judges: for the law of nature being unwritten, and so no where to be found but in the minds of men, they who through passion or interest shall missive, or mission or interest shall missive, or mission of their mission of the end of the solution established judge: and so it ferves not, as it ought, to determine the rights, and fence the properties

* Human laws are measures in respect of men whole actions they must direct, howbeit such measures they are as have also their higher rules to be measured by, which rules are two, the law of God, and the law of nature; fo that laws human must be made according to the general laws of nature, and without contradiction to any positive law of scripture, otherwife they are ill made. Hooker's Eccl. Pol. 1. iii. fea. 9.

To confirain men to any thing inconvenient doth feem unreasonable. Ibid. 1. i. fest. 10.

properties of those that live under it, especially where every one is judge, interpreter, and executioner of it too, and that in his own cafe : and he that has right on his fide, having ordinarily but his own fingle ftrength, hath not force enough to defend himfelf from injuries, or to punish delinquents. To avoid these inconveniencies, which disorder men's properties in the state of nature, men unite into focieties, that they may have the united ftrength of the whole fociety to fecure and defend their properties, and may have flanding rules to bound it, by which every one may know what is his. To this end it is that men give up all their natural power to the fociety which they enter into, and the com-munity put the legislative power into such hands as they think fit, with this trust, that they shall be governed by declared laws, or elfe their peace, quiet, and property will fill be at the same uncertainty, as it was in the flate of nature.

§. 137. Abfolute arbitrary power, or governing without fettled flanding laws, can neither of them confift with the ends of fociety and government, which men would not quit the freedom of the state of nature for, and the themselves up under, were it not to preferve their lives, liberties and fortunes, and by flated rules of right and property to secure their peace and quiet. It cannot be supposed that they should intend, had they a power fo

fo to do, to give to any one, or more, an abfoliate arbitrary power over their perfons and effates, and put a force into the magistrate's hand to excente his unlimited will arbitrarily upon them. This were to put themselves into a worle condition than the state of nature, wherein they had a liberty to defend their right against the injuries of others, and were upon equal terms of force to main-tain it, whether invaded by a fingle man, or many in combination. Whereas by fuppofing they have given up themselves to the absolute arbitrary power and will of a legif-lator, they have difarmed themselves, and armed him, to make a prey of them when he pleafes; he being in a much worfe condition, who is exposed to the arbitrary power of one man, who has the command of 100,000, than he that is exposed to the arbitrary power of 100,000 fingle men; no body being fecure, that his will, who has fuch a command, is better than that of other men, though his force be roo,000 times fironger. And therefore, whatever form the commonwealth is under, the ruling power ought to govern by declared and received laws, and not by extemporary dictates and undetermined refolutions: for then mankind will be in a far worfe condition than in the flate nature, if they that have armed one, or a few men with the joint power of a multitude, to force them to obey at pleafure the exorbitant 4

bitant and unlimited decrees of their fudden thoughts, or unreftrained, and till that moment unknown wills, without having any measures set down which may guide and justify their actions: for all the power the government has, being only for the good of the fociety, as it ought not to be arbitrary and at pleasure, so it ought to be exercised by established and promulgated laws; that both the people may know their duty, and be faste and fecure within the limits of the law; and the rulers too kept within their bounds, and not be tempted, by the power they have in their hands, to employ it to fuch purposes, and by such measures, as they would not have. known, and own not willingly.

§. 138. Thirdly, The fupreme power cannot take from any man any part of his property without his own confent: for the prefervation of property being the end of government, and that for which men enter into fociety, it neceffarily fuppofes and requires, that the people fhould bave property, without which they must be fuppofed to lofe that, by entering into fociety, which was the end for which they entered into it; too grofs an abfurdity for any man to own. Men therefore in faciety baving property, they have fuch a right to the goods, which by the law of the community are their's, that no body hath a right to take their fubftance or any part of it from them, without their own confent: without

this they have no property at all; for I have truly no property in that, which another can by right take from me, when he pleases, against my confent. Hence it is a mistake to think, that the fupreme or legislative power of any common-wealth, can do what it will, and dispose of the estates of the subject arbitrarily, or take any part of them at pleasure. This is not much to be feared in governments where the legiflative confifts, wholly or in part, in affemblies which are variable, whole members, upon the diffolution of the affembly, are fubjects under the common laws of their country, equally with the reft. But in governments, where the legislative is in one lasting affembly always in being, or in one man, as in absolute monarchies, there is danger still, that they will think themfelves to have a distinct interest from the reft of the community; and fo will be apt to increase their own riches and power, by taking what they think fit from the people : for a man's property is not at all fecure, tho' there be good and equitable laws to fet the bounds of it between him and his fellow subjects, if he who commands those subjects have power to take from any private man, what part he pleases of his property, and use and dispose of it as he thinks good.

§. 139. But government, into whatfoever hands it is put, being, as I have before shewed, intrusted with this condition, and for this end.

end, that men might have and fecure their properties; the prince, or fenate, however it may have power to make laws, for the re-gulating of property between the fubjects one amongst another, yet can never have a power to take to themfelves the whole, or any part of the fubjects property, without their own confent: for this would be in effect to leave them no protection at all. And to let us for them no property at all. And to let us fee, that even abfolute power, where it is neceffary, is not arbitrary by being abfolute, but is ftill limited by that reafon, and confined to those ends, which required it in fome cafes to be abfolute, we need look no farther than the common practice of martial discipline : for the prefervation of the army, and in it of the whole common-wealth, requires an abfolute obedience to the command of every fu-perior officer, and it is justly death to difobey or difpute the most dangerous or unreasonable of them; but yet we see, that neither the serie ferjeant, that could, command a soldier to ferjeant, that could, command a toldier, to march up to the mouth of a cannon, or ftand in a breach, where he is almost fure to perifh, can command that foldier to give him, one penny of his money; nor the general, that can condemn him to death for deferting his post; or for not obeying the most desperate orders, can yet, with all his abfolute power of life and death, dispose of one farthing of that foldier's estate, or feize one jot of his goods; whom yet he can command any thing, and whom yet he can command any thing, and Y hang hang for the leaft difobedience; becaufe fuch a blind obedience is neceffary to that end, for which the commander has his power, viz. the prefervation of the reft; but the difpoing of his goods has nothing to do with it.

§. 140. It is true, governments cannot be fupported without great charge, and it is fit every one who enjoys his thare of the protection, thould pay out of his eftate his proportion for the maintenance of it. But ftill it must be with his own confent, i. e. the confent of the majority, giving it either by themfelves, or their reprefentatives chosen by them: for if any one thall claim a power to lay and levy taxes on the people, by his own authority, and without fuch confent of the people, he thereby invades the fundamental law of property, and fubverts the end of government: for what property have I in that, which another may by right take, when he pleafes, to himfelf?

§. 141. Fourthly, The legislative cannot transfer the power of making laws to any other hands: for it being but a delegated power from the people, they who have it cannot pass it over to others. The people alone can appoint the form of the common-wealth, which is by conflituting the legislative, and appointing in whose hands that shall be. And when the people have said, We will submit to rules, and be governed by laws made by such men, and in such forms, no body else can fay fay other men shall make laws for them; nor can the people be bound by any laws, but fuch as are enacted by those whom they have chosen, and authorized to make laws for them. The power of the legislative, being derived from the people by a positive voluntary grant and institution, can be no other than what that positive grant conveyed, which being only to make laws, and not to make legislators, the legislative can have no power to transfer their authority of making laws, and place it in other hands.

§. 142. These are the bounds which the trust, that is put in them by the fociety, and the law of God and nature, have fet to the legislative power of every common-wealth, in all forms of government.

First, They are to govern by promulgated established laws, not to be varied in particular cases, but to have one rule for rich and poor, for the favourite at court, and the country man at plough.

Secondly, These laws also ought to be defigned for no other end ultimately, but the good of the people.

Thirdly, They must not raife taxes on the property of the people, without the confent of the people, given by themfelves, or their deputies. And this properly concerns only fuch governments where the legiflative is always in being, or at least where the people have not referved any part of the legislative to Y 2 deputies, 324 OF CIVIL-GOVERNMENT. deputies, to be from time to time chosen by themfelves.

Fourthly, The legislative neither must nor can transfer the power of making laws to any body elfe, or place it any where, but where the people have.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Legislative, Executive, and Federative Power of the Common-wealth.

§. 143. THE legislative power is that, which has a right to direct how the force of the common-wealth shall be employed for preferving the community and the members of it. But because those laws which are conftantly to be executed, and whole force is always to continue, may be made in a little time; therefore there is no need, that the legiflative should be always in being, not having always bufinefs to do. And because it may be too great a temptation to human frailty, apt to grafp at power, for the fame perfons, who have the power of making laws, to have also in their hands the power to execute them, whereby they may exempt themselves from obedience to the laws they make, and fuit the law, both in its making, and execution, to their own private advantage, and thereby come to have a diftinct interest from the rest of the community,

munity, contrary to the end of fociety and munity, contrary to the end of lociety and government: therefore in well-ordered com-mon-wealths, where the good of the whole is fo confidered, as it ought, the legiflative power is put into the hands of divers perfons, who duly affembled, have by themfelves, or jointly with others, a power to make laws, which when they have done, being feparated again, they are themfelves fubject to the laws they have made; which is a new and near tie upon them, to take care, that they make them for the public good.

§. 144. But because the laws, that are at once, and in a short time made, have a conftant and lasting force, and need a perpetual execution, or an attendance thereunto; therefore it is neceffary there should be a power always in being, which should fee to the execution of the laws that are made, and remain in force. And thus the legiflative and executive power come often to be leparated.

§. 145. There is another power in every common-wealth, which one may call na-tural, becaufe it is that which anfwers to the power every man naturally had before he entered into fociety: for though in a com-mon-wealth the members of it are diffinct perfons still in reference to one another, and as fuch are governed by the laws of the fo-ciety; yet in reference to the reft of man-kind, they make one body, which is, as every member of it before was, ftill in the ftate of nature nature with the reft of mankind. Hence it is, that the controverfies that happen between any man of the fociety with those that are out of it, are managed by the public; and an injury done to a member of their body, engages the whole in the reparation of it. So that under this confideration, the whole community is one body in the state of nature, in respect of all other states or perfons out of its community.

§. 146. This therefore contains the power of war and peace, leagues and alliances, and all the transactions, with all perfons and communities without the common-wealth, and may be called federative, if any one pleases. So the thing be understood, I am indifferent as to the name.

§. 147. Thefe two powers, executive and federative, though they be really diffinct in themfelves, yet one comprehending the execution of the municipal laws of the fociety within its felf, upon all that are parts of it; the other the management of the fecurity and interest of the public without, with all those that it may receive benefit or damage from, yet they are always almost united. And though this federative power in the well or ill management of it be of great moment to the common-wealth, yet it is much lefs capable to be directed by antecedent, standing, positive laws, than the executive; and so must necessarily be left to the prudence and wisdom of

of those, whose hands it is in, to be managed for the public good: for the laws that concern subjects one amongst another, being to direct their actions, may well enough precede them. But what is to be done in reference to foreigners, depending much upon their actions, and the variation of designs and interests, must be left in great part to the prudence of those, who have this power committed to them, to be managed by the best of their skill, for the advantage of the common-wealth.

§. 148. Though, as I faid, the executive and federative power of every community be really diffinct in themfelves, yet they are hardly to be feparated, and placed at the fame time, in the hands of diffinct perfons: for both of them requiring the force of the fociety for their exercife, it is almost impracticable to place the force of the common-wealth in diffinct, and not fubordinate hands; or that the executive and federative power should be placed in perfons, that might act feparately, whereby the force of the public would be under different commands: which would be apt fome time or other to cause diforder and ruin.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Subordination of the Powers of the Common-wealth.

§. 149. THough in a conftituted com-mon-wealth, ftanding upon its own bafis, and acting according to its own nature, that is, acting for the prefervation of the community, there can be but one fupreme. power, which is the legislative, to which all the reft are and must be subordinate, yet the legislative being only a fiduciary power to act for certain ends, there remains still in the people a fupreme power to remove or alter the legislative, when they find the legislative act contrary to the trust reposed in them: for all power given with trust for the attaining an end, being limited by that end, whenever that end is manifestly neglected, or opposed, the trust must necessarily be forfeited, and the power devolve into the hands of those that power devolve into the hands of those that gave it, who may place it anew where they shall think best for their fafety and fecurity. And thus the community perpetually retains a fupreme power of faving themselves from the attempts and defigns of any body, even of their legiflators, whenever they shall be so foolish, or so wicked, as to lay and carry on defigns against the liberties and properties of the subject: for no man or society of men, having a power to deliver up their prefervation, wation, or confequently the means of it, to the abfolute will and arbitrary dominion of another; when ever any one fhall go about to bring them into fuch a flavish condition, they will always have a right to preferve, what they have not a power to part with; and to rid themselves of those, who invade this fundamental, facred, and unalterable law of felf-prefervation, for which they entered into fociety. And thus the community may be faid in this respect to be always the fupreme power, but not as confidered under any form of government, because this power of the people can never take place till the government be diffolved.

ment be diffolved. §. 150. In all cafes, whilft the government fubfifts, the legiflative is the fupreme power: for what can give laws to another, muft needs be fuperior to him; and fince the legiflative is no otherwife legiflative of the fociety, but by the right it has to make laws for all the parts, and for every member of the fociety, prefcribing rules to their actions, and giving power of execution, where they are tranfgreffed, the legiflative muft needs be the fupreme, and all other powers, in any members or parts of the fociety, derived from and fubordinate to it.

§. 151. In fome common-wealths, where the legiflative is not always in being, and the executive is vefted in a fingle perfon, who has alfo a fhare in the legiflative; there that fingle perfon perfon in a very tolerable fenfe may alfo be called fupreme: not that he has in himfelf all the fupreme power, which is that of lawmaking; but because he has in him the fupreme execution, from whom all inferior magistrates derive all their several subordinate powers, or at least the greatest part of them : having alfo no legiflative fuperior to him, there being no law to be made without his confent, which cannot be expected should ever fubject him to the other part of the legiflative, be is properly enough in this fenfe fupreme. But yet it is to be observed, that tho' oaths of allegiance and fealty are taken to him, it is not to him as fupreme legiflator, but as supreme executor of the law, made by a joint power of him with others; allegiance being nothing but an obedience according to law, which when he violates, he has no right to obedience, nor can claim it otherwife than as the public perfon vefted with the power of the law, and fo is to be confidered as the image, phantom, or representative of the common-wealth, acted by the will of the common-wealth, acted by the will of the fociety, declared in its laws; and thus he has no will, no power, but that of the law. But when he quits this reprefentation, this public will, and acts by his own private will, he degrades himfelf, and is but a fingle private perfon without power, and without will, that has any right to obedience; the members owing owing no obedience but to the public will of the fociety.

S. 152. The executive power, placed any where but in a perfon that has alfo a fhare in the legiflative, is vifibly fubordinate and accountable to it, and may be at pleafure changed and difplaced; fo that it is not the fupreme executive power, that is exempt from fubordination, but the fupreme executive power vefted in one, who having a fhare in the legiflative, has no diffinct fuperior legiflative legislative, has no distinct superior legislative to be fubordinate and accountable to, farther than he himfelf shall join and confent; so that he is no more subordinate than he himself shall think fit, which one may certainly conclude will be but very little. Of other mi-nifterial and fubordinate powers in a common-wealth, we need not fpeak, they being fo multiplied with infinite variety, in the different cuftoms and conftitutions of diffinct common-wealths, that it is impossible to give a particular account of them all. Only thus much, which is necessary to our present purpole, we may take notice of concerning them, that they have no manner of authority, any of them, beyond what is by positive grant and commission delegated to them, and are all of them accountable to fome other power in the common-wealth.

§. 153. It is not neceffary, no, nor fo much as convenient, that the legislative should be always in being ; but abfolutely neceffary that the

the executive power should, because there is not always need of new laws to be made, but always need of execution of the laws that are made. When the legiflative hath put the execution of the laws, they make, into other hands, they have a power still to refume it out of those hands, when they find cause, and to punish for any mal-administration against the laws. The same holds also in regard of the federative power, that and the executive being both ministerial and subordinate to the legislative, which, as has been shewed, in a conftituted common-wealth is the fupreme. The legiflative also in this case being fupposed to confist of feveral persons, (for if it be a fingle person, it cannot but be always in being, and so will, as supreme, naturally have the fupreme executive power, together with the legislative) may assemble, and exercise their legislature, at the times that either their original constitution, or their own adjournment, appoints, or when they please; if neither of these hath appointed any time, or there be no other way prefcribed to convoke them: for the fupreme power being placed in them by the people, it is always in them, and they may exercise it when they please, unless by their original constitution they are limited to certain feasons, or by an act of their fupreme power they have adjourned to a certain time; and when that time comes, they have a right to affemble and act again.

§. 154. If the legislative, or any part of it, be made up of reprefentatives chosen for that time by the people, which afterwards return into the ordinary state of subjects, and have no share in the legislature but upon a new choice, this power of chuing must also be exercifed by the people, either at certain appointed seafons, or else when they are summoned to it; and in this latter cafe, the power of convoking the legislative is ordinarily placed in the executive, and has one of these two limitations in respect of time: that either the original conftitution requires their affembling and acting at certain intervals, and then the executive power does nothing but ministerially issue directions for their electing and assembling, according to due forms; or elfe it is left to his prudence to call them by new elections, when the occafions or exigencies of the public require the amendment of old, or making of new laws, or the redrefs or prevention of any inconveniencies, that lie on, or threaten the people.

§. 155. It may be demanded here, What if the executive power, being poffeffed of the force of the common-wealth, fhall make ufe of that force to hinder the meeting and asting of the legiflative, when the original conftitution, or the public exigencies require it? I fay, ufing force upon the people without authority, and contrary to the truft put in him him that does fo, is a state of war with the people, who have a right to reinstate their legiflative in the exercife of their power: for having erected a legislative, with an intent they should exercise the power of making laws, either at certain fet times, or when there is need of it, when they are hindered by any force from what is fo necessary to the fociety, and wherein the fafety and prefervation of the people confifts, the people have a right to remove it by force. In all states and conditions, the true remedy of force without authority, is to oppose force to it. The use of force without authority, always puts him that uses it into a flate of war, as the aggreffor, and renders him liable to be treated accordingly.

§. 156. The power of allembling and difmilling the legislative, placed in the executive, gives not the executive a fuperiority over it, but is a fiduciary truft placed in him, for the fafety of the people, in a cafe where the uncertainty and variableness of human affairs could not bear a steady fixed rule: for it not being possible, that the first framers of the government should, by any forefight, be so much masters of future events, as to be able to prefix so just periods of return and duration to the asserties of the legislative, in all times to come, that might exactly answer all the exigencies of the common-wealth; the best remedy could be found for this defect, was

was to trust this to the prudence of one who was to truit this to the prudence of one who was always to be prefent, and whole bulinefs it was to watch over the public good. Con-ftant frequent meetings of the legiflative, and long continuations of their affemblies, without neceffary occasion, could not but be burden-fome to the people, and must neceffarily in time produce more dangerous inconveniencies, and wat the quick turn of affairs might ha and yet the quick turn of affairs might be fometimes fuch as to need their prefent help: any delay of their convening might endanger the public; and fometimes too their business might be fo great, that the limited time of their fitting might be too fhort for their work, and rob the public of that benefit which could be had only from their mature deli-beration. What then could be done in this cafe to prevent the community from being exposed some time or other to eminent hazard, on one fide or the other, by fixed intervals and periods, fet to the meeting and acting of the legislative, but to intrust it to the prudence of fome, who being prefent, and acquainted with the state of public affairs, might make use of this prerogative for the public good? and where elfe could this be fo well placed as in his hands, who was intrusted with the execution of the laws for the fame end? Thus fuppofing the regulation of times for the affembling and fitting of the legiflative, not fettled by the original confti-tution, it naturally fell into the hands of the executive.

executive, not as an arbitrary power depending on his good pleafure, but with this truft always to have it exercised only for the public weal, as the occurrences of times and change of affairs might require. Whether fettled periods of their convening, or a liberty left to the prince for convoking the legiflative, or perhaps a mixture of both, hath the least inconvenience attending it, it is not my bufinefs here to inquire, but only to fhew, that though the executive power may have the prerogative of convoking and diffolving fuch conventions of the legiflative, yet it is not thereby fuperior to it.

§. 157. Things of this world are in fo conftant a flux, that nothing remains long in the fame ftate. Thus people, riches, trade, power, change their ftations, flourishing mighty cities come to ruin, and prove in times neglected defolate corners, whilft other unfrequented places grow into populous countries, filled with wealth and inhabitants. But things not always changing equally, and private intereft often keeping up customs and privileges, when the reasons of them are ceased, it often comes to pass, that in governments, where part of the legislative confists of representatives chosen by the people, that in tract of time this representation becomes very unequal and disproportionate to the reafons it was at first established upon. To what gross absurdities the following of custom, when

when reafon has left it, may lead, we may be fatisfied, when we fee the bare name of a town, of which there remains not fo much as the ruins, where fcarce fo much houfing as a sheepcote, or more inhabitants than a fhepherd is to be found, fends as many reprefentatives to the grand affembly of law-makers, as a whole county numerous in people, and powerful in riches. This stran-gers stand amazed at, and every one must confess needs a remedy; tho' most think it hard to find one, becaufe the conftitution of the legiflative being the original and fu-preme act of the fociety, antecedent to all positive laws in it, and depending wholly on the people, no inferior power can alter it. And therefore the people, when the legiflative is once confituted begins in fuch a record is once conftituted, baving, in fuch a govern-ment as we have been fpeaking of, no power to act as long as the government ftands; this inconvenience is thought incapable of a remedy.

§. 158. Salus populi fuprema lex, is certainly fo just and fundamental a rule, that he, who funcerely follows it, cannot dangerously err. If therefore the executive, who has the power of convoking the legislative, observing rather the true proportion, than fashion of representation, regulates, not by old custom, but true reason, the number of members, in all places that have a right to be distinctly represented, which no part of the people how-Z ever incorporated can pretend to, but in pro-portion to the affiftance which it affords to the public, it cannot be judged to have fet up a new legiflative, but to have reftored the old and true one, and to have rectified the diforders which fucceffion of time had infenfibly, as well as inevitably introduced : For it being the interest as well as intention of the people, to have a fair and equal representative; whoever brings it nearest to that, is an undoubted friend to, and establisher of the government, and cannot mis the confent and approbation of the community; prero-gative being nothing but a power, in the hands of the prince, to provide for the public good, in fuch cafes, which depending upon unforefeen and uncertain occurrences, certain and unalterable laws could not fafely direct; whatfoever shall be done manifestly for the good of the people, and the establishing the government upon its true foundations, is, and always will be, just prerogative. The power of erecting new corporations, and therewith new reprefentatives, carries with it a supposition, that in time the measures of representation might vary, and those places have a just right to be reprefented which before had none; and by the fame reafon, those cease to have a right, and be too inconfiderable for fuch a privilege, which before had it. 'Tis not a change from the prefent state, which perhaps corruption or decay has introduced, that makes an inroad upon the government, but the tendency of it to injure or opprefs the people, and to fet up one part or party, with a diffinction from, and an unequal fubjection of the reft. Whatfoever cannot but be acknowledged to be of advantage to the fociety, and people in general, upon juft and lafting meafures, will always, when done, juftify itfelf; and whenever the people fhall chufe their reprefentatives upon juft and undeniably equal meafures, fuitable to the original frame of the government, it cannot be doubted to be the will and act of the fociety, whoever permitted or caufed them fo to do.

C H A P. XIV. Of PREROGATIVE.

§. 159. W HERE the legiflative and executive power are in diffinct hands, (as they are in all moderated monarchies, and well-framed governments) there the good of the fociety requires, that feveral things should be left to the difcretion of him that has the executive power : for the legiflators not being able to foresee, and provide by laws, for all that may be useful to the community, the executor of the laws, having the power in his hands, has by the common law of nature a right to make use of it for the good of the fociety, in many cases, where the mu-Z 2 nicipal nicipal law has given no direction, till the legislative can conveniently be affembled to provide for it. Many things there are, which the law can by no means provide for; and those must necessarily be left to the discretion of him that has the executive power in his hands, to be ordered by him as the public good and advantage shall require : nay, it is fit that the laws themselves should in some cases give way to the executive power, or rather to this fundamental law of nature and government, viz. That as much as may be, all the members of the fociety are to be preferved : for fince many accidents may happen, wherein a strict and rigid observation of the laws may do harm; (as not to pull down an innocent man's house to stop the fire, when the next to it is burning) and a man may come fomtimes within the reach of the law, which makes no diffinction of perfons, by an action that may deferve reward and pardon; 'tis fit the ruler should have a power, in many cases, to mitigate the feverity of the law, and pardon fome offenders: for the end of government being the prefervation of all, as much as may be, even the guilty are to be spared, where it can prove no prejudice to the innocent.

§. 160. This power to act according to diferentiation, for the public good, without the prefeription of the law, and fometimes even against it, is that which is called prerogative: for fince in fome governments the lawmaking making power is not always in being, and is ufually too numerous, and fo too flow, for the difpatch requisite to execution; and be-caufe alfo it is impossible to foresee, and fo by laws to provide for, all accidents and neceffities that may concern the public, or to make fuch laws as will do no harm, if they are executed with an inflexible rigour, on all occafions, and upon all perfons that may come in their way; therefore there is a latitude left to the executive power, to do many things of choice which the laws do not prescribe.

§. 161. This power, whilst employed for the benefit of the community, and fuitably to the trust and ends of the government, is undoubted prerogative, and never is questioned : acuotea prerogative, and never is queitioned: for the people are very feldom or never foru-pulous or nice in the point; they are far from examining prerogative, whilf it is in any tolerable degree employed for the use it was meant, that is, for the good of the people, and not manifestly against it: but if there comes to be a question between the executive power and the people, about a third claimed comes to be a question between the executive power and the people, about a thing claimed as a prerogative; the tendency of the exercise of fuch prerogative to the good or hurt of the people, will easily decide that question. §. 162. It is easy to conceive, that in the infancy of governments, when common-wealths differed little from families in number being as the fathers of them, watching over them for their good, the government was almoft all prerogative. A few eftablished laws ferved the turn, and the discretion and care of the ruler supplied the reft. But when mistake or flattery prevailed with weak princes to make use of this power for private ends of their own, and not for the public good, the people were fain by express laws to get prerogative determined in those points wherein they found difadvantage from it : and thus declared limi-tations of prerogative were by the people found neceffary in cases which they and their ance-ftors had left, in the utmost latitude, to the wisdom of those princes who made no other being as the fathers of them, watching over wildom of those princes who made no other but a right use of it, that is, for the good of their people.

S. 163. And therefore they have a very wrong notion of government, who fay, that the people have incroached upon the prerogative, when they have got any part of it to be defined by politive laws: for in fo doing they have not pulled from the prince any thing that of right belonged to him, but only declared, that that power which they indefinitely left in his or his anceftors hands, to be exercised for their good was not a thing which they in their good, was not a thing which they in-tended him when he used it otherwise: for the end of government being the good of the community, whatfoever alterations are made in it, tending to that end, cannot be an in-creachment upon any body, fince no body in go-government can have a right tending to any other end: and those only are incroachments which prejudice or hinder the public good. Those who say otherwise, speak as if the prince had a distinct and separate interest from the good of the community, and was not made for it; the root and fource from which fpring almost all those evils and disorders which happen in kingly governments. And indeed, if that be fo, the people under his government are not a fociety of rational creatures, entered into a community for their mutual good; they are not fuch as have fet rulers over themfelves, to guard, and promote that good; but are to be looked on as an herd of inferior creatures under the dominion of a mafter, who keeps them and works them for his own pleasure or profit. If men were fo void of reason, and brutish, as to enter into fociety upon fuch terms, prerogative might indeed be, what fome men would have it, an arbitrary power to do things hurtful to the people.

§. 164. But fince a rational creature cannot be fuppofed, when free, to put himfelf into fubjection to another, for his own harm; (though, where he finds a good and wife ruler, he may not perhaps think it either neceffary or ufeful to fet precife bounds to his power in all things) prerogative can be nothing but the people's permitting their rulers to do feveral things, of their own free choice, where Z 4 the

the law was filent, and fometimes too againft the direct letter of the law, for the public good; and their acquiefcing in it when fo done: for as a good prince, who is mindful of the truft put into his hands, and careful of the good of his people, cannot have too much prerogative, that is, power to do good; fo a weak and ill prince, who would claim that power which his predeceffors exercifed without the direction of the law, as a prerogative belonging to him by right of his office, which he may exercife at his pleafure, to make or promote an intereft diftinct from that of the public, gives the people an occasion to claim their right, and limit that power, which, whilf it was exercifed for their good, they were content sould be tacitly allowed.

§. 165. And therefore he that will look into the biftory of England, will find, that prerogative was always largeft in the hands of our wifeft and beft princes; becaufe the people, obferving the whole tendency of their actions to be the public good, contested not what was done without law to that end: or, if any human frailty or mistake (for princes are but men, made as others) appeared in some stand declinations from that end; yet 'twas visible, the main of their conduct tended to nothing but the care of the public. The people therefore, finding reason to be satisfied with these princes, whenever they acted without, or contrary to the letter of the law, acquiesced in what what they did, and, without the leaft complaint, let them inlarge their prerogative as they pleafed, judging rightly, that they did nothing herein to the prejudice of their laws, fince they acted conformable to the foundation and end of all laws, the public good.

§. 166. Such god-like princes indeed had fome title to arbitrary power by that argu-ment, that would prove abfolute monarchy the best government, as that which God himself governs the universe by; because such kings partake of his wifdom and goodnefs. Upon this is founded that faying, That the reigns of good princes have been always most dangerous to the liberties of their people: for when their fucceffors, managing the government with different thoughts, would draw the actions of those good rulers into precedent, and make them the standard of their prerogative, as if what had been done only for the good of the people was a right in them to do, for the harm of the people, if they fo pleased; it has often occasioned contest, and fometimes public diforders, before the people could recover their original right, and get that to be declared not to be prerogative, which truly was never fo; fince it is impossible that any body in the fociety should ever have a right to do the people harm; though it be very possible, and reasonable, that the people should not go about to set any bounds to the prerogative of those kings, or or rulers, who themselves transgressed not the bounds of the public good: for prerogative is nothing but the power of doing public good without a rule.

§. 167. The power of calling parliaments in England, as to precife time, place, and duration, is certainly a prerogative of the king, but ftill with this truft, that it fhall be made use of for the good of the nation, as the exigencies of the times, and variety of occafions, shall require : for it being impossible to foresee which should always be the fittest place for them to assemble in, and what the best season; the choice of these was left with the executive power, as might be most subfervient to the public good, and best suit the ends of parliaments.

§. 168. The old queftion will be afked in this matter of prerogative, But who fhall be judge when this power is made a right ufe of? I anfwer: between an executive power in being, with fuch a prerogative, and a legiflative that depends upon his will for their convening, there can be no judge on earth; as there can be none between the legiflative and the people, fhould either the executive, or the legiflative, when they have got the power in their hands, defign, or go about to enflave or deftroy them. The people have no other remedy in this, as in all other cafes where they have no judge on earth, but to appeal to beaven: for the rulers, in fuch attempts, tempts, exercifing a power the people never put into their hands, (who can never be fup-pofed to confent that any body fhould rule over them for their harm) do that which over them for their harm) do that which they have not a right to do. And where the body of the people, or any fingle man, is deprived of their right, or is under the exer-cife of a power without right, and have no appeal on earth, then they have a liberty to appeal to heaven, whenever they judge the caufe of fufficient moment. And therefore, though the people cannot be judge, fo as to have, by the conflictuation of that fociety, any fuperior power, to determine and give ef-fective fentence in the cafe; yet they have, fective fentence in the cafe; yet they have, by a law antecedent and paramount to all positive laws of men, referved that ultimate determination to themfelves which belongs to all mankind, where there lies no appeal on earth, viz. to judge, whether they have just cause to make their appeal to heaven. And this judgment they cannot part with, it being out of a man's power so to fubmit himself to another, as to give him a liberty to destroy him; God and nature never al-lowing a man so to abandon himself, as to neglect his own prefervation: and fince he cannot take away his own life, neither can he give another power to take it. Nor let any one think, this lays a perpetual foun-dation for diforder; for this operates not, till the inconveniency is so great, that the majority feel feel 348 OF CIVIL-GOVERNMENT. feel it, and are weary of it, and find a neceffity to have it amended. But this the executive power, or wife princes, never need come in the danger of: and it is the thing, of all others, they have most need to avoid, as of all others the most perilous.

CHAP. XV.

Of Paternal, Political, and Despotical Power, confidered together.

§. 169. THOUGH I have had occasion to speak of these separately before, yet the great mistakes of late about government, having, as I suppose, arisen from confounding these distinct powers one with another, it may not, perhaps, be amiss to confider them here together.

§. 170. First, then, Paternal or parental power is nothing but that which parents have over their children, to govern them for the children's good, till they come to the use of reason, or a state of knowledge, wherein they may be supposed capable to understand that rule, whether it be the law of nature, or the municipal law of their country, they are to govern themselves by: capable, I say, to know it, as well as several others, who live as freemen under that law. The affection and tenderness which God hath planted in the breast of parents towards their children, makes

OF CIVIL-GOVERNMENT. 349 makes it evident, that this is not intended to be a fevere arbitrary government, but only for the help, inftruction, and prefervation of their offspring. But happen it as it will, there is, as I have proved, no reafon why it should be thought to extend to life and death, at any time, over their children, more than over any body elfe; neither can there be any pretence why this parental power should keep the child, when grown to a man, in fubjection to the will of his parents, any farther than having received life and education from his parents. obliges him to refpect, honour, gratitude, affistance and support, all his life, to both father and mother. And thus, 'tis true, the paternal is a natural government, but not at all extending itself to the ends and jurifdictions of that which is political. The power of the father doth not reach at all to the property of the child, which is only in his own difpoling.

§. 171. Secondly, Political power is that power, which every man having in the flate of nature, has given up into the hands of the fociety, and therein to the governors, whom the fociety hath fet over itielf, with this exprefs or tacit truft, that it fhall be employed for their good, and the prefervation of their property: now this power, which every man has in the flate of nature, and which he parts with to the fociety in all fuch cafes where the fociety can fecure him, is to use fuch means, for the preferving of his own pro-4 perty, as he thinks good, and nature allows him; and to punish the breach of the law of nature in others, fo as (according to the best of his reason) may most conduce to the prefervation of himfelf, and the reft of mankind. So that the end and measure of this power, when in every man's hands in the state of nature, being the prefervation of all of his fociety, that is, all mankind in general, it can have no other end or measure, when in the hands of the magistrate, but to preferve the members of that fociety in their lives, liberties, and posseffions; and so cannot be an abfolute, arbitrary power over their lives and fortunes, which are as much as poffible to be preferved; but a power to make laws, and annex fuch penalties to them, as may tend to the prefervation of the whole, by cutting off those parts, and those only, which are so corrupt, that they threaten the found and healthy, without which no feverity is lawful. And this power has its original only from compact and agreement, and the mutual confent of those who make up the community.

§. 172. Thirdly, Despotical power is an abfolute, arbitrary power one man has over another, to take away his life, whenever he pleafes. This is a power, which neither nature gives, for it has made no fuch diftinction between one man and another; nor compact can convey: for man not having fuch an arbitrary power over his own life, cannot give another man fuch a power over it; but it is the

the effect only of forfeiture, which the ag-greffor makes of his own life, when he puts himfelf into the state of war with another : for having quitted reafon, which God hath given to be the rule betwixt man and man, and the common bond whereby human kind is united into one fellowship and fociety; and having renounced the way of peace which that teaches, and made use of the force of war, to compass his unjust ends upon another, where he has no right; and fo revolting from his own kind to that of beafts, by making force, which is their's, to be his rule of right, he renders himfelf liable to be deftroyed by the injured perfon, and the reft of man-kind, that will join with him in the execution of justice, as any other wild beast, or noxious brute, with whom mankind can have neither fociety nor fecurity*. And thus captives, taken in a just and lawful war, and fuch only, are fubject to a despotical power, which, as it arifes not from compact, fo neither is it capable of any, but is the state of war continued: for what compact can be made with a man that is not master of his own life? what condition can he perform? and if he be once allowed to be master of his own life, the despotical, arbitrary power of his master ceases. He that is master of himfelf, and his own life, has a right too to the means of preferving it; fo that as foon as compact compact enters, flavery ceafes, and he fo far quits his abfolute power, and puts an end to the ftate of war, who enters into conditions with his captive.

* Another copy corrected by Mr. Locke, has it thus, Noxjous brute that is defiructive to their being.

§. 173. Nature gives the first of these, viz. paternal power to parents for the benefit of their children during their minority, to supply their want of ability, and understanding how to manage their property. (By property I muss be understood here, as in other places, to mean that property which men have in their persons as well as goods.) Voluntary agreement gives the second, viz. political power to governors for the benefit of their subjects, to secure them in the possibility of their properties. And forfeiture gives the third despotical power to lords for their own benefit, over those who are stripped of all property.

§. 174. He, that shall confider the diffinct rife and extent, and the different ends of these feveral powers, will plainly see, that paternal power comes as far short of that of the magistrate, as despotical exceeds it; and that absolute dominion, however placed, is so far from being one kind of civil society, that it is as inconfistent with it, as flavery is with property. Paternal power is only where minority makes the child incapable to manage his property; political, where men have property in their own disposal; and despotical, over such as have no property at all.

CHAP. XVI. Of CONQUEST.

§. 175. Though governments can originally have no other rife than that before mentioned, nor polities be founded on any thing but the confent of the people; yet fuch have been the diforders ambition has filled the world with, that in the noife of war, which makes fo great a part of the hiftory of mankind, this confent is little taken notice of: and therefore many have miftaken the force of arms for the confent of the people, and reckon conqueft as one of the originals of government. But conqueft is as far from fetting up any government, as demolifhing an houfe is from building a new one in the place. Indeed, it often makes way for a new frame of a common-wealth, by deftroying the former; but, without the confent of the people, can never erect a new one.

§. 176. That the aggreffor, who puts himfelf into the flate of war with another, and unjuftly invades another man's right, can, by fuch an unjuft war, never come to bave a right over the conquered, will be eafily agreed by all men, who will not think, that robbers and pyrates have a right of empire over whomfoever they have force enough to mafter; or that men are bound by promifes, A a which

which unlawful force extorts from them. Should a robber break into my house, and with a dagger at my throat make me feal deeds to convey my effate to him, would this give him any title? Juft fuch a title, by his fword, has an unjuft conqueror, who forces me into fubmiffion. The injury and the crime is equal, whether committed by the wearer of a crown, or fome petty villain. The title of the offender, and the number of his followers, make no difference in the offence, unless it be to aggravate it. The only difference is, great robbers punish little ones, to keep them in their obedience; but the great ones are rewarded with laurels and triumphs, because they are too big for the weak hands of justice in this world, and have the power in their own possibilition, which should punish offenders. What is my remedy against a robber, that so broke into my house? Appeal to the law for justice. But perhaps justice is denied, or I am crippled and cannot ftir, robbed and have not the means to do it. If God has taken away all means to do it. If God has taken away an means of feeking remedy, there is nothing left but patience. But my fon, when able, may feek the relief of the law, which I am denied: he or his fon may renew his appeal, till he recover his right. But the conquered, or their children, have no court, no arbitrator on earth to appeal to. Then they may ap-peal, as Jephtha did, to beaven, and repeat their 355 their appeal till they have recovered the native right of their ancestors, which was, to have fuch a legislative over them, as the majority fhould approve, and freely acquiefce in. If it be objected, This would cause endless trouble ; I answer, no more than justice does, where fhe lies open to all that appeal to her. He that troubles his neighbour without a cause, is punished for it by the justice of the court he appeals to : and he that appeals to heaven must be sure he has right on his side; and a right too that is worth the trouble and cost of the appeal, as he will answer at a tribunal that cannot be deceived, and will be fure to retribute to every one according to the mif-chiefs he hath created to his fellow subjects; that is, any part of mankind: from whence it is plain, that he that conquers in an unjust war can thereby have no title to the fubjection and obedience of the conquered.

§. 177. But fuppofing victory favours the right fide, let us confider a conqueror in a lawful war, and fee what power he gets, and over whom.

and over whom. First, It is plain he gets no power by bis conquest over those that conquered with bim. They that fought on his fide cannot fuffer by the conquest, but must at least be as much freemen as they were before. And most commonly they ferve upon terms, and on condition to fhare with their leader, and enjoy a part of the spoil, and other advantages A a 2 that that attend the conquering fword; or at leaft have a part of the fubdued country beftowed upon them. And the conquering people are not, I hope, to be flaves by conquest, and wear their laurels only to shew they are facrifices to their leaders triumph. They that found absolute monarchy upon the title of the fword, make their heroes, who are the founders of fuch monarchies, arrant Draw-can-firs, and forget they had any officers and foldiers that fought on their fide in the battles they won, or affifted them in the fubduing, or shared in posseffing, the countries they mastered. We are told by fome, that the English monarchy is founded in the Norman conquest, and that our princes have thereby a title to absolute dominion: which if it were true, (as by the hiftory it appears otherwife) and that William had a right to make war on this island; yet his dominion by conquest could reach no farther than to the Saxons and Britons, that were then inhabitants of this country. The Normans that came with him, and helped to conquer, and all defcended from them, are freemen, and no fubjects by conquest; let that give what dominion it will. And if I, or any body elfe, shall claim free-dom, as derived from them, it will be very hard to prove the contrary: and it is plain, the law, that has made no diffinction between the one and the other, intends not there fhould

OF CIVIL-GOVERNMENT. 357 should be any difference in their freedom or privileges.

§. 178. But fuppofing, which feldom happens, that the conquerors and conquered never incorporate into one people, under the fame laws and freedom; let us fee next what power a lawful conqueror has over the fubdued: and that I fay is purely defpotical. He has an absolute power over the lives of those who by an unjust war have forfeited them; but not over the lives or fortunes of those who engaged not in the war, nor over the possession of those who were actually engaged in it.

§. 179. Secondly, I fay then the conqueror gets no power but only over those who have actually affisted, concurred, or confented to that unjust force that is used against him: for the people having given to their governors no power to do an unjust thing, such as is to make an unjust war, (for they never had fuch a power in themfelves) they ought not to be charged as guilty of the violence and unjustice that is committed in an unjust war, any farther than they actually abet it; no more than they are to be thought guilty of any violence or oppreffion their governors fhould use upon the people themselves, or any part of their fellow subjects, they having impowered them no more to the one than to the other. Conquerors, it is true, feldom trouble themfelves to make the diffinction, Aa 2 but

but they willingly permit the confusion of war to fweep all together : but yet this alters not the right; for the conquerors power over the lives of the conquered, being only because they have used force to do, or maintain an injustice, he can have that power only over those who have concurred in that force; all the rest are innocent; and he has no more title over the people of that country, who have done him no injury, and so have made no forfeiture of their lives, than he has over any other, who, without any injuries or provocations, have lived upon fair terms with him.

§. 180. Thirdly, The power a conqueror gets over those he overcomes in a just war, is perfectly despotical: he has an absolute power over the lives of those, who, by putting themfelves in a state of war, have forseited them; but he has not thereby a right and title to their possible for a strange doctrine, it being so quite contrary to the practice of the world; there being nothing more familiar in speaking of the dominion of countries, than to say such an one conquered it; as if conquest, without any more ado, conveyed a right of possible for the strange doct in and powerful, how universal so the strong and powerful, how universal so the conquered, is feldom the rule of right, however it be one part of the fubjection of the conquered, not OF CIVIL-GOVERNMENT. 359 not to argue against the conditions cut out to them by the conquering fword.

§. 181. Though in all war there be usually a complication of force and damage, and the aggreffor feldom fails to harm the eftate, when he uses force against the persons of those he makes war upon; yet it is the use of force only that puts a man into the state of war: for whether by force he begins the injury, or elfe having quietly, and by fraud, done the injury, he refuses to make reparation, and by force maintains it, (which is the fame thing, as at first to have done it by force) it is the unjust use of force that makes . the war: for he that breaks open my houfe, and violently turns me out of doors; or having peaceably got in, by force keeps me out, does in effect the fame thing; fuppoling we are in fuch a ftate, that we have no common judge on earth, whom I may appeal to, and to whom we are both obliged to fubmit : for of fuch I am now speaking. It is the unjust use of force then, that puts a man into the state of war with another; and thereby he that is guilty of it makes a forfeiture of his life: for quitting reafon, which is the rule given between man and man, and using force, the way of beafts, he becomes liable to be destroyed by him he uses force against, as any favage ravenous beaft, that is dangerous to his being.

§. 182. But becaufe the miscarriages of the father are no faults of the children, and they may be rational and peaceable, notwithstanding the brutishness and injustice of the father; the father, by his miscarriages and violence, can forfeit but his own life, but involves not his children in his guilt or deftruction. His goods, which nature, that willeth the prefervation of all mankind as much as is poffible, hath made to belong to much as is pollible, hath made to belong to the children to keep them from perifhing, do ftill continue to belong to his children: for fuppofing them not to have joined in the war, either thro' infancy, absence, or choice, they have done nothing to forfeit them: nor has the conqueror any right to take them away, by the bare title of having subdued him that by force attempted his destruction; though perhaps he may have fome right to them, to repair the damages he has fultained by the war, and the defence of his own right; which how far it reaches to the possessions of the conquered, we shall fee by and by. So that he that by conquest has a right over a man's person to destroy him if he pleases, has not thereby a right over bis effate to pollefs and enjoy it: for it is the brutal force the aggreffor has ufed, that gives his adverfary a right to take away his life, and deftroy him if he pleafes, as a noxious creature; but it is damage fuftained that alone gives him title to another man's goods: for though 1 may may kill a thief that fets on me in the highway, yet I may not (which feems lefs) take away his money, and let him go: this would be robbery on my fide. His force, and the ftate of war he put himfelf in, made him forfeit his life, but gave me no title to his goods. The right then of conquest extends only to the lives of those who joined in the war, not to their estates, but only in order to make reparation for the damages received, and the charges of the war, and that too with refervation of the right of the innocent wife and children.

§. 183. Let the conqueror have as much justice on his fide, as could be supposed, he bas no right to feize more than the vanquished could forfeit : his life is at the victor's mercy; and his fervice and goods he may appro-priate, to make himfelf reparation; but he cannot take the goods of his wife and chil-dren; they too had a title to the goods he enjoyed, and their fhares in the eftate he possession possible for example, I in the state of na-ture (and all common-wealths are in the state of nature one with another) have injured another man, and refufing to give fatiffaction, it comes to a state of war, wherein my defending by force what I had gotten unjustly, makes me the aggreffor. I am conquered : my life, it is true, as forfeit, is at mercy, but not my wife's and children's. They made not the war, nor affisted in it. I could

I could not forfeit their lives; they were not mine to forfeit. My wife had a share in my estate; that neither could I forfeit. And my children also, being born of me, had a right to be maintained out of my labour or fubstance. Here then is the case : the conqueror has a title to reparation for damages received, and the children have a title to their father's eftate for their fubfiftence : for as to the wife's share, whether her own labour, or compact, gave her a title to it, it is plain, her husband could not forfeit what was her's. What must be done in the case? I answer; the fundamental law of nature being, that all, as much as may be, should be preferved, it follows, that if there be not enough fully to fatisfy both, viz. for the conqueror's loss, and children's maintenance, he that hath, and to spare, must remit something of his full fatisfaction, and give way to the preffing and preferable title of those who are in danger to perish without it.

§. 184. But supposing the charge and damages of the war are to be made up to the conqueror, to the utmost farthing; and that the children of the vanquissed, spoiled of all their father's goods, are to be left to starve and periss, yet the statisfying of what shall, on this fcore, be due to the conqueror, will fcarce give him a title to any country be shall conquer: for the damages of war can fcarce amount to the value of any considerable tract of land, in any part of the world, where all the land is poffeffed, and none lies wafte. And if I have not taken away the con-queror's land, which, being vanquished, it is impossible I should; scarce any other spoil I have done him can amount to the value of mine, fuppofing it equally cultivated, and of an extent any way coming near what I had over-run of his. The deftruction of a year's product or two (for it feldom reaches four or five) is the utmost spoil that usually can be done: for as to money, and such riches and treasure taken away, these are none of and treafure taken away, thefe are none of nature's goods, they have but a fantaftical imaginary value: nature has put no fuch upon them: they are of no more account by her ftandard, than the wampompeke of the Americans to an European prince, or the filver money of Europe would have been formerly to an American. And five years product is not worth the perpetual inheritance of land, where all is polleffed, and none re-mains wafte, to be taken up by him that is diffeized: which will be eafily granted, if one do but take away the imaginary value of money, the difproportion being more than between five and five hundred; though, at the fame time, half a year's product is more worth than the inheritance, where there being more land than the inhabitants poffefs and make ufe of, any one has liberty to make make use of, any one has liberty to make ·use of the waste : but there conquerors take little little care to poffefs themfelves of the lands of the vanquished. No damage therefore, that men in the state of nature (as all princes and governments are in reference to one another) fuffer from one another, can give a conqueror power to difpoffefs the posterity of the vanquished, and turn them out of that inheritance, which ought to be the possession of them and their descendants to all generations. The conqueror indeed will be apt to think himfelf mafter : and it is the very condition of the fubdued not to be able to difpute their right. But if that be all, it gives no other title than what bare force gives to the stronger over the weaker: and, by this reason, he that is ftrongeft will have a right to whatever he pleases to seize on.

§. 185. Over those then that joined with him in the war, and over those of the subdued country that opposed him not, and the poflerity even of those that did, the conqueror, even in a just war, hath, by his conquest, no right of dominion: they are free from any subjection to him, and if their former government be dissolved, they are at liberty to begin and erect another to themselves.

§. 186. The conqueror, it is true, ufually, by the force he has over them, compels them, with a fword at their breafts, to ftoop to his conditions, and fubmit to fuch a government as he pleafes to afford them; but the enquiry is, what right he has to do fo \vec{r} If

If it be faid, they fubmit by their own confent, then this allows their own confent to be necessary to give the conqueror a title to rule over them. It remains only to be confidered, whether promises extorted by force, without right, can be thought confent, and how far they bind. To which I shall say, they bind not at all; becaufe whatfoever another gets from me by force, I still retain the right of, and he is obliged prefently to reftore. He that forces my horse from me, ought pre-fently to restore him, and I have still a right to retake him. By the fame reason, he that forced a promife from me, ought prefently to reftore it, i. e. quit me of the obligation of it; or I may refume it myfelf, i. e. chufe whether I will perform it: for the law of nature laying an obligation on me only by the rules fhe prefcribes, cannot oblige me by the violation of her rules: fuch is the exby the violation of her rules: fuch is the ex-torting any thing from me by force. Nor does it at all alter the cafe to fay; I gave my promife, no more than it excufes the force, and paffes the right, when I put my hand in my pocket, and deliver my purfe myfelf to a thief, who demands it with a piftol at my breaft.

§. 187. From all which it follows, that the government of a conqueror, imposed by force on the fubdued, against whom he had no right of war, or who joined not in the war against against him, where he had right, has no obligation upon them.

§. 188. But let us fuppofe, that all the men of that community, being all members of the fame body politic, may be taken to have joined in that unjuft war wherein they are fubdued, and fo their lives are at the mercy of the conqueror.

§. 189. I fay, this concerns not their children who are in their minority; for fince a father hath not, in himself, a power over the life or liberty of his child, no act of his can poffibly forfeit it. So that the children, whatever may have happened to the fathers, are freemen, and the absolute power of the conqueror reaches no farther than the perfons of the men that were fubdued by him, and dies with them: and should he govern them as flaves, fubjected to his ab-folute arbitrary power, he has no fuch right of dominion over their children. He can have no power over them but by their own confent, whatever he may drive them to fay or do ; and he has no lawfull authority, whilst force, and not choice, compels them to fubmiffion.

§. 190. Every man is born with a double right: first, a right of freedom to his person, which no other man has a power over, but the free disposal of it lies in himself. Secondly, a right, before any other man, to inherit with his brethren his father's goods.

§. 191. By the first of these, a man is naturally free from subjection to any government, tho' he be born in a place under its jurisdiction; but if he disclaim the lawful government of the country he was born in, he must also quit the right that belonged to him by the laws of it, and the possifions there descending to him from his ancestors, if it were a government made by their confent.

§. 192. By the fecond, the inbabitants of any country, who are defcended, and derive a title to their eftates from those who are fubdued, and had a government forced upon lubdued, and had a government forced upon them against their free confents, retain a right to the poffeffion of their ancestors, though they confent not freely to the government, whose hard conditions were by force im-posed on the possession of that country: for the first conqueror never having had a title to the land of that country, the people who are the descendants of, or claim under those who were forced to fubmit to the yoke of a government by conftraint, have always a right to fhake it off, and free themfelves from the to make it on, and free memieives from the usurpation or tyranny which the fword hath brought in upon them, till their rulers put them under such a frame of government as they willingly and of choice consent to. Who doubts but the Grecian christians, de-scendants of the ancient possessor of that country, may justly cast off the Turkish voke yoke, which they have fo long groaned under, whenever they have an opportunity to do it? For no government can have a right to obedience from a people who have not freely confented to it; which they can never be fuppofed to do, till either they are put in a full ftate of liberty to chufe their government and governors, or at leaft till they have fuch ftanding laws, to which they have by themfelves or their reprefentatives given their free confent, and alfo till they are allowed their due property, which is fo to be proprietors of what they have, that no body can take away any part of it without their own confent, without which, men under any government are not in the ftate of freemen, but are direct flaves under the force of war.

§. 193. But granting that the conqueror in a juft war has a right to the effates, as well as power over the perfons, of the conquered; which, it is plain, he batb not: nothing of abfolute power will follow from hence, in the continuance of the government; becaufe the defcendants of thefe being all freemen, if he grants them effates and pofferfions to inhabit his country, (without which it would be worth nothing) whatfoever he grants them, they have, fo far as it is granted, property in. The nature whereof is, that without a man's own confent it cannot be taken from bim.

§. 194. Their perfons are free by a native right, and their properties, be they more or lefs, are their own, and at their own dispose, and not at his; or elfe it is no property. Supposing the conqueror gives to one man a thousand acres, to him and his heirs for Suppofing the conqueror gives to one man a thouland acres, to him and his heirs for ever; to another he lets a thouland acres for his life, under the rent of 50l. or 500l. per ann. has not the one of these a right to his thouland acres for ever, and the other, during his life, paying the faid rent? and hath not the tenant for life a property in all that he gets over and above his rent, by his labour and industry during the faid term, fupposing it be double the rent? Can any one fay, the king, or conqueror, after his grant, may by his power of conqueror take away all, or part of the land from the heirs of one, or from the other during his life, he paying the rent? or can he take away from either the goods or money they have got upon the faid land, at his pleasure? If he can, then all free and voluntary contrasts cease, and are void in the world; there needs nothing to diffolve them at any time, but power enough: and all the grants and pra-mises of men in power are but mockery and collution: for can there be any thing more ridiculous than to fay, I give you and your's this for ever, and that in the fureft and most folemn way of conveyance can be devifed; and yet it is to be understood, that I have B b right, right, if I please, to take it away from you again to morrow?

§. 195. I will not difpute now whether princes are exempt from the laws of their country; but this I am fure, they owe fubjection to the laws of God and nature. No body, no power, can exempt them from the obligations of that eternal law. Those are fo great, and fo ftrong, in the case of promises, that omnipotency itself can be tied by them. Grants, promises, and oatbs, are bonds that bold the Almighty: whatever fome flatterers fay to princes of the world, who all together, with all their people joined to them, are, in comparison of the great God, but as a drop of the bucket, or a dust on the balance, inconfiderable, nothing !

but as a drop of the bucket, or a duft on the balance, inconfiderable, nothing! §. 196. The fhort of the cafe in conquest is this: the conqueror, if he have a just cause, has a despotical right over the persons of all, that actually aided, and concurred in the war against him, and a right to make up his damage and cost out of their labour and estates, so he injure not the right of any other. Over the rest of the people, if there were any that confented not to the war, and over the children of the captives themselves, or the possibilities of either, he has no power; and so can have, by virtue of conquest, no lawful title himself to dominion over them, or derive it to his posserity; but is an aggression, if he attempts upon their properties, and thereby thereby puts himfelf in a ftate of war against them, and has no better a right of principality, he, nor any of his fucceffors, than Hingar, or Hubba, the Danes, had here in England; or Spartacus, had he conquered Italy, would have had; which is to have their yoke cast off, as soon as God shall give those under their subjection courage and opportunity to do it. Thus, notwithstanding whatever title the kings of Affyria had over Judab, by the fword, God affifted Hezekiab to throw off the dominion of that conquering empire. And the lord was with Hezekiab, and be profpered; wherefore be went forth, and be rebelled against the king of Af-fyria, and ferved bim not, 2 Kings xviii. 7. Whence it is plain, that shaking off a power, which force, and not right, hath fet over any one, though it hath the name of rebellion, yet is no offence before God, but is that which he allows and countenances, though even promifes and covenants, when obtained by force, have intervened: for it is very probable, to any one that reads the ftory of Abaz and Hezekiah attentively, that the Affyrians fubdued Abaz, and deposed him, and made Hezekiab king in his father's life-time; and that Hezekiab by agreement had done him homage, and paid him tribute all this time.

CHAP. XVII.

Of USURPATION.

§. 197. A S conqueft may be called a foreign ufurpation, fo ufurpation is a kind of domeftic conqueft, with this difference, that an ufurper can never have right on his fide, it being no ufurpation, but where one is got into the pojlefion of what another has right to. This, fo far as it is ufurpation, is a change only of perfons, but not of the forms and rules of the government: for if the ufurper extend his power beyond what of right belonged to the lawful princes, or governors of the commonwealth, it is tyranny added to ufurpation.

it is tyranny added to ufurpation. 3. 198. In all lawful governments, the defignation of the perfons, who are to bear rule, is as natural and neceffary a part as the form of the government itfelf, and is that which had its eftablifhment originally from the people; the anarchy being much alike, to have no form of government at all; or to agree, that it fhall be monarchical, but to appoint no way to defign the perfon that fhall have the power, and be the monarch. Hence all commonwealths, with the form of government eftablifhed, have rules alfo of appointing thofe who are to have any fhare in the public authority, and fettled methods of conveying the right to them: for

for the anarchy is much alike, to have no form of government at all; or to agree that it fhall be monarchical, but to appoint no way to know or defign the perfon that fhall have the power, and be the monarch. Whoever gets into the exercise of any part of the power, by other ways than what the laws of the community have preferibed, hath no right to be obeyed, though the form of the commonwealth be still preferved; fince he is not the perfon the laws have appointed, and confequently not the perfon the people have confented to. Nor can such an usurper, or any deriving from him, ever have a title, till the people are both at liberty to confent, and have actually confented to allow, and confirm in him the power he hath till then usurped.

CHAP. XVIII. Of TYRANNY.

§. 199. A S usurpation is the exercise of power, which another hath a right to; so tyranny is the exercise of power beyond right, which no body can have a right to. And this is making use of the power any one has in his hands, not for the good of those who are under it, but for his own private separate advantage. When the governor, however intitled, makes not the law, but his will, the rule; and his com-B b 3 mands mands and actions are not directed to the prefervation of the properties of his people, but the fatisfaction of his own ambition, revenge, covetousness, or any other irregular passion.

§. 200. If one can doubt this to be truth, or reason, because it comes from the obscure hand of a fubject, I hope the authority of a king will make it pafs with him. King James the first, in his speech to the parlia-ment, 1603, tells them thus, I will ever prefer the weal of the public, and of the whole commonwealth, in making of good laws and conflictutions, to any particular and private ends of mine; thinking ever the wealth and weal of the commonwealth to be my greatest weal and worldly felicity; a point wherein a lawful king doth directly differ from a tyrant : for I do acknowledge, that the special and greatest point of difference that is between a rightful king and an usurping tyrant, is this, that whereas the proud and ambitious tyrant doth think his kingdom and people are only ordained for Satisfaction of his defires and unreafonable appctites, the righteous and just king doth by the contrary ac-knowledge himsfelf to be ordained for the pro-curing of the wealth and property of his people. And again, in his speech to the parliament, 1609, he hath these words, The king binds himself by a double oath, to the observation of the fundamental laws of his kingdom; tacitly, as by being a king, and so bound to protect as well well the people, as the laws of his kingdom; and expressly; by his oath at his coronation; so as every just king, in a settled kingdom, is bound to observe that paction made to his people, by bis laws, in framing his government agreeable thereunto, according to that paction which God made with Noah after the deluge. Here-after, feed-time and harvess, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night, shall not cease while the earth remaineth. And therefore a king governing in a fettled kingdom, leaves to be a king, and degenerates into a tyrant, as foon as he leaves off to rule according to his laws. And a little after, Therefore all kings that are not tyrants, or perjured, will be glad to bound themfelves within the limits of their laws; and they that perfuade them the contrary, are vipers, and pefts both against them and the commonwealth. Thus that learned king, who well understood the notion of things, makes the difference be-twixt a king and a tyrant to confift only in this, that one makes the laws the bounds of his power, and the good of the public, the end of his government; the other makes all give way to his own will and appetite.

§. 201. It is a miftake, to think this fault is proper only to monarchies; other forms of government are liable to it, as well as that: for wherever the power, that is put in any hands for the government of the people, and the prefervation of their pro-B b 4 perties, perties, is applied to other ends, and made use of to impoverish, haras, or subdue them to the arbitrary and irregular commands of those that have it; there it presently becomes tyranny, whether those that thus use it are one or many. Thus we read of the thirty tyrants at Athens, as well as one at Syracuse; and the intolerable dominion of the Decemviri at Rome was nothing better.

§. 202. Where-ever law ends, tyranny begins, if the law be tranfgreffed to another's harm; and whosoever in authority exceeds the power given him by the law, and makes use of the force he has under his command, to compass that upon the subject, which the law allows not, ceases in that to be a magistrate; and, acting without authority, may be op-pofed, as any other man, who by force in-vades the right of another. This is acknow-ledged in fubordinate magisfrates. He that hath authority to feize my perfon in the freet, may be oppofed as a thief and a robber, if he endeavours to break into my house to execute a writ, notwithstanding that I know he has fuch a warrant, and fuch a legal authority, as will impower him to arreft me abroad. And why this should not hold in the higheft, as well as in the most inferior magistrate, I would gladly be informed. Is it reasonable, that the eldest brother, because he has the greatest part of his father's estate, should thereby have have a right to take away any of his younger brothers portions? or that a rich man, who possible portions? of that a rich man, who possible a whole country, should from thence have a right to feize, when he pleased, the cottage and garden of his poor neighbour? The being rightfully possible of great power and riches, exceedingly beyond the greatest part of the sons of Adam, is so far from part of the lons of Aqam, is to far from being an excufe, much lefs a reafon, for rapine and opprefilion, which the endamaging another without authority is, that it is a great aggravation of it: for the exceeding the bounds of authority is no more a right in a great, than in a petty officer; no more ju-ftifiable in a king than a conftable; but is fo much the worfe in him, in that he has more trust put in him, has already a much greater share than the rest of his brethren, and is fupposed, from the advantages of his edu-cation, employment, and counsellors, to be more knowing in the measures of right and wrong.

§. 203. May the commands then of a prince be opposed? may be be refifted as often as any one shall find himself aggrieved, and but imagine he has not right done him? This will unhinge and overturn all polities, and, instead of government and order, leave nothing but anarchy and confusion.
§. 204. To this I answer, that force is to be opposed to nothing, but to unjust and unlawful force: whoever makes any opposition lawful force; whoever makes any opposition in

in any other cafe, draws on himfelf a juft condemnation both from God and man; and fo no fuch danger or confusion will follow, as is often fuggested: for, §. 205. Firft, As, in fome countries, the perfon of the prince by the law is facred; and fo, whatever he commands or does, his perfon is still free from all question or violence, not liable to force, or any judicial cenfure or condemnation. But yet opposition may be made to the illegal acts of any inferior officer, or other commissioned by him; unlefs he will, by actually putting himfelf into a ftate of war with his people, diffolve the government, and leave them to that defence which belongs to every one in the state of nature: for of fuch things who can tell what the end will be ? and a neighbour kingdom has shewed the world an odd example. In all other cases the facredness of the person exempts bim from all inconveniencies, whereby he is fecure, whilft the government stands, from all violence and harm whatfoever; than which there cannot be a wifer conftitution : for the harm he can do in his own perfon not being harm he can do in his own perion not being likely to happen often, nor to extend itfelf far; nor being able by his fingle ftrength to fubvert the laws, nor opprefs the body of the people, fhould any prince have fo much weaknefs, and ill nature as to be willing to do it, the inconveniency of fome particular mischiefs, that may happen sometimes, when a heady prince comes to the throne, are well recompenied by the peace of the public, and fecurity of the government, in the perion of the chief magistrate, thus set out of the reach of danger : it being fafer for the body, that fome few private men should be some-times in danger to suffer, than that the head of the republic should be easily, and upon flight occasions, exposed.

§. 206. Secondly, But this privilege, belonging only to the king's perfon, hinders not, but they may be queftioned, oppofed, and refifted, who use unjust force, though they pretend a commission from him, which the law authorizes not; as is plain in the cafe of him that has the king's writ to arreft a man, which is a full commission from the king; and yet he that has it cannot break open a man's house to do it, nor execute this eommand of the king upon certain days, nor in certain places, though this commission have no fuch exception in it; but they are the limitations of the law, which if any one transgress, the king's commission excuses him not: for the king's authority being given him only by the law, he cannot impower any one to act against the law, or justify him, by his commission, in so doing; the commission, or command of any magistrate, where be has no authority, being as void and infig-nificant, as that of any private man; the difference between the one and the other, being being that the magistrate has some authority fo far, and to such ends, and the private man has none at all: for it is not the commission, but the authority, that gives the right of acting; and against the laws there can be no authority. But, notwithstanding such refissance, the king's person and authority are still both secured, and so no danger to governor or government.

§. 207. Thirdly, Supposing a government wherein the perion of the chief magistrate is not thus facred; yet this doctrine of the law-fulness of refifting all unlawful exercises of his power, will not upon every flight oc-cafion indanger him, or imbroil the govern-ment: for where the injured party may be relieved, and his damages repaired by appeal to the law, there can be no pretence for force, which is only to be used where a man is intercepted from appealing to the law: for nothing is to be accounted hoftile force, but where it leaves not the remedy of fuch an appeal; and it is fuch force alone, that puts him that ufes it into a ftate of war, and makes it lawful to refift him. A man with a fword in his hand demands my purfe in the high-way, when perhaps I have not twelve pence in my pocket: this man I may law-fully kill. To another I deliver 1001. to hold only whilft I alight, which he refuse to reftore me, when I am got up again, but draws his fword to defend the possession of it by

by force, if I endeavour to retake it. The mifchief this man does me is a hundred, mischief this man does me is a hundred, or poffibly a thousand times more than the other perhaps intended me (whom I killed be-fore he really did me any); and yet I might lawfully kill the one, and cannot fo much as hurt the other lawfully. The reason whereof is plain; because the one using force, which threatened my life, I could not have time to appeal to the law to fecure it : and when it was gone, it was too late to appeal. The law could not restore life to my dead carcass : the loss was irreparable; which to prevent, the law of nature gave me a right to destroy him, who had put him-felf into a state of war with me, and threatened my destruction. But in the other case, my felf into a state of war with me, and threatened my destruction. But in the other case, my life not being in danger, I may have the benefit of appealing to the law, and have reparation for my 1001. that way. §. 208. Fourtbly, But if the unlawful acts done by the magistrate be maintained (by the power he has got), and the remedy which is due by law, be by the same power obstructed; yet the right of resisting, even in such manifest acts of tyranny, will not suddenly, or on slight occasions, disturb the gopernment : for if it reach no farther than some private men's cases, though they have a right to defend themselves, and to recover by force what by unlawful force is taken from them; yet the right to do so will not easily engage them in a contest, wherein they are fure to perifh; it being as impossible for one, or a few oppressed men to disturb the government, where the body of the people do not think themselves concerned in it, as for a raving mad-man, or heady mal-content to overturn a well-settled state; the people being as little apt to follow the one, as the other.

§. 209. But if either these illegal acts have extended to the majority of the people; or if the mischief and oppression has lighted only on fome few, but in fuch cafes, as the precedent, and confequences feem to threaten all; and they are perfuaded in their confciences, that their laws, and with them their eftates, liberties, and lives are in danger, and perhaps their religion too; how they will be hindered from refifting illegal force, ufed against them, I cannot tell. This is an inconvenience, I confess, that attends all governments whatfoever, when the governors have brought it to this pass, to be generally fufpected of their people; the most dangerous state which they can possibly put themselves in; wherein they are the lefs to be pitied, becaufe it is fo eafy to be avoided; it being as impoffible for a governor, if he really means the good of his people, and the pre-fervation of them, and their laws together, not to make them see and feel it, as it is for the father of a family, not to let his children fee he loves, and takes care of them.

§. 210. But if all the world shall observe pretences of one kind, and actions of another; arts used to elude the law, and the truft of prerogative (which is an arbitrary power in fome things left in the prince's hand to do good, not harm to the people) employ-ed contrary to the end for which it was given: if the people shall find the ministers and subordinate magistrates chosen suitable to such ends, and favoured, or laid by, pro-portionably as they promote or oppose them: if they fee feveral experiments made of arbitrary power, and that religion underhand favoured, (tho' publicly proclaimed againft) which is readiest to introduce it; and the operators in it fupported, as much as may be; and when that cannot be done, yet approved still, and liked the better : if a long train of actions shew the councils all tending that way; how can a man any more hinder himself from being persuaded in his own mind, which way things are going; or from casting about how to save himself, than he could from believing the captain of the fhip he was in, was carrying him, and the reft of the company, to Algiers, when he found him always fteering that courfe, though crofs winds, leaks in his fhip, and want of men and provisions did often force him to turn his courfe another way for fome time, which he fteadily returned to again, as foon as the wind, weather, and other circumstances would let him?

CHAP. XIX.

Of the Diffolution of Government.

§. 211. HE that will with any clearness speak of the *diffolution of govern-*ment, ought in the first place to distinguish between the diffolution of the fociety and the diffolution of the government. That which makes the community, and brings men out of the loofe state of nature, into one politic fociety, is the agreement which every one has with the reft to incorporate, and act as one body, and so be one diftinct common-wealth. The usual, and almost only way whereby this union is diffelved, is the inroad of foreign force making a conquest upon them: for in that case, (not being able to maintain and support themselves, as one intire and inde-. pendent body) the union belonging to that body which confifted therein, must necesfarily ceafe, and fo every one return to the state he was in before, with a liberty to shift for himfelf, and provide for his own fafety, as he thinks fit, in some other society. When, ever the fociety is diffolved, it is certain the government of that fociety cannot remain. Thus conquerors fwords often cut up governments by the roots, and mangle focièties to pieces, feparating the fubdued or fcattered multitude from the protection of, and de-. pendence on, that fociety which ought to have have preferved them from violence. The world is too well inftructed in, and too forward to allow of, this way of diffolving of governments, to need any more to be faid of it; and there wants not much argument to prove, that where the fociety is diffolved, the government cannot remain; that being as impoffible, as for the frame of an house to fubfift when the materials of it are fcattered and diffipated by a whirl-wind, or jumbled into a confused heap by an earthquake.

§. 212. Belides this over-turning from without, governments are diffelved from within, First, When the legislative is altered. Civil fociety being a state of peace, amongst those who are of it, from whom the state of war is excluded by the umpirage, which they have provided in their legiflative, for the ending all differences that may arise amongst. any of them, it is in their legislative, that the members of a common-wealth are united. and combined together into one coherent living body. This is the foul that gives form, life, and unity, to the common-wealth: from hence the feveral members have their mutual influence, fympathy, and connexion : and therefore, when the legiflative is broken, or diffolved, diffolution and death follows: for the effence and union of the fociety confifting in having one will, the legiflative, when once established by the majority, has the declaring, and as it were keeping of that will. The Cc con-conflitution of the legislative is the first and fundamental act of fociety, whereby provision is made for the continuation of their union, under the direction of perfons, and bonds of laws, made by perfons authorized thereunto, by the confent and appointment of the people, without which no one man, or number of men, amongst them, can have authority of making laws that shall be binding to the reft. When any one, or more, shall take upon them to make laws, whom the people have not appointed fo to do, they make laws without authority, which the people are not therefore bound to obey; by which means they come again to be out of fubjection, and may conflitute to themfelves a new legislative, as they think best, being in full liberty to refift the force of thofe, who without authority would impofe any thing upon them. Every one is at the disposure of his own will, when those who had, by the delegation of the society, the declaring of the public will, are excluded from it, and others usurp the place, who have no fuch authority or delegation.

§. 213. This being usually brought about by such in the common-wealth who misufe the power they have; it is hard to consider it aright, and know at whose door to lay it, without knowing the form of government in which it happens. Let us suppose then the legislative placed in the concurrence of three diffinct persons.

387

1. A fingle hereditary perfon, having the conftant, fupreme, executive power, and with it the power of convoking and diffolving the other two within certain periods of time.

2. An affembly of hereditary nobility.

3. An allembly of representatives chosen, pro tempore, by the people. Such a form of . government supposed, it is evident,

§. 214. First, That when fuch a fingle perfon, or prince, fets up his own arbitrary will in place of the laws, which are the will of the fociety, declared by the legislative, then the legislative is changed: for that being in effect the legislative, whose rules and laws are put in execution, and required to be obeyed; when other laws are fet up, and other rules pretended, and inforced, than what the legislative, conflituted by the fociety, have enacted, it is plain that the legislative is changed. Whoever introduces new laws, not being thereunto authorized by the fundamental appointment of the fociety, or fubverts the old, difowns and overturns the power by which they were made, and fo fets up a new legislative.

i §. 215. Secondly, When the prince hinders the legislative from assembling in its, due time, or from acting freely, pursuant to those ends for which it was constituted, the legistative is altered: for it is not a certain number of men, no, nor their meeting, unless they have also freedom of debating, and leisure of perfecting, what is for the good of the fociety, wherein the legiflative confifts: when these are taken away or altered, so as to deprive the fociety of the due exercise of their power, the legiflative is truly altered; for it is not names that constitute governments, but the use and exercise of those powers that were intended to accompany them; so that he, who takes away the freedom, or hinders the acting of the legislative in its due feasons, in effect takes away the legislative, and puts an end to the government. §. 216. Thirdly, When, by the arbitrary

§. 216. Thirdly, When, by the arbitrary power of the prince, the electors, or ways of election, are altered, without the confent, and contrary to the common intereft of the people, there also the legislative is altered: for, if others than those whom the fociety hath authorized thereunto, do chuse, or in another way than what the fociety hath prescribed, those chosen are not the legislative appointed by the people.

§ 217. Fourthly, The delivery also of the people into the subjection of a foreign power, either by the prince, or by the legislative, is certainly a change of the legislative, and so a diffolution of the government: for the end why people entered into society being to be preserved one intire, free, independent society, to be governed by its own laws; this is lost, whenever they are given up into the power of another.

§. 218. Why, in fuch a conftitution as this, 5.218. Why, in fuch a conditiution as this, the diffolution of the government in these cases is to be imputed to the prince, is evident; because he, having the force, treasure and offices of the state to employ, and often per-fuading himself, or being state by others, that as supreme magistrate he is uncapable of controul; he alone is in a condition to make that as fupreme magiftrate he is uncapable or controul; he alone is in a condition to make great advances toward fuch changes, under pretence of lawful authority, and has it in his hands to terrify or fupprefs oppofers, as factious, feditious, and enemies to the go-vernment: whereas no other part of the legiflative, or people, is capable by themfelves to attempt any alteration of the legiflative, without open and vifible rebellion, apt enough to be taken notice of, which, when it pre-vails, produces effects very little different from foreign conqueft. Befides, the prince in fuch a form of government, having the power of diffolving the other parts of the legiflative, and thereby rendering them private perfons, they can never in oppolition to him, or without his concurrence, alter the legif-lative by a law, his confent being neceflary to give any of their decrees that fanction. But yet, fo far as the other parts of the le-giflative any way contribute to any attempt upon the government, and do either pro-mote, or not, what lies in them, hinder fuch defigns, they are guilty, and partake in this, C c 3 which

390 OF CIVIL-GOVERNMENT. which is certainly the greatest crime men can be guilty of one towards another.

§. 219. There is one way more whereby fuch a government may be diffolved, and that is, when he who has the fupreme executive power, neglects and abandons that charge, fo that the laws already made can no longer be put in execution. This is demonstratively to reduce all to anarchy, and so effectually to diffolve the government : for laws not being made for themfelves, but to be, by their execution, the bonds of the fociety, to keep every part of the body politic in its due place and function; when that totally ceafes, the go-vernment vifibly ceafes, and the people become a confused multitude, without order come a confuted multitude, without order or connexion. Where there is no longer the administration of justice, for the fecuring of men's rights, nor any remaining power within the community to direct the force, or provide for the neceffities of the public, there certainly is no government left. Where the laws cannot be executed, it is all one as if there were no laws; and a government without laws is I furnofe a multitude. without laws is, I suppose, a mystery in politics, unconceivable to human capacity, and inconfistent with human fociety, §. 220. In these and the like cales, we ben the government is differed, the people are at liberty to provide for themselves, by crecting a new legislative, differing from the other, by the change of perfons, or form, or both, as they shall find it most for their fafety and as they man find it most for their farety and good: for the fociety can never, by the fault of another, lose the native and original right it has to preferve itfelf, which can only be done by a fettled legislative, and a fair and impartial execution of the laws made by it. But the ftate of mankind is not fo miferable But the ltate of mankind is not to miterable that they are not capable of using this re-medy, till it be too late to look for any. To tell people they may provide for themfelves, by erecting a new legislative, when by op-pression, artifice, or being delivered over to a foreign power, their old one is gone, is only to tell them, they may expect relief when it is too late, and the evil is past cure. This is in effect no more than to bid them first be flaves, and then to take care of their libe llaves, and then to take care of their in-berty; and when their chains are on, tell them, they may act like freemen. This, if barely fo, is rather mockery than relief; and men can never be fecure from tyranny, if there be no means to escape it till they are perfectly under it: and therefore it is, that they have not only a right to get out of it, as i le but to prevent it.

but to prevent it. §. 22 i. There is therefore, fecondly, another way whereby governments are diffolved, and that is, when the legislative, or the prince, either of them, act contrary to their traft. First, The legislative acts against the trust reposed in them, when they endeavour to invade the property of the fubject, and to C c 4 make make themselves, or any part of the community, masters, or arbitrary disposers of the lives, liberties, or fortunes of the people.

lives, liberties, or fortunes of the people. §. 222. The reafon why men enter into fociety, is the prefervation of their property; and the end why they chufe and authorize a legiflative, is, that there may be laws made, and rules fet, as guards and fences to the properties of all the members of the fociety, to limit the power, and moderate the do-minion, of every part and member of the fo-ciety : for fince it can never be fuppoled to be the will of the fociety, that the legiflative fhould have a power to deftroy that which every one defigns to fecure. by entering into every one defigns to fecure, by entering into fociety, and for which the people-fubmitted themfelves to legiflators of their own making; whenever the legiflators endeavour to take away, whenever the legislators endeavour to take away, and deftroy the property of the people, or to reduce them to flavery under arbitrary power, they put themfelves into a flate of war with the people, who are thereupon abfolved from any farther obedience, and are left to the common refuge, which God hath provided for all men, against force and violence. Whenfoever therefore the legislative shall transfores this fundamental rule of fociety is transgress this fundamental rule of society; and either by ambition, fear, folly or cor-ruption, endeavour to grass themselves, ar put into the bands of any other, an absolute powen over the lives, liberties, and estates of the it people; by this breach of truft they forfering tbe

the power the people had put into their hands for quite contrary ends, and it devolves to the people, who have a right to refume their original liberty, and, by the establish-ment of a new legislative, (fuch as they shall think fit) provide for their own fastery and fecurity, which is the end for which they are in fociety. What I have faid here, concerning the legislative in general, holds true alfo concerning the fupreme executor, who having a double trust put in him, both to have a a double truit put in him, both to have a part in the legislative, and the supreme exe-cution of the law, acts against both, when he goes about to set up his own arbitrary will as the law of the society. He acts also contrary to bis trust, when he either employs the force, treasure, and offices of the society, to corrupt the representatives, and gain them to his purposes; or openly pre-engages the electors, and prescribes to their choice, such, when he has by solicitations threats prowhom he has, by follicitations, threats, promifes, or otherwife, won to his defigns; and employs them to bring in fuch, who have promifed before-hand what to vote, and what to enact. Thus to regulate candidates and electors, and new-model the ways of election, what is it but to cut up the go-vernment by the roots, and poilon the very fountain of public fecurity? for the people having referved to themfelves the choice of their representatives, as the fence to their properties, could do it for no other end, but that 4

that they might always be freely chosen, and fo chosen, freely act, and advise, as the neceffity of the common-wealth, and the public good should, upon examination, and mature debate, be judged to require. This, those who give their votes before they hear the debate, and have weighed the reasons on all fides, are not capable of doing. To prepare fuch an affembly as this, and endeavour to fet up the declared abettors of his ownawill, for the true reprefentatives of the people, and the law-makers of the fociety, is certainly as great a breach of truft, and as perfect a declaration of a defign to fubvert the government, as is poffible to be met with. To which, if one shall add rewards and punishments visibly employed to the fame end, and all the arts of perverted law made use of, to take off and deftroy all that fland in the way of fuch a defign, and will not comply and confent to betray the liberties of their country, it will be past doubt what is doing. What power they ought to have in the fociety, who thus employ it contrary to the truft went along with it in its first institution, is eafy to determine; and one cannot but fee, that he, who has once attempted any fuch thing as this, cannot any longer be trufted.

§. 223. To this perhaps it will be faid, that the people being ignorant, and always discontented, to lay the foundation of government vernment in the unsteady opinion and uncertain humour of the people, is to expose it to certain ruin; and no government will be able long to fubfift, if the people may fet up a new legislative, whenever they take offence at the old one. To this I answer, Quite the contrary. People are not fo eafily got out of their old forms, as fome are apt to fuggeft. They are hardly to be prevailed with to amend the acknowledged faults in the frame they have been accultomed to. And if there be any original defects, or adventitious ones introduced by time, or corruption; it is not an early thing to get them changed, even when all the world sees there is an opportunity for it. This flowness and aversion in the people to quit their old conftitutions, has, in the many revolutions which have been feen in this kingdom, in this and former ages, still kept us to, or, after some interval of fruitles attempts, ftill brought us back again to our old legiflative of king, lords and commons: and whatever provocations have made the crown be taken from fome of our princes heads, they never carried the people to far as to place it in another line.

§. 224. But it will be faid, this bypothefis lays a ferment for frequent rebellion, To which I answer,

First, No more than any other bypothes: for when the people are made miserable, and find themselves exposed to the ill usage of arbitrary bitrary power, cry up their governors, as much as you will, for fons of Jupiter; let them be facred and divine, defcended, or authorized from heaven; give them out for whom or what you pleafe, the fame will happen. The people generally ill treated, and contrary to right, will be ready upon any occasion to ease themfelves of a burden that fits heavy upon them. They will wish, and feek for the opportunity, which in the change, weakness and accidents of human affairs, feldom delays long to offer itself. He must have lived but a little while in the world, who has not feen examples of this in his time; and he must have read very little, who cannot produce examples of it in all forts of governments in the world.

§. 225. Secondly, I anfwer, fuch revolutions bappen not upon every little mifmanagement in public affairs. Great miftakes in the ruling part, many wrong and inconvenient laws, and all the flips of human frailty, will be born by the people without mutiny or murmur. But if a long train of abufes, prevarications and artifices, all tending the fame way, make the defign visible to the people, and they cannot but feel what they lie under, and fee whither they are going; it is not to be wondered, that they should then rouze themfelves, and endeavour to put the rule into fuch hands which may fecure to them the ends for which government was at first erectcd; and without which, ancient names, and fpecious fpecious forms, are fo far from being better, that they are much worfe, than the flate of nature, or pure anarchy; the inconveniencies being all as great and as near, but the remedy farther off and more difficult.

§. 226. Thirdly, I answer, that this doctrine of a power in the people of providing for their fafety a-new, by a new legislative, when their legiflators have acted contrary to their trust, by invading their property, is the best fence against rebellion, and the probablest means to hinder it: for rebellion being an opposition, not to perfons, but authority, which is founded only in the conftitutions and laws of the government; those, whoever they be, who by force break through, and by force justify their violation of them, are truly and properly rebels : for when men, by entering into fociety and civil-government, have excluded force, and introduced laws for the prefervation of property, peace, and unity amongft themfelves, those who set up force again in opposition to the laws, do rebellare, that is, bring back again the flate of war, and are properly rebels: which they who are in power, (by the pretence they have to authority, the temptation of force they have in their hands, and the flattery of those about them) being likelieft to do; the propereft way to prevent the evil, is to fnew them the danger and injustice of it, who are under the greatest temptation to run into it.

§. 227. In both the fore-mentioned cafes, when either the legislative is changed, or the legislators act contrary to the end for which they were constituted; those who are guilty are guilty of rebellion: for if any one by force takes away the established legislative of any fociety, and the laws by them made, purfuant to their trust, he thereby takes away the umpirage, which every one had confented to, for a peaceable decifion of all their controverfies, and a bar to the flate of war amongst them. They, who remove, or change the legislative, take away this decifive power, which no body can have, but by the appointment and confent of the people; and fo de-ftroying the authority which the people did, and no body elfe can fet up, and introducing a power which the people hath not authorized, they actually introduce a flate of war, which is that of force without authority : and thus, by removing the legislative established by the fociety, (in whofe decifions the people acquiesced and united, as to that of their own will) they untie the knot, and expose the people a-new to the flate of war. And if those, who by force take away the legislative, are rebels, the legiflators themselves, as has been shewn, can be no less esteemed so; when they, who were fet up for the protection, and prefervation of the people, their liberties and properties, shall by force invade and endeavour to take them away; and so they putting putting themfelves into a flate of war with those who made them the protectors and guardians of their peace, are properly, and with the greatest aggravation, rebellantes, rebels.

§. 228. But if they, who fay it lays a foundation for rebellion, mean that it may occasion civil wars, or intestine broils, to tell the people they are abfolved from obedience when illegal attempts are made upon their liberties or properties, and may oppose the unlawful violence of those who were their magistrates, when they invade their properties contrary to the trust put in them ; and that therefore this doctrine is not to be allowed, being fo destructive to the peace of the world : they may as well fay, upon the fame ground, that honeft men may not oppose robbers or pirates, because this may occasion diforder or bloodfhed. If any mifchief come in fuch cafes, it is not to be charged upon him who defends his own right, but on him that invades his neighbours. If the innocent honeft man must quietly quit all he has, for peace sake, to him who will lay violent hands upon it, I defire it may be confidered, what a kind of peace there will be in the world, which confifts only in violence and rapine; and which is to be maintained only for the benefit of robbers and oppressors. Who would not think it an admirable peace betwixt the mighty and the mean, when the lamb, without · (. '

without refiftance, yielded his throat to be torn by the imperious wolf? Polyphemus's dan gives us a perfect pattern of fuch a peace, and fuch a government, wherein Ulyffes and his companions had nothing to do, but quietly to fuffer themfelves to be devoured. And no doubt Ulyffes, who was a prudent man, preached up paffive obedience, and exhorted them to a quiet fubmiffion, by reprefenting to them of what concernment peace was to mankind; and by fhewing the inconveniences might happen, if they fhould offer to reaft Polyphemus, who had now the power over them.

§. 229. The end of government is the good of mankind; and which is belt for mankind, that the people fhould be always exposed to the boundless will of tyranny, or that the rulers should be fometimes liable to be opposed, when they grow exorbitant in the use of their power, and employ it for the destruction, and not the prefervation of the properties of their people is have to be option of the properties of their people is have to be option of the prefervation of the properties of their people is have to be option of the prefervation of the properties of their people is have to be option of the prefervation of the properties of their people is have to be option of the government. The is true, such men may flir, whenever they please; but it will be only to their own basis ruin and perdition : for till the mischief by grown general, and the ill designs of the rulers become visible, or their attempts for fible

fible to the greater part, the people, who are more difpoled to fuffer than right themselves by refistance, are not apt to ftir. The ex-amples of particular injustice, or opprefiion of here and there an unfortunate man, moves them not. But if they universally have a persuafion, grounded upon manifest evidence, that defigns are carrying on against their li-berties, and the general course and tendency of things cannot but give them ftrong fu-fpicions of the evil intention of their go-vernors, who is to be blamed for it? Who can help it, if they, who might avoid it, bring themfelves into this fufpicion? Are the people to be blamed, if they have the fense of rational creatures, and can think of things no otherwife than as they find and feel them? And is it not rather their fault, who put things into fuch a pofture, that they would not have them thought to be as they are? I grant, that the pride, ambition, and turbulency of private men have fometimes caufed great diforders in common-wealths, and factions have been fatal to states and kingdoms. But whether the mischief hath oftener begun in the peoples wantonness, and a defire to cast off the lawful authority of their rulers, or in the rulers infolence, and endenvours to get and exercise an arbitrary power over their people; whether oppression, or disobedience, gave the first rife to the dis-order, Leave it to impartial history to determine. 41.14 Dd termine. This I am fure, whoever, either ruler or fubject, by force goes about to invade the rights of either prince or people, and lays the foundation for overturning the conftitution and frame of any just government, is highly guilty of the greatest crime, I think, a man is capable of, being to answer for all those mischiefs of blood, rapine, and desolation, which the breaking to pieces of governments bring on a country. And he who does it, is justly to be esteemed the common enemy and pest of mankind, and is to be treated accordingly.

§. 231. That fubjects or foreigners, attempting by force on the properties of any people, may be refifted with force, is agreed on all hands. But that magifirates, doing the fame thing, may be refifted, hath of late been denied: as if those who had the greatest privileges and advantages by the law, had thereby a power to break those laws, by which alone they were set in a better place than their brethren: whereas their offence is thereby the greater, both as being ungrateful for the greater share they have by the law, and breaking also that trust, which is put into their hands by their brethren.

§. 232. Whofoever uses force without right, as every one does in fociety, who does it without law, puts himself into a ftate of war with those against whom he fo uses it; and in that state all former ties are cancelled, all other

other rights cease, and every one has a right to defend himfelf, and to refift the aggreffor. This is so evident, that Barclay himself, that great affertor of the power and facredness of kings, is forced to confess, That it is lawful for the people, in fome cafes, to relift their king; and that too in a chapter, wherein he pretends to shew, that the divine law shuts up the people from all manner of rebellion. Whereby it is evident, even by his own doctrine, that, fince they may in fome cafes resist, all resisting of princes is not rebellion. His words are these. Quod siquis dicat, Ergone populus tyrannicæ crudelitati & furori jugulum femper præbehit? Ergone multitudo civitates suas fame, ferro, & flammâ vastari, seque, conjuges, & liberos fortunæ ludibrio & tyranni libidini exponi, inque omnia vitæ pericula omnesque miserias & molestias à rege deduci patientur? Num illis quod omni animantium generi est à naturâ tribu-tum, denegari debet, ut sc. vim vi repellant, seseq; ab injuriâ tueantur? Huic breviter responsum sit, Populo universo negari defensionem, quæ juris naturalis est, neque ultionem quæ præter naturam est adversus regem concedi debere. Quapropter si rex non in fingulares tantum personas aliquot privatum odium exerceat, sed corpus etiam reipublicæ, cujus ipse caput est, i. e. totum populum, vel insignem aliquam ejus partem immani & intolerandâ fævitiâ feu tyrannide di-vexet; populo, quidem boc cafu refiftendi ac tuendi fe ab injuriâ potestas competit, sed tuendi D d 2

se tantum, non enim in principem invadendi : S restituendæ injuriæ illatæ, non recedendi a debita reverentia propter acceptam injuriam. Præsentem denique impetum propulsandi non vim præteritam ulciscenti jus babet. Horum enim alterum à natura est, ut vitam scilicet corpusque tueamur. Alterum vero contra naturam, ut inferior de superiori supplicium sumat. Quod itaque populus malum, antequam sactum sit, impedire potest, ne fiat, id postquam factum est, in regem authorem sceleris vindicare non potest: populus igitur hoc ampliùs quam privatus quifpiam habet : quod huic, vel ipfis adverfaris judicibus, excepto Buchanano, nullum nifi in patientia remedium superest. Cum ille si intolerabilis tyrannus est (modicum enim ferre ont-. nino debet) resistere cum reverentia possit, Barclay contra Monarchom. 1. iii. c. 8.

In English thus.

§. 233. But if any one should ask, Must the people then always lay themselves open to the cruelty and rage of tyranny? Must they see their cities pillaged, and laid in ashes, their wives and children exposed to the tyrant's lust and fury, and themselves and families reduced by their king to ruin, and all the miseries of want and oppression, and yet st still? Must men alone be debarred the common privilege of opposing force with force, which nature allows so freely to all other creatures for their prefervation fervation from injury? I answer : Self-defence is a part of the law of nature ; nor can it be denied the community, even against the king himself : but to revenge themselves upon him, must by no means be allowed them : it being not agreeable to that law. Wherefore if the king Shall shew an hatred, not only to some particular perfons, but fets himself against the body of the common-wealth, whereof he is the head, and fhall, with intolerable ill usage, cruelly tyrannize over the whole, or a confiderable part of the people, in this case the people have a right to refist and defend themselves from injury: but it must be with this caution, that they only defend themselves, but do not attack their prince : they may repair the damages received, but must not for any provocation exceed the bounds of due reverence and respect. They may repulse the present attempt, but must not revenge past violences : for it is natural for us to defend life and limb, but that an inferior should punish a superior, is against nature. The mischief which is designed them, the people may prevent before it be done; but when it is done, they must not revenge it on the king, though author of the villany. This therefore is the privilege of the people in general, above what any private perfon hath; that particular men are allowed by our adversaries themselves (Buchanan only excepted) to have no other remedy but patience; but the body of the people may with respect resist D d 3 intolerable intolerable tyranny; for when it is but maderate, they ought to endure it.

§. 234. Thus far that great advocate of monarchical power allows of refistance.

§. 235. It is true, he has annexed two limitations to it, to no purpole:

First, He fays, it must be with reverence. Secondly, It must be without retribution, or punishment; and the reason he gives is, because an inferior cannot punish a superior.

caufe an inferior cannot punifh a fuperior. First, How to refift force without striking again, or how to strike with reverence, will need fome skill to make intelligible. He that shall oppose an affault only with a shield to receive the blows, or in any more respectful posture, without a fword in his hand, to abate the confidence and force of the affailant, will quickly be at an end of his refiftance, and will find such a defence ferve only to draw on himself the worse usage. This is as ridiculous a way of refifting, as Juvenal thought it of fighting; ubi tu pulfas, ego vapulo tantum. And the success of the combat will be unavoidably the fame he there deferibes it :

This

This will always be the event of fuch an imaginary refiftance, where men may not ftrike again. He therefore who may refift, must be allowed to strike. And then let our author, or any body elfe, join a knock on the head, or a cut on the face, with as much reverence and respect as he thinks fit. He that can reconcile blows and reverence, may, for aught I know, defire for his pains, a civil, respectful cudgeling where-ever he can meet with it.

Secondly, As to his fecond, An inferior cannot punish a superior; that is true, generally speaking, whilst he is his superior. But to refift force with force, being the flate of war that levels the parties, cancels all former relation of reverence, respect, and fuperiority : and then the odds that remains, is, that he, who opposes the unjust aggressor, has this fuperiority over him, that he has a right, when he prevails, to punish the offender, both for the breach of the peace, and all the evils that followed upon it. Barclay therefore, in another place, more coherently to himfelf, denies it to be lawful to relift a king in any cafe. But he there affigns two cafes, whereby a king may un-king himfelf. His words are.

Quid ergo, nulline casus incidere possunt quibus populo sefe erigere atque in regem impotentius dominantem arma capere & invadere jure suo suaque authoritate liceat? Nulli certe quamdiu D d 4. rex rex manet. Semper enim ex divinis id obstat, Regem honorificato : & qui potestati refistit, Dei ordinationi refistit : non alias igitur in eum populo potestas est quam si id committat propter quod ipso jure rex esse definat. Tunc enim se ipse principatu exuit atque in privatis constituit liber : hoc modo populus & superior efficitur, reverso ad eum sc. jure illo quod ante regem inauguratum in interregno babuit. At funt paucorum generum commissi ejusmodi quæ bunc effectum pariunt. At ego cum plurima animo perlustrem, duo tantum invenio, duos; inguam, casus quibus rex ipso facto ex rege non regem se facit & omni honore & dignitate regali atque in subditos potestate destituit; quorum . etiam meminit Winzerus. Horum unus eft, Si regnum disperdat, quemadmodum de Nerone fertur, quod is nempe senatum populumque Romanum, atque adeo urbem ipsam ferro flammaque vastare, ac novas sibi sedes quærere decrevisset. Et de Caligula, quod palam denunciarit fe neque civem neque principem senatui amplius fore, inque animo babucrit interempto utriusque ordinis electissimo quoque Alexandriam commigrare, ac ut populum uno istu interimeret, unam ei cer-vicem optavit. Talia cum rex aliquis meditatur & molitur serio, omnem regnandi curam & animum ilico abjicit, ac proinde imperium in fubditos amittit, ut dominus fervi pro derelicto babiti dominium.

§. 236. Alter cafus est, Si rex in alicujus. clientelam se contulit; ac regnum quod liberum à majoribus à majoribus & populo traditum accepit, alienæ ditioni mancipavit. Nam tunc quamvis forte non ea mente id agit populo plane ut incommodet r tamen quia quod præcipuum est regiæ dignitatis amisit, ut summus scilicet in regno secundum Deum sit, & solo Deo inferior, atque populum etiam totum ignorantem vel invitum, cujus libertatem sartam & tectam conservare debuit, in alterius gentis ditionem & potestatem dedidit; bâc velut quadam regni ab alienatione effecit, ut nec quod ipse in regno imperium babuit retineat, nec in eum cui collatum voluit, juris quicquam transferat; atque ita eo facto liberum jam & suæ potestatis populum relinquit, cujus rei exemplum unum annales Scotici suppeditant. Barclay contra Monarchom. 1. iii. c. 16.

Which in English runs thus.

§. 237. What then, can there no cafe bappen wherein the people may of right, and by their own authority, help themselves, take arms, and fet upon their king, imperiously domineering over them? None at all, whils he remains a king. Honour the king, and he that refists the power, refists the ordinance of God; are divine oracles that will never permit it. The people therefore can never come by a power over him, unless he does something that makes him cease to be a king: for then he divest himself of his crown and dignity, and returns to the state of a private man, and the people become free and superior, fuperior, the power which they had in the interregnum, before they crowned him king, devolving to them again. But there are but few miscarriages which bring the matter to this state. After confidering it well on all sides, I can find but two. Two cases there are, I say, whereby a king, ipso facto, becomes no king, and loses all power and regal authority over his people; which are also taken notice of by Winzerus.

The first is, If he endeavour to overturn the government, that is, if he have a purpose and defign to ruin the kingdom and common-wealth, as it is recorded of Nero, that he refolved to cut off the fenate and people of Rome, lay the city waste with fire and fword, and then re-move to some other place. And of Caligula, that he openly declared, that he would be no longer a head to the people or Senate, and that he had it in his thoughts to cut off the worthick men of both ranks, and then retire to Alexandria: and he wisht that the people had but one neck, that be might dispatch them all at a blow. Such defigns as thefe, when any king harbours in his thoughts, and feriously promotes, he immediately gives up all care and thought of the common-wealth; and confequently forfeits the power of governing his subjects, as a master does the dominion over his slaves whom he hath abandoned.

§. 238. The other cafe is, When a king makes himfelf the dependent of another, and fubjects his kingdom kingdom which his anceftors left him, and the people put free into his hands, to the dominion of another: for however perhaps it may not be his intention to prejudice the people; yet becaufe he has hereby lost the principal part of regal dignity, viz. to be next and immediately under God, supreme in his kingdom; and also becaufe he betrayed or forced his people, whose liberty be ought to have carefully preferved, into the power and dominion of a foreign nation. By this, as it were, alienation of his kingdom, he himself loses the power he had in it before, without transferring any the least right to those on whom he would have bestowed it; and so by this ast sets the people free, and leaves them at their own disposal. One example of this is to be found in the Scotch Annals.

§. 239. In these cases Barclay, the great champion of abfolute monarchy, is forced to allow, that a king may be refifted, and ceases to be a king. That is, in short, not to multiply cases, in whatsoever he has no authority, there he is no king, and may be refifted: for wheresoever the authority ceases, the king ceases too, and becomes like other men who have no authority. And these two cases he instances in, differ little from those above mentioned, to be destructive to governments, only that he has omitted the principle from which his doctrine flows; and that is, the breach of trust, in not preferving the form of government agreed on, and in not intending the end of government itfelf, which is the public good and prefervation of property. When a king has dethroned him-felf, and put himfelf in a ftate of war with his people, what shall hinder them from prosecuting him who is no king, as they would any other man, who has put himfelf into a state of war with them; Barclay, and those of his opinion, would do well to tell us. This farther I defire may be taken notice of out of Barclay, that he fays, The miftice of out of Barclay, that he lays, 4 be mij-chief that is defigned them, the people may pre-vent before it be done: whereby he allows re-fiftance when tyranny is but in defign. Such defigns as these (fays he) when any king har-bours in his thoughts and seriously promotes, he immediately gives up all care and thought of the common-wealth; fo that, according to him, the neglect of the public good is to be taken as an evidence of such defign, or at least for a fufficient cause of refiftance. And the reason of all, he gives in these words, Because be betrayed or forced his people, whose liberty be ought carefully to have preferved. What he adds, into the power and dominion of a foreign nation, fignifies nothing, the fault and forfeiture lying in the loss of their liberty, which he ought to have preferved, and not in any di-ftinction of the perfors to whole dominion they were fubjected. The peoples right is equally invaded, and their liberty loft, whether they are made flaves to any of their own, own, or a foreign nation; and in this lies the injury, and against this only have they the right of defence. And there are instances to be found in all countries, which shew, that it is not the change of nations in the perfons of their governors, but the change of go-vernment, that gives the offence. Bilfon, a bishop of our church, and a great stickler for the power and prerogative of princes, does, if I mistake not, in his treatise of Christian fubjection, acknowledge, that princes may forfeit their power, and their title to the obedience of their subjects; and if there needed authority in a cafe where reason is so plain, I could fend my reader to Bracton, Fortefcue, and the author of the Mirrour, and others, writers that cannot be fuspected to be ignorant of our government, or enemies to it. But I thought Hooker alone might be enough to fatisfy those men, who relying on him for their ecclefiastical polity, are by a strange fate carried to deny those principles upon which he builds it. Whether they are herein made the tools of cunninger workmen, to pull down their own fabric, they were best look. This I am fure, their civil policy is fo new, fo dangerous, and fo deftructive to both rulers and people, that as former ages never could bear the broaching of it; fo it may be hoped, those to come, redeemed from the impositions of these Egyptian under-task-masters, will abhor the memory of such fervile 1.142.12 vile flatterers, who, whilft it feemed to ferve their turn, refolved all government into abfolute tyranny, and would have all men born to, what their mean fouls fitted them for, flavery.

§. 240. Here, it is like, the common queftion will be made, Who shall be judge, whether the prince or legislative act contrary to their truft? This, perhaps, ill-affected and factious men may spread amongst the people, when the prince only makes use of his due prerogative. To this I reply, The people shall be judge; for who shall be judge whether his truftee or deputy acts well, and according to the trust reposed in him, but he who deputes him, and must, by having deputed him, have still a power to discard him, when he fails in his truft? If this be reafonable in particular cases of private men, why should it be otherwise in that of the greatest moment, where the welfare of millions is concerned, and also where the evil, if not prevented, is greater, and the redrefs very difficult, dear, and dangerous?

§. 141. But farther, this queftion, (Who fhall be judge?) cannot mean, that there is no judge at all: for where there is no judicature on earth, to decide controverfies amongft men, God in heaven is judge. He alone, it is true, is judge of the right. But every man is judge for himfelf, as in all other cafes, fo in this, whether another hath put himfelf OF CIVIL-GOVERNMENT. 415 himfelf into a flate of war with him, and whether he fhould appeal to the Supreme Judge, as Jeptha did.

§. 242. If a controveriy arife betwixt a prince and fome of the people, in a matter where the law is filent, or doubtful, and the thing be of great confequence, I should think the proper umpire, in such a case, should be the body of the people: for in cases where the prince hath a trust reposed in him, and is difpenfed from the common ordinary rules of the law; there, if any men find themfelves aggrieved, and think the prince acts contrary to, or beyond that truft, who fo proper to judge as the body of the people, (who, at first, lodged that trust in him) how far they meant it hould extend? But if the prince, or whoever they be in the adminifration, decline that way of determination, the appeal then lies no where but to heaven; force between either perfons, who have no known fuperior on earth, or which permits no appeal to a judge on earth, being properly a state of war, wherein the appeal lies only to heaven; and in that state the injured party must judge for himfelf, when he will think fit to make use of that appeal, and put himfelf upon it.

§. 243. To conclude, The power that every individual gave the fociety, when he entered into it, can never revert to the individuals again, as long as the fociety lafts, but will always always remain in the community; becaufe without this there can be no community, no common-wealth, which is contrary to the original agreement: fo alfo when the fociety hath placed the legislative in any affembly of men, to continue in them and their fucceffors, with direction and authority for providing fuch fucceffors, the legislative can never revert to the people whilft that government lasts; because having provided a legislative with power to continue for ever, they have given up their political power to the legif-lative, and cannot refume it. But if they have fet limits to the duration of their legiflative, and made this fupreme power in any perfon, or affembly, only temporary; or elfe, when by the mifcarriages of those in authority, it is forfeited; upon the forfeiture, or at the determination of the time fet, it reverts to the fociety, and the people have a right to act as supreme, and continue the legiflative in themfelves; or crect a new form, or under the old form place it in new hands, as they think good.
